of the efforts being made by the Government, the Committee requests it to redouble its efforts to prevent children under 18 years of age from becoming victims of trafficking as well as commercial sexual exploitation in the tourism sector and to supply information on the measures taken in this regard. It also requests the Government to continue to take the necessary measures to provide child victims of trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation with appropriate services for their rehabilitation and social integration, and to continue to supply information on the measures taken in this regard, including the number of child victims of trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation who have been removed and provided with support and assistance.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Lebanon

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2003)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2023, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

Article 2(1) of the Convention. Scope of application. In its earlier comments, the Committee noted that the Labour Code only applies to work performed under an employment relationship (by virtue of sections 1, 3 and 8 of the Code). The Committee recalled that the Convention applies to all branches of economic activity and covers all types of employment or work, whether they are carried out on the basis of an employment relationship or not, and whether they are remunerated or not. The Committee also noted that under Chapter 2, section 15, of the draft amendments to the Labour Code, it seemed that the employment or work of young persons would also include non-traditional forms of employment relationship. The Committee therefore requested that the Government provide information on the progress made in relation to the adoption of the provisions of the draft amendments to the Labour Code.

The Committee notes an absence of information in the Government's report on this point. Considering that the Government has been referring to the draft amendments to the Labour Code for a number of years, the Committee once again expresses the firm hope that the Government will take the necessary steps to ensure that the amendments to the Labour Code relating to self-employed children and children in the informal economy are adopted in the very near future. The Committee requests that the Government provide a copy of the new provisions, once adopted.

Article 2(2). Raising the minimum age for admission to employment or work. In its earlier comments, the Committee noted that, at the time of ratifying the Convention, Lebanon declared 14 years as the minimum age for admission to employment or work and that Act No. 536 of 24 July 1996, amending sections 21, 22 and 23 of the Labour Code, prohibits the employment of young persons before the age of 14. The Committee also noted the Government's intention to raise the minimum age for admission to employment or work to 15 years of age and that the draft amendments to the Labour Code would include a provision in this regard (section 19). The Committee requested that the Government provide information on the progress made in the adoption of the provisions of the draft amendments to the Labour Code on the minimum age for employment or work.

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that the Committee's comments have been taken into account in the draft amendments to the Labour Code. The draft has also been submitted to the Council of Ministers for its examination. The Committee once again requests that the Government provide information on any progress made in the adoption of the provisions of the draft amendments to the Labour Code regarding the minimum age for employment or work.

Article 2(3). Compulsory education. In its earlier comments, the Committee noted that the age limit for compulsory education is 12 years of age (Act No. 686/1998 relating to free and compulsory education at the primary school level). The Committee also noted the Government's indication that a draft law aimed at raising the minimum age of compulsory education to 15 years had been sent to the Council of Ministers for examination. The Committee requested that the Government indicate the progress made in this regard.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Ministry of Labour took into account the Committee's comments which were inserted in the draft amendments to the Labour Code. Moreover, the Committee notes that in its 2016 concluding observations, the UN Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights is concerned at the number of children, especially refugee children, who are not in school or have quit school owing to the insufficient capacity of the educational infrastructure, the lack of documentation, and the pressure to work to support their families, among other reasons (E/C.12/LBN/CO/2, paragraph 62).

In this regard, the Committee recalls the necessity of linking the age of admission to employment to the age limit for compulsory education. If the two ages do not coincide, various problems may arise. If the minimum age for admission to work or employment is lower than the school leaving age, children may be encouraged to leave school as children required to attend school may also be legally authorized to work (see 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 370). Noting the Government's intention to raise the age of completion of compulsory schooling to 15 years, the Committee once again reminds the Government that pursuant to Article 2(3) of the Convention, the minimum age for admission to employment (currently 14 years) should not be lower than the age of completion of compulsory schooling. Therefore, the Committee urges once again the Government to intensify its efforts to raise the minimum age for admission to employment or work to 15 years, and to provide for compulsory education up until that age, within the framework of the adoption of the draft amendments to the Labour Code. The Committee requests that the Government provide a copy of the new provisions, once adopted.

Article 6. Vocational training and apprenticeship. In its earlier comments, the Committee noted that the Government had stated that the draft amendments to the Labour Code (section 16) had set the minimum age for vocational training under a contract at 14 years. The Committee expressed the firm hope that such a provision under the draft amendments would be adopted in the near future.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that section 16 will be adopted along with the draft amendments to the Labour Code. The Government also indicates that the National Centre for Vocational Training is in charge of carrying out vocational training and apprenticeships. The Committee once again expresses the firm hope that section 16 of the draft amendments to the Labour Code, setting a minimum age of 14 years for entry into an apprenticeship, in conformity with Article 6 of the Convention, will be adopted in the very near future.

Article 7. Light work. In its earlier comments, the Committee noted that under section 19 of the draft amendments to the Labour Code, employment or work of young persons in light work may be authorized when they complete 13 years of age under certain conditions (except in different types of industrial work in which the employment or work of young persons under the age of 15 years is not authorized). The Committee also noted that light work activities would be determined by virtue of an Order from the Ministry of Labour. The Committee requested that the Government provide information on any progress made in this regard.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that it has asked for light work to be included in the ongoing ILO-IPEC Project "Country level engagement and assistance to reduce child labour in Lebanon" (CLEAR Project) and that a few meetings have been held in this regard. The Government indicates that, once the CLEAR Project is launched, it will be able to prepare a statute on light work in accordance with the relevant international standards. The Committee once again requests that the Government take the necessary measures to ensure the formulation and adoption of a statute determining light work activities, including the number of hours during which, and the conditions in which, light work may be undertaken. It requests that the Government provide information on the progress achieved.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2023, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

Articles 3, 7(1) and (2)(b) of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour, penalties and direct assistance for rehabilitation and social integration. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. Trafficking. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the adoption of the Anti-Trafficking Act No. 164 (2011). The Committee requested the Government to provide information on the application of this Act, in practice.

The Committee notes the statistical information related to trafficking of children provided by the Government in its report. It notes that in 2014, five child victims of trafficking for labour exploitation (street begging), and one child victim of trafficking for sexual exploitation, were identified. According to the Government's indication, all the child victims identified were referred to social and rehabilitation centres, such as the "Beit al Aman" shelter in collaboration with Caritas. The Government also indicates that in 2014 the Higher Council for Childhood drafted a sectorial Action Plan on Trafficking of Children that is still under consultations with the relevant stakeholders.

The Committee also notes that in its 2015 concluding observations, the UN Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) recommended the Government to provide mandatory gender-sensitive capacity-building for judges, prosecutors, the border police, the immigration authorities and other law enforcement officials to ensure the strict enforcement of Act No. 164 to combat trafficking by promptly prosecuting all cases of trafficking in women and girls (CEDAW/C/LBN/CO/4-5, paragraph 30(a)). The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the draft sectorial Action Plan on Trafficking of Children is adopted in the near future, and to provide information on any progress made in this regard. The Committee also requests the Government to continue to provide information on the application in practice of Act No. 164 of 2011, including statistical information on the number of investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions applied for the offence of trafficking of children. Lastly, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any measures adopted in order to prevent trafficking of children as well as measures taken to ensure that child victims of trafficking are provided with appropriate rehabilitation and reintegration services.

Clauses (b) and (c). Use, procuring or offering of a child for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances and for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that under section 33(b) and (c) of the draft amendments to the Labour Code, the use, procuring or offering of a child for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances and for illicit activities is punishable under the Penal Code, in addition to the penalties imposed by the Labour Code. It also noted that section 3 of Annex No. 1 of Decree No. 8987 of 2012 on hazardous work prohibits such illicit activities for minors under the age of 18. The Committee noted the statistical information (disaggregated by gender and age) provided by the Government on the number of children found engaged in prostitution from 2010 to 2012.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the labour inspectorate is the body responsible for the supervision of the implementation of Decree No. 8987. The Committee notes with concern that according to the Government's indication no cases related to the application of the Decree have been detected so far. The Committee urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures to ensure the application in practice of the provisions of Decree No. 8987 of 2012 prohibiting the engagement of children for prostitution or pornographic purposes or for illicit activities. The Committee requests the Government to provide statistical information on any prosecutions and convictions made with regard to the use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution, for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances.

As for the draft amendments to the Labour Code, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures without delay to ensure the adoption of the provisions prohibiting the use, procuring or offering of persons under the age of 18 for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances, and the use, procuring or offering of persons under the age of 18 for illicit activities, as well as of the provisions providing for the penalties imposed.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (d). Identifying and reaching out to children at special risk. 1. Refugee children. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on the measures taken within the work programme of the National plan of action on the elimination of child labour (NAP-WFCL) for working Palestinian children to protect them from the worst forms of child labour.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that no new measures have been taken due to the political and security situation in the country. The Committee also notes that according to the 2016 United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR) report entitled "Missing out: Refugee Education in Crisis", there are more than 380,000 refugee children between the ages of 5 and 17 registered in Lebanon. It is estimated that less than 50 per cent of primary school-age children have access to public primary schools and less than 4 per cent of young persons have access to public secondary schools. The report highlights that since 2013 the Government has introduced a two-shift system in public schools to encourage the enrolment of refugee children. About 150,000 children have entered this system. It also notes from the ILO report entitled "ILO response to the Syrian Refugee crisis in Jordan and Lebanon", of March 2014, that many refugee children are working in hazardous conditions in the agricultural and urban informal sector, street peddling or begging. While acknowledging the difficult situation prevailing in the country, the Committee urges the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to protect refugee children (in particular Syrian and Palestinian) from the worst forms of child labour and to provide the necessary and appropriate direct assistance for their removal and for their rehabilitation and social integration. It requests the Government to provide information on the number of refugee children who have benefited from any initiatives taken in this regard, to the extent possible disaggregated by age, gender and country of origin.

2. Children in street situations. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Ministry of Social Affairs has taken a series of measures to address the situation of street children, including: (i) undertaking activities to raise awareness through education, media and advertisement campaigns; (ii) training of a certain number of social protection actors/players working in child protection institutions; (iii) providing rehabilitation activities for a certain number of street children and their reintegration in their families; (iv) within the framework of the Poverty Reduction Strategy (2011–13) 36,575 families have been chosen to benefit from free basic social services, such as access to free compulsory public education as well as medical facilities. The Government also indicates that the 2010 draft "Strategy for Protection, Rehabilitation and Integration of Street Children" has not been implemented yet, but is in the process of being revised.

The Committee notes the 2015 study "Children Living and Working on the Streets in Lebanon: Profile and Magnitude" (ILO–UNICEF–Save the Children International) which provides detailed statistical information on the phenomenon of street-based children across 18 districts of Lebanon. The Committee also notes that the report comprises a certain number of recommendations, including: (i) enforcing relevant legislation; (ii) reintegrating street-based children into education and providing basic services; and (iii) intervening at the household-level to conduct prevention activities. The Committee further observes that despite street work being one of the most hazardous forms of child labour under Decree No. 8987 on hazardous forms of child labour (2012), it is still prevalent with a total of 1,510 children found to be living or working on the streets. Moreover, the Committee notes that in its 2016 concluding observations, the UN Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights recommended that the Government raise resources so as to provide the necessary preventive and rehabilitative services to street children and enforce existing legislation aimed at combating child labour (E/C.12/LBN/CO/2, paragraph 45). Recalling that street children are particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labour, the Committee urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to protect these children, and to provide for their rehabilitation and social reintegration. The Committee also urges the Government to take the necessary measures to actively implement the 2010 draft strategy entitled "Strategy for Protection, Rehabilitation and Integration of Street Children", once revised and report on the results achieved. Finally, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of street children who have been provided with educational opportunities and social integration services.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Lesotho

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2001)

Previous comment

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy designed to ensure the effective abolition of child labour and application of the Convention in practice. In response to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's statement in its report that it is in the process of developing the second National Action Plan on the Elimination of Child Labour (APEC-II) 2022-2026. It also notes from the Government's report under the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182), that the preliminary findings of the Labour Force Survey 2020 reveals that 2.99 per cent of children are in child labour with the highest proportion among males (79.1 per cent) and among children in the rural areas (80 per cent). The Committee further notes from the UNICEF-Lesotho 2021 Multidimensional Child Poverty Report that the country has successfully reduced poverty in the past fifteen years following the implementation of extensive social protection programmes. However, this report indicates that as of 2018, 45.5 per cent of the child population is multidimensionally poor and nearly one in three children aged 5–17 years are engaged in child labour. The Committee therefore requests the Government to continue to take effective measures to reduce the incidence of child labour in the country. Accordingly, it requests the Government to ensure the adoption and implementation of APEC-II without delay and to provide information on the specific measures taken within its framework to eliminate child labour and the results achieved. The Committee further requests the Government to continue to provide information on the situation of working children in Lesotho, including the number of children below the minimum age engaged in child labour and the nature, scope and trends of their work, disaggregated by age and gender. Lastly, it requests the Government to provide a copy of the results of the Labour Force Survey, once completed.

Article 2(1). Scope of application and labour inspectorate. Self-employment and work in the informal economy. In its previous comments, the Committee noted from the Decent Work Country Programme III 2018–23 document that over 50 per cent of the labour force is employed in the informal sector and that regulating and preventing child labour is a major concern since the coverage of labour inspectorate did not include informal economy activities. It further noted that the Labour Code Amendment Bill contains provisions extending its scope as well as the labour inspection services to the informal economy.

In response to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's information that the labour inspectorate through the Child Labour Unit works with the Community Child Protection Teams (CCPTs) in the villages where child labour is rampant. In addition, the District Child Protection Teams (DCPTs) regularly conduct public gatherings to raise awareness on child labour issues. The Government indicates that two Child Helplines supported by the Police and the Ministry of Social Development were launched and the Child Labour Unit provides training to social workers on identifying and dealing with calls that entail child labour issues. The Committee also notes from the Government's report under Convention No. 182 that the Labour Code Amendment Bill is awaiting a clearance certificate from the Attorney General to be presented before Parliament.

The Committee further notes the Government's information in its report of 2020 to the Human Rights Committee on the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights that the Labour Inspectorate is undergoing a restructuring process which will enable it to establish its own budget, transportation, equipment and an increase in the number of labour inspectors dedicated to child labour. The new structure suggests that there will be labour inspectors responsible for conducting inspections in the informal sector, including domestic work and herding (CCPR/C/LSO/2, paragraph 140). The Committee requests the Government to continue to take the necessary measures to ensure that the protection afforded by the Convention is granted to self-employed children and children working in the informal economy, including children engaged in herding and domestic work. It requests the Government to provide detailed information on the measures taken in this regard, including within the restructuring process of the labour inspectorate as well as the measures taken by the Child Labour Unit, CCPTs and DCPTs in addressing child labour in the informal economy. The Committee finally expresses the firm hope that the Labour Code Amendment Bill which contains provisions protecting children working in the informal economy and extending labour inspection services to the informal economy, will be adopted and enforced in the near future.

Article 2(3). Age of completion of compulsory schooling. The Committee previously noted that, according to the Education Act of 2010, the age of completion of compulsory education is 13 years in Lesotho, two years before a child is legally eligible to work (15 years).

The Committee notes the Government's information that deliberations are in progress among the responsible ministries to raise the compulsory age for education. The Committee once again reminds the Government that compulsory schooling is one of the most effective means of combating child labour, and underlines the need to link the age for admission to employment or work to the age of completion of compulsory schooling, as established in Paragraph 4 of the Minimum Age Recommendation, 1973 (No. 146). If compulsory schooling comes to an end before children are legally entitled to work, there may arise a vacuum which regrettably opens the door for the economic exploitation of children (see 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 371). The Committee therefore once again strongly encourages the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure compulsory education up to the minimum age of employment or work of 15 years. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

Previous comment

Articles 3(d) and 7(2)(b) of the Convention. Hazardous work and effective and time-bound measures to remove children from the worst forms of child labour and provide for their rehabilitation and social integration. Child domestic work. The Committee previously noted that children performing domestic work often worked under poor conditions for long hours and during the night, without adequate food and clothing, were exposed to extreme weather conditions in isolated areas, and did not attend school.

With regard to the adoption of the draft Labour Code Bill which contain provisions promoting the fundamental principles and rights of all workers, including domestic workers, the Committee notes the Government's information in its report that the Ministry of Labour and Employment is awaiting a clearance certificate from the Attorney-General for its presentation before the Parliament. The Government also indicates that the special regulations prohibiting hazardous domestic work by children under 18 years shall be developed after the adoption of the Labour Code Bill. The Committee once again expresses the firm hope that the Government will take the necessary measures to ensure that the Labour Code Bill which guarantees protection to domestic workers and the special regulations which prohibit hazardous domestic work by children under 18 years of age, are adopted in the near future. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard. It further requests the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to provide the necessary and appropriate direct assistance to remove children engaged in domestic work from hazardous working conditions and ensure their rehabilitation and social integration and to provide information on the measures taken in this regard.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (d). Identify and reach out to children at special risk. 1. Children engaged in animal herding. The Committee previously noted from the UNICEF Multiple Indicator Cluster Survey results of 2018, that two thirds of the children involved in child labour are engaged in herding animals. It also noted that children involved in herding are still exposed to the worst forms of child labour.

In reply to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's information that the Ministry of Labour and Employment conducts monthly public gatherings and media campaigns in each district to sensitize the public and the herders on the implementation of the guidelines for the agricultural sector. The Government also indicates that it is anticipated to launch the second phase of the National Action Plan for the Elimination of Child Labour (APEC-II 2022–26) in October 2022. The Committee further notes from the Government's report of April 2020 to the Human Rights Committee on the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, that the Government has been taking measures (i) to provide sufficient resources to fully implement APEC and address in particular the exploitation of children in herding; (ii) to translate and widely disseminate the Minimum Employment Guidelines for herd-boys; and (iii) to undertake more awareness-raising programmes and campaigns against exploitation of children in herding (CCPR/C/LSO/2, paragraphs 139, 140 and 141). The Committee also notes the Government's information in its report under the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) that the national commemoration Day of the African Child was held in Mokhotlong where a lot of children are herd boys. The Committee requests the Government to continue to take effective and time-bound measures to ensure that children who are engaged in hazardous work in animal herding are removed from this worst forms of child labour and are rehabilitated and socially integrated. In this regard, it requests the Government to continue providing information on the implementation of the guidelines for the agricultural sector as well as the specific measures taken against exploitation of children in herding within the framework of APEC-II, and the results achieved.

2. Orphans of HIV/AIDS and other vulnerable children (OVCs). Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's information that the Ministry of Social Development continues to assist vulnerable families with children with a monthly stipend of M300 (approximately US$17) in order to protect children from falling victims to the worst forms of child labour. Moreover, OVCs are freely enrolled into schools at all levels.

The Committee notes from the UNICEF report entitled Universal Child Benefit Case Studies: the Experience of Lesotho, 2019 that the Child Grants Programme covers about 108,833 children in 38,738 households and that the Government is committed to progressively include all eligible households in this programme. The Committee notes, however, that according to the 2021 estimates from UNAIDS, about 110,000 children aged 0–17 are orphans due to HIV/AIDS in Lesotho, an increase from 85,000 in 2019. While taking note of the measures taken by the Government, the Committee urges the Government to continue strengthening its efforts to ensure that orphans of HIV/AIDS and other vulnerable children who are at an increased risk of being engaged in the worst forms of child labour, are protected from these worst forms. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on specific measures taken in this regard, and on the results achieved, particularly the number of OVCs benefiting from these initiatives and the nature of the assistance provided.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Liberia

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2003)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Article 4(1) of the Convention. Determination of hazardous work. In its previous comments, the Committee expressed the firm hope that the Decent Work Bill, which contains a provision prohibiting the engagement of children under the age of 18 years in hazardous types of work would be adopted in the near future. It also expressed the hope that a regulation specifying hazardous types of work and processes prohibited to children under 18 years of age would be developed after consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned.

The Committee notes with interest that the Decent Work Act of 2015 has been enacted. It notes that Chapter 21, section 21.4(a) of the Decent Work Act prohibits the employment of children under the age of 18 years in those types of hazardous work enumerated under Paragraph 3 of the Worst Forms of Child Labour Recommendation, 1999 (No. 190). Section 21.4(b) further states that the minister shall, within 12 months from the coming into force of this Act, issue regulations specifying further types of work that may be prohibited to children and identify hazardous processes, temperatures, noise levels or vibrations that are dangerous to the health of children. In this regard, the Committee notes the Government's information, in its report, that the Law Reform Committee has prepared a draft list of types of hazardous work prohibited to children and that consultations with stakeholders on its finalization are ongoing. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will take the necessary measures to ensure that the draft list of types of hazardous work prohibited to children under 18 years of age will be finalized and adopted without delay. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (a). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour. Access to free basic education. The Committee previously noted from the compilation prepared by the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights to the Human Rights Council (A/HRC/WG.6/22/LBR/2, 23 February 2015) that according to the United Nations Development Assistance Framework (UNDAF), the gender gap was apparent in education and that illiteracy rates among women and girls were especially high at 60 per cent. It further noted from this report the statement made by the United Nations Country Team in Liberia that, due to the spread of the Ebola Virus Disease (EVD), schools had been ordered to be closed in June 2014 and an estimated 1.4 million students had been forced to stay home. The Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the proper functioning of the education system and to strengthen its efforts to bring back children to schools as well as to take measures to increase the enrolment and completion rates at primary and secondary levels and to provide information in this regard.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that since the last recorded case of Ebola in 2015, proper precautionary measures were taken and that schools were reopened and children were encouraged to return to school. The Government indicates that better mechanisms to keep children at schools and out of child labour are being initiated. In this regard, the Committee notes the information from the publication entitled: Education in Liberia-Global Partnership for Education, that in order to address the challenges in the education sector related to the rebuilding and recovery from civil war, constrained national finances, poor infrastructure and the Ebola epidemic, the Government has developed a strategic response through "Getting to Best Education Sector Plan for 2017-21". This plan consists of nine programmes including: (i) improving the efficiency and management of education system; (ii) improving access to quality early childhood education; (iii) providing quality alternative education for overage and out-of-school children; (iv) mainstreaming gender and school health across the education sector; and (v) improving the quality and relevance of vocational and technical training. The Committee notes, however, that according to the UNESCO statistics, in 2016, the net enrolment rate was 36.75 per cent in primary education and 10.37 per cent in secondary education. Moreover, there were 572,439 children and adolescents who were out-of-school in 2016. The Committee notes with concern the low enrolment rates at the primary and secondary levels and the high number of children who are out-of-school. Considering that education is key in preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour, the Committee urges the Government to intensify its efforts to improve the functioning of the education system and to facilitate access of all children to free basic education, including through the "Getting to Best Education Sector Plan for 2017-21". It requests the Government to provide information on the concrete measures taken or envisaged in this regard, aimed, in particular at increasing the school enrolment and attendance rates at the primary and secondary levels and reducing school drop-out rates as well as to provide updated statistical information on the results obtained, disaggregated by age and gender.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Libya

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2000)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), received on 1 September 2017.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 106th Session, June 2017)

The Committee notes the detailed discussion which took place at the 106th Session of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2017, concerning the application by Libya of the Convention.

Articles 3(a) and 7(1) of the Convention. All forms of slavery and practices similar to slavery. Compulsory recruitment of children for armed conflict and penalties. In its previous comments, the Committee noted from the Report on the Investigation by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights on Libya (A/HRC/31/47 and A/HRC/31/CRP.3, detailed findings) of 15 February 2016 (Investigation Report by the OHCHR), that there was information on the forced recruitment and use of children in hostilities by armed groups pledging allegiance to the Islamic State in Iraq and Levant (ISIL). These children were forced to undergo religious and military training (including how to use and load guns and to aim and shoot at targets using live ammunition), watch videos of beheadings, used to detonate bombs, in addition to being sexually abused. This Report, further referring to another report, indicated that the Islamic State in Sirte welcomed the graduation of 85 boys below the age of 16, describing them as the "Khilapha Cubs" who were trained in conducting suicide attacks.

The Committee notes the observations of the IOE that the position of children affected by armed conflict in the country was deplorable and that the recruitment of children for the purpose of war which included compulsory religious and military training was a calamity for the child's present and future situation.

The Committee notes that the Government representative of Libya, during the discussion at the Conference Committee, while acknowledging the situation of severe political crisis and escalation of violence since 2011, stated that his Government, represented by the Presidency Council of the Government of National Accord had captured the last ISIL position in Sirte on 6 December 2016 and had officially declared the liberation of the city which had been under ISIL control for over one and a half years. Hence, the ISIL's practices against children, including the forcible recruitment of children into their military operations and the prohibition of children from enrolling in school was brought to an end.

The Committee also notes that at the Conference Committee, the Worker members recalled that Libya continued to suffer from armed conflict and that the proliferation of armed groups had led to serious violations and abuses including the forced recruitment and use of children by different armed groups pledging allegiance to ISIL. The Worker member of Libya, added that those children who were recruited by the armed groups were moved to camps in Turkey near the Syrian border, where they were trained for combat with the financial support of those States that supported and exported terrorism.

The Committee notes that the Conference Committee deeply deplored the situation of children who were forcibly required by armed groups pledging allegiance to ISIL to undergo military and religious training.

The Committee notes the Government's information in its report that following the expulsion of the ISIL from Sirte and its suburbs, a post-conflict stabilization plan for Sirte was developed under the supervision of the Presidency Council. Moreover, measures were taken by the Libyan security agencies under the Ministry of Interior to prevent children from being lured or groomed into criminal activity and severe punishments were imposed on persons who were involved in such activity. In addition, at the beginning of 2017, UNICEF, in collaboration with municipalities, launched a national campaign “Together for Children” to ensure that children do not get involved in armed conflict.

The Committee notes, however, from the Report of the Secretary-General on Children and Armed Conflict of 16 May 2018 (A/72/865-S/2018/465, paragraph 106) that cases of use of children by armed groups continue to be reported. In October 2017, 125 adolescents formerly associated with the armed groups in the Zintan municipality were released. The Committee further notes that the Secretary-General expressed concern at the reports of sexual violence and other violations committed against children, including use in armed conflict and trafficking of children. While noting some of the measures taken by the Government, the Committee must express its deep concern at the continued use and recruitment of children by armed groups and at the current situation of children affected by armed conflict in Libya, especially as it entails other violations of the rights of the child, such as abductions, murders and sexual violence. While acknowledging the difficult situation prevailing in the country, the Committee strongly urges the Government to take the necessary measures as a matter of urgency to ensure the full and immediate demobilization of all children and to put a stop, in practice, to the forced recruitment of children under 18 years of age into armed groups. It also urges the Government to continue to take immediate and effective measures to ensure that thorough investigations and prosecutions of all persons who forcibly recruit children under 18 years of age for use in armed conflict, are carried out and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard and on the results achieved.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (a). Prevent the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour. Access to free basic education. The Committee previously noted from the Investigation Report by the OHCHR, that access to education in Libya had been significantly curtailed due to the armed conflict, particularly in the east (for example, the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs estimated, in September 2015, that 73 per cent of all schools in Benghazi were not functioning). Schools were either damaged, destroyed, occupied by internally displaced persons, converted into military or detention facilities, or were otherwise dangerous to reach. In addition, in many areas where schools remained open, parents refrained from sending their children to school for fear of injury from attacks, especially of girls being attacked, harassed or abducted by armed groups. Moreover, there were reports that in areas controlled by groups pledging allegiance to ISIL, girls were not allowed to attend school or were permitted only if wearing a full face veil. This report further indicated that children residing in camps for the internally displaced persons, faced particular challenges in their access to education.

The Committee notes the Worker members’ statement at the Conference Committee that children’s access to education had been severely limited and compromised by the conflict in Libya.

The Committee notes that the Conference Committee deeply deplored the situation of children, especially, girls, who were deprived of education due to the situation in the country where although mandatory and free education existed, many schools were damaged and used as military or detention facilities which prohibited children from attending them.

In this regard, the Committee notes the Government’s indication that following the expulsion of ISIL, there has been a rise in the number of children enrolled in schools. It also notes that the Government, along with the United Nations Development Programme, undertook the maintenance of a number of schools and by the school year 2017–18, all schools were opened on scheduled time for pupils. The Committee notes, however, from the UNICEF Humanitarian Situation report of September 2018 that around 300,000 children in Libya are in need of education. The Committee therefore, urges the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to improve the functioning of the education system in the country and to facilitate access to free basic education for all children, particularly girls, children in areas affected by armed conflict, and internally displaced children. It requests the Government to provide information on concrete measures taken in this regard and the results achieved.

Clause (b). Providing the necessary and appropriate assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration. Children in armed conflict. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that in Sirte, the Government social workers are engaged in a project to rehabilitate former child soldiers, which includes medical and psychological assistance as well as enrolling them in educational and training programmes. In addition, the UNICEF national campaign “Together for Children” also involves establishing rehabilitation centres to reintegrate children, including former child soldiers, into schools and the community. The Committee notes, however, from the Report of the Secretary-

General (paragraph 107) that in the context of the fight between the Libyan National Army (LNA) and the Petroleum Facilities Guard (PFG), boys as young 10 years of age were arrested and detained for up to seven weeks by the LNA for their alleged association with PFG. The Committee expresses its deep concern at the practice of arrest and detention of children for their alleged association with armed forces or groups. In this regard, the Committee must emphasize that children under the age of 18 years associated with armed groups should be treated as victims rather than offenders (see 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 502). The Committee, therefore, urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that children removed from armed forces or groups are treated as victims rather than offenders. It also urges the Government to continue to take effective and time-bound measures to remove children from armed forces and groups and ensure their rehabilitation and social integration. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard and on the number of children removed from armed forces and groups, and reintegrated.

Noting the interest expressed by the Government representative in obtaining technical assistance, the Committee invites the Government to avail itself of technical assistance from the Office in order to facilitate the implementation of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Madagascar

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2000)

Previous comment

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its report concerning the results of the implementation of the “National Plan of Action against child labour in Madagascar (PNA)”, in its third and final phase from 2014 to 2019. Among other things, the PNA resulted in the revision of the decree on child labour: new Decree 2018-009 supplementing and amending Decree 2007-563 on child labour defines light work and prohibits domestic work which is dangerous for children. The PNA also enabled the training of labour inspectors on the new laws on child labour in six regions of Madagascar in 2020 in the context of the Alliance 8.7 project, in collaboration with the ILO and UNICEF. Moreover, the PNA provided for training for fokontany (Malagasy traditional village) chiefs to enable them to identify at-risk working children and arrange for intervention by the local protection network. The Committee also notes that, in the annual report of Madagascar for May 2020–April 2021 as an Alliance 8.7 pathfinder country, a new plan of action to combat child labour is being formulated and the Labour Code is being revised in order to, inter alia, reinforce the capacity of the labour inspectorate.

The Committee notes that, according to a baseline survey conducted in 2018 as part of the project entitled “Supporting actors in the vanilla sector for the benefit of children in the SAVA region” (SAVABE project), 16.6 per cent of children in the SAVA region were exposed to child labour. Most children work in agriculture, including 10.5 per cent in the vanilla sector and 58.6 per cent outside it. Slightly less than half the children (46 per cent) work as unpaid family members and 44.2 per cent are employed by third parties. The Committee also notes the concern expressed by the United Nations Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC), in its concluding observations of 9 March 2022, that child labour remains a significant issue in the country, with 47 per cent of children between 5 and 17 years of age working in economic activities or domestic work, especially in rural areas, with a significant portion of children, in particular from poor households, working in hazardous conditions (CRC/C/MDG/CO/5-6, paragraph 40). While noting the measures taken by the Government, the Committee once again urges the Government to intensify its efforts to ensure the progressive elimination of child labour. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this respect in the context of the new plan of action to combat child labour and on the results achieved through its implementation, and also on progress made on the revision of the Labour Code, particularly as regards the strengthening of the capacities of the labour inspectorate.

Article 2(3). Age of completion of compulsory schooling. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indications that reform projects have been launched with respect to Directive 2008-011 amending certain provisions of Act No. 2004-004 of 26 July 2004 (governing the education system) in order to give concrete expression to the presidential commitments on education but that this draft legal amendment is currently before Parliament for discussion, deliberation and adoption. The publication of the decision adopted in the National Assembly will shed light on the new direction adopted for compulsory education in Madagascar, at which point it will be known whether the age of completion of compulsory schooling will be aligned to the minimum age for admission to employment or work, as required by the Convention. However, the Committee notes that according to the Sectoral Plan for Education 2018–22, it is envisaged to implement a reform of basic schooling to give it a duration of nine years, which would mean that children finish school at 15 years of age.

The Committee notes with concern that the question of the age of completion of compulsory schooling has still not been settled and has remained under discussion for many years. The Committee once again reminds the Government that compulsory schooling is one of the most effective means of combating child labour, and once again observes that if compulsory schooling comes to an end before children are legally entitled to work, there may arise a vacuum which regrettably opens the door for the economic exploitation of children (see 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 371). This is especially important in Madagascar, where a large number of children under 15 years of age do not attend school and are working. Noting that the Government has been discussing this matter for over ten years, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary steps, as a matter of urgency, to raise the age of completion of compulsory schooling so that it coincides with the minimum age for admission to employment or work in Madagascar. It requests the Government to provide information on progress made in this regard.

Article 6. Vocational training and apprenticeships. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the bill on the national employment and vocational training policy (PNEFP), drawn up in collaboration with the ILO and in consultation with the social partners, is still being approved. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to speed up the approval and adoption of the bill concerning apprenticeships and vocational training. It requests the Government to provide information on progress made in this regard and to send a copy of this legislative text once it has been adopted.

Previous comment

Articles 3(b) and 7(1) of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour and sanctions. Child prostitution. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indications in its report according to which, in view of the increase in child sex tourism (CST), various types of action have been taken by the Ministry of Tourism for its elimination, including various awareness-raising measures, the establishment of a unit to combat tourist scourges within the Ministry of Tourism and the promotion and implementation of a Code of Conduct for tourism actors. The Government indicates that specific results have been achieved as a result of the dissemination of the Code of Conduct to the various actors in the tourism sector. These include surveys undertaken in 736 establishments between November 2019 and March 2020, in collaboration with youth associations and local universities in the five areas (Nosybe, Tuléar, Majunga, Tamatave and Fort Dauphin). The Government adds that measures have been taken within the framework of the Alliance 8.7 project, including the monitoring, awareness raising and protection of children from child prostitution and the commercial sexual exploitation of children (CSEC) in the Atsimo Andrefana region in 2019, in collaboration with the Ministry of Tourism to raise awareness of sex tourism and CSEC and enrol victims in schools.

While noting the measures taken by the Government, the Committee notes the Government's indication that, not only has there been no follow-up to its request for data on the number of investigations carried out, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions imposed in cases of child prostitution in Madagascar, but establishments where cases of CST have been identified appear to have been subject only to administrative penalties. Moreover, the Government has not indicated the number of inspections carried out by youth and university associations. The Committee further notes the concern expressed by the United Nations Committee on the Rights of the Child on 9 March 2020 in response to reports that the sexual exploitation of children is widespread and tolerated in Madagascar, especially in tourist destinations (CRC/C/MDG/CO/5-6, paragraph 24). The Committee therefore once again notes with deep concern that there still appears to be a prevailing climate of impunity for crimes relating to child prostitution in the country. With regard to penalties, it refers to its indications in its 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions (paragraphs 637–639). The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to take immediate measures to ensure that effective investigations and prosecutions are carried out and completed into persons suspected of procuring, using, offering and employing children for prostitution, and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed. It requests the Government to provide information on statistics covering the number and nature of the violations reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and criminal penalties imposed in this respect.

Articles 3(d) and 7(2)(a) and (b). Hazardous types of work and effective and time-bound measures. Children engaged in hazardous work in the agricultural sector. Supporting Vanilla Sector Stakeholders to Benefit Children in the SAVA region (the SAVABE project). The Committee notes that the SAVABE project, which aims to achieve a sustainable improvement in the living conditions of vanilla-producing communities by ensuring the absence of child labour, was implemented by the ILO in the SAVA region between 2016 and 2020. The components of the project included the reduction of child labour through the mobilization and involvement of exporters in supply chain policies and programmes and the strengthening of the enforcement of child labour laws and referral and shelter systems for the protection of children. Within the context of this project, a baseline survey was undertaken in 2018. The Committee notes with concern that this survey revealed that 16.6 per cent of children in the region were exposed to child labour, of whom 67.1 per cent, representing 11.1 per cent of all children in the regions concerned, were engaged in work considered to be hazardous. Over half (51.6 per cent) of children considered to be engaged in hazardous forms of work were in the agricultural sector (other than vanilla) and 15.2 per cent were in the vanilla sector. The great majority of children engaged in hazardous forms of work (75.3 per cent) were classified as such on the basis of their conditions of work. Almost half of the children (45.1 per cent) worked long hours. Boys were more numerous than girls in hazardous forms of work (17.9 per cent compared with 8.7 per cent).

The Committee notes that the SAVABE project has resulted in several achievements. In particular, it notes the renewed dynamic, restructuring, training and equipment of the Regional Committee to Combat Child Labour in the SAVA region and the establishment of 27 local committees to combat child labour. While noting the measures adopted, the Committee requests the Government to strengthen its efforts to prevent children from being engaged in hazardous types of work in agriculture, including in the vanilla sector, and to remove children who are already working there and ensure their social rehabilitation and integration. It also requests the Government to continue providing information on the measures adopted in this regard and the results obtained in terms of the number of children identified and removed from hazardous types of work in these sectors, including through the action of the local committees.

Article 5. Monitoring mechanisms. Labour inspection. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards had recommended the Government to take measures to improve the capacities of the labour inspection services, particularly to combat child labour in mines and quarries. The Committee notes that, within the framework of the European Union Trade for Decent Work (T4DW) project, of which Madagascar is one of the beneficiaries, 40 labour inspectors were trained in 2021 and 2022 on child labour in the mining sector, a practical guide for the use of labour inspectors was prepared on controlling child labour, and support was provided for the development of an overall strategic action plan for labour inspection, which envisages the strengthening of inspections in enterprises. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that, in the context of the Alliance 8.7 project, the capacities of the labour inspection services are being reinforced through the provision of the necessary resources for monitoring as a basis for the adoption of prevention and protection measures. To overcome the absence of certain working tools, the means of action of labour inspectors have been strengthened, particularly through the provision of information and communication equipment. The Government adds that measures have been taken to enable the labour inspection services to have access to difficult sites in several regions and sectors, including brick making, tourist areas and mines and quarries. The Committee further notes that, according to the annual report of Alliance 8.7 pathfinder countries for May 2020 to April 2021 of Madagascar, the reinforcement of the powers of labour inspectors is envisaged through a revision of the Labour Code, which was commenced in February 2021. The Committee encourages the Government to continue taking the necessary measures to improve the capacities of the labour inspection services, particularly through the provisions of the necessary resources to enable labour inspectors to have access to difficult sites, especially mines and quarries, so that they can take effective action to combat the worst forms of child labour. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures adopted in this regard and on the number of children engaged in the worst forms of child labour who have been identified by labour inspectors as a result. The Government is also requested to report on progress in the revision of the Labour Code.

Article 6. Programmes of action. Joint National Plan to Combat Child Labour in the Mica Sector (PNC). The Committee notes that the Ministries of Labour, Population and Mines have joined efforts for the formulation of a Joint National Plan, with support from the ILO, the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and UNICEF, and other technical partners, within the framework of the T4DW project, of which Madagascar is one of the beneficiaries. According to the report on the action proposed in five African projects under the T4DW project in 2021, the Government confirmed that child labour in mica mines is a scourge in the country. The PNC therefore targets: (i) the formalization of small-scale mining activities in the region; (ii) the involvement of the private sector in action to combat child labour; (iii) education, awareness raising and communication to change behaviour concerning the problem of children and the community; (iv) the reinforcement of the child protection system; (v) the establishment of a social protection programme to remove children from the worst forms of child labour; and (vi) the strengthening of the resilience of communities in mica mining areas through economic diversification. The Committee also notes that, within the framework of the T4DW project, a qualitative study is being undertaken of child labour in the mica sector. The Committee encourages the Government to reinforce its efforts to combat the worst forms of child labour in mines and quarries, including mica mines. In this regard, it requests the Government to provide information on the specific measures taken within the framework of the implementation of the PNC to combat child labour in the mica sector, and on the results achieved in eliminating the worst forms of child labour in this sector. It also requests the Government to provide the findings of the study on child labour in the mica sector when it has been completed.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (d). Children at special risk. Street children. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the Public Investment Programme for Social Action (PIP) has been withdrawn from the public finance heading and reassigned to the operating budget of the Department for Labour and the Promotion of Fundamental Rights (DTPDF). The Government adds that the Manjarysoa Centre has been established to combat the worst forms of child labour around 67 Ha (a settlement located in Antananarivo). During 2019–20, some 70 children were protected by the Centre and have benefited from school and vocational integration activities. The Committee requests the Government to renew its efforts to protect street children from the worst forms of child labour and to ensure their rehabilitation and social integration, particularly through the reintegration of the PIP in the budget of the DTPDF. It requests the Government to continue providing information on the number of street children who have benefited from school and vocational rehabilitation through the Manjarysoa Centre or any other centre established for this purpose.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Malawi

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1999)

Previous comment

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes with interest the many measures adopted by the Government to combat child labour in the country. The Government has reviewed the National Plan of Action (NAP II), which now runs from 2020 to 2025. The main priority areas of the NAP II are: (i) Legal and Policy Framework; (ii) Capacity Building; (iii) Awareness Raising; (iv) Prevention, Withdrawal, Rehabilitation and re-Integration; (v) Chronic Illnesses and HIV and AIDS in the context of Child Labour; (vi) Child Labour Information Base and Management; and (vii) Availability of Child Labour Information.

The Government also developed the National Child Labour Mainstreaming Guide, which aims to assist Government institutions, social partners and other key stakeholders on how to include child labour issues in their functional scope and programming. The expected outcomes are: (i) Child labour elimination strategies incorporated in key legal and policy documents; (ii) Enhanced child labour responsive planning and service delivery; and (iii) Enhanced multi-sectoral collaboration in addressing child labour. The guide is aligned with the NAP II and directly supports its priority areas.

Another initiative is the adoption by the Government of the National Advocacy and Communication Strategy (NACS) 2022, to reinstate the commitment of the authorities in terms of support to the implementation of the child labour Conventions and provide a conducive environment for combating child labour. The overall objective of the NACS is to ensure well-coordinated and effective advocacy and awareness of child labour to accelerate its elimination through, for example, advocacy for child labour legislation and policy improvement and lobbying of the Government and stakeholders for increased resource allocation towards child labour programmes.

Finally, the Committee also notes that a Decent Work Country Programme (DWCP) 2020-23 is being implemented in Malawi, the overall objective of which is to contribute to the achievement of the national development agenda through improved, gainful, secure, and rights-based employment for youth, women and men. Consequently, the DWCP 2020-23 should contribute to the elimination of child labour by mitigating some of the push factors that are inducing children to work (such as poverty or lack of decent work opportunities for their families). The Committee encourages the Government to continue taking the necessary measures to ensure the progressive elimination of child labour. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress made and results achieved, in particular in terms of the effective reduction of the prevalence of child labour.

Article 2(1). Scope of application. Self-employed children, children working in the informal economy and labour inspectorate. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the labour inspections referred to under section 9 of the Employment Act may be conducted at any place where people are working, including in the informal economy, and that the exclusion of that sector is due, rather, to administrative reasons, including challenges related to human and financial resources.

However, measures are being taken to strengthen the labour inspectorate, including the Ministry of Labour entering into MOUs with some employers, especially in the tobacco sector, to conduct independent labour inspections to identify labour-related issues, including child labour. The Committee further notes that certain activities are planned, in the framework of the NAP II, to further strengthen the labour inspectorate and expand its reach, including the review of legislation related to child labour to ensure that all workplaces including informal sector are eligible for inspection and the extension of labour inspection services to monitor child labour in the informal sector and private homes. The Committee strongly encourages the Government to continue its efforts to strengthen the capacity of the labour inspectorate – including in the framework of the NPA II, of the MOUs entered into with employers, and through the provision of appropriate human and financial resources – to ensure that all self-employed children or children working in the informal economy benefit from the protection of the Convention. It requests the Government to continue providing information on specific measures taken in this regard, as well as on the results achieved, including the number and nature of violations relating to the employment of children and young persons detected by the labour inspectorate.

Article 3(1). 1. Minimum age for admission to hazardous work. In its previous comments, the Committee noted a discrepancy between article 23 of the Constitution, which provides for protection from dangerous work for children below the age of 16 years, and section 22(1) of the Employment Act, which, in accordance with the Convention, lays down a minimum age of 18 years for work that is likely to be harmful to their health, safety, education, morals or development, or prejudicial to their attendance in school. The Committee notes with satisfaction that a constitutional amendment was adopted which establishes the minimum age for admission to hazardous work at 18 years under article 23.

2. Hazardous work in commercial agriculture. The Committee takes due note of the Government's detailed information regarding the activities implemented and results achieved regarding the use of hazardous child labour in commercial agriculture. With regard to the measures taken and results achieved to protect children under 18 years from hazardous work in commercial agriculture, in particular tobacco plantations, the Committee refers to its comments under the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182).

Article 9(3). Keeping of registers by employers. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication that it has planned to develop the model register of employment, in line with Article 9(3) of the Convention, before the end of 2022, with the support of the ILO. Observing that the Government has been referring to the model register of employment since 2006, the Committee once again strongly urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure its elaboration and adoption without delay. It once again requests that the Government supply a copy of the model register as soon as it is adopted.

Practical application of the Convention. Data on child labour. The Committee notes that, according to the document of the NAP II, while child labour surveys are supposed to be conducted every 4–5 years, only two were conducted in the country: the first one in 2002, and the follow-up survey of 2015, which revealed that 38 per cent (over 2.1 million) of children aged 5–17 years were involved in child labour. To remedy this gap, and to contribute to the effective monitoring of the progress made in eliminating child labour, one of the main objectives of the NAP II is to improve child labour information availability and accessibility. Measures planned to achieve this objective include building the capacity of District Labour Officers (DLOs) to collect, manage and analyse data on child labour, conduct a national child labour survey, and create a national database for child labour. The Committee encourages the Government to pursue its efforts aimed at monitoring the application of the Convention in practice through the development of a data collection system on child labour and requests it to provide information on the progress made in this regard. It expresses the hope that the national child labour survey to be conducted in the framework of the NAP II will contain up-to-date statistical data on the employment of children and young persons by age group, gender and sector, and requests the Government to communicate the results of the survey with its next report.

Previous comment

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. Tenancy system. The Committee notes with satisfaction that the Employment Act was amended in 2021 to prohibit the land tenancy labour system, which was one of the main causes of leading children to work in hazardous conditions in tobacco plantations. In accordance with the new section 4 of the Employment Act, any person who exacts or imposes forced or tenancy labour on another person or causes or permits another person to perform forced or tenancy labour, commits an offence which is punishable by a fine of five million Kwacha (approximately US$5,000) and imprisonment for five years. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of section 4 of the Employment Act, in particular the number of prosecutions, convictions and penalties applied in relation to children under the age of 18 years.

Articles 3(a) and 7(1). Worst forms of child labour and penalties. Sale and trafficking of children. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that its statistics on the application of the Trafficking in Persons Act No. 3 of 2015, which criminalizes and punishes the offences related to trafficking, including of children, are not currently disaggregated by age. The Committee notes that, according to the report of the Government under the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29), from January 2020 until August 2022, 55 cases of trafficking were prosecuted, out of which 36 are completed with 27 ending up in convictions and 8 in acquittals. The Government indicates that the cases will be disaggregated by age going forward. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that data on the application in practice of the Trafficking in Persons Act is disaggregated by age, in particular with regard to the number and nature of violations reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions imposed for the sale and trafficking of children under 18 years of age. It requests the Government to provide this information in its next report.

Article 3(b). Use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the various provisions of the Penal Code of 1930, as amended by Act No. 9 of 1999, establishing offences related to the procuring or offering of a girl or woman, or the indecent assault of boys under the age of 15 (sections 140 and following). However, the Committee noted that there appeared to be no provision criminalizing the use of a child by a client for prostitution and, furthermore, there were no provisions that protect boys aged 15 to 18 years from the use, procuring or offering for prostitution.

The Committee notes that the Government gives no new information on this issue. Therefore, it appears that these practices are still not explicitly prohibited by law. The Committee considers that the effective prohibition and penalization of the use of all children – both boys and girls – for commercial sexual exploitation, including for use in prostitution, is not only required by Article 3(b) of the Convention, but also an essential component of any strategy undertaken to effectively eradicate this scourge. The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the protection of boys between 15 to 18 years from commercial sexual exploitation, as well as to criminalize clients who use children – either girls or boys – under 18 years of age for prostitution. It also urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that thorough investigations and prosecutions are carried out against persons responsible for such offences and that effective and sufficiently dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice.

Article 7(2)(a) and (b). Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour and providing assistance for the removal of children from these types of work and for their rehabilitation and social integration. 1. Commercial sexual exploitation of children. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's information on the measures taken to prevent both boys and girls under the age of 18 from becoming victims of commercial sexual exploitation, as well as on the measures taken to rehabilitate the victims. Such measures include child participation activities where girls are encouraged to take on leading roles; the creation of a forum for girls to express their views and promote their rights; various educational measures; and interventions to protect children with special attention on the girl child to prevent sexual exploitation and keep them in school. The Government has also put in place Lakeside committees that are protecting children, with much focus on girls under the age of 18, from patronizing lakeside activities which expose them to sexual exploitation through sensitization meetings and campaigns. The Government also indicates that section 23 (2)(c) of the Child Care Protection and Justice Act identifies children in situations of sexual exploitation as situation requiring care and protection. In this regard, the Government provides rehabilitation services to survivors of various abuses, including sexual exploitation. The Government indicates that it has rehabilitated 12,530 children (11,999 girls and 534 boys). Taking due note of the measures taken by the Government, the Committee encourages it to continue its efforts aimed at protecting children – both girls and boys – under 18 years of age against commercial sexual exploitation. It requests the Government to continue providing information on the measures taken to rehabilitate and socially integrate child victims, and on the results achieved.

2. Children engaged in hazardous work in commercial agriculture, particularly tobacco estates. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's detailed information on the activities conducted to combat hazardous work in agriculture, in particular tobacco production, in its reports under Conventions No. 138 and No. 182. In particular, the Committee takes due note of the activities implemented and results achieved by the National Smallholder Farmer's Association of Malawi (NASFAM) under the Achieving Reduction of Child Labour in Support of Education (ARISE) programme, and by the Tobacco Association of Malawi (TAMA) Farmer's trust. These include: (i) various trainings and awareness-raising campaigns on child labour, including in supply chains, for farmers; (ii) MOUs with tobacco companies which aim to protect children engaging in hazardous work in commercial agriculture, especially in tobacco; (iii) the adoption, dissemination and implementation of a Child Labour Policy by TAMA; and (iv) the implementation of projects (such as the "knowledgeable farmer" project) to promote the use of social dialogue in child labour elimination at the local level. Positive results were achieved, including the mainstreaming of child labour issues and knowledge even at community level and the re-enrolment of children in school.

The Committee notes that the Government continues to work with social and development partners, including the ILO, in protecting children from worst forms of child labour in agriculture. The 2020–24 project to Address Decent Work Deficits in the Tobacco Sector in Malawi (ADDRESS), for example, which is the umbrella for ILO development cooperation projects touching upon the tobacco sector, is being implemented with several partners, including the tripartite constituents and civil society organizations, to ensure that they effectively address decent work deficits in this sector and ensure access to rights. Other projects include Accelerating action for the elimination of child labour in supply chains in Africa (ACCEL), which aims to improve policy, legal and institutional frameworks to address child labour and its root causes in global supply chains by institutionalizing innovative and evidence-based solutions.

Moreover, in the framework of these and other projects, Malawi authorities requested and contributed to the collection of relevant data on the issues concerned to fill existing knowledge gaps and develop appropriate responses. For instance, a qualitative study on the tenancy system, conducted with the support of the ILO in 2020, led to the identification of the key issues and contributed to the national dialogue around the abolition of the land tenancy system by the Government. A quantitative study is also being finalized in collaboration with the National Statistical Office (NSO), to assess the number and characteristics of tenants in tobacco at the national level.

The Committee therefore observes with interest that action is being taken to combat the worst forms of child labour in the agricultural sector, in particular tobacco plantations, through a multi-pronged and tailored approach addressing the root causes of child labour in this sector. The Committee strongly encourages the Government to continue its efforts to protect children from hazardous work in these sectors, in particular in tobacco plantations, through measures taken within the framework of the various ongoing projects and initiatives. It requests the Government to continue to provide concrete information on the number of children who have been prevented or withdrawn from engaging in this type of hazardous work, and then rehabilitated and socially integrated.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Malaysia

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1997)

Previous comment

*Article 3(2) of the Convention. Determination of hazardous work. With regard to the determination of types of hazardous work prohibited to children under the age of 18 years, the Committee requests the Government to refer to its detailed comments under the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182).

Article 7(1). Minimum age for admission to light work. The Committee previously noted that section 2(2)(a) of the Children and Young Persons (Employment) Act of 1966 (CYP Act) allows children to be employed in light work which is suitable to their capacity in any undertaking carried on by their family but observed that no minimum age for admission to light work had been specified.

The Committee notes with satisfaction that section 3(c)(2A) of the CYP Amendment Act of 2019 establishes a minimum age of 13 years for admission to light work. The Committee also notes that the CYP Amendment Act, 2019 defines light work as “any work performed by a child or young person which is not likely to be harmful to their health, mental or physical capacity; or to prejudice his/her attendance at school that includes any place which teaches any religion, his/her participation in vocational orientation or training programmes approved by the competent authority or his capacity to benefit from the instruction received.”

Article 9(1). Penalties, labour inspection and application of the Convention in practice. In reply to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the penalties provided under section 14 of the CYP Act of 1966 for the violations of any of its provisions have been enhanced by the CYP Amendment Act of 2019. Accordingly, any contravention of the provisions of the Act shall be punishable with imprisonment not exceeding two years or to a fine of RM50,000 (approximately US$10,555) or to both. In the event of a second or subsequent offence, the penalty shall be imprisonment not exceeding five years and/or a fine not exceeding RM100,000. With regard to the number of prosecutions carried out, the Government indicates that 21 cases were prosecuted under the CYP Act of 1966, whereby the majority of the cases related to the contravention of the hours of work, but provides no information on the results of these prosecutions or penalties imposed. The Committee also notes the Government's information that in order to promote awareness towards eliminating child labour, the Ministry of Human Resources has established Technical Working Groups in the plantation sector that provide guidance on the national legislation and policies on child labour as well as on dealing with labour issues so as to ensure compliance with the relevant laws and policies.

The Committee further notes that a facilitator's manual for Malaysian labour inspectors, entitled: Training for Malaysian inspectors on forced labour, child labour and gender-based discrimination, violence and harassment in the workplace: Facilitator's manual, was developed and published in 2022, within the framework of the ILO project, "From Protocol to Practice: A Bridge to Global Action on Forced Labour". This manual aims at improving the capacity of the labour inspectorate to respond to the most urgent needs for the protection of workers' rights, particularly on forced labour and child labour and provides suggestions to address the challenges in conducting inspection on child labour. According to this document, child labour is common in the informal economy and includes scavenging, begging, mobile vending, work in small-scale or home-based industries and domestic work. Moreover, according to the information from the 2018 Employment survey in oil Palm plantations, as referred in this document, 33,600 children aged 5 to 17 years are in child labour on oil palm plantations in Malaysia, with 58.8 per cent in Sabah and 39.5 per cent in Sarawak, of which an estimated 47.5 per cent are children aged 5–11 years and 30.9 per cent are children aged 15–17 years (pages 83 and 87). The Committee further notes from a Press release of ILO of 25 June 2020 wherein the ILO and the UNICEF urged Malaysia to tackle child labour which has increased due to COVID-19 situation. The Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to strengthen the capacity of the labour inspectorate to better monitor child labour, particularly in the oil palm plantations in Sabah and Sarawak and to provide information on the measures taken and the results achieved in this regard. It also requests the Government to continue to take the necessary measures to ensure that persons who violate the CYP Act and other related legislation on the employment of children, are prosecuted and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed, and to provide information on the nature of the violations found, and the number and nature of the penalties imposed including, for fines assessed, and the amounts actually collected. Lastly, it requests the Government to provide information on the situation of working children, including data on the number of children and young persons below the minimum age of 15 who are engaged in child labour, and information on the nature, scope and trends of their work. To the extent possible, this information should be disaggregated by age and gender.

Previous comments: observation C182; observation C138

Article 4(1) of the Convention. Determination of types of hazardous work. In its previous comments under the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No.138), the Committee noted that the Department of Occupational Safety and Health had developed a list of types of hazardous work prohibited to persons under the age of 18 years and that it was undergoing legal process for enactment.

The Committee notes the Government's information in its report that the Children and Young Persons (Employment) Act of 1966 was amended by the Children and Young Persons (Employment) (Amendment) Act of 2019 (CYP Amendment Act of 2019). It notes that section 3(b)(1A) of the CYP Amendment Act of 2019 prohibits the employment of children and young persons under the age of 18 years in hazardous work. The Committee notes with satisfaction that the Fourth Schedule of the CYP Amendment Act of 2019 lists over 25 types of hazardous work prohibited to children and young persons. This list includes: work related to machines, installations and other equipment; work conducted in hazardous environments, such as underground work, underwater or work in a confined space, work at heights, in dusty environments, in extreme weather conditions, manual handling, lifting, carrying or pushing heavy load; work that is exposed to biological hazards such as in laboratories, slaughterhouse, meat processing place or storages; construction work, work in the timber industry, petroleum platforms; and work as a lifeguard, in fishing activities, and work in water treatment plants. It also notes that section 3(c)(2B) of the CYP Amendment Act of 2019 prohibits children and young persons from engaging in employment specified in the Fifth Schedule of CYP Amendment Act of 2019 which contain seven activities, including engaging in prostitution or any work related to pornography, the production or sale of alcoholic beverages, lotteries and gambling activities, and for the production and trade of drugs and narcotics. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of sections 3(b)(1A) and 3(c)(2B) of the CYP Amendment Act of 2019, indicating the number and nature of violations reported and penalties imposed for the offences related to the employment of children under 18 years in the hazardous occupations listed under the Fourth and Fifth Schedule.

Articles 3(a), 5 and 7(1). Worst forms of child labour, monitoring mechanisms and penalties. Trafficking. The Committee notes that the Government has not provided any specific information concerning the investigations, prosecutions and penalties applied for the offences related to the trafficking of children. Nevertheless, it states that the Anti-Trafficking in Persons and Anti-Smuggling of Migrants (ATIPSOM) Act of 2007 has been amended through the insertion of a new provision under section 14 (offence of trafficking in children) to specifically state that there is no need to prove the “means” element in child trafficking cases. With regard to its previous comments concerning the measures taken by the Task Force on Anti-Trafficking in Persons and Anti-Smuggling of Migrants (ATIPSOM Task Force) to prevent trafficking of children under the age of 18 years, the Government states that it provides intelligence and information to all enforcement agencies under the Council for Anti-Trafficking in Persons and Anti-Smuggling of Migrants (MAPO). Moreover, according to the data provided by the Government, from 2019 to 2022, 57 child victims of trafficking, including 4 nationals, were identified by the ATIPSOM Task Force.

The Committee further notes from the Report of the United Nations Special Rapporteur on the sale and sexual exploitation of children, including child prostitution, child pornography and other child sexual abuse material of January 2019 that the scope and magnitude of the sale and trafficking of children across the borders with Thailand, Viet Nam, Indonesia and the Philippines and within Malaysia for purposes of sexual and labour exploitation is an issue of grave concern. This report further indicates that in practice, child trafficking cases and statistics on convictions are not separated from other human trafficking cases (A/HRC/40/51/Add.3, paragraph 8). The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that, in practice, thorough investigations and prosecutions are carried out for persons who engage in the trafficking of children, and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions are imposed. In this regard, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the number of cases of trafficking of children under the age of 18 years identified, including by the ATIPSOM Task Force, and the investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions applied in accordance with the provisions of the ATIPSOM Act.

Articles 5 and 7(2)(a) and (d). Monitoring mechanisms and effective and time-bound measures. Access to free basic education and identifying and reaching out to children at special risk. Migrant children. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that tens of thousands of migrant workers’ children worked in the palm oil plantations without regulated employment hours, as well as in family food businesses, night markets, small-scale industries, fishing, agriculture and catering. It noted that children of migrant workers, particularly children of Indonesian workers face particular challenges accessing education, as non-nationals are prevented from accessing public education.

In response to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government’s information that the findings of the Employment Survey in oil palm plantations carried out in 2018 by the Ministry of Plantation Industries and Commodities in collaboration with the ILO, indicates the existence of forced and child labour in the plantation sector with 8.3 per cent of children involved in hazardous work. The Government states that it is committed to eliminate and combat forced and child labour in the country and that various initiatives have been taken in this regard, including: (i) making amendments to the Children and Young Persons (Employment) Act; (ii) strengthening of the labour inspection system in order to protect children of migrant workers and carrying out regular labour inspections in the plantation sector; (iii) carrying out information and dialogue sessions for employers in the plantation sector on their rights and responsibilities, on the best labour practices to prevent forced and child labour, on mechanization and safety issues; and (iv) establishing Technical Working Groups to address child labour issues and to provide guidance on national legislations and policies on child labour.

With regard to access to education of non-citizen children, the Government indicates that they are allowed to access education in the government or government-aided schools if they meet the criteria and conditions set under the Education Act. The Government has created guidelines for alternative learning centres and has encouraged the initiatives by the private sector and NGOS to provide education for children of migrant workers working in plantations as well as for children who are not eligible to be admitted to formal education. In addition, the Government has facilitated the establishment of community learning centres (CLCs) in the plantations in Sabah and Sarawak, in a collaborative effort by the plantation owners and the Indonesian Embassy. The CLCs provides primary and lower secondary education which is run in Indonesian national curriculum. The Committee notes the Government's indication that as of 2022 there are 112 CLCs in Sabah (86) and Sarawak (16) which accommodate more than 9,500 children.

The Committee further notes from the ILO Press release of October 2022 that 34 labour officers of the Sabah Department of Labour were trained and equipped with information and techniques utilizing the ILO Facilitator's Manual: Training for Malaysian inspectors on forced labour, child labour and gender-based discrimination, violence and harassment in the workplace. This Press release indicates that more frequent inspections will be undertaken by these inspectors to ensure that the employers are compliant with all laws and policies pertaining to labour. Noting that 8.3 per cent of children are involved in hazardous work in the palm oil plantations, the Committee urges the Government to continue its efforts to protect children of migrant workers from engaging in the worst forms of child labour, particularly by ensuring their unreserved access to quality free basic education. It also requests the Government to continue to take the necessary measures to strengthen the labour inspection system to effectively monitor the implementation of labour laws so as to receive, investigate and address complaints of alleged violations of the worst forms of child labour. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard, as well as information on the number of children identified and withdrawn from hazardous work in the plantation sector and provided with education.

Articles 6 and 7(2). Programmes of action and effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour and removing them from these worst forms and ensuring their rehabilitation and social integration. Trafficking. The Committee notes the Government's information that it has launched the third five-year National Action Plan on Trafficking in Persons (NAPTIP 3.0) 2021–25. It notes from the NAPTIP document that this national action plan focuses on nine programme areas with specific objectives, including combating child trafficking and providing victim-centred protection and assistance to victims of trafficking. This document also indicates that the Minister of Home Affairs provided funding support for three shelters for victims of trafficking and appointed three Victims Assistance Specialists (VAS) to carry out a 12-month pilot project in March 2019. This project was implemented to improve support services by assisting victims from the point of rescue, through the process of the criminal justice system and right up to repatriation, as well as to assist the enforcement officers and prosecutors in victim engagement and communication. During the 12-month pilot project, the VASs provided support services to a total of 72 victims. This project was further extended until March 2022. The Committee encourages the Government to strengthen its measures, within the framework of the National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons, 2021-25, to prevent trafficking of children under the age of 18 years, and provide for their removal from such situations and subsequent rehabilitation and social integration. It requests the Government to provide information on the concrete measures taken in this regard and on the results achieved in terms of the number of children reached through such measures.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Mali

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2002)

Previous comment

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. Further to its previous comments, the Committee takes due note of the information in the Government's report that a new National Plan of Action for the Elimination of Child Labour in Mali (PANETEM II) 2023–2027 is being approved and would be implemented in January 2023. It was developed by the National Steering Committee Against Child Labour and the National Unit Against Child Labour (CNLTE) in cooperation with the ILO. In this regard, four regional consultations have been held in Bamako, Sikasso, Kaye and the Mopti region to review the results of PANETEM I and to integrate the concerns of each region into the future plan.

The Committee also take due note of the information in the CNLTE's 2021 national report, annexed to the Government's report, that various activities have been carried out, including awareness-raising and planning relating to child labour, as well as the establishment of the SOSTEM data collection tool for monitoring child labour and children at risk in the Kénédiéba region. It also notes the results achieved through the CNLTE focal points, including: (1) the removal from labour and reintegration of 150 children through the Clear Cotton programme in the Sikasso region; (2) the reception, referral and reintegration of 291 children in the Gao region, through the Stop Child Labour/ZLTTE project; and (3) the removal from labour and reintegration of 380 boys and 357 girls in the regions of Djenné, Mopti and Bankass. The Committee encourages the Government to continue its efforts to ensure the progressive elimination of child labour. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures being implemented as part of PANETEM II. It also requests the Government to provide information on the results achieved in monitoring child labour and children at risk through the SOSTEM data collection tool.

Article 2(1). 1. Scope of application and labour inspection. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that no measures have been taken to enable labour inspectors to target children working on their own account or in the informal economy.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that inspections by labour inspectors in coordination with CNLTE focal points are focused primarily on gold washing sites and areas with a high level of agricultural activity. The Committee strongly encourages the Government to redouble its efforts to strengthen the labour inspection services to ensure that all children receive the protection provided for by the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information on the results achieved, including the number of identified cases of children engaged in gold washing and agricultural activities, and the penalties imposed for violations.

2. Minimum age for admission to employment or work. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes Decree No. 2022-0125/PT-RM of 4 March 2022, amending certain provisions of Decree No. 96-178/P-RM of 13 June 1996 on the implementation of the Labour Code. In this regard, the Committee notes with satisfaction the review of section D.189-23 of the Labour Code, setting out the list of loads for children, raising the minimum age from 14 to 15 years for children who cannot carry, drag or push a load, depending on the type of transport, weight of the load and sex of the child. This amendment is in line with the minimum age in section 20(b) of the Child Protection Code, in conformity with the minimum age of 15 years stated by the Government on the occasion of the ratification of the Convention.

Article 3(3). Admission to hazardous types of work from the age of 16 years. In its previous comments, the Committee emphasized that section D.189-33 of Decree No. 96-178/P-RM did not set forth the obligation to ensure that young persons between the ages of 16 and 18 years engaged in hazardous types of work have received adequate specific instruction or vocational training in the relevant branch of activity, as provided for in Article 3(3) of the Convention.

The Committee notes that the new Decree No. 2022-0125/PT-RM amending certain provisions of Decree No. 96-178/P-RM of 13 June 1996, on the terms and conditions of application of the Labour Code relating to hazardous types of work from the age of 16 years, is still not in conformity with the conditions set forth in Article 3(3) of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to take measures to ensure that the provisions of the Labour Code concerning admission to hazardous types of work from the age of 16 years are brought into conformity with the conditions set forth in Article 3(3) of the Convention. It requests the Government to provide a copy of the texts when they have been adopted.

Article 7. Light work. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the Government planned to amend section 189-35 of Decree No. 96-178/P-RM of 13 June 1996 so as to raise the minimum age for domestic work and light work of a seasonal nature from 12 to 13 years. The Committee notes with regret that no amendment has been made to section 189-35 in new Decree No. 2022-0125/PT-RM on the minimum age of 12 years for light work.

The Committee notes that according to the Government's information, a draft decree, prepared by the labour services and submitted to the social partners, is in the process of being adopted. The Government also indicates that the process is under way to draw up a list of light work with a view to determining types of light work and the conditions under which they are carried out, in cooperation with the ILO. The Committee expresses the hope that the decree in the process of being adopted on the application of the Labour Code will be aligned with the Convention in order to regulate the employment of children in light work from the age of 13 years. It requests the Government to provide a copy of the decree and the list of light work when they are adopted.

Previous comment

Articles 3(a) and 7(1) of the Convention. All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. 1. Compulsory recruitment of children in armed conflict. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the absence of information in the Government's report concerning the compulsory recruitment of children in armed conflict.

In this regard, the Committee notes the information in the Global Protection Cluster Annual Report 2021, regarding an increase in child trafficking, forced labour and compulsory recruitment by armed groups in Mali, as a result of the conflict, insecurity, the COVID-19 pandemic and the deterioration in socio-economic conditions. The report indicates that armed groups also engage in trafficking children for gold panning and that other children are forced to fight within armed groups. They are victims of trafficking in persons, rape, sale and domestic or sexual slavery.

The Committee also notes in the November 2020 Report of the United Nations Secretary-General, on children and armed conflict in Mali (S/2020/1105, paragraph 16), that for the first time since 2014, boys were associated with the Malian armed forces in the Gao region. A total of 24 boys in 2019 and 21 boys in 2020, between the ages of 9 and 16, were used as domestic workers and couriers. However, they were released to their families in 2020 and have been receiving reintegration support.

The Committee once again deplores the recruitment and use of children in the armed conflict affecting the north of the country, especially since the persistence of this worst form of child labour entails other grave violations of the rights of children. While acknowledging the complexity of the situation prevailing on the ground and the presence of armed groups and armed conflict in certain regions of the country, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures, as a matter of urgency, to bring an end, in practice, to the forced recruitment of children under 18 years of age by the parties to the conflict. It also requests the Government to implement the process of disarmament, demobilization and reintegration of all children associated with the armed forces or armed groups in order to ensure their rehabilitation and social integration. Lastly, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that persons forcefully recruiting children under 18 years of age for their use in armed conflict are prosecuted and penalized, and to provide information in this regard.

2. Forced or compulsory labour. Begging. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's information that, between 2019 and 2022, 11 Koranic teachers (marabouts) were brought before the courts for forced begging affecting 109 children. The Government states that the cases are pending before the examining judges of the Court of First Instance of Commune III of Bamako. The Committee requests the Government to continue to take the necessary measures to ensure that thorough investigations and prosecutions are carried out and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions are imposed upon marabouts who use children under 18 years of age for purely economic purposes. It requests the Government to provide information on the results achieved in this regard, including the number of convictions and the penalties imposed.

Clause (b). Use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution. The Committee previously noted the significant number of child victims of commercial sexual exploitation in the country. The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not noted any cases of prosecutions or convictions relating to the use, procuring or offering of children under 18 years of age for prostitution.

In this regard, the Committee notes the report of the United Nations Independent Expert on the situation of human rights in Mali in the Human Rights Council of 15 January 2020, (A/HRC/43/76 paragraph 55) that, during its universal periodic review in January 2018, Mali agreed to ratify the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the sale of children, child prostitution and child pornography. The Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the effective implementation of the provisions of Act No. 2012-023 on the use, procuring or offering of a child under 18 years of age for prostitution. It also requests the Government to provide information in this regard, including statistics on the convictions and criminal penalties handed down.

Articles 3(d) and 7(2). Hazardous work and effective and time-bound measures. Children working in traditional gold panning. In its previous comments, the Committee notes that there are a significant number of children working in hazardous conditions in gold mines, some of whom are not even 5 years old.

The Committee notes from the report of the National Unit against Child Labour (CLNTE), annexed to the Government's report, that a total of 52 girl and 20 boy victims of the worst forms of labour were identified through the monitoring of three gold panning sites in 2021.

The Committee also notes the total number of 205 girls and 232 boys who have benefited from the project against child labour in the cotton production and gold panning value chains through the accelerated schooling strategy (SSA/P), and the results of the Clear Cotton project, both conducted in cooperation with the ILO Office.

However, the Committee notes the Government's indications that the National Plan of Action for the Elimination of Child Labour in Mali (PANETEM I) has not received adequate funding owing to the political and security crisis in the country, but that PANETEM II, which will cover the period 2023 to 2027, is in the process of being approved. The Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts, under PANETEM II, the Clear Cotton project and the SSA/P, in order to remove children from the worst forms of child labour in traditional gold panning and cotton production, with a view to ensuring their rehabilitation and social integration. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the progress achieved and results obtained in this regard.

Article 7(2)(a). Access to free basic education. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the information in the Government's report that the results of the implementation of the ten-year programme for the development of second-generation vocational training and education 2019–2028 (PRODEC II) will be available at the end of 2022. The Government emphasizes in PRODOC II that the children who are out of school come mainly from rural areas and are relatively higher in number in the regions of Mopti (60.4 per cent), Ségou (52.3 per cent), Sikasso (43.7 per cent) and Kayes (45.3 per cent).

The Committee notes the statistics of the UNESCO Institute for Statistics, according to which in 2018, a total of 2,061,713 children and adolescents of primary and lower secondary school age were not in school. In this respect, the Committee notes from the quarterly report of the United Nations Multidimensional Integrated Stabilization Mission in Mali on trends in human rights violations and abuses in Mali from 1 April to 30 June 2022, that a total of 1,731 schools are not operational (affecting 519,300 children) due to insecurity, particularly in the Mopti and Ménaka regions.

The Committee once again expresses its concern at the large number of children deprived of education due to the armed conflict affecting northern Mali. The Committee urges the Government to step up its efforts to improve the functioning of the education system and to provide access to free basic education, by increasing school enrolment rates, both at the primary and secondary levels, and by reducing the drop-out rates in all regions of the country. In this regard, it requests the Government to provide information on the progress achieved and the results obtained through the implementation of PRODEC II 2019–2028.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Previous comments: observation and direct request

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. The Committee previously requested the Government to continue its efforts to ensure the progressive elimination of child labour and to continue providing information on the activities and results of the National Plan of Action on the Elimination of Child Labour (PANETE-RIM).

The Committee notes the information in the Government's report that the implementation of PANETE-RIM has resulted in the organization of activities to combat child labour, primarily in the wilayas (regions) of Guidimaka and Trarza: first and foremost, tripartite missions coordinated by the Ministry of Public Service and Labour (MFPT), the Ministry of Livestock and the Ministry of Social Affairs, Children and Family; and also regional workshops related to the second and third strategic axes of PANETE-RIM aimed at strengthening the technical and operational capacities of the actors involved and raising awareness and improving knowledge about child labour and its worst forms, particularly in the livestock sector. In addition, the Government indicates that a consultation mechanism has been set up with the social partners for the protection of children and the implementation of the national child protection strategy. The Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to ensure the progressive elimination of child labour and to continue to provide information on the activities carried out and results achieved in this regard. It also requests the Government to provide information on the activities of the consultation mechanism to combat child labour. Finally, it requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the availability of updated statistical information on the economic activities of children and young persons, including on the number of children working below the minimum age.

Article 3(1) and (2). Hazardous work. With regard to the adoption of the list of types of hazardous work prohibited for children under the age of 18 years, the Committee refers to its comments in relation to the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182).

Article 5. Limitation of the scope of application of the Convention to certain branches of economic activity. The Committee previously noted that, at the time of ratification of the Convention, Mauritania declared that it was initially limiting the scope of application of the Convention to the branches of economic activity and types of enterprise covered by Article 5(3) of the Convention, namely: mining and quarrying; manufacturing; construction and public works; electricity, gas and water; sanitary services; transport, storage and communications; and plantations and other agricultural undertakings mainly producing for commercial purposes, but excluding family and small-scale holdings producing for local consumption and not regularly employing waged workers. It noted the information provided by the Government that in industries that are excluded from the scope of the provisions of the Convention, child labour is virtually non-existent. However, the Government stated that it intended to extend the scope of the provisions of the Convention to the informal sector, where child labour might still exist.

In this regard, the Committee noted, in its comments on Convention No. 182, the statistics in the September 2018 report on the survey of child labour in agriculture in Mauritania, produced jointly by the Government and the ILO, which indicated that 77.1 per cent of working children who responded to the survey were unpaid family workers. According to that report, more than one third (37.2 per cent) of interviewed child workers between 5 and 17 years of age said that they had been exposed to dangers and hazards connected with agricultural activities, such as injuries from tools and exposure to chemicals.

The Committee notes with concern that the employment of children in informal family enterprises, including in hazardous conditions, appears to be widespread in the country. The Committee emphasizes that, although the scope of the Convention may be limited to certain branches of economic activity, the protection of children from engagement in hazardous work cannot be excluded from the scope of the Convention, especially since the new Order No. 0066 of 17 January 2022 on the list of hazardous work prohibited for children, prohibits the employment of children under 18 years of age in hazardous work harmful to their physical or mental health, in establishments of any kind, including family enterprises. Recalling that Article 5(4) of the Convention allows Member States to extend the scope of the Convention by a declaration addressed to the Director-General of the Office, the Committee strongly encourages the Government to consider the possibility of making use of this Article to ensure the protection of children working in the informal sector, in particular in a family context. In the meantime, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that no child under the age of 18 years is engaged in hazardous work, including those working in a family business, and to provide information on the progress made in this regard and the results achieved.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

Previous comment

Articles 3(a) and 7(1) of the Convention. Slavery or slavery-like practices and penalties. 1. Child victims of slavery. Regarding the measures taken to ensure effective application of Act No. 2015-31 of 10 September 2015 criminalizing slavery and suppressing slavery-like practices, the Committee refers to its detailed comments on the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29).

2. Forced or compulsory labour. Begging. The Committee previously noted that section 42(1) of Ordinance No. 2005-015 for the protection of children under criminal law provides that any person who causes a child to beg or directly employs a child to beg shall be liable to imprisonment of one to six months and a fine. It again notes with regret the lack of information on investigations and prosecutions of marabouts who force children to beg. Recalling that even the best legislation is only effective if it is enforced, the Committee again urges the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure the effective application of section 42(1) of Ordinance No. 2005-015 for the protection of children under criminal law. The Committee urges the Government to provide information on this matter, including, for example, the number of marabouts identified as using children for purely economic purposes, the number of prosecutions and the criminal penalties imposed.

3. Sale and trafficking of children. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, under section 78 of Act No. 2018-024 of 21 June 2018 issuing the General Child Protection Code, any person who subjects a child to trafficking shall be liable to imprisonment of 10 to 20 years.

The Committee notes from the information available in the Government's report submitted in respect of Convention No. 29, that the new Act No. 2020-017 of 6 August 2020 on the prevention and repression of trafficking in persons and the protection of victims, defines and includes all forms of human trafficking that were not provided for under Act No. 2015-031 criminalizing slavery and suppressing slavery-like practices. It provides adequate sanctions for all forms of trafficking to which persons may be exposed, including forced labour, slavery and slavery-like practices. It also aims to promote national coordination and international cooperation in the field of combating trafficking in persons. The Government also supplies detailed information on the action undertaken since the entry into force of Act No. 2015-031, including the annual organization of training and awareness-raising activities by the Justice Department, aimed at strengthening the capacities of magistrates, and of the actors in the criminal justice system, including judges, prosecutors, judicial police officers, attorneys, registrars and civil society actors. Moreover, the Committee notes, still according to the Government's report on Convention No. 29, the data concerning the cases considered by the Supreme Court, the appeal courts and the judicial authorities related to trafficking for the purpose of slavery. The Committee notes however that this data do not include the other forms of trafficking and are not disaggregated by age. The Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to strengthen the capacities of the entities responsible for the application of legislation to combat the sale and trafficking of children under 18 years of age, including through training and the provision of adequate resources. It also requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of section 78 of Act No. 2018-024 of 21 June 2018 issuing the General Child Protection Code and of Act No. 2020-017 on the prevention and repression of trafficking in persons and the protection of victims, indicating the number and nature of the violations identified, the prosecutions filed and the penalties imposed, in cases specifically concerning child victims of trafficking under 18 years of age.

Articles 3(d) and 4(1). Hazardous work and determination of hazardous types of work. The Committee previously expressed the firm hope that the Government would adopt the list of hazardous types of work prohibited for children under 18 years of age in the very near future. It notes with satisfaction the adoption of Ordinance No. 0066-2022 of 7 January 2022 concerning the list of hazardous work prohibited for children, which prohibits the employment of children in hazardous work detrimental to their physical or mental health, in any public or private establishment, whether agricultural, commercial or industrial in nature, including where such establishments impart religious or occupational education or are charitable institutions, family enterprises or private households. In this regard, the Ordinance contains a detailed list of the types of hazardous work prohibited to children. Moreover, section 7 provides that the Secretary-General of the Ministry of Labour, the Director-General of Labour and the labour inspectors, as the case may be, are responsible for application of the Ordinance. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of Ordinance No. 0066-2022 concerning the list of hazardous work prohibited for children. In particular, it requests the Government to provide information on the number and nature of the violations identified by the labour inspection and to indicate what sanctions are provided and applied in such cases.

Article 7(2) Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (b). Assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and integration into society. Forced or compulsory labour. Begging. The Committee previously noted the persistent presence of children engaged in begging and requested the Government to continue to indicate the number of child victims of begging who have been removed from the streets and rehabilitated and integrated into society, including by social protection and rehabilitation centres, and to inform the Committee of any other measure taken to identify and remove talibé children from being obliged to beg.

The Committee notes with regret the absence of relevant information in the Government's report. It notes from Mauritania's national report of 9 November 2020, presented under the Universal Periodic Review of the Human Rights Council, that a programme has been launched to tackle the practice of begging, and a project for the integration and education of child beggars helping to put an end to this practice is under way (A/HRC/WG.6/37/MRT/1), paragraph 119). The Committee requests the Government to intensify its efforts to remove children under 18 years of age from begging, rehabilitate and integrate them socially. It urges the Government to communicate information in this regard, including on the number of talibé children taken into care by the social protection and rehabilitation centres or rehabilitated within the framework of the programme to tackle the practice of begging.

Clause (c). Access to free basic education. The Committee previously noted that while access to basic education has been improved in primary education, with virtual parity between boys and girls, it remained concerned at the poor quality of the teaching, the low transition rates to secondary school, insufficient monitoring of private and Koranic schools, overcrowding and understaffing in schools and the very high school drop-out rates among girls who are descended from persons subjected to slavery or among black African girls.

The Committee notes with regret that the report lacks information in this respect. It notes the information provided by the Government in Mauritania's national report of 9 November 2020, submitted under the Universal Periodic Review to the Human Rights Council, concerning the implementation of the education policy, the principal aim of which is to guarantee for all children on the Mauritanian territory a complete and good quality education, by improving educational opportunities, eliminating disparities of all kinds, raising the quality of teaching and introducing a results-based management approach. Within this framework, the measures taken include: (i) increasing the budget allocated to education; (ii) expanding the network of primary schools, particularly in rural areas, and increasing the numbers of teachers; (iii) introducing nutrition programmes and fitting sanitary installations, specifically for girls; (iv) providing school buses for female students in rural areas; (v) granting cash transfers to poor families, subject to sending their children to school (30,512 poor family beneficiaries); and (vi) granting of monthly scholarships to nearly 2,400 girls from disadvantaged backgrounds. Considering that access to free basic education and school attendance are essential to prevent the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour, the Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to improve the functioning of the education system in the country, including by increasing the secondary school enrolment and completion rate. It again requests the Government to continue to take the necessary steps to improve access to education in public schools, the quality of teaching, and to combat school drop-outs. Lastly, the Committee urges the Government to provide statistical information on the school enrolment and completion rates at both primary and secondary levels, disaggregated by age and gender.

Clause (e). Particular situation of girls. Domestic work. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that more than half of all domestic workers in Mauritania are children, the majority of them girls, separated from their families and exposed to economic exploitation, violence, discrimination and abuse, including sexual abuse. The Committee noted that the Government explained that contracts for domestic work must be in written form and that abuses in this area are severely punished. The Committee requested the Government to communicate statistical information on the number and nature of penalties imposed on persons who exploit girls in domestic work, and to provide copies of standard employment contracts for domestic workers.

The Committee once more notes with regret that the Government provides no information in this respect in its report. However, the Committee notes that, under the new Ordinance No. 0066-2022 of 7 January 2022 concerning the list of hazardous work prohibited for children, domestic work is included in the sectors of activity prohibited to children under the age of 18 years. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the effective implementation of Ordinance No. 0066-2022, thereby putting an end in practice to the exploitation of girls under 18 years of age in domestic work. In this regard, it again requests the Government to provide statistical information on the number and nature of penalties imposed on persons who exploit girls in domestic work and to send copies of standard employment contracts for domestic workers. Lastly, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to identify and remove girls under 18 years from hazardous domestic work and to provide information on the number of girls removed and rehabilitated and socially integrated.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request made directly to the Government.

Mongolia

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2002)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. The Committee previously noted the outcomes of the National Programme for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour 2011–16 (the NAP-WFCL) indicated by the Government, including 694 cases of child labour identified, and the organization of training and awareness-raising events. It further noted that child labour rose from 7 per cent in 2002–03 to 16 per cent in 2011, according to the Understanding Children's Work (UCW) project. The Committee requested the Government to continue its efforts to ensure the progressive abolition of child labour.

The Government indicates in its report that the National Programme for the Development and Protection of Children was adopted by resolution No. 270 of 20 September 2017. This programme, which will be implemented for the 2017–21 period, includes measures to eliminate child labour. The Government states that the Implementation Schedule for the National Programme for the Development and Protection of Children for 2018–19 was approved in 2018 by the Minister of Labour and Social Protection, the Minister of Education, Culture, Science and Sport, and the Minister of Health.

The Committee notes that, according to the 17th Status Report on Human Rights and Freedoms in Mongolia, issued in 2018 by the National Human Rights Commission of Mongolia, the Government expanded the child helpline service by resolution No. 55 of 2016, as an official service centre under the Authority for Family, Child and Youth Development. The Committee notes that the Deputy Minister of Labour and Social Protection indicated in its opening statement for the 75th Session of the United Nations Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) on 25 May 2017 that the child helpline is a 24-hour call centre free of charge, with four channels. The centre receives 15,000 calls per month and provides necessary information and advice related to child protection and contributes to monitoring the receipt and processing of complaints by children. The Committee encourages the Government to pursue its efforts towards the progressive elimination of child labour and to provide information on the measures taken in this regard, including on the implementation of the National Programme for the Development and Protection of Children and on the impact of the child helpline service.

Article 2(1). Scope of application. Informal economy. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the Labour Law excluded work performed outside the framework of a labour contract and self-employment from its scope of application. It noted that the definition provided in the new draft Labour Law did not cover work performed outside the framework of an employer/employee relationship or in the informal economy and requested the Government to modify its draft Labour Law to ensure that the protections provided are extended to children working outside of an employment relationship.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that a parliamentary working group on the Labour Law revision has been appointed by the Parliament, in order to suggest proposals and conclusions prior to the discussion in the Parliament. The Government states that the working group is preparing proposals in order to provide legal protection to all workers, including children, in the Labour Law. The Committee notes that, according to the ILO's information collected in the framework of the project on "Sustaining Generalised Scheme of Preferences-Plus (GSP+) Status by strengthened national capacities to improve International Labour Standards compliance and Reporting-Mongolia Phase 2 (GSP+3)", the draft Labour Law extends labour protection to all cases where employment relations exist, regardless of the existence of an employment contract. It also notes that, according to the ILO's information, the draft revised Labour Law will be discussed during the spring session of parliament, as of 5 April 2019. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will take the necessary measures to ensure that the draft Labour Law does not fail to take into account the Committee's comments, thus ensuring that all children working outside of an employment relationship, such as children working on their own account or in the informal economy, benefit from the protection laid down by the Convention. It requests the Government to provide a copy of the new law, once adopted.

Article 2(3). Age of completion of compulsory schooling. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted the contradictory provisions in various national laws which regulate the minimum age for admission to employment and the age of completion of education. It noted the Government's indication that its legislation provides for nine years of compulsory schooling starting from the age of 6. The Government indicated that the draft Labour Law provides for the prohibition of employment to "(1) children less than 15 years of age and (2) those who have reached that age but who have not finished compulsory education". The Committee accordingly requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that a provision linking the minimum age for admission to employment to the age of completion of compulsory schooling is included in the draft Labour Law.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that the draft Labour Law is under review and that a parliamentary working group on the Labour Law revision has been appointed. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the revision of the Labour Law will include a provision linking the minimum age for admission to employment to the age of completion of compulsory schooling.

Article 7(1) and (3). Light work and determination of light work activities. The Committee previously noted the Government's indication that the legislation concerning light work is included in the draft Labour Law which provides for regulations that will determine light work and hours and conditions in which minors may be employed. It urged the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that a provision regulating light work is adopted in the near future.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that, in the framework of the revision of the Labour Law, light work which may be carried out by children will be regulated for the first time. The Committee notes that, according to the Final Narrative Report of the project GSP+3, the draft revised Labour Law allows children of 13 years of age and above to perform light work that has adequate occupational safety and health conditions with the permission of their legal representatives. The Committee recalls that, under Article 7(1) of the Convention, national laws or regulations may permit the employment or work of persons as from 13 years of age in light work which is: (a) not likely to be harmful to their health or development; and (b) not such as to prejudice their attendance at school, their participation in vocational training or training programmes approved by the competent authority or their capacity to benefit from the instruction received. The Committee expects the Government to take the necessary measures without delay to regulate light work and determine the types of light work activities that may be undertaken by children of 13 years of age and above, within the framework of the Labour Law review process. It requests the Government to provide a copy of the list of the types of light work permitted for children, once it has been adopted.

Article 8. Artistic performances. The Committee previously noted the Government's indication that there is no law or policy limiting age and work hours for children working in artistic performances yet. It requested the Government to take the necessary measures to establish a system of individual permits to be granted for children under 15 years who work in activities such as artistic performances and to limit the hours during which, and prescribe the conditions in which, such employment or work is allowed.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that, in the framework of the revision of the Labour Law, regulations for granting permits, limiting the number of hours during which, and prescribing the conditions in which children under the age of 15 are allowed to work in activities such as artistic performances, will be established. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the revision of the Labour Law will ensure the establishment of a system of individual permits to be granted for children under 15 years of age who work in activities such as artistic performances, in compliance with Article 8 of the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information in this respect.

Article 9(1). Penalties. The Committee previously noted that a draft of the revised version of the Criminal Code, which includes a criminal offence provision for persons employing children in the worst forms of child labour, was being reviewed by the Parliament. It requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the draft Criminal Code establishes sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties.

The Committee notes the absence of information on this point in the Government's report. It notes the Government's indication, in its report to the CRC, that a new Chapter "Crime against children" was added in the Criminal Code of 2015 (which entered into force on 1 July 2017), defining as a crime the intentional engagement of a child to conduct work that is physically and mentally harmful to him/her. The Committee notes that, pursuant to section 16.10 of the Criminal Code, this crime is punishable by a fine, community work, restriction of movements or imprisonment of six months to one year. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application of section 16.10 of the Criminal Code in practice, including information on the number of violations reported, the nature of the offences, and the penalties imposed.

Article 9(3). Keeping of registers. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the national legislation does not contain provisions on the obligation of an employer to keep and make available the registers of persons under the age of 18 whom he/she employs. It noted that the draft regulations to the Labour Law prescribes that an employer must keep a record of "minor employees", and requested the Government to ensure that the regulations will require employers to keep a register containing the name and age (or date of birth) of all persons under the age of 18 years whom they employ.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that section 93.7 of the draft Labour Law requires the employer to keep a register of all children employed by him/her, including their name, date of birth, the work period and the conditions of work, and to inform, within ten days of the start of employment, the relevant state body responsible for labour and labour supervision. The Government further indicates that the draft Penalties Act has been amended in line with the draft revised Labour Law to impose penalties on employers who do not keep registers of children employed. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the draft Labour Law will be adopted without further delay, so as to be in line with Article 9(3) of the Convention, and requests the Government to send a copy of the Law once it has been adopted. It also requests the Government to indicate the penalties applicable to employers who fail to comply with the keeping of registers of children whom they employ and to provide information on the adoption of the draft Penalties Act.

The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will take into consideration the Committee's comments while finalizing its draft legislation. In this regard, the Committee welcomes the ILO project financed by the European Union to support the Generalised Scheme of Preferences (GSP+) beneficiary countries to effectively implement international labour standards targeting Mongolia.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Morocco

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2000)

Article 2(1) of the Convention. Minimum age for admission to employment or work and application of the Convention in practice. 1. Children working in informal artisanal activities and other sectors. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, according to the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), child labour was common in informal artisanal activities. It also noted that, according to the report entitled "Understanding Children's Work in Morocco", 7 per cent of children between 7 and 14 years of age were engaged in work, while 18 per cent of children were economically active in the 12 to 14 age group. According to this study, 87 per cent of working children were in rural areas, where they worked in agriculture. The Committee also observed that, under section 4 of the Labour Code, children employed in informal artisanal activities, or formal artisanal activities involving five employees or fewer, do not enjoy the protection of the Labour Code and, consequently, do not benefit from the application of the minimum age of 15 years for admission to employment or work. The Committee noted that, according to the survey of children's work in small agricultural undertakings in Morocco (2014), the average age of children working in small agricultural undertakings was 14.3 years, with the over-15 age group accounting for nearly 57 per cent of the total and the under-12 age group for 10 per cent. It further noted that the average school dropout age was 13 years. The Committee noted with interest the Government's statement that the bill concerning conditions of work and employment in activities of a purely traditional nature (bill on traditional activities), which prohibits work for children under 15 years of age in this sector in accordance with sections 143 and 153 of the Labour Code, was examined by the Council of the Government on 25 December 2014.

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that the bill on traditional activities has been amended to incorporate new protectionist provisions which are favourable to workers in the sector and that it was referred to the Secretariat-General of the Government on 7 June 2018. The Committee also notes that, according to the quarterly employment survey of the Office of the High Commissioner for Planning, a total of 46,662 children under 15 years of age were engaged in work in the third quarter of 2017 and over 88 per cent of them were working in rural areas. The Committee further notes that the United Nations Human Rights Committee, in its concluding observations of December 2016, expressed concern at the continued economic exploitation of children, particularly in agriculture (CCPR/C/MAR/CO/6, paragraph 47). The Committee recalls that the Convention applies to all sectors of economic activity and all forms of employment or work, including the artisanal and agricultural informal economy. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the bill concerning conditions of work and employment in activities of a purely traditional nature will be adopted in the very near future and requests the Government to send a copy when it has been adopted. It requests the Government to continue its efforts to combat child labour, especially in the artisanal and agricultural sectors, and to provide information on the implementation of any project in this regard and the results achieved.

2. Child domestic workers. As regards the issue of child domestic labour, the Committee requests the Government to refer to its detailed comments on the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182).

Article 9(1). Penalties. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that section 151 of the Labour Code provides that the employment of a child under 15 years of age, in breach of section 143 of the Labour Code, shall be punishable by a fine of 25,000–30,000 dirhams (MAD) (US$3,000–3,600), and that a repeat offence is subject to a term of imprisonment of six days to three months and/or a fine of MAD50,000–60,000 (US$6,000–7,200). It nevertheless noted that sections 150 and 183 of the Labour Code provide for a fine of MAD300–500 (US$36–60) for breaches of sections 147 and 179 of the Labour Code (prohibiting the employment of children under 18 years of age in hazardous work, in quarries or mines, or in work likely to hamper their growth). The Committee noted with regret the lack of information on any legislative amendments relating to penalties for violations of the ban on employing children under 18 years of age in hazardous work. Furthermore, the Committee noted that, before resorting to penalties, labour inspectors must give advice and information to employers on the dangers to which child workers are exposed. Under sections 542 and 543 of the Labour Code, a labour inspector who detects a violation of the safety and health provisions or regulations that poses an imminent risk to the workers' health or safety shall issue an order requiring the employer to take all the necessary measures immediately. It is only if the employer refuses or fails to comply with the requirements of the order that the labour inspector shall immediately refer the matter to the court of first instance, where the employer may be given a deadline for taking all necessary steps to prevent the imminent danger and may order the closure of the establishment and determine, where appropriate, the necessary duration of the closure. The Committee observed that persons who have employed children in breach of the provisions giving effect to the Convention are not generally prosecuted if such employment is brought to an end.

The Committee notes the Government's indications that in 2017 labour inspectors carried out 684 inspections in which they made 2,306 observations and issued 43 compliance notices. The Government indicates that, out of 85 working children under 15 years of age, 70 were removed from work and, out of 542 children between 15 and 18 years of age engaged in hazardous work, 158 were removed from such work. The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not sent any information on the number of persons prosecuted and the penalties imposed on persons violating provisions giving effect to the Convention. Furthermore, the Committee notes with concern that despite the fact that it has been raising this issue since 2005, the penalties for violating the prohibition on the employment of children under 18 years of age in hazardous work still do not constitute an adequate deterrent to ensure the application of the provisions of the Convention concerning hazardous work. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that all persons who employ children under 18 years of age in hazardous work are prosecuted and incur penalties that constitute an effective and adequate deterrent, in accordance with Article 9(1) of the Convention and in line with the more severe penalties envisaged in section 151 of the Labour Code. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the type of violations of the Convention detected by the labour inspection services, the number of persons prosecuted for each type of violation and the penalties imposed, particularly in relation to the provisions giving effect to the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

Articles 3(a) and (d) and 7(1) of the Convention. Forced or compulsory labour, hazardous work and penalties. Child domestic labour. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the statement by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) that child domestic labour, performed under conditions of servitude, is common practice in the country, with parents selling their children, sometimes as young as 6 years of age, to work as domestic servants. The Committee noted that section 10 of the Labour Code prohibits forced labour and that section 467-2 of the Penal Code prohibits the forced labour of children under 15 years of age. It further noted that a bill concerning domestic work, fixing the minimum age for this type of employment at 16 years, was in the process of being adopted. The Government indicated that a specific list determining hazardous types of work prohibited in the domestic work sector had been drawn up and would be circulated for approval after promulgation of the abovementioned bill. Furthermore, an initial survey of girl domestic workers indicated a total of nearly 23,000 girls under 18 years of age engaged in domestic work in the Greater Casablanca area, 59.2 per cent of whom were under 15 years of age. The survey revealed that many of these girls were victims of abuse. The Committee noted with concern the observation of the United Nations Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) that the authorities had not taken sufficient measures to remove girls, some only 8 years old, from households where they are employed as domestic workers in precarious conditions. The Committee urged the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that the abovementioned bill and the list of hazardous types of domestic work were adopted as a matter of urgency.

The Committee notes with satisfaction the adoption of Act No. 19-12 fixing the conditions of work and employment of male and female domestic workers. The Government refers in its report to the adoption of two implementing decrees, specified in sections 3 and 6 of the aforementioned Act, which establish, respectively, the standard employment contract for domestic workers and the list of hazardous types of work prohibited for domestic workers aged between 16 and 18 years. Activities prohibited for children include the use of chemicals and electric cutting tools or machines which may present a risk to the safety and health of domestic employees, and work which may expose domestic workers to health risks because of contact with persons suffering from contagious diseases.

The Committee notes that section 6 of Act No. 19-12 fixes the minimum age for admission to employment as a domestic worker at 18 years. The aforementioned section provides for a transition period of five years during which children between 16 and 18 years of age may be employed as domestic workers further to written permission from their guardians. Section 7 of the Act prohibits forced labour involving domestic workers. Under section 23 of the Act, persons who infringe sections 6 and 7 are liable to a fine of 25,000–30,000 Moroccan dirhams (MAD) (US$3,000–3,600) and, in the case of a repeat offence, a fine of double the amount and/or three months' imprisonment. The Committee further notes that the United Nations Human Rights Committee, in its concluding observations of December 2016, expressed concern at the continued economic exploitation of children, particularly as domestic workers (CCPR/C/MAR/CO/6, paragraph 47). While noting the Government's efforts to regulate domestic work, the Committee reminds the Government that, under Article 3(a) and (d) of the Convention, work done by young persons under 18 years of age under conditions similar to slavery or under hazardous conditions constitutes one of the worst forms of child labour and, under Article 1, must be eliminated as a matter of urgency. The Committee therefore requests the Government to continue its efforts to combat child domestic labour, particularly by ensuring that Act No. 19-12 fixing the conditions of work and employment of male and female domestic workers is applied in practice, and that penalties constituting an effective deterrent are imposed in practice on any individuals who subject children under 18 years of age to domestic work in hazardous or abusive conditions. It requests the Government to provide information on the number and nature of reported offences, the number of prosecutions and the penalties imposed.

Article 3(a). Trafficking of children. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that there was no national legislation relating to the trafficking of children. It also noted the CRC's observation that Morocco remains a country of origin, destination and transit for children, who are subjected to forced labour, particularly as domestic workers, and also to trafficking for sexual exploitation and forced begging, two-thirds of trafficking victims being children. The Committee further noted that the 2015 study on the trafficking of women and children in Morocco, produced jointly by UN Women, Morocco and the Swiss Confederation, refers to the existence of forced labour for boys in craft work and agriculture and also of trafficking for sexual exploitation in the form of prostitution or pornography. The Committee asked the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure the adoption of legislation prohibiting the trafficking of children.

The Committee notes with interest the adoption of Act No. 27-14 concerning action against trafficking in persons, promulgated by Dahir No. 1-16-104 of 18 July 2016, under which the definition of exploitation includes all forms of sexual exploitation, particularly exploitation of the prostitution of third parties and exploitation in the form of pornography, including through electronic communication media, and also exploitation in the form of forced labour, servitude, begging, slavery or similar practices, and exploitation in armed conflicts (section 448.1). The Committee notes that, under section 448.4, traffickers of persons are liable to imprisonment of 20–30 years and a fine of MAD200,000 to MAD2 million (US$21,000–210,000) when the victims are young persons under 18 years of age. The Government indicates that the Act contains provisions relating to institutional measures and provides for the setting up of a national advisory committee whose mandate is to put forward proposals on combating trafficking of persons and to ensure that the necessary steps are taken to support projects run by associations providing assistance for victims.

However, the Committee notes that, according to the report on the work and recommendations of the July 2017 study day on the institutional framework for combating human trafficking, Morocco continues to be a country of origin, transit, and destination for the trafficking of children for labour or sexual exploitation and domestic servitude. The report emphasizes that Morocco has become a country of transit for many migrants originating from sub-Saharan Africa and Asia, who are at special risk of becoming victims of trafficking networks. While noting the efforts made by the Government to combat trafficking in persons, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of Act No. 27-14 concerning action against trafficking in persons, indicating in particular the number of child victims of trafficking, disaggregated by gender and age, and the number and nature of prosecutions and penalties imposed.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour and removing them from these worst forms, and ensuring their rehabilitation and social integration. Child prostitution and sex tourism. In its previous comments, the Committee expressed concern at the persistence of child prostitution and sex tourism involving young Moroccans and immigrants, particularly boys, despite the amendment to the Penal Code in 2003 making sex tourism a criminal offence. It noted the Government's indications that the scourge of the sexual exploitation of children remains unseen and unrecognized in Morocco, and so the Government is making every effort to tackle it. Moreover, the CRC, in its concluding observations of 2014, expressed concern at the growth of sex tourism in Morocco. The Committee also noted that, in the 2011 mid-term evaluation of the National Action Plan for Children 2006–15 (PANE), the Government indicated that PANE had recorded significant progress in the protection of child victims of sexual exploitation, by establishing new public structures for the protection of child victims of sexual violence, including care units in courts and hospitals, support units within the Directorate-General for National Security, guidance and support units in schools, the ONDE telephone helpline and child reception areas in police stations. In this context, the Committee noted that five child protection units (UPEs) were set up between 2007 and 2010 in Marrakech, Casablanca, Tangier, Meknès and Essaouira to ensure better medical, psychological and legal assistance for child victims of violence and mistreatment, including sexual and economic exploitation, and that hundreds of children have benefited. The Government indicated that it had established an integrated public child protection policy in 2013, which included the objective of protecting children from sexual exploitation.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the "Integrated public policy for the protection of children in Morocco 2015–25 (PIPM)", adopted on 3 June 2015, comprises five strategic objectives, including: (i) strengthening the legal framework for child protection and making it more effective; (ii) establishing regional integrated child protection mechanisms; and (iii) setting up information, follow-up/evaluation and monitoring systems. The Government refers to the setting up of a programme for the rehabilitation of the UPEs, developed by the Ministry for the Family, Solidarity, Equality and Social Development (MFSEDS) in collaboration with the National Assistance Agency and associations with expertise in this field, in order to reinforce structures for the social protection of children and improve the quality of care for children in difficult situations. In 2016, three new UPEs were set up in Salé, Taza and Agadir. The Committee notes that the Government does not provide any information on the number of children prevented from engaging in commercial sexual exploitation or removed from it by the UPEs. The Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children. It also requests the Government to send information on the implementation of the integrated public child protection policy with regard to sexual exploitation and also information on the number of children prevented from engaging in commercial sexual exploitation or removed from it by the UPEs.

Clause (d). Children at special risk. Child domestic labour. The Committee previously noted the adoption of the "National programme to combat the use of young girls in domestic work (INQAD)" as part of the National Action Plan for Children. It also noted the results achieved through the ILO–IPEC–PAMODEC project, particularly the training of 50 labour inspectors in the area of child labour with a specific component on child domestic labour, three regional information and consultation meetings with the relevant stakeholders aimed at establishing a process for the preparation of regional plans to combat domestic labour, six training sessions on child domestic labour for educators and social facilitators in non-governmental organizations (NGOs), participation and consultation on the bill concerning domestic workers, the implementation of two action programmes against child domestic labour involving young girls in the regions of Rabat/Salé and Marrakech/Safi in support of the AMESIP and Al Karam associations (providing aid for children in precarious situations).

The Committee notes the Government's indications that financial support from the Government in 2017 enabled associations to develop projects, inter alia, to reduce child domestic labour involving young girls, while also taking action to reduce the school dropout rate. Even though the Government indicates that, in 2016, a total of 286 children under 15 years of age were removed from work and 271 children between 15 and 18 years of age were removed from hazardous work, including young girl domestic workers, the Committee notes the lack of information regarding the number of girls removed from domestic work in particular. The Committee encourages the Government to step up its efforts to identify, remove and reintegrate girls under 18 years of age who are employed in domestic work and are victims of economic or sexual exploitation, and requests it to provide information on the results achieved with respect to domestic work involving young girls.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Mozambique

Previous comments: observation and direct request

Article 2(1) of the Convention. Scope of application and labour inspection. Children working in the informal economy. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication, in its report, that the General Labour Inspectorate (IGT) does not monitor or inspect activities or work in the informal economy considering that the Labour Law (Act No. 23/2007 of 1 August 2007) only regulates work in the formal economy. Consequently, while no situations constituting the employment of children under the minimum age have been identified in inspections conducted in the formal economy, there is no statistical data on the observance of international labour standards regarding the employment of children and young persons in the informal economy. The Government indicates, however, that the IGT has recommended the dissemination of the Transition from the Informal to the Formal Economy Recommendation, 2015 (No. 204), and is continuing its efforts to identify instances of child labour, which is mostly observed in the agricultural, mining and livestock grazing sectors.

While taking due note of this, the Committee notes that, in its concluding observations of 27 November 2019, the United Nations Committee on the Rights of the Child recommended that Mozambique strengthen its labour inspectorate, including through increased financial resources and continuous capacity-building, and develop programmes and intersectional coordination mechanisms to identify and protect victims of child labour, including in the informal sector (CRC/C/MOZ/CO/3-4, paragraph 44). The Committee requests the Government to strengthen its measures to ensure that the protection afforded by the Convention is guaranteed to children working in the informal economy, including through labour inspection. In this regard, the Committee once again encourages the Government to take the necessary measures to strengthen the capacity and expand the reach of the labour inspectorate services to better monitor children working both in the formal and in the informal economy, particularly in the agricultural sector, as well as in the mining and livestock grazing sectors. It requests the Government to provide information on specific measures taken in this regard, as well as on the results achieved.

Article 6. Vocational training and apprenticeship. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication that Act No. 6/2016, amending Act No. 23/2014 on Vocational Education, provides that the minimum requirement to enter the basic level of vocational education is completion of at least the second grade of primary education or equivalent, and the minimum requirement to enter the intermediate level of vocational education is the completion of at least the basic level of vocational education or the first cycle of general secondary education or equivalent. The Committee observes that this does not respond to the requirement, under Article 6 of the Convention, of ensuring that no minor under 14 years of age is permitted to enter into an apprenticeship programme, and that it appears that the minimum age to do so remains 12 years of age, in accordance with section 248(3) of the Labour Law. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that children below the age of 14 do not enter apprenticeship programmes in undertakings, including in the framework of the current Labour Law review.

Article 7(1) and (3). Minimum age for admission to light work and determination of light work. The Committee previously noted that the national legislation of Mozambique permitted minors between 12 and 15 years of age to enter into employment contracts (section 26(2) of the Labour Law), including domestic work (section 4(2) of the Regulations on Domestic Work (Decree No. 40/2008)), with the written authorization of their legal representatives. It requested the Government to take the necessary measures to bring that legislation, including the Labour Law, into conformity with Article 7(1) and (3) of the Convention (minimum age of 13 for light work and conditions and hours for permitted light work activities).

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the revised draft Labour Law will establish the age of 18 as the sole minimum age for admission to employment, without exceptions. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the provisions of the revised Labour Law will ensure that any light work activities may not be undertaken by children under the age of 13 years, as required by Article 7 of the Convention, including in domestic work. In this regard, it requests the Government to keep it informed of the progress made in the adoption of the revised Labour Law, and whether a minimum age of 18 years, without exception, is provided for by the new Labour Law.

Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes the information contained in the Government's report relating to the cases of child labour received by the Children's Court (six cases in 2022), through activities led by municipalities throughout Mozambique. While taking due note of this information, the Committee notes with regret the absence of information concerning the Committee's previous request for statistics on the number of children under 15 years of age who are involved in child labour. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that up-to-date statistical information on the economic activities of children and young persons is made available, including the number of children working under the minimum age. It also requests the Government to provide information on the manner in which the Convention is applied in practice as well as information on the number of inspections carried out, the number and nature of violations relating to the employment of children and young persons detected, and the penalties imposed.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Previous comments: observation and direct request

Articles 3(a), 5 and 7(1) of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Sale and trafficking of children, monitoring mechanisms and penalties. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the information contained in the Government's report according to which the Specialized Unit for Trafficking in Persons, Illegal Immigration and Child Protection (SUTP) of the National Criminal Investigation Service (SERNIC) has carried out prevention interventions throughout the country. The Government indicates that awareness-raising presentations aimed at front-line officials from the SERNIC, the Department for the Assistance of Women and Child Victims of Violence, border control police, and the Customs Service and the National Migration Service have been held in coordination with other State institutions, non-governmental organizations and the International Organization on Migration (IOM). The Committee further notes the information contained in the Government's report under the Forced Labour Convention (No. 29), 1930, according to which other measures have been taken to reinforce the capacities of anti-trafficking authorities, including the production and distribution of handbooks containing procedures for assisting victims of violence, including trafficking victims; weekly technical training sessions provided to police sub-units, addressing various issues including trafficking in persons; and training sessions and short courses held by the SUTP for its focal points throughout Mozambique in order to improve techniques for detecting cases, arresting traffickers and rescuing victims as well as criminal investigation methods. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, in 2021, SERNIC recorded four cases of livestock grazing in Eswatini and the forced labour and sexual exploitation of children in South Africa, both involving Mozambican children. The children involved in these cases, all of whom were girls, were rescued and brought back to their families. The Government also provides statistics on the cases of sexual abuse of minors recorded by SERNIC (299 cases in 2022), but it is unclear whether those cases are related to trafficking or commercial sexual exploitation. Moreover, the Committee observes with regret that the Government does not provide any information on the number of prosecutions, convictions and penalties applied in cases of trafficking of children for commercial sexual or labour exploitation. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take measures to ensure that thorough investigations and prosecutions of perpetrators of the sale and trafficking of children are carried out. The Committee also once again requests the Government to provide information on the practical application of the Trafficking in Persons Act 2008, including information on the number of infringements reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions applied in cases involving children under the age of 18 years.

Clause (b). Use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution, pornography or pornographic performances. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's information, in its report, that specific and coordinated interventions have been implemented by the relevant bodies, namely the national police and the SERNIC, to remove children from situations that are harmful to their health and development, including from areas where child prostitution is practised. The Committee notes, however, that the Government does not provide information on measures taken to ensure that persons who use, procure or offer children for the purposes of prostitution or pornography are effectively punished through appropriate criminal penalties (see 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 637–639). The Committee, therefore, urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that appropriate criminal penalties which constitute an effective deterrent are established for the offences related to the use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution and for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (a). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour. Access to free basic education. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's information regarding the results achieved through the implementation of the National Action Plan to Combat the Worst Forms of Child Labour (NAP) 2017–22, including: (i) the enrolment of 7,395,512 students in full primary education by 2022 (73 per cent of the overall target); (ii) the construction of 1,183 primary classrooms, benefitting more than 130,000 students (35 per cent of overall target); and (iii) the provision of school meal programmes that benefited 206,158 students in 42 districts and 340 schools.

While taking due note of this information, the Committee observes that most measures taken appear to only benefit children at the level of primary education. In this regard, it recalls that, according to a 2021 UNICEF report on the situation of children in Mozambique, the net attendance rate at the secondary level was just 20 per cent for boys and girls between the ages of 13 and 17 years in 2017, with the lowest rates appearing in the North of the country. Considering that education is key in preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour, the Committee strongly encourages the Government to intensify its efforts to improve the functioning of the educational system, particularly by increasing the enrolment, attendance and completion rates at the lower secondary level. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures adopted and the results achieved in this regard.

Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes with regret that the Government does not provide up-to-date data on the situation of working children, including those involved in the worst forms of child labour, in Mozambique. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that sufficient data on the situation of working children, including those involved in the worst forms of child labour in Mozambique, is made available. It also once again requests the Government to supply information on the number of investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penalties applied for offences related to the worst forms of child labour. To the extent possible, all information provided should be disaggregated by age and gender.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Nepal

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1997)

Previous comment

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's information that the Nepal Labour Force Survey (NLFS III) was conducted in 2017–18 by the Central Bureau of Statistics in collaboration with ILO. The Committee notes that according to the Nepal Child Labour Report of 2021, published by the ILO based on the data drawn from the NLFS III, the results of the survey shows a declining trend of overall child labour in Nepal, reaching 1.1 million in 2018 from 1.6 million in 2008. A significant decline is observed in the number of children in hazardous occupations (0.62 million in 2008 to 0.20 million in 2018). The child labour prevalence for children between 5 and 13 years is 18 per cent while it is 10 per cent for children between 14 and 17 years. Female children are more likely to be engaged in child labour (17 per cent than that of male children 14 per cent). This report also indicates that the National Master Plan II (NMP-II) on Child labour 2018-2028 that aims to eliminate all forms of child labour by 2025 has been approved.

The Committee further notes from the Government's 6th and 7th periodic reports to the Committee on the Rights of the Child, submitted on 15 February 2022, that the labour inspectorate conducted 1,762 child labour inspections at workplaces during the 2020-21 fiscal year, and in collaboration with the National Child Rights Council and Civil Society Organisation prosecuted several employers and rescued more than 100 child labourers (paragraph 182). In addition, the Ministry of Labour, Employment and Social Security has been implementing child labour free local level campaigns where 26 local levels are already engaged and additional 50 local levels are set to join in 2021/22 (paragraph 181). The Committee welcomes the decline in the prevalence of child labour, including hazardous child labour and strongly encourages the Government to continue its efforts to ensure the progressive elimination of child labour, including through the implementation of effective measures within the framework of the National Master Plan II. It requests the Government to provide information on the concrete measures taken in this regard and the results achieved.

Article 2(1). Scope of application and labour inspection. Children working in the informal economy. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the Labour Act of 2017 guarantees the right of labour inspectors to inspect all workplaces, including the informal economy. It also noted section 94(1)(g) of the Labour Act which states that the labour inspector shall inspect and find out whether children are employed or not and if found employed, shall rescue them immediately and take action against the employer.

In response to its previous comments concerning strengthening the capacity of the labour inspectorate, the Government indicates that the Occupational Safety and Health Centre has planned for 23 training activities for labour inspectors on various occupational safety and health related matters in the year 2022-23. However, the Committee notes from the Nepal Child Labour Report of 2021, that 87 per cent of children engaged in child labour are working in the agricultural sector, including 13.2 per cent in the production of goods for own use. The Committee therefore urges the Government to continue to take the necessary measures to strengthen the capacity and expand the reach of the labour inspectorate services to better monitor children working in the informal economy or on their own account, particularly in the agricultural sector. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken in this regard as well as the number and nature of violations relating to the employment of children and young persons detected by the labour inspectorate and the penalties imposed.

Article 3. Minimum age for admission to hazardous work and determination of types of hazardous work. The Committee previously observed that pursuant to sections 2(a) and 3(2) of the Child Labour (Prohibition and Regulation) Act, 2000 the prohibition on hazardous and risky jobs listed under Schedule 1, applies only to children under 16 years. Similarly, section 43(2) of the Labour Rules, 1993 also prohibits the employment of persons under 16 years on dangerous machines and in operations which are hazardous to their health. The Committee noted the Government's indication that the draft list of types of hazardous work prohibited to children under 18 years, had been finalized and was awaiting adoption.

The Committee notes that the Government has not provided any information concerning the adoption of the draft list of types of hazardous work prohibited to children under 18 years, and instead refers to Schedule 1 of the Child Labour (Prohibition and Regulation) Act of 2000. The Committee, however, notes that according to section 7(6) of the newly enacted Act Relating to Children of 2018, every child, defined as persons who have not completed 18 years of age, shall be protected from being exploited economically and from activities that are harmful to their health, physical, mental, moral or social development. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the adoption of the draft list of types of hazardous work prohibited to children under 18 years, without further delay and to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

Article 3(3). Admission to types of hazardous work from the age 16 years. The Committee previously noted that some of the activities contained in the proposed list of types of hazardous work, appeared to be prohibited only to children under 16 years. The Committee expressed the hope that the necessary measures would be taken to protect persons between 16 and 18 years who are engaged in hazardous types of work as laid down under Article 3(3) of the Convention.

The Committee notes the Government's information that it is committed to protecting persons between 16 and 18 years who are engaged in hazardous work through school enrolment programmes, family support programmes and alternative care options through the National Child Rights Council and Provincial and Local Child Rights Committees. Recalling the provisions under Article 3(3) of the Convention, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that children between 16 and 18 years of age may be permitted to perform hazardous work only on the condition that their health, safety and morals are fully protected and that they have received adequate training in that activity.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Previous comment

Articles 3(a) and 7(2)(b) of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour and time-bound measures to provide direct assistance for their removal and rehabilitation and social integration. Child bonded labour. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the various rehabilitation programmes provided to Haliya and Kamaiya (agricultural based bonded labour practices) and Kamlari, (offering girls for domestic work to families of landlords) girls by the Ministry of Land Management and Poverty Alleviation. It requested the Government to continue its efforts and to provide information on the measures taken and the results achieved in this regard.

The Committee notes the Government's information in its report that out of the total 27,570 liberated Kamaiyas, 25,195 were provided with land, while 12,820 out of 16,322 Haliya families were rehabilitated. It also notes the Government's information in its report under the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) that the Department of Education has institutionalized a system of extending educational services, by providing scholarships and hostel facilities, to freed Kamlari girls. The Committee encourages the Government to pursue its efforts to ensure that all child victims of bonded labour receive appropriate services for their rehabilitation and social integration, including access to education. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken in this regard and on the results achieved indicating the number of child bonded labourers that have been rehabilitated.

Article 3(b). Use, procuring or offering of a child for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances. The Committee previously observed that the prohibition on the use or involvement of children in an "immoral profession" (sections 2(a) and 16(1)) of the Children's Act, 1992, applies only to children under 16 years. It noted the Government's information that the Children's Bill which contained provisions prohibiting the use, procuring or offering of all children under 18 years for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances was tabled in the Parliament for adoption.

The Committee notes that the Act Relating to Children, 2018 has been adopted. It notes with satisfaction that section 66(3) of this Act which deals with offences related to child sexual abuse makes it an offence to use a child (persons under 18 years as per section 2(j)) for the production of any obscene material or act (subsection (d)); to engage or cause to engage a child in sexual exploitation (subsection h); or to use or cause to use a child in sexual abuse, including child pornography (subsection (j)). According to section 72, these offences are punishable with a fine of up to 100,000 rupees and imprisonment for up to five years. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of section 72 in relation to sections 66(3)(d), (h), (j) of the Act Relating to Children, 2018 for the offences related to the use, procuring or offering of children for the production of pornography or pornographic performances, indicating the number of cases reported, prosecutions, convictions and penalties applied.

Articles 5, 7(1) and 7(2)(b). Monitoring mechanisms, penalties and direct assistance for child victims of the worst forms of child labour. Trafficking. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the activities undertaken by the National and District Committees on Controlling Human Trafficking and the Nepal Police in combating trafficking in persons. It also noted the establishment of a Child Helpline and a Human trafficking and Control Unit.

The Committee notes that the Government report does not contain any information concerning its efforts to combat trafficking in children as requested by the Committee in its previous comments. However, the Committee notes the Government's information in its report of November 2020 to the Human Rights Council that the Nepal Police created a High-level task force to prevent and control the incidence of trafficking and illegal migration, particularly of women and girls and investigate such crimes. Moreover, security check-posts in ten critical points and twenty boarder locations were established for carrying out intensive vigilance and security checks to prevent the incidence of trafficking (A/HRC/WG.6/37/NPL/1, paragraph 109). The Committee also notes the Government's information in its Combined 6th and 7th periodic reports submitted on 15 February 2022 to the Committee on the Rights of the Child (Report to the CRC, 2022), that the Service Centres established under the Nepal Police and the Missing Children Response Centres (MCRC) operate in partnership with the Nepal Police, provide support and services to child victims of trafficking and exploitation. Moreover, the Child Helpline provides counselling, legal aid, information, rescue and temporary shelter facilities for child victims of trafficking and vulnerable children. This report further indicates that the MCRC which are functional in 73 district police offices have supported 3619 children in 2020-21 and the Child helpline which is functional in 18 locations covering 72 districts have supported 10,348 children in 2020-21. According to the statistics of the Nepal Police Women, Children and Senior Citizens Service Directorate, a total of 75 child victims of trafficking (71 girls and 4 boys) were identified in 2019-20. Moreover, in 2020-21, more than 3,000 children were prevented from trafficking and reunited with families through boarder interceptions (paragraphs: 97, 107, 108, 136 and 189). The Committee strongly encourages the Government to continue its efforts to combat trafficking in children and to provide information on the activities undertaken by the Nepal Police and the High-level task force, in monitoring and identifying child victims of trafficking. It requests the Government to provide information on the number of cases of trafficking of children identified, investigations, prosecutions and convictions carried out and the penalties imposed. Lastly, it requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of child victims of trafficking who have been provided support and assistance by the Child Helpline, the Missing Children Response Centres and the Service Centres.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (a). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour. Access to free basic education. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the measures taken to improve access to education of children, including provisions of scholarships for girls and Dalit children. However, it noted that a significant number of children were out of school.

The Committee notes the Government's information that the Act Relating to Compulsory and Free Education, 2018 guarantees free and compulsory education at the primary level and free education up to secondary school (sections 6 and 20). The Government states that it has been concentrating its efforts on increasing retention and completion rates along with improving quality education and a child friendly environment at schools. It indicates that a total of 35,674 schools were operational in 2019–20 which educated over 7 million children from grades 1 to 12 with a fair share of Dalit and indigenous children and a good share of girls' representation in schools. According to the Government's information, in 2019, the net enrolment rate was 97 per cent at the primary level (an increase from 64 per cent in 1991), 94.7 per cent at the lower secondary level, and 51.2 per cent at the higher secondary level with the ratio of girl to boy students increasing from 0.43 to 0.98 in basic education and from 0.43 to 1.01 in secondary education. The Government indicates that it continues to provide scholarships to girls, Dalit students and children from poor families. For the fiscal year 2019–20, and for 2020–21 respectively, 3.19 billion rupees and 2.7 billion rupees were allocated for such scholarships.

The Committee also notes from the Government's report to the Human Rights Council that 3,288,924 children, including children from the Dalit community, conflict affected families and highly marginalized and indigenous communities were provided with scholarships (A/HRC/WG.6/37/NPL/1, paragraph 69). The Committee further notes that the Government, in its report to the CRC, 2022, refers to various initiatives undertaken by the provincial governments for the protection of girls and to support their education, including: (i) the Beti Bachao Beti Padhao (Save Girls and Educate Girls) campaign that provides bicycles for girls, scholarship and educational supports; (ii) the Bank Khata Chhoriko: Surakshya Jivan Bhariko (Daughter's Bank Account- Protection for Lifelong) programme through which the Government deposits cash for the girl child from birth till she is 20 years of age; and (iii) the Sanai Chhu Ma Badhna Deu, Bal Bibah Hoina Padhna Deu (I am Young let me grow, no child marriage but let me go to school) programme which has been launched to provide special educational opportunities and protection for girls (paragraph 37). The Committee, however, notes that according to the UNESCO statistics over 74,280 children and 189,753 adolescents (including 117,859 female adolescents) were out of school in 2021. The Committee therefore strongly encourages the Government to continue its efforts to facilitate access to free, basic and quality education for all children, with a particular focus on girls and indigenous children. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken in this regard and on the results achieved, particularly with regard to improving the functioning of the education system, increasing the school enrolment, attendance and completion rates, and reducing the school drop-out rates.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour, removing them from such work and ensuring their rehabilitation and social integration. 1. Commercial sexual exploitation. The Committee previously noted from the Report of the National Human Rights Commission (NHRC) that a large number of girls and women were involved in commercial sexual exploitation in the entertainment establishments in the Kathmandu valley.

In response to its previous comments concerning the measures taken to remove children from commercial sexual exploitation and to provide assistance, the Committee notes that the Government only refers to a few laws that set the legal framework against trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation, including the Directives for Protection against Economic and Sexual Exploitation of Women and Girls in the Entertainment Sector, 2008. In this regard, the Committee notes from a report of Alliance 8.7 (a global partnership, including ILO, committed to achieving SDG Target 8.7) entitled Understanding Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children in Nepal, 2018 that the adult entertainment sector is a high-risk environment for girls where commercial sexual exploitation is known to occur. Many of these workplaces have become a front for commercial sex and working in these places can lead girls to the sex industry. It is estimated that around 13,000 people in this sector started working as children under the age of 18 years. The Committee once again requests the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to remove children under 18 years of age from commercial sexual exploitation in the entertainment industry and to provide them with the appropriate assistance to ensure their rehabilitation and social integration. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard and the results achieved, indicating the number of children under 18 years removed and rehabilitated.

2. Children working in brick kilns. The Committee notes from the Report on Employment Relationship Survey in the Brick Industry in Nepal, 2020 conducted by the ILO, UNICEF and the Central Bureau of Statistics of Nepal that there are an estimated 17,738 children working in the brick kilns of Nepal with 44.5 per cent of these children involved in hazardous work. These children are mostly exposed to dust and flames, working excessively long hours, working at night and carrying heavy loads. Observing that the work carried out by children under 18 in the brick kiln industry is inherently hazardous, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to prevent all children under 18 years of age from working in the brick kiln industry. It also requests the Government to take effective and time bound measures to remove children from this worst form of child labour and to provide for their rehabilitation and social integration. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken and the results achieved in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

New Zealand

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of Business New Zealand communicated with the Government's report.

Articles 3(d) and 4(1) of the Convention. Hazardous work. Minimum age for admission to hazardous work. The Committee previously noted the Government's indication that children under 18 years cannot work in any restricted areas of licensed premises such as bars, licensed restaurants or clubs. However, it noted that by virtue of section 54(d) of the Health and Safety in Employment Regulations of 1995 (HSE Regulations), hazardous work was prohibited for children under 15 years of age. Moreover, sections 43–48 of the Health and Safety at Work (General Risk and Workplace Management) Regulations, 2016 require the person conducting a business or undertaking (PCBU) to ensure that no worker under the age of 15 years carries out or be present in any area of the workplace where: goods are manufactured or prepared for trade or sale; construction work is carried out; work related to logging or tree-felling is carried out; hazardous substances are manufactured, used or generated; or to lift heavy weights or perform other harmful tasks, or work at or with machinery.

The Committee notes the Government's information in its report that measures to assess options for raising the minimum age for engagement in certain types of hazardous work from 15 to 16 were initiated in 2018. However, the issue was then delayed due to various factors including the need to address COVID-19 pandemic situation. The Government indicates that the matter is still under consideration and efforts will be continued to raise the minimum age for participation in certain types of hazardous work to 16 years. In this regard, the Committee once again draws the Government's attention to Paragraph 4 of the Worst Forms of Child Labour Recommendation, 1999 (No. 190) which addresses the possibility of authorizing the employment or work of young persons as from the age of 16 under strict conditions that their health and safety be protected and that they receive adequate specific instruction or vocational training in the relevant branch of activity. While acknowledging the difficulties imposed by the COVID 19 pandemic, the Committee expresses the hope that the discussions to which the Government refers will continue with the aim to ensure that the current review of the regulatory frameworks for young persons will take into consideration the requirement that employment or work in certain types of hazardous work by young persons between 16 and 18 years may be authorized only under strict conditions that their health, safety and morals be protected and that they receive adequate specific instruction or vocational training in the relevant branch of activity. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

Article 4(1) and (3). Periodic revision of the types of hazardous activities. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the matter concerning the revision of the list of types of hazardous work for young persons is still under consideration and that efforts to revise the list of types of hazardous work shall continue. The Committee once again reminds the Government that, pursuant to Article 4(1) and (3) of the Convention, the types of work which, by their nature or the circumstances in which they are carried out, are likely to harm the health, safety or morals of children under 18, shall be determined by national laws or regulations, and that this list shall be periodically examined and revised as necessary, in consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned. The Committee therefore expresses the firm hope that the Government will take the necessary measures to ensure that the revision of the regulatory framework for young persons, carried out in consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned, will result in the adoption of a concrete list of types of hazardous work prohibited to young persons under 18 years, including work in plants, work with machineries and vehicles used for agricultural purposes as well as certain types of work in the agricultural, construction and hospitality industries, as identified by the report of the Department of Labour. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

Article 5. Monitoring mechanisms and application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes the Government's information that the COVID-19 pandemic situation has significantly impacted the delivery of the Youth Health and Wellbeing Survey. The data collection has been completed and is expected to be published in the second half of 2022. The Committee also notes the Government's information that no marked reduction in the rate of work-related injuries for young workers has been observed from 2018-2020. According to the data provided by the Government in this regard, 19 incidents of work-related fatal injuries of children between 4 to 17 years were reported from 2018 to 2020. Of these, in four incidents children were employed, including one child of 15 years, while the rest of the incidents involved members of the public. In this regard the Committee also notes the observations made by the Business New Zealand that the workplace child fatalities are recorded as workplace accidents because they occur in a workplace but that in many instances, the child concerned lives on the premises and is not necessarily there as a paid employee. The Government further indicates that the overall work-related acute injury rates have reduced by 25 per cent from 2013 to 2020. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the findings of the Youth Health and Wellbeing Survey will be published in the near future, and to provide a copy of the same so as to better understand the working conditions of young persons and health and safety outcomes.

Previous comments: observation and direct request

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee repeated its request to the Government for statistical information on the nature, extent and trends of the employment of children under 14 years of age, disaggregated by sex and by age. The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that the Ministry of the Family, Adolescence and Childhood (MIFAM) has taken measures within families and communities to ensure children's full development within families, without having to work. To this end, through the "Traffic light Plan" ("Plan Semáforo"), MIFAM has raised awareness in families working on their own account to reduce the time the children spend on the streets and in sectors at risk, thereby ensuring that the families enrol and keep their children in the education system.

The Committee once again notes with regret the lack of statistical information on the extent and trends of child labour in the country. Recalling the importance of having up-to-date statistical data on the nature, extent and trends of child labour to examine the application of the Convention in practice, the Committee urges the Government to provide such information in its next report. The Committee also requests the Government to provide detailed information on the measures and programmes adopted to eradicate child labour, and their results.

Article 2(3). Age of completion of compulsory schooling. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to match the age of completion of compulsory schooling with the minimum age for admission to employment or work, which is 14 years. The Committee deeply regrets once again noting that the Government's report does not contain any information on the measures taken to raise the age of completion of compulsory schooling, set at 12 years, (in accordance with section 23 of the 2006 General Education Act) to at least 14 years, which is the declared minimum age for admission to employment. The Committee once again recalls that if compulsory schooling comes to an end before the age at which children are legally entitled to work, a vacuum may arise which regrettably opens the door for the economic exploitation of children (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 371). The Committee therefore reiterates the desirability of raising the age of completion of compulsory schooling so that it matches the minimum age of admission to employment. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take, without delay, the necessary measures to guarantee compulsory schooling up to the minimum age for admission to employment or work, namely 14 years.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Previous comments: observation and direct request

Articles 3(d) and 7(2)(b) of the Convention. Hazardous work. Direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration. The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report under the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) that, between 2018 and the first quarter of 2022, 7,395 special child labour inspections were conducted, 927 of which in the agricultural sector and 36 in quarry and salt mines. As a result of those inspections, 12 boys and 4 girls were ordered to be immediately removed from their workplace. The Committee requests the Government to continue taking measures to detect and penalize situations where children under 18 years are working in hazardous occupations, including in the agricultural and mining sectors. In this respect, it requests the Government to continue providing information on the number of inspections carried out, infringements detected and penalties imposed. Lastly, it requests the Government to continue taking measures to remove and rehabilitate children from this worst form of child labour, and provide information on the results achieved in this respect.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (a). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour. Access to free basic education. The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that in order to improve children's access to education, distance learning modalities have been implemented for primary and secondary levels, and that school kits have been provided. It notes that one of the objectives of the National Plan against Poverty for Human Development 2022–2026 is to have, by 2026, 94 per cent of children in school and 96.9 per cent completing school at primary level (6 to 12 years old); and 93 per cent of children in school and 95.6 per cent completing school at secondary level (12 to 17 years old). It also sets out training for 20,000 schoolteachers and headteachers in the proper use of educational technology, and for 260,000 students, teachers and parents through counselling measures among educational communities. The Committee also notes that the United Nations Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, in its 2021 concluding observations concerning Nicaragua, expressed its concern about shortcomings in the quality of school infrastructure and materials and in the content of curricula and the training of teachers, particularly in rural areas and on the Caribbean coast (E/C.12/NIC/CO/5, paragraph 46). Recalling that education is key in preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour, the Committee requests the Government to pursue its efforts to improve the functioning of the education system and to facilitate access to free, quality basic education, to all children. In this respect, it requests the Government to provide information on the results of the National Plan against Poverty for Human Development relating to primary and secondary education, including updated statistics on rates of enrolment, attendance and completion in school.

Previous comment

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. In response to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's information in its report on the results achieved following the implementation of the measures undertaken within the framework of the National Action Plan for the Elimination of Child Labour. Accordingly, a total of 6,933 children (3,858 boys and 3,075 girls) were rescued from child labour and 120 vulnerable households were empowered. The Government also states that the second cycle of its National Policy on the Elimination of Child Labour and its National Action Plan (NAP) 2021-2025 has been launched and is currently being implemented. A State Action Plan on child labour in alignment with the NAP has been developed in the six states of Ogun, Oyo, Ondo, Niger, Lagos and Ekiti. Moreover, capacity building workshops were conducted which benefitted 85 Child Labour Desk Officers and State Controllers of Labour.

With regard to the data collected through the National Reporting Template on child labour, the Committee notes the Government's information that from 2018 to 2020, 12,334 cases of child labour were detected, of which 2,772 children were empowered, 2,671 children were referred to social services, and 6,891 children were reunited with their families. The Government also indicates that from 2018 to 2019, 629 prosecutions were conducted, 308 fines were imposed, and 63 persons were sentenced to imprisonment.

The Committee further notes that the ILO project entitled "Accelerating Action for the Elimination of Child Labour in Supply Chains in Africa" launched in 2018 in Nigeria (ACCEL Africa Project in Nigeria) aims to eliminate child labour in supply chains in cocoa and artisanal small-scale gold mining supply chains. This project has undertaken several activities, including: (i) strengthened systems and provided stakeholders across spheres of the society with the skills and tools required to urgently eliminate child labour and achieve SDG Target 8.7 by 2025; (ii) carried out a series of interventions on child labour, including research, the provision of school kits and re-registration of out-of-school children and other direct and indirect interventions; and (iii) conducted capacity building workshops for 37 child labour desk officers to enhance the national response to eradicate child labour, to build the requisite skill and also to equip them with the modalities of implementing the actions for the elimination of child labour. The Committee notes from an ILO Press Release of May 2021 entitled: ILO Supports Nigeria's Response to Child Labour Emergency that in order to reduce child labour in supply chains, Nigeria is operating a Conditional Cash Transfer (CCT) Scheme with over 2.5 million households that are currently beneficiaries and which is envisaged to be extended to over one million vulnerable households within its Nigeria's Action Pledges. The Committee, however, notes from this Press release that about fifteen million children under 14 years are engaged in economic activities and about half of this population are working in hazardous situations. While noting the measures taken by the Government, the Committee expresses its deep concern at the large number of children engaged in child labour and hazardous work in Nigeria. The Committee therefore strongly urges the Government to intensify its efforts to ensure the elimination of child labour, including within the framework of the National Action Plan 2021-2025 and the ACCEL Africa Project in Nigeria and to provide information on the concrete measures taken in this regard and the results achieved. It also requests the Government to continue to provide information on the data collected with regard to the employment of children and young persons through the National Reporting Template. The Committee further requests the Government to continue to provide information on the manner in which the Convention is applied in practice, including updated statistical data on the employment of children and young persons, especially regarding children working in the informal economy, as well as extracts from the reports of inspection services and information on the number and nature of violations detected and penalties applied. To the extent possible, this information should be disaggregated by age and gender.

With regard to the issues raised under Article 2(1), Article 3(2), Article 6, and Article 7(1) and (3), the Committee requests the Government to see the consolidated comments at the end.

Article 2(1). 1. Scope of application. Self-employment and work in the informal economy. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that section 60 of the revised Labour Standards Bill has broadened the definition of an employee to include, "other forms of employment both in the formal and informal economy" thereby ensuring protection for all working children, including self-employed children and children working in the informal economy.

2. Minimum age for admission to work. Following its previous comments concerning the discrepancies on the minimum ages for employment prescribed by the national legislation, the Committee notes the Government's information that the minimum age of 15 years for employment or work, which is the age specified at the time of ratification, has been incorporated in the revised Labour Standards Bill.

Article 3(2). Determination of hazardous work. In reply to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's information that the list of types of hazardous work prohibited to children under 18 years of age has been incorporated in the third schedule of the revised Labour Standards Bill.

Article 6. Apprenticeship. With regard to the minimum age for apprenticeship, the Committee previously noted that section 46(1)A of the revised Labour Standards Bill establish a minimum age of 14 years for apprenticeship programmes.

Article 7(1) and (3). Minimum age for admission to light work and determination of light work activities. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government's information that section 8(1)A of the revised Labour Standards Bill established a minimum age of 13 years for admission to light work and lays down the conditions and hours of work permitted to children of 13 years of age in light work activities. It also noted the Government's indication that Schedule two of the revised Labour Standards Bill provides for a list of activities that constitute light work.

Noting the Government's information that the Labour Standards Bill has been validated by the social partners, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the revised Labour Standards Bill which:

- (i) provides for the protection of all working children, including self-employed children and children working in the informal economy;
- (ii) provides for a minimum age of 15 years for admission to employment or work;
- (iii) provides for a list of types of hazardous work prohibited to children under 18 years;
- (iv) establishes a minimum age of 14 years for apprenticeship programmes;

(v) establishes a minimum age of 13 years for light work activities, indicating the hours and conditions of light work; and will be adopted in the near future. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard as well as a copy once it has been adopted.

(vi) provides for a list of light work activities permitted to children of 13 years;

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Previous comment

Articles 3(a) and 7(2)(b) of the Convention. All forms of slavery and practices similar to slavery and effective and time-bound measures. Compulsory recruitment of children for armed conflict and providing the necessary and appropriate direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour, and for their rehabilitation and social integration. In its previous comments, the Committee noted from the Report of the Secretary-General on Children and Armed Conflict that an action plan was signed between the Civilian Joint Task Force (CJTF) and the United Nations to end and prevent the recruitment and use of children and a standing order was issued by the CJTF in this regard. However, it noted that although there was a decline in the total number of verified cases of recruitment and use of children for armed conflict, the Report of the Secretary-General indicated that grave violations and abuses committed by Boko Haram against children remained gravely disturbing, in particular the use of children as carriers of person-borne improvised explosive devices as well as the large number of abductions.

In response to its previous comments the Committee notes the Government's statement in its report that it has been identified that persons who forcefully recruit children in armed conflicts are members of the Boko Haram terrorist group. In order to put a stop to this practice, the Government through the Ministry of Defence is carrying out regular sensitization workshops and ensuring the registration of members of vigilante groups that are closely monitored by the Nigerian Security and Civil Defence Corps. The Government also indicates that child victims who have been released from the enclaves of Boko Haram are adequately rehabilitated through the Operation Safe Corridor carried out by the Ministry of Humanitarian, Disaster Management and Social Development and the Ministry of Defence.

The Committee also notes from the Report of the Special Representative to the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict of July 2022, that the Governor of the State of Borno, (which has remained the epicentre of protracted armed conflict for more than 12 years) has signed the Child Rights Bill into law, which provides for the protection of children against recruitment and use for armed conflict and other forms of violence and exploitation (paragraph 22). The Committee further notes that the Secretary-General for Children and Armed Conflict, in her Report of June 2022, commended the CJTF for sustaining the progress on the 2017 action plan to end and prevent the recruitment and use of children, including through a child protection training plan and the establishment of child protection units in CJTF formations in Borno State, in collaboration with the United Nations (paragraph 271). However, the Report of the Secretary-General indicates that the United Nations verified 444 grave violations against 356 children in north-east Nigeria. A total of 63 children (9 boys and 54 girls), some as young as 6 years of age, were recruited and used by Boko Haram-affiliated and splinter groups: Jama'atu Ahlis Sunna Lidda'Awati Wal-Jihad (JAS) (45) and Islamic State West Africa Province (ISWAP) (18) in Borno State, mostly following abductions (paragraphs 263, 264).

While noting certain measures taken by the Government on the use of children in armed conflict, the Committee must once again deeply deplore the persistence of this practice, especially as it entails other violations of the rights of the child, such as abductions, murders and sexual violence. While acknowledging the complexity of the situation on the ground and the presence of armed groups in the north-east of the country, the Committee strongly urges the Government to continue to take measures, using all available means, to ensure the full and immediate demobilization of all children and to put a stop, in practice, to the forced recruitment or use of children under 18 years of age into armed groups. It also urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures to ensure that thorough investigations and prosecutions of all persons, who forcibly recruit children under 18 years of age for use in armed conflict, are carried out and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice. It requests the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to provide for their rehabilitation and social integration and to provide information on the measures taken in this regard and on the results achieved.

Articles 5 and 7(1). Monitoring mechanisms and penalties. In reply to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's information that the National Agency for the Prohibition of Trafficking in Persons (NAPTIP) is undertaking systematic efforts to fight trafficking in persons including through conducting awareness-raising and capacity building programmes for the judiciary and law enforcement bodies on investigation and appropriate punishment for the offences under the Act on Trafficking in Persons (Prohibition) Law Enforcement, 2015. The Government also indicates that the investigation of child trafficking cases have led to the rescue of 2,966 child victims of trafficking. The Committee also notes that the United Nations Special Rapporteur for Trafficking in Persons, especially women and children, in her End of visit Statement of September 2018, commended the efforts of NAPTIP both at federal and state level, as well as the recent initiative of the Governor of Edo State to put in place the 'Edo State Task Force against Human Trafficking' chaired by the Edo State Attorney General.

However, this document states that Nigeria remains a source, transit and destination country for victims of trafficking and that internal trafficking of girls for the purpose of domestic servitude and sexual exploitation and boys for the purpose of child begging are rampant. Furthermore, the Committee notes with concern from the UNICEF Situation Analysis of Children in Nigeria, 2022 that the International Organization for Migration (IOM) reports that 18 per cent of trafficking victims in Nigeria are girls under the age of 18. Thousands of children from poor homes, mostly aged 15–17, are involved in domestic labour (page 17). The Committee requests the Government to strengthen its efforts to combat child trafficking by ensuring that the perpetrators of these acts are identified and prosecuted, and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions are imposed. It requests the Government to continue providing information on the measures taken in this regard, including by the NAPTIP. The Committee further requests the Government to continue to provide statistical information on identified cases of trafficking in children under 18 years, the prosecutions brought, the convictions obtained and the penalties imposed.

Article 7(2)(a) and (e). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour. Access to free basic education and special situation of girls. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the various measures and policies implemented in Nigeria for improving access to education, such as the National Policy on Inclusive Education; Safe School Initiative launched in the Northeast for students affected by the conflict; the Students Tutoring, Mentoring and Counselling Programme; and the School enrolment campaign. The Committee however, noted from the 2018 UNICEF report on education in Nigeria, that although primary school enrolment had increased in the recent years, the net attendance was still low at about 70 per cent. Nigeria still had 10.5 million out-of-school children, which was the highest in the world, with 60 per cent of them in northern Nigeria, where the conflict had deprived many children of access to education. The Committee had also noted that about 60 per cent of out-of-school children are girls, many of those who do enrol and then drop out.

The Committee notes that the Government report does not contain any information on this matter. The Committee notes from a Press Release of June 2022 of the UNICEF that the Katsina State Government, in partnership with UNICEF launched a cash transfer programme in June 2022, which will provide learning opportunities for over 20,000 out of school children in the state and improve the socio-economic wellbeing of beneficiaries and their households. This Press Release also states that there are currently 536,132 out of school children in Katsina State. The UNICEF Press Release of January 2022 further states that a full one-third of Nigerian children are not in school and one in five out-of-school children in the world is Nigerian. Millions of Nigerian children have never been to a classroom. It is estimated that 35 per cent of Nigerian children who attend primary school do not attend secondary school. In March 2021, around 618 schools were closed in six northern states over the fear of attacks and abductions of pupils and staff. According to the UNICEF Situation Analysis of Children in Nigeria, 2022 the proportion of out-of-school children at primary school level was 27.2 per cent (26.5 per cent male and 27.9 per cent female) and 25.8 per cent at the secondary school level (24.4 per cent male and 27.3 per cent female). The highest rate of out-of-school children was reported in the North-East (39.8 per cent at the primary and 37.3 per cent at the secondary). The Committee further notes that according to the UNESCO estimates, the gross enrolment rates in 2018 at the primary and secondary level were 87.45 per cent and 43.51 per cent, respectively.

While noting certain measures taken by the Government, the Committee must express its deep concern at the significant number of children who are deprived of basic education. The Committee therefore urges the Government to intensify its efforts to improve the functioning of the education system and to facilitate access for all children to free basic education, in particular for girls and children in the war-affected areas of north-eastern Nigeria. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures, to increase the school enrolment and attendance rates at the primary and secondary levels and to decrease the school drop-out rates. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the concrete measures taken in this regard and to provide updated statistical information on the results obtained, particularly with regard to reducing the number of out-of-school children at the primary and secondary levels.

Clause (d). Identifying and reaching out to children at special risk. Street children. In its previous comments, the Committee noted an increase in the number of children in street situations, including almajiri children (children in Islamic schools who are also sent out to beg). It also noted the Government's information concerning the establishment of the Almajiri Special Education Project with the aim to integrate basic education into Koranic schools.

The Committee notes an absence of information in the Government's report on this matter. The Committee notes with concern from the UNICEF Situation Analysis of Children in Nigeria, 2022, that 62 per cent of the over 10.1 million out of school children in Nigeria are boys, of which the majority, especially in the north, are made up of Almajiri children who are denied the right to education (page 55). Considering that street children are at a higher risk of being engaged in the worst forms of child labour, the Committee once again requests the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to protect all street children, including almajiris from the worst forms of child labour and to provide for their rehabilitation and reintegration. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard as well as on the results achieved. It also requests the Government to provide information on the number of almajiri children who have been integrated through the Almajiri Special Education Project.

In light of the situation described above, the Committee deplores the continued recruitment and use of children in armed conflict by armed groups, especially as it entails other violations of children's rights, such as abductions, murders and sexual violence. The Committee also observes with concern the large number of boys and girls under 18 who are victims of both cross-border and internal trafficking for labour and sexual exploitation. Lastly, the Committee must express its deep concern at the significant number of children deprived of basic education in the country, including Almajiri children (children in Islamic schools who are also sent out to beg). The Committee considers that this case meets the criteria set out in paragraph 114 of its General Report to be asked to come before the Conference.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

[The Government is asked to supply full particulars to the Conference at its 111th Session and to reply in full to the present comments in 2023.]

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2002)

Articles 3(a), 5 and 7(1) of the Convention. Trafficking in children, monitoring mechanisms and penalties. The Committee notes the Government's information in its report that, section 12 of the Law on Child Protection (amended in 2013) prohibits the sale and trafficking of children, in addition to the relevant provisions in the Criminal Code. The Committee also notes the Government's information that, in 2014, 18 perpetrators were accused and convicted of child trafficking, while in 2015, six perpetrators were accused and convicted.

The Committee also notes the Government's indication that a training for representatives of professional services on the prevention of human trafficking was conducted by the Public Institutions of Social Protection for Children at Risk, involving 14 employees in four institutions. Moreover, another training was conducted for police officers and social workers with 75 participants, focusing on the identification and referral of potential victims of human trafficking. In addition, a training has also been provided to foster families for ten caregivers regarding direct assistance and protection of child trafficking victims. The Committee also notes that the National Commission for Combating Human Trafficking keeps a database on all types of exploitation of victims of human trafficking. In 2015, three victims of human trafficking subjected to sexual and labour exploitation were identified, of which two were children. The Committee requests the Government to pursue its efforts to combat trafficking in children, and to continue to provide information on the number of investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions applied in this regard. It also requests the Government to pursue its efforts to ensure that victims of child trafficking are provided with appropriate protection and services. Lastly, the Committee encourages the Government to continue its efforts to strengthen the capacity of the mechanisms in place to ensure the effective monitoring and identification of child victims of trafficking.

Article 3(c). Use, procuring or offering a child for illicit activities, in particular the production and trafficking of drugs. The Committee previously noted that the Law on the Protection of Children did not penalize adults who use children for the illegal production and trafficking of drugs. The Committee noted the Government's statement that the relevant governmental institutions were taking the necessary measures to protect children from misuse and other types of abuse with respect to the illicit production and trade of drugs. It requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the use of a child for illicit activities, particularly the production and trafficking of drugs, is prohibited.

The Committee notes with satisfaction that section 12 of the Law on the Protection of Children, which was amended in 2015, prohibits any illicit activities and the use of child labour for the production and trafficking of drugs, and psychotropic substances. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of section 12 of the Law on the Protection of Children, including the number and nature of infringements, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and sanctions applied.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (d). Identifying and reaching out to children at special risk. Children in street situations. The Committee previously noted that, according to data from the Ministry of Labour and Social Policy (MLSP), there were approximately 1,000 children in street situations in the country, 95 per cent of whom were Roma, and that labour exploitation and begging contributed to this phenomenon. The Committee further noted the Government's information on the measures adopted to protect children in street situations, including the expansion of the network of daily centres for street children. The Government also indicated that, in 2012, a national SOS helpline was created in order to receive calls from citizens who want to report on children in street situations.

The Committee notes the Government's information that the problem of children in street situations is becoming more prevalent. The MLSP is responsible for taking measures to reduce the number of street children. To date, the MLSP has opened four day centres for street children in Skopje, Bitola and Prilep, as well as a 24-hour transit centre in Ohrid. Moreover, the MLSP financially supported a day care centre managed by a civil association in Shuto Orizari. The Committee further notes the Government's statement according to which it is often the parents who use their children to beg with them or make their children beg. Thus, the amendments to the Law on Family of 2014 provide that inducing a child to beg or using a child for begging shall be considered as abuse or severe neglect in the performance of parental duties, in which case the Centre of Social Work shall intervene. Depending on the situation, measures may include professional advice, constant supervision, temporary guardianship of the concerned child by the social work centre, and proceedings to withdraw parental rights or to file a criminal complaint before a competent court. While taking due note of the measures taken by the Government, the Committee strongly encourages the Government to continue its efforts to protect children in street situations from the worst forms of child labour, and once again requests it to provide information on the number of children removed from the streets and who have benefited from rehabilitation and social integration measures.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Saint Kitts and Nevis

Previous comment: direct request

Article 3(1) and (2) of the Convention. Minimum age for admission to, and determination of, hazardous work. The Committee previously noted that the draft Labour Code was expected to be enacted by December 2017, and that the National Advisory Committee for the Elimination of Hazardous Child Labour, which would determine the types of work deemed to be hazardous for young persons under the age of 18 years would be established under the draft Labour Code and become operational following its entry into force.

The Committee notes the Government's information in its report that the Amalgamated Draft Labour Code, which went through its consultative processes in 2019, was expected to be reviewed by the National Tripartite Committee in the third quarter of 2021 to include changes related to the COVID-19 pandemic. The Government once again indicates that the National Advisory Committee for the Elimination of Hazardous Child Labour will become operational after the Labour Code has passed into Law. In light of the fact that the Committee has been raising this issue for over ten years, the Committee expresses the firm hope that the draft Labour Code will be adopted in the near future. The Committee also requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure, without delay, the establishment of the National Advisory Committee for the Elimination of Hazardous Child Labour in order to ensure, in turn, the adoption of a list of types of hazardous work prohibited to children under the age of 18 years. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the progress made in this regard.

Article 3(3). Admission to hazardous work as from 16 years. The Committee previously requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the authorization of the performance of hazardous types of work for persons between the ages of 16 and 18 years is subject to strict conditions respecting protection and prior training, pursuant to Article 3(3) of the Convention.

It notes once again the Government's information that such provisions were included in phase II of the review of the draft Labour Code. The Committee trusts that the draft Labour Code will be adopted in the near future, which provides for all the appropriate provisions ensuring the protection of the young persons, as required by Article 3(3) of the Convention.

Article 7(1). Light work from the age of 13 years. The Committee previously noted that the Employment of Children (Restriction) Ordinance permits children under the age of 12 to be employed by their parents in agricultural or horticultural work on land belonging to their parents, as well as children between the ages of 12 and 16 years to work in non-hazardous daytime work outside of school hours, specifying a maximum of two hours of work on school days and Sundays (section 3(1)). The Committee trusted that the provisions in the Employment of Children (Restriction) Ordinance would be applied in conformity with Article 7(1) of the Convention, so that children below the age of 13 would not be authorized to undertake light work activities.

The Committee takes note of the Government's specification that the Employment of Children (Restriction) Ordinance has been amended by Act No. 19 of 2002 and is now part of the Employment of Women, Young Persons and Children Act, Chapter 18.10, also amended by Act No. 20 of 2002. The Committee notes that section 7(1) of this Act is a repetition of the previous section 3(1) of the Employment of Children (Restriction) Ordinance. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the National Tripartite Committee will review the legislation, in consultation with the Ministry of Social Development, to ensure that its provisions are in conformity with Article 7(1) of the Convention and that children below the age of 13 are not authorized to undertake light work activities. Considering that the Committee has been raising this issue for more than ten years, it urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the Employment of Women, Young Persons and Children Act, Chapter 18.10 is amended in a manner to prohibit children under the age of 13 to perform light work activities.

Article 9(1). Penalties. The Committee previously noted the Government's indication that the fines prescribed for the violation of the child labour provisions under the Employment of Women, Young Persons and Children Act and the Employment of Children (Restriction) Ordinance had not been updated in recent years. However, it intended to review some of the fines during the consultative process of the Labour Code.

The Committee once again notes the Government's indication that the National Tripartite Committee, in consultation with the Ministry of Social Development, will review this issue in the hope of upgrading the fines. The Committee recalls that Article 9(1) of the Convention requires that all necessary measures, including the provision of appropriate penalties, be taken by the competent authority to ensure the effective enforcement of the provisions of this Convention, and that even the best legislation only takes value when it is applied effectively (2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 410). The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that either the provisions of the draft Labour Code or those of the Employment of Women, Young Persons and Children Act will prescribe appropriate and upgraded fines for the violations of child labour provisions.

Article 9(3). Keeping of registers. The Committee previously noted that section 12(1) of the Employment of Women, Young Persons and Children Act requires employers in an industrial undertaking to keep a register of all persons under the age of 16 years, which is the minimum age for admission to employment in Saint Kitts and Nevis, and that this provision is retained in the draft Labour Code. The Committee reminded the Government that, in accordance with Article 9(3) of the Convention, national laws or regulations or the competent authority shall prescribe the registers or other documents which shall be kept and made available by the employer of persons whom he/she employs and who are less than 18 years of age, and that this provision applies to all sectors of employment, not just in industrial workplaces.

The Committee notes the lack of new information in the Government's report on this issue. It therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the draft Labour Code contain provisions requiring employers in all sectors of the economy to keep registers of all persons employed under the age of 18, in conformity with Article 9(3) of the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard in its next report.

The Committee reminds the Government that it may avail itself of ILO technical assistance in order to bring its legislation into conformity with the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Previous comment: direct request

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (c). Use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs. The Committee previously noted that, according to a UNICEF report entitled “Situation Analysis of Children in Saint Kitts and Nevis” of 2017, the boy child who gets caught in the poverty trap often drops out of school to bring more income into the household or falls into gang activities and the drug trade (page 34). Noting the absence of provisions in the national legislation prohibiting the use, procuring or offering of a child under 18 years for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs, the Committee reminded the Government that such activities are considered to be one of the worst forms of child labour and that, under the terms of Article 1 of the Convention, each Member which ratifies the Convention shall take immediate and effective measures to secure the prohibition and elimination of the worst forms of child labour as a matter of urgency.

The Committee once again notes the Government’s indication in its report that the issue of the prohibition of procuring or offering of children under the age of 18 years for illicit activities was forwarded to the Department of Child Protective Services to include it in relevant legislation, and that the Government would take measures to make the necessary legislative amendments. In light of the fact that the Committee has been raising this issue since 2011, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the adoption of specific provisions prohibiting the use, procuring or offering of children under the age of 18 years for illicit activities, in particular the production and trafficking of drugs, as a matter of urgency. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

Articles 3(d) and 4(1). Hazardous work. With regard to the adoption of the list of hazardous work, the Committee refers to its detailed comments under the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138).

The Committee is raising another matter in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Article 3(2) of the Convention. Determination of hazardous work. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government’s information that the list of types of hazardous work prohibited to children under 18 years would be made available with the new Labour Code and requested the Government to provide a copy of the list once it was adopted.

The Committee notes with satisfaction that Annex IV of the Labour Code No. 6/2019 provides for a list of hazardous types of work prohibited to children under 18 years, pursuant to section 274(3). The list contains 48 hazardous activities in various sectors including agriculture, livestock and forestry; fishing; mines and quarries; industrial establishments; the production and distribution of electricity and water; construction; transport and storage; health and social services; collective, social, personal and other services; as well as four types of work harmful to morality. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of section 274(3) and Annex IV of the Labour Code No. 6/2019 containing the list of hazardous types of work prohibited to children under the age of 18 years, including statistics on the number and nature of violations reported and penalties imposed.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Solomon Islands

Previous comments: observation and direct request

The Committee notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) received on 25 August 2022, as well as those of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 1 September 2022 and requests the Government to reply to them. It also notes the discussion that was held by the Committee on the Application of Standards (the Conference Committee) at the 110th Session of the International Labour Conference (June 2022) regarding the application of the Convention by Solomon Islands in the absence of the Government.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 110th Session, May–June 2022)

Articles 3(a) and (b), 5 and 7(1) of the Convention. Sale and trafficking of children and commercial sexual exploitation, monitoring mechanisms and sanctions. The Committee notes that the Conference Committee took positive note of the steps taken by the Government to bring its national legislation in conformity with the Convention, including with respect to the use, procuring and offering of children for prostitution, but expressed its deep concern about the persistence of the sale and trafficking of children, particularly girls, for sexual exploitation purposes. The Conference Committee urged the Government to ensure that cases concerning the sale and trafficking of children are duly investigated, prosecuted, and sanctioned, and to strengthen the capacities of law enforcement bodies for this purpose.

The Committee notes that the ITUC refers in its observations to the existence of evidence of cases of sale and trafficking of children by their parents to foreign workers for sexual purposes, including in nightclubs, motels, logging camps, and fishing vessels, as well as to the absence of information on measures of prevention, inspection, investigation, and prosecution of this practice.

The Committee also notes that, in its observations, the IOE points out to the need to continue adopting measures, as a matter of priority, to sensitize the community on this matter and to reinforce the capacities of the labour inspectorates, operators of the criminal justice system, social workers, and the private sector to effectively eliminate this worst form of child labour. It also encourages the Government to continue working with the most representative workers' and employers' organizations and international development cooperation organizations to prevent the use and procuring of children for prostitution.

The Committee notes that the Government refers in its report to one criminal case concerning child pornography which ended in the conviction of the offender. It further notes, the Government's indication that the Sexual Assault Unit within the Police Force investigates cases related to child commercial sexual exploitation. However, it notes that the Government does not provide information on cases related to the sale and trafficking of children for sexual exploitation or the use, procuring or offering of children for prostitution that have been investigated, prosecuted, and punished. Therefore, the Committee urges the Government to take all the necessary measures to reinforce the capacities of the law enforcement bodies (including the police force, prosecutors, and judges) to ensure that: (i) thorough investigations and prosecutions are carried out against persons who engage in the sale or trafficking of children and/or the use, procuring and offering of a child for prostitution; and (ii) sufficiently dissuasive penalties are imposed on the offenders. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of prosecutions, legal proceedings, convictions, and penalties imposed for trafficking of children for sexual exploitation (section 145 of the Penal Code (Amendment) (Sexual Offences) Act 2016 and section 77 of the Immigration Act 2012), and for using, procuring or offering a child for prostitution (sections 141(2) and 143 of the Penal Code (Amendment) (Sexual Offences) Act 2016).

Clause (c). Use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs. The Committee notes that the Conference Committee urged the Government to adopt, without delay, legislation prohibiting the use, procuring, or offering of a child under the age of 18 years for the production and/or trafficking of drugs. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that it will consider this matter to be included in the national penal legislation. The Committee requests the Government to take all the necessary measures to ensure that the national legislation prohibits the use, procuring or offering of a person under 18 years for illicit activities, in particular for the production and trafficking of drugs.

Clause (d) and Article 4(1). List of types of hazardous work. The Committee previously noted that the Government was developing a list of types of hazardous work prohibited for children under the age of 18 with the technical support of the ILO. The Committee notes that the Conference Committee urged the Government to adopt without delay, in consultation with the social partners, a list of types of hazardous work prohibited for children under the age of 18 years.

The Committee notes that the ITUC calls on the Government to finalize, in consultation with the social partners, the list of types of hazardous work prohibited for children under 18 years of age.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that section 49 of the Labour Act (which prohibits the work of persons under the age of 18 years in underground mines, on ships, as a trimmer or stoker, or during the night in any industry) is still applied pending the adoption of a list of types of hazardous work. The Government indicates that a copy of the list will be sent once it has been tabulated and adopted, in collaboration with the social partners. The Committee urges the Government to take all the necessary measures to finalize a list of types of hazardous work prohibited for persons under 18 years of age, in consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned. The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the list once adopted.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (a). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour. Access to free basic education. The Committee previously noted the adoption of Education Strategic Framework (ESF) 2016–2030, which sets out as a long-term objective achieving full completion to quality and relevant primary and junior secondary (age 13 to 15) education for all. The Committee notes that, in its observations, the ITUC refers to the disparities in access to and the quality of education between urban and remote areas. It also notes that the Conference Committee urged the Government to ensure access to free basic education to all children, particularly children from poor and disadvantaged families as well as children living in remote areas.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Gross Enrolment Ratio for primary and junior secondary education remains stable and in line with the population growth. At primary level, the Gross Enrolment Ratio increased from 136 to 142 per cent over 2016–20, signalling that over-age students were enrolled in schools. However, there was a five per cent increase in out-of-school children between 2018 to 2019 (from 8 to 13 per cent). The Government adds that one of the measures taken by the Ministry of Education to keep children in school was to abolish the sixth year exam in 2019 to allow students to advance into the seventh year of education (junior secondary education). The Committee requests the Government to continue taking effective and time-bound measures to facilitate access to free basic education (both primary and lower secondary education) by all children, particularly children from poor and disadvantaged families and those living in remote areas. It also requests the Government to continue providing updated statistical information on school enrolment, completion and drop-out rates for primary and lower secondary education.

Application of the Convention in practice. With regard to the Conference Committee's and the Committee's request for updated statistical data on situations of worst forms of child labour, the Committee notes the Government's indication that it will intensify its efforts to implement a database containing statistical information on the nature, extent, and trends of the worst forms of child labour; the number of children protected by measures giving effect to the Convention; as well as the number and nature of offences reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions, and penalties imposed. The Committee hopes that the Government will be able to provide this information in its next report.

The Committee encourages the Government to avail itself of ILO technical assistance in relation to the issues raised in this observation.

The Committee is raising other issues in a direct request addressed directly to the Government.

Syrian Arab Republic

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2001)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2023, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee previously noted that the ongoing conflict in the Syrian Arab Republic has had an alarming impact on children. It noted that the number of children affected by armed conflict in the Syrian Arab Republic has more than doubled, going from 2.3 million to 5.5 million, and the number of children displaced inside the Syrian Arab Republic has exceeded 3 million.

The Committee takes note of the Government's information in its report on the provisions of national legislation that give effect to the provisions of the Convention. However, the Committee notes that, according to the 2015 UNICEF report entitled "Small Hands, Heavy Burden: How the Syria Conflict is Driving More Children into the Workforce", four and a half years into the crisis, as a result of the war, many children are involved in economic activities that are mentally, physically or socially dangerous and which limit or deny their basic right to education. The report indicates that there is no shortage of evidence that the crisis is pushing an ever-increasing number of children towards exploitation in the labour market. Some 2.7 million Syrian children are currently out of school, a figure swollen by children who are forced to work instead. Children in the Syrian Arab Republic were contributing to the family income in more than three quarters of households surveyed. According to the report, the Syria crisis has created obstacles to the enforcement of national laws and policies to protect children from child labour, one of the reasons being that there are too few labour inspectors. In addition, there is often a lack of coherence between national authorities, international agencies and civil society organizations over the role of each, leading to a failure in national mechanisms to address child labour.

The Committee notes the Government's information in its 5th periodic report submitted to the Committee on the Rights of the Child published on 10 August 2017 (CRC/C/SYR/5, paragraph 203), that the Ministry of Social Affairs and Labour (MoSAL), in collaboration with the Syrian Authority for Family and Population Affairs (SAFPA) and in cooperation with other stakeholders, developed a National Plan of Action for the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour (NPA-WFCL). The Government also indicates that, in collaboration with UNICEF, the SAFPA conducted a survey on the worst forms of child labour in two industrial towns, Hassia in Homs and Haouch el Blas in Damascus.

While acknowledging the complexity of the situation prevailing on the ground and the presence of armed groups and armed conflict in the country, the Committee must once again express its deep concern at the situation of children in the Syrian Arab Republic who are affected by the armed conflict and driven into child labour, including its worst forms. The Committee urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures in the framework of the implementation of the NPA-WFCL to improve the situation of children in the Syrian Arab Republic and to protect and prevent them from child labour. It requests the Government to provide information on the results achieved, as well as the results of the surveys conducted in Hassia and Haouch el Blas.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2023, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or similar practices. Forced recruitment of children for use in armed conflict. The Committee previously noted that the Syrian Arab Republic had adopted a series of legislative reforms such as Law No. 11/2013 which criminalizes all forms of recruitment and the use of children under the age of 18 years by armed forces and armed groups. It noted, however, that numerous armed groups in the Syrian Arab Republic, including the Free Syrian Army affiliated groups (FSA), the Kurdish People Protection Units (YPG), Ahrar al-Sham, Islamic State in Iraq and Sham/the Levant (ISIS/ISIL) and other armed groups were reportedly recruiting and using children for logistics, handling ammunition, manning checkpoints and as combatants.

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that armed terrorist groups recruit children and involve them in violence and exploit them sexually. The Committee notes that, according to the report of the Secretary-General on the situation of human rights in the Syrian Arab Republic of 9 June 2016 (A/70/919, paragraphs 50–52), from early 2015, UNICEF verified 46 cases of recruitment (43 boys, one girl, two unknown): 21 were attributed to ISIL, 16 to non-state armed opposition groups, five to armed groups affiliated with the Government, two (including a girl) to YPG, and two to government forces. UNICEF reported that children were increasingly recruited at younger ages (some as young as 7 years old) by non-state armed groups. Children's participation in combat was widespread and some armed opposition groups forced children to carry out grave human rights abuses, including executions and torture, while government forces allegedly submitted children to forced labour or used them as human shields. The Secretary-General also refers to reports from the OHCHR, according to which ISIL publicly announced, on 11 December 2015, the already known existence of a children's section among its ranks, the "Cubs of the Caliphate". The OHCHR also received allegations that ISIL was encouraging children between 10 and 14 years of age to join, and that they were training children in military combat.

The Committee further notes that, according to the report of the Secretary-General on children and armed conflict of 20 April 2016 (2016 report of the Secretary-General on children and armed conflict, A/70/836-S/2016/360, paragraphs 148–163), a total of 362 cases of recruitment and use of children were verified (the Secretary-General indicates that the figures do not reflect the full scale of grave violations committed by all parties to the conflict), and attributed to ISIL (274), the Free Syrian Army and affiliated groups (62), Liwa' al Tawhid (11), popular committees (five), YPG (four), Ahrar al-Sham (three), the Nusrah Front (two) and the Army of Islam (one). Of the verified cases, 56 per cent involved children under 15 years of age, which represents a significant increase compared with 2014. The Secretary-General further indicates that the massive recruitment of children by ISIL continued, and that centres in rural Aleppo, Dayr al-Zawr and rural Raqqah existed that provided military training to at least 124 boys between 10 and 15 years of age. Verification of the use of child foreign fighters increased as well, with 18 cases of children as young as 7 years of age. In addition, the recruitment and use of children as young as 9 years of age by the Free Syrian Army was also verified, as well as the recruitment of 11 Syrian refugee children from neighbouring countries by Liwa' al-Tawhid, and the YPG continued to recruit boys and girls as young as 14 years of age for combat roles. Recruitment and use by pro-government groups was also verified, with five cases of boys being recruited by the Popular Committee of Talkkalah (Homs) to work as guards and conduct patrols. In addition, there were allegations of the use of children by government forces to man checkpoints.

The Committee must once again deeply deplore the use of children in armed conflict in the Syrian Arab Republic, especially as it entails other violations of the rights of the child, such as abductions, murders and sexual violence. It once again recalls that, under Article 3(a) of the Convention, the forced or compulsory recruitment of children under 18 years of age for use in armed conflict is considered to be one of the worst forms of child labour and that, under Article 1 of the Convention, Member States must take immediate and effective measures to secure the elimination of the worst forms of child labour as a matter of urgency. While acknowledging the complexity of the situation prevailing on the ground and the presence of armed groups and armed conflict in the country, the Committee once again strongly urges the Government to take measures, using all available means, to ensure the full and immediate demobilization of all children and to put a stop, in practice, to the forced recruitment of children under 18 years of age into armed forces and groups. The Committee once again urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures to ensure that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions of all persons who forcibly recruit children under 18 years of age for use in armed conflict are carried out, and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice, pursuant to Law No. 11 of 2013. It requests the Government to provide information on the number of investigations conducted, prosecutions brought and convictions handed down against such persons.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (a). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour. Access to free basic education. The Committee previously noted that, with approximately 5,000 schools destroyed in the Syrian Arab Republic, the resulting sharp decline in children's education continued to be a matter of great concern among the population. This report also indicated that more than half of Syrian school-age children, up to 2.4 million, were out of school as a consequence of the occupation, destruction and insecurity of schools.

The Committee notes that, according to the 2016 report of the Secretary-General on children and armed conflict (paragraph 157), the number of schools destroyed, partially damaged, used as shelters for internally displaced persons or rendered otherwise inaccessible has reached 6,500. The report refers to information from the Ministry of Education, according to which 571 students and 419 teachers had been killed in 2015, and from the United Nations that 69 attacks on educational facilities and personnel were verified and attributed to all fronts, which killed and maimed 174 children. The Committee further notes that, according to the report of the Special Rapporteur on the human rights of internally displaced persons on his mission to the Syrian Arab Republic of 5 April 2016 (A/HRC/32/35/Add.2, paragraphs 50–53), a further 400,000 children were at risk of dropping out of school as a direct result of conflict, violence and displacement. While basic education facilities were in place in the displacement centres visited by the Special Rapporteur, such centres, often using school buildings, offer only limited educational facilities.

According to the same report, UNICEF is working with local partners to reach some 3 million children and has implemented an informal education programme to reduce the number of children out of school. The inter-agency initiative “No Lost Generation” is a self-learning programme aimed at reaching 500,000 children who missed out on years of schooling. In areas hosting high numbers of displaced children, UNICEF is also rehabilitating 600 damaged schools and creating 300 prefabricated classrooms to accommodate 300,000 additional children. The Committee further notes that, according to UNICEF's 2016 Annual Report on the Syrian Arab Republic, UNICEF's interventions in education, focusing on quality, access and institutional strengthening, contributed to an increase in school enrolment from 3.24 million children (60 per cent of school-age population) to 3.66 million (68 per cent) between 2014–15 and 2015–16. These efforts also resulted in a decrease in the number of out-of-school children from 2.12 million (40 per cent) in 2014–15 to 1.75 million (32 per cent) in 2015–16.

Nevertheless, the Committee notes that, in his report, the Special Rapporteur on the human rights of internally displaced persons declares that the challenge of providing even basic education access to many internally displaced children is immense and many thousands of children are likely to remain out of education in the foreseeable future (A/HRC/32/35/Add.2, paragraph 53). The Committee is, therefore, once again bound to express its deep concern at the large number of children who are deprived of education because of the climate of insecurity prevailing in the country. While acknowledging the difficult situation prevailing in the country, the Committee urges the Government to strengthen its efforts and take effective and time-bound measures to improve the functioning of the educational system in the country and to facilitate access to free basic education for all Syrian children, especially in areas affected by armed conflict, and giving particular attention to the situation of girls. It requests the Government to provide information on concrete measures taken in this regard.

Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour, removing them from such work and ensuring their rehabilitation and social integration. 1. Children affected by armed conflict. The Committee previously noted that the recruitment and use of children in armed conflict in the Syrian Arab Republic had become common and that a great majority of the children recruited are trained, armed and used in combat.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the competent authorities in the Syrian Arab Republic seek to care for children recruited in armed conflict and to help them return to ordinary life. However, the Committee notes with deep concern that the situation in the Syrian Arab Republic has not changed and that not only are there no reports of children having been withdrawn from armed forces and groups in the 2016 report of the Secretary-General on children and armed conflict but that, according to this report, children continue to be recruited and used in armed conflict. The Committee, therefore, strongly urges the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to prevent the engagement of children in armed conflict and to rehabilitate and integrate former child combatants. It once again requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard and on the number of children rehabilitated and socially integrated.

2. Sexual slavery. The Committee previously noted that ISIS abducted hundreds of Yazidi women and girls, most of whom were sold as "war booty" or given as "concubines" to ISIS fighters, and that dozens of girls and women were transported to various locations in the Syrian Arab Republic, including Al Raqqa, Al Hasakah and Dayr az Zawr, where they were kept in sexual slavery.

The Committee notes with regret the absence of information in the Government's report on this issue. It notes that, according to the report of the Independent International Commission of Inquiry on the Syrian Arab Republic of 15 June 2016 entitled "They came to destroy: ISIS Crimes Against the Yazidis" (A/HRC/32/CRP.2), ISIS has sought to destroy the Yazidis through such egregious human rights violations as killings, sexual slavery, enslavement, torture and mental harm. The report indicates that over 3,200 women and children are still held by ISIS. Most are in the Syrian Arab Republic where Yazidi girls continue to be sexually enslaved and Yazidi boys indoctrinated, trained and used in hostilities. The report reveals that captured Yazidi women and girls over the age of 9 years are deemed the property of ISIS and are sold in slave markets or, more recently through online auctions, to ISIS fighters. While held by ISIS fighters, these Yazidi women and girls are subjected to brutal sexual violence and regularly forced to work in their houses, in many instances forced to work as domestic servants of the fighter and his family. The Committee deeply deplores the fact that Yazidi children continue to be victims of sexual slavery and forced labour. While acknowledging the difficult situation prevailing in the country, the Committee strongly urges the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to remove Yazidi children under 18 years of age who are victims of forced labour and sexual exploitation and to ensure their rehabilitation and social integration. It once again requests the Government to provide information on specific measures taken in this regard, and the number of children removed from sexual exploitation and rehabilitated.

Clause (d). Identifying and reaching out to children at special risk. Internally displaced children. The Committee previously noted that, by early 2013, there were 3 million children displaced and in need of assistance inside the Syrian Arab Republic.

The Committee notes that, according to the report of the Special Rapporteur on the human rights of internally displaced persons on his mission to the Syrian Arab Republic of 5 April 2016 (A/HRC/32/35/Add.2, paragraph 67), the extent of the conflict and displacement has had a massive impact on children, many of whom have experienced violence first-hand and/or witnessed extreme violence, including the killing of family members and/or separation from family members. The Special Rapporteur indicates that child protection concerns and issues, including child labour resulting from parents' loss of livelihood, trafficking, sexual and gender-based violence and early and forced marriage, continue to be reported. Children have also been recruited and used by different parties to the conflict, both in combat and support roles. Observing with concern that internally displaced children are at an increased risk of being engaged in the worst forms of child labour, the Committee once again strongly urges the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to protect these children from the worst forms of child labour. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard and on the results achieved.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Uganda

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2003)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2023, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy designed to ensure the effective abolition of child labour and application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, according to the National Labour Force and Child Activities Survey 2011–12 of July 2013, a total of 2.009 million children aged 5–17 years were in child labour (approximately 16 per cent of all children). Moreover, a total of 507,000 children aged 5–17 years were found in hazardous work (25 per cent of the children in child labour). The Committee also noted that the Government acknowledged the problem of child labour in the country and recognized its dangers. It took due note of the Government's indication that the National Action Plan for the elimination of the worst forms of child labour in Uganda (NAP) was launched in June 2012. This NAP is a strategic framework that will set the stage for the mobilization of policy-makers and for awareness raising at all levels, as well as provide a basis for resource mobilization, reporting, monitoring, and evaluation of performance and progress of the interventions aimed at combating child labour. The Committee requested that the Government provide detailed information on the implementation of the NAP and its impact on the elimination of child labour.

The Committee notes the Government's information in its report that the NAP is in the process of being reviewed by the Government with support from the ILO. It also notes, from the ILO-IPEC field office, that a total of 335 children (156 girls and 179 boys) have been withdrawn from child labour and were given skills and livelihood training. Moreover, the child labour agenda has been promoted through the Education Development Partners Forum, Stop Child Labour Partners Forum and other national forums within the education and social development sectors. The Committee finally notes from the 2016 UNICEF Annual Report on Uganda that 7,226 children aged 5–17 years were withdrawn from child labour (page 28). While noting the measures taken by the Government, the Committee must express its concern at the number of children involved in child labour in the country, including in hazardous work. The Committee once again urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure the effective elimination of child labour, especially in hazardous work. In this regard, it requests that the Government provide detailed information on the implementation of the reviewed NAP, once adopted. It also requests that the Government supply information on the application of the Convention in practice, particularly statistics on the employment of children under 14 years of age.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2023, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (b). Use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution. The Committee previously requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the procuring or offering of boys under 18 years of age for prostitution is prohibited, to impose criminal responsibility on clients who use boys and girls under 18 years of age for prostitution, and to ensure that boys and girls under 18 years of age who are used, procured or offered for prostitution are treated as victims rather than offenders. The Committee noted that the Director of the Directorate of Public Prosecutions had indicated that efforts were being made to amend the Children's Act of 2000 to fully comply with the Convention on the prohibition of the use, procuring or offering of children for prostitution.

The Committee notes with satisfaction that section 8A of the Children's (Amendment) Act of 2016 provides that a person shall not engage a child in any work or trade that exposes the child to activities of a sexual nature, whether remunerated or not. It notes that the perpetrator is liable to a fine not exceeding one hundred currency points or to a term of imprisonment not exceeding five years.

Clause (d). Hazardous types of work. Children working in mines. The Committee observes that, according to the UNICEF Situation analysis of 2015, the Karamoja region has a high incidence of child labour in hazardous mining conditions (page 13). The Committee also observes, from the UNICEF Annual Report of 2016, that 344 girls and 720 boys were removed from the worst forms of child labour, such as mining, as a result of the support of the Ministry of Gender, Labour and Social Development to the strategic plan for the national child helpline. Moreover, the Committee notes that section 8 of the Children's (Amendment) Act of 2016 prohibits hazardous work, and that the list of hazardous occupations and activities in which the employment of children is not permitted (first schedule of the Employment of Children Regulations of 2012) includes the prohibition of children working in mining. The Committee notes with concern the situation of children working in mines under particularly hazardous conditions. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the effective application of the Children's (Amendment) Act of 2016 and of the Employment of Children Regulations of 2012, so as to prevent children under 18 years of age from working in mines, and to provide the necessary and appropriate direct assistance for their removal.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (d). Identifying and reaching out to children at special risk. 1. Orphans and vulnerable children. The Committee previously noted the Government's information that a range of factors has contributed to the problem of child labour, such as orphanhood arising from the HIV/AIDS pandemic. The Committee noted that orphans and vulnerable children (OVCs) in Uganda were recognized in both the Policy on orphans and other vulnerable children and the National Strategic Plan on OVCs. The Committee also noted that the policies and activities of the National Action Plan on Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour in Uganda 2013–17 (NAP) include orphans and HIV/AIDS affected persons in its target groups. However, noting with concern the large number of children orphaned as a result of HIV/AIDS, the Committee urged the Government to intensify its efforts to ensure that such children are protected from the worst forms of child labour.

The Committee notes the absence of information on this point in the Government's report. The Committee however notes that, according to a report by the Uganda AIDS Commission, entitled: "The Uganda HIV and AIDS country progress report: July 2015–June 2016", approximately 160,000 OVCs received social support services and a mapping of OVC actors was conducted, among other achievements. The Committee also notes that the Second National Development Plan 2015/16–2019/20 outlines two programmes to support OVCs: the SUNRISE-OVC (Strengthening the Ugandan National Response for Implementation of Services for OVCs), and the SCORE (Strengthening Community OVC Response). While taking due note of the strategic plans developed by the Government and the decrease in the number of OVCs, the Committee notes with concern that there are still approximately 660,000 HIV/AIDS orphans in Uganda, according to UNAIDS estimates for 2015. Recalling that children orphaned as a result of HIV/AIDS and other vulnerable children are at particular risk of becoming involved in the worst forms of child labour, the Committee urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to protect these children from the worst forms of child labour. It requests the Government once again to provide information on specific measures taken in this respect, particularly in the framework of the Policy on orphans and other vulnerable children, the National Strategic Plan on OVCs, the SUNRISE-OVC and the SCORE, and the results achieved.

2. Child domestic workers. The Committee previously noted that the list of hazardous occupations and activities prohibits the engagement of children under 18 years of age in several activities and hazardous tasks in the sector of domestic work. However, the Committee noted that, according to the National Labour Force and Child Activities Survey 2011–12 of July 2013, approximately 51,063 children, that is 10.07 per cent of the number of children aged 5–17 years engaged in hazardous work in Uganda, are domestic housekeepers, cleaners and helpers. In this regard, the Committee observed that domestic workers form a group targeted by the NAP, and requested the Government to provide information on the impact of the NAP on the protection of child domestic workers. The Committee notes the absence of information from the Government in this regard. Recalling that children in domestic work are particularly vulnerable to the worst forms of child labour, including hazardous work, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the impact of the NAP on the protection of child domestic workers, particularly the number of child domestic workers engaged in hazardous work who have benefited from initiatives taken in this regard.

3. Refugee children. The Committee observes that, according to the UNICEF Uganda situation report of 31 May 2017, there are over 730,000 refugee children in Uganda, among more than 1.2 million refugees. The Committee also observes from the joint Updated regional framework for the protection of South Sudanese and Sudanese refugee children (July 2015–June 2017), developed by UNHCR, UNICEF and NGOs, that South Sudanese and Sudanese refugee children are subjected to child labour in Uganda (page 5). The Committee finally notes that a Uganda Solidarity Summit on Refugees took place in Kampala in June 2017 to showcase the Uganda model of refugee protection and management, to highlight the emergency and long-term needs of the refugees and to mobilize resources. While acknowledging the difficult refugee situation prevailing in the country and the efforts provided by the Government, the Committee strongly urges the Government to take effective and time-bound measures as a matter of urgency to specifically protect refugee children from the worst forms of child labour and to provide the necessary and appropriate direct assistance for their removal and for their rehabilitation and social integration. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Direct requests

In addition, requests regarding certain matters are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 123 (Gabon); Convention No. 124 (Kyrgyzstan); Convention No. 138 (Afghanistan, Cabo Verde, Cambodia, Canada, Chad, Comoros, Congo, Cuba, El Salvador, Eswatini, Gabon, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea Bissau, Indonesia, Iraq, Israel, Kenya, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Mauritania, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Nicaragua, Nigeria, North Macedonia, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Sao Tome and Principe, South Sudan, Uganda); Convention No. 182 (Afghanistan, Argentina, Australia, Barbados, Benin, Botswana, Brazil, Cabo Verde, Cambodia, Canada, Central African Republic, Chad, Comoros, Cook Islands, Croatia, Cuba, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Eswatini, Ethiopia, Gabon, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Indonesia, Iraq, Israel, Kenya, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Mali, Mauritania, Montenegro, Morocco, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands: Aruba, Nicaragua, Nigeria, North Macedonia, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Sao Tome and Principe, Solomon Islands, South Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Uganda, Vanuatu).

The Committee noted the information supplied by the following State in answer to a direct request with regard to: Conventions Nos 77, 78, 79 (Kyrgyzstan).

Equality of opportunity and treatment

Afghanistan

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1969)

Previous comment

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report, due since 2019, has not been received. In light of its urgent appeal launched to the Government in 2021, the Committee proceeds with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal.

Articles 1(b) and 2 of the Convention. Equal remuneration for work of equal value. Legislation and practice. The Committee previously noted that while some of the provisions of the Labour Law (namely sections 8, 9(1), 59(4) and 93) read together provided some protection against discrimination based on sex with respect to remuneration, they did not reflect fully the principle of the Convention. In light of the lack of information available regarding any progress made in the revision process of the Labour Law, the Committee wishes to point out that the concept of "work of equal value" lies at the heart of the fundamental right of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value as it permits a broad scope of comparison, including, but going beyond equal remuneration for "equal", "the same" or "similar" work, and also encompasses work that is of an entirely different nature, which is nevertheless of equal value (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 673). The Committee asks that all necessary steps be taken to give full legislative expression and effect to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value set out in the Convention. It requests information on any progress made in that regard.

Gender pay gap and occupational gender segregation. The Committee notes that, according to an ILO assessment made in January 2022, since the change of power in August 2021 and the ensuing economic crisis as well as the restrictions on women's participation in the economy, it was estimated that more than 900,000 jobs could be lost by mid-2022 (ILO Brief, Employment prospects in Afghanistan: A rapid impact assessment, January 2022). Furthermore, the Committee notes from the report of the United Nations Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan that, by March 2022, 61 per cent of women had lost their job or income generating activities (A/HRC/51/6, 6 September 2022, paragraph 38). The Committee notes with deep concern this information and refers to its comments made on the application of the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) regarding the bans and increasing discriminatory restrictions imposed on women's employment since August 2021. The Committee therefore urges that all steps be taken to address occupational gender segregation and promote women's participation in the labour market, in particular in jobs with career prospects and higher pay, including by removing any restrictions regarding women's access to education, vocational training and employment.

Awareness-raising and enforcement. The Committee requests information on any activities undertaken: (i) to raise public awareness of the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, the procedures and remedies available; and (ii) to enhance women's access to formal justice mechanisms in case of discrimination in remuneration.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1969)

Previous comments: observation and direct request

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report, due since 2019, has not been received. In light of its urgent appeal launched to the Government in 2021, the Committee proceeds with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal.

Articles 1(1)(a), 2 and 3 of the Convention. Discrimination based on sex. Restrictions on women's access to education, vocational training and employment. The Committee notes that since August 2021, high-level United Nations (UN) bodies have expressed deepest concern regarding the increasing deterioration of human rights and fundamental freedoms of women and girls in the country (UN Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan, Statement, Urgent Debate on the situation of women and girls in Afghanistan, 1 July 2022; UN Security Council, Statement on the situation in Afghanistan, 24 May 2022; and High Commissioner for Human Rights, A/HRC/49/24, 4 March 2022). According to these bodies, as a result of the policies and practices adopted, severe restrictions have been imposed on women's and girls' freedom of movement, access to education, vocational training and employment. The Committee notes, more particularly, that: (1) since August 2021, women have been excluded from the workforce. They are also absent from the public administration, where all members are men; (2) since September 2021, women and girls have been denied access to secondary and higher education. Even where girls have been allowed to attend schools, instruction has been restricted due to the absence of women teachers; (3) the Ministry of Women's Affairs and the Afghanistan Independent Human Rights Commission have been disbanded; and (4) specialized courts addressing the elimination of violence against women and prosecution offices have also been closed, thus leaving women without access to justice. The Committee notes that, in its resolution 50/14 on the situation of human rights of women and girls in Afghanistan, adopted on 8 July 2022, the Human Rights Council specifically: (1) condemned in the strongest possible terms all human rights violations and abuses committed against all individuals, including women and girls, in Afghanistan, including all forms of discrimination and violence, including sexual and gender-based violence; (2) called upon the Taliban in particular to reverse the policies and practices that currently restrict the human rights and fundamental freedoms of Afghan women and girls, to ensure that women and girls have opportunities and access to inclusive and quality education at all levels, equal to those afforded to men and boys, and to immediately open schools for girls of all ages; and (3) called for measures to ensure that victims of sexual and gender-based violence have access to justice and to effective remedies and reparations (Human Rights Council resolution 50/14, A/HRC/RES/50/14, 14 July 2022). Furthermore, the Committee notes from the recent report of the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan that: (1) "the restrictions on Afghan women are disproportionately affecting their ability to sustain themselves, thereby further diminishing their enjoyment of other basic rights"; (2) "in early 2021, about 17,369 women-owned businesses were creating over 129,000 jobs, over three-quarters held by women, and many more unregistered women-owned businesses operated in the informal economy [and] by March 2022, 61 per cent of women had lost their job or income generating activities ..."; (3) "in the informal sector, women can no longer take products to market due to movement restrictions and the closure of many women's markets"; (4) "women who continue to work often face harassment and abuse"; (5) "women have been excluded from the de facto justice system"; and (6) "female civil servants, except those doing jobs in health, security and education which cannot be carried out by men, were directed to stay home until conditions enable them to return to work in accordance with Sharia, although their male counterparts were called back" (A/HRC/51/6, 9 September 2022, paragraphs 38 and 39). The Committee strongly deplores the discriminatory prohibitions, bans and restrictions based on sex imposed on girls and women, in particular regarding their access to, and remaining in, education, vocational training and employment, both in the public and private sectors, and on their enjoyment of other human rights and fundamental freedoms, as well as their exposure to sexual and gender-based violence. The Committee therefore strongly urges that all steps be taken to: (i) remove without delay all bans, discriminatory practices and unequal treatment based on sex imposed on girls and women to prohibit, limit or impede their access to secondary and higher education, vocational training, employment and all types of occupations in all sectors; and (ii) prevent and address violence and harassment against girls and women.

The Committee asks for information on the measures taken to that end and the results achieved on the equal participation of women in employment and occupation, including by providing statistical information, disaggregated by sex and occupation, on the participation of girls and women in education, vocational training and employment in both the public and private sectors.

Articles 1, 2 and 3. Protection against discrimination. Legislation. The Committee notes that, in its 2020 report to the UN Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD), the Government indicated that a draft Anti-Discrimination Law had been developed, which defines direct and indirect discrimination and prohibits discrimination in employment and occupation (CERD/C/AFG/2-16, 27 July 2020, paragraphs 28 and 47). Recalling that the prohibition of discrimination in section 9 of the Labour Law is formulated in very broad terms, the Committee asks that all necessary measures be taken to explicitly define and prohibit in law direct and indirect discrimination based on at least all of the grounds listed in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention (namely, race, colour, sex, religion, political opinion, national extraction and social origin), as well as any other grounds determined in consultation with employers' and workers' organizations, in accordance with Article 1(1)(b), covering all aspects of employment and occupation, both in the private and public sectors. The Committee asks for information on any progress made in that regard.

Article 1(1)(b). Discrimination against persons with disabilities, in particular women and girls. The Committee recalls that, while section 15 of the Law of Rights and Benefits of Persons with Disabilities provides for equal rights for persons with disabilities in terms of social, economic and educational participation, in practice, persons with disabilities had very low education and employment levels. The Committee notes that, in its resolution 50/14 on the situation of human rights of women in Afghanistan, the Human Rights Council expressed deep concern at the situation currently faced by girls and women with disabilities who are often subject to multiple, aggravated or intersecting forms of discrimination and disadvantages (A/HRC/RES/50/14, 14 July 2022). The Committee calls once again for specific actions to be taken in order to facilitate access to education and vocational training and promote employment opportunities of persons with disabilities, in particular girls and women, both in the private and public sectors.

Monitoring and enforcement. The Committee notes that, in her March 2022 report on the situation of human rights in Afghanistan, the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights expressed specific concerns about the fact that, "since August 2021, the previously operating legal and justice systems became dysfunctional, with little clarity as to applicable laws and the side-lining of justice sector personnel. Since then, the de facto authorities have gradually sought to resume the functioning of a country-wide justice system and courts under Islamic law with numerous appointments at the de facto ministry of justice" and de facto courts and initiated "an ongoing review of formal law's asserted compliance with both Islamic Law and with the objectives and policies of the new de facto administration. In the meantime, de facto authorities continued administering justice in lieu of the former judiciary in a decentralized manner in consultation with religious scholars, elders, and local communities" (A/HRC/49/24, 4 March 2022, paragraph 60). The Committee wishes to recall that Afghanistan has a binding legal obligation to uphold the fundamental human rights and freedoms guaranteed in customary international law and human rights treaties that the country is signatory to, including the Convention which it has ratified. The Committee therefore urges that all steps be taken to ensure access to non-discriminatory formal justice mechanisms and effective remedies and to organize activities to raise public awareness of the principles of non-discrimination and equality.

In light of the situation described above, the Committee notes with deep concern the repeated failure of the Government to respond to the Committee's comments since 2019. The Committee also must express its deep concern at the significant deterioration of the situation of women and girls, including the situation of vulnerable groups of women, since 2021. In this context, it deplores the numerous acts of discrimination based on sex against women and girls thereby impairing the enjoyment of their human rights and their access to, and retention in, education at all levels, vocational training and employment in all the sectors of the economy and increasing their exposure to sexual and gender-based violence. The Committee also deplores the lack of legal framework explicitly defining and prohibiting direct and indirect discrimination based on at least all the grounds set out in the Convention, in all aspects of employment and occupation, as well as the lack of access to non-discriminatory formal justice mechanisms and effective remedies. The Committee considers that this case meets the criteria set out in paragraph 114 of its General Report to be asked to come before the Conference.

Algeria

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1962)

Previous comment

Articles 1–4 of the Convention. Assessment of the gender pay gap. The Committee recalls that, according to the data provided by the Government in its previous report, the wage gap in 2011 was in favour of women in almost all sectors, and it considered that this unusual situation could be explained by the low participation rate of women in the labour market and the high level of positions that they occupy. In effect, as recalled in its observation under the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111), women working in Algeria in the formal sector generally have high qualification levels and often occupy high ranking positions in sectors occupied predominantly by men and, therefore, in well-paid positions. The Committee notes that, in its report, the Government does not provide updated statistical information, disaggregated by sex, on the remuneration of men and women by occupational category, in the private and public sectors. It also notes that data on wages, published regularly by the Office for National Statistics (ONS), are still not disaggregated by sex, which does not allow trends in the gender pay gap to be monitored. The Committee further notes that, according to the survey, “Activity, Employment and Unemployment”, published by the ONS in May 2019: (1) the rate of economically active women (17.3 per cent) remains very low compared with that of men (66.8 per cent); and (2) 62.2 per cent of economically active women hold a higher education degree. It also notes that, according to the World Economic Forum’s annual Global Gender Gap Report 2022, Algeria was ranked third out of 146 countries assessed in terms of equal pay for men and women for similar work, which is significant progress (it was ranked 15th out of 149 countries assessed in 2018). However, the Committee emphasizes that the notion of equal remuneration for men and women for similar work is narrower than the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, enshrined in the Convention, which encompasses not only “equal”, “the same” and “similar” work, but also work that is of an entirely different nature, which is nevertheless of equal value (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 672–675). Lastly, the Committee notes that the same report indicates that women’s estimated annual income is clearly lower than that of men (US$3,310 for women and US$18,000 for men), which ranks the country in 144th place out of 146 countries assessed. In order to follow the trends on pay gaps over time and across sectors – particularly given the low participation of women in the labour market and their high levels of qualification – the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary steps to regularly collect and analyse statistical data on the remuneration of men and women, by occupational category and in the public and private sectors (including the informal economy if possible), and to supply these data disaggregated by sex.

Articles 1(b) and 2(2)(a). Equal remuneration for work of equal value. Civil service. Legislation. For several years, the Committee has been emphasizing that Ordinance No. 06-03 of 15 July 2006, issuing the General Civil Service Regulations, which prohibits all discrimination, particularly on the grounds of sex (section 27), does not contain any provisions explicitly providing for equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. The Committee recalls that, in the absence of a clear legislative framework, it is particularly difficult for men and women workers to assert their right to equal remuneration for work of equal value vis-à-vis employers, the relevant bodies and the courts. It notes with regret that no legislative amendment has been introduced in this regard. The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to take the necessary steps to: (i) amend Ordinance No. 06-03 of 15 July 2006 issuing the General Civil Service Regulations, in order to incorporate a provision explicitly providing for equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value; and (ii) assess the pay gaps between men and women in the civil service and raise awareness among public officials and their organizations, as well as personnel managers, of the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value.

Article 3. Objective evaluation and classification of jobs in the civil service. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government on the occupational evaluation of civil servants. It notes, however, that there appears to be some confusion between the concept of performance evaluation – which aims at evaluating the way in which a given worker carries out his or her duties – and the concept of objective job evaluation, namely the calculation of the relative value of jobs that do not have the same content on the basis of the duties to be performed. An objective job evaluation must evaluate the position and not the individual worker. There needs to be an examination of the respective tasks involved, undertaken on the basis of entirely objective and non-discriminatory criteria to avoid the assessment being tainted by gender bias. While the Convention does not prescribe any specific method for such an examination, Article 3 presupposes the use of appropriate techniques for objective job evaluation, comparing factors such as skill, effort, responsibilities and working conditions. For further information, the Committee draws the Government's attention to paragraphs 695–709 of its 2012 General Survey on objective job evaluation. Therefore, the Committee once again requests the Government to: (i) review the job evaluation and classification method to ensure that the classification of jobs and the applicable salary scales in the public service is free from any gender bias and does not result in undervaluation of jobs mainly occupied by women; (ii) encourage the use of job evaluation methods based on objective criteria, such as skills and qualifications, effort, responsibility and working conditions; and (iii) provide statistical information, disaggregated by sex, on personnel numbers in the respective categories (A, B, C and D) in the public service. The Committee reminds the Government that it may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1969)

Previous comment

Article 1 of the Convention. Protection against discrimination. Legislation. Private sector workers. For many years, the Committee has been emphasizing that: (i) section 6 of Act No. 90-11 of 21 April 1990 on labour relations is of a very general nature as it provides that workers are entitled to “protection against all discrimination regarding the occupation of a post other than distinctions made on the basis of their ability and merit"; (ii) section 17 of that Act does not cover all of the grounds of discrimination in employment and occupation listed by the Convention, as it targets only discrimination "based on age, sex, social or marital status, family relations, political beliefs [and] membership or non-membership of a trade union"; and (iii) section 17 does not provide for penalties for discriminatory conduct by the employer or any other person toward a worker in all aspects of work and employment (recruitment, promotion, dismissal and so forth). It merely provides that "any provision in a collective agreement or employment contract that may generate discrimination of any kind among workers regarding employment, remuneration or working conditions" is null and void. The Committee notes with deep regret that no legislative amendment of these provisions has been introduced to date. Emphasizing once again the importance of establishing a comprehensive protection mechanism for private sector workers against discrimination in employment and occupation, the Committee urges the Government to take all necessary measures, in cooperation with the workers' and employers' organizations, to ensure that: (i) sections 6 and 17 of Act No. 90-11 of 21 April 1990 explicitly prohibit all forms of direct or indirect discrimination, on at least all of the grounds listed in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention, and all other grounds specified pursuant to Article 1(1)(b); and (ii) section 17 of the same Act prohibits discriminatory conduct by the employer or any other person toward a worker in all aspects of work and employment, including with regard to access to employment and the various occupations, promotions and dismissal.

Civil servants. For many years, the Committee has been emphasizing that section 27 of Ordinance No. 06-03 of 15 July 2006 issuing the General Conditions of Service of Civil Servants does not prohibit all of the grounds of discrimination listed in the Convention, as it provides only that "there must be no discrimination between civil servants on the basis of their opinions, sex, origin or any other personal or social circumstance". It nevertheless notes that, as indicated above, no legislative amendment has been introduced in this regard. Recalling the importance of implementing a comprehensive system to protect civil servants from discrimination in employment and occupation, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that section 27 of Ordinance No. 06-03 of 15 July 2006 issuing the General Conditions of Service of Civil Servants explicitly prohibits all forms of direct or indirect discrimination, on at least all of the grounds listed in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention and all other grounds specified pursuant to Article 1(1)(b)).

Article 1(1)(a). Discrimination based on sex. Sexual harassment. The Committee notes that Act No. 15-19 of 30 December 2015 introduced into the Criminal Code section 341 bis, under which "any person who abuses the authority conferred by his or her function or occupation, by giving orders to others, making threats, imposing constraints or by exerting pressure in order to obtain favours of a sexual nature, is considered to have committed the offence of sexual harassment and shall be punished by imprisonment of one to three years and a fine of 100,000 to 300,000 Algerian dinars. Anyone who harasses another person by any act, or words of a sexual nature or insinuation is also guilty of the offence stated in the previous clause and punishable by the same penalty". The Committee recalls that criminal provisions are not completely adequate in discrimination cases because, inter alia, they do not always provide a remedy to the victim and are very unlikely to cover all forms of conduct that amount to sexual harassment. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on: (i) the number, nature and outcome of complaints filed on the basis of section 341 bis of the Criminal Code, and the penalties imposed; and (ii) the preventive and awareness-raising measures implemented, in cooperation with the employers' and workers' organizations, to combat sexual harassment in employment and occupation.

Articles 2 and 3. National policy. Equality of opportunity and treatment for men and women. For many years, the Committee has expressed serious concern regarding the low participation of women in the labour market and the persistence of strongly stereotyped attitudes with respect to the roles and responsibilities of women and men in society and in the family, both of which have a negative impact on women's access to employment and training. The Committee notes that, according to the survey, "Activity, Employment and Unemployment" published by the Office for National Statistics (ONS) in May 2019, women's activity rate remains quite low (17.3 per cent) and is still significantly lower than that of men (66.8 per cent). The same survey indicates that significant disparities can be noted with regard to sex, with 77.9 per cent of women in the workforce concentrated in the following sectors: health and social work (45.1 per cent), manufacturing industry (18.9 per cent), and public administration (13.9 per cent). The Committee also notes that the unemployment rate for women in 2019 was 20.4 per cent, while that for men was 9.1 per cent. Furthermore, it notes with concern that, according to the World Bank's 2022 Algeria Economic Update, the number of women jobseekers who signed up with the National Employment Agency (ANEM) increased by 63 per cent in the first quarter of 2022. In this respect, the Committee emphasizes that, in its national report submitted to the universal periodic review (UPR) in September 2022, the Government states that measures taken to promote education and training for women have resulted in Algeria having one of the highest proportions of women graduates in the world at 48.5 per cent, thus ranking top in the 2018 United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO) report. In this report, the Government also indicates that its action plan prioritizes measures to strengthen the economic integration of housewives and women living in rural areas (A/HRC/WG.6/41/DZA/1, paragraphs 106–107). The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the measures taken or envisaged to: (i) implement the intersectoral programme to support the integration of rural women and housewives into the economy, referred to in the Government's action plan for the implementation of the President's programme of September 2021; (ii) combat the very high rate of unemployment for women compared with men; (iii) effectively combat vertical and horizontal occupational gender segregation, as well as gender bias and gender stereotypes concerning the vocational aspirations and capabilities of women and their suitability for certain jobs; and (iv) allow women and men workers to achieve a better balance between work and family responsibilities.

Article 5. Special protection measures. Work prohibited for women. For many years, the Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to the need to review the provisions prohibiting night work for women, as well as those concerning the assignment of women to work that is dangerous, insalubrious or harmful to their health. It nevertheless notes with regret that no progress has been made in this regard. The Committee recalls that there has been a shift over time from a purely protective approach concerning the employment of women to one based on promoting genuine equality between men and women and eliminating discriminatory law and practice. The protection measures taken for women can be broadly divided into two categories: those aimed at protecting maternity in the strict sense, which come within the scope of Article 5, and those aimed at protecting women generally because of their sex or gender, based on stereotypical perceptions about their capabilities and appropriate role in society. This second category is contrary to the Convention and constitutes obstacles to the recruitment and employment of women (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 839). The Committee further recalls that it considers that provisions relating to the protection of persons working under hazardous or difficult conditions should be aimed at protecting the health and safety of both men and women at work, while taking account of gender differences with regard to specific risks to their health. Restrictions on women's employment ("non-pregnant" and "non-nursing" women) are contrary to the principle of equality of opportunity and treatment for men and women, unless they are genuine protective measures put in place to protect their health. This protection must be determined on the basis of the results of a risk assessment showing that there are specific risks for women's health and/or safety. Therefore, such restrictions, if any, have to be justified and based on scientific evidence and, when in place, have to be periodically reviewed in the light of technological developments and scientific progress to determine whether they are still necessary. The Committee further recalls that it may be necessary to examine what other measures, such as improved health protection of both men and women, adequate transportation and security, as well as social services, are necessary to ensure that women can access the types of employment concerned on an equal footing with men (see 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 840). The Committee also emphasizes the need to adopt measures and to put in place facilities to enable workers with family responsibilities, particularly women who continue to bear the unequal burden of family responsibilities, to reconcile work and family responsibilities. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that the special protection measures for women are limited to what is strictly necessary for maternity protection and do not constitute obstacles to the access of women to employment and to the various occupations. It also once again invites the Government to consider the possibility of taking support measures aimed at, inter alia, improving safety and health protection for men and women, and the availability of adequate transport services and social services, to enable women to access all types of employment on an equal footing with men. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all provisions adopted in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Previous comment: direct request

Articles 1 and 2(2)(a) of the Convention. Definition of remuneration. Equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. Scope of application. Legislation. The Committee notes that section 157 of the General Labour Act (Act No. 7/15) of 15 June 2015 provides for equal remuneration for men and women for the same work or for work of equal value. It observes, however, that: (1) several categories of workers, such as civil servants and casual workers, are excluded from the scope of application of the General Labour Act (section 2 of the Act); and (2) the definition of remuneration set out in section 155 of the General Labour Act excludes several components of remuneration (such as travel and accommodation allowances, family allowances and other social security benefits) which are covered by the definition of “remuneration” in Article 1(a) of the Convention. As regards civil servants, the Committee notes that section 9(c) of the Basic Civil Service Act No. 26/22 of 22 August 2022 provides that civil servants shall enjoy the right to receive “fair remuneration” but observes that this provision does not reflect the principle of the Convention. The Committee notes that, in January 2022, a new draft General Labour Act was examined by the National Commission for Social Dialogue, and, on 27 April 2022, the draft Act was approved by the Council of Ministers and forwarded to the General Assembly. The Committee hopes that the Government will take all necessary steps, in particular in the framework of the revision of the General Labour Act, to give full legislative expression to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value set out in the Convention, in particular by ensuring that all components of remuneration contained in Article 1(a) of the Convention are included in the definition of “remuneration” and all workers in the private sector are covered by the principle of the Convention. With respect to civil servants, it asks the Government to consider, in the framework of a future revision, including in the Basic Civil Service Act No. 26/22 provisions reflecting the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on: (i) any progress made in that regard; (ii) any proactive measures taken to raise awareness of the meaning and scope of application of the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value among workers and employers and their organizations, as well as among law enforcement officials; and (iii) the number, nature and outcome of any cases of pay inequality between men and women dealt with by the labour inspectors, the courts or any other competent authority.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1976)

Previous comments: observation and direct request

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Protection against discrimination in employment and occupation. Legislation. The Committee notes that section 4 of the General Labour Act (Act No. 7/15) of 15 June 2015 provides for equality of opportunity and non-discrimination for all citizens based on race, colour, sex, ethnic origin, marital status, social origin or status, religious reasons, political opinion, trade union membership or language. It notes the Government's indication, in its report, that a revision process of the General Labour Act has been initiated and would address the issues previously raised by the Committee regarding: (1) the definition of discrimination in order to encompass both direct and indirect discrimination in all aspects of employment and occupation; (2) the prohibited grounds of discrimination enumerated in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention, including national extraction; (3) the prohibition of sexual harassment; (4) the restrictions on women's access to work; and (5) the scope of the measures applicable to workers with family responsibilities. In that regard, the Committee notes that, in January 2022, the draft General Labour Act was examined by the National Commission for Social Dialogue. On 27 April 2022, the draft Act was approved by the Council of Ministers and forwarded to the General Assembly. Recalling the importance of having a clear and comprehensive legislative framework in order to effectively address discrimination in employment and occupation and ensure the effective implementation of the Convention, the Committee trusts that the Government will take every necessary step, in particular in the framework of the revision of the General Labour Act, to give full legislative expression to the provisions of the Convention regarding the above-mentioned matters. It asks the Government to provide information on the steps taken to that end and their outcomes.

Article 1(1)(a). Discrimination based on sex. Sexual harassment. The Committee welcomes the Government's indication, in its report, that section 301 of the draft revised General Labour Act would prohibit sexual harassment. It notes that, in their concluding observations, the United Nations (UN) Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) and the UN Human Rights Committee expressed specific concerns at: (1) the failure to comprehensively prohibit all forms of gender-based violence against women and girls in the public and private spheres; and (2) the under-reporting of gender-based violence against women and girls owing to the social legitimization of violence, a culture of silence and impunity, and the stigmatization of victims by health professionals and law enforcement officers, legal illiteracy and a lack of trust in law enforcement authorities (CEDAW/C/AGO/CO/7, 14 March 2019, paragraph 25; and CCPR/C/AGO/CO/2, 8 May 2019, paragraph 17). The Committee asks the Government to take steps to: (i) include in its national legislation a clear definition and prohibition of both quid pro quo and hostile work environment sexual harassment in employment and occupation; and (ii) ensure that appropriate preventive and remedial measures and procedures are in place. It also requests the Government to provide information on any practical measures taken to prevent and address sexual harassment in employment and occupation.

Articles 1(1)(a) and 5. Restrictions on women's access to work. The Committee notes that a list of jobs prohibited for women was adopted by Executive Decree No. 172/10 of 14 December 2010, pursuant to section 243 of the General Labour Act. It notes the Government's general indication that several provisions of the draft General Labour Act refer to restrictions on women's access to work but observes that the Government did not provide information on the content of such provisions. The Committee recalls that special measures for the protection of women should be limited to maternity protection in the strict sense, and that provisions for the protection of persons working under hazardous or difficult conditions should be aimed at protecting the health and safety of both men and women at work, while taking account of gender differences with regard to specific risks to their health (see 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 839 and 840). The Committee asks the Government to take measures, in particular in the framework of the revision of the General Labour Act, to ensure that existing restrictions on women's access to work are removed so as to allow women's access to employment on an equal footing with men, and that any restriction regarding the access of women to certain jobs is strictly limited to maternity protection in the broad sense.

Article 1(1)(b). Real or perceived HIV status. The Committee notes that sections 5 and 7 of Act No. 8/04 of 1 November 2004 on HIV and AIDS prohibit discrimination based on workers' health status in relation to HIV/AIDS. It notes that, in August 2021, the Government initiated the revision of Act No. 8/04 with a view to "responding to current complaints about discrimination", especially in the workplace, with domestic workers often being fired as a result of their HIV positive status. In that regard, the Committee notes that, in its 2019 concluding observations, the UN Human Rights Committee expressed concern at reports that persons living with HIV/AIDS face stigmatization and de facto discrimination (CCPR/C/AGO/CO/2, paragraph 13). The Committee asks the Government to provide information on: (i) the current status of the revision process of Act No. 8/04; (ii) any measures taken in law and in practice to prevent and address discrimination based on real or perceived HIV status in employment and education, in particular against domestic workers; and (iii) any cases of discrimination based on real or perceived HIV status dealt with by the competent authorities, including sanctions imposed and remedies granted.

Article 2. Equality of opportunity and treatment for men and women. The Committee notes the Government's indication that several programmes have been implemented in order to promote equality of opportunity and treatment for men and women, and enhance women's participation in professional training courses, including the Women's Vocational Training Programme. Since 2018, 2,360 women have benefited from such training. The Committee notes that, according to ILOSTAT, the labour force participation rate of women was estimated at 74 per cent in 2021. It further notes, from the statistical information provided by the Government, that the number of women placed in employment decreased, with women representing, in 2021, only 21 per cent of workers placed in employment compared with 38 per cent in 2020. In that regard, the Committee notes the Government's statement that, despite its efforts, the existing gender gap in access to employment remains a key issue. The Committee notes that in its concluding observations, the CEDAW remained concerned about: (1) the disproportionately high levels of illiteracy among women, in particular in rural areas, and the difficulties faced by rural women in obtaining identity documents, which restricts their access to employment opportunities and bank loans; (2) the inadequate and decreasing budget allocations to the education sector, forcing girls to walk long distances to school and depriving them of adequate sanitary facilities; (3) the under-representation of girls and women in traditionally male-dominated areas of education, including technical and vocational education; and (4) the continuing horizontal and vertical occupational gender segregation and the concentration of women in the informal labour market (CEDAW/C/AGO/CO/7, paragraphs 33, 35 and 37). Taking into consideration the persistence of vertical and horizontal occupational gender segregation, the Committee encourages the Government to strengthen its efforts to implement proactive measures to promote equality of opportunity and treatment for men and women in employment and occupation. It asks the Government to provide: (i) information on any measures implemented to enhance girls' and women's access to education, occupational training and employment opportunities in the formal economy, in particular for rural women, and their results; and (ii) statistical information on the participation of men and women in education, training, employment and occupation, if possible disaggregated by occupational categories, both in the public and private sectors.

Workers with family responsibilities. The Committee notes that: (1) section 244 of the General Labour Act provides that employers must facilitate part-time work for "women with family responsibilities"; and (2) sections 247 and 248 provide for maternity leave while there is no provision for paternity leave. In that regard, it welcomes the Government's indication that section 214 of the draft revised General Labour Act would provide for paternity leave. Recalling that, in order to achieve the objective of equality set out in the Convention, measures to assist workers with family responsibilities should be available to both men and women on an equal footing, the Committee asks the Government to provide information on the measures taken, in particular in the framework of the revision of the General Labour Act, to enable both men and women to reconcile work and family responsibilities.

Equality of opportunity and treatment irrespective of race, colour or national extraction. Indigenous peoples. The Committee notes that, in its 2019 concluding observations, the UN Human Rights Committee expressed concern at reports that individuals belonging to certain groups, in particular indigenous peoples, face stigmatization and de facto discrimination in their access to land, natural resources and education. Pastoralists in the south-west have faced exclusion from grazing land and expropriation of land (CCPR/C/AGO/CO/2, paragraphs 13 and 49). The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the steps taken or envisaged to ensure equality of opportunity and treatment of indigenous peoples in employment and occupation, including any steps directed at protecting their right to engage in their traditional occupations and livelihoods without discrimination.

Monitoring and enforcement. The Committee notes that the new Criminal Code (Act No. 38/20 of 11 November 2020) criminalizes discrimination in employment based on race, colour, ethnic origin, birthplace, sex, sexual orientation, illness or disability, creed or religion, political or ideological opinion, social origin or status or other forms of discrimination, and establishes penalties of two years of imprisonment or a fine (section 212). It also notes the Government's indication that no case of discrimination in employment or occupation has been lodged. The Committee recalls that criminal provisions are not completely adequate in discrimination cases because, inter alia, they do not always provide a remedy to the victim and are very unlikely to cover all forms of conduct that amount to sexual harassment. The Committee also recalls that where no cases or complaints, or very few, are being lodged, this is likely to indicate a lack of an appropriate legal framework, lack of awareness of rights, lack of confidence in or absence of practical access to procedures or fear of reprisals. The lack of complaints or cases could also indicate that the system of recording violations is insufficiently developed (see 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 870). In that regard, the Committee notes that in their 2019 concluding observations, the CEDAW and the UN Human Rights Council remained concerned about: (1) the limited availability of courts and out-of-court dispute settlement centres, in particular in rural areas; (2) the lack of independence of the judiciary and the insufficient number of trained judges, prosecutors and lawyers, which may prevent many citizens from accessing justice; and (3) the lack of capacity-building programmes for actors involved in traditional conflict resolution mechanisms and the limited oversight over their functions, which heightens the risk of such institutions perpetuating discriminatory gender stereotypes (CEDAW/C/AGO/CO/7, paragraph 13 and CCPR/C/AGO/CO/2, paragraph 37). The Committee therefore asks the Government to provide information on: (i) the number and outcomes of inspections carried out by the General Labour Inspectorate regarding discrimination in employment and occupation; (ii) the number and nature of cases concerning discrimination in all aspects of employment and occupation brought before the courts, the penalties applied and remedies granted; and (iii) any measures taken to raise public awareness of the provisions of the Convention and the legislation, procedures and remedies available, and to enhance the capacity of the competent authorities, including judges, labour inspectors and other public officials, to identify and address cases of discrimination.

Antigua and Barbuda

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 2003)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Article 1(a) and (b) of the Convention. Work of equal value. The Committee previously noted that section E8(1) of the Labour Code of 1975 did not give full legislative expression to the principle of the Convention. Noting that the National Labour Board had reviewed the Labour Code and that a report had been submitted to the relevant authority for action, it requested the Government to report on the progress made in this regard. In its report, the Government indicates that it is envisaged that the revised text of the Labour Code will set out the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, which should not only provide for equal remuneration for men and women working in the same occupations, but also for equal remuneration for work carried out by men and women that is different in nature but of equal value. Upon revision by the National Labour Board, the upgraded text of the Labour Code will be subject to amendment after the process of public consultation is completed. The Government adds that the National Labour Board will ensure that the Labour Code does not contravene this Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress made towards the amendment of the Labour Code to give full legislative expression to the principle of the Convention and, in the meantime, on any measures taken or agreements and policies adopted providing for equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value.

Remuneration. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the use and definitions of the terms “wages”, “gross wages”, “remuneration” and “conditions of work” in sections A5, C3, C4(1) and E8(1) of the Labour Code. It noted that, while the definition of “gross wages” appeared to be in accordance with the definition of remuneration set out in Article 1(a) of the Convention, it remained unclear whether section C4(1) prohibiting sex discrimination with respect to wages covered the gross wage. It noted the Government’s indication that the terms “wages”, “gross wages” and “remuneration” were used interchangeably in practice, but emphasized that these various terms were often understood to have distinct meanings, thus potentially giving rise to confusion. Noting the ongoing review of the Labour Code, the Committee requested the Government to ensure that the revised text would harmonize the provisions of the Labour Code relevant to wages and remuneration, and include a clear definition of “remuneration” in accordance with Article 1(a) of the Convention. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the National Labour Board will consider a definition for the term “remuneration” (as opposed to the interchangeable use of the terms “wages” and “gross wages”), which will cover not only the ordinary, basic or minimum wage or salary, but also any additional emoluments payable directly or indirectly, whether in cash or kind, by the employer, in accordance with Article 1(a) of the Convention. This will ensure that there is no potential for confusion. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in the amendment of the Labour Code in order to include a clear definition of remuneration in accordance with Article 1(a) of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1983)

Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. Grounds of discrimination – National extraction and social origin. For a number of years, the Committee has been noting the absence of an explicit prohibition of discrimination on the basis of national extraction and social origin in the national Constitution and the Labour Code. The Committee has been asking the Government to ensure that workers are protected in law and in practice against direct and indirect discrimination on the basis of national extraction and social origin, in all aspects of employment and occupation, and to monitor emerging forms of discrimination that may result in or lead to discrimination in employment and occupation on the basis of these grounds, and to report in detail on the progress made. The Government indicates in its report that the process of revising the Labour Code is still ongoing and the National Labour Board is currently considering provisions aimed at defining and prohibiting direct and indirect discrimination, as well as including all grounds of discrimination, namely race, colour, sex, religion, political opinion, national extraction and social origin. The Government adds that, once finalized, these proposals will be made available for public consultation. The Committee firmly hopes that the amendments to the Labour Code will be adopted in the near future and will include specific provisions ensuring and promoting the protection of workers against direct and indirect discrimination in all aspects of employment and occupation, and with respect to all the grounds of discrimination set out in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention.

Article 2. General observation of 2018. Regarding the above issues and more generally, the Committee would like to draw the Government's attention to its general observation on discrimination based on race, colour and national extraction adopted in 2018. In the general observation, the Committee notes with concern that discriminatory attitudes and stereotypes based on the race, colour or national extraction of men and women workers continue to hinder their participation in education, vocational training programmes and access to a wider range of employment opportunities, resulting in persisting occupational segregation and differences in remuneration for work of equal value. Furthermore, the Committee considers that it is necessary to adopt a comprehensive and coordinated approach to tackling the obstacles and barriers faced by persons in employment and occupation because of their race, colour or national extraction, and to promote equality of opportunity and treatment for all. Such an approach should include the adoption of interlocking measures aimed at addressing gaps in education, training and skills, providing unbiased vocational guidance, recognizing and validating the qualifications obtained abroad, and valuing and recognizing traditional knowledge and skills that may be relevant both to accessing and advancing in employment and to engaging in an occupation. The Committee also recalls that, in order to be effective, these measures must include concrete steps, such as laws, policies, programmes, mechanisms and participatory processes, and remedies designed to address prejudices and stereotypes and to promote mutual understanding and tolerance among all sections of the population. The Committee draws the Government's attention to its general observation of 2018 and requests the Government to provide information in response to the questions raised in that observation.

Equality for men and women. Access to education, vocational training and employment. In its previous comments, the Committee urged the Government to take concrete steps to collect, analyse and provide statistical information, disaggregated by sex, on the participation of men and women in education and the various vocational training courses offered, as well as statistics on the number of men and women who have filled vacancies following such training, including for jobs traditionally held by the other sex. The Committee also urged the Government to provide detailed information on recent initiatives to promote women's participation in courses and jobs traditionally held by men, including up-to-date information on the courses offered by the Gender Affairs Department and the Ministry of Education, as well as the Institute of Continuing Education. The Committee notes the Government's indication that a comparative analysis was done on the participation of men and women in various vocational training courses in institutions such as the Ministry of Education, the Antigua and Barbuda Institute of Continuing Education (ABICE), the Antigua State College (ASC), the Directorate of Gender Affairs, the Antigua and Barbuda Hospitality Training Institute (ABHTI), the Department of Youth Affairs (DYA) and the Gilbert Agricultural Rural Development (GARD) Centre. The Government states that statistics indicate that there is still a striking disparity in the participation of women in professions traditionally occupied by men. However, women are slowly participating to a greater extent in technical and skilled occupations. It is envisaged that the institutions mentioned above will endeavour to engage in strategic planning that will encourage more women to access training so as to enter technical professions which are traditionally occupied by male workers. Currently, most institutions are actively involved in open-day activities geared towards attracting persons to the programmes provided and in spending time in counselling persons to access the training that best suits them. However, the Government states that there is little initiative specifically designed to encourage women to participate in areas traditionally dominated by men. The Committee notes that in its 2019 concluding observations, the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) recommended adopting effective measures to combat horizontal and vertical occupational segregation in both the public and private sectors, including through professional training and incentives for women to work in traditionally male-dominated fields of employment (CEDAW/C/ATG/CO/4-7, 14 March 2019, paragraphs 36(a) and 37(a)). The Committee asks the Government to provide statistics, disaggregated by sex, on the participation of men and women in education at all stages and the various vocational training courses offered, as well as on the number of men and women who have filled vacancies following such training, including for jobs traditionally held by the other sex. The Committee hopes that the Government will be in a position to provide information in its next report on the manner in which it promotes women's participation in courses and jobs traditionally held by men.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Bahrain

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 2000)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the General Federation of Bahrain Trade Unions (GFBTU) received by the Office on 24 September 2020 and 31 August 2022.

Article 1 of the Convention. Discrimination on the basis of political opinion. The Committee notes that the Government affirms that all remaining individual dismissal cases related to the 2011 events have been resolved. The Government refers to its communication to the ILO Director-General dated 10 June 2019 in which it explains that, out of the 55 outstanding cases, 44 individuals were reinstated in their jobs in the private sector and 11 workers accepted financial compensation in lieu of reinstatement in their previous jobs, which amounted to US$1.417 million. The Government further indicates that the Ministry of Labour and Social Development (MLSD) received a communication dated 3 June 2019 from the GFBTU indicating its acceptance of this final settlement. In light of the above, and the fact that the MLSD has not registered any complaints from workers who were reinstated, the Government considers that the cases of the workers dismissed in the wake of the 2011 events and mentioned in the Tripartite Agreements of 2011 and 2014 are closed. The Committee notes however that, in its observations, the GFBTU states that the dismissed workers who were finally reinstated did not receive financial compensation for their unfair dismissal, except in the case of workers from the University of Bahrain and the Bahrain Chamber of Commerce and Industry (BCCI) as already indicated in the Committee's previous observation. The Committee recalls that, under the Supplementary Tripartite Agreement of 2014, the Government had agreed with the social partners to refer to a tripartite committee the cases which relate to financial claims or compensation that have not been settled and, in the absence of consensus, to refer them to the judiciary. According to the GFBTU no such committee has been set up so far. The Government points out that, despite this alleged failure to set up a tripartite committee to monitor discrimination in employment and occupation in the country, the MLSD and the social partners have been able to settle many pending issues and restates that all avenues for collaboration are open to the GFBTU to discuss its views on this issue and any other issues through the joint bilateral committee. The Committee notes that according to the GFBTU, while some dismissed workers received financial compensation, others have not yet received it. In light of the above, the Committee asks the Government: (i) to clarify whether the tripartite committee referred to in the Supplementary Tripartite Agreement of 2014 has been established; and (ii) to provide information on the number of the outstanding cases mentioned by the GFBTU and the steps taken to resolve them.

Education International. The Committee notes with regret the absence of information on the outstanding cases of teachers dismissed in the wake of the 2011 events and not yet reinstated, in particular the case of the 15 teachers who were members of the now dissolved Bahrain Teachers Association and who are allegedly still unable to obtain employment in private schools, ten years after the events, due to a lack of clearance from the Ministry of Education. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to examine, without delay, the case of the 15 dismissed teachers and to ensure that if appropriate they receive compensation in respect of their dismissals and that they are cleared to return to their jobs in the education sector, if they still wish to do so.

Act No. 58/2006 on the protection of society from acts of terrorism. The Committee takes note of the Government's statement that the aforementioned law was formulated to protect society from terrorism, extremism and other phenomena which destabilize social peace and safety and therefore it does not fall under the umbrella of the application of the Convention or the issues which are of concern to the ILO. While recalling what is stated in its 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions (paragraphs 805, 832 and 833), the Committee reiterates its request to the Government: (i) to ensure that the application of Act No. 58/2006 does not in practice infringe the right of workers to be protected from discrimination on grounds of political opinion, as required by the Convention; and (ii) to provide information on the impact of the application of the Act in the fields of employment and occupation, as well as on any cases brought before the courts against any worker alleged to be “abusing the social media”, indicating the charges brought and the outcome.

Article 1(1)(a) and (3). Grounds of discrimination and aspects of employment and occupation. Private and public sectors. Migrant workers, including domestic workers. The Committee notes the introduction by Legislative Decree No. 59 of 2018 of an addition to section 2 – section 2 bis – to Labour Code No. 36 of 2012 which states that: “Discrimination on the grounds of sex, origin, language, religion or belief against workers who are governed by the provisions of this law is hereby prohibited.” The Committee recalls that section 2 of the Labour Code excludes domestic workers and persons regarded as such from the scope of the protection of the Labour Code, except for certain provisions. Domestic workers are covered by the “Tripartite Domestic Workers contract” which regulates the relationship between the recruitment agency, the employer (the household) and the migrant domestic worker, the aim of which is to prevent the exploitation of domestic workers and it is expected to help guarantee the rights of migrant domestic workers. The Committee notes that new section 2 bis has been added to the list of the provisions of the Labour Code that apply to domestic workers and persons regarded as such (such as for example, sections 6, 19, 20, 21, 37, 38, 40, 48, 49, 58, 116, 183, 185 and Parts Twelve and Thirteen). The Government indicates that, following the adoption of this amendment, it has launched an information campaign through messages disseminated via the MLS D website, social media networks related to the Ministry, several awareness-raising lectures at the Ministry and in workplaces, with the embassies of labour-exporting countries and a number of civil society institutions and other bodies. It has also set up a hotline which can be contacted to request clarification and replies to any query.

The Committee welcomes the introduction of this formal general prohibition of discrimination in the Labour Code and its extension to domestic workers and persons regarded as such. The Committee notes however that, despite its previous observations, this amendment is still lacking as: (1) the new section 2 bis of the Labour Code does not mention all of the grounds of discrimination formally listed in the Convention; (2) the Labour Code still does not provide a comprehensive definition of discrimination, as well as a prohibition of direct and indirect discrimination, with respect to all aspects of employment (in other words, access to vocational training, to employment and to particular occupations, and terms and conditions of employment). Once again, the Committee asks the Government to amend both the Labour Code and the Civil Service Instructions No. 16/2016 to provide for: (i) a comprehensive definition of discrimination which should include direct and indirect discrimination and cover the seven grounds listed in the Convention; and (ii) protection against discrimination in all forms of employment and occupation.

Discrimination based on sex. Sexual harassment. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that Decree No. 59 of 2018 amending Labour Law No. 36 of 2012 formally prohibits sexual harassment in the workplace, by adding under Chapter 17 on “Sanctions” a section 192 bis which provides that: “A sentence of imprisonment of a maximum of one year or a maximum fine of 100 dinars [approximately US$265] shall be imposed on any worker who, in the course of, or for reasons of employment, sexually harasses a co-worker by a gesture, verbal or physical conduct, or by any other means. A sentence of imprisonment for a minimum term of six months or a minimum fine of 500 dinars [US$1,326] and a maximum fine of 1,000 dinars [US$2,653] shall be imposed whenever such a crime is committed by the employer or by his representative”. In that regard, the Committee notes that although section 192 bis provides for sanctions against sexual harassment, sexual harassment is not formally defined in the labour legislation. The Penal Code prescribes the sanctions available in the case of sexual harassment but does not include a clear and comprehensive definition of sexual harassment and only addresses cases where a worker is subject to sexual harassment from a co-worker, not when the perpetrator is a representative of the employer or a third party. The Committee takes note of the Government's statements that: (1) issues related to exposing a worker to discrimination by another colleague at work cannot be included in the Labour Law which only governs the relationship between employers, or their representatives, and their workers; (2) a worker victim of discrimination by a co-worker or a client should use other laws and regulations, provided the allegations are considered to be a crime or a misdemeanour towards individuals; and (3) this worker can submit his/her complaint before administrative bodies (MLSD, Civil Service Diwan, the General Secretariat for Grievances, the National Institution for Human Rights) or the courts. The Committee notes that under the new amendment, discrimination (and implicitly sexual harassment) is criminalized. It also notes that, in response to its previous statement – that a lack of complaints is not always an indicator of an absence of discrimination in practice – the Government affirms that, even if sexual harassment was addressed by the civil or labour law, in addition to the Penal Code, this does not mean that there would be cases of discrimination registered by the competent authorities, in view of: “(1) the legal and legislative progress in the Kingdom of Bahrain, and (2) the advanced cultural and educational levels of the labour force to exercise civil and political rights”. The Committee notes the Government's statement that, although awareness-raising and guidance in this area is a joint responsibility of relevant government bodies, social partners and civil society institutions, the MLSD is considering launching an information campaign to raise awareness. However, the Committee once again strongly urges the Government to take steps to adopt a clear and comprehensive definition and prohibition of sexual harassment. The Committee also asks the Government to provide detailed information on the remedies available to a victim in the event of a proven case of sexual harassment lodged with the various judicial, quasi-judicial and administrative bodies, and on any developments concerning the future awareness-raising campaign against sexual harassment in the world of work. The Committee reminds the Government again that an absence of complaints does not mean that harassment is not occurring.

Article 2. Equality of opportunity and treatment for men and women. Legislation. The Committee notes with interest that Legislative Decree No. 16 of 2021, which amends several sections of the Labour Code, has added a second paragraph to section 39 of the Labour Code which prohibits discrimination in wages between male and female workers for work of equal value.

As regards the presence of Bahraini women in the economic, social and political spheres, the Committee takes notes of the information communicated by the Government, such as, for example, their presence in the legislative authorities (the current Chairperson of the Council of Representatives is a woman, as well as a number of chairs of parliamentary committees), the fact that they are heading important ministries (Minister of Health, Minister of Housing) and that a number of ambassadors are women, and so on. According to the Government, women currently comprise 40 per cent of the total workforce in the public and private sectors which is high compared with labour markets in the Middle East and North Africa region. The Supreme Council for Women – which the Government says plays an important role in the promotion and empowerment of women in society and addresses the various forms of discrimination against them – indicates that the percentage of women in administrative posts has reached 46 per cent and that they are progressively assuming leadership positions on administrative boards and are playing an important role as entrepreneurs and in the ownership of small and medium-sized enterprises. In the last four years, the MLSD has inaugurated recruitment programmes for women to encourage their employment via part-time work and remote working, which have contributed to the recruitment of some 7,000 Bahraini women. As regards training and vocational programmes, the statistics indicate that the percentage of women who benefited from training is quite high: 49 per cent in 2019, 29 per cent in 2020 (reflecting the impact of COVID-19 pandemic) and 60 per cent in 2021. Furthermore, the Government draws the Committee's attention to the National Plan for the Advancement of the Bahraini Women (2013–2022) which encompasses several pillars aimed at enhancing women's participation in the labour market, such as focusing on education and training, economic empowerment and lifelong learning. In that regard, the Committee welcomes the information showing that, in the field of education (enrolment in secondary education and at university), the country has nearly closed the gender gap, to 98 per cent (compared with a global average of 95 per cent). As for proactive measures taken or envisaged to address inequality based on societal and traditional reasons, the Committee notes the Government's statement that Bahraini society is an open society which accepts the presence of women in all posts without exception, in addition to supporting them in their education and in career promotion. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the results achieved following the implementation of the 2013–2022 National Plan, as well as the impact of the above-mentioned measures and initiatives adopted.

Flexi work permit (Flexi permit). The Government recalls that the Flexi permit gives an opportunity to migrant workers in an irregular situation from specific categories to stay and work legally in the country without being tied to an employer (subject to annual fees). It allows them to benefit from health services, as well as from insurance against occupational injuries and to resort to the competent authorities to submit complaints, in addition to the possibility of being under contract with several employers or one employer according to a worker's desire throughout the period of his/her residence. The Government stresses the efforts made during the COVID-19 pandemic by, for example, not imposing the repatriation of migrant workers during the pandemic and freezing all fees related to the renewal of work permits.

Freedom to transfer to another employer. The Committee notes that, by virtue of Law No. 19 Regulating the Labour Market (2006), a migrant worker has the right to transfer to another employer without the approval of the current employer, after 12 months of employment with the current employer, while taking into account the specific period of 90 days' notice required. The Government explains that, considering the costs incurred by the employer in recruiting a worker from abroad, this 12-month period during which a worker is legally prohibited from transferring to another employer is reasonable. However, this condition does not apply where a worker has proved that he/she was exposed to exploitation or abuse by an employer such as the non-payment of wages, reduced wages, or a violation of a worker's legitimate rights in accordance with the Labour Law. In such a case, workers are authorized to transfer to another employer immediately without the approval of their current employer. During the years 2019–21, more than 186,000 workers were transferred with or without the approval of the employer.

The wage protection system (WPS). The Committee recalls that the WPS is a transparent means of securing the timely payment of employee salaries and regulating employer non-compliance, whereby employers are obliged to pay salaries in local currency at least once a month into a locally certified bank account. In that regard, the Government indicates that Ministerial Order No. 22 of 2021 sets down a gradual timeline for the full introduction of this system, starting with enterprises employing more than 500 workers and then to small and medium-sized enterprises. The Committee notes that the legislation also provides that an employer who fails repeatedly to meet their obligation in this regard may in future be denied a work permit for a migrant worker. The Committee takes note of the active steps taken by the Government to ensure better protection for migrant workers in general and in particular during the COVID-19 pandemic.

Noting that the Flexi permit system is only open to restrictive categories of migrant workers and is relatively costly, the Committee encourages the Government to consider reducing the fees and relaxing the eligibility criteria to enable a greater number of migrants to apply for a Flexi permit. It also asks the Government to provide statistical information on the number of migrant workers who have transferred to new employers before the expiry of the contract. The Committee also asks the Government to provide information on the impact of the Tripartite Domestic Workers contract on reducing migrant workers' vulnerability to exploitation.

Article 5. Special measures of protection for women. The Committee notes with satisfaction the repeal of Ministerial Order No. 32 of 2013 which prohibited women's employment in specific sectors and occupations in addition to that of Ministerial Order No. 16 of 2013 regarding the occupations in which, and the circumstances under which, the employment of women at night was prohibited. Decrees Nos 50 and 51 of 2021, on night work and occupations, respectively, have lifted restrictions on women's right to work at night. The Government also indicates that, in addition, several ministerial orders were adopted repealing all previous exceptions relating to women's employment at night and the prohibition of their employment in some occupations and roles, in undertakings prescribed by the Labour Law. The Government states that, as a consequence, women's employment has become possible in all economic sectors and in different occupations – without exception – in accordance with the principle enshrined in the Convention. While taking due note of this information, the Committee notes that Decrees Nos 50 and 51 of 2021 do not provide for any protection to ensure that pregnant or breastfeeding women are not obliged to perform work which has been determined by the competent authority to be prejudicial to the health of the mother or the child, or where an assessment has established a significant risk to the mother's health or that of the child. The Committee therefore asks the Government to indicate the measures taken to protect the health of pregnant or breastfeeding workers, as well as the health of their child, in these circumstances.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1998)

Previous comment

Articles 1–4 of the Convention. Assessing and addressing the gender wage gap and its underlying causes. The Committee observes: (1) the wide gender pay gap that persists in both the public and private sectors and the formal and informal economy; and (2) the occupational segregation of women in elementary occupations and the increasing number of women who are working in the informal economy. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (1) disaggregated statistical data on the earnings of men and women in the informal economy is not recorded by the Department of Inspection for Factories and Establishments (DIFE); and (2) according to the 2017 Labour Force Survey, 85 per cent of employed persons are in informal employment. The Committee further notes that 59.7 per cent of women and 32.2 per cent of men work in agriculture, forestry and fishing, and that the wage gap in agriculture was 31.51 per cent in 2018–19 (40.52 in 2010–11) (see Policy Brief of the Bangladesh Bureau of Statistics of 2 May 2021). The Committee also notes the Government's continued repetition that: (1) there is no gender pay gap in the formal sector both in public and private industrial and commercial enterprises; and (2) section 345 of the Labour Act, 2006, provides for equal wages for work of equal value. The Government adds that it is concerned about promoting women's access to the labour market and that several ministries are providing training for women on different skills. In this context, the Committee reiterates its request to the Government to adopt specific measures to assess and reduce the existing gender wage gap in both the formal and informal economy. The Committee also asks the Government to provide information on:

- (i) the steps taken to address occupational segregation, including by promoting women's access to the labour market and to jobs with career prospects and higher pay, and their results; and
- (ii) the earnings of men and women, disaggregated by economic activity and occupation, in both the public and private sectors, as well as in the informal economy.

Article 1(a). Definition of remuneration. Legislation. The Committee notes that the Government has formed a Tripartite Labour Law Review Committee, which has started its work. It notes however with concern the Government's repeated statement that it considers that the definition of "wages" in section 2(45) of the Labour Act to be in line with the Convention. The Committee recalls that this definition excludes particular aspects of remuneration such as "the value of any house accommodation, light, water" or "any travelling allowance". In this regard, the Committee again draws the Government's attention to Article 1(a) of the Convention which sets out a broad definition of remuneration, including not only "the ordinary, basic or minimum wage or salary" but also "any additional emoluments whatsoever ... whether in cash or in kind". The use of "any additional emoluments whatsoever" requires that all elements that a worker may receive for his or her work, including accommodation and travel allowances, are taken into account in the comparison of remuneration. Such additional components are often of considerable value and need to be included in the calculation, otherwise much of what can be given a monetary value arising out of the job would not be captured (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 686–687 and 690–691). Noting the Government's indication that a Tripartite Labour Law Review Committee was formed and started its work, the Committee reiterates its request to the Government to take appropriate steps so that the definition of "wages" provided under section 2(45) of the Labour Act is modified to encompass all the elements of remuneration, as defined in Article 1(a) of the Convention so as to ensure that the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value can be fully applied.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1972)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Trade Union Committee of International Labour Standards (TU-ILS Committee) of Bangladesh, received on 1 September 2022.

Article 1 of the Convention. Protection against discrimination. Definition and prohibition of discrimination in employment and occupation. Legislation. While noting the current humanitarian situation in the country, the Committee is bound to note that for a number of years, it has been drawing the Government's attention to the absence of legislative provisions providing protection against discrimination based on all of the grounds listed in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention, with respect to all aspects of employment and occupation as defined in Article 1(3) of the Convention and covering all workers. The Committee notes the TU-ILS Committee's statement that there is discrimination in employment both in the private and public sectors. While noting the Government's repeated statement that the Constitution provides protection against discrimination in employment and occupation, the Committee recalls that the main non-discrimination provision of the Constitution (article 28) provides for non-discrimination by the State but does not address the situation of the private sector and does not prohibit all of the grounds of discrimination enumerated in Article 1(1)(a). The Committee has repeatedly drawn the Government's attention to the fact that: (1) the constitutional provisions providing for equality of opportunity and treatment, although important, are generally not sufficient to address specific cases of discrimination in employment and occupation; and (2) a more detailed legislative framework addressing specifically discrimination in employment and occupation is required. Such a framework could include the following elements: coverage of all workers; provision of a clear definition of direct and indirect discrimination, as well as sexual harassment; the prohibition of discrimination at all stages of the employment process; the explicit assignment of supervisory responsibilities to competent national authorities; the establishment of accessible dispute resolution procedures; the establishment of dissuasive sanctions and appropriate remedies; the shifting or reversing of the burden of proof; the provision of protection from retaliation; affirmative action measures; and provision for the adoption and implementation of equality policies or plans at the workplace, as well as the collection of relevant data at different levels (see 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 850–855). In this regard, the Committee notes that an Anti-Discrimination Bill, 2022, was submitted to Parliament in April 2022. Taking into account the difficult situation in the country and recalling that the absence of a clear and comprehensive legislative framework may prevent workers from availing themselves of their right to equal opportunity and treatment and non-discrimination, the Committee asks the Government to take steps to ensure that, in the framework of the current labour law reform, the Labour Act of 2006 is amended or the Anti-Discrimination Bill, 2022, is adopted with a view to: (i) prohibiting direct and indirect discrimination based on at least all of the grounds enumerated in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention, with respect to all stages of employment and occupation, including recruitment; and (ii) covering all categories of workers, in both the formal and informal economy, including domestic workers. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard, as well as a copy of any new legislation, including the 2022 Amendment to the Labour Rules 2015. It further asks the Government to ensure the protection of men and women workers against discrimination in employment and occupation in practice, and particularly the categories of workers excluded from the scope of the Labour Act.

Article 1(1)(a). Discrimination based on sex. Sexual harassment. The Committee notes the Government's statement that section 332 of the Labour Act prohibits any kind of behaviour that is "indecent" or "repugnant to the modesty or honour" towards a working woman irrespective of her rank or status. The Committee notes from the National Review Report for Beijing +25 (2019), that with the increased participation of women in economic activities, workplace harassment has also become evident in many places and needs urgent prevention. In this regard, it notes with interest that the National Action Plan to Prevent Violence Against Women and Children (2018–2025) provides for a wide definition of sexual harassment which includes both quid pro quo and hostile environment sexual harassment. The Committee notes however that section 332 of the Labour Act and the Domestic Worker's Protection and Welfare Policy, 2015, do not contain such a comprehensive definition of all forms of sexual harassment. The Committee considers that without a clear definition and prohibition of both quid pro quo and hostile work environment sexual harassment, it remains doubtful whether the legislation effectively addresses all forms of sexual harassment and that the scope of the protection against sexual harassment should cover all employees both male and female, with respect not only to employment and occupation, but also vocational education and training, access to employment and conditions of employment (see 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 789, 791 and 793). The Committee asks the Government to take steps to ensure that: (i) a comprehensive definition and a clear prohibition of all forms of sexual harassment, including quid pro quo and hostile work environment sexual harassment, in employment and occupation is included in the Labour Act and/or the Anti-Discrimination Bill and covers all workers, both women and men; (ii) preventive measures are taken, including awareness-raising initiatives on the social stigma attached to sexual harassment, in cooperation with workers' and employers' organizations; and (iii) procedures and remedies are established. The Committee also asks the Government to provide information on the number, nature and outcome of any complaints or cases of sexual harassment in education, training and employment and occupation dealt with by labour inspectors, the courts or any other competent authority.

Articles 2 and 3. Equality of opportunity and treatment for men and women. With regard to the promotion of non-traditional fields of study and occupations for women and girls and the reduction of the number of girls dropping out of school early, the Committee notes the Government's indication that: (1) primary and secondary education is free for girls and they are provided a stipend for higher studies; (2) in technical and vocational education, institutes have been established for women only; (3) the number of places reserved for women in technical and vocational institutes increased from 10 per cent to 20 per cent during the reporting period; and (4) extensive training, job creation, labour market participation promotion and small and medium-sized enterprise support services for women have been undertaken. The Committee further notes that the Department of Inspection for Factories and Establishments (DIFE) has started a project entitled Gender Equality and Women's Empowerment at the Workplace, which includes training, advocacy programmes and policy. The Government also indicates that it is maintaining quotas in public sector employment, but the Committee notes that it has not reported on results achieved or how such quotas are implemented. The Committee notes the indication by the UT-ILS Committee that women are discriminated against and that it has provided examples of discriminatory job advertisements allowing only male applicants. It further notes the UT-ILS Committee's indication that: (1) the society is patriarchal in nature, and women feel less safe in performing certain jobs outside; (2) there is a problem with ensuring equality in women's employment, and there are still barriers for women in obtaining jobs in certain sectors and certain ranks (namely, managerial positions and mid-level management). The union adds that, while the activities of the Government to promote women's employment are appreciated: (1) the scope of this promotion should be widened; (2) the quota in the public sector is being applied and is having positive social impacts; and (3) the Government needs to ensure that the affirmative action policy that it has developed is applicable to the private sector as well. The Committee asks the Government to step up its efforts to: (i) address legal and practical obstacles to women's employment, including patriarchal attitudes and gender stereotypes regarding their aspirations and capabilities, and their lack of access to productive resources; (ii) enhance women's economic empowerment and promote their access to equal opportunities in formal employment and decision-making positions; and (iii) encourage girls and women to choose non-traditional fields of study and occupations while reducing the number of girls dropping out of school early. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on: (i) the content and implementation of the DIFE project on Gender Equality and Women's Empowerment at the Workplace, and its impact on women's employment; (ii) the implementation and results of the quotas in public employment (15 per cent) and primary school teaching (60 per cent); and (iii) the participation of men and women in education, training, employment and occupation, disaggregated by occupational category, if possible, in both the public and private sectors, as well as the informal economy.

Domestic workers. The Committee recalls that the Labour Act, 2006, excludes domestic workers from its scope of application. It notes the TU-ILS Committee's indication that: (1) discussions on including domestic workers within the scope of law are ongoing; (2) the Government has established a committee called the "Central Monitoring Cell on Domestic Workers' Protection and Welfare Policy" which includes representatives of the Ministry of Labour, workers' and employers' organizations and civil society; and (3) there is only limited training for domestic workers within the country and there are not enough organizations and opportunities for skills development for domestic workers. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Domestic Workers Protection and Welfare Policy, 2015, gives effect to the principle of equal rights and basic human rights for all citizens as enshrined in the Constitution. It notes, however, that the provisions of the policy do not provide domestic workers with the same protections as enshrined in the Labour Act 2006, and that the High Court, in a ruling of August 2022, deemed that the policy had so far failed to frame "proper and complete guidelines" to protect domestic workers. The Committee further notes that the policy does not prohibit direct and indirect discrimination on at least all of the grounds enumerated in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention and does not cover both the formal and informal economy. The Committee once again recalls that all categories of workers, including domestic workers, should enjoy equality of opportunity and treatment irrespective of race, colour, sex, religion, political opinion, national extraction or social origin, in all aspects of employment (see 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 778). In addition, the Committee notes from the Beijing +25 report that some 90 per cent of domestic workers are women and domestic workers are a category facing gender-based violence. The Committee recalls the 2016 concluding observations of the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) which highlighted the difficult situation of women domestic workers in the country and expressed concern that women domestic workers are subject to violence, abuse, food deprivation and murder; that such crimes go unreported; and that the victims have limited access to justice and redress (CEDAW/C/BGD/CO/8, 25 November 2016, paragraph 32). The Committee asks the Government to take the necessary steps to enact the Domestic Workers Protection and Welfare Policy, 2015, into law and include therein provisions defining and prohibiting direct and indirect discrimination based on at least all of the grounds enumerated in the Convention in all aspects of employment and occupation. In the meantime, it asks the Government to ensure that: (i) the policy is effectively implemented; (ii) domestic workers are protected, in practice, against any form of discrimination in employment and occupation, including all forms of sexual harassment; (iii) they enjoy full equality of opportunity and treatment with other categories of workers covered by the Labour Act; and (iv) they have effective access to procedures for redress and remedies. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on: (i) the work of the Central Monitoring Cell on Domestic Workers' Protection and the Welfare Policy regarding non-discrimination and equality, including stereotypes and prejudices; and (ii) the number, nature and outcome of complaints of discrimination filed by domestic workers, disaggregated by sex, race, national extraction and social origin.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1974)

Previous comment

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report, due since 2018, has not been received. In light of its urgent appeal launched to the Government in 2021, the Committee proceeds with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal.

Articles 1(b) and 2(2)(a) of the Convention. Equal remuneration for work of equal value. Legislation. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes, from the Government's 2019 report under the national-level review of implementation of the Beijing Declaration and Platform for Action, 1995 (Beijing+25 national report), that the National Gender Policy has not yet been adopted. The Employment (Prevention of Discrimination) Act having been adopted on 5 August 2020, the Committee notes with regret that it does not contain an equal pay provision. The Committee further notes that the Government, in its Beijing+25 national report, states that although there is no equal pay legislation it ensures that "equal pay for equal work" is guaranteed in the public service and that there is no disparity between the salaries paid to men and women doing the "same job". The Committee recalls, once again, that the principle of the Convention not only guarantees equal remuneration for equal, the same or similar work, but also addresses situations where men and women perform different work that is nevertheless of equal value. In this regard, it refers the Government to its 2012 General Survey on fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 672–675. The Committee once again asks the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value is fully reflected in the National Gender Policy, and to provide a copy of the policy once it is adopted. It also asks the Government to provide information on any measures taken or envisaged to capture the principle of equal pay for work of equal value in its legislation.

Gender pay gap and occupational segregation. The Committee notes from the statistics published by the Barbados Statistical Service (Labour Force Survey 2021) that of all women employed in 2021, 41.2 per cent earned less than 500 Barbadian dollars (BBD) per week compared with 36.2 per cent of men employed in that same year. The Committee notes that 31.2 per cent of women and 35 per cent of men earned between BBD500 and BBD999 per week, and that 17.4 per cent of women and 15.7 per cent of men earned BBD1,000 per week or more. The Committee once again notes, from the Labour Force Survey 2021, the persistent occupational gender segregation between men and women, with women mostly employed as service workers and clerks while men are mostly employed as craft and related workers or plant and machine operators. The Committee notes that, when looking at economic sectors, women workers continue to be highly represented in “Accommodation and Food Services”, “Finance and Insurance”, “Education” and “Human Health and Social Work” and men continue to largely predominate in the “Construction” and “Transportation and Storage” sectors. The Committee also notes, from the concluding observations of the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW), the disproportionately high unemployment rate among women and the persistently wide and increasing gender pay gap in all sectors, continued occupational segregation in the labour market and the concentration of women in low-wage jobs in the formal and informal sectors (CEDAW/C/BRB/CO/5-8, 24 July 2017, paragraph 33). The Committee further refers to its comments under the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111). The Committee once again asks the Government to take measures to reduce the pay gap between men and women and to increase the employment of women in jobs with career opportunities and higher pay. The Committee once again recalls that wage inequalities may arise due to the segregation of men and women into certain sectors and occupations, and therefore again asks the Government to provide information on the results achieved under the National Gender Policy, once adopted, to address occupational gender segregation and to increase the employment of women and men in sectors and occupations in which they are under-represented.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request directly addressed to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1974)

Previous comment

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government’s report, due since 2018, has not been received. In light of its urgent appeal launched to the Government in 2021, the Committee proceeds with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal.

Article 1 of the Convention. Definition of discrimination. Legislative developments. The Committee notes that the Employment (Prevention of Discrimination) Bill 2020 appears to have been enacted; however, it has not received a copy of the Act but only has access to the Bill. The Committee asks the Government to provide a copy of the Act, if enacted, or to provide information as to why the Bill has not been brought into law.

The Committee notes that, under section 3(1) of the above-mentioned Bill, “a person discriminates against another person where: (a) the person, on a ground specified in subsection (2), directly or indirectly, whether intentionally or not, makes a distinction, creates an exclusion or shows a preference, the intent or effect of which is to subject the other person to any disadvantage, restriction or other detriment; or (b) the person, directly or indirectly, whether intentionally or not, subjects the other person to any disadvantage, restriction or other detriment in the following circumstances: (i) a ground specified in subsection (2) applies to the other person; (ii) as a consequence of the ground the other person does not comply, or is not able to comply, with a particular requirement of the first-mentioned person; (iii) the nature of the requirement is such that a substantially higher proportion of persons to whom the ground does not apply complies, or is able to comply, with the requirement; and (iv) the requirement is not reasonable in the circumstances”. The Bill also prohibits an employer from discriminating in relation to job creation and recruitment (section 4) and with regard to the terms and conditions of employment, disciplinary action or dismissal (section 5). While reiterating its concern at the absence of a Government report, the Committee takes due note of this new definition which appears to cover both direct and indirect discrimination in employment and occupation. The Committee requests the Government to: (i) clarify whether the prohibition of discrimination applies to all aspects of occupation and employment, including access to vocational training; and (ii) if the Bill was passed, provide information on the application in practice of section 3(1) of the Employment (Prevention of Discrimination) Act, including by providing a copy of any related court decision.

Article 1(1)(a). Discrimination on the grounds of sex. Sexual harassment. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes the adoption of the Employment Sexual Harassment (Prevention) Act, 2017, which defines and prohibits sexual harassment in the workplace, and sets out a clear grievances procedure. The Committee notes that section 3(1) of the Act defines sexual harassment as including a number of unwelcome sexual behaviours, listed in sub-paragraphs (a) to (g), “in circumstances where a reasonable person would consider the conduct to be offensive”. Section 3(2) adds that a single incident can be considered as sexual harassment. The Committee also notes that section 5(1) of the Act provides that “[a]n employer or a supervisor of an employee shall not in any manner suggest to an employee that the prospects or working conditions of that employee are contingent upon the employee’s acceptance or toleration of sexual advances”. While reiterating its concern at the absence of a Government report, the Committee takes due note of this positive development and requests the Government to provide: (i) information on how sections 3 and 5 of the Employment Sexual Harassment (Prevention) Act are interpreted and applied in practice, for example by providing copies of any court decisions on claims brought under the Act; and (ii) the number of complaints filed under the Act, the sanctions imposed and remedies granted.

Article 1(1)(a) and (b). Grounds of discrimination. The Committee notes that section 3(2) of the Employment (Prevention of Discrimination) Bill 2020 prohibits discrimination on the basis of race, origin, political opinion, trade union affiliation, colour, creed, sex, sexual orientation, social status, marital status, domestic partnership status, pregnancy, maternity, family responsibility, medical condition, disability, age and physical features. While welcoming the inclusion of a number of the grounds set out in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention and additional grounds as foreseen in Article 1(1)(b), the Committee notes with regret that the grounds of national extraction and social origin, specified in the Convention under Article 1(1)(a), are not included as prohibited grounds of discrimination. The Committee requests the Government to indicate: (i) the measures envisaged to add to the legislation the grounds of national extraction and social origin in the list of prohibited grounds of discrimination; and (ii) how, in practice, workers are being protected against discrimination, in all aspects of employment and occupation, on the basis of these two grounds.

Belgium

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1952)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the joint observations submitted on 1 September 2022 by the General Confederation of Liberal Trade Unions of Belgium (CGSLB), the Confederation of Christian Trade Unions (CSC) and the General Labour Federation of Belgium (FGTB).

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Gender segregation in education and in employment and occupation. Pay gaps. Scope of comparison. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its report on the projects implemented in various regions to combat occupational segregation and, in particular, gender stereotypes in education, training and vocational guidance. It recalls that the Act of 28 July 2011 requires that each sex is guaranteed to be represented by at least one third of the members of the boards of directors of autonomous public enterprises (EPAs) and the National Lottery (these provisions entering into force in January 2012), and also of private enterprises listed on the stock exchange (these provisions coming into force in 2017 for large enterprises and in 2019 for small and medium-sized enterprises). According to the third review of this Act, carried out by the Institute for the Equality of Women and Men (IEFH) in 2019 and cited by the Government, between 2008 and 2017 the proportion of women on the boards of all the enterprises examined rose from 8.2 to 26.8 per cent. In 2017, 66.1 per cent of these enterprises achieved the legally required one third representation of women. As for the federal administration, while the Government indicates that it has achieved the legal target (established by a 2012 Royal Decree) as 35.8 per cent of representatives were women in 2021, the Committee notes that an IEFH study for 2012–17 indicates that Belgium ranked last among the 28 European Union (EU) Member States in 2017 with 18.6 per cent of women at the two highest levels (the positions of chairpersons of management committees and managing directors) compared with 41.7 per cent for the EU. The Committee also notes that, in its "Report on the pay gap between women and men in Belgium" published in 2021, the IEFH recommends "tackling segregation at its roots" by combating gender stereotypes from early childhood onwards, and subsequently in training, vocational guidance and access to employment, both by encouraging girls to opt for traditionally "male" subjects and by raising the status of so-called "female" subjects and facilitating access for boys. The IEFH also notes that the comparative basis for work of equal value is circumvented by the Wage Gap Act of 22 April 2012 since, by focusing on job classifications, the comparison work is carried out at sub-sector level (joint committees) and, in practice, this narrows the comparative basis down to the same enterprise, the same job title and seniority, and so on. The Committee notes that the IEFH calls for the development of an instrument to compare one job of equal value with another, including between different sectors. Broadening the comparative basis for work of equal value is, in its view, a necessary step towards achieving the goal of eliminating the gender pay gap for work of equal value. In this regard, the Committee recalls that ensuring a sufficiently broad scope of comparison is essential for the application of the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value, given the continued prevalence of occupational gender segregation. It refers to its comments in this regard in paragraphs 697 et seq. of its 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions. The Committee encourages the Government to take steps to ensure that a broad scope of comparison is used when implementing the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. It requests the Government to continue providing information on developments in the gender pay gap, and on any measures to narrow it, in particular on the manner in which occupational gender segregation is addressed.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1977)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the joint observations submitted on 1 September 2022 by the General Confederation of Liberal Trade Unions of Belgium (CGSLB), the Confederation of Christian Trade Unions (CSC) and the General Labour Federation of Belgium (FGTB).

Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. Discrimination on the basis of sex and/or gender. Pregnancy and maternity. The Committee notes with interest the adoption on 4 February 2020 of the Act amending the Act of 10 May 2007 to combat gender discrimination, extending the prohibition of discrimination to new protected criteria, namely, paternity, co-maternity, breastfeeding, adoption, medically assisted procreation and sexual characteristics, the main objective being to give greater visibility to situations relating to maternity or the desire for maternity. The Committee welcomes the publication of a leaflet to inform working parents and pregnant workers of their rights and the support they can obtain from the Institute for the Equality of Women and Men (IEFH) and the labour inspectorate (the Social Legislation Supervisory Directorate) and notes the many court rulings following complaints lodged by or in collaboration with the IEFH (some of which resulted in an amicable settlement). In this regard, the Committee notes that, in its concluding observations, the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) expressed concern as to the high number of complaints about employment discrimination based on pregnancy and maternity (CEDAW/C/BEL/CO/8, 31 October 2022, paragraph 43). It notes that in 2020, 36 per cent of the 350 reports concerning work situations received by the IEFH involved discrimination related to pregnancy and maternity. As indicated by the IEFH in its 2020 progress report, cases of discrimination and unequal treatment on the grounds of pregnancy, maternity or the desire to have a child remain a major problem in Belgian society, a finding shared by the CGSLB, CSC and FGTB in their observations. The Committee requests the Government to continue to support and take practical steps to prevent and eliminate discrimination on the grounds of pregnancy, maternity and/or the desire for maternity, in particular by stepping up labour inspections and by conducting information and awareness-raising activities among workers, employers, their respective organizations and the general public. The Government is also requested to continue providing information on cases of discrimination in employment and occupation dealt with by the IEFH, the labour inspectorate and the courts, as well as on the outcome of any legal proceedings initiated in this regard, indicating the sanctions imposed and the compensation awarded.

Bosnia and Herzegovina

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1993)

Previous comment

Articles 1(b) and 2(2)(a) of the Convention. Work of equal value. Legislation. The Committee recalls that the definitions of “work of equal value” in both section 77(1) of the Law on Labour of the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina (FBiH) and section 120(2) and (3) of the Law on Labour of the Republika Srpska limit the concept of “work of equal value” to the same level of each of the evaluation factors enumerated, such as qualifications, capacity to work and responsibility, physical and intellectual work, skills, working conditions and results of work. The Committee notes with regret that the definition of “work of equal value” in section 89 of the Law on Labour of the Brčko District No. 34/19, which entered into force on 1 January 2020, has a wording similar to the Law on Labour of the Republika Srpska and is therefore too restrictive to give full effect to the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value set out in the Convention. The Committee emphasizes once again that the concept of “work of equal value” must permit a broad scope of comparison. While factors such as skills, responsibility, effort and working conditions are clearly relevant in determining the value of the jobs, when examining two jobs, the value does not have to be the same with respect to each factor – determining value is about the overall value of the job when all the factors are taken into account. In this regard, the Committee wishes to point out that, for the purpose of the Convention, the relative value of jobs with varying content is to be determined through objective job evaluation on the basis of the work performed and is different from performance appraisal, which aims at evaluating the performance of an individual worker in carrying out his or her job. Objective job evaluation is therefore concerned with evaluating the job and not the individual worker. The Committee therefore underlines that factors such as “capacity to work” and “results of work” relate to the performance appraisal of the individual worker rather than to objective job evaluation (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 673, 677 and 696). The Committee asks the Government to take the necessary steps to amend the provisions regarding the definition of “work of equal value” in the Law on Labour of the FBiH, the Law on Labour of the Republika Srpska, and the Law on Labour of the Brčko District in the near future, so as to ensure that the legislation: (i) provides for a definition of “work of equal value” which is based on objective criteria; and (ii) addresses situations where men and women perform different work requiring different qualifications and skills, levels of responsibility and efforts and with different conditions of work but that is of equal value overall. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on any initiatives taken to amend the labour legislation for this purpose.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request directly addressed to the Government.

Brazil

Previous comment: direct request

The Committee notes the observations of: (i) the Single Confederation of Workers (CUT) received on 2 September 2022; and (ii) the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) and the National Confederation of Industry (CNI) received on 30 August 2022. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments with respect to the observations of the CUT.

Articles 1–4 of the Convention. Assessing and addressing the gender pay gap and its underlying causes. The Committee notes that, according to the Brazilian Institute of Geography and Statistics (IBGE), the gender pay gap has decreased slightly since 2017 but remains high, being estimated at 22.3 per cent in 2019 (compared with 22.5 per cent in 2017). The remuneration of women was systematically lower than that of men in all occupational categories, except for members of the armed forces, and the gender pay gap was as wide as 38.1 per cent in management positions, in 2019. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that efforts are being made in relation to higher positions, where pay differences between men and women are still very large and women are still facing difficulties in accessing such positions. In that regard, the Committee notes that, in their observations, the CNI and the IOE indicate that in recent years, public policies combined with efforts from the private sector have resulted in an increased participation of women in the formal economy, more particularly in positions and economic sectors with higher pay, and their departure from informal work characterized by low remuneration. The Committee notes this information but regrets the lack of information provided by the Government on the concrete measures elaborated and implemented to address the persistent gender pay gap. The Committee asks the Government to strengthen its efforts to address the gender pay gap and its underlying causes, including by enhancing women’s access to jobs with career prospects and higher pay. It also asks the Government to provide information on: (i) the content of the proactive measures taken and implemented to that end and their outcomes; and (ii) the levels of remuneration in the various economic sectors, disaggregated by sex and occupational category, so as to enable the Committee to assess the progress made.

Articles 1(b) and 2(2)(a). Equal remuneration for work of equal value. Legislation. The Committee notes that section 461 of the Consolidation of Labour Laws (CLT), as amended by Law No. 13.467 of 2017, guarantees the right to equal remuneration without discrimination on the grounds of sex, ethnicity, nationality or age to workers “performing the same functions, for all work of equal value, rendered to the same employer, in the same business establishment”. Section 461(1) further defines “work of equal value” as work “performed with the same productivity and technical perfection, among people working for the same employer with a difference of length of years of service for that employer of not more than four years and with a difference of length of tenure in the post of not more than two years”. The Committee notes the Government’s statement, in its report, that section 8 of Decree No. 9.571, of 21 November 2018, establishing the National Guidelines on Business and Human Rights, provides that companies should address discrimination and “ensure equal pay and benefits for positions and functions with similar attributions, regardless of gender”. The Government adds that a “Questions and Answers Booklet on Discrimination at Work” was published in 2018 by the Ministry of Labour and provides as an example of direct discrimination the payment of a lower salary to women “when the functions are identical and the service is provided for the same employer in the same establishment”. In this context, the Committee wishes to draw the Government’s attention to the fact that the provisions contained in its national legislation are narrower than the principle laid down by the Convention. The concept of “work of equal value” encompasses not only the same work, or work in the same occupation or activity, performed by men and women under the same conditions and specifications, but should also allow for the comparison of work performed by men and women that is of an entirely different nature, which is nevertheless of equal value. Furthermore, the application of the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value is not limited to comparisons between the jobs of men and women in the same establishment or with the same employer. It allows for a much broader comparison to be made between jobs performed by men and women in different places or enterprises, or for different employers. The Committee also emphasizes that, while factors such as skills, responsibility, effort and working conditions are clearly relevant in determining the value of the jobs, when examining two jobs, it is important to note that the value does not have to be the same with respect to each factor – determining value is about the overall value of the job when all the objective factors are taken into account. In this regard, it wishes to point out that, for the purpose of the Convention, the relative value of jobs with varying content is to be determined through objective job evaluation on the basis of the work performed and is different from performance appraisal, which aims at evaluating the performance of an individual worker in carrying out his or her job. Objective job evaluation is therefore concerned with evaluating the job and not the individual worker. The Committee therefore underlines that factors such as “productivity” and “technical perfection” relate to the performance appraisal of the individual worker rather than to objective job evaluation (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 673–679 and 695–709). The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary steps to amend the Consolidation of Labour Laws (CLT), so as to give full legislative expression to the principle of the Convention and include a definition of “work of equal value” based on objective criteria, such as skills and qualifications, effort, responsibilities and working conditions. It asks the Government to provide information on any steps taken in this regard and their outcomes.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1965)

The Committee notes the observations of the Brasilia Bank Workers Union (Bancários/DF), the National Federation of Caixa Econômica Federal Staff Associations (FENAE) and the Single Confederation of Workers (CUT) received on 1 September 2022. It also notes the observations from the CUT, received on 2 September. The Committee asks the Government to provide its comments thereon.

Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. Discrimination based on sex. Sexual harassment. The Committee notes that the Bancários/DF, FENAE and CUT express concern about the numerous cases of sexual harassment at work in the finance, banking and judicial sectors. They highlight that: (1) women suffer three times more sexual harassment than men at the workplace, while 97 per cent of victims do not report this situation; (2) data from the Higher Labour Tribunal shows that, between January 2015 and January 2021, approximately 26,000 persons filed cases for sexual harassment at work; (3) as regards the Federal Public Administration, there were 903 reports of sexual or moral harassment in the first half of 2022 through the Digital Ombudsman System (e-Ouv), which represent an 88.5 per cent increase in comparison with the first six months of 2021; and (4) a survey from the Office of the Comptroller General of Brazil (CGU) revealed that in the Federal Public Administration only one third of sexual harassment cases resulted in effective punishment. In their views, cases of sexual harassment at work are characterized by victims' difficulties in accessing justice; long delays; and inadequate sanctions. The Committee notes with concern these allegations. The Committee asks the Government to provide its comments thereon.

The Committee notes the Government's indication, in reply to its previous comments, that section 216-A of the Penal Code, as amended by Law No. 10.224 of 2001, criminalizes sexual harassment and establishes penalties of up to two years' imprisonment. The Committee recalls that criminal provisions are not completely adequate in discrimination cases because, inter alia, they do not always provide a remedy to the victim and are very unlikely to cover all forms of conduct that amount to sexual harassment. Considering the need to take into account the specificities of sexual harassment in employment and occupation and the wide range of behaviours to cover, the Committee asks the Government to take the necessary measures to include in the labour legislation or in legislation applicable to labour relations a clear definition and prohibition of both quid pro quo and hostile environment sexual harassment, including by co-workers, as well as preventive measures, redress mechanisms and appropriate sanctions.

The Committee notes with interest the adoption of Law No. 14.457 of 21 September 2022 implementing the "Emprega + Mulheres e Jovens" programme, which provides that companies with more than 20 employees must adopt specific measures to prevent and address sexual harassment and other forms of violence at work (section 23). However, the Committee observes that the Bill on Equal Opportunities and Treatment for Women in Employment (PLS No. 136/2011) which included moral, physical, psychological and sexual harassment as a form of discrimination against women has been set aside. It further notes, that, in its 2021 national report to the United Nations (UN) Human Rights Committee (International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights) the Government acknowledges that violence against women remains one of the main challenges it currently faces (CCPR/C/BRA/3, 25 August 2021, paragraph 60). The Committee asks the Government to provide information on: (i) the implementation of the "Emprega + Mulheres e Jovens" programme in relation to the measures taken by companies to prevent and address sexual harassment at work; (ii) any other practical measures taken, both in the public and private sectors, including awareness-raising among employers, workers and their organizations; and (iii) the number of complaints or cases of sexual harassment dealt with by the competent authorities, including sanctions imposed and remedies granted.

Articles 2, 3 and 5. Equality of opportunity and treatment irrespective of race, colour or national extraction. People of African descent. The Committee notes that, according to the National Household Sample Survey (PNAD) carried out by the Brazilian Institute of Geography and Statistics (IBGE) from 2012 to 2018, the average income of the Black population is equivalent to only 60 per cent of that received by the White population and this proportion remained mostly unchanged since 2012 (IBGE, 4th trimester, 2012–2018). Furthermore, according to the statistical information in the Government's report to the UN Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW), the literacy rate for the Black population remains lower (91.1 per cent in 2019 compared with 96.4 per cent for the rest of the population). Only 2.8 per cent of the Black population occupied decision-making positions in 2019, compared with 7.1 per cent for the rest of the population, while Black workers were more concentrated in the informal economy (CEDAW/C/BRA/8-9, 17 March 2022, paragraph 87; and Annex to CEDAW report). The Committee recalls that several laws have been adopted to introduce employment quotas in the civil service and publicly-owned companies at the federal level for the Black population (Law No. 12.990/2014) and increase their access to federal universities (Law No. 12.711/2012). The Government indicates that other special measures of assistance have been adopted or are pending adoption, namely: (1) Decree No. 9.427 of 28 June 2018 which provides that 30 per cent of vacancies for internships in the Federal Public Administration are reserved for the Black population; (2) Bill No. 2.067 of 2021 to introduce in public procurement contract requirements clauses regarding quotas for employment for the Black population; and (3) Bill No. 33 of 2016 to amend the Federal Constitution in order to establish a fund for the promotion of racial equality in order to promote equal opportunities and social inclusion of the Black population, including in education and vocational training. The Committee further notes the Government's indication regarding: (1) the adoption of Decree No. 10.933/22 of 10 January 2022 enacting the Inter-American Convention against Racism, Racial Discrimination and Related Forms of Intolerance which now has constitutional status; and (2) the discussions that are under way to carry out a national campaign promoting equal opportunities for Black women in the labour market. The Committee however notes that the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights expressed specific concern at the structural racism, discrimination and violence that people of African descent face in Brazil and called for urgent reforms of laws, institutions and policies to overcome that situation (Press briefing note on Brazil, 24 November 2020). Furthermore, in the report on the universal periodic review, it is indicated that the United Nations country team reinforced the importance of comprehensive policies that confront racism and aggravated discrimination and reported that 70.8 per cent of out-of-school compulsory school age children were Black boys and girls (A/HRC/WG.6/41/BRA/2, 25 August 2022, paragraphs 8 and 43). The Committee further notes that, in its 2021 report on the situation of human rights in Brazil, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) highlighted that people of African descent still face discrimination in their access to education, the formal labour market and management positions in the private sector (paragraphs 20 and 21). While welcoming the measures implemented by the Government to enhance equality of opportunity and treatment in education and employment for people of African descent, in particular through affirmative actions, the Committee notes with concern that such measures appear to have yielded few tangible results in practice so far. The Committee urges the Government to step up its efforts to adopt and implement both legal and practical measures with a view to promoting equality of opportunity and treatment of people of African descent in employment and occupation, including through public awareness-raising activities to address racial discrimination and promote tolerance among the public. It also asks the Government to provide information on: (i) any assessment carried out of the progress made to date in addressing the situation of people of African descent in employment and occupation, including results achieved through the quota system; (ii) any measures taken in law and in practice to enhance the access of people of African descent to education, vocational training and employment opportunities, including in the formal economy and in decision-making positions, and the results achieved; and (iii) the participation of people of African descent in education, training, employment and occupation, disaggregated by sex; and (iv) the combined effects of sex and ethnicity on the distribution and participation of workers in the various occupations and economic sectors, including on their remuneration rates.

General observation of 2018. The Committee wishes to draw the Government's attention to its general observation on discrimination on grounds of race, colour and national extraction adopted in 2018.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Workers with Family Responsibilities Convention, 1981 (No. 156) (ratification: 2006)

Previous comment

Article 3 of the Convention. National policy. The Committee recalls that a number of measures aimed at facilitating the reconciliation of work and family responsibilities provided for in the Labour Code and the Civil Service Code are available only to women. In this regard, it also recalls the Government's previous statement that sections 140, 310 and 312 of the Labour Code should be amended to be made available to fathers as well as mothers. It therefore notes with regret that the Government, in its report, appears to reverse this opinion, stating that the prohibition on night work under section 140 is an "expression of the special protection of mothers laid down in article 47, paragraph 2, of the Constitution" and that “the prohibition is therefore linked to established legal principles and the guarantee of the mother’s rights, which is part of the overall legislation.” The Committee further notes the Government’s statement that “under Article 313 of the Labour Code, the mother’s rights under articles 310 and 312 of the Labour Code may be enjoyed by the father when the mother is unable to enjoy them” including “both situations where the mother is objectively prevented from exercising these rights (e.g. illness) and where this would affect her professional development”; and that “the law leaves it to the parents themselves to decide which of the parents should benefit from the rights under Articles 310 and 312 of the Labour Code.” It finally notes the Government’s statement “that Bulgarian legislation grants equal rights to male and female workers or employees with family responsibilities, in accordance with general legal principles.” The Committee recalls that the Convention has the dual objective of creating equality of opportunity and treatment in working life between men and women with family responsibilities, on the one hand, and between men and women with such responsibilities and workers without such responsibilities, on the other (1993 General Survey on workers with family responsibilities, paragraph 25). The Committee draws the Government’s attention to the fact that the assumption that the main responsibility for family care and the household lies with women, thus reinforcing stereotypical attitudes regarding the roles of men and women and existing gender inequality, runs counter to the objectives of the Convention. The Committee therefore considers that the measures taken in favour of workers with family responsibilities should be made available to men and women equally. Consequently, the Committee reiterates its request that the Government, with the participation of workers’ and employers’ organizations, take steps to review and amend the legislation with a view to ensuring that the measures applying the Convention are available to men and women workers with family responsibilities on an equal footing, and to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Burundi

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1993)

Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. Discrimination on the basis of sex or gender Gender-based violence. In its previous comment, the Committee asked the Government to provide information on the following points: (1) the implementation and application in practice of Act No. 1/13 of 22 September 2016 concerning the prevention and suppression of gender-based violence and victim protection (hereinafter “the Act of 2016”), which defines and punishes, inter alia, gender-based violence (GBV), including sexual violence, sexual harassment, traditional gender-hostile practices and economic violence, which is defined as denying a spouse access to family resources or forbidding a spouse to work, indicating the number and type of cases of gender-based violence dealt with by the labour inspectorate and the courts, as well as the penalties imposed; (2) the steps taken or contemplated to inform and raise the awareness of employers, workers and their respective organizations, labour inspectors, judges and also the general public with regard to action against gender-based violence, including the steps taken to publicize the content of the Act of 2016; and (3) the activities of the Independent National Human Rights Commission (CNIDH) against gender-based violence in employment. The Committee notes from the Government’s report that: (1) the labour inspectorate has not identified any cases of gender-based violence in employment and occupation, but the courts dealt with 4,004 cases of gender-based violence between 2016 and September 2018, with penal servitude being imposed as a penalty; (2) the measures taken by the Government to raise awareness of the Act of 2016 include training of trainers at the Training Centre for Legal Personnel; the launching, by the Second Vice-President of the Republic, of an outreach campaign; the translation of the Act into the national language (Kirundi); raising the awareness of the different State services; broadcasting; community awareness-raising through community leaders and the Women’s National Forum; and (3) the CNIDH undertook a number of activities aimed at combating gender-based violence in employment. The Government adds that the CNIDH took part in activities led by various partners in the GBV field to hold exchanges with them, review their achievements and provide legal support. Finally, the Committee notes the Government's intention to compile an inventory of laws that discriminate against women with a view to amending them in accordance with the Constitution and ratified international instruments, following the recommendations of the CNIDH. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress achieved and to provide copies of the amended texts while conducting the inventory.

Sexual harassment. In its previous comment, the Committee requested the Government to: (1) examine the possibility of expanding the definition of sexual harassment by adding the notion of a hostile, offensive or humiliating work environment, and to specify the procedure to be followed and the penalties that apply in cases of sexual harassment, in the absence of any specific provision in that regard in the Act of 2016; and (2) provide information on the practical steps taken to prevent and eliminate sexual harassment in the public and private sectors, including measures designed to raise the awareness of employers, workers and their respective organizations with regard to the prevention and treatment of sexual harassment. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Gender Commission of the National Assembly, meeting to review progress in raising awareness of the Act of 2016 and to make recommendations, has suggested amending the Act in view of its lack of compliance with the new Penal Code and with the Gender Commission's definition of sexual harassment. Regarding the procedure to be followed and penalties applied in cases of sexual harassment, the Government indicates that those are provided under section 586 of the Penal Code. Finally, in its Beijing+25 report, the Government adds that sexual harassment is included in the list of offences established in the Act of 2016, under section 61 of which all GBV offences cannot be amnestied and are imprescriptible with regard to both public action and the penalty imposed, which is irreducible and cannot be pardoned. The Committee hopes that the Government will take the opportunity provided by the revision of the Act of 2016 to complete the definition of sexual harassment by including the notion of a hostile, offensive or humiliating work environment and will provide information on the progress made in this regard. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the practical steps taken to prevent and eliminate sexual harassment in the public and private sectors, including measures designed to raise the awareness of employers, workers and their respective organizations.

Article 2. Equality of opportunity and treatment for men and women. In its previous comment, the Committee asked the Government to provide information on: (1) the increase in the rate of school enrolment and vocational training of girls, (2) women's access to productive resources and to employment, including to managerial posts in the public and private sectors; and (3) the adoption of a new national gender policy, replacing the one adopted in 2012, and to provide details on those sections relating to gender equality in employment and occupation.

With regard to the increase in the rate of school enrolment and vocational training of girls and women's access to productive resources and employment, the Committee notes from the Government's report, as well as from its Beijing+25 report, that the steps taken to increase the access of girls to primary and secondary school include: integrating the gender equity dimension in education into the National Development Plan 2018–27; the formulation of the Sectoral Plan for the Development of Education and Training (PSDEF) 2012–20; and the Transitional Plan for Education 2018–20 (PTE 2018–20), which was primarily aimed at basic education. The Committee also notes: the creation of a unit for inclusive education to take all vulnerable groups into account, such as persons with disabilities; the return to school of adolescent mothers; the 2018 launching of the “aunt/school and father/school” project to combat school drop-outs and unwanted pregnancies; the renewal of curricula and the eradication of gender stereotypes from text books and other scholastic tools; and the annual holding of the “Back to School” campaign. The school enrolment rate for girls stood at 87 per cent in 2018. Moreover, to encourage women and girls to take up sciences, engineering, technology and other disciplines, certificates were awarded to certain women and girls who excelled in the field of science during the celebration in February 2019 of International Day of Women and Girls in Science. With regard to women's access to productive resources and employment, the Committee notes an empowerment project for women which sets up guarantee funds to help women obtain microcredits. The project is already operating in eight provinces (Cibitoke, Bubanza, Bururi, Makamba, Rutana, Karusi, Bujumbura Marie and Bujumbura).

The Committee also notes the adoption of the National Development Plan (PND) 2018–27, the new frame of reference for planning, which also takes account of different social policies, such as the National Gender Policy (PNG) and the 2017–2021 action plans for the PNG and for United Nations Security Council resolution No. 1325, which seek to encourage sectoral ministries to create gender units and to involve them in their sectoral planning and budgets to ensure effective ministerial programming and budgetary allocation for gender equity and equality. However, the Government indicates that it faces numerous challenges, including insufficient funds to implement the plans of action and the absence of coordination institutions. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to implement the action plans and the National Gender Policy.

Indigenous peoples. In its previous comment, the Committee urged the Government to take the necessary steps to: (1) ensure equal access for the Batwa people to education, vocational training and employment, including to enable them to exercise their traditional activities; (2) combat stereotypes and prejudice against this indigenous community; and (3) to promote tolerance among all sections of the population. The Committee also asked the Government to provide information on: (1) the impact of Act No. 1/07 of 15 July 2016 revising the Forestry Code, which provides that the rational and balanced management of forests is based, inter alia, on the principle of participation by the grassroots communities; and (2) the exercise of traditional activities by the Batwa on the land where they live. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (1) the cost of the schooling of Batwa pupils has been financed and that awareness-raising activities to encourage young Batwa to take up schooling have been carried out by various associations including Unite to Promote the Batwa (UNIPROBA); and (2) a secondary-level boarding school has been reserved exclusively for young Batwa (Gitega Province) and young Batwa have been helped to enter secondary education and university. The Government indicates that the measures taken to encourage adolescent mothers to return to school after pregnancy have not been welcomed by them. The Committee notes the information that young Batwa have received vocational training in car mechanics, carpentry, sewing, information technology, construction, etc. According to the Government, Act No. 1/07 of 15 July 2016 revising the Forestry Code has had a negative impact on the economic life of the Batwa people. They have lost an economic resource that enabled them to sell basketwork and traditional medicines based on wood and medicinal plants from the forest. Act No. 1/21 of 15 October 2013 issuing the Mining Code has also deprived the Batwa of access to clay to produce pottery to use or sell. To counter this problem, the Government has undertaken to mount forestry management projects in association with the Batwa people for the use of the forest under their control and subject to their permission. The Committee also notes that in its Beijing+25 report, the Government recognizes the Batwa community as the most marginalized group. It is for this reason that many legal, statutory and institutional mechanisms have been put in place so that the Batwa can participate fully in political, economic, social and cultural life and draw attention to their concerns. The Government refers, among the positive steps taken, to the distribution of land to the Batwa so that they can settle, and the training provided to Batwa community women from the Vyege locality, who are now able to build their own houses, or be employed on other construction sites. These training activities for Batwa women have also contributed to gender, social and sustainable development, by changing mentalities and improving social relations between the Batwa and other population groups, and by encouraging reflection on prejudice against the Batwa people. Taking into account the Government's assessment of the impact of the Forestry and Mining Codes on the ability of the Batwa to continue to practice their traditional occupations, the Committee requests the Government to: (i) intensify its efforts to ensure that indigenous peoples have the right to practice their traditional activities and retain their means of subsistence without discrimination; and (ii) provide detailed information on the forestry management projects developed in association with the indigenous peoples concerned and on the lands attributed to the Batwa.

General observation of 2018. With regard to the above issues, and in more general terms, the Committee would like to draw the Government's attention to its general observation on discrimination based on race, colour and national extraction which was adopted in 2018. In the general observation, the Committee notes with concern that discriminatory attitudes and stereotypes based on the race, colour or national extraction of men and women workers continue to hinder their participation in education, vocational training programmes and access to a wider range of employment opportunities, resulting in persisting occupational segregation and lower remuneration received for work of equal value. Furthermore, the Committee considers that it is necessary to adopt a comprehensive and coordinated approach to tackling the obstacles and barriers faced by persons in employment and occupation because of their race, colour or national extraction, and to promote equality of opportunity and treatment for all. Such an approach should include the adoption of interlocking measures aimed at addressing gaps in education, training and skills, providing unbiased vocational guidance, recognizing and validating the qualifications obtained abroad, and valuing and recognizing traditional knowledge and skills that may be relevant both to accessing and advancing in employment and to engaging in an occupation. The Committee also recalls that, in order to be effective, these measures must include concrete steps, such as laws, policies, programmes, mechanisms and participatory processes, remedies designed to address prejudices and stereotypes and to promote mutual understanding and tolerance among all sections of the population.

The Committee draws the Government's attention to its general observation of 2018 and requests the Government to provide information in response to the questions raised in that observation.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1970)

Previous comment

Articles 1(b) and 2(2)(a) of the Convention. Equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. Legislation. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it took account of the Committee's request "in the negotiation of texts currently under discussion". In view of its repeated previous requests, the Committee hopes that the Labour Code (section 61) will be modified in the near future to include the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value and requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this respect.

Articles 2(2)(c) and 4. Collective agreements. Cooperation with social partners. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, during the negotiation and elaboration of collective agreements, the Government representative on the committees in question makes certain that all discriminatory provisions, or those contrary to ratified texts, are removed. With regard to promoting the application of the principle of the Convention with the employers' and workers' organizations during wage fixing, the Committee notes that the Government is currently examining this point and will communicate the results of its reflection to the Committee. The Committee requests the Government to: (i) intensify its cooperation with the social partners to ensure that collective agreements, including those of the Cameroon Railway Company (CAMRAIL), mentioned in its previous comments, do not contain provisions that are discriminatory on the basis of sex and especially in respect of remuneration; and (ii) to supply extracts of the collective agreements that reflect the principle enshrined in the Convention. It also requests the Government to provide information on any proactive measures and follow-up measures taken to give effect to the principle of equal remuneration during the negotiation of collective agreements, such as, for example, the drafting of a standard clause on equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1988)

Previous comment

Articles 1(1)(a), 2 and 3(b) of the Convention. Definition and prohibition of discrimination. Legislation. National equality policy. Regarding the absence of provisions in the legislation that define and explicitly prohibit all forms of discrimination based on at least all of the grounds listed in the Convention in all aspects of employment and occupation, the Committee notes that the Government indicates in its report that: (1) it has taken legal, regulatory and collective agreement-derived measures to prohibit all forms of discrimination; and (2) it regularly takes action to combat discrimination related, for example, to HIV in enterprises, in collaboration with the health and safety committees. The Committee nonetheless notes with regret that despite its repeated requests, no measure has been taken to define and prohibit all forms of discrimination based on race, colour, sex, political opinion, religion, national extraction and social origin at all stages of employment and occupation in the labour legislation. In respect of the national equality policy, the Committee notes that the Government again refers to the national gender policy. Consequently, the Committee once again urges the Government, in collaboration with the employers' and workers' organizations, to take the necessary measures to: (i) include in the national legislation, particularly in the Labour Code, provisions defining and explicitly prohibiting direct and indirect discrimination based on at least all of the grounds listed in the Convention (race, colour, sex, religion, political opinion, national extraction and social origin) in employment and occupation, including at the time of recruitment; and (ii) formulate and implement an overall national equality policy which includes plans or programmes of action and specific measures to promote equality of opportunity and treatment irrespective of race, colour, religion, political opinion, national extraction or social origin. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on all measures taken in this respect and to communicate a copy of the relevant texts adopted, including any revised gender policy. In the absence of a reply from the Government, the Committee again requests it to provide information on the application in practice of section 242 of the Penal Code, which punishes any refusal of access to employment on the basis of race, religion, sex and medical status, including the number of complaints on this basis, and to specify the authorities responsible for enforcing the application of this provision (labour inspectors or others).

Articles 1(1)(a) and 3(c). Discrimination based on sex. Legislation. Noting that the Government reiterates its commitment to bringing all legislative and regulatory texts and texts derived from agreements into line with the provisions of the Convention, the Committee once again urges the Government to take specific measures to: (i) abrogate the provisions of section 223 of the Civil Code and of section 74(2) of Ordinance No. 81-02 which gives a husband the right to object to his wife having an occupation that is separate from that of her husband; and (ii) more generally, remove from the national legislation any provision that has the effect of nullifying or impairing equality of treatment for women in employment and occupation. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken in this regard and on progress made in the reform of the Civil Code to which the Government refers in a previous report.

Article 5. Special protection measures. Restrictions on women's employment. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it has taken due note of the Committee's request that it review Order No. 16/MLTS of 27 May 1969 establishing a list of work prohibited for women. In the absence of any change in this regard, the Committee can only reiterate its request to the Government to take steps to review Order No. 16/MLTS of 1969.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1966)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. Grounds of discrimination. The Committee notes with concern that the Labour Code has been awaiting adoption for many years. The Committee can only hope that the Government will soon be in a position to report on the adoption of the new Labour Code and requests it to ensure that it contains provisions explicitly prohibiting any direct or indirect discrimination based, as a minimum, on all the grounds enumerated in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention, including race, colour, national extraction and social origin, at all stages of employment and occupation. The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the Labour Code as soon as it has been adopted, and of any implementing texts with respect to non-discrimination and equality in employment and occupation.

Discrimination based on sex and equality of treatment between men and women. The Committee recalls that, in a previous comment, the Government acknowledged that section 9 of Ordinance No. 006/PR/84 of 1984, which gives the husband the right to object to his spouse's activities, is completely outdated and that it would take measures to repeal this provision, which no longer corresponds to the current situation. The Government also specified that occupational segregation between men and women is due, inter alia, to the high levels of illiteracy and social factors. The Committee previously requested the Government to take the necessary measures in this regard. However, it notes that the Government has confined itself to referring once again to articles 13, 14, 33, 38, 39 and 42 of the Constitution and section 369 of the Penal Code. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to formally repeal section 9 of the Ordinance of 1984 and to combat actively stereotypes and prejudices concerning the vocational capacities and aspirations of men and women. The Committee also requests the Government to take measures to raise awareness among parents and the population as a whole about the importance of girls and boys attending and remaining in school, and to promote the access of girls and women to a broader range of training courses and occupations, particularly those that are traditionally occupied by men. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken in this regard.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 110th Session, May–June 2022)

The Committee notes the discussion that took place in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (CAS) in June 2022 concerning the application of the Convention. The CAS deplored the use of all repressive measures against the Uyghur people, which has a discriminatory effect on their employment opportunities and treatment as a religious and ethnic minority in China, in addition to other violations of their fundamental rights. It expressed grave concern at the Government's efforts to impose "deradicalization" responsibilities on employers' and workers' organizations. The Conference Committee urged the Government to, in consultation with the social partners:

- immediately cease any discriminatory practices against the Uyghur population and any other ethnic minority groups, including internment or imprisonment on ethnic and religious grounds for deradicalization purposes;
- immediately cease the racial harassment of the Uyghur people, including physical, verbal or non-verbal conduct or other conduct based on their ethnicity and religion, which undermines their dignity and creates an intimidating, hostile or humiliating working environment;

- adopt national and regional policies with a view to eliminating all distinction, exclusion or preference which has the effect of nullifying or impairing equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation, particularly with regard to the Uyghur population;
- repeal provisions in the Xinjiang Uyghur Autonomous Region (Xinjiang) Regulation, and any other laws, regulations or other policies, that impose deradicalization duties on enterprises and trade unions that prevent enterprises and trade unions from playing their respective roles in promoting equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation without discrimination;
- amend national and regional policies with a view to ensuring that the activities of vocational guidance, vocational training and placement services serve the purpose of assisting ethnic and religious minorities in the development and use of their capabilities for work in their own best interests and in accordance with their own aspirations;
- amend national and regional regulatory provisions with a view to reorienting the mandate of vocational training and education centres from political re-education based on administrative detention;
- bring the existing legal framework on sexual harassment in the workplace fully into line with the Convention and ensure that victims of sexual harassment have effective access to judicial mechanisms and legal remedies; and
- amend the Labour Law and Employment Promotion Law so as to bring this legislation fully into line with the Convention.

The CAS recommended that the Government accept an ILO technical advisory mission to allow the ILO to assess the situation with the support of the ITUC and the International Organisation of Employers (IOE). The CAS requested the Government to submit a report to the Committee of Experts by 1 September 2022 with information on the application of the Convention in law and practice, in consultation with the social partners.

In its concluding statement to the CAS and in its report, the Government considered the conclusions of the CAS to be groundless and biased, resolutely rejecting the accusations of repression of the Uyghurs in the conclusions as false and the existence of discrimination and harassment of the Uyghurs as unfounded.

While the Government has indicated that it will give serious consideration to some of the comments made in the CAS and welcomed technical consultations to facilitate further understanding of the actual implementation of the Convention in China, it has not confirmed its acceptance of an ILO technical advisory mission to allow the ILO to assess the situation with the support of the ITUC and the IOE. The Committee notes that the Government requested the Office to hold technical discussions on the application of the Convention before the end of 2022. In this respect, a schedule of work has been established, and the first meeting was held in November.

Articles 1(1)(a), 2 and 3 of the Convention. Definition and prohibition of discrimination in employment and occupation. Prohibited grounds of discrimination. National Equality Policy. Legislation. The Committee notes that, in its written statement to the CAS, the Government states that China's laws, regulations and practices are fully in line with the principles of the Convention and that Xinjiang's subnational administrative regulations, departmental rules, and normative documents are all in line with the principles of national laws and conform to the principles and requirements of the Convention. In respect of vocational training, it indicates that the Labour Law (section 3) guarantees workers equal rights to training in vocational skills, while the revised Vocational Education Law (2022) provides that citizens have the right to receive vocational education in accordance with the law (section 5); that the State practices a system whereby workers receive the necessary vocational education prior to employment or assignment (section 11); and that the State supports the development of vocational education in former revolutionary base areas, ethnic minority areas, remote areas and underdeveloped areas, guaranteeing equal rights for women (section 10). In respect of other aspects of access to employment, the Government explains that China's Regulations on Employment Services and Employment Management guarantee workers equal employment rights in accordance with the law (section 4); that recruitment announcements by employing units must avoid discriminatory language (section 20); and that public employment service agencies are prohibited from releasing employment information that contains discriminatory content (section 58).

The Committee recalls that legal provisions providing for equality of opportunity and treatment, although important, have generally not proven to be sufficient to address specific cases of discrimination in employment and occupation. A more detailed legislative framework is also required. The Committee repeats its previous comments that there is a need for comprehensive legislation containing explicit provisions defining and prohibiting direct and indirect discrimination on at least all of the grounds set out in the Convention, and in all of the aspects of employment and occupation as set out in Article 1(3) of the Convention, in order to ensure the full application of the Convention.

The Committee therefore again urges the Government to include a clear and comprehensive definition of discrimination (both direct and indirect) in its labour legislation. With respect to vocational education, it asks the Government to clarify how compliance with the equal rights provisions in the Labour Law of 1994 and the revised Vocational Education Law (2022) is secured. With respect to the anti-discrimination legal provisions in force, the Committee also asks the Government to confirm that the Employment Promotion Law of 2007 prohibits discrimination based on colour, national extraction, social origin and political opinion even if such grounds are not explicitly mentioned, and to provide judicial interpretations or decisions to that effect.

Articles 1(1)(a), 3 and 4. Activities prejudicial to the security of the State. Allegations of discrimination based on race, religion, national extraction and social origin affecting ethnic and religious minorities in Xinjiang. Further to its previous comments and to the conclusions and grave concern expressed by the CAS, the Committee notes the call by the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD) on 24 November 2022 on China to immediately investigate all allegations of human rights violations in Xinjiang; to immediately release all individuals arbitrarily deprived of their liberty in Xinjiang, whether in vocational education and training centres (VETCs) or other detention facilities, and to provide relatives of those detained or disappeared with detailed information about their status and well-being. In this respect, and while being aware of its strong rejection by the Government, the Committee notes the finding of the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights in August 2022 that it is reasonable to conclude that a pattern of large-scale arbitrary detention occurred in vocational education and training facilities, at least during 2017 to 2019, affecting a significant proportion of the Uyghur and other predominantly Muslim ethnic minority community in Xinjiang (Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR), Assessment of human rights concerns in the Xinjiang Uyghur Autonomous Region, 31 August 2022).

The Government indicates that in response to the needs of workers of all ethnic groups, Xinjiang authorities have taken measures for the implementation of the Employment Promotion Law of the People's Republic of China in Xinjiang. The Xinjiang 14th Five-Year Plan (2021–2025) for Employment Promotion provides a solid institutional guarantee for economic development as well as support for flexible employment and for groups facing difficulties in finding employment, so that workers can fully enjoy equal rights and opportunities in employment and occupation. Employment of all ethnic groups in Xinjiang increased by 19.5 per cent between 2014 and 2020. Women from Uyghur and other ethnic minorities formed the vast majority of newly employed women, thus realizing the transition from having low education and skills to gaining employment, improved living standards and economic autonomy.

The Government further reports that deradicalization measures by the Chinese Government target a very small number of people and intend to protect the legitimate rights and interests of people of all ethnic groups, including the vast majority of Uyghur people. The Xinjiang government had taken these deradicalization measures under special circumstances and in accordance with the law, with the objective of preventing acts of terror and educating and saving a small number of people under the influence of religious extremism or guilty of minor offences or violations of the law. Education and training centres established in accordance with the law in Xinjiang combated terrorism and pursued deradicalization in essentially the same way as countries around the world administered deradicalization centres, community corrections, transformation and disengagement programmes. The basic human rights of people of all ethnic groups, such as the right to life, health and development, had been protected to the greatest extent possible, and the sense of security of the people of all ethnic groups had been greatly improved as no violent terrorist incidents had occurred for six consecutive years. Allegations of political detention were a malicious smear.

The Government indicates that deradicalization efforts are aimed at promoting the reintegration of people who have engaged in extremist behaviour and that the role of trade unions and enterprises in this regard includes legal advocacy; educating and guiding workers to abide by the law; maintaining unity and harmony; opposing hate and extremist speech and opposing engaging in unlawful activity.

The Committee takes due note of the information provided by the Government as well as policy and regulatory directions set out in official documents. In respect of Xinjiang's 14th Five-Year Plan (2021–2025), it also notes that the Plan seeks to systematize the rule of law in countering terrorism and maintaining stability, with a view to maximizing unity and cohesion among the people and relying on ideological education, legal awareness-raising, psychological counselling and conflict resolution.

Further to the theme of promoting ethnic harmony in Xinjiang, the Committee also notes the Government's white paper on "Historical Matters Concerning Xinjiang" (2019), which expresses the view that religions could only be accommodated within Chinese society by adapting themselves to the Chinese context. Secular, modern and civilized ways of life had to be encouraged and backward and outdated conventions and customs abandoned. Only the fusion of religious doctrines with Chinese culture could lead religions, including Islam, onto the Chinese path of development. In that context, the Committee notes the Government's five-year plans for the sinification of Islam, Christianity and Catholicism (all for the period 2018–22) stating objectives such as "deepening patriotism, expressing faith using Chinese culture and strengthening the theological foundation of sinification".

The Committee further notes that the Xinjiang Regulation on Deradicalization (XRD) contains an open-ended list of "primary expressions of radicalization", including "wearing, or compelling others to wear, burqas with face coverings", "spreading religious fanaticism through irregular beards or name selection", and "generalizing the concept of halal".

Having considered the information at its disposal, the Committee recalls its long-held view that the elimination of distinctions in employment, occupation and education depends on a general context of equality of opportunity and treatment without which the full application of the Convention remains illusory. This general context will depend on respect for the rule of law and the development of a climate of tolerance which fully respects voluntary self-identification and actively supports the resilience of ethnic, religious and linguistic identity in the face of a dominant culture, rather than seeking to assimilate such identity into a homogeneous society. Without such general context, the coexistence between minorities and the majority, or even among the various minorities themselves, can be fraught with conflict.

The Committee is bound to note that the policy orientations repeatedly expressed by the Government in recent white papers, its plans for the sinification of Islam and other religions and regulatory documents lend credibility to allegations of its active pursuit of a policy seeking to assimilate ethnic and religious minorities within the dominant ethnic group thus compromising the success of a policy to effectively eliminate discrimination in employment and occupation. The fundamental objective of such policy, enshrined in the ILO Constitution, must remain that "all human beings, irrespective of race, creed or sex, have the right to pursue both their material well-being and their spiritual development in conditions of freedom and dignity, of economic security and equal opportunity”.

As regards the policy's orientation towards deradicalization and counter-terrorism, the Committee recalls that Article 4 of the Convention permits differential treatment of an individual who is justifiably suspected of, or engaged in, activities prejudicial to the security of the State, provided that the individual concerned shall have the right to appeal to a competent body established in accordance with national practice. The Committee is, therefore, of the view that ensuring a counter-terrorism response compliant with the Convention requires a focus on individuals who are justifiably suspected of, or engaged in, activities prejudicial to the security of the State while avoiding stereotypes potentially casting groups identified by ethnic and religious traits in a negative light. A compliant response would not permit the use of labour or vocational education and training as a means of altering the political opinion and religious practice of individuals or groups protected by the Convention in the absence of violent conduct or conduct demonstrably aimed at propagating violence. While noting the Government's assurances that its deradicalization efforts affect a very small number of people, the Committee notes with regret not being offered any further details to assess the scope and the impact of such efforts. The open-ended definition of extremism in the XRD is supported by indicators (“primary expressions of radicalization”) that might otherwise be construed as matters of personal choice in relation to religious practice. Such a regulatory approach to deradicalization may amount to racial and religious profiling and give rise to a focus on ethnic and religious minorities through the lens of “extremism”. The extensive digital and personal surveillance apparatus in Xinjiang and the regulatory potential for administrative detention of suspected extremists, whether for the purpose of re-education or correction of minor offences that do not constitute a crime, further create a discriminatory climate in which the stated equal rights and opportunities in employment and occupation of ethnic and religious minorities cannot be effectively promoted or fully realized.

In respect of the role of trade unions and employers' organizations, the Committee recalls that the Convention requires the Government to seek the cooperation of employers' and workers' organizations and other appropriate bodies but that the purpose of such cooperation, rather than enlisting social partners in public deradicalization efforts should be to promote the acceptance and observance of a policy designed to promote equality of opportunity and treatment in respect of employment and occupation. Guidance in respect of the cooperation to be sought may be found in the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Recommendation, 1958 (No. 111). Paragraph 2(d) of the Recommendation recommends organizations to abstain from obstructing or interfering with employers in their pursuit of the principle of non-discrimination, while encouraging employers' and workers' organizations not to practise or countenance discrimination in respect of admission, retention of membership or participation in their affairs.

Having duly considered the information provided by the Government, the discussions in the Conference Committee, ITUC observations and the findings of UN bodies, the Committee must reiterate its deep concern in respect of the serious allegations of discrimination against ethnic and religious minorities in Xinjiang, which appears to be based on policy directions expressed in numerous national and regional policy and regulatory documents. The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to: (i) review its national and regional policies with a view to eliminating all distinction, exclusion or preference which has the effect of nullifying or impairing equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation; (ii) repeal provisions in the Xinjiang Uyghur Autonomous Region (Xinjiang) Regulation that impose deradicalization obligations on enterprises and trade unions and prevent enterprises and trade unions from playing their respective roles in promoting equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation without discrimination based on race, national extraction, religion or political opinion; (iii) revise national and regional policies with a view to ensuring that the activities of vocational guidance, vocational training and placement services serve the purpose of assisting ethnic and religious minorities in the development and use of their capabilities for work in their own best interests and in accordance with their own aspirations, account being taken of the needs of society; (iv) amend national and regional regulatory provisions with a view to reorienting the mandate of vocational training and education centres from deradicalization based on ethnic and religious stereotypes and ideological education based on administrative detention towards the purpose set out in (iii); (v) provide detailed information on the allegedly small number of persons affected by the Government's deradicalization policy; the conditions under which they are subject to administrative detention and any programmes related to training, employment or occupation; and the conditions under which they are released as it affects their access to the labour market; (vi) provide information on the measures taken to ensure observance of the policy to promote equality of opportunity and treatment in vocational training activities carried out in Xinjiang's vocational training and education centres; and (vii) provide information on the measures taken to ensure observance of the policy to promote equality of opportunity and treatment for the Uyghurs and other ethnic minority groups when seeking to access employment outside the Xinjiang Autonomous Region.

Articles 1(1)(a) and 3(c). Discrimination based on sex. Sexual harassment. In response to the Committee's previous comments, the Government expresses the view that victims of sexual harassment can effectively obtain legal support and relief through judicial channels. Section 1010 of the Civil Code identifies the elements constituting sexual harassment; establishes civil liability for sexual harassment; and requires organizations to set up preventive mechanisms and provide timely remedies. The All-China Federation of Trade Unions and the China Enterprise Confederation jointly developed a Guidebook for Eliminating Sexual Harassment in the Workplace with technical assistance from the Office.

In the course of the CAS discussion, it was acknowledged that the new Civil Code covers sexual harassment of both men and women. Concern was expressed, however, that the law did not fully define sexual harassment; failed to prohibit both quid pro quo and hostile work environment sexual harassment in all aspects of employment and occupation, including vocational training and job placement; and that equal access to legal remedies, including for ethnic and religious minorities, was unclear in the absence of available data. Figures cited in the course of the discussion suggest that because alleged victims bear the burden of proof, only a small percentage of the lawsuits filed result in a conviction of the alleged perpetrator and rarely in compensation for the victim.

The Committee welcomes the protection against sexual harassment which section 1010 seeks to provide to both men and women. Experience suggests that the burden of proving discrimination, including sexual harassment, is often harder to meet, to the point of constituting an insurmountable obstacle to establishing liability and ensuring an appropriate remedy. This would be particularly so in relationships marked by an imbalance of power and if there are no witnesses, which is often the case. To prevent dissuading victims from seeking redress and correct a situation that could otherwise result in inequality, the Committee has consistently recommended considering procedural measures such as shifting or reversing the burden of proof. The Committee notes in this regard the Violence and Harassment Recommendation, 2019 (No. 206), which encourages complaint and dispute resolution mechanisms for gender-based violence and harassment to shift the burden of proof in proceedings other than criminal proceedings. The Committee is also of the view that a procedural requirement for the alleged victim to present physical evidence corroborating oral testimony would not be appropriate in cases of sexual harassment that do not amount to physical assault or do not imply physical contact.

The Committee asks the Government: (i) to include a clear and comprehensive definition of sexual harassment to ensure that it covers both quid pro quo and hostile work environment harassment; offers protection in vocational education, vocational training, access to employment, conditions of employment and performing work in any occupation; and protects workers outside formal employment relationships; (ii) to consider making procedural adjustments ensuring easy access to appropriate and effective remedies and safe, fair and effective reporting and dispute resolution mechanisms and procedures in sexual harassment cases; and (iii) to continue to provide information on any cases of sexual harassment dealt with by the courts and the competent authorities, including on their outcome (sanctions imposed, court cases won as a proportion of lawsuits filed and remedies granted).

The Committee understands that the Law on the Protection of the Rights and Interests of Women was amended on 30 October 2022. Noting that the amended Law contains several provisions relevant to equality of opportunity and treatment for men and women, including sexual harassment, the Committee intends to examine the Law on the next occasion and asks the Government to provide information on its application.

Equality of opportunity and treatment for ethnic and religious minorities, including in the civil service. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted the continuation of workforce capacity-building in ethnic areas (including Inner Mongolia, Guangxi, Yunnan, Qinghai, Tibet, Guizhou, Ningxia, and Xinjiang) through special training programmes for ethnic talents, the recruitment of ethnic civil servants nationwide and capacity-building of civil servants in ethnic areas, including their active engagement in bilingual programmes.

In its statement to the CAS, the Government indicated that it was giving full play to the role of markets in regulating employment and promoting the free movement of workers between regions, industries and enterprises, causing urban employment to expand by 470,000 jobs annually between 2014 and 2020. It provided an example of a worker who had successfully challenged discrimination by his employer based on geographical origin winning compensation for emotional distress as well as an oral and written apology by his employer.

The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken, and their results, to promote equality of opportunity and treatment for ethnic and religious minorities within China, including information on the current employment situation of various ethnic and religious minorities inside and outside the autonomous regions as well as employment data disaggregated by sex and ethnicity in the civil service.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Colombia

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1963)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the National Employers Association of Colombia (ANDI), and those of the Confederation of Workers of Colombia (CTC), the Single Confederation of Workers of Colombia (CUT) and the General Confederation of Workers (CGT), communicated with the Government's 2022 report. The Committee also notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), of 31 August 2022, in which it refers to the current legislative framework and various judicial decisions in the country.

Articles 1–4 of the Convention. Assessing and addressing the gender pay gap and its underlying causes, including occupational segregation. The Committee welcomes the statistical data provided by the Government in its 2018 and 2020 reports, which show that: (1) the gender income gap fell from 17.2 per cent in 2017 to 15.4 per cent in 2019, and to 8.7 per cent in 2021; (2) between 2015 and 2021, the economic activities in which most employed women work have not changed, and include commerce, healthcare and education; and (3) according to data for the years 2014 to 2021, the higher the educational level of women, the higher their labour market integration and the lower the wage gap. It further notes the Government's explanation in its report that the gender wage gap must be understood as a multi-causal phenomenon that is not exclusively reduced to socio-economic variables or the work itself and is closely related to historical exclusions suffered by women in the past. The Committee notes that, in their observations the CGT, CTC and CUT provide various types of statistical data and indicate that: (1) in the context of the COVID-19 pandemic, women with the lowest levels of income from work were those most affected by the loss of their jobs; and (2) rural and migrant women, and those over 55 years of age, with lower educational levels, those in free relationships, or who are separated or divorced, living with minors in the household and those who recognize themselves as being indigenous are most affected by the wage gap.

With reference to measures to address the pay gap, the Committee notes the information provided by the Government on: (1) the Gender Parity Initiative, which seeks to increase the participation of women in the labour market and in leadership roles, and to reduce the wage gap; and (2) the preparation, within the context of the cooperation between Latin America and the European Union (EUROSOCIAL+), of an analytical study of gender wage gaps and of a technical good practice tool for gender equity in the workplace, to reduce wage gaps and gender bias. The CGT, CTC and CUT indicate in their observations that, since the adoption of Act No. 1496 in 2011, it is not known whether affirmative action has been taken in this regard with a positive outcome. The Committee also notes that the Government, and the IOE in its observations, recall the implementation of the EQUIPARES certification programme, which requires enterprises to establish objective methods for the determination of remuneration. The Committee requests the Government to take measures to reduce the persistent occupational segregation between men and women, and in particular to broaden the labour market opportunities of women and their capacity to progress and obtain promotion in their respective occupations. The Committee also requests the Government to provide detailed information on any measures adopted and on their impact, including measures adopted within the context of the Gender Parity Initiative and EUROSOCIAL+ cooperation. Noting the significant reduction of the gender income gap in 2021 as well as the economic context due to the pandemic, in particular the loss of jobs by women, the Committee requests the Government to continue to provide data on the evolution of the gender pay gap over the years and to provide a detailed analysis of such data, taking into account changes in the labour force.

Articles 1(b) and 2(2)(a). Equal remuneration for work of equal value. Legislation. With reference to the amendment of Act No. 1496 of 2011, the terms of which are more restrictive than the principle of the Convention, the Committee notes the Government's indication that it is working to amend the Act before adopting implementing regulations, with a view to facilitating understanding and the application of the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value. The Committee hopes that the Government will take the necessary measures as soon as possible to make progress with the amendment of Act No. 1496 with a view to giving full legislative expression to the principle of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1969)

The Committee notes the observations of the National Employers Association of Colombia (ANDI), and those of the Confederation of Workers of Colombia (CTC), the Single Confederation of Workers of Colombia (CUT) and the General Confederation of Workers (CGT), communicated with the Government's 2022 report. The Committee also notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), of 31 August 2022, relating to the current legislative framework on gender equality at work and policies to promote youth employment.

Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. Discrimination on the basis of sex. Sexual harassment. The Committee observes that, according to the Government's indications in its 2018 report, the Strategic Plan for the Prevention of Labour and Sexual Harassment at Work has been developed and implemented, certain elements of which had already been brought to the attention of the Committee, such as the survey of perceptions of sexual harassment, a protocol for action agreed with the Office of the Public Prosecutor and the training of labour inspectors. The Committee also notes the adoption of capacity-building and awareness-raising measures for enterprises and other actors in the world of work, including through the Equipares equality label. In addition, the Committee notes the reference by the Government in its 2022 report to the Gender Equality Recognition Programme (PRIG Equipares Rural) intended for associations and cooperatives in the rural sector, the objectives of which include the promotion of a working environment free from discrimination and violence. However, the Committee regrets to note that section 3 of Act No. 1010 of 2006 on labour harassment, which provides for mitigating circumstances, is still in force. The Committee also observes that: (1) the information provided by the Government on the number of complaints of sexual harassment does not indicate the number of cases of sexual harassment; (2) Act No. 1010 defines ill-treatment at work as a form of workplace abuse which includes any act of violence against sexual freedom, but does not contain a clear and explicit definition of sexual harassment (either quid pro quo or hostile working environment harassment); and (3) in section 210-A of the Penal Code, sexual harassment is described as behaviour through which a person, taking advantage, inter alia, of their position at work, harasses, pursues, bullies or stalks another person for unwanted sexual purposes for the benefit of themselves or another person. The Committee requests the Government to: (i) indicate the manner in which Act No. 1010 of 2006 guarantees in practice adequate protection against sexual harassment, including both quid pro quo and a hostile working environment; (ii) if such protection does not exist, to take measures to provide explicitly for specific protection; (iii) report the penalties imposed under the Act and the measures envisaged to ensure that such penalties are effective and dissuasive; and (iv) provide information on the number of cases of work-related sexual harassment examined by the labour inspection services and by administrative and judicial bodies, the penalties imposed and the compensation granted.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Congo

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1999)

Previous comment

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report, due since 2018, has not been received. In light of its urgent appeal launched to the Government in 2021, the Committee proceeds with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal.

Articles 1 and 2(2)(a) of the Convention. Equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. Legislation. For a number of years, the Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to the need to amend sections 56(7) and 80(1) of the Labour Code, which limit the application of the principle of equal remuneration to "equal work" (section 56(7)) or "equal working conditions, qualifications and output" (section 80(1)), and do not fully reflect the concept of "work of equal value" set out in the Convention. It previously noted the Government's repeated statement that amendments of sections 56(7) and 80(1) of the Labour Code were foreseen and requested the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that the principle set out in the Convention was incorporated in the Labour Code. The Committee notes that a preliminary draft Labour Code is being prepared and was transmitted to the ILO in February 2022. It also notes, from the information available on the website of the Ministry of Public Service, Labour and Social Security, that it is expected that this preliminary draft Labour Code would be soon submitted to the National Consultative Labour Commission for its prior opinion, before being sent to the General Secretariat of the Government for its approval. The Committee notes that section 20 of the preliminary draft Labour Code provides that "no clause of an employment contract may reserve the benefit of a measure to a worker in consideration of his or her sex, nor unequal remuneration for the same work or work of equal value". The Committee welcomes the explicit reference made to the concept of “work of equal value” in the preliminary draft Labour Code. It observes, however, that section 20, which refers to “same work or work of equal value”, read together with sections 195(10) and 246 of the preliminary draft Labour Code, which only refer to “equal work” or “equal working conditions, qualifications and output”, may lead to a confusing and restrictive interpretation of the concept of “work of equal value”. The Committee recalls that this concept permits a broad scope of comparison that includes, but is not limited to, equal remuneration for “equal”, “the same” or “similar” work, and also encompasses work that is of an entirely different nature, which is nevertheless of equal value. It further recalls that comparing the relative value of jobs in occupations which may involve different types of skills, efforts, responsibilities or working conditions, but which are nevertheless of equal value overall, is essential in order to eliminate pay discrimination resulting from the failure to recognize the value of work performed by women and men (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 672–675). Recalling that, in its Decent Work Country Programme (DWCP) for 2018–22, the Government defines as a priority action to bring its labour legislation into line with international labour standards, the Committee requests the Government to: (i) take the necessary steps to give full legislative expression to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, in particular by aligning sections 195(10) and 246 of the preliminary draft Labour Code with section 20 which provides for equal remuneration for the “same work or work of equal value”; and (ii) consider the possibility of including in the preliminary draft Labour Code an explicit reference to the use of appropriate techniques for objective job evaluation to determine the value of jobs, comparing factors such as skills and qualifications, effort, responsibilities and working conditions.

The Committee requests the Government to provide information on: (i) any progress made in that regard; (ii) any proactive measures taken to raise awareness of the principle of “equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value” among workers, employers and their organizations, as well as among law enforcement officials; and (iii) the number, nature and outcome of any cases of pay inequality between men and women dealt with by the labour inspectors, the courts or any other competent authority.

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government’s report, which has been due since 2018, has not been received. In light of the urgent appeal that it made to the Government in 2021, the Committee is proceeding with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal.

Articles 1 to 3 of the Convention. Protection against discrimination. Legislation. For many years, the Committee has been emphasizing the shortcomings of the Labour Code and the General Civil Service Regulations regarding the protection of workers against discrimination, as these texts do not cover all of the grounds of discrimination and all of the aspects of employment and occupation set out in the Convention. The Committee notes the adoption of the new Constitution on 25 October 2015, articles 15 and 17 of which provide, respectively, that “no one shall be favoured or disadvantaged by reason of their family or ethnic origin, social condition, political, religious, philosophical or other convictions”, which therefore reduces the previous list of grounds of discrimination prohibited by the Constitution, and that “women shall have the same rights as men”. It observes that the previous Constitution (of 20 January 2002) explicitly prohibited “any discrimination on grounds of origin, social or material situation, racial, ethnic or departmental background, sex, education, language, religion, philosophy or place of residence” and that it also provided that “women shall have the same rights as men”. The Committee also notes that a preliminary draft of the Labour Code has been prepared, that it is currently under examination and that it was sent to the ILO in February 2022. The preliminary draft of the Labour Code sent to the ILO provides that “any discrimination or exclusion based on grounds related to race, colour, sex, trade union membership, religion, ethnic origin, political or mutual opinions, family name, place of residence, state of health or disability, family situation or pregnancy, nationality or social origin, and physical appearance, are prejudicial to the principles of the labour legislation” and that “no employer may therefore make the recruitment of personnel subject to conditions relating to these circumstances”. The Committee welcomes these provisions, which extend the list of prohibited grounds of discrimination and therefore constitute real progress in relation to the provisions of the Labour Code that is currently in force. However, it notes certain gaps, such as the absence of a definition and explicit prohibition of discrimination (both direct and indirect), the absence of a reference to discrimination on grounds of “national extraction” (which covers distinctions based on the place of birth and foreign extraction or origin of persons) and of a scope of application of the anti-discriminatory provisions not explicitly covering employment and occupation, as set out in Article 1(3) of the Convention.

With reference to the public sector, the Committee recalls that the General Public Service Regulations prohibit any distinction between men and women in relation to their general application and any discrimination on the basis of family situation in relation to access to employment (sections 200 and 201). In this regard, it notes the indication on the website of the Ministry of the Civil Service, Labour and Social Security of the Republic of the Congo that “progress towards a new legal framework for the public service, to take into account the many changes that have transformed the public sphere, is a major concern for the Government”. It is also indicated that “a preliminary draft of the Bill issuing the General Public Service Regulations was validated by the National Labour Advisory Commission at its ordinary session on 9 October 2020”. In light of the above, the Committee urges the Government to ensure that the future Labour Code and General Public Service Regulations, which are currently being revised, contain provisions defining and explicitly prohibiting any direct or indirect discrimination on, as a minimum, the seven grounds enumerated in the Convention (namely, race, colour, sex, religion, political opinion, national extraction and social origin), as well as on any other grounds that the Government considers it appropriate to include, in all aspects of employment and occupation, that is not only in relation to access to vocational training, employment and the various occupations, but also all terms and conditions of employment (working time, remuneration, conditions governing promotion and termination of employment, and so on). The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this legislative process and in the adoption of the texts in question and hopes that it will soon be able to report progress. The Government is requested to provide copies of the texts when they have been adopted.

Article 1(1)(a). Discrimination based on sex. Sexual harassment. The Committee recalls that in its previous report the Government indicated that the preliminary draft of the Bill to amend and supplement certain provisions of the Labour Code contained measures to combat sexual harassment. The Committee notes that, in contrast with the current Labour Code, the preliminary draft of the Labour Code recently provided to the Office contains provisions explicitly prohibiting sexual harassment, which is defined as “repeated remarks or behaviour with a sexual connotation with the real or apparent aim of obtaining an act of a sexual nature, whether for the offender or for another person”. The preliminary draft text also provides that employers shall take measures to prevent, inter alia, sexual harassment. The Committee welcomes these provisions, which constitute genuine progress in preventing and combating sexual harassment. However, it observes that these provisions only cover quid pro quo sexual harassment and require “repeated remarks or behaviour”, and that the aspect of a hostile working environment is covered by the definition of moral harassment. The Committee considers that these limitations could have the effect of limiting protection against sexual harassment. The Committee also notes that, in its concluding observations, the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) recommends the Congo to continue to “strengthen the efforts of the National Statistical Institute to ensure an effective national system for the collection of data, disaggregated by age and relationship of the victim with the offender, on gender-based violence and cases of sexual harassment, both in school and at work, against women and girls" (CEDAW/C/COG/CO/7, 14 November 2018, paragraph 27). Lastly, the Committee notes the Government's indication, in its national report to the United Nations Human Rights Council in the context of the universal periodic review, that the provisions of the draft Criminal Code cover, among others, the criminalization of trespass on domestic premises, violations of the confidentiality of correspondence and sexual harassment (A/HRC/WG.6/31/COG/1, 14 September 2018, paragraph 17). The Committee requests the Government to ensure that the future Labour Code contains provisions that: (i) define and explicitly prohibit both quid pro quo and hostile, intimidating or offensive working environment sexual harassment; (ii) do not require remarks or behaviour to be repeated to constitute sexual harassment; and (iii) envisage the adoption of prevention measures by employers and protection against reprisals for victims and penalties for offenders. The Committee also requests the Government to: (i) take measures at the national and local levels, in collaboration with workers' and employers' organizations, to prevent and eliminate sexual harassment, such as awareness-raising measures for employers, workers and education personnel, as well as labour inspectors, lawyers and judges; and (ii) establish information and complaint procedures that take into account the sensitive nature of the subject with a view to bringing an end to these practices and enabling victims to assert their rights without losing their jobs.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Costa Rica

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1960)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Costa Rican Federation of Chambers and Associations of Private Enterprise (UCCAEP), communicated with the Government report.

Articles 1(b) and 2(2)(a) of the Convention. Equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. Legislation. The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that: (1) Act No. 9677 of 2019 amends Act No. 7142 on promoting social equality for women, and that section 14, as amended, establishes that "[w]omen shall have the right to equal wages to men, in both the private and public sectors, for work of equal value for the same employer, whether it concerns the same position or different positions of equal value, or functions that are equivalent or equivalent to a reasonable degree"; (2) section 167 of the Labour Code and Act No. 9677 are understood to be interrelated and complementary, and the amendment of section 167 of the Labour Code is currently before the Legislative Assembly (draft Act No. 22522) for examination. The Committee notes the observations of the UCCAEP, that the amendment proposed in draft Act No. 22522 could result in legal uncertainty by failing to establish objective parameters for determining whether the tasks and functions performed are of equal value. While welcoming the Government's efforts, the Committee wishes to recall that the principle of the Convention is not limited to comparisons between men and women in the same establishment or enterprise but allows for a much broader comparison to be made between jobs performed by men and women in different places or enterprises or for different employers (2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 697). The Committee requests the Government to take measures to ensure that the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value allows comparison between work performed for different employers. It further asks the Government to report on: (i) the amendment process for section 167 of the Labour Code; and (ii) how it envisages the process of objective evaluation of jobs in different sectors for the effective application of the principle of the Convention.

Articles 1–4. Gender pay gap and occupational segregation. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government, that: (1) Costa Rica has joined the Equal Pay International Coalition (EPIC), and within that framework has requested ILO technical assistance to establish a method to measure the pay gap; (2) Act No. 9677 created the Inter-institutional Commission on Wage Equality for Men and Women and provides for the incorporation of the wage equality indicator into the National Statistics and Census Institute labour market studies in order to periodically evaluate the reasons for the wage gap between men and women and establish appropriate measures; (3) the gender perspective will be included in the labour market studies used to define occupational profiles, in order to classify the latter and place them correctly within the structure of the Decree on Minimum Wages; (4) the Wages Council applied additional increments to the minimum wage for women domestic workers, compared with that paid for unskilled workers, reducing the gap between the minimum wage paid to both groups from 31.92 per cent in 2014 to 24.23 per cent in 2022; (5) the Gender Equality Label is still functioning. The Committee also notes the observations of the UCCAEP that the Gender Equality Labels are burdensome, especially for micro, small and medium-sized enterprises. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the measures adopted to reduce the pay gap between men and women, and to provide statistical information making possible an evaluation of progress achieved. The Committee also requests information on the specific measures adopted or envisaged to address occupational segregation.

The Committee recalls that, in its previous observation, it had noted the Government's indication that the National Wage Council had agreed on a tripartite basis to amend the proposed list of minimum wages to incorporate inclusive terminology and a gender focus, without confusing activities with occupations. It observes however that the list of minimum wages for 2022 still maintains gender stereotypes by using the denomination of occupations with gender connotations (for instance, the Spanish terms "cerrajero" (locksmith), "conductor" (driver), "operario en construcción" (construction worker), "limpiador de piscinas" (swimming pool cleaner), "costurera" (tailor), "empleada doméstica" (domestic worker) and "secretaria" (secretary)). The Committee therefore once again encourages the Government to amend the denomination of occupations and employment in the list of minimum wages to eliminate gender connotations and use gender-neutral terminology.

Application in practice. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government on the number of cases of wage discrimination identified by the National Directorate of Labour Inspection (DNI), disaggregated by region and sector. The Government also highlights certain measures to strengthen the capacity of the inspection service, such as: (1) the elaboration of inspection guidelines including a gender focus; (2) the inclusion of 18 gender-related violations in the Catalogue of Violations; and (3) the training of a team of women inspectors specialized in gender issues. The Committee also notes the draft Act to amend section 69(a) of the Labour Code (file No. 21170), which seeks to place an obligation on employers to report on wage gaps between men and women; and provides penalties for wage discrimination based on gender. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on: (i) the manner in which the gender-focused tools adopted address the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value; and (ii) the cases identified and complaints received of wage discrimination, as well as any penalties imposed, and remedies granted.

Côte d'Ivoire

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1961)

Previous comment

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Protection against discrimination and promotion of equality. Public service. The Committee recalls that section 14(1) of Act No. 92-570 of 11 September 1992 issuing the General Public Service Regulations, the reform of which, it noted, was in progress, prohibits any distinction being made between men and women only during recruitment and, under section 14(2), establishes that “specific arrangements may be made, on account of physical fitness requirements or constraints inherent in certain functions ... to reserve access [to the public service] for candidates of one or other sex”. The Committee notes that, according to the information available on the Government website, the Council of Ministers adopted, on 9 November 2022, a bill issuing general public service regulations. The Committee firmly hopes that the Bill issuing general public service regulations will include provisions that: (i) define and prohibit any direct or indirect discrimination made at least on the basis of race, colour, sex, religion, political opinion, national extraction and social origin, at any stage of employment (including in the conditions of employment); and (ii) limit the cases of access reserved for one or the other sex to the conditions inherent to the position in question. The Committee requests the Government to ensure that equality of opportunity and treatment without any distinction on the basis of the aforementioned grounds is one of the specific objectives of the public service reform, and to implement appropriate mechanisms for the prevention of discrimination and the handling of complaints. The Government is requested to provide a copy of the regulations as soon as they enter into force.

Article 1(1)(a). Private sector. Prohibited grounds of discrimination. Legislation. Further to its previous comments, the Committee welcomes the adoption of Act No. 2019-574 of 26 June 2019 on the Criminal Code, and Act No. 2021-893 of 21 December 2021, which amends, inter alia, sections 226, 227 and 228 of the Criminal Code. Section 226, which also defines racism, xenophobia and tribalism, defines discrimination as “any distinction, exclusion, restriction or preference based on, inter alia, national or ethnic origin, race, colour, descent, sex, marital status, pregnancy, physical appearance, vulnerability resulting from an apparent or known economic situation, surname, place of residence, state of health, disability, morals, age, political, religious or philosophical opinions, or trade union activities, which has the purpose or effect of nullifying or impairing the recognition, enjoyment or exercise, on an equal footing, of human rights and fundamental freedoms in the political, economic, social, cultural or any other field of public life”. Section 227 establishes the penalties applicable in cases of discrimination (a prison sentence of one to two years, and a fine of between 500,000 and 2,000,000 CFA francs (XOF)) and, more specifically, aggravated penalties in cases of discrimination such as: (1) “hindering the normal exercise of any economic activity”; (2) “refusing to hire, sanction or dismiss a person”; (3) “making an offer of employment, an application for an internship or a period of work experience in an enterprise subject to a condition based on one of the [discrimination criteria]”; and (4) “refusing to accept a person for one of the internships provided for by the Labour Code”. Lastly, section 228 provides for all possible exceptions (such as measures concerning foreign nationals, positive measures and essential and specific professional requirements).

The Committee observes, however, that criminal provisions are not completely adequate in discrimination cases because, inter alia, they do not always provide a remedy to the victim and are very unlikely to cover all forms of conduct that amount to sexual harassment. It notes that the Government has not amended section 4 of the Labour Code, which lists the grounds that an employer may not take into consideration in making decisions, and which omits colour from that list. The Committee requests the Government to, during the next reform of the Labour Code, take measures to incorporate: (i) a reference to colour in section 4; and (ii) an express definition and prohibition of any direct or indirect discrimination at any stage of employment. It also requests the Government to take measures to disseminate the provisions of articles 226, 227 and 228 of the Criminal Code on discrimination to employers, workers and their respective organizations. The Government is requested to provide information on their application in practice in the public and private sector, indicating the conditions of proof applicable, and giving examples of cases of discrimination handled (section 226) and exceptions (section 228) applied by labour inspectors or the courts.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Croatia

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1991)

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. Gender equality and promotion of women's access to employment and occupation. In its previous comment, the Committee asked the Government to provide information on the measures taken to promote women's access to a wider range of jobs and to give them a wider choice of educational and vocational opportunities. The Committee also asked the Government for details of the number and proportion of female civil servants and civil service employees in posts of responsibility. The Committee notes the Government's reference to the National Employment Promotion Plan (NEEP) 2011–12, which was extended to 2013, and the fact that one of its priorities was the improvement of the employability of women. Measures in this plan included the revision of existing labour market policies in order to foster the labour market participation of women with few qualifications and to provide educational and training programmes adapted to the needs and circumstances of women (especially those with few skills) who are returning to the labour market. The Government indicates that in 2012, 36 per cent of new entrants to educational programmes (for unemployed persons) were women. That year, vocational training was introduced in the form of work-based training (occupational training without commencing employment) which, according to the Government, allows unemployed persons to gain professional experience in the occupational sector for which they were trained. In 2012, 5,456 persons benefited from this (72 per cent were women) and 14,445 new participants joined the programme (71 per cent women). The Committee notes the Government's statement that the Croatian Employment Service (HZZ) implemented a project entitled "Women in the Labour Market" in order to reduce unemployment and contribute to the elimination of all forms of discrimination against women in the labour market, but that it does not specify the time frame for the project. The Government also indicates that, in February 2012, a "Palette of new active employment policy measures for women who are unfavourably positioned on the labour market" was completed. As a result, 50 employees of the HZZ and social welfare centres were trained; a trainer manual was developed; a "Guide for gender-aware policy" and a "Handbook with examples of good practices in implementing active labour market policies for women unfavourably positioned in the labour market" were published; and a short documentary film was produced.

The Committee notes the concerns expressed by the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) that the effectiveness of the Office for Gender Equality and the Ombudsperson for Gender Equality is hampered by the inadequacy of the human, technical and financial resources allocated to them (CEDAW/C/HRV/CO/4-5, 28 July 2015, paragraph 12). Noting that the National Gender Equality Policy 2011–15 has expired, the Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that the Office for Gender Equality is in the process of preparing a new policy for the period 2017–20 but that, to date, it has not been adopted. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the adoption of a new National Gender Equality Policy, its content and the period it covers. It also requests information on the results achieved under the National Gender Equality Policy 2011–15. The Government is also asked to indicate during which period the project "Women on the Labour Market" was implemented; to provide information on results achieved and to indicate whether this project, or any similar project, has been renewed. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the number and proportion of women in the labour force, in both the private and public sectors, if possible by sectors of activity.

Equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation of the Roma. In its previous comments, the Committee asked the Government to provide information on the measures taken to ensure access to education for Roma children without discrimination; to strengthen its efforts to promote employment opportunities and to ensure equal treatment of Roma people, particularly women, in employment and occupation; and to provide specific information on the impact of the job search assistance provided for the Roma people by the employment service. The Government indicates that the HZZ does not monitor unemployed persons according to their national extraction, but that it is estimated that, out of the 16,975 persons of Roma national minority living in Croatia (according to the census conducted in 2011), 4,499 were registered as unemployed with the HZZ in 2011 and 4,206 in 2017. In the period 2015–17, on average, 48 per cent of Roma people registered with the HZZ were women. The Committee notes the Government's description of the regular activities of the HZZ to which all registered unemployed persons, including Roma, are invited as well as the activities directed exclusively at these persons, such as group counselling, targeted visits to employers to promote the employment of members of the Roma community, promotion of existing employment and self-employment measures and advice on starting a business. It also notes that the HZZ carries out a number of active labour market policy measures targeting disadvantaged unemployed persons, applying the "Guidelines for the development and implementation of active employment policy in the Republic of Croatia for the period 2015–2017", in order to increase the employment rate of disadvantaged groups, including the Roma. The Committee notes that the Annual Report of the Ombudsperson for 2017 points to discrimination in employment on the grounds of ethnicity, with the Roma national minority being particularly affected. According to the Ombudsperson, employers are still reluctant to employ persons belonging to the Roma community, mainly due to widespread stereotypes about their way of life and work habits. The Committee also notes the adoption of a National Roma Inclusion Strategy (NRIS) 2013–20 identifying employment as one of the four "crucial areas" of a comprehensive strategy. Regarding education, the Committee notes that, according to a report of the European Commission against Racism and Intolerance (ECRI) dated 21 March 2018, despite the introduction of free pre-school education in the year preceding enrolment in primary school which has contributed to an increase in the enrolment rate of Roma children, only 32 per cent of these children aged from 4 to 6 years attended pre-school in 2016 (compared to 72 per cent of the general population). Although the rate of enrolment of Roma children in compulsory primary school is as high as in the general population (95 per cent), this rate drops significantly at secondary school (35 per cent compared to 86 per cent of the general population). According to the ECRI, 77 per cent of young Roma people aged 16–24 years are neither in work nor in education or training. The Committee reiterates its requests to the Government to provide information on the measures taken to ensure access to education, including pre-school education for Roma children without discrimination. It also asks the Government to continue providing information on the measures specifically designed to promote employment opportunities and to ensure equal treatment of Roma people, and particularly women, in employment and occupation. The Government is also asked to provide more details on the impact of the job search assistance provided for Roma people by the employment service and to indicate the results achieved through the implementation of the National Roma Inclusion Strategy (NRIS) 2013–20.

Article 3(d). Access of national minorities to employment under the control of a national authority. In the absence of information regarding the implementation of the Civil Service Employment Plan for persons belonging to national minorities for the period 2011–14, the Committee once again asks the Government to provide information on the following:

- the action taken by the Government to promote and ensure access by members of national minorities to public employment in the framework of the Civil Service Employment Plan and the results achieved;*
- the progress made in achieving recruitment targets for minorities;*
- the current ethnic and gender composition of the civil service; and*
- any obstacles encountered in the implementation of the above-mentioned plan.*

Enforcement. The Committee notes that the Annual Report of the Ombud for 2017 underlines the issue of under-reporting of cases of discrimination, and the lack of awareness of the issue and of the available avenues for redress. It also pointed out that the currently available data on the number of court proceedings and their completion, the rate of success of documents and sanctions against the perpetrators of discrimination may be discouraging for victims, with protracted procedures, few claims upheld, low levels of compensation and sentences often below the legally required minimum. The Ombud recommended further improvements in the position of victims and the development of preventive action and better training on discrimination, as well as more dissuasive sentencing. The Committee once again asks the Government to provide information on the application in practice of the relevant provisions of the Labour Act, 2014, and the Anti-Discrimination Act, 2008, including the number and nature of cases of discrimination in employment and occupation reported to the Ombud or filed with the courts by the labour inspectorate. The Committee also once again asks the Government to clarify whether labour inspectors conduct any awareness-raising activities aimed at eliminating discrimination in employment and occupation on any of the grounds prohibited by the national legislation. The Committee reiterates its request for the Government to: (i) take the necessary measures to promote public awareness of the anti-discrimination legislation and the available remedies; (ii) indicate the measures taken to assist victims in bringing discrimination cases; and (iii) ensure that victims' rights are protected once they have filed a complaint.

Noting the concerns expressed by CEDAW that the effectiveness of the Office for Gender Equality and the Ombud for Gender Equality are hampered by the inadequacy of the human, technical and financial resources allocated to them, the Committee wishes to recall that a lack of human and material resources has an impact on the capacity of these bodies to perform their tasks and exercise their powers effectively. The Committee asks the Government to identify the steps taken or envisaged to ensure that these equality bodies have sufficient resources to achieve their full mission.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1969)

Previous comment

Articles 1 and 2(2)(a) of the Convention. Equal remuneration for work of equal value. Definition of remuneration. Legislation. The Committee recalls that: (1) section 7.8 of the Labour Code provides a general definition of remuneration and excludes certain benefits from it (accommodation and accommodation allowances, transport allowances, "benefits granted exclusively to facilitate workers' performance of their duties", and so on); and (2) section 86 does not reflect the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value since it limits wage equality to "equal conditions of work, qualifications and output". The Government reiterates in its report that the exclusion of these benefits from remuneration enables workers to enjoy certain non-taxable emoluments, thereby improving their purchasing power, and that consequently no amendment of section 7.8 of the Labour Code is envisaged. As regards section 86 and the inclusion in the Labour Code of the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, the Committee notes that the Government does not provide any information in this regard. The Committee wishes to point out that, irrespective of the existence of a definition of "remuneration" for tax purposes as provided for in section 7.8, for the purposes of the application of the Convention the definition of the term "remuneration" must be expanded to apply not only to the ordinary, basic or minimum wage or salary but also to "any additional emoluments whatsoever payable directly or indirectly, whether in cash or in kind, by the employer to the worker and arising out of the worker's employment". The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to incorporate in the Labour Code: (i) the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value; and (ii) a definition of "remuneration" in accordance with Article 1(a) of the Convention for the purposes of the application of this principle.

Article 1 of the Convention. Protection of workers against discrimination. Legislation. Public and private sectors. With regard to the legal protection of private sector workers and public officials against discrimination, the Committee notes the Government's indication that there are not yet any plans to incorporate the definition of direct and indirect discrimination in the Labour Code and in Act No. 16/013 of 15 July 2016 issuing the staff regulations for state civil servants. In order to expand the legal protection of workers in the public and private sectors against discrimination, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that an explicit definition of direct and indirect discrimination, based as a minimum on all of the grounds set out in the Convention and covering all aspects of employment and occupation, including recruitment, is incorporated in the Labour Code and in Act No. 16/013 issuing the staff regulations for state civil servants.

Article 1(1)(a). Discrimination on the basis of sex. Sexual harassment. The Committee notes that the Government does not provide any information in response to its request to incorporate provisions relating to hostile work environment sexual harassment in the legislation. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to take steps as soon as possible to expand the legislation by incorporating provisions: (i) defining and prohibiting hostile work environment sexual harassment; and (ii) establishing preventive measures, mechanisms for handling complaints, and appropriate penalties. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of the existing provisions of the Penal Code and the Ministerial Order of 2005, especially on the number of cases of sexual harassment handled by labour inspectors or the courts and the outcome thereof, and on any awareness-raising campaigns conducted or planned to combat all forms of sexual harassment, in collaboration with the social partners.

Articles 1(1)(a) and 3(d). Discrimination on the basis of sex. Leave in the civil service. Recalling the Government's indication that the issue of section 30 of Act No. 16/013 – under which a woman public official who has taken maternity leave cannot claim her right to take “recreational leave” (paid annual leave) during the same year – was due to be discussed with the trade unions in a joint committee, the Committee notes the Government's indications that: (1) section 30 has been formulated on a consensual basis by representatives of the Government and representatives of the most representative public service workers' organizations; and (2) women public officials have not submitted any complaints. In this regard, the Committee wishes to emphasize that a restriction of this type constitutes discrimination on the basis of sex, since it amounts in practice to depriving women who have taken maternity leave from taking their paid annual leave during the same year. Recalling that the absence of complaints does not signify the absence of discrimination but may reflect the absence of an appropriate legal framework or of access to complaint mechanisms and remedial processes or even fear of reprisals, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary steps to amend section 30 of Act No. 16/013 and bring it fully into line with the provisions of the Convention.

Discrimination on the basis of race or ethnic origin. Indigenous peoples. The Committee welcomes the Government's indication that the Act to protect and promote the rights of indigenous pygmy peoples was adopted at first reading by the National Assembly on 7 April 2021 and that it will contribute to strengthening measures for the protection of indigenous peoples. The Committee notes that this Act was adopted at second reading by the Senate on 10 June 2022. In light of the above, the Committee trusts that the Act to protect and promote the rights of indigenous pygmy peoples will be promulgated and published in the Official Journal in the near future. It requests the Government to indicate the measures taken towards this end and to send a copy of the Act once it has been promulgated. The Committee also requests the Government to take practical steps to: (i) prevent and combat all forms of discrimination in employment and occupation, including with regard to pay, and combat prejudices and stereotypes to which indigenous pygmy peoples are exposed; and (ii) enable members of indigenous peoples to have access to all levels of education, vocational training and employment and to other resources which enable them to carry out their traditional and subsistence activities, including access to credit and land.

Articles 1(b) and 2(2)(a) of the Convention. Equal remuneration for work of equal value. Legislation. With reference to the need to give full expression in law to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, the Government indicates in its report that: (1) it is aware that fundamental changes are needed in the field of labour legislation in general; (2) a national debate has been launched in the context of the National Opportunities Plan 2021–25, with the participation of civil society, workers, employers and academics, with a view to developing consensus proposals for reforms to the current Labour Code, including section 79, to reflect the provisions of the Convention and refer to work of “equal value” or, if not, develop proposed legislation that strengthens the field of labour and also includes non-restrictive precepts; and (3) throughout this process the legislative authorities play a fundamental role in formalizing these aspirations. The Committee welcomes the Government’s disposition to take the necessary legislative measures to give effect to the request that it has been making for many years. While noting the difficulties involved in making an amendment to a Labour Code, the Committee recalls that, as recognized by the Government, it is necessary to amend section 79 of the Labour Code as it contains a more restrictive definition than the principle established by the Convention. The Committee trusts that the necessary legislative measures, including going beyond the reform of the Labour Code, will be adopted in the near future to give full effect to the principle established in Article 1(b) of the Convention, which refers to work of “equal value”.

Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. Grounds of discrimination in employment and occupation. The Committee notes the Government’s indication in its report that: (1) it is aware that fundamental changes are required in the field of labour legislation in general; and (2) on the basis of the National Opportunities Plan 2021–2025, a national debate has been launched, with the participation of civil society, workers, employers and academics, to develop consensual proposals for reforms of the current Labour Code, with a more integrated vision which takes into account the content of broader legislative frameworks. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the necessary measures will be taken without delay for the inclusion in the legislation of provisions prohibiting both direct and indirect discrimination based on at least all of the grounds envisaged in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention in relation to access to employment, vocational training and promotion.

Discrimination on the basis of sex. Sexual harassment. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes the information provided by the Government: (1) on the adoption of Ministerial Decision No. MDT-2017-0082 of 11 May 2017, containing the Standard for the Eradication of Labour Discrimination; (2) that the Ministry of Labour is revising Ministerial Decisions Nos MDT-2017-0082 and MDT-2020-244 with a view to including the criteria set out in Article 1(b) of the Violence and Harassment Convention, 2019 (No. 190), which Ecuador ratified in 2021; and (3) on the adoption of the Comprehensive Basic Act to Prevent and Eradicate Violence against Women, of 5 February 2018, which considers sexual harassment to be sexual violence. The Committee also notes the concluding observations of the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW), in which it calls on the Government to ensure the effective implementation of the provisions of the Comprehensive Basic Act to Prevent and Eradicate Violence against Women and sections 141 and 142 of the Comprehensive Basic Criminal Code by allocating the necessary resources and providing systematic and recurrent training to judges, prosecutors, the police and other law enforcement officers on their strict enforcement and the strengthening of measures to prevent, combat and punish all forms of gender-based violence against women (CEDAW/C/ECU/CO/10, 24 November 2021, paragraph 22(a)). Accordingly, while noting these legislative and administrative initiatives, the Committee recalls the importance of adopting effective measures to prohibit sexual harassment at work. The Committee trusts that the Government will adopt without delay the measures within its power for the integration into the labour legislation, including the Ministerial Decisions referred to above, of a provision which defines and clearly prohibits sexual harassment (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 789–794).

Moreover, with regard to complaints of discrimination which include cases of sexual harassment, the Committee notes the Government's indication that between January 2019 and June 2022 the Ministry of Labour or Directorates of Labour and the Public Service and their national delegations received: (1) 144 complaints relating to the private sector; and (2) 420 complaints in the public sector. The Government adds that the significant difference between complaints in the public and private sectors is due to the Ministry of Labour undertaking various initiatives since 2019 to increase visibility of structural inequalities and violations of labour rights which have promoted the effective enjoyment of labour rights. The Committee takes note of these initiatives. The Committee requests the Government, in cooperation with workers' and employers' organizations, to continue taking measures to prevent sexual harassment in employment and occupation in both the private and public sectors. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the number of complaints received, and on the number and type of penalties imposed and the compensation granted.

Lastly, the Committee recalls that for several years the Government has been referring to a possible amendment of the Labour Code to address the issues raised, which has not been adopted in practice. The Committee considers that the legislative measures that it has been calling for to give full effect to the Convention should not remain pending while awaiting a possible revision of the Labour Code.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Egypt

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1960)

Previous comment

Articles 1(b) and 2(2)(a) of the Convention. Work of equal value. Legislation. The Committee had pointed out previously that, while section 35 of the Labour Law No. 12 of 2003 prohibits discrimination in wages based, among other grounds, on sex, and while section 88 is a general non-discrimination provision applying specifically to women workers where their working conditions are similar (or analogous), neither section gives effect to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value set out in the Convention. The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report does not contain any information in this regard and merely refers to its previous replies in which it referred to the Constitution (general prohibition of discrimination), and to pending draft amendments to the Labour Law. The Committee, once again highlights that the concept of "work of equal value" lies at the heart of the fundamental right of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value as it permits a broad scope of comparison, including, but going beyond, equal remuneration for "equal", "the same" or "similar" work, and also encompasses work that is of an entirely different nature, which is nevertheless of equal value (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 673–675). The Committee once again asks the Government to take the necessary steps to amend the relevant provisions of the Labour Law No. 12 of 2003, so as to provide not only for equal remuneration for men and women where their working conditions are similar or analogous but also to ensure equal remuneration for men and women in situations where they perform different work, requiring different skills, qualifications, efforts and responsibilities, and with different working conditions, that is nevertheless of equal value overall. It asks the Government to provide information on any steps taken in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1960)

Previous comment

Article 1 of the Convention. Protection against discrimination. Legislation. Private sector. With respect to the absence of comprehensive anti-discrimination provisions in the Labour Law No. 12 of 2003, the Committee observes that: (1) there is no definition and no explicit prohibition of discrimination; (2) sections 35 (discrimination in wages), and 120 (employment termination) of the Labour Law, while providing some protection against discrimination, do not cover all discrimination grounds enumerated by the Convention and do not apply to access to employment and all terms and conditions of work, and do not appear to address indirect discrimination; and (3) section 4(b) of the Labour Law explicitly excludes domestic workers from its scope of application. The Committee notes that, in its report, the Government merely refers to the same provisions of the Labour Law and the Constitution of 2014. In this regard, the Committee observes once again that: (1) article 53 of the Constitution provides that all citizens are equal before the law, without discrimination based on religion, belief, sex, origin, race, colour, language, disability, social class, political or geographical affiliation, or for any other reason; (2) the text of the Constitution excludes non-citizens from its application, while the Convention covers both nationals and non-nationals; and (3) the provisions of the Constitution do not appear to be directly invoked in civil proceedings by employees in the private sector. In this regard, the Committee highlights that constitutional provisions, while important, have generally not proven to be sufficient to address specific cases of discrimination in employment and occupation, and that a more detailed legislative framework is required (see 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 851). The Committee further takes note of the draft Law on the Regulation of Domestic Workers' Employment of 2022, drafted with the technical assistance of the ILO, and welcomes the inclusion in section 4 of the prohibition of discrimination on the grounds of "religion, creed, gender, race, ethnicity, colour, language or asylum status or for any other reason resulting in a breach of the equal opportunity principle".

Public service. In the absence of relevant information in the Government's report and in the absence of explicit anti-discrimination provisions in Act No. 47 of 1978 on the Civil Service, the Committee recalls the obligation of ratifying States to ensure and promote the application of the principles of the Convention to all workers, including public servants (see 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 741 and 742). The Committee notes the information provided by the ILO Decent Work Technical Support Team for North Africa and Country Office for Egypt and Eritrea (DWT/CO-Cairo) that the draft new Labour Law was approved by the Upper House and will be submitted to the Lower House.

Consequently, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that the revised Labour Law will include provisions: (i) clearly prohibiting and defining direct and indirect discrimination based on at least the seven grounds listed in the Convention (namely, race, colour, sex, religion, political opinion, social origin and national extraction); (ii) covering all stages of employment, including recruitment, promotion and terms and conditions of employment; and (iii) specifying preventive measures and remedies available for victims and sanctions for authors of discrimination.

The Committee also asks the Government to take steps to include such provisions in the Civil Service Law (Act No. 47 of 1978). Furthermore, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to expedite the process of adoption of the Law on domestic workers to ensure their protection against discriminatory practices, in accordance with the Convention.

Article 1(1)(a). Discrimination on the basis of sex. Sexual harassment. The Committee recalls the absence in the Labour Law as well as in the Civil Service Law (Act No. 47 of 1978) of provisions protecting workers against sexual harassment and the importance of clearly defining and prohibiting sexual harassment in employment and occupation. It further recalls that, while the provisions of the Penal Code (Act No. 58/1937), as amended by Act No. 50/2014 (sections 306A bis and 306B bis) address certain forms of sexual harassment, they still define sexual harassment too narrowly and do not cover the full range of behaviours that may constitute sexual harassment in employment and occupation. The Committee recalls that criminal provisions are not completely adequate in discrimination cases because, inter alia, they do not always provide a remedy to the victim and are very unlikely to cover all forms of conduct that amount to sexual harassment. Noting that the Government's report is silent on this issue, the Committee notes with regret the absence of progress in developing an appropriate framework defining, prohibiting and addressing all forms of sexual harassment specifically in employment and occupation, and refers the Government to paragraphs 789 and 792 of its 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions for more details on sexual harassment. The Committee wishes to recall that in its general observation of 2002, it highlights the importance of taking effective measures to prevent and prohibit sexual harassment at work. Such measures should address both: (1) any physical, verbal or non-verbal conduct of a sexual nature and other conduct based on sex affecting the dignity of women and men, which is unwelcome, unreasonable, and offensive to the recipient; and a person's rejection of, or submission to, such conduct is used explicitly or implicitly as a basis for a decision which affects that person's job (quid pro quo); and (2) any conduct that creates an intimidating, hostile or humiliating working environment for the recipient (hostile work environment). The Committee further notes that, according to the information provided by the DWT/CO-Cairo, the draft Labour Law contains provisions on sexual harassment. In light of the above, the Committee urges the Government to take the opportunity of the revision of the Labour Law to ensure that it includes a clear definition and prohibition of all forms of sexual harassment and establishes mechanisms for prevention and redress, including appropriate sanctions and compensation. It also asks the Government to take steps to include such provisions in the Civil Service Law (Act No. 47 of 1978). Finally, the Committee asks the Government to provide information on any awareness-raising measures taken, in cooperation with the social partners, with a view to preventing and eliminating sexual harassment in employment and occupation both in the public and private sectors.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

El Salvador

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 2000)

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Definition of remuneration. Legislation. In its previous comments, the Committee asked the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that occasional bonuses, gratuities and reimbursements in kind referred to in section 119 of the Labour Code and which are not included in the definition of wages according to that legislative provision, are included in the concept of remuneration. In this regard, the Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that the National Labour Directorate is drawing up plans to carry out scheduled inspections to check the existence of labour discrimination relating, inter alia, to differences in wages between men and women in the same job or post. The Committee also notes that the Government reiterates that the emoluments provided for in section 119(2) of the Labour Code are often granted by employers outside the employment contract and/or collective agreement so it is difficult for the labour inspectorate to carry out checks and impose penalties in relation to this provision. In this regard, the Committee wishes to recall that Article 1(a) of the Convention sets out a very broad definition of the term “remuneration”, which includes not only “the ordinary, basic or minimum wage or salary” but also “any additional emoluments whatsoever payable directly or indirectly, whether in cash or in kind, by the employer to the worker and arising out of the workers’ employment”. This broad definition of remuneration in the Convention seeks to encompass all forms of recompense that a worker may receive for his or her work, including payments in cash as well as in kind, and also payments made directly or indirectly by the employer to the worker for the work done. Such a broad definition is necessary since if only the basic wage were being compared, much of what can be given a monetary value arising out of the job would not be captured, and such additional components are often considerable, making up increasingly more of the overall earnings package. The words “directly or indirectly” were added to the definition of remuneration in the Convention with a view to ensuring that certain emoluments which were not payable directly by the employer to the worker concerned would be covered. The definition also captures payments or benefits, whether received regularly or only occasionally (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 686–687). The Committee requests the Government to take steps to raise the awareness of the social partners regarding the principle of the Convention and its implications so as to ensure that occasional bonuses, gratuities and reimbursements in kind referred to in section 119(2) of the Labour Code are included in the concept of remuneration, in accordance with the principle established by the Convention.

Article 1(b). Work of equal value. Legislation. The Committee has been referring for nearly two decades to the need to amend article 38(1) of the Constitution, section 123 of the Labour Code and section 19 of the Standard Work Regulations for the Private Sector so that the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value is incorporated. In this regard, the Committee notes with regret that the Government simply reiterates that the content of article 38 of the Constitution promotes the principle of equal pay for equal work, and refers to the existence of the “Act on equality and the eradication of discrimination against women” and its National Equality Plan. The Committee recalls that the Convention’s principle of “equal remuneration for men and women workers for work of equal value” includes, but goes beyond, equal remuneration for “equal”, “the same” or “similar” work and also encompasses work of an entirely different nature which is nevertheless of equal value. The Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary steps without delay to give full expression in law to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, and to provide information on progress made in this regard.

Article 2. Public sector. The Committee has been referring for more than a decade to section 65 of the Civil Service Act of 1961, which provides that “jobs shall be classified into similar groups in terms of duties, functions and responsibilities ... so that they can be assigned the same level of remuneration under similar conditions of work”, and which is more restrictive than the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. In its latest comments, the Committee asked the Government to take the necessary steps to incorporate the principle of equal pay for men and women for work of equal value in the Civil Service Act of 1961. The Committee also asked the Government to provide information on the methods used to determine job classifications and pay scales applicable to the public sector. The Government indicates that wages are assigned under the General Budget Act and Wage Act, and that this is done without distinction between men and women. It also states that it issued Directive No. 4025 establishing standards for the classification of posts, and which classifies posts by category and establishes criteria for analysis of the appointed staff. The Government indicates that there are no regulations for establishing salary structures but that each institution has criteria and internal policies for assigning salaries for officials and employees. At the government level, the criteria are: suitability for the post, hierarchical level, and reclassification of posts to be filled according to the duties involved, with the proviso that the salary concerned must not distort the pay scale. The Committee recalls that “historical experience has shown that insistence on factors such as ‘equal conditions of work, skill and output’ can be used as a pretext for paying women lower wages than men. While factors such as skill, responsibility, effort and working conditions are clearly relevant in determining the value of the jobs, when examining two jobs, the value does not have to be the same with respect to each factor – determining value is about the overall value of the job when all the factors are taken into account” (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 677). The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that: (i) the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value is incorporated in the Civil Service Act of 1961, and in the General Budget Act and the Wage Act; and (ii) Directive No. 4025 establishing standards for the classification of posts, each institution's criteria and internal policies, and also government directives, respect the principle set forth in the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1995)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. Discrimination on the basis of sex. Pregnancy and maternity. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that women workers enjoy effective protection against dismissal and any other acts of discrimination on the grounds of pregnancy or maternity in the public and private sectors, including in the maquila (export processing) sector, and to supply information on any developments in this respect. The Committee also requested the Government to continue providing information on the number of complaints filed, indicating the grounds for the complaints, sectors concerned, proceedings instituted, remedies granted and penalties imposed. The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that, in June 2018, the Labour and Social Welfare Committee of the Legislative Assembly approved an amendment to section 113 of the Labour Code granting a six-month employment guarantee after the worker returns from the four months of maternity leave, in the public, municipal or private sectors, and establishes fines of three to six months of the minimum wage for non-compliance. The Government also indicates that labour inspections are conducted with the objective of providing protection for women against violations of their rights: in 2015, some 117 inspections were conducted in the private sector, and 23 in the maquila sector; in 2016, some 131 inspections were conducted in the private sector, and 30 in the maquila sector; and, in 2017, a total of 141 inspections were conducted in the private sector and 21 in the maquila sector. The Government adds that, 20 pregnant women were reinstated in their posts in 2015; 22 in 2016; 25 in 2017; and one in 2018. The Committee welcomes the reported legislative initiative that would grant greater job security to women up to six months after the period of maternity leave. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the announced reform of section 113 of the Labour Code. In addition, observing that the Government reported the reinstatement of several pregnant women, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the scope of the protection in law of pregnant women and to continue providing information on the number of complaints alleging discrimination on pregnancy or on maternity, the sectors concerned, violations found, remedies granted and penalties imposed.

Sexual harassment. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures without delay to include in the Act on the prevention of work-related risks of 2010 provisions that: (i) define and prohibit both quid pro quo and hostile work environment sexual harassment; (ii) provide access to remedies for all men and women workers, men and women to report such harassment; and (iii) provide for sufficiently dissuasive sanctions and adequate compensation. In this respect, the Committee notes the Government's indication that section 7 of the Act of 2010 defines sexual harassment as a psychosocial risk, and section 29 of the Labour Code prohibits sexual harassment by employers. The Government reports that the labour inspectorate has a procedure to impose fines for acts of this nature, with the possibility of bringing charges against the offender, and a protocol on complaints of sexual and workplace harassment. The Government reports that, in 2015, one inspection was conducted into harassment; none in 2016; and five in 2017. Over the years, the Committee has consistently expressed the view that sexual harassment, as a serious manifestation of sex discrimination and a violation of human rights, is to be addressed within the context of the Convention. Given the gravity and serious repercussions of sexual harassment, the Committee recalls the importance of taking effective measures to prevent and prohibit sexual harassment in employment and occupation (see 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 789). While noting the information provided by the Government, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to include in the Act on the prevention of work-related risks of 2010 provisions that: (i) define and prohibit both quid pro quo and hostile work environment sexual harassment; (ii) provide access to remedies for all men and women workers; and

(iii) provide for sufficiently dissuasive sanctions and adequate compensation. The Committee also requests the Government to continue sending information on: (i) any measures adopted to prevent sexual harassment and to raise awareness among workers and employers; and (ii) the number of complaints concerning sexual harassment in employment and occupation received, the penalties imposed and compensation awarded.

Article 1(1)(b). Real or perceived HIV status. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that Decree No. 611 of 2005 reforming the Labour Code introduced a new section 30, which prohibits discrimination against workers on the basis of their HIV status and also prohibits compulsory HIV testing as a condition for acquiring or retaining employment. However, the Committee noted that the Public Service Act of 1961 provides that any person who suffers from an infectious/contagious disease may not enter the administrative career service. In this regard the Government indicates that, in December 2016, a Plan on monitoring the labour rights of people with HIV was launched with the slogan “Inspection with Inclusion”. The Government reports that two inspections were conducted in this context in 2016 and none in 2015 and 2017. The Committee notes this information and requests the Government to take the necessary steps to amend the Public Service Act of 1961 in order to provide adequate protection for all workers in the public sector against discrimination on the basis of real or perceived HIV status, with such protection including the prohibition of compulsory HIV testing as a condition for acquiring or retaining employment. The Committee requests the Government to report the measures adopted to implement the “Inspection with Inclusion” plan and the results achieved.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Fiji

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 2002)

Article 1(1) of the Convention. Protection against discrimination. Public service. Legislation. The Committee recalls that the Public Service Act of 1999 does not contain any provision linked to discrimination. In its previous comment, it noted that, following the adoption of the Public Service (Amendment) Decree, No. 36 of 2011, section 10B(2) and section 10C prohibit discrimination in all aspects of employment, based on ethnicity, colour, gender, religion, national extraction and social origin, but omitting political opinion. The Committee asked the Government to: (1) take the necessary measures to include political opinion among the prohibited grounds of discrimination listed in the Public Service (Amendment) Decree; and (2) indicate how public service employees and applicants for public service employment are protected against discrimination based on political opinion in practice. The Committee notes the Government’s indication in its report that Decree No. 36 of 2011 was amended by the Employment Relations (Amendment) Act, 2016, and that Parts 2A and 2B, including sections 10B and 10C of the Public Service (Amendment) Decree, have been repealed. The Amendment Act also amended the definition of “workers” to include contractual civil servants under the Employment Relations Act 2007 (ERA).

The Committee recalls that section 6(2) of the ERA prohibits discrimination on the grounds listed in the Convention, including the ground of political opinion. It also notes that Part I (interpretation), section 4, of the ERA provides that a worker is employed under contract of service, and that the concept of employer includes the Government, other Government entities or local authorities and a statutory authority. The Committee observes that the Public Service Act, 1999, as well as Decree No. 36 of 2011, cover employees in the public sector who are civil servants (career public servants) and that workers in the public sector who are employed under a contract of service are covered by the ERA. In that regard, it stresses once again that sections 10B(2) and 10C of Decree No. 36 of 2011 do not prohibit discrimination on the ground of political opinion. It recalls once again that, where legal provisions are adopted to give effect to the principle of the Convention, they should include at least all the grounds of discrimination specified in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. The Committee once again asks the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that political opinion is included among the prohibited grounds of discrimination listed in the Public Service Act 1999. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate how in the meantime public service employees and applicants to public service employment are protected against discrimination based on political opinion in practice.

Enforcement and access to justice. The Committee recalls that the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (CAS) (International Labour Conference, 100th Session, 2011) noted that section 266 of Decree No. 21 of 2011 prohibits any action, proceeding, claim or grievance “which purports to or purported to challenge or involves the Government (...) any Minister or the Public Service Commission (...) which has been brought by virtue of or under the [Employment Relations Act]”. The CAS urged the Government to ensure that government employees have access to competent judicial bodies to claim their rights and adequate remedies. Consequently, the Committee asked the Government to provide detailed information on the procedure and means of redress available to workers excluded from the scope of the ERA alleging discrimination in employment and occupation which purport to challenge or involve public authorities. The Government indicates that the Employment Relations (Amendment) Act 2016 repealed the Essential National Industries Decree 2011 (ENI) to allow civil servants and workers in statutory authorities and commercial banks to lodge their claims either through their trade unions as a trade dispute or as individual grievances. The Government adds that any worker, including civil servants, may file or lodge their employment grievance with the Mediation Services of the Ministry of Employment, Productivity and Industrial Relations, including for any matters pertaining to being discriminated against by their employer. According to the Government, in 2019, the Mediation Services received 22 grievances relating to discrimination, of which 13 were individual grievances reported by workers themselves and nine were reported by unions.

The Committee notes that, with regard to workers in the private sector, the ERA provides for a range of avenues of redress, such as the mediation services, the employment relations tribunal and the employment relations court. Regarding civil servants, the Public Service Regulations (L.N. 48 of 1999) provide in paragraph 28 that a chief executive must put in place, in his or her Ministry or department, appropriate procedures for employees to seek review of action that they consider adversely affects their employment. The Committee notes that section 266 of Decree No. 21 of 2011 may apply to both workers in the private and public sectors, as it prohibits any action, proceeding, claim or grievance “which purports to or purported to challenge or involves the Government (...) any Minister or the Public Service Commission”.

The Committee further notes that the National Commission on Human Rights and Anti-Discrimination (CHRAD), established in 2009 under article 45 of the Constitution, can receive and investigate complaints of discrimination and seek to resolve them through conciliation. Where complaints remain unresolved, the CHRAD can refer these to a legal process. The Committee asks the Government to: (i) take the necessary measures to ensure that workers who purport to challenge the public authorities, in case of discrimination in employment or occupation have a formal avenue of redress; (ii) provide information on the application in practice of section 266 of the ERA; and to provide information on the anti-discrimination activities of the National Commission on Human Rights and Anti-Discrimination in employment and occupation; and (iii) report any cases brought before it and their outcome.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Finland

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1963)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Central Organization of Finnish Trade Unions (SAK), the Confederation of Unions for Professional and Managerial Staff in Finland (AKAVA) and the Finnish Confederation of Professionals (STTK) (hereinafter referred to as “the trade unions”), and of the Federation of Finnish Enterprises (SY), the Confederation of Finnish Industries (EK) and the Local Government and County Employers (KT), attached to the Government's report.

Articles 1–3 of the Convention. Gender pay gap. Scope of comparison. The Committee notes the Government's acknowledgement, in its report, that the gender pay gap has decreased very slowly, from 17.2 per cent in 2010, to 16.8 per cent in 2015 to 15.8 per cent in 2020. The Government explains that equal pay is promoted through legislation, the tripartite Equal Pay Programme (2020–23) and government research and development projects. It recognizes that previous Equal Pay Programmes (2007–10, 2010–15 and 2016–19) have not been very successful in reaching their main goal. The current Programme (2020–23) promotes gender impact assessments of collective agreements and pay systems that support equal pay and pay awareness, supports the reconciliation of work and family life and dismantles the gendered segregation of the labour market. The Committee notes that, on 1 September 2022, the Ministry of Social Affairs and Health launched an overall assessment of the equal pay measures introduced, including the tripartite Equal Pay Programme 2020–23. It also notes the Government's statement that one solution it is currently exploring is pay transparency. A tripartite working group, appointed under the auspices of the Ministry of Social Affairs and Health, prepared amendments to the Act on Equality between Women and Men in order to increase pay transparency in all sectors, the objective being to prevent gender-based pay discrimination and to promote equal pay. The Government indicates that, unfortunately, this process was interrupted due to diverging views on the proposal among government parties. It refers to ongoing initiatives on pay transparency at the European Union level. It also points out that the most challenging obstacle in combating the gender pay gap is the gender segregation of the labour market: in 2019, the proportion of workers in "even occupations" (meaning occupations with 40 to 59 per cent male or female wage earners) was only 10.1 per cent (it was 13.1 per cent in 2010). It cites two projects on the subject: (i) "Dismantling segregation – Tools for a more equal working life (2021–2023)", in the context of which a policy brief and toolbox for decision-makers on the more permanent methods of dismantling occupational segregation will be prepared; and (ii) "Working careers and occupational segregation behind the gender pay gap (2022–2024)", a research project which aims to map differences in careers and career paths and their effect on pay differences, with a view to laying the foundation for developing careers and occupational structures on a more equal basis. The Committee notes the Government's indication that there is considerable variation in the scope and quality of equality plans and pay surveys carried out in the public and private sectors. In most cases, comparisons are made between employees doing the same work. Comparisons between employees covered by different collective agreements are rare. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that an extensive research and development project, entitled "Work of Equal Value 2021–2022" is being carried out, which examines "how the assessment of demands of the work should be standardized between the different sectors and occupations", so as to better recognize the demands of female-dominated sectors and occupations, with a view to developing payroll systems that could better support equal pay for work of equal value.

The Committee notes that, in their observations, the social partners all agree that gender segregation of the Finnish labour market is a serious issue and mention the unequal uptake of family leave as a reason for the gender pay gap. The trade unions deeply regret the suspension of the process towards amending the Act on Equality between Women and Men and consider that increasing wage transparency and improving access to pay information in cases of suspected discrimination would help to ensure pay equity. SY considers that the main reasons for the gender wage gap are the fact that women and men work in different industries and that the annual working hours of men are higher than those of women; and it is of the view that the gap can only be reduced by influencing educational choices and attitudes. EK considers that pay discrimination is not a significant problem in Finland and that the principle of "equal pay (equal pay for equal work)" is well implemented. According to EK, the issue of the pay gap is different from the principle of equal pay or pay discrimination and increasing pay transparency or pay openness would have no effect on promoting equal pay; it is rather necessary "to increase the attractiveness of different sectors and improve the position of women in the labour market, [and to ensure] a more even distribution of family leave and adequate day care services for children”.

The Committee notes that, in its concluding observations, the United Nations Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights noted that the implementation of the Equal Pay Programme without binding measures would not significantly accelerate the reduction of the gender wage gap. It recommended that the Government establish time-bound targets for closing the gender pay gap and legislate on remuneration transparency, with a view to making it easier to challenge unequal pay (E/C.12/FIN/CO/7, 30 March 2021, paragraphs 20–21). The Committee also notes that according to the national Action Plan for Gender Equality 2020–23: (i) the gender pay gap will be narrowed during that period by increasing pay transparency through legislation, by Government-led research and development projects and by joint efforts undertaken by the Government and the labour market organizations; and (b) Finland is in favour of promoting equal pay by increasing pay transparency through EU legislation and considers it important to clarify the concept of “equal pay for work of equal value”.

Regarding the gender segregation of the labour market, the Committee refers to its comments under the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111). As for the gender pay gap and the scope of comparison taken into account, the Committee notes that the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value seems to be understood and applied in a very narrow way in the labour market in Finland. It wishes to reiterate that comparing the relative value of jobs in occupations which may involve different types of skills, responsibilities, efforts or working conditions, but which are nevertheless of equal value overall, is essential in order to eliminate pay discrimination resulting from the failure to recognize the value of work performed by women and men free from gender bias (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 675). In order to address gender pay discrimination in a gender-segregated labour market where women and men are concentrated in different trades, industries and sectors, the reach of comparison between jobs performed by women and men should be as wide as possible, extending beyond occupational categories, collective agreements and enterprises. The Committee encourages the Government to take steps towards clarifying the meaning of “equal remuneration for work of equal value” and ensuring that a wide scope of comparison is being applied in all activities which affect the application of the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, including equal pay surveys. It also asks the Government to provide information on whether and how it assesses the “equal value” of public employment jobs. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the evolution of the gender pay gap and any measures aimed at its reduction, especially how the issue of occupational gender segregation is being addressed. It also asks the Government to provide information on the results of the overall assessment of the equal pay measures launched by the Ministry of Social Affairs and Health on 1 September 2022, as well as on the concrete outputs produced by the following projects: “Work of Equal Value 2021–2022”, “Dismantling segregation – Tools for a more equal working life (2021–2023)”, and “Working careers and occupational segregation behind the gender pay gap (2022–2024)”.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Lebanon

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1977)

Previous comment

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government’s report, which has been due since 2019, has not been received. In light of its urgent appeal launched to the Government in 2021, the Committee proceeds to the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal.

Articles 1–4 of the Convention. Evaluating the gender pay gap and identifying its underlying causes. The Committee notes the statistical data contained in the report The Life of Women and Men in Lebanon: A Statistical Portrait, published in 2021 in partnership between the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) and the Central Administration for Statistics of Lebanon. It notes that, during the period 2018–19: (1) the overall pay gap between men and women was 3.6 per cent in favour of women, as workers who are not Lebanese nationals earn substantially less than nationals (under half as much) and the majority of those are men; and (2) when the data are disaggregated by nationality, for Lebanese nationals, the monthly wage gap between men and women was 6.5 per cent. The report also indicates that, over the same period 2018–19: (1) the earnings gap persisted in all professions; (2) the wage gap between men and women (in favour of men) was higher for operators of equipment and machinery and assembly workers (women earn 30 per cent less than men) and for professionals and technicians (women earn around 20 per cent less than men); and (3) the lowest wage gap (in favour of men) was for office employees (3.8 per cent) and craftworkers and industrial workers (4.4 per cent). The Committee requests the Government to take measures to: (i) continue gathering, compiling and analysing data on the remuneration of men and women with a view to identifying pay gaps, where possible, disaggregated by professional category and/or economic sector, including the public sector; and (ii) identify and begin addressing the underlying causes of these gaps. The Committee requests the Government to provide data and information on the conclusions of any studies undertaken on this subject.

Articles 1(b) and 2(2)(a). Equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. Legislation. The Committee notes the information provided by the ILO Regional Office for the Arab States in Beirut, according to which a draft new Labour Code had been finalized by the Ministry of Labour at the beginning of 2021, forwarded to the Council of Ministers and referred back to the Minister following the formation of the new Government in September 2021. The Committee notes that as a consequence, the reform of the Labour Code is still ongoing. It recalls that section 26 of the Labour Code of 1946, as amended in 2000, provides that “it is prohibited for the employer to discriminate between men and women who work in relation to ... the rate of the wage, employment, promotion, advancement ...”, but that it does not give expression to the concept of “work of equal value” which is at the heart of the Convention. The Committee further notes that, during the examination of the report of Lebanon by the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW), the Government representative indicated that the country was endeavouring to ensure equal pay for men and women workers, and various ministries were working, in cooperation with the National Observatory for Gender Equality, to facilitate all the reforms through the collection and analysis of information with a view to preparing recommendations aimed at parity and in support of parliamentary decisions (press release, Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights, 18 February 2022). Recalling that it has been drawing the Government’s attention to this matter for several decades, and although aware of the difficult situation prevailing in the country, the Committee urges the Government to take measures for the inclusion in the future Labour Code of provisions establishing equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value and specifying how equal value is measured (objective job evaluation).

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1977)

Previous comment

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report, due since 2019, has not been received. In light of its urgent appeal launched to the Government in 2021, the Committee proceeds with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal.

Article 1 of the Convention. Protection of workers against discrimination. Legislation. The Committee recalls that section 26 of the Labour Code of 1946, as amended, prohibits employers from discriminating between men and women workers only in relation to certain aspects of employment: the type of work, the level of the wage, employment, promotion, advancement, vocational aptitude and dress. It notes with regret that this serious situation has not changed despite the fact that it has been drawing the Government's attention to this matter for over 20 years and has been requesting it to introduce into the Labour Code a definition and a general prohibition of direct and indirect discrimination on at least all of the grounds set out in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention (namely, race, colour, sex, religion, political opinion, national extraction and social origin) and covering all aspects of employment and occupation within the meaning of Article 1(3) (namely, access to vocational training, access to employment and to particular occupations, and terms and conditions of employment). The Committee notes the information communicated by the ILO Regional Office for the Arab States in Beirut, according to which the draft text of the new Labour Code was finalized by the Ministry of Labour at the beginning of 2021 and then communicated to the Council of Ministers and referred to the Ministry when the new Government was formed in September 2021. The Committee notes that the reform of the Labour Code is therefore still under way and has not been completed. While recognizing the difficult situation prevailing in the country, the Committee once again urges the Government to: (i) take the necessary measures to ensure that the new Labour Code contains provisions defining and prohibiting direct and indirect discrimination on at least all of the grounds set out in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention, and covering all aspects of employment and occupation, as defined in Article 1(3), and particularly access to vocational training, and access to employment and to particular occupations; and (ii) provide detailed information on any progress achieved with a view to adopting the draft Labour Code. In the absence of full legislative protection against discrimination, the Committee also once again requests the Government to adopt specific measures to ensure in practice the protection of all workers, including domestic migrant workers and non-nationals, in all sectors of the economy, against discrimination on grounds of race, colour, religion, political opinion, national extraction and social origin in employment and occupation, including awareness-raising and prevention measures for workers, employers and their respective organizations (national campaigns, tripartite seminars and so on).

Article 1(1)(a). Discrimination on the basis of sex. Sexual harassment. While reiterating its concern at the absence of a Government report, the Committee takes due note of the following positive development: the adoption on 21 December 2020 of Act No. 205 on the criminalization of sexual harassment and the rehabilitation of victims, which covers all fields, including the workplace, public institutions and education establishments. The Committee notes that the Act defines sexual harassment as "any repeated behaviour with a sexual connotation, which is extraordinary and unwanted by the victim, and which prejudices the victim's physical safety, private life and feelings, whether it consists of words, acts, gestures, suggestions or insinuations with a sexual or pornographic connotation", including by electronic means. Sexual harassment also includes "any act or initiative, whether or not repeated, which makes use of means of pressure that are psychological, moral, material or have a racial connotation with a view to obtaining a favour of a sexual nature for the perpetrator or for another person". The Act provides for heavier penalties, particularly in the case of sexual harassment in the context of a work relationship, and protection against reprisals for victims and witnesses, particularly in terms of remuneration, promotion, the renewal of the employment contract and the prohibition of disciplinary penalties. It also specifies that criminal prosecution does not prevent the imposition of disciplinary penalties on the perpetrator, and provides for the creation of a special fund to assist victims. While observing that the Act is a fundamental first step in combating sexual harassment in employment and occupation, the Committee notes that: (1) criminal provisions are not completely adequate in discrimination cases because, inter alia, they do not always provide a remedy to the victim and are very unlikely to cover all forms of conduct that amount to sexual harassment; (2) the Act is not specific to the fields of employment and occupation, in which sexual harassment may also have a significant impact on the economic situation of workers, including on their retention in employment and on their professional careers; (3) it does not explicitly cover one of the two forms of sexual harassment, namely, the creation of a hostile work environment; and (4) it does not contain any measures relating to prevention, particularly the evaluation of the risk of harassment, nor to information and training for workers, nor even to internal procedures for dealing with cases of sexual harassment, such as through the establishment of a complaint, investigation and penalty mechanism. The Committee also recalls that the sole section of the current Labour Code that could be applied in cases of sexual harassment is a provision that authorizes employees to leave their jobs without notice when "the employer or his representative commits an offence against the morals of the worker" (section 75(3)). The Committee observes that this provision does not afford sufficient protection for victims of sexual harassment as, in practice, it has a punitive effect on workers (who lose their employment) and could even dissuade them from making complaints. While noting the legal framework established by Act No. 205 of 2020 for the criminalization of sexual harassment and the rehabilitation of victims, and in light of the above, the Committee requests the Government to take measures to amend the Act accordingly and to include in the future Labour Code provisions: (i) defining and prohibiting sexual harassment in all its forms (quid pro quo and hostile environment) without requiring the acts to be repeated, and explicitly prohibiting it in relation to all aspects of employment, including recruitment; (ii) covering all workers, including domestic workers, in all economic sectors; and (iii) envisaging the adoption and implementation of prevention measures and complaint, investigation and penalty mechanisms at the enterprise level. In the meantime, the Committee also requests the Government to take measures for the dissemination of the provisions of Act No. 205 of 2020 to workers, employers and their respective organizations, as well as those responsible for their promotion and enforcement (labour inspectors, judges and so on). It also requests the Government to provide information on the number, nature and outcome of complaints lodged under Act No. 205 of 2020 and on any interpretation by the courts of the legal definition of sexual harassment, and particularly the term "extraordinary".

Discrimination based on sex, race, colour, national extraction and social origin. Multiple discrimination. Foreign domestic workers. For nearly 20 years, the Committee has been examining the measures taken by the Government to address the lack of legal protection for domestic workers, most of whom are foreign women, since these workers are excluded from the scope of the Labour Code and are particularly vulnerable to abuse and discrimination, including harassment, on the basis of sex and other grounds, such as race, colour and ethnic origin. In this regard, the Committee also refers to its comments under the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29). It recalls that in 2016, in its concluding observations, the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD) noted with concern that "abuse and exploitation of migrant domestic workers continues to occur" despite the measures taken by the State party. It observes that, in its concluding observations in 2021, the CERD continues to express concern about "the sponsorship system (kafala), which results in employers exercising excessive control over migrant domestic workers, rendering them vulnerable to abusive working conditions, in particular non-payment of wages, long working hours, confiscation of their passports, and psychological and physical abuse including sexual violence, treatment that has intensified during the COVID-19 pandemic". It reiterated its "concern that domestic workers, who are mainly women from Africa and Asia, remain excluded from the protection guaranteed by the Labour Code" (section 5) (CERD/C/LBN/CO/23-24, 1 September 2021, paragraph 24). With regard to the access of migrant domestic workers to justice, the Committee refers to the report The Labyrinth of justice: Migrant domestic workers before Lebanon's courts, prepared in 2020 by the non-governmental organization Legal Agenda, in collaboration with the ILO Regional Office for the Arab States. It also notes the information provided to CERD by the Government in its national report concerning the establishment of a central office and a hotline for receiving complaints from migrant domestic workers, and the measures to raise the awareness of these workers of their rights under the labour legislation (CERD/C/LBN/23-24, 29 January 2019, paragraph 200). In this respect, it notes that, in its concluding observations, the CERD indicates that it remains deeply concerned by: (1) the fact that, despite those efforts, many foreign workers, notably domestic workers and in particular women, are unaware of the remedies available to them in the event of a violation of their rights; (2) the existence of obstacles that may hinder foreign workers' access to justice, for example reluctance to file complaints for fear of negative repercussions, such as expulsion from the country; and (3) the fact that perpetrators of violence go unpunished. The Committee also notes that the CERD recommended Lebanon to: (1) take measures to remove barriers to access to justice for foreign workers, notably domestic workers and in particular women; (2) ensure that foreign workers can submit complaints regarding abusive labour practices to independent and effective mechanisms, without fear of suffering negative repercussions; (3) enforce existing protective laws and policies for migrant workers and ensure that all reported cases of abuse against them are investigated and, where appropriate, prosecuted, and that perpetrators are punished appropriately and victims provided with reparation; and (4) ensure that labour inspectors are empowered to examine the working conditions of migrant domestic workers in the homes of private employers (CERD/C/LBN/CO/23-24, paragraphs 26 and 27).

With regard more specifically to the kafala (sponsorship) system, the Committee notes the information provided by the Government to the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) in response to a list of issues and questions in relation to its sixth periodic report (CEDAW/C/LBN/RQ/6, 18 February 2021). It notes that, following a decision taken in February 2021 by the General Directorate of General Security, employers are prohibited from filing criminal "flight" complaints against domestic workers when they leave their sponsors' homes. The criminal procedure has been replaced by an administrative procedure under which the employer may now file an administrative notification form at a General Security station reporting that the domestic worker has left the employer's home, thereby waiving any civil responsibility arising from the employment relationship. Moreover, the General Directorate of General Security is also prohibited from using in all official records terms such as "flee" or "escape", which have been replaced by the expression "left the workplace" (CEDAW/C/LBN/RQ/6, page 20).

Recalling its previous comments and noting with deep concern that the situation remains unchanged, and that it has even deteriorated due to the economic and health crisis suffered by the country, the Committee urges the Government to:

- (i) take the necessary measures, in cooperation with the social partners, to ensure that migrant domestic workers benefit from full and effective protection, in law and practice, against direct and indirect discrimination on all of the grounds set out in the Convention, including against sexual harassment, and in all areas of their employment, either through the adoption of a specific comprehensive Bill or in the framework of the future Labour Code;
- (ii) in this context, consider the possibility of including domestic workers in the scope of application of the Labour Code through an amendment to section 7;
- (iii) ensure that any new rule envisaged to regulate the right of migrant domestic workers to change employer does not in any event impose conditions or restrictions that are likely to increase their dependence on their employers and thereby increase their vulnerability to potential abuse and discriminatory practices;

- (iv) provide information on the application and compliance with the decision of February 2021 of the General Directorate of General Security prohibiting employers from filing criminal complaints for “flight”; and
- (v) improve the procedure for receiving and dealing with complaints by migrant domestic workers, including the hotline and, more generally, ensure that they have effective access to justice.

Model employment contract. In the absence of a report from the Government, the Committee notes the information concerning women migrant domestic workers provided by the Government in its report to the CEDAW in response to the list of issues and questions in relation to its sixth periodic report (CEDAW/C/LBN/RQ/6, 11 February 2021, page 20). It notes in particular the Government's indication that: (1) on 8 September 2020, the Minister of Labour issued a decree on the standard employment contract of domestic workers, although it has not brought an end to the kafala (sponsorship) system; and (2) “[o]n 21 September 2020, attorneys for the Syndicate of Owners of Domestic Worker Recruitment Agencies filed a lawsuit against the Lebanese State and the Ministry of Labour (case No. 24340/2020) before the State Shura Council, which decided to suspend implementation of the minister's decision because of fundamental irregularities” (CEDAW/C/LBN/RQ/6, p. 20). The Committee notes that, during the examination by CEDAW of the report of Lebanon in February 2022, the Government representative indicated, with reference to the model employment contract, that it was intended to achieve uniform working conditions for women domestic workers and provide them with greater protection. She added that the contract was also intended to combat the kafala system and, even if its implementation had been suspended, the project had not been abandoned and Lebanon was continuing to work with its international partners, including the ILO (press release of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights of 18 February 2022). Lastly, the Committee notes the concluding observations of the CEDAW, in which it recommends Lebanon to: (1) amend the Labour Code to extend its protection to domestic workers; (2) strengthen labour inspections to monitor the working conditions of domestic workers effectively and to investigate and punish abuses; (3) ensure that migrant domestic workers have explicit, written terms of employment outlining their specific duties, hours, remuneration, days of rest and other conditions of work, in contracts that are free, fair and fully consented to, together with information on access to complaint mechanisms; and (4) ensure that women migrant domestic workers have adequate access to justice (CEDAW/C/LBN/CO/6, 1 March 2022, paragraph 50). The Committee recalls that the model employment contract on the rights and duties of men and women migrant workers and their employers was prepared in collaboration with the ILO Regional Office for the Arab States in Beirut and that, as the reform of the Labour Code has still not been completed, these workers are still excluded from its scope of application and are not therefore covered by its protective provisions. The Committee notes that, within the framework of its collaboration with the Government, the ILO Office in Beirut reactivated in February 2022 the working group on migrant domestic workers, established with local and international human rights organizations and with the participation of the International Organisation for Migration (IOM) and the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (OHCHR). The Committee further notes a drastic reduction in the number of migrant domestic workers in the country over the past two years and that, according to the data provided by the Ministry of Labour to the ILO Regional Office, at the end of 2021, only 9,762 new migrant domestic workers had been recruited (compared with 33,075 at the end of 2019 and 67,793 at the end of 2017), and that the total number of such workers with a work permit was 65,825 in 2021 (compared with 184,196 in 2019 and 164,884 in 2017). In view of the serious consequences of the COVID-19 pandemic on migrant domestic workers, and particularly on women migrant domestic workers, and the increased risk of vulnerability to discrimination and exploitation that they have faced, and still are facing, the Committee requests the Government to take measures without delay to ensure that the model employment contract for men and women migrant domestic workers:

- (i) is adopted and implemented as soon as possible;
- (ii) establishes decent employment, labour and living conditions, in particular in relation to wages, hours of work, termination of employment, the right of workers to remove themselves in the event of danger, and freedom of movement, the prohibition for employers to retain their identity and residence documents, and their accommodation conditions;
- (iii) contains no provisions liable to place domestic workers in a situation of vulnerability in relation to discrimination, exploitation and abuse.

Article 2. Equality of opportunity and treatment for men and women. Occupational segregation. Public service. The Committee recalls that it highlighted substantial gender disparities among higher categories of public employees and requested the Government to examine the causes and actively promote the access of women to a greater number of positions at all levels, including positions of responsibility. It also recalls that it emphasized the low proportion of women in the highest category of the public service (25.4 per cent in 2016). The Committee notes the Government's indication, in its report to the CEDAW, that: (1) the Basil Fleihan Institute of Finance and Economics of the Ministry of Finance offers training opportunities on an equal and ongoing basis to support career paths and trailblazing roles for women, particularly in economic and financial positions and departments; and (2) the proportion of women taking part in these training courses increased from 41.19 per cent in 2017 to 50.6 per cent in 2018 and to 58.7 per cent in 2019 (CEDAW/C/LBN/6, 27 July 2020, paragraph 98). In the absence of more recent information in this regard, the Committee is bound to reiterate its request to the Government to examine the reasons why women have such low representation among the highest category of public employees and, based on its conclusions, to take measures to eliminate obstacles to gender equality and actively promote the access of women to a greater number of positions at all levels, and particularly higher levels.

Enforcement. In the absence of recent information on this subject, the Committee once again requests the Government to:

- (i) adopt the necessary training and awareness-raising measures to enable labour inspectors to better identify discriminatory practices against workers, including migrant workers, particularly with regard to recruitment (for example by examining vacancies, or the selection procedures used);
- (ii) ensure that complaints procedures are established that are accessible to workers and based on the principles of confidentiality and protection against reprisals; and
- (iii) provide information on any cases of discrimination detected by the labour inspection services or brought to the attention of the Ministry of Labour or referred to the courts.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Madagascar

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1962)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Trade Union Confederation of Malagasy Revolutionary Workers (FISEMARE), received on 1 September 2022.

Articles 1(b) and 2(2)(a) of the Convention. Equal remuneration for work of equal value. Legislation. For several years, the Committee has been emphasizing that the provisions of section 53 of the Labour Code are more restrictive than those of the Convention, as they limit the application of the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value to persons engaged in the same job and with the same vocational qualifications. The Committee notes that a draft text to revise the Labour Code has been prepared by the Government and was forwarded to the Office in February 2022 for technical comments. The Office suggested that section 53(1) of the Labour Code should be reworded as follows: “[For equal work or work performed under equal conditions, and for work of a different nature but nevertheless of equal value], wages shall be equal for all workers irrespective of their origin, colour, national extraction, sex, age, trade union membership, opinion or status under the conditions set out in the present Chapter”. The Committee also notes the Government’s indication in its report that the amendment of section 53 of the Labour Code was discussed with the social partners during a tripartite consultation held in March 2021. The Government adds that a preliminary draft of the Bill to issue the new Labour Code was submitted in September and October 2021 to the National Labour Council (CNT) with a view to hearing the views of the social partners, and then in December 2021 and January 2022 to the Commission on the Reform of Business Law (CRDA). Moreover, with reference to the observations by the Autonomous Trade Union of Labour Inspectors (SAIT) received in 2021, the Committee recalls that, while the Convention applies to all workers, it exclusively covers wage inequalities or remuneration gaps between men and women for work of equal value. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Labour Code will be amended in the near future and that the new wording of section 53 will give full expression to the principle of equal remuneration, not only for equal work or work performed under equal conditions, but also for work of an entirely different nature that is of equal value overall. It requests the Government to provide information on this subject and on any other measures adopted or envisaged to promote and ensure in practice equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1961)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Trade Union Confederation of Malagasy Revolutionary Workers (FISEMARE), received on 1 September 2022.

Article 1 of the Convention. Protection against discrimination. Grounds of discrimination. Legislation. For several years, the Committee has been emphasizing that neither the Labour Code nor the Civil Service Regulations prohibit discrimination on all of the grounds enumerated in the Convention. Discrimination on the basis of colour and social origin is not prohibited by the Labour Code (see section 261) and discrimination on the basis of race, colour and social origin is not prohibited by the Civil Service Regulations (see section 5). The Committee notes the Government’s indication in its report that a preliminary draft Bill to issue a new Labour Code has been submitted to the National Labour Council (CNT) and contains provisions that are in conformity with the Convention, as well as definitions of the concepts of direct and indirect discrimination and sexual harassment at the workplace. It notes, however, that the Government did not provide a copy of this draft text with its report nor has it provided the envisaged new wording of section 261 of the Labour Code. In this regard, the Committee observes that, in the Memorandum of technical comments on the draft revision of the Labour Code that it provided to the Government in March 2021, the International Labour Office (ILO) indicated that, in the version that had been submitted to it for comment in February 2021, the proposed revision of the Labour Code did not affect section 261 of the current Labour Code. It also notes the Government’s indication that new General Regulations for Public Employees (SGAP) are being prepared, with a view to harmonizing the provisions of the Civil Service Regulations and the General Regulations for Contractual Public Employees. The Government specifies that, in accordance with section 14 of the draft SGAP, “there is no discrimination on the basis of gender, religion, opinion, origin, ancestry, political conviction, disability, membership or not of a trade union". However, the Committee notes with concern that this provision still does not prohibit discrimination on the basis of race, colour and social origin and does not define indirect discrimination. The Committee also notes the general information provided by the Government on the penalties envisaged for violations of section 261 of the Labour Code and the indication that information is still being collected on administrative decisions relating to the prohibition of discrimination. In this regard, the Committee recalls that the monitoring and enforcement of anti-discrimination laws by the courts is an important aspect of the effective implementation of the Convention. It is therefore necessary to collect and publish detailed information on the number, nature and outcome of complaints to the courts and administrative bodies in order to assess the effectiveness of procedures and mechanisms (2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 868 and 871). The Committee therefore requests the Government to: (i) provide precise updated information on the current revision of the Labour Code, and particularly section 261, to ensure that it explicitly prohibits discrimination on all of the grounds enumerated in the Convention, including colour and social origin, and that it explicitly covers indirect discrimination; (ii) take the necessary measures to amend section 14 of the draft General Regulations for Public Employees to ensure that it explicitly prohibits discrimination on all of the grounds enumerated in the Convention, including race, colour and social origin, and that it includes a definition of discrimination that explicitly encompasses indirect discrimination; and (iii) provide detailed information on the interpretation and effect given by the courts in practice to section 261 of the Labour Code and section 5 of the Civil Service Regulations (or section 14 of the General Regulations for Public Employees, if they have been adopted), with a copy of any court or administrative decisions handed down under these provisions.

Discriminatory job vacancy announcements. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government's indication that it was envisaging the adoption of provisions to regulate, in conformity with the requirements of the Convention, vacancies advertised on the radio or through notices in public places, which impose affiliation to a certain religion as a condition for recruitment or specify that the job is solely for men or women. It notes that, although the Government recognizes that this is a common discriminatory practice in all sectors, it still does not refer to any specific measures that have been adopted or are envisaged to regulate this practice and does not indicate the role played by the labour inspection services in this regard. The Committee therefore expresses the firm hope that the Government, in collaboration with employers' and workers' organizations, will take all the necessary measures to ensure the application in practice of the national legislation and prohibit any form of direct or indirect discrimination on all of the grounds enumerated in the Convention, including religion and sex, in job vacancy announcements, including in advertisements on the radio or notices in public places. It once again requests the Government to provide information on any progress achieved in this regard.

Domestic workers. The Committee previously invited the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the provisions of the Labour Code apply in practice to men and women domestic workers (some of whom work without a written employment contract) and to provide detailed information on the number and outcome of the controls carried out by the labour inspection services on this subject. In this connection, it notes that, in its Memorandum of technical comments of March 2021 referred to above, the Office recommended specifying in section 1 of the Labour Code that it applies to men and women domestic workers, particularly in relation to its provisions respecting non-discrimination and working conditions. The Committee welcomes the indication by the Government that, on 11 June 2019, Madagascar ratified the Domestic Workers Convention, 2011 (No. 189). It also notes the Government's reiterated indication that domestic workers enjoy the same rights as other workers, as the labour legislation is applicable to them. The Committee notes with regret that, according to the Government, no statistical data is available on the number and outcome of the controls carried out by labour inspectors concerning the working conditions of domestic workers. The Government specifies that the legislation in force does not yet permit effective intervention by labour inspectors in this regard, due in particular to the principle of the inviolability of the home, which makes it impossible for labour inspectors to enter the homes of private individuals who employ domestic workers. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will take all the necessary measures to ensure that men and women domestic workers benefit, not only in law, but also in practice, from the protection afforded by the provisions of the Labour Code, particularly in relation to non-discrimination and working conditions. It therefore requests the Government to: (i) provide specific information on any measures adopted or envisaged for this purpose; and (ii) provide information on any measures adopted or envisaged to facilitate the access of labour inspectors to the homes of private individuals employing men and women domestic workers.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Malawi

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1965)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) received on 25 August 2022, which reproduce the statements made in June 2022 before the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (CAS) by the Employer spokesperson and the national employers' representative, as well as the observations of the International Union of Food, Agricultural, Hotel, Restaurant, Catering, Tobacco and Allied Workers' Associations (IUF), received on 1 September 2022.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 110th Session, May–June 2022)

The Committee notes the detailed discussion which took place at the 110th Session of the CAS in May–June 2022 concerning the application of the Convention by Malawi, as well as the conclusions adopted. The Committee notes with interest the prioritization by Malawi of the follow-up to be given to the CAS conclusions and the Committee's comments. It also notes the multidisciplinary technical assistance provided by the ILO Decent Work Team for Eastern and Southern Africa (DWT-Pretoria) and the ILO Country Office for Zambia, Malawi and Mozambique (CO-Lusaka) in July and August 2022.

Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. Discrimination based on sex. Sexual harassment. In its previous comment, the Committee made various requests following allegations of gender-based violence and harassment (including rape and sexual harassment) occurring in tea plantations and macadamia nut orchards.

The Committee takes note that the CAS noted with deep concern the trade unions' allegations of systematic sexual violence and harassment of women, including the rape, assault and discrimination suffered by women workers on tea and macadamia nut plantations. In its conclusions, the CAS urged the Government to take all necessary measures, in consultation with the social partners, to: (1) ensure existing legislation on sexual harassment is in line with the Convention; (2) organize dedicated tripartite discussions on the issue of sexual harassment and violence in the workplace with a view to taking further practical and concrete measures to ensure the effective protection of workers in this regard in law and practice; (3) ensure effective access to and the effective functioning of national judicial and non-judicial mechanisms that consider allegations of breach of workers' rights on grounds of discrimination, including sexual harassment and violence, and provide adequate legal remedies to victims; and (4) continue supporting existing initiatives undertaken by the Malawi Human Rights Commission and the Department of Human Resources Management and Development, including awareness-raising campaigns and the dissemination of the Sexual Harassment Workplace Policy and related guidelines to ensure that employers develop and implement effective workplace harassment policies.

Evaluation of the existing legal framework on sexual harassment and its alignment with the Convention.

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that a review of the existing legal and policy frameworks on sexual harassment in the tea sector covering existing gaps, scope of application, protection and prevention, enforcement and remedies, guidance, training and awareness-raising is being finalized with the technical assistance of the ILO and the results will be shared with the Committee. The Government also provides information about an agreement reached with the social partners to amend the Gender Equality Act (GEA) of 2013 in order to explicitly include hostile work environment in the definition of sexual harassment. Moreover, the inclusion of legal provisions on sexual harassment in the Employment Act, 2000 and the Occupational Safety Health and Welfare Act, 1997, is under consideration. In this last respect, the Committee refers to its detailed comments under the Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155), the Promotional Framework for Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 2006 (No. 187) and the Safety and Health in Agriculture Convention, 2001 (No. 184). Recalling that sexual harassment is a serious manifestation of sex discrimination, the Committee emphasizes that the review of the legal and policy framework on sexual harassment should take place in the context of a broader review of the legal and policy framework on discrimination in general.

Regarding the amendment of section 6(1) of the Gender Equality Act of 2013 to ensure that the term "reasonable person" in the definition of sexual harassment no longer refers to the harasser, but to an outside person, the Committee notes the Government's explanation that, under Malawian law, the term "reasonable person" provides an objective test that goes beyond the harasser. The Committee considers that the test of "reasonableness" gives inadequate weight to the experience of the victim. It recalls that sexual harassment includes: (1) (quid pro quo): any physical, verbal or non-verbal conduct of a sexual nature and other conduct based on sex affecting the dignity of women and men, which is unwelcome, unreasonable, and offensive to the recipient; and a person's rejection of, or submission to, such conduct is used explicitly or implicitly as a basis for a decision which affects that person's job; and (2) (hostile work environment): conduct that creates an intimidating, hostile or humiliating working environment for the recipient. The lived experience of the recipient, that is to say the victim of sexual harassment, and the impact that third party's conduct has on her/him should thus form the basis of any assessment aimed at ascertaining whether or not sexual harassment occurred.

Tripartite discussion on the issue of sexual harassment and violence in the workplace. The Government also indicates that the question of sexual harassment has been included on the agenda of the Tripartite Labour Advisory Council (TLAC), which is expected to provide direction on how the Ministry of Labour's role in addressing violence and harassment in the workplace can be strengthened.

Capacity-building and awareness-raising on sexual harassment. The Committee notes that the Malawi Human Rights Commission (MHRC) is developing a model sexual harassment workplace policy with a view to promoting the adoption of sexual harassment policies and preventing the occurrence of sexual harassment in both the public and private sectors. At the same time, the Department of Human Resource Management and Development continues to promote the adoption of sexual harassment workplace policies in the public sector. The Committee furthermore notes that the MHRC undertook a situation analysis on engaging the private, public, and informal sector on addressing sexual gender-based violence (SGBV) and sexual harassment in the workplace. The analysis revealed that there is little knowledge about sexual harassment among enforcement officials, journalists and members of cooperatives, which hinders the realization of rights by victims as well as their access to justice. Consequently, the MHRC is developing an action plan to enhance awareness and build capacity to address sexual harassment effectively. The Government also indicates that the Ministry of Gender, Children, Community Development and Social Welfare conducted training sessions for police officers, chiefs (traditional leaders), court officials and the media on the enforcement of the Gender Equality Act.

In addition, the Government, in cooperation with the ILO, has planned to organize a strategic compliance workshop for all labour inspectors with a view to strengthening their capacity to prevent, identify and address cases of violence and sexual harassment in employment and occupation.

Access to judicial and quasi-judicial mechanisms and legal remedies for victims of discrimination, including sexual harassment. The Government states that action is being taken to enhance collaboration between all stakeholders – namely, the Ministry of Gender and the Ministry of Labour, the social partners, the courts, the MHRC, the police and relevant civil society organizations – with a view to addressing challenges related to access to legal remedies, as well as to enhancing cooperation with the social partners and relevant civil society organizations for the purpose of sharing information in order to jointly address these challenges. The Government also indicates that the Malawi Congress of Trade Unions (MCTU) has conducted investigations into alleged cases of workplace violence and harassment and reported them to the MHRC for action. The MHRC recorded 23 cases of sexual violence and harassment between January 2021 and April 2022. The Committee notes that no details are provided on the actions being taken to address challenges related to access to legal remedies or on the challenges identified. The Committee recalls that a number of obstacles may in practice impede victims' access to justice, including lack of an appropriate legal framework, lack of awareness of rights, lack of confidence in or absence of practical access to procedures, fear of reprisals, issues related to representation and standing, the burden of proof, fear of victimization or physical, financial and linguistic obstacles, such as procedural costs and the lack of physical access to the remedial mechanisms when those are located only in main urban centres (see 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 870 and 884). The Committee also recalls that allowing trade unions to bring complaints is important as it reduces the risk of reprisals and is also likely to serve as a deterrent to discriminatory action (see 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 886).

The Committee notes that, in its observations, the IUF refers to statements by different parties acknowledging that cases of trading sex for favours, or even for work, are found in the tea estates and are one of the factors contributing to the transmission of HIV and AIDS at work. The IUF also reports that the case filed by a London-based law firm on behalf of Malawian women alleging that they had been subjected to gender-based violence and harassment (including rape and sexual harassment) on tea plantations and macadamia nut orchards was settled out of court on a confidential basis without admission of liability. The Committee notes that, according to the IUF, sexual harassment on Malawi's plantations is an endemic problem. The IUF states that it appreciates the Government's commitment to addressing gender-based violence and harassment and other forms of discrimination in the workplace working closely with the social partners. It shared its concern about the lack of data on the effectiveness of the Malawian court system to deal with cases of sexual harassment. The IUF emphasized that trade unions must be actively involved in the design, negotiation, implementation and monitoring of any policies to eliminate gender-based violence and harassment in the world of work and clearly indicated its commitment to take part in any relevant and dedicated tripartite meetings in Malawi. Furthermore, it underscored the need for independent research on the causes of gender-based violence and harassment on Malawi's tea plantations, including work arrangements and non-standard forms of work which make women vulnerable.

The Committee notes that, in its response to the IUF's observations, the Government refers to several cases of sexual harassment addressed by the courts. The Government also reiterates its commitment to engage with workers' and employers' organizations to address sexual harassment and violence. It furthermore indicates that, once the findings of the "review of the existing legal and policy frameworks on sexual harassment in the tea sector" are validated with the relevant stakeholders, including the social partners, it hopes to use them to strengthen the policy and legislative framework on violence and harassment in all sectors of the economy in general and in the tea sector in particular. Should the report prove insufficiently comprehensive, the Government will request further ILO assistance.

The Committee notes that the African Commission on Human and Peoples' Rights (ACHPR) recommended that Malawi "should take steps to pass a law against sexual harassment" (Concluding Observations and Recommendations, adopted at the 70th session of the ACHPR, 2022, paragraph 86).

While welcoming the initiatives undertaken by the Government to strengthen the national legal and policy framework on sexual harassment at work, the Committee remains concerned by the alleged pervasiveness of the problem, especially on plantations, and requests the Government to develop a detailed road map, in cooperation with the social partners, outlining key actions and a precise timeline in order to allow for monitoring and evaluating progress. In particular, it requests the Government:

- (i) to move expeditiously towards the alignment of the national legal and policy framework with the Convention in cooperation with the social partners, including by amending section 6(1) of the Gender Equality Act of 2013 to explicitly include hostile work environment harassment in the definition of sexual harassment and by reviewing the test of "reasonableness", and to provide information on all developments in this respect as well as on the results and recommendations of the evaluation exercise undertaken;
- (ii) to supply details on the action being taken to address challenges related to access to legal remedies for victims of discrimination in employment and occupation, including sexual harassment, in collaboration with the social partners and other relevant stakeholders, including information on the challenges identified;
- (iii) to step up its efforts to increase the capacity of the competent authorities, including labour inspectors, to prevent, identify and address cases of discrimination in employment and occupation, including sexual harassment, as well as workers' awareness of available remedies, to provide information on the number of cases of sexual harassment in the public and private sectors dealt with by the courts and the MHRC or detected by labour inspectors, the remedies granted to victims and the sanctions imposed on perpetrators. The Government is also asked to provide information on the action plan on awareness-raising being developed by the MHRC;
- (iv) to continue to promote social dialogue on the issue of sexual harassment at work and how best to prevent and address it in practice, and to provide information on any recommendation formulated by the Tripartite Labour Advisory Council (TLAC) in this respect and the steps taken as a result, including information on any action taken by the TLAC to promote the adoption of a sexual harassment workplace policy and the directions provided on how the Ministry of Labour's role in addressing violence and harassment in the workplace can be strengthened, or information on the timeline for discussing the adoption of these directions;
- (v) to provide information on the uptake of the model Sexual Harassment Workplace Policy developed by the MHRC and its impact; and
- (vi) to continue to supply information on relevant initiatives by the Malawi Human Rights Commission and the Department of Human Resources Management and Development.

The Committee also encourages the Government to consider undertaking a study, in cooperation with workers' and employers' organizations, on the underlying causes and risk factors for sexual harassment at work, placing the problem within the broader context of discrimination with a special focus on tea plantations and macadamia nut orchards, in order to design an appropriate strategy to tackle the problem at its roots.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Nicaragua

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1967)

Previous comment

Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. Discrimination on the basis of sex. Sexual harassment. The Committee takes note of the labour legislation provisions (Labour Code, section 17(p)) and in the field of criminal justice (Criminal Code, section 174, as amended by Act No. 779 against violence towards women) which sanction sexual harassment and quid pro quo sexual harassment. The Committee also notes from the Government's report that: (1) in October 2020, the Supreme Court of Justice adopted the "Protocol to prevent and address labour and sexual harassment in the Nicaraguan legal system", which aims to prevent, address and eliminate all forms of violence arising from labour and sexual harassment throughout the legal system; (2) the Ministry of Labour has been implementing processes to address labour complaints, including complaints of labour harassment, with mechanisms providing immediate action and prompt investigation by the labour inspectorate, in strict compliance with the labour legislation, and without prejudice to action that the workers affected may take through appropriate judicial channels; (3) between 2018 and 2021 the Ministry of Labour received 111 complaints of ill-treatment, labour and sexual harassment (in 40, the complaint was not upheld; 36 were accepted; 15 were settled with an agreement between the parties; 5 were withdrawn; and 4 went to criminal proceedings); (4) the Ministry of Labour has a Technical Gender Unit, which promotes equality of treatment and opportunity for women and men; and (5) between April 2020 and March 2021, none of the 19 labour courts of the first instance recorded a complaint for sexual harassment at the workplace. The Committee welcomes the initiative taken by the Supreme Court of Justice and observes that the above-mentioned Protocol defines sexual harassment as including harassment that is assimilated to blackmail (quid pro quo harassment) as well as harassment derived from a hostile work environment.

The Committee requests the Government to:

- (i) indicate the extent to which the provision of the Labour Code (section 17(p)) also covers the "hostile work environment";
- (ii) provide details of the penalties imposed where complaints submitted to the Ministry of Labour are upheld and identified as acts of sexual harassment;
- (iii) provide details of any administrative complaint or legal action filed with the labour or criminal courts under the provisions of the Labour Code or Criminal Code in respect of sexual and quid pro quo harassment; and
- (iv) continue to provide information on all measures adopted regarding awareness-raising and prevention of sexual harassment.

Discrimination on the basis of political opinion. The Committee notes that the Government: (1) refers to the Political Constitution and its provisions on non-discrimination on grounds of political creed, freedom of expression and equality in the enjoyment and exercise of political rights; (2) reports that none of the labour lawsuits filed against the central State ministries arise from political discrimination against civil or public servants, who enjoy freedom to take up the ideas of any political ideology, as they see fit; (3) in the period between April 2020 and March 2021, the labour courts heard no cases of violations of fundamental rights related to discrimination on ideological or political grounds; (4) the Office of the Procurator for Human Rights is the national institution that promotes, defends and safeguards the constitutional rights of citizens, and conducts, by virtue of Act No. 212 of 1995, ex officio investigations or investigations at the request of the party, of complaints of alleged human rights violations (the Government reports that no complaints of pressure or reprisals for participation in any type of demonstration have been received, and that during the unsuccessful 2018 coup d'état, 47 public servants denounced curtailed freedom of movement); and (5) in 2020, the Office of the Procurator for Human Rights initiated a direct approach and proximity strategy for Nicaraguans, promoting human rights education, and the receipt of complaints (the Government reports that more than 3,000 visits to urban and rural areas have been undertaken, and no complaints on grounds of political opinion have been received from the public).

The Committee notes with concern the serious situation of political discrimination in the country, as reflected in the reports from United Nations bodies and the Inter-American Human Rights System. This context explains the grounds that led to the adoption of resolution 49/3 on the promotion and protection of human rights in Nicaragua, adopted by the United Nations Human Rights Council on 31 March 2022, in which the Council, among other matters: (1) expressed grave concern “at the violations of civil and political rights in the context of the electoral process of 2021, in contravention of the obligations of Nicaragua to uphold the right of every citizen to take part in the conduct of public affairs and to vote and be elected in genuine periodic elections” as well as at “the adoption and use of legal provisions that explicitly aim, or may be used, to restrict the ability of Nicaraguan citizens to participate in the political process;” (2) condemned “the continuation of arbitrary detentions and new arbitrary detentions, including in the context of the electoral process of 2021, of, inter alia, opposition pre-presidential candidates and political leaders, human rights defenders, business people, journalists, peasant and student leaders and members of civil society organizations, and expressing grave concern for their integrity, treatment and detention conditions, including health conditions, which may constitute torture or cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment, and recognizing the particular vulnerability of older and sick persons, and women and girls, in detention”; (3) expressed “grave concern at the deterioration of democracy and the situation of human rights in Nicaragua, in particular with regard to the enjoyment of civil and political rights, continuing reports of human rights violations and abuses”; and (4) decided to “establish, for a period of one year, a group of three human rights experts on Nicaragua, to be appointed by the President of the Human Rights Council”, which, among other activities, will “conduct thorough and independent investigations into all alleged human rights violations and abuses committed in Nicaragua since April 2018, including the possible gender dimensions of such violations and abuses, and their structural root causes” (A/HRC/RES/49/3, preambular paragraphs 9 and 12, substantive paragraphs 1 and 14(a)). The Committee also notes that the Human Rights Committee (United Nations Covenant on Civil and Political Rights (CCPR)) refers to a generalized repression to restrain the people (CCPR/C/NIC/CO/4, 3 November 2022, paragraphs 31, 35 and 37), and that the United Nations Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, in its concluding observations on the fifth periodic report of Nicaragua, expressed deep concern to note allegations that persons who oppose or criticize the Government are subjected to discrimination on the basis of political opinion that affects the exercise and enjoyment of their economic, social and cultural rights, in particular their right to work and their access to health services (E/C.12/NIC.CO/5, 11 November 2021, paragraph 17). Lastly, the Committee notes the press release from the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) of 4 November 2022 which notes the “recrudescence of repression and persecution of political opponents”.

In the same vein, the Committee notes with concern that the Inter-American Court of Human Rights adopted on 22 November 2022 a resolution on provisional measures (Matter of Juan Sebastián Chamorro et al. and 45 inmates in 8 prisons, regarding Nicaragua) in which it declared the State of Nicaragua to be in permanent contempt of court for failing to comply with the provisional measures, whose purpose is precautionary and protective, in violation of its obligations under the American Convention on Human Rights. The Committee considers that a climate of violence, insecurity and intimidation, as described by the United Nations bodies or the IACHR is propitious for serious acts of discrimination in employment and occupation against persons who express their political opinion. The Committee urges the Government to adopt the necessary measures to comply with its observations on matters of non-discrimination in employment and occupation, and requests the Government to report on: (i) any additional measure taken to eliminate discrimination on political grounds and provide adequate protection for workers in the event of discrimination on the basis of political opinion; and (ii) the outcome of any investigation conducted into complaints against the administrative or judicial authorities for acts of discrimination on the basis political opinion.

Discrimination on the basis of race. Indigenous peoples. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the global registry of enrolment in higher education and vocational training for the 2020 and 2021 period shows a total of 308,699 students, of whom 49,911 were from indigenous or Afro-descendent peoples and of whom more than half were women. The Government provides detailed statistics disaggregated by sex, region and university, and reports on measures taken in them to prevent and eradicate discrimination in education. The Committee also notes the concluding observations of the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD), in particular that the Committee: (1) "urges the State to take the urgent action required to guarantee effective protection and respect for the rights of indigenous and Afro-descendent peoples, particularly in the Atlantic Coast region" and "urges the State Party to continue its efforts to effectively promote social inclusion, reduce the incidence of poverty and inequality affecting members of indigenous or Afro-descendent peoples, including through the adoption of specific or affirmative action to eliminate the structural discrimination that they continue to face"; and (2) "recommends that the State Party combat the multiple forms of discrimination faced by indigenous and Afro-descendent women, including through the incorporation of a gender perspective in all policies and strategies against racial discrimination". Equally, the CERD recommend that Nicaragua adopt measures ensuring that indigenous and Afro-descendent women have access to all of their rights, including education, employment and health, taking account of cultural and linguistic differences" (CERD/C/NIC/CO/15-21, 30 August 2022, paragraphs 17 and 39). In this respect, the Committee requests the Government to continue reporting on all measures adopted or envisaged to protect indigenous and Afro-descendent peoples against racial discrimination in employment and occupation.

Article 2. National policy on equality of opportunity and treatment. Public service and private sector. With regard to its previous comments, the Committee welcomes and notes the detailed information provided by the Government on: (1) the legal framework recognizing equality as the starting point for promoting and obtaining non-discrimination; (2) various initiatives to generate employment for women; (3) statistical data on the employment of men and women in the public sector (in 2021, 59 per cent were women; in the judiciary, more than 60 per cent of administrative and managerial posts were occupied by women); (4) the constitutional decision on equality between men and women in posts assigned by popular election; (5) many programmes, strategies, plans and projects to eliminate gender stereotypes, and action to provide protection against discrimination in early childhood, adolescence and youth; and (6) continuous training processes for public servants in the area of legislation on equality. The Committee requests the Government to continue reporting on the outcomes of the many actions taken relating to the national policy of equality of opportunity and treatment.

Enforcement. Labour inspection. The Committee notes the number of inspections undertaken relating to equality and non-discrimination at work as reported by the Government. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the type of violations identified relating to the application of the Convention, the corrective measures introduced and the penalties imposed.

In light of the situation described above, the Committee notes with deep concern the climate of violence, insecurity and intimidation in the country which is propitious for serious acts of discrimination in employment and occupation against persons who express their political opinion. In this context, the Committee notes the arbitrary detentions of political leaders, human rights defenders, business people, journalists, peasant and student leaders and members of civil society organizations. It further notes the continuing reports of human rights violations and abuses, including gender-based discrimination. The Committee considers that this case meets the criteria set out in paragraph 114 of its General Report to be asked to come before the Conference.

Pakistan

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 2001)

Previous comment

Legislative developments. Provinces. The Committee notes with interest the recent enactment of numerous labour laws in Balochistan, Punjab and Sindh provinces, such as the Sindh Payment of Wages Act, 2015 (Sindh Act No. VI of 2017), the Sindh Minimum Wages Act, 2015 (Act No. VIII of 2016), the Punjab Minimum Wages Act, 2019 (Act No. XXVIII of 2019), the Balochistan Minimum Wages Act, 2021 (Act No. X of 2021), the Balochistan Payment of Wages Act, 2021 (Act No. XIII of 2021), as a result of the 18th Constitutional Amendment adopted in 2010 devolving the subject of labour to the provinces while the responsibility of coordination of labour-related issues still lies with the Federal Government. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on any legislative developments concerning wages and equal remuneration for men and women which give effect to the Convention.

Articles 1–4 of the Convention. Assessing and addressing the gender pay gap. The Committee notes that, according to the Global Wage Report 2018/19 published by the ILO, the mean hourly gender pay gap in Pakistan is 34 per cent and women account for almost 90 per cent of wage earners in the bottom 1 per cent but just 9 per cent in the top 1 per cent. The Committee asks the Government to collect and compile information disaggregated by sex, on the levels of remuneration of men and women, if possible, by sector of the economy or occupational category, and provide them together with any available information on the gender pay gap. It further asks the Government to take the necessary measures to address the gender pay gap, in particular measures to address gender occupational segregation, and refers in this regard to its comments under the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111).

Articles 1(a) and 2(2)(a). Definition of remuneration. Legislation. The Committee notes that section 2(1)(xix) of the Sindh Payment of Wages Act, 2015 and section 2(o) of the Balochistan Payment of Wages Act, 2021, define “wages” as including “basic pay and statutory and non-statutory allowances”, but excludes any contribution paid by the employer to any pension fund or provident fund, any travelling allowance or the value of travelling concession, any sum paid to defray special expenses, any annual bonus or any sums payable on discharge. In its previous observations, the Committee also noted that the Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Payment of Wages Act, 2013 (Act No. IX of 2013) had a similar definition of “wages”. The Committee recalls that Article 1(a) of the Convention, for the purpose of implementing the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, provides a broad definition of “remuneration” which includes not only the ordinary, basic or minimum wage or salary, but also “any additional emoluments whatsoever payable directly or indirectly by the employer to the worker and arising out of the worker’s employment”. This definition also captures payments or benefits whether received regularly or only occasionally. It covers among others cost-of-living allowances, dependency allowances, travel allowances, housing and residential allowances, vacation allowances as well as allowances paid under social security schemes financed by the undertaking or industry concerned (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 686, 687 and 691–692). In order to fully apply the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, the Committee requests the Government to ensure that the provincial governments of Balochistan, Khyber Pakhtunkhwa and Sindh provinces: (i) take into account all the elements included in the definition of “remuneration”, in accordance with Article 1(a) of the Convention, including emoluments “payable directly or indirectly, whether in cash or in kind, by the employer to the worker and arising out of the worker’s employment”; and (ii) envisage amending the above laws accordingly.

Articles 1(b) and 2(2)(a). Equal remuneration for work of equal value. Legislation. The Committee notes with interest that the Balochistan Payment of Wages Act, 2021, includes provisions on equal remuneration for the same work or work of a similar nature and work of equal value (section 7) and defines work of equal value (section 2(p)). The Committee notes however that other provincial labour laws previously adopted, such as the Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Payment of Wages Act, 2013, and the Sindh Payment of Wages Act, 2015, do not contain any provisions on equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. Further, the Committee notes that section 21 of the Punjab Minimum Wages Act, 2019, and section 18 of the Sindh Minimum Wages Act, 2015, prohibit wage discrimination based on sex. The Committee urges the Government to ensure that the Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Payment of Wages Act, 2013 and the Sindh Payment of Wages Act, 2015, as well as other any other provincial acts on wages, are amended to give full expression the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the implementation of the Balochistan Payment of Wages Act, 2021, and its impact on the elimination of the gender wage gap in the province.

Articles 2 and 3. Objective job evaluation. The Committee recalls that, in its previous observation, it encouraged the Government to take measures to ensure that objective job evaluation on the basis of the work performed is integrated into any new provincial labour legislation. In that regard, the Committee notes with interest that the Balochistan Minimum Wages Act, 2021, defines “job appraisal scheme” as “the scheme evolved and introduced by the industry concerned with the approval of the Government for objective appraisal for determination of wage differentials without regard to sex, to ensure the enforcement of the principle of equal remuneration for male and female workers for work of equal value”. It also provides that a comprehensive objective job evaluation scheme “shall in particular take care of gender equality in matters regarding equal remuneration for male and female workers for work of equal value” (section 17). The Committee further notes the Government’s indication that the reform of the Minimum Wages Ordinance, 1961, is planned. Concerning the Government’s indication that job evaluation is the prerogative of the employer, the Committee recalls that objective job evaluation is concerned with assessing the relative value of jobs with varying content on the basis of the work to be performed, not the performance of an individual worker carrying out his or her job. It is a systematic process which, through analysing the content of different jobs, gives a numerical value to each job. Two jobs found to have the same overall numerical value are entitled to equal remuneration. Objective job evaluation is concerned with evaluating the job and not the individual worker (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 696 and 700). The Committee requests the Government: (i) to take measures to ensure that the use of objective job evaluation methods based on work performed is provided for in the provincial labour legislation of Islamabad Capital Territory, Khyber Pakhtunkhwa, Punjab and Sindh; and (ii) to provide information on any developments in this regard, including on measures taken to develop and implement objective job appraisal methods for use in both the public and private sectors. It also asks the Government to provide information, including statistical data, on the implementation of the Balochistan Minimum Wages Act, 2021, sections 2(i) and 17 in practice.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1961)

Previous comment

Article 1 of the Convention. Protection of workers against discrimination. Legislative developments. The Committee recalls that following the 18th constitutional amendment of 2010, which devolved the power to enact laws related to labour from the federal Parliament to the provincial governments, Pakistani provincial governments adopted a series of laws such as the Balochistan Payment of Wages Act (2021), the Balochistan Minimum Wages Act (2021), the Punjab Minimum Wages Act (2019), the Sindh Minimum Wages Act (2015) and the Sindh Payment of Wages Act (2015) which prohibit discrimination in remuneration on various grounds, including but not limited to, religion, caste, ethnic background, colour, creed and sect. The Committee welcomes the adoption of these laws, which constitutes progress in the application of the Convention. It notes, however, that the provincial laws do not include all of the prohibited grounds of discrimination set out in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention as they notably omit the grounds of national extraction and social origin. The Committee also notes that the newly adopted laws do not appear to apply to all aspects of employment, namely, access to vocational education and training, employment and particular occupations, and terms and conditions of employment as provided for in Article 1(3) of the Convention. The Committee reiterates that clear and comprehensive definitions of what constitutes discrimination in employment and occupation are instrumental in identifying and addressing the many manifestations in which it may occur (see 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 743). Recalling that it had noted in its previous observation that political opinion was not included as a prohibited ground of discrimination by the Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Provincial Government in 2013, the Committee notes that, in response, the Government has highlighted the inclusion of “political affiliation” in laws adopted in Khyber Pakhtunkhwa and Sindh provinces. The Committee notes that protection against discrimination on the basis of political opinion is broader than protection against discrimination based on “political affiliation” (see 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 805). The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure, including through the tripartite consultation committee established at the federal level, that all of the labour laws adopted by the provinces include provisions explicitly defining and prohibiting direct and indirect discrimination, applying to all aspects of employment and occupation, including at the recruitment stage, and covering all workers and at least all of the grounds set out in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention, including political opinion. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on any legislative developments in this regard.

Article 1(1)(a). Discrimination based on sex. Sexual harassment. The Committee notes from the Government’s report that all five Pakistani provinces have laws against harassment of women at the workplace. It further notes that the Protection against Harassment of Women at the Workplace Act (2010), which covers Islamabad Capital Territory, Khyber Pakhtunkhwa and Sindh provinces, requires all public and private organizations to adopt an internal code of conduct and to constitute a committee to adjudicate complaints against harassment. The Committee notes with interest the enactment of the Balochistan Protection Against Harassment of Women at Workplace Act (2016) which covers all forms of sexual harassment (quid pro quo and hostile work environment) committed not only by a person with authority but also by a colleague and a person or persons with whom women workers have contact through their work. The Committee also notes from the Government’s report that the Government indicated that the Federal Ombudsman Secretariat for Protection against Harassment of Women at Workplace received 441 complaints and the Punjab and Sindh provincial Ombudsmen for Protection against Harassment of Women at Workplace received 98 and 350 complaints, respectively. However, it notes that the time frame in which those complaints were submitted remains unclear. The Committee also welcomes the information provided by the Government regarding the activities organized by the Federal Ombudsman and the Provincial Ombudsmen (Punjab and Sindh) to prevent and address sexual harassment, such as the awareness-raising activities for employers, workers and civil society representatives. The Committee asks the Government to consider extending to men the Protection Against Harassment of Women at the Workplace Act (2010), the Punjab Protection Against Harassment of Women at the Workplace Act (2012), the Balochistan Protection Against Harassment of Women at Workplace Act (2016) and any other relevant legislation adopted by the other provinces so as to protect men against sexual harassment in employment and occupation on an equal footing with women. It further asks the Government to take steps to train labour inspectors and judges on the issue of sexual harassment in employment and occupation and raise awareness of the laws on sexual harassment among workers and employers and their respective organizations as well as the public. Lastly, the Committee asks the Government to continue to provide information on: (i) the implementation of these laws in practice, in particular on the adoption by public and private organizations of internal codes of conduct and the constitution of complaints committees to adjudicate complaints against harassment; and (ii) the number and results (sanctions imposed and remedies granted) of complaints lodged for sexual harassment.

Transgender and intersex persons. The Committee notes with interest the adoption of Act No. XIII of 2018, the Transgender Persons (Protection of Rights) Act, which recognizes the right of persons to choose their gender identity and prohibits, inter alia, discrimination against and harassment of transgender and intersex persons based on sex, gender identity and gender expression, in relation to education, employment, trade and occupation, including termination of employment or occupation. The Committee asks the Government to take steps to raise awareness of the Transgender Persons (Protection of Rights) Act (Act No. XIII of 2018) among workers, employers and their respective organizations as well as enforcement authorities, and provide information on its implementation in practice, including any cases of discrimination based on gender identity dealt with by the labour inspectors or the courts.

Discrimination based on social origin. The Committee recalls its observation expressing concern regarding the continuous de facto segregation and discrimination against Dalits. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it does not recognize any discrimination among individuals on the basis of their belonging to a specific caste. The Government further indicates that newly adopted provincial laws, such as the Sindh Payment of Wages Act (2015), the Punjab Minimum Wages Act (2019) and the Balochistan Payment of Wages Act (2021), prohibit discrimination based on caste. The Committee reminds the Government that proactive measures are also required to analyse and address the situation of the different groups in the labour market, in cooperation with workers' and employers' organizations, and to improve knowledge and awareness among ethnic and national minorities about anti-discrimination and equality legislation, enforcement mechanisms and procedures (see 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 775). In this regard, the Committee notes that, in its concluding observations, the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Racial Discrimination (CERD) recommended that measures necessary to end discrimination in employment against Dalits be taken (CERD/C/PAK/CO/21-23, 3 October 2016, paragraph 32). The Committee urges the Government to adopt the necessary measures at the federal and provincial levels to enforce the prohibition of and to eliminate discrimination based on caste with respect to Dalits and promote their inclusion in the labour market in a wider range of jobs. It also asks the Government to provide statistics disaggregated by sex on the employment of Dalits.

Discrimination based on religion. The Committee reiterates its previous observation expressing concern regarding equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation for religious minorities, in particular the members of the Ahmadi minority. It recalls article 260(3)(b) of the Constitution that defines a "non-Muslim" as "a person belonging to the Christian, Hindu, Sikh, Buddhist or Parsi community, a person of the Qadiani Group or the Lahori Group who call themselves "Ahmadis" or by any other name or a Bahai, and a person belonging to any of the Scheduled Castes". The Committee also recalls section 298C of the Penal Code ("blasphemy laws") that singles out members of the Ahmadi minority, as well as the practice which has the effect of denying the Ahmadi minority from obtaining passports identifying them as Muslims. The Committee notes that such provisions have a bearing on the opportunities of religious minorities regarding employment and that they are contradictory to the labour laws that Pakistani provinces have adopted over the past decade, such as the Balochistan Payment of Wages Act (2021), the Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Payment of Wages Act (2013) and the Sindh Payment of Wages Act (2015), which include "religion" as a ground for non-discrimination. The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report does not contain any information regarding any steps taken or envisaged to review the discriminatory legislative provisions and administrative measures. It notes that, in a joint statement, United Nations Human Rights Experts have expressed their deep concern over the lack of attention to the serious human rights violations perpetrated against the Ahmadiyya Muslim community around the world, including in Pakistan. They have urged all States inter alia to: (1) repeal all laws that discriminate against Ahmadi Muslims; (2) ensure the equal and effective participation of Ahmadis in public life and in decision-making processes that affect them, including by guaranteeing their access to employment; (3) address the multiple and intersecting forms of violence and discrimination suffered by Ahmadi women; and (4) eliminate discrimination against Ahmadi children and their exclusion from education and vocational training (see special procedures, press release of 13 July 2021). The Committee once again urges the Government to take immediate steps to amend its discriminatory legal provisions and administrative measures, and to actively promote respect and tolerance for religious minorities, including the Ahmadi, and to provide information on any progress made in this regard. The Committee once again asks the Government to provide information on the access to employment of religious minorities, including those defined in article 260(3)(b) of the Constitution. It further asks the Government to provide information on any other measures taken or envisaged to promote tolerance and equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation for religious minorities.

Article 2. Equality of opportunity and treatment for men and women. The Committee notes that according to the Key Findings of Labour Force Survey 2020–21, female participation in the Pakistani labour market remains low at 21.4 per cent of the total workforce, of which 28 per cent work in rural areas. The Committee welcomes the adoption of the Sindh Home-Based Workers Act (2018), the Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Home-Based Workers (Welfare and Protection) Act (2021) and the legislative progress of the Balochistan Home-Based Workers Bill (2021) and the Islamabad Capital Territory Domestic Workers Bill (2021), which provide domestic workers with access to labour rights. The Committee further notes that, in its concluding observations, the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) expressed concern about: (1) “persistent discriminatory stereotypes regarding the roles and responsibilities of women and men in the family and in society, exacerbated by the religious divisions in the State party, which perpetuate women’s subordination to men”; and (2) “the persistence of discriminatory stereotypes faced by women and girls belonging to ethnic minority groups, in particular Ahmadi, Christian, Dalit, Hindu, Roma, scheduled caste, Sheedi and Sikh women and girls, who are sometimes the victims of abduction and forced conversion”. The CEDAW also expressed concerns regarding: (1) the very low labour force participation rate for women; (2) the high concentration of women in the informal economy, particularly in the agriculture sector, where they are not covered by labour law and social security programmes, including minimum wage protection, overtime compensation and maternity leave; (3) the lack of reliable data on the number of women who are employed, including home-based women workers, women domestic workers, unpaid women care workers, women with disabilities and refugee women; (4) the very low level of participation of women in senior and middle management positions in 2018 (4.2 per cent); and (5) the very low percentage of women entrepreneurs (an estimated 1 per cent of entrepreneurs) (CEDAW/C/PAK/CO/5, 10 March 2020, paragraphs 29, 41 and 47(a)). In light of the above, the Committee asks the Government to take proactive measures to: (i) promote women’s access to employment and a wide range of jobs, and to address their low participation in the labour market; and (ii) address discrimination against women, including those belonging to ethnic minority groups, and gender stereotypes regarding their role in employment and society.

It also asks the Government to provide information on: (i) any measures, including those by the inspection staff under the provincial Labour Departments, taken in this regard; (ii) the adoption of the Balochistan Home-Based Workers Bill (2021) and the Islamabad Capital Territory Domestic Workers Bill (2021) and the impact of the new laws relating to home-based workers and domestic workers on their employment situation, in particular their access to their labour rights; and (iii) the participation of men and women in the labour market and the informal economy, by sector and occupational category if possible.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1958)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the National Confederation of United Independent Unions (CONUSI), received on 30 August 2021. The Committee notes the Government's response.

Articles 1(b) and 2(2)(a) of the Convention. Work of equal value. Legislation. The Government indicates in its report that it received technical assistance from the ILO in 2017 and 2019 regarding measures to harmonize its legislation with the principle of the Convention, in particular section 10 of the Labour Code (which provides for "equal pay for equal work in the service of the same employer, performed in the same job, working day, conditions of efficiency and seniority"). In its observations, CONUSI expresses the view that there is no justification for the legislative amendments not to have been carried out by the Government. The Committee notes the Government's response indicating that due to political elections and the change of government, it was not possible to follow-up on the assistance provided by the ILO, and that consideration is being given to requesting technical assistance again. The Committee recalls that on numerous occasions it has pointed out that the legislation should not only provide for equal remuneration for equal, the same or similar work, but should also prohibit pay discrimination in situations where men and women perform different work that is nevertheless of equal value (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 679). The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to take steps to expand the definition contained in its legislation of the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, in accordance with the provisions of the Convention. The Committee reminds the Government that it may continue to avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office on this matter if it deems it necessary.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1953)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the Government's reports.

Articles 1(b) and 2(2)(a) of the Convention. Work of equal value. Legislation. For many years, the Committee has been noting the restrictive interpretation given to "work of equal value" referred to in section 135(a) of the Labour Code, through the 1990 Rules implementing the Republic Act No. 6725, which define it to mean "activities, jobs, tasks, duties or services which are identical or substantially identical". The Committee notes, from the Government's reports, that it is still working towards the adoption of amending guidelines that will bring the definition into conformity with the Convention. In this regard, the Committee refers the Government to its 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 675. The Committee urges the Government to take all the necessary measures to ensure that the amending guidelines are adopted in the near future and that the new definition of "work of equal value" gives full legislative expression to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, including but not limited to, "identical", "equal", "the same" or “similar” work, but also encompassing work that is of an entirely different nature, but which is nevertheless of equal value.

Article 3. Objective job evaluation. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes that the Government’s reports do not provide any information on this point. The Committee thus refers to its general observation which states that in order to establish whether different jobs are of equal value, there has to be an examination of the respective tasks involved. This examination must be undertaken on the basis of entirely objective and non-discriminatory criteria to avoid an assessment being tainted by gender bias. While the Convention does not prescribe any specific method for such an examination, it does presuppose the use of appropriate techniques for objective job evaluation. Whatever methods are used for the objective evaluation of jobs, particular care must be taken to ensure that they are free from gender bias. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on whether the Bureau of Local Employment has developed the Human Resources Development Plan and, if so, to provide detailed information on how it is ensured that the selection of factors used for comparison, the weighting of such factors and the actual comparison carried out are not discriminatory, either directly or indirectly. The Committee also requests the Government to supply information on any initiatives taken by the workers’ and employers’ organizations to determine wages on the basis of an objective evaluation of jobs.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1960)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the Government’s reports.

Article 1 of the Convention. Protection against discrimination. Legislation. The Committee recalls its long-standing comments urging the Government to introduce the necessary legal measures to ensure that women are protected against discrimination in all aspects of employment, more particularly over the lack of legislative prohibition of discrimination against women in hiring. The Committee notes with regret that, according to the Government’s reports, Senate Bill No. 429 proposing to amend sections 135 and 137 of the Labour Code to prohibit discrimination based on sex in hiring and security of employment has not yet been adopted. It notes that the Bill was renumbered Senate Bill No. 829 (an Act Expanding the Prohibited Acts of Discrimination Against Women on Account of Sex, Amending for the Purpose Articles 135 and 137 of the Labour Code); it was referred to a committee on labour, employment and human resources development and has a counterpart in the House of Representatives, House Bill No. 675. The Committee urges the Government to take all of the necessary steps to see that Senate Bill No. 829 and House Bill No. 675 are adopted without delay, so as to ensure effective legal protection against discrimination based on sex in hiring and security of employment, in accordance with the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this respect.

Article 3(d). Application in the public sector. In reply to its previous comment, the Committee notes the Government’s indication that the principle of the Convention is applied, in practice, to the high-level positions exempted from the publication requirement of Republic Act No. 7041 through the 2017 Omnibus Rules on Appointment and other Human Resource Actions (CSC MC 24, s. 2017 and CSC resolution No. 1701009 dated 16 June 2017). Specifically, the Government refers to sections 83–103 of Rule IX which provide for the procedures and criteria applicable to appointments in government offices at all levels and state that: (1) there shall be no discrimination in the selection of employees on account of age, sex, sexual orientation and gender identity, civil status, disability, religion, ethnicity, or political affiliation (section 83); (2) the head of the agency shall, as far as practicable, ensure equal opportunity for men and women (section 89); and (3) the Selection Board shall maintain fairness and impartiality in the assessment of candidates for appointment (section 97). To this end, the Selection Board may employ the assistance of an independent collaborator and all government agencies must comply with these requirements or non-compliance shall be considered as a ground for invalidation of the appointment, as well as a ground for action against the official who caused the violation (section 103). The Committee requests the Government to identify the institution or authority responsible for supervising the application of the 2017 Omnibus Rules on Appointment and other Human Resource Actions with regard to the appointment of high-level positions exempted from the publication requirement in Republic Act No. 7041. The Government is asked to provide information on the number of non-compliance cases identified, the consequences of such cases (invalidation of appointment and/or action against the official responsible for the violation), indicating the ground of discrimination involved. Noting that no reply is provided on this point, the Committee also reiterates its request that the Government provide an illustrative sample of procedures and criteria provided for in the Merit Promotion Plans.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1976)

Previous comment

Legislative developments. Labour reforms. The Committee notes with interest the adoption of different sets of laws, regulations and practical measures in recent years and months. In that sense, the Committee notes the following laws and regulations since its previous comments: (1) Decision No. 95 of 2019 of the Ministry of Interior which provides that, with immediate effect, exit permit requirements have been removed for all expatriates who are not subject to the Labour Law of Qatar, such as domestic workers; (2) Law No. 17 of 2020 on the minimum wage which sets down the minimum wage for workers and applies to all categories of workers, regardless of their nationality or the sector in which they work, including domestic workers (see ILO Project Office for the State of Qatar, Progress report on the technical cooperation programme between the Government of Qatar and the ILO, November 2022); (3) Law No. 19 of 2020 amending Law No. 21 of 2015 regulating the entry, exit and residence of expatriates, supplemented by Ministerial Decision No. 51 of 2020, which removed the legal requirement for migrant workers to obtain a no-objection certificate from employers to change jobs; and (4) Ministerial Decree No. 17 of 2021 which specified measures to protect workers, including migrant workers, from heat stress.

The Committee also welcomes the adoption of the National Policy on Labour Inspection in 2019 and the National Policy on Occupational Safety and Health in 2020 which include the collection, analysis and publication of data as a specific objective. Where appropriate, the Committee will examine the provisions of these laws and policies under the relevant Articles of the Convention.

Article 1 of the Convention. Protection against discrimination. Legislation. The Committee notes that the Government refers once again to articles 34 and 35 of the Constitution (equality before the law and non-discrimination on the basis of sex, race, language or religion) and explains that the Labour Law does not contain discriminatory provisions. Referring to its previous detailed comments and to paragraphs 850–855 of its 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, the Committee recalls that the absence of a clear and comprehensive legislative framework may prevent workers from availing themselves of their right to equal opportunity and treatment and to non-discrimination. The Committee once again strongly urges the Government to take the necessary steps to introduce in the labour legislation (Labour Law No. 14 of 2004 and Law No. 15 of 2016 issuing the Civil Human Resources Law) or in any specific anti-discrimination legislation, provisions defining and prohibiting direct and indirect discrimination based on at least all of the grounds enumerated by the Convention, including political opinion, national extraction and social origin, covering all workers at all stages of employment and occupation, including recruitment and terms and conditions of employment.

Scope of application. Categories of workers excluded from the Labour Law. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (1) the Civil Human Resources Law of 2016, which applies to public sector employees, provides for comprehensive protection against discrimination, because its provisions do not differentiate between employees; (2) members of armed forces, the police and other military bodies are covered by specific laws that do not discriminate; and (3) workers in agriculture are not excluded any longer from the scope of the Labour Law further to its amendment. The Committee wishes to underline that the absence of provisions differentiating between workers in the law is not sufficient to effectively protect all persons against discrimination in employment and occupation, as required by the Convention. The Committee also wishes to point out that, if the Convention leaves it to each country to decide which legislative measures are appropriate to implement the national equality policy, it requires the State to review whether legislation is needed to secure the acceptance and observance of the policy. The need for legislative measures to give effect to the Convention must thus be assessed within the framework of the national policy required by Article 2 of the Convention, having regard in particular to the other types of measures which may have been taken, and to the effectiveness of the overall action pursued, including whether there are adequate and effective means of redress and remedies (see 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 735). In light of the above, the Committee asks the Government to provide information on any measures taken to include in the specific laws and regulations applying to workers excluded from the scope of the Labour Law explicit provisions defining and prohibiting direct and indirect discrimination based on at least all of the grounds enumerated in Article 1(1)(a), including provisions addressing all forms of sexual harassment, at all stages of employment and occupation, especially recruitment.

Article 1(1)(a). Discrimination based on sex. Follow-up to the representation under article 24 of the ILO Constitution. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Ministry of Administrative Development, Labour and Social Affairs (MADLSA) closely follows up on all complaints received, through its periodic inspections. The Government adds that: (1) in 2018, 11 complaints were submitted by 9 airline workers, of whom 5 were women and 4 men, none of which related to discrimination in employment and occupation; and (2) to protect and safeguard the worker's health and the health of the child during pregnancy, pregnant women workers are transferred to appropriate jobs among the ground service staff. The Committee notes that the Government does not provide any information regarding the implementation of the rules regarding drop-off or pick-up of female employees from the company premises and rest periods, nor does it indicate how it is ensured that the application of rules and policies by the company does not create or contribute to an intimidating working environment and that the quality of life of cabin crew is improved. The Committee asks the Government to continue to follow up with the company concerned with regard to the implementation of the recommendations adopted by the Governing Body in 2015, and to monitor its practices, in order to ensure that: (i) there is no discrimination against pregnant cabin crew members; (ii) measures continue to be taken to provide them with alternative suitable work during pregnancy; (iii) rules governing rest periods are implemented in a non-discriminatory manner; and (iv) the application of rules and policies does not create or contribute to an intimidating working environment.

The Committee asks the Government to continue to: (i) strengthen and monitor the effectiveness of prevention and enforcement mechanisms, including their capacity to detect and address discriminatory practices; and (ii) provide information on any complaints of discrimination filed and the results thereof.

Sexual harassment. The Committee notes from the progress report of the technical cooperation programme between the Government of Qatar and the ILO (TCP Qatar-ILO) that the MADLSA and the ILO have developed and delivered the first training activities on discrimination, violence and harassment for joint committees in September 2022. With respect to the insufficiency of the legislative framework to ensure the prohibition and effective protection against all forms of sexual harassment in employment and occupation, the Committee notes that the Government refers once again to: (1) Law No. 14 of 2004 (Labour Law) which allows a worker to terminate his/her contract if the employer commits a physical assault, or an immoral act against him/her, or a member of his/her family (section 51(2)); and (2) sections 279 to 289 of Law No. 11 of 2004 issuing the Penal Code which punish “crimes of honour” and section 291 which provides for sanctions against any person who “offends a woman’s modesty”. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee points out once again that the provisions of the Labour Law and the Penal Code do not capture the full range of behaviours that constitute sexual harassment in the specific field of employment and occupation, which can materialize verbally, physically, visually, psychologically or electronically, and be committed by the employer or any other person related to work, at all stages of employment. The Committee also refers to its 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions for more details on sexual harassment (paragraphs 789–794). The Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary steps to: (i) explicitly define and prohibit in the labour legislation relating to the public and private sectors or any specific anti-discrimination legislation, all forms of sexual harassment at work committed not only by the employer but also by any other person in relation to work, at all stages of employment, against all men and women workers; (ii) include specific provisions for effective mechanisms to prevent, remedy and sanction sexual harassment; and (iii) provide specific training for labour inspectors on this subject. Lastly, the Committee once again asks the Government to provide information on the number of complaints of sexual harassment referred to the competent authorities, including criminal cases in application of sections 279 to 289 and 291 of Law No. 11 of 2004 issuing the Penal Code.

Articles 1 and 2. Equality and non-discrimination. Migrant workers. The Committee notes the following information provided in the Government’s report and the progress report on the TCP Qatar–ILO regarding another set of measures: (1) the removal of the legal requirement for migrant workers to obtain a no-objection certificate from employers to change jobs (Law No. 19 of 2020); and (2) the indication that, from November 2020 to August 2022, a total of 348,455 applications to change jobs were approved by the MADLSA, 16 per cent of which were submitted by women workers in the private sector (the overall proportion of women in the workforce being 15 per cent). The Committee also notes that the implementation of the programme for the rotation of expatriate workers and the retention of skilled workers has commenced and an electronic platform (the Labour Re-employment Platform) was launched to rotate skilled workers in the local market.

The Committee further notes with interest that: (1) in 2021, the MADLSA established an online platform for workers, including domestic workers, to submit complaints online, including anonymous whistle-blower complaints; (2) the electronic systems of MADLSA and the Ministry of Interior have been linked in an attempt to prevent employers from cancelling workers’ residency permits (QIDs) or filing false charges of abscondment as a form of retaliation. With respect to the misuse of the abscondment report system as a retaliatory action, the Committee welcomes the procedural changes adopted to oblige the employer reporting a case of abscondment to provide additional information, such as on whether or not the employer owes any financial dues to the worker or whether or not there is a labour complaint, the worker’s accommodation address and information on any witness(es) who can testify. It notes that a penalty was introduced in case of submission of false information by the employer; and (3) awareness-raising campaigns are carried out on a large scale to inform workers of the mechanisms available to them to file complaints and to make them aware of their rights, in multiple languages. Finally, the Committee notes from the progress report of the TCP Qatar–ILO that: (1) the ILO Doha Office has continued to receive queries from workers, giving thereby a direct insight into the challenges faced by migrant workers and where implementation challenges remain; (2) throughout 2022, most of the queries received concerned delays and cancellations of workers’ applications to change employer, together with cancellations of QIDs and other similar forms of retaliation, which remains a challenge; (3) the number of cases per month and in total has declined substantially in the second half of the year;

(4) the Workers' Support and Insurance Fund has dramatically increased disbursements to workers up until 30 September 2022 to QAR1,165,316,181 (over US$320 million) of unpaid wages and benefits, which demonstrates the scale of this issue; and (5) Decision No. 2/2022 on the provisions and procedures for disbursing workers' entitlements was published in April 2022. The report adds that a booklet on the Labour Law will be published by the end of the year in English and Arabic and will be translated into multiple languages in 2023. Welcoming the important legal measures adopted recently and in the past years by the Government to facilitate the labour mobility of migrant workers and thereby reduce their vulnerability to discrimination and abuse, the Committee asks the Government to: (i) step up its efforts in monitoring and enforcing the new legal provisions; (ii) ensure that, where implementation challenges and obstacles remain, measures are taken so that migrant workers can avail themselves of their rights and do not suffer retaliation from their employer; and (iii) continue to undertake awareness-raising activities.

The Committee also asks the Government to adopt proactive and comprehensive measures to promote substantive equality and combat prejudices and stereotypes against migrant workers.

Equality and non-discrimination. Domestic migrant workers. Legislative developments and practical measures. The Committee welcomes the adoption of Ministerial Decision No. 95 of 2019 according to which domestic workers now have the right to leave the country temporarily or permanently during their contract period without prior approval from their employers, with 72 hours' notice to the employer whose approval is not required. Furthermore, as stated at the beginning of this comment, the Committee notes the following developments: (1) the adoption by the MADLSA in 2021 of a revised standard employment contract; (2) the determination of maximum recruitment fees that agencies can charge employers; (3) the implementation of a public campaign to raise awareness on decent work for domestic workers; (4) the development of a User Guide for workers submitting employment change applications and an update of the communication on labour mobility legislation produced in 12 languages; (5) the dissemination of the Know Your Rights booklet for domestic workers in 12 languages and the publication of the Guide to Employing Migrant Domestic Workers in Qatar booklet for employers in two languages; and (6) the design and development of a training programme on decent work for domestic workers for licensed private recruitment agencies in Qatar, in cooperation with the ILO. In addition, the Committee notes that, as part of the TCP Qatar-ILO, the MADLSA and ILO are studying the feasibility of developing a voluntary wage protection system (WPS) for domestic workers which would allow the Government to monitor salaries and allowances paid to them and to detect violations, as the current WPS does not cover this category of workers. In this context, the Committee also observes that Decision No. 2/2022 on the provisions and procedures for disbursing workers' entitlements establishes limits on how much can be paid out and provides for a different limit for domestic workers. With respect to the revised employment contract, it notes that the contract: (1) specifies additional rights for domestic workers and provides clarity on the terms and conditions of their employment; and (2) aligns domestic workers' rights with those of other workers employed in the private sector in relation to overtime payment, termination of employment and sick leave entitlements. The Committee notes however with concern from the progress report of the TCP Qatar-ILO that: (1) challenges of full implementation of the reforms remain, especially due to limited inspection of working and living conditions of domestic workers; (2) there have been reports of employers of domestic workers seeking to recover the fees paid to recruitment agencies from the workers themselves, to compensate for the loss of the worker, and restricting workers' labour mobility by filing false charges of abscondment or cancelling workers' residency permits as a form of retaliation. The Committee asks the Government to take the necessary steps to: (i) ensure that domestic workers benefit from the same legal and practical protections against discrimination as other categories of workers, including with respect to disbursement of wages and all forms of sexual harassment, either by amending Law No. 15 of 2017 or through the adoption of comprehensive anti-discrimination legislation; (ii) adequately monitor and enforce the new legislation on the minimum wage (including to ensure that it does not discriminate on the basis of national origin), the removal of exit visas and change of employer, as well as compliance with the revised employment contract; and (iii) effectively combat stereotypical views and prejudices regarding domestic workers and the undervaluation of their work.

It also asks the Government to provide information on the measures taken to address the issues of inspection of working and living conditions of domestic workers and restrictions by the employer to labour mobility.

Article 2. Equality between men and women in employment and occupation. The Committee notes that the Government refers once again to the Qatar National Vision 2030, which calls for, inter alia, “improving women's capacities to enable them to participate fully in the country's economic and political process”. It notes the Government's indication that: (1) women's participation in the labour market has increased significantly as a result of the inclusion of promotion of women's rights in national policies and laws which regulate the labour market; (2) Qatari women are holding several ministerial positions and leadership roles, and their presence is increasing in the honorary ranks of ministries, the judiciary, the public prosecution and the Shura Council. The Committee also notes from the statistics on the distribution of the labour force for 2019 provided by the Government that the labour market continues to be highly segregated, with a large majority of women in domestic services (40 per cent of all working women in comparison with 3.6 per cent of all working men), education (12.2 per cent of all working women in comparison with 1 per cent of all working men), and health and social work (7.6 per cent of all working women in comparison with 1.2 per cent of all working men). Most men work in construction (48.1 per cent of all working men in comparison with 2 per cent of all working women). The Committee also notes that, in reply to its previous comments, the Government indicates that it will look into the manner of undertaking an assessment and analysis of the gender situation in respect of employment under its direct control and to encourage such an initiative in the private sector. Noting the persistent gender occupational segregation and low participation of women in the labour market, the Committee reiterates its request to the Government to adopt proactive measures and remove obstacles, with a view to facilitating and increasing the participation of women – Qatari and non-Qatari – in employment and occupation. In particular, the Committee asks the Government to adopt measures aimed at: (i) promoting equal opportunities for men and women in employment and occupation, including through the promotion of neutral recruitment processes and the removal of obstacles to access to productive resources and equipment; and (ii) combating stereotypical views regarding women's aspirations and capabilities, their suitability for certain jobs or their interest or availability for full-time jobs.

The Committee hopes that the Government will soon be able to undertake an assessment and analysis of the gender situation in respect of employment under its direct control and to encourage such an initiative in the private sector. The Government is also asked to continue providing up-to-date statistics, disaggregated by sex, concerning the participation of men and women in the various sectors of economic activity, in both the private and the public sectors, as well as statistics on the participation of both Qatari and non-Qatari women in education and vocational training.

Article 5. Special measures of protection and assistance. Women's employment. The Committee notes the Government's statement that: (1) there are no restrictions in law and in practice limiting the employment of women in certain professions; and (2) over time, a shift has occurred from a protectionist approach to women's employment to an approach based on the promotion of true equality between men and women and the actual elimination of discriminatory practices. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that Council of Ministers Order No. 26 of 2019 was promulgated, establishing the National Committee for the Affairs of Women, Children, the Elderly and Persons with Disabilities, which “reflects the official interest in the need for a supreme national government agency concerned with the family, in particular women, their needs and future aspirations, in line with the comprehensive vision of development “Qatar National Vision 2030””. The Committee therefore asks the Government to provide information on any steps taken to ensure that: (i) its approach regarding women's employment remains in line with the principles of equality and non-discrimination and addresses gender stereotypes regarding the role, capacity and aspirations of women; and (ii) any protective measures taken are strictly limited to maternity protection or based on occupational safety and health risk assessments and do not constitute obstacles to the employment of women, in particular their access to posts with career prospects and responsibilities.

Enforcement and awareness-raising. The Committee emphasizes the importance of enforcing the new legal provisions, in particular those concerning migrant workers, including domestic migrant workers. It also refers to the developments described above regarding the establishment of an online platform for workers, including domestic workers and whistle-blowers, to submit complaints. The Committee also notes from the progress report of the TCP Qatar-ILO that between October 2021 and October 2022, the MADLSA received 34,425 complaints, primarily through the online complaints platform, mainly concerning non-payment of wages and end-of-service benefits, as well as annual leave. Of the total number of complaints, 66.5 per cent (22,897) were settled, 30.7 per cent (10,565) were sent to the Dispute Settlement Committees (DSCs) and 2.8 per cent (963) are still under review. The Committee notes the Government's indication that no violations were detected relating to discrimination in employment and occupation during inspection visits in 2019–20 and no lawsuits were registered with the labour dispute settlement committees in relation to discrimination in employment and occupation. It further notes that specialized training programmes were held for labour inspectors to strengthen their competence on labour law and international labour standards, including their ability to detect any cases related to discrimination in employment and occupation. The Committee asks the Government to continue to increase the number and reinforce the capacities of labour inspectors and other enforcement authorities with a view to preventing, identifying and effectively addressing cases of discrimination and putting an end to discriminatory practices. It also asks the Government to continue to provide information on the number, nature and outcomes of any cases detected by labour inspectors and complaints examined by courts relating to discrimination in employment and occupation and on the functioning of the complaints system and any obstacles faced by workers in submitting their complaints.

Romania

The Committee notes with concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Discrimination based on religion. Access to education, training and employment. The Committee notes, from the European Commission's website, that a draft bill to amend the Romanian Education Law was filed on 2 December 2017 and received a positive advisory opinion from the Economic and Social Council on 9 January 2018. The bill proposes the following additions to section 7 of the Education Law: "for the purpose of facilitating the identification of persons in educational units, institutions and all spaces used for education and professional training, it is prohibited to cover one's face with any material which make it difficult to recognize the face, except for medical reasons. Infringement of these provisions constitutes a reason to deny access to the perimeter of the educational units, institutions and spaces for education and professional training." The sanction, introduced as an amendment to section 360(1) of the Education Law would be a fine ranging from 5,000 to 50,000 Romanian Leu (RON) (approximately €1,100 to €11,000). The Committee notes that, if adopted, this new provision will be discriminatory towards those Muslim women and girls who wear a full face veil in terms of their access to educational or training institutions and might therefore limit their opportunities to find and exercise employment in the future – for reasons associated with their religious convictions, contrary to the Convention. Noting that this provision of the draft bill may have a discriminatory effect towards Muslim women who wear a full-face veil in terms of their possibilities of finding and exercising employment, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on: how it is ensured that this provision of the draft bill will not have the effect of reducing the opportunities of girls and women to access education and finding employment in the future; (ii) the progress of the draft bill in the legislative process; and (iii) to supply information on the number of girls and women who might be affected by the implementation of this new provision.

Articles 1(2) and 4. Discrimination based on political opinion. Inherent requirements of the job. Activities prejudicial to the security of the State. For a number of years, the Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to the fact that the restriction set by section 54(j) of Act No. 188/1999, which provides that "to hold public office a person shall meet the following conditions: ... (j) shall not have been carrying out an activity in the political police as defined by the law", could amount to discrimination on the basis of political opinion because it applies broadly to the entire public service rather than to specific jobs, functions or tasks. In its previous report, the Government had explained that, in order to clarify the legal norm and remove any possible inconsistency with the Convention, it had proposed an amendment to the current text of section 54(j) of Act No. 188/1999 as follows: "... was not a worker of the Securitate or a collaborator thereof, as provided by specific legislation». According to the Government, "specific legislation" refers to section 2 of Ordinance No. 24/2008 which defines an "employee of Securitate" and a "collaborator of Securitate". While understanding the Government's concerns regarding the requirement for all government unit members to be loyal to the State, the Committee had drawn attention to the fact that, for such measures not to be deemed discriminatory under Article 4 of the Convention relating to activities prejudicial to the security of the State, they must affect an individual on account of activities he or she is justifiably suspected or proven to have undertaken. These measures become discriminatory when taken simply by reason of membership to a particular group or community. They must refer to activities that are objectively prejudicial to the security of the State and the individual concerned must have the right to appeal to a competent body in accordance with national practice (see 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 832–835). The Committee therefore requested the Government to specify and define the functions in respect of which section 54(j) of Act No. 188/1999 would apply and to provide information on its application in practice. The Committee notes that the Government's report does not contain any information in this regard. It notes, however, that the European Court of Human Rights (ECHR) (Naidin v. Romania, No. 38162/07) held that the barring of a former collaborator of the political police from public service employment was justified by the loyalty expected from all civil servants towards the democratic regime. In this regard, the Committee recalls that, under Article 1(2), political opinion may be taken into account as an inherent requirement of a particular position involving special responsibilities in relation to developing government policy, which is not the case of section 54(j) given that it applies to any state civil service position, whatever the level of responsibility. Further, the Committee recalls that the principle of proportionality must apply and that the exception under Article 4 should be interpreted strictly. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary steps to amend section 54(j) of Act No. 188/1999 or to adopt other measures clearly stipulating and defining the functions to which this section applies. It also asks the Government to provide information on the application of section 54(j) of Act No. 188/1999 in practice, including information on the number of persons dismissed or whose application has been rejected pursuant to this section, the reasons for these decisions and the functions concerned, as well as information on the appeal procedure available to the affected persons and any appeals lodged and their results.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1956)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Confederation of Labour of Russia (KTR) received on 31 August 2021.

Articles 1–4 of the Convention. Assessing and addressing the gender pay gap and its underlying causes (occupational segregation). The Committee notes that, according to the statistical information from the Federal State Statistics Service (Rosstat) provided by the Government in its report, the average gender pay gap remained high at 27.9 per cent in 2019 (compared with 27.4 per cent in 2015). It observes that the gender pay gap was as wide as 40 per cent for mid-level professionals, where women represented 68.9 per cent of the total number of workers, and 30.1 per cent for top level professionals, where women represented 70.6 per cent of the total number of workers. Furthermore, in all economic sectors, wages of women were systematically lower than men's. In that regard, the Committee notes the persistence of occupational gender segregation, with women being still concentrated in hotel and restaurant services (66 per cent), education (79.9 per cent), healthcare and social services (79.9 per cent), while men were mostly working in construction (83.5 per cent), mining (81.7 per cent) and production and distribution of electricity, gas and water (66.9 per cent). It also notes that, in its observations, the KTR highlights that, in sectors where women are most concentrated: (1) the average monthly salary was systematically lower than the national average salary while the opposite applies for sectors where men are concentrated, except in construction where there is a significant percentage of migrant workers; and (2) men remain disproportionately represented in management. In that regard, the KTR adds that, while the share of women in management positions over two years grew by 1.2 per cent and was approaching parity (49.7 per cent in 2019), the gender pay gap in hourly earnings for managers was estimated at 31.6 per cent in 2019. Despite this situation, in KTR's view, the Government did not take any serious commitment to promote gender equality or elaborate and implement inclusive, comprehensive and gender-sensitive approaches in order to reduce the gender pay gap. The Committee notes with concern this information and regrets that the Government did not provide information on any measures elaborated or implemented in order to address the wide and persistent gender pay gap and its underlying causes. It notes that, in its 2020 conclusions, the European Committee of Social Rights (ECSR) concluded that the Russian Federation was not in conformity with Article 20(c) of the European Social Charter, which requires the implementation of appropriate measures regarding remuneration to ensure equal opportunities and equal treatment between men and women in matters of employment and occupation, on the ground that the obligation to make measurable progress in reducing the gender pay gap has not been fulfilled (March 2021, pages 32–33). Furthermore, in its 2021 concluding observations, the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) expressed similar concerns (CEDAW/C/RUS/CO/9, 30 November 2021, paragraph 38). Finally, the Committee refers to its comments on the application of the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) and the Workers with Family Responsibilities Convention, 1981 (No. 156) regarding prohibition of women's employment in specific occupational activities, as well as gender stereotypes regarding women's professional capabilities and their role in the family. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary steps, without delay, in order to address the gender pay gap and its underlying causes, such as persistent vertical and horizontal occupational gender segregation and stereotypes regarding women's professional aspirations, preferences and capabilities, and their role in the family. It asks the Government to provide: (i) information on the content of the proactive measures implemented to overcome occupational gender segregation in the labour market and reduce the gender pay gap, including by enhancing women's access to jobs with career prospects and higher pay; (ii) information on any assessment made of the results achieved by such measures; and (iii) statistical information on the earnings of men and women as well as any recent information on the gender pay gap, disaggregated by occupational category if possible, both in the public and private sectors.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111)
(ratification: 1961)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Confederation of Labour of Russia (KTR) received on 1 September 2021.

Article 1 of the Convention. Protection against discrimination in employment and occupation. Legislation. The Committee notes that, in its report, the Government refers to sections 3 and 64 of the Labour Code without providing any additional information regarding the signification or scope of application of the term “convictions” (beliefs) as a prohibited ground of discrimination. It further notes that, in its observations, the KTR highlights: (1) the lack of legislative protection against indirect discrimination; as well as (2) the fact that, as a result of the inadequacy of existing regulations and the lack of definitions of the different types of discrimination, there is a lack of understanding of the nature of the phenomenon among workers and employers, as well as among judges. In that regard, the Committee points out that the Convention prohibits both direct and indirect discrimination in all aspects of employment and occupation (access to vocational training, access to employment and to particular occupations, and terms and conditions of employment). Furthermore, when legal provisions are adopted to give effect to the principle of the Convention, they should include at least all of the grounds of discrimination enumerated in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention, among which “political opinion” (see 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 749). In light of the above, the Committee urges the Government to take appropriate steps to ensure effective and comprehensive legal protection for workers against both direct and indirect discrimination on at least all of the grounds enumerated in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention, including political opinion, and with respect to all aspects of employment and occupation as set out in Article 1(3). It asks the Government to provide information on the steps taken to that end and their outcomes.

Article 1(1)(a). Discrimination based on sex. Sexual harassment. Regarding the absence of specific legal provisions protecting workers against sexual harassment at work, the Committee notes the Government’s indication, in its report, that a Federal Bill on the Prevention of Domestic Violence is currently under preparation. The Government adds that, in the framework of the National Strategy for Women 2017-2022, seminars were held at regional level on models for preventing and combating violence against women, in cooperation with the Council of Europe. The Committee notes that, in its observations, the KTR highlights the lack of adequate legislative provisions and mechanisms to protect workers against sexual harassment. The Committee further notes that, in its concluding observations, the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) expressed concern at: (1) the absence of legislation explicitly criminalizing sexual harassment at the workplace; (2) the lack of effective measures to ensure the protection of women and girls from gender-based violence, harassment and bullying in schools and universities and the lack of effective complaint and redress mechanisms; and (3) the introduction, through the amendment to the Criminal Code in December 2020, of more severe sanctions for defamation, applicable to cases in which victims bring charges of crimes against their sexual integrity and sexual freedom, which prevents victims of sexual violence from gaining access to justice owing to fear of prosecution (CEDAW/C/RUS/CO/9, 30 November 2021, paragraphs 24, 36 and 38). In that regard, it recalls that addressing sexual harassment only through criminal proceedings is normally not sufficient, due to the sensitivity of the issue, the higher burden of proof, and the fact that criminal law does not cover the full range of behaviour that constitutes sexual harassment in employment and occupation. Given the gravity and serious repercussions of sexual harassment, as a serious manifestation of sex discrimination and a violation of human rights, the Committee emphasizes the importance of taking effective measures to prevent and prohibit sexual harassment at work, both quid pro quo and hostile environment sexual harassment (see 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 789 and 792). The Committee therefore again asks the Government to take steps to include, in its labour legislation: (i) a clear definition and prohibition of both quid pro quo and hostile work environment sexual harassment in employment and occupation; and (ii) appropriate preventive and remedial measures and procedures. It also asks the Government to provide information on: (i) any practical measures taken to prevent and address sexual harassment in employment and occupation, in the framework of the National Strategy for Women 2017-2022 or otherwise, including any awareness-raising activities carried out for employers, workers and their organizations; and (ii) the number of cases of sexual harassment dealt with by the courts or any other competent authorities, the sanctions imposed and remedies granted.

Articles 1(1)(a) and 5. Discrimination based on sex. Special measures of protection. The Committee notes the Government's indication that Resolution No. 162 of 25 February 2000, which excluded women from employment in 456 occupations and 38 branches of industry, was replaced by Order No. 512 of 18 July 2019 of the Ministry of Labour, which came into force on 1 January 2021. This Order updates the list of production processes, jobs and occupations with harmful and/or hazardous working conditions where the employment of women is restricted. The Committee notes, more particularly, that the new list reduces the number of restricted occupations for women from 456 to 100. It further notes that Order No. 313n of 13 May 2021 of the Ministry of Labour, which entered into force on 1 March 2022, amended Order No. 512 of 18 July 2019 by introducing further modifications to the existing list and providing that the list is valid until 1 March 2028. The Government states that the criteria for revising and updating this list included factors dangerous to women's reproductive health, affecting the health of future generations and having long-term consequences; besides, certain types of work that are not used in modern production were excluded from the list. The Committee notes the Government's repeated indication that section 253 of the Labour Code and the list of activities in which the employment of women is prohibited provide for a flexible approach as the employer may employ women when creating safe working conditions as confirmed by the result of a special assessment of working conditions. As a result of Order No. 313n of 13 May 2021, a State expert examination of working conditions is no longer required as confirmation of safe working conditions. The Committee notes with interest the amendments made by the Government to reduce the number of sectors and occupations in which women cannot be employed. It observes, however, that employment of women is still prohibited in a large number of sectors and occupations. In this regard, it notes that, in its observations, the KTR considers that the existence of even a reduced list of occupations from which women are prohibited: (1) establishes an overarching ban that affects all women in the country; (2) represents a violation of women's right to equal opportunities in employment and choice of occupation; and (3) perpetuates occupational gender segregation. The Committee further notes that, in its 2021 concluding observations, CEDAW expressed similar concerns (CEDAW/C/RUS/CO/9, paragraph 38). In that regard, the Committee recalls that a distinction shall be made between special measures to protect maternity in the strict sense, which come within the scope of Article 5 of the Convention, and measures based on stereotypical perceptions of women's capabilities and their role in society, which are contrary to the principle of equality of opportunity and treatment (see 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 839). Indeed, restrictions to the employment of women (who are not pregnant or are not breastfeeding) are contrary to gender equality of opportunity and treatment and may also create legal barriers preventing women to access well paid jobs, unless such measures are adopted to protect genuinely their health. This protection must be determined based on the results of a risk assessment showing that there are specific risks for the health and/or security of women. Therefore, any of these restrictions must be justified and based on scientific evidence and, where they exist, must be periodically reviewed in light of technological evolution and scientific progress to determine whether they are still necessary. Provisions regarding the protection of persons working under hazardous or difficult conditions should be aimed at protecting the health and safety of both men and women at work, while taking account of gender differences with regard to specific risks to their health. Moreover, with a view to repealing discriminatory protective measures applicable to women's employment, it may be necessary to examine what other measures, such as improved health protection of both men and women, adequate transportation and security, as well as social services, are necessary to ensure that women can access these types of employment on an equal footing with men (see also 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 840). The Committee therefore urges the Government to pursue its efforts in order to revise Order No. 512 of 18 July 2019, as amended, so as to ensure that any restrictions on the work that can be undertaken by women are not based on stereotyped perceptions regarding their capacity, aspirations and role in society and are strictly limited to those aimed at protecting maternity and based on risk assessment. It asks the Government to provide information on: (i) any progress made in this regard, including in consultation with employers' and workers' organizations; and (ii) any specific measures taken or envisaged to address the legal and practical barriers to the employment of women, in particular by amending sections 99, 113, 253, 259 and 298 of the Labour Code which provide for restrictions regarding working time (overtime, night work, work in shifts, and so on) for women with children under the age of 3 years (or 1.5 years).

Articles 2 and 3. Equality of opportunity and treatment for men and women. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the proportion of women in public and civil service positions increased from 72 per cent in 2016 to 73.2 per cent in 2019. It notes however that, according to the statistical information available in ILOSTAT, in 2020, the labour force participation rate for women remained low at 55.1 per cent, compared to 70 per cent for men. It further notes, from the statistical information of the Federal State Statistics Service (Rosstat) forwarded by the Government with its report on the application of the Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100), the continuing occupational gender segregation, with women being still highly concentrated in hotel and restaurant services (66 per cent), education (79.9 per cent), and healthcare and social services (79.9 per cent), while their proportion in other sectors traditionally dominated by men has been decreasing (such as construction, mining and distribution of electricity, gas and water). Referring to its previous comments regarding the adoption of the National Strategy for Women 2017–22, the Committee notes the Government's statement that regional plans were adopted and coordinating councils were established in order to implement the strategy. The Government adds that, in order to advance women's economic situation, several incentive measures and training activities were carried out in this framework. As a result, in the 2019/20 academic year, 220,300 women were trained in higher and secondary vocational education in the sector of "creative industries", mainly in hairdressing, hotel services and design. The Government adds that there has also been an increase in the number of girls and women in natural sciences and mathematics, as well as in the number of women in research institutions (357 women more in 2020). While welcoming these efforts, the Committee would like to draw the Government's attention to the importance of ensuring that measures taken to promote gender equality do not in practice reflect stereotyped assumptions regarding women's aspirations and capabilities or suitability for certain jobs, thus reinforcing gender stereotypes by promoting women's participation in areas where they are traditionally highly concentrated, such as hotel services or hairdressing. In that regard, the Committee notes that, in its 2021 concluding observations, the CEDAW expressed specific concerns at: (1) the persistence of discriminatory stereotypes concerning the roles and responsibilities of women and men in the family and in society; (2) the persistence of discriminatory gender stereotypes in school curricula and textbooks and the lack of education on gender equality; and (3) vertical and horizontal occupational segregation. The CEDAW further expressed specific concern at the situation of rural women, in particular regarding their limited access to education, formal employment, and credit and economic empowerment schemes (CEDAW/C/RUS/CO/9, paragraphs 22, 36, 38 and 42). In light of the persistent gender stereotypes and occupational segregation in the labour market and the absence of substantial progress made in the past years, the Committee urges the Government to step up its efforts to promote effective equality of treatment and opportunity between men and women in employment and occupation. It also asks the Government to provide information on:

- (i) the nature and impact of the measures taken to combat stereotypes regarding women's professional aspirations, preferences and capabilities, and their role and responsibilities in the family and society, including through the diversification of the fields of vocational education and training for women;

- (ii) the concrete measures implemented to promote and enhance the participation of women in the labour market and in decision-making positions on an equal basis with men, both in the public and private sectors; and
- (iii) the participation of men and women in education, training, employment and occupation, disaggregated by occupational categories and positions, in both the public and private sectors.

Equality of opportunity and treatment irrespective of race, colour and national extraction. Roma people. The Committee notes the Government's indication that a comprehensive action plan for the socio-economic and ethnocultural development of the Roma in the Russian Federation was approved in 2019 and is currently being implemented. It also notes that, in its 2019 report, the European Commission against Racism and Intolerance (ECRI) was concerned about: (1) the creation of separate "Roma classes" in certain schools is presented by the Russian authorities as a tool for responding flexibly to the situation and needs of Roma children; (2) reports from civil society organizations describing other cases of racial segregation in certain schools, for example in the Volgograd area, involving separating Roma children from others during school-meals, use of the school library or sports activities; and (3) allegations from NGOs that Roma pupils are sometimes asked by their school administration not to participate in celebrations to mark the beginning of the new school year (CRI(2019)2, page 10 and paragraph 76). The Committee further notes that, in its 2021 concluding observations, the CEDAW also expressed concern about reports of segregation and discrimination in access to education against Roma people (CEDAW/C/RUS/CO/9, paragraph 36). The Committee asks the Government to strengthen its efforts to combat stigma, prejudices and discrimination against Roma people in order to ensure effective equality of opportunity and treatment in education, training and employment. It asks the Government to provide information on:

- (i) the measures taken to that end, in particular in the framework of the Comprehensive Action Plan for the socio-economic and ethnocultural development of the Roma in the Russian Federation approved in 2019 or any follow-up strategy adopted, as well as on any study or report available on their impact;
- (ii) any particular measures implemented to specifically address the segregation faced by Roma people in practice, including with regard to their access to education without discrimination; and
- (iii) the participation of Roma people in education, professional and vocational training courses, as well as in the labour market.

Migrant workers. Referring to its previous comments where it requested the Government to take specific measures to strengthen the enforcement of the provisions of the Labour Code prohibiting discrimination based on grounds of race, ethnicity and national origin, the Committee notes with regret that the Government did not provide information in this regard. It notes that, in its 2019 report, the European Commission against Racism and Intolerance (ECRI) expressed specific concern about migrant workers from Central Asia and "others of non-Slav appearance" often becoming victims of police harassment and racial profiling, which is an obstacle to their integration, as such experiences alienate the individuals concerned and, by extension, the wider relevant groups they belong to, and diminish trust in the State authorities. Furthermore, Central Asians and "others of non-Slav appearance" as well as persons of African descent are also frequent victims of racial violence, including murder in some instances (CRI(2019)2, pages 10–11 and paragraph 87). The Committee considers that it is necessary to adopt a comprehensive and coordinated approach to tackling the obstacles and barriers faced by persons in employment and occupation because of their race, colour or national extraction, and to promote equality of opportunity and treatment for all. Such an approach should include the adoption of interlocking measures aimed at: addressing gaps in education, training and skills; providing unbiased vocational guidance; recognizing and validating the qualifications obtained abroad; and valuing and recognizing traditional knowledge and skills that may be relevant both to accessing and advancing in employment and to engaging in an occupation. The Committee also recalls that, in order to be effective, these measures must include concrete steps – such as laws, policies, programmes, mechanisms and participatory processes, and remedies – designed to address prejudices and stereotypes and to promote mutual understanding and tolerance among all sections of the population (general observation of 2019 on discrimination based on race, colour and national extraction). The Committee also refers to its 2020 observation on the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29), where it noted allegations regarding the increased risk of falling into forced labour faced by migrant workers. The Committee urges the Government to adopt every necessary measure to: (i) prevent and address discrimination on the grounds of race, colour and national extraction, including by addressing prejudices and stereotypes and promoting tolerance; and (ii) ensure equality of opportunity and treatment in employment and occupation for migrant workers and students, in particular Central Asians and “others of non-Slav appearance”, as well as persons of African descent.

It asks the Government to provide information on: (i) any specific measures implemented to that end, such as awareness-raising through media campaigns, as well as any assessment made of their impact; and (ii) any measures taken to ensure that victims of discrimination on the grounds of race, colour and national extraction have access to effective protection and remedies, including information on the number, nature and outcome of cases or complaints of discrimination on such grounds dealt with by the courts or any other competent authorities.

Articles 1(b) and 2(2)(a) of the Convention. Work of equal value. Legislation. The Committee notes with regret the Government's statement, in its report, that there has been no new legislation or other measures adopted since the last report. In view of the above, the Committee reiterates once again its request that the Government give full legislative expression to the principle of the Convention, as soon as possible, and in particular that the new legislation include provisions explicitly guaranteeing equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value.

Legislative developments. Noting with regret that the Government has been providing the Committee with the same information for more than a decade now, the Committee firmly hopes that the new Labour Code will be enacted in the near future and that it will contain comprehensive provisions prohibiting:

- (i) direct and indirect discrimination,
- (ii) at least on all of the grounds set out in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention,
- (iii) in all aspects of employment and occupation, and
- (iv) for all workers.

It also asks the Government to provide information on any additional grounds of discrimination as foreseen under Article 1(1)(b).

Articles 1(b) and 2(2)(a) of the Convention. Equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. Legislative developments. The Committee notes that the Government affirms, in its report, its belief that the national legislative framework is now in conformity with the principle enshrined in the Convention, in response to the Committee's previous comments on section 234(5) of the Labour Code. It notes however that this section requires "identical contractual conditions" for the application of the principle of equal remuneration for men and women workers for work of equal value, and thus does not fully reflect the principle of the Convention. In this regard, the Committee notes that the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) requested the Government to inform it about steps taken to amend the Labour Code to ensure the principle of equal pay for work of equal value (CEDAW/C/STP/Q/1-5, 7 March 2022, paragraph 16(d)). The Committee requests the Government to consider amending section 234(5) of the Labour Code to ensure that the overall value of the job is considered without limiting the comparison to "identical contractual conditions" and that the definition allows for the comparison, free from gender bias, of jobs of an entirely different nature, not necessarily in the same enterprise, but which may be shown, after examination, to be of equal "value". The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on: (i) the application in practice of sections 22(1) and 234(5) of the Labour Code, including any cases or complaints concerning inequality of remuneration dealt with by the labour inspectorate, the courts or any other competent authority, specifying the penalties imposed and the compensation awarded; and (ii) the awareness-raising activities undertaken on the new legislative provisions and on the principle of the Convention, including in collaboration with employers' and workers' organizations.

Articles 2 and 3. Reducing the gender wage gap. In response to the Committee's request for information on measures taken to assess and address the gender wage gap in the formal and informal economy, the Government states that it is above all focusing its efforts on the transition from the informal to the formal economy in order to extend social protection to the entire population, still largely affected by informality. The Government recalls in this regard that there are different minimum wages applicable in the private and public sectors, determined by Decree No. 24/2015 of 18 December 2015, and that no worker may be paid less than the wage defined in that Decree. The Committee also notes, from the data provided by the Government in its report to CEDAW, that the level of labour income is relatively higher for men than for women throughout the life cycle, and that the surplus labour income of men aged 22 to 76 is about 11 times that of women, resulting in low levels of empowerment of women and girls (CEDAW/C/STP/1-5, 29 November 2021, paragraphs 59 and 60). Recalling that a National Statistical Development Strategy, adopted in 2018, is under implementation, with a view to reinforcing the National Statistics Institute, the Committee again requests the Government to provide updated information on the pay gap between men and women, the distribution of men and women in the different economic sectors and occupations and their respective incomes, in the public and private sectors.

Article 4. Cooperation with workers' and employers' organizations. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the social partners were unable to meet to discuss the draft revision of Act No. 1/99 on the National Council for Social Dialogue (CNCS) due to the COVID-19 pandemic. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on progress made in revising Act No. 1/99 on the CNCS and on strengthening the capacities of the workers' and employers' organizations in respect of the principle of the Convention.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111)
(ratification: 1982)

The Committee notes with concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Legislative developments. The Committee has been requesting the Government to ensure that the draft General Labour Act, which was under preparation, would include a prohibition of direct and indirect discrimination at all stages of the employment process and on all the grounds listed in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. The Committee notes with satisfaction the adoption of the Labour Code, through Act No. 6/2019 of 16 November 2018, and more particularly sections 15–17, which define and prohibit both direct and indirect discrimination in access to employment, vocational training and promotion and working conditions, based on the grounds of ancestry and social origin, race, colour, age, sex, sexual orientation, marital status, family status, genetic heritage, reduced working capacity, disability or chronic illness, nationality, ethnic origin, religion, political or ideological beliefs and trade union membership. It further notes that section 18 of the Labour Code defines and prohibits both quid pro quo and hostile work environment sexual harassment, which is expressly defined as a form of discrimination. It notes that, in accordance with section 20, any employee or jobseeker adversely affected by discriminatory practices would be entitled to receive compensation. The Committee notes that, pursuant to section 3(1)(a) and (2) of Act No. 6/2019, the provisions on equality and non-discrimination and sexual harassment at the workplace apply to public employees. In that respect, it further notes the adoption of Act No. 2/2018 of 22 November 2017, amending Act No. 5/1997 on the Civil Service Statute, and more particularly new section 52(B)(1)(e), which provides that civil servants are prohibited from exerting pressure, threatening or harassing other officials or agents or subordinates that may affect the dignity of the person, or include malicious actions. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the application in practice of sections 15–18 and 20 of the Labour Code, as well as section 52(B)(1)(e) of the Civil Service Statute. The Committee also asks the Government to provide information on any concrete measures taken to raise public awareness and understanding of the relevant new legislative provisions, the procedures and remedies available, in particular for employers, workers and the general public. It asks the Government to provide detailed information on the number and nature of cases of direct and indirect discrimination in employment and occupation dealt with by labour inspectors, the courts or any other competent authorities, as well as the sanctions imposed and compensation awarded.

Articles 2 and 3. Equality of opportunity and treatment of men and women. Policies and institutions. The Committee previously noted the adoption of the National Strategy for Gender Equality and Equity (ENIEG) for 2007–12, dealing with issues relating to women's equality in the world of work, as well as the establishment of the National Institute for the Promotion of Gender Equality and Equity (INPG) under the Ministry of Labour to implement the ENIEG. Referring to its previous request concerning statistical information on the participation of men and women in vocational training and the labour market, the Committee notes the Government's general indication, in its report, that such information is not available so far, but that women's access to decision-making positions and vocational training has improved. The Committee however notes that, according to the latest available statistical information from the National Statistics Institute (2012): the women's unemployment rate was more than twice as high as that of men (19.7 per cent compared to 9.3 per cent for men), while women's labour force participation rate was nearly twice as low as men's (41.3 per cent and 75.4 per cent, respectively), with women being mostly concentrated in low-skilled jobs, such as the unskilled labour force (71 per cent of women), domestic workers (94 per cent) and services or trade (58.9 per cent). It notes that, according to the NSI, women mostly work in the informal economy, which accounts for 75.7 per cent of the economically active population. Furthermore, only 31.1 per cent of women have attained at least a secondary level of education (compared with 45.2 per cent of men). The Committee notes that the Decent Work Country Programme, 2018–21, adopted in July 2018, sets as a specific objective the promotion of productive employment for all, in particular for young persons and women, including by raising awareness and encouraging the transition from the informal to the formal economy, enhancing women's entrepreneurship and access to vocational training, as well as strengthening the INE. The DWCP further explicitly aims at building this capacity of the tripartite constituents to promote, inter alia, gender equality and non-discrimination. The DWCP refers to the adoption of: (i) a Second National Strategy for Gender Equality and Equity (ENIEG II) for 2013–17 which highlights that one of the main challenges is that men and women benefit from equal opportunities to effectively achieve financial autonomy; and (ii) the National Employment Policy (PNE) in 2015, which highlights the importance of decent work and sets as specific objectives to strengthen technical education and vocational training and promote women's entrepreneurship, and its accompanying Action Plan on Employment and Vocational Training (PANEF), adopted in 2017, both developed in collaboration with the ILO. It also notes with interest the ratification of the Maternity Protection Convention, 2000 (No. 183), on 12 June 2017. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on any specific measures taken, particularly in the framework of the ENIEG II, the PNE, the PANEF and the DWCP 2018–21, to effectively enhance women's economic empowerment and access to the formal economy and vocational training, including in sectors where they are under-represented, and to improve equality of opportunity and treatment for men and women in employment and occupation, in both the public and private sectors, including in collaboration with employers' and workers' organizations. Noting that a National Statistical Development Strategy for 2018–21 is currently being implemented, the Committee hopes that the Government will soon be in a position to collect and provide updated statistical information on the participation of men and women in vocational training and the labour market, indicating the proportion of men and women in the various economic activities, disaggregated by occupational categories and positions, in both the public and private sectors, as well as in the informal economy.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 2000)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the Government's reports received in 2017 and 2022. The Committee notes the observations of the Serbian Association of Employers (SAE) and the Confederation of Autonomous Trade Unions of Serbia (CATUS), received with the Government's report.

Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. Discrimination based on sex. Sexual harassment. The Committee previously noted that section 21(2) of the Labour Code of 2005 concerning sexual harassment did not cover quid pro quo sexual harassment. The Committee welcomes the adoption of the Law on Gender Equality 2021, which replaces the Law on the Equality of Sexes 2009. The Committee notes that the Law on Gender Equality 2021 defines and prohibits sexual harassment; however, it remains unclear if the definition prohibits both quid pro quo and hostile work environment sexual harassment. The Committee notes, from the 2020 Labour Inspection Report, provided by the Government, that no cases of sexual harassment at work were reported to the labour inspectorate that year. The Committee further notes, from the concluding observations of the United Nations (UN) Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW), the lack of measures to address sexual harassment in the workplace, specifically with regard to young women and lesbian, bisexual and transgender women and intersex persons, and the disproportionately low number of convictions for sexual harassment, which adversely affects women's possibilities for employment and promotion (CEDAW/C/SRB/CO/4, 14 March 2019, paragraph 35). The Committee requests the Government to clarify: (i) which provisions of the Law on Gender Equality 2021 define and prohibit sexual harassment at work; and (ii) the definition given to sexual harassment at work, and if both quid pro quo and hostile work environment sexual harassment are covered by the new legislation.

With a view to strengthening the protection against sexual harassment at work and harmonizing the legislation, the Committee once again requests the Government to consider amending section 21 of the Labour Code to also include protection against quid pro quo sexual harassment, and to provide information on any progress made in this respect. Finally, the Committee requests the Government to: (i) step up its efforts in ensuring the effective application of the provisions on sexual harassment, including through measures to address and prevent it in practice, such as awareness-raising and training activities; and (ii) provide information on any cases of sexual harassment at work addressed by the competent authorities.

Article 2. Equality of opportunity and treatment for men and women. The Committee welcomes the adoption, in 2021, of the Act to supplement the Prohibition of Discrimination. The Committee notes, from the statistical information provided by the Government that the rate of economic activity of women of working age (15–64 years old) has increased from 55.7 per cent in 2015 to 60.8 per cent in 2020, while the unemployment rate of women has decreased from 19.2 per cent in 2015 to 9.9 per cent in 2020. Despite the progress made, the Committee notes that, in comparison, in 2020, the rate of economic activity of men of working age was 74.6 per cent and the unemployment rate of men, 9.2 per cent. The Committee notes, from the 2021 annual report of the Commissioner for the Protection of Equality, the adoption of the new Gender Equality Strategy 2021–2030 and the Strategy for Preventing and Combating Gender-based Violence against Women and Domestic Violence 2021–2025. It notes, that among the 595 complaints received by the Commissioner for the Protection of Equality in 2021, 99 of them concerned cases of discrimination based on sex, most of them in relation to employment and occupation. The report establishes that one of the key causes of gender discrimination is the firmly rooted, traditional, patriarchal stereotypes about gender roles in the family and the wider community. In this regard, the Committee notes the report of the UN Entity for Gender Equality and the Empowerment of Women (UN Women) entitled “Economic Value of the Unpaid Care Work in the Republic of Serbia”, which highlights that unpaid care work is the reason for inactivity among women in greater percentages than among men: in 2018, the inactivity rate for women amounted to 39.4 per cent, versus 24.9 per cent for men. Care for own children or others in need is the reason for inactivity for 7 per cent of women and 0 per cent of men, and family or personal reasons are the cause of inactivity for 9 per cent of women and 5 per cent of men. In this regard, the Committee refers to paragraph 783 of its 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions. The Committee further notes, from the concluding observations of the CEDAW, that the Coordination Body for Gender Equality lacks adequate budget, staff, political independence and sustainability. The CEDAW also highlights that women are severely under-represented in local administration, the foreign service, the armed forces and in decision-making positions across all sectors (CEDAW/C/SRB/CO/4, paragraphs 15 and 27). The Committee welcomes the adoption of the Gender Equality Strategy 2021–2030 and requests the Government to provide information on measures taken by the Coordination Body on Gender Equality or by any other authority, to implement the Gender Equality Strategy 2021–2030, including measures to: (i) increase the access of women to formal employment; (ii) address occupational segregation between women and men including in recruitment and promotion; (iii) address the stereotypes and assumptions regarding women’s aspirations and capabilities as well as regarding their suitability for certain jobs; (iv) promote the equal sharing of family responsibilities between women and men; and (v) increase compliance with legal provisions regarding maternity protection. The Committee welcomes the statistical information provided by the Government and requests it to continue to provide such information, disaggregated by sex, indicating the results of the measures taken above.

Articles 1 and 3(d). Equality of opportunity and treatment for men and women. Retirement age of women in the public sector. The Committee refers to its previous comment and asks the Government to take the necessary measures, in cooperation with the social partners, to ensure that there is no direct or indirect discrimination based on sex with respect to the age of retirement in the public sector, and that the working life of women is not shortened in a discriminatory manner.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Assessing and addressing the gender pay gap. The Committee recalls the lack of legislation requiring equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. The Committee previously noted the Guidelines issued by the Tripartite Alliance for Fair Employment Practices (TAFEP) on 3 May 2007, which include a section on remuneration stating that "[e]mployers should pay employees wages commensurate with the value of the job [...] regardless of age, gender, race, religion and family status, employees should be paid and rewarded based on their performance, contribution and experience". It notes, from the TAFEP's website, that as of September 2019, 7,144 organizations have signed the Employers' Pledge for Fair Employment Practices, which is a public commitment from employers to create fair and inclusive workplaces according to the TAFEP's Guidelines. The Committee notes the Government's statement, in its report that, in July 2017, Tripartite Standards (TSes) were introduced to enhance fair and progressive employment practices on flexible work agreements, recruitment practices and unpaid leave for unexpected care needs. Noting that the TAFEP continued training workshops to assist employers implementing fair and progressive employment practices, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the Human Capital Partnership (HCP) Programme was launched in 2017 by tripartite partners to "grow an inclusive community of progressive employers", and will be managed by the TAFEP. The Committee however observes that the Government does not provide information on any measures taken by the TAFEP to promote specifically the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. While noting the Government's statement that the gender pay gap was estimated at 11.8 per cent in 2017 with broad-based improvement across most occupational groups, the Committee notes, from the statistical information provided by the Government, that in 2017 the median gross monthly salary of women employed in the same occupational category as men was systematically lower than that of men, except for clerical support workers where it was slightly higher. It notes in particular that the gender wage gap was estimated at 12.2 per cent for managers and administrators; 18.7 for working proprietors; 14.4 for professionals and still remains wider for craftsmen and related trades workers (22.3 per cent) and plant and machine operators and assemblers (19.1 per cent). The Committee notes the Government's indication that the wage gap can be attributed to the fact that women are more likely to exit the workforce or have intermittent patterns of work, for reasons such as childcare and the care of the elderly. The Government adds that its approach to address the gender pay gap is to empower women with choices to stay in the workforce, instead of having to exit it to fulfil caregiving responsibilities. In this regard, the Committee welcomes the adoption and implementation of measures to assist women to enter, re-enter or remain in the workforce, including through flexible working arrangements and the introduction of measures to encourage shared parental responsibilities (such as a two weeks paid paternity leave and the possibility for fathers to share up to four weeks of their wife's maternity leave). The Committee however notes that, in its 2017 concluding observations, the United Nations (UN) Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) remained concerned about: (i) the persistent gender wage gap in all occupational categories, except clerical support; (ii) the continued vertical and horizontal occupational segregation in both the public and private sectors; (iii) the persistence of discriminatory stereotypes about the role of women as primary caregivers, including as caregivers of older persons; (iv) the fact that women still remain underrepresented in traditionally male-dominated fields of study, such as engineering, electronics and information technology, at the tertiary level; as well as (v) the underrepresentation of women on corporate boards, notwithstanding their high educational and professional achievements and qualifications. The Committee further notes that the CEDAW recommended that "the Government reduces the gender wage gap by regularly reviewing wages in sectors in which women are concentrated and by establishing effective monitoring and regulatory mechanisms for employment and recruitment to ensure that the principle of equal pay for work of equal value is adhered to in all sectors" (CEDAW/C/SGP/CO/5, 21 November 2017, paragraphs 18, 26, 28 and 29). The Committee notes that the CEDAW, as well as the UN Independent Expert on the enjoyment of all human rights by older persons, also expressed specific concern that older women frequently lack sufficient savings to sustain a living as a result of the gender pay gap, a lack of employment opportunities and their caregiving responsibilities, and are therefore forced to continue to work beyond their retirement age in low-paid and low-skilled occupations (CEDAW/C/SGP/CO/5, 21 November 2017, paragraph 38 and A/HRC/36/48/Add.1, 31 May 2017, paragraphs 27 and 93). In light of the absence of a legislative framework providing for equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value and the persistence of significant gender wage gaps, in particular in sectors where women are traditionally concentrated, the Committee asks the Government to take proactive measures, including legislative measures in the framework of the Tripartite Alliance for Fair Employment Practices, to establish the principle of the Convention and raise awareness among workers, employers and their respective organizations, as well as among law enforcement officials of the right to equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. It also asks the Government to continue to take measures to address the underlying causes of the gender wage gap, such as vertical and occupational gender segregation and stereotypes relating to the aspirations, preferences and abilities of women, including by encouraging girls and women to choose non-traditional fields of study and professions and promoting their access to jobs with career prospects and higher pay. The Committee asks the Government to continue to provide statistical information on the level of earnings of men and women, disaggregated by economic activity and occupational group, both in the public and private sectors.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Articles 1(b) and 2(2)(a) of the Convention. Work of equal value. Legislation. For more than a decade, the Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to the fact that section 119a(2) of the Labour Code does not give full expression to the concept of work of equal value. The Committee notes that the Government, in its report, considers its legislation to be in line with the principle of the Convention and further states that the Labour Code cannot be a comprehensive tool for resolving different wages for different employers and in different sectors. The Committee notes with regret that the legislation continues to be narrower than the principle of the Convention and refers the Government to its 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 676–679 and 697–698. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary steps to amend the definition of “work of equal value” provided for in section 119a(2) of the Labour Code, in order to give full legislative expression to the principle of the Convention. In doing so, the Committee requests the Government to ensure that, when determining whether two jobs are of equal value, the overall value of the jobs is considered and that the definition allows for jobs of an entirely different nature to be compared free from gender bias and that the comparison goes beyond the same employer. Noting the absence of information provided in this regard, the Committee again asks the Government to provide information on the application in practice of section 119a(2) of the Labour Code, including by providing concrete examples of the manner in which the term “work of equal value” has been interpreted in administrative or judicial decisions.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1993)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Discrimination on the basis of race or national extraction in education, vocational training, employment and occupation. Roma. For more than 15 years, the Committee has been referring to the discrimination faced by the members of the Roma Community and their difficulties in integrating into the labour market. The Committee notes, from the Government's report, the adoption of the Strategy for the Integration of Roma until 2030 ("the 2030 Strategy"). The Government indicates that "employment" is one of the four priority areas of the 2030 Strategy, and that sub-objective 4 aims to "reduce discrimination in the labour market and other forms of anti-Roma racism". The Committee notes that Action Plans for the period 2022–24 are to be adopted under the 2030 Strategy, including awareness-raising programmes for employees and employers on diversity in the workplace and the creation of counselling structures to assist with the identification and subsequent reporting of discrimination in the labour market. The Committee notes, from the Government's report on the application of the Workers With Family Responsibilities Convention, 1981 (No. 156), that the new Recovery and Resilience Plan aims to support and fund early care services for marginalized Roma communities to strengthen equality between women and men, and to develop the reading literacy and parental skills of mothers, with the aim of increasing mothers' self-confidence and commitment to the labour market after parental leave. However, the Committee notes with regret that, despite its numerous requests to assess the results of the existing programmes and to communicate the results of this assessment, the Government's report provides no information on this point. In this regard, the Committee refers to its 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 858. The Committee also notes with regret the Government's statement that statistical information as well as data on cases of discrimination are not available. The Committee recalls that appropriate data and statistics are crucial to determine the nature, extent and causes of discrimination, including against Roma, to set priorities and design appropriate measures, to monitor and evaluate the impact of such measures, and to make any necessary adjustments (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 891). The Committee asks the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that the results and impact of the actions and programmes implemented, including within the framework of the action plans to the Strategy for the Integration of Roma up to 2030 and the Recovery and Resilience Plan, are assessed, and asks the Government to communicate the results of this assessment. The Committee also asks the Government to continue to take proactive measures to ensure that acts of discrimination against Roma people in employment and occupation are effectively prevented and eliminated, including through active awareness-raising addressing stereotypes and prejudices, and to provide information on the Action Plans adopted under the 2030 Strategy. Noting the lack of information provided in this regard, the Committee once again strongly urges the Government to bring an end to the segregation of Roma pupils in schools. It asks the Government to provide information on: (i) the steps taken to end the above-mentioned segregation of Roma pupils in schools (and the results thereof); (ii) the steps taken or envisaged to obtain statistical information, disaggregated by sex, on the labour market situation of Roma people; and (iii) any discrimination cases dealt with by the labour inspectorate, the Ombudsperson or the courts, or other competent authorities, as well as the sanctions imposed and remedies granted.

Practical application. Lack of statistical information. With regard to its previous comments, the Committee notes with regret that the Government provides no information on the progress made towards the establishment of a new central statistics system and that once again it does not provide most of the statistical information requested. The Committee once again recalls the importance of collecting and analysing sufficiently detailed statistical information in order to determine and assess the current situation of workers with family responsibilities, design appropriate responses and monitor and evaluate the impact of the measures which are being implemented. The Committee requests the Government to strengthen its efforts to collect comprehensive and sufficiently detailed data on the issues covered by the Convention, and to provide information in this regard, including on the progress made in establishing the new central statistics system. In the meantime, the Committee requests the Government to continue to provide all available information, including statistical data disaggregated by sex, any studies, surveys or reports that may enable the Committee to fully assess how the provisions of the Convention are applied in practice.

Articles 4(a) and 7 of the Convention. Measures to promote free choice of employment and integration in the labour market. In reply to the Committee's previous comment on the impact of the presence of young children on the employment rate of men and women and on the barriers to women's access to employment, the Government indicates, in its report, that the "Reconciliation of Family and Working Life" national project started in September 2019. Its main objective is to improve the conditions for reconciling work and family life and increase the employment of people with parental responsibilities, especially women, by allowing employers who create jobs for workers with family responsibilities to apply for a financial contribution for a maximum of 12 months, depending on the duration of the contract, to cover up to 95 per cent of the total labour costs, not exceeding €844 (which represents 1.2 times the minimum wage). The Government indicates that the project is expected to provide employment to approximately 1,000 women and that, by 2020, 694 unemployed persons had been hired, 690 of whom were women, and 377 were women with children below 6 years of age. With reference to its previous comment and its general observation on workers with family responsibilities, which was adopted in 2019, the Committee requests the Government to continue and intensify its efforts to overcome the persistent obstacles faced by workers with family responsibilities, more particularly by mothers with young children, in exercising their right to free choice of employment and entering or re-entering into the labour market and participating in vocational training. It requests the Government to provide information on the concrete measures taken to this end and the results achieved in this regard, and to specify the number of women and men with children below 6 years of age and with children between 6 and 10 years of age who have accessed employment or received other benefits under these measures. The Committee also asks the Government to continue to provide up-to-date information on the results achieved under the "Reconciliation of Family and Working Life" project in giving effect to the provisions of the Conventions. Noting the absence of information in this regard, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide a copy of any collective agreements containing specific provisions in favour of workers with family responsibilities.

Article 6. Educational programmes. With reference to its previous comments and in the absence of a reply from the Government on this point, the Committee once again requests the Government to strengthen its efforts to take effective and proactive measures, such as public awareness-raising campaigns and education initiatives, to promote a more equitable sharing of family responsibilities between men and women, as well as a broader public understanding of various aspects of employment of workers with family responsibilities. It requests the Government to provide information on any survey, studies or programmes undertaken to this end, as well as specific information on the impact of such initiatives and any follow-up measures implemented.

The Committee notes with concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Protection of workers against discrimination. Legislation. The Committee notes with interest the adoption of the Protection against Discrimination Act which came into force on 24 May 2016 and which replaced the Implementation of the Principle of Equal Treatment Act of 2004. It notes that the Act strengthens protection against direct and indirect discrimination and harassment and sexual harassment, irrespective of sex, nationality, race or ethnic origin, language, religion or belief, disability, age, sexual orientation, sexual identity or sexual expression, social status, property status, education, or any other personal circumstance in various fields of social life including employment and occupation. The Committee notes that the Act does not explicitly refer to political opinion in the list of grounds covered. The Government reports that the Act's non-exclusive list of grounds which includes "any other personal circumstance", and the protection against employment discrimination provision on the ground of "belief" in the Employment Relationship Act of 2013, along with article 14 of the Constitution, which guarantees everyone equal human rights and fundamental freedoms irrespective of political or other conviction, among other grounds, provides protection against "inadmissible" unfavourable treatment on the basis of political conviction. The Committee further notes that the new Act established the new Advocate of the Principle of Equality as an independent body with enforcement powers. In the field of employment, the Committee notes that this Act overlaps and reinforces the existing non-discrimination provisions in the Employment Relationship Act of 2013, as amended. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the measures adopted to promote and apply the Discrimination Act of 2016 as well as the non-discrimination provisions in the Employment Relationship Act of 2013, as amended, with respect to employment and occupation in the public and private sectors, including any steps taken to raise awareness among employers and workers. The Government is also asked to provide detailed information on the implementation of the protection against discrimination on the ground of political opinion. The Government is asked to provide information on the functioning of the office of the Advocate of the Principle of Equality and on any steps taken by the Advocate's Office to enforce the Discrimination Act in employment and occupation, including the number of cases dealt with and the ground of discrimination concerned, disaggregated by sex.

Article 1(1)(a). Discrimination on the ground of national extraction. The Committee recalls its previous concerns regarding non-Slovenes from the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, namely "erased people" and the difficulties they face in terms of access to social and economic rights, including access to education and employment, because of the loss of their citizenship and by extension their right to remain in the country. The Committee recalls that, on 26 February 1992, 1 per cent of the population of Slovenia (25,671 people) was removed overnight from its registry of permanent residents, following the declaration of independence of Slovenia. "Erased people" are mostly of non-Slovene or mixed ethnicity, and they include a significant number of members of Roma communities. The Committee notes that the Act Regulating the Legal Status of Citizens of the Former Yugoslavia Living in the Republic of Slovenia, 1999, as amended in 2010, expired on 24 July 2017. It notes from the report of the Government that, between 1999 and 31 December 2013, 12,373 permanent residence permits were issued under this Act; and from 1 January 2011 to 31 August 2017, 316 additional residence permits were issued. It further notes that, following the judgment of the European Court of Human Rights in Kuric et al v. Slovenia, the Committee of Ministers decided in May 2016 that the Act Regulating Compensation for Damage to Persons Erased from the Permanent Population Register, 2013, satisfied the judgment of the European Court of Human Rights and, thus, concluded the case. The Committee notes that this Act has begun to be implemented. However, it notes that the United Nations Special Rapporteur on minority issues, in its report following its visit to Slovenia (5–13 April 2018) highlighted that the situation of "erased people" (who for the most part are members of various ethnic, religious or linguistic communities of the former Socialist Federal Republic of Yugoslavia) – is still unsettled, as compensation is still being fought over – despite the judgements made by the European Court of Human Rights and a decision by the Constitutional Court in April 2018 ruling against the limitations for those who filed claims for damages in judicial processes on the amount of compensation awarded. The Committee notes also that the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights and the Commissioner for Human Rights of the Council of Europe, among others, have expressed their concern at this matter (A/HRC/40/64/Add.1, 8 January 2019, paragraphs 52–55). In light of the Constitutional Court ruling, the Committee urges the Government to take steps to provide a fair compensation scheme to "erased people" still awaiting to be compensated, to take into account losses such as property or employment and to continue to provide information on the steps taken and the results achieved.

Article 2. Equality of opportunity and treatment. Roma. The Committee recalls that for a number of years it has highlighted that one of the main reasons for the high unemployment rate among Roma people is their education level. Hence, its previous request to the Government to pursue its efforts to promote equal access for Roma to education and training, and to provide information on: (i) the measures implemented to promote access to employment and to particular occupations of Roma men and women, including a description of the community work programmes, and their concrete results; (ii) the reasons for focusing primarily on community work in the context of employment programmes; and (iii) the measures taken to prevent and address discrimination, stereotypes and prejudice against the Roma community. The Committee recalls that, under Article 1(3) of the Convention, “employment and occupation” explicitly includes “access to vocational training”. Moreover, in paragraph 750 of its General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, the Committee highlights that access to education and to a wide range of vocational training courses is of paramount importance for achieving equality in the labour market [as] it is a key factor in determining the actual possibilities of gaining access to a wide range of paid occupations and employment, especially those with opportunities for advancement and promotion. The Committee adds that not only do apprenticeships and technical education need to be addressed, but also general education, “on the job training” and the actual process of training.

The Committee notes the very detailed information provided by the Government on the labour market situation of the Roma people and the range of measures adopted to improve their situation in education and employment. The Government states that it places great importance on measures (systemic, specific, and project-based) for the effective integration of Roma children in education. The Committee notes that from 2015 to 2017 there has been a slight decrease in unemployment and a slight increase in the employment of Roma men and women, with men having higher employment rates than women. It notes that Roma people continue to be a target group of the Active Employment Policy and that over 2,400 Roma participate, annually, in programmes including formal and informal education, training, career counselling, job-seeking assistance and public works projects. The Committee further notes the adoption of the National Programme of Measures for the Roma for the 2017–21 period, which includes raising educational levels, reducing unemployment, elimination of prejudice, stereotypes and discrimination, preserving Roma culture, language and identity, among its objectives. The Committee notes that the Commissioner for Human Rights of the Council of Europe, in its 2017 report, recognized that Slovenia has a solid legislative and policy framework for promoting Roma rights and welcomed the recent adoption of a revised National Programme of Measures for Roma 2017–21, which includes a plan for strengthening the pre-school education of Roma children; the tutoring system for Roma pupils; Slovenian language learning; the inclusion of Roma in the apprenticeship system; and the training of education professionals who work with Roma children. The Commissioner however observed that, if officially segregation (schooling in separate classes) is no longer present, de facto the situation is still not satisfactory, for example: (i) Roma children continue to be underrepresented in pre-schools and overrepresented in special needs schools, with about 12.2 per cent of Roma children being directed to such schools in the school year 2017–18 in comparison with 6.18 per cent of other children; (ii) in kindergartens they can be placed together with other children in mixed kindergarten classes or in “special classes” (which is possible only in the regions with large Roma populations); (iii) there is still a high level of absenteeism from school and drop-out rates in some regions; and (iv) a very low number of Roma children who reach secondary and tertiary education in the country (over 60 per cent of Roma have not completed elementary school). The Commissioner noted that teachers, Roma children and parents generally acknowledge that many of the difficulties Roma children encounter in primary schools are due to language barriers as many Roma children have no or limited command of the language spoken by the majority population. He also identified the following additional reasons for this as: insufficient value placed on education by families; poor housing conditions that do not allow families to make school a priority; early marriages and pregnancies; and criminality among teenage boys. The Committee notes further that, in its 2019 Country Report on Non-Discrimination in Slovenia, the Network of legal experts in gender equality and non-discrimination of the European Commission, observed that “In Slovenia, there are specific trends and patterns (whether legal or societal) in education regarding Roma pupils, such as segregation.” In addition, the Committee notes that, the United Nations Special Rapporteur on Minority issues commended Slovenia for the considerable efforts it has made in recent years to improve the situation of Roma and the protection of their human rights, including in key areas such as education and employment. The Special Rapporteur noted that Slovenia does not officially collect disaggregated data on ethnicity, language or religion, and for this reason, no one has a clear idea of the actual size of the country's most vulnerable and marginalized minorities; and that no disaggregated population data have been collected since 2002. The Special Rapporteur however observed that the Roma (and the Sinti) continue to be the most marginalized and vulnerable minorities and recommended inter alia temporary affirmative action programmes in employment and increased awareness-raising campaigns to provide a more rounded view of members of the Roma community (A/HRC/40/64/Add.1, 8 January 2019, paragraphs 20, 29, 33, 62). While welcoming the various initiatives taken by the Government to promote non-discrimination, education and employment of Roma, women and men, the Committee wishes to stress that the unemployment rate for Roma people continues to be high and that improving access to education is key to combat marginalisation and poverty experienced by the Roma people. The Committee asks the Government to pursue its efforts to promote equal access for Roma people to education (in particular through a better access to pre-school education and the employment of suitably trained Roma teaching assistants), training and employment programmes. At the same time, the Committee asks the Government to increase its efforts to address discrimination and prejudice against the Roma community and to take steps to encourage Roma women and men to participate in programmes which will lead to their employment. Observing that there remains a fundamental gap between adopted policies and programmes on the one hand and reality as experienced by members of the Roma minority on the other hand, the Committee asks the Government to continue to provide detailed information on the results of the various initiatives taken to promote non-discrimination in education and employment of Roma women and men. Finally, recalling that appropriate data and statistics are crucial in determining the nature, extent and causes of discrimination, to set priorities and design appropriate measures, to monitor and evaluate the impact of such measures, and make any necessary adjustments, the Committee asks the Government to take steps to collect and analyse relevant data, including comparable statistics to enable an accurate assessment of changes over time while being sensitive to and respecting privacy.

General observation of 2018. With regard to the above issues and in more general terms, the Committee would like to draw the Government's attention to its general observation on discrimination based on race, colour and national extraction which was adopted in 2018. In the general observation, the Committee notes with concern that discriminatory attitudes and stereotypes based on the race, colour or national extraction of men and women workers continue to hinder their participation in education, vocational training programmes and access to a wider range of employment opportunities, resulting in persisting occupational segregation and lower remuneration received for work of equal value. Furthermore, the Committee considers that it is necessary to adopt a comprehensive and coordinated approach to tackling the obstacles and barriers faced by persons in employment and occupation because of their race, colour or national extraction, and to promote equality of opportunity and treatment for all. Such an approach should include the adoption of interlocking measures aimed at addressing gaps in education, training and skills, providing unbiased vocational guidance, recognizing and validating the qualifications obtained abroad, and valuing and recognizing traditional knowledge and skills that may be relevant both to accessing and advancing in employment and to engaging in an occupation. The Committee also recalls that, in order to be effective, these measures must include concrete steps, such as laws, policies, programmes, mechanisms and participatory processes, remedies designed to address prejudices and stereotypes and to promote mutual understanding and tolerance among all sections of the population. The Committee draws the Government's attention to its general observation of 2018 and requests the Government to provide information in response to the questions raised in that observation.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Workers with Family Responsibilities Convention, 1981 (No. 156) (ratification: 1992)

Articles 3 and 4 of the Convention. National policy, non-discrimination, leaves and benefits. Legislative developments. The Committee notes with interest the substantial amendments to the Parental Protection and Family Benefits Act in 2014, 2015, 2017 and 2018, which have the objective of transposing European legislation, including Council Directive 2010/18/EU, and of facilitating a more equal distribution of parental protection and childcare responsibilities between both parents. The Committee welcomes the various entitlements provided under the Act, including longer paternity leave, paternity leave benefit, parental leave for both parents, parental leave benefits, the possibility of reduction from full-time to part-time work, and other family and child support allowances and assistance. The Committee also notes the adoption of the Protection against Discrimination Act 2016 which prohibits discrimination on the basis of a number of specified grounds and on the basis of “any other personal circumstance”, and which covers all areas of social life, including employment. It further notes that explanatory information about the 2016 Act on the official website of the Ministry of Labour, Family, Social Affairs and Equal Opportunities, indicates that an example of “any other personal circumstance” could be “parental or other family status”. The Committee notes the adoption on 20 June 2019 of EU Directive 2019/1158 on work-life balance for parents and carers, repealing Council Directive 2010/18/EU on parental leave. Noting the recent adoption of EU Directive 2019/1158 on work-life balance, the Committee asks the Government to provide information on: (i) the steps taken to transpose it into its national legislation; (ii) the manner in which the Parental Protection and Family Benefits Act of 2014, as amended, has been implemented in practice by both men and women taking up the various entitlements provided under the Act; (iii) the impact of this Act on any increase in the use of these measures by men; and (iv) the manner in which the Protection against Discrimination Act 2016 has been implemented to promote application of the Convention with respect to non-discrimination in employment of persons with family responsibilities, including any action taken under the office of the Advocate of the Principle of Equality.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

South Africa

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1997)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations made by the social partners within the National Economic Development and Labour Council (NEDLAC) and communicated with the Government's report.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Discrimination based on race, colour and national extraction. Affirmative action. The Committee notes with interest the Government's indication, in its report, that it is implementing various initiatives in order to strengthen its efforts in promoting equality of treatment and opportunities of all designated groups, such as: (1) conducting annual employment equity workshops nationally with workers, employers and their representative organizations and other interested parties; and (2) forging strategic partnerships between the Commission for Employment Equity (CEE) and various key institutions such as the Commission for Gender Equality, the South African Human Rights Commission, the National Skills Authority, the Broad-Based Black Economic Empowerment Commission, the Department of Youth and Persons with Disabilities in the Presidency, the Commission for Conciliation, Mediation and Arbitration (CCMA), the Public Employment Services and the Inspections and Enforcement Services Branches of the Department of Employment and Labour. The main objectives of these partnerships are to raise awareness on the right to equality, dignity and fair treatment and to ensure there is coherence in the various policy instruments and implementation. The Government adds that the labour inspectors conduct employment equity inspections to assess the legal compliance with the Employment Equity Act, 1998 (EEA).

The Committee notes that the Government refers to the process of amending the Employment Equity Act 1998 with a view to: (1) empowering the Minister of Employment and Labour to regulate sector specific employment equity targets in order to address the slow pace of transformation in the labour market until now and achieve equitable representation of the designated groups, namely, black people, women, and persons with disabilities; (2) exempting employers with less than 50 employees from implementing Chapter III of the EEA on affirmative action; and (3) regulating assessment criteria for the issuing of employment equity compliance certificates as a prerequisite for accessing state contracts (section 53 of the EEA). In this regard, the Committee further notes that the Employment Equity Amendment Bill was adopted by Parliament (National Assembly and National Council of Provinces) on 17 May 2022. The Committee notes that the workers' representatives within NEDLAC welcome the amendments of the EEA, but underline that the main issue is the non-implementation of section 53. The Committee also notes that the Chief Director of Statutory and Advocacy Services within the Department of Employment and Labour indicated in March 2022 that, in the past financial year, 60 per cent of employers had been referred to prosecution for failure to comply with the employment equity legislation; and that the review process of the Director-General of the Department of Employment and Labour (under section 43 of the EEA) revealed a 94 per cent non-compliance rate with the EEA. It further notes the information, shared by the Minister of Employment and Labour and the Chairperson of the CEE on the launch of the 22nd CEE Annual Report (April 2021-March 2022), that the labour market compliance levels with the EEA "remain[ed] regrettably low", echoing in this the findings of the CEE. White and Indian population groups remained over-represented at top management, senior management and professionally qualified/middle management levels, against their Economically Active Population (EAP) rate. White people represented 63.2 per cent of top managers and 51.4 per cent of senior managers whereas the African and Coloured population groups were grossly under-represented at these levels (even at the professionally qualified/middle management level, the African population group was approximately 33 per cent below their EAP rate). It is worth noting that, at the top management level, the representation of the White population group was approximately seven times their EAP rate in the private sector (and just below their EAP in the public service) whereas the African population group representation was nearly six times below their EAP rate in the private sector (and almost at their EAP rate in the public service). The same pattern is reproduced at senior management level. As for the representation of the Coloured population group at top management level, it was far below their EAP rate in the private sector and slightly above their EAP rate in the public service. The Minister also noted with concern "the continued and flourishing slave conditions in the labour market, wherein the immigrants were being exploited".

In view of the above, the Committee asks the Government to continue to strengthen its efforts in promoting equality of treatment and opportunities in employment and occupation of all the designated groups and to provide information on: (i) the results achieved in the transformation of the labour market towards a more equitable representation of the designated groups (including statistical data as shown in the annual report of the Commission for Employment Equity); and (ii) the assessment of its affirmative action measures with a view to determining whether they remain effective and are in line with the principle of non-discrimination.

It also asks the Government to provide information on: (i) the actions taken within the framework of the National Action Plan to Combat Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance, 2019–2024, the obstacles identified and the results achieved; and (ii) the implementation of section 53 of the Employment Equity Act as amended (measures put in place to evaluate the assessment criteria for the issuing of employment equity compliance certificates and number of certificates denied based on this assessment).

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 2017)

Previous comment

Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. Discrimination based on sex. Sexual harassment. The Committee refers to its previous comment and notes the Government's confirmation that the draft Violence in the Workplace and Sexual Harassment Act has been amended to include the prohibition of sexual harassment in vocational training, access to employment and performing work in an occupation. The Government also confirms that the protection against sexual harassment includes harassment by co-workers and clients and other persons met in connection with the performance of work as well as employers and supervisors. However, the Committee notes with regret that the draft Bill has not been adopted yet. The Committee therefore asks the Government to: (i) ensure that the draft Violence in the Workplace and Sexual Harassment Act includes a prohibition of both quid pro quo and hostile work environment sexual harassment; (ii) take all the necessary measures to ensure its adoption in the nearest future; and (iii) provide information on any developments in this respect, as well as a copy of the Act once adopted.

Syrian Arab Republic

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1957)

The Committee notes with concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee notes the complexity of the situation prevailing on the ground and the armed conflict in the country.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Legislative developments. Work of equal value. The Committee previously noted that section 75(a) of the Labour Code of 2010 provides for the principle of equal remuneration for work of equal value as enshrined in the Convention. It notes however that section 75(b) defines "work of equal value" as "work that requires equal scientific qualifications and professional skills, as attested by a work experience certificate". The Committee points out that such a definition restricts the full application of the principle as set out in the Convention. The Committee recalls that the concept of "work of equal value" lies at the heart of the fundamental right of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value, and the promotion of equality. This concept is fundamental to tackling occupational sex segregation in the labour market, which exists in almost every country, as it permits a broad scope of comparison, including, but going beyond equal remuneration for "equal", "the same" or "similar" work, and also encompasses work that is of an entirely different nature, which is nevertheless of equal value. Moreover, the Committee recalls that the principle has been applied to compare the remuneration received by men and women engaged in different occupations, such as wardens in sheltered accommodation for the elderly (predominantly women) and security guards in office premises (predominantly men); or school meal supervisors (predominantly women) and garden and park supervisors (predominantly men) (2012 General Survey on Fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 673 and 675). In light of the above, the Committee asks the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 75(b) of the Labour Code in order to ensure equal remuneration for men and women not only in situations in which they perform the same work, but also in situations in which they carry out work which is different but nevertheless of equal value.

Tajikistan

The Committee notes with concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report once again contains no information in response to a number of its previous comments. The Committee wishes to reiterate that without the necessary information, it is not in a position to assess the effective implementation of the Convention, including any progress achieved since its ratification. The Committee hopes that the next report will contain full information on the issues raised below.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Gender wage gap. Private sector. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the persistence of both the gender wage gap and occupational gender segregation. It also noted that agricultural workers were still paid the lowest wage in the economy (367.59 Tajikistani Somoni (TJS) for men and TJS211.34 for women, approximately US$39 and $22 respectively) and that women were concentrated in the informal economy and in low-paid jobs. The Committee therefore requested that the Government step up its efforts to address the gender wage gap, particularly in the agricultural sector, and that it provide information on the measures taken in this regard. It also requested that the Government provide information on the measures taken to improve access of women to a wider range of job opportunities at all levels to address the occupational gender segregation. The Committee notes, from the Government's report, the adoption of a national strategy to enhance the role of women and girls 2011–20 and a state programme on the education, selection and appointment of managerial positions in the Republic of Tajikistan from among capable women and girls 2007–16. With regard to the fact that workers with the lowest paid jobs are found in the agricultural sector, the Government indicates that trade unions intend to make proposals to amend the General Agreement for the period 2018–20. The Government also indicates, in its report on the application of the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111), that as a result of the state programme, in 2017, 1,002 women in need of special social protection were provided with employment and that 528 entrepreneurial initiatives from women received financial assistance. Further, the Committee notes, from the Government's sixth periodic report submitted under the United Nations Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW), the establishment of presidential grants to support and develop women's entrepreneurial activities in 2016–20, the Plan of Action of the National Strategy on promoting the role of women 2015–20 and the National Development Strategy of the Republic of Tajikistan for the period up to 2030, which includes a special section addressing existing problems of inequality and discrimination, particularly for women in rural areas, and ways of resolving them (CEDAW/C/TJK/6, 2 November 2017, paragraph 136). The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the measures taken in the framework of the abovementioned policies to improve the access of women, especially women in rural areas, to job opportunities at all levels, including as managers of farms, and on the impact of such measures. The Committee further requests the Government to pursue its efforts to address the gender wage gap, particularly in the agricultural sector, and to provide information on the measures taken in this regard and the results obtained with regard to achieving pay equity. Finally, noting the absence of information provided in this regard, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide detailed and up-to-date statistics on wages of women and men, including sex disaggregated data by industry and occupational category.

Civil service. In the absence of any information provided in this regard, the Committee once again requests the Government to indicate how it ensures equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value in the civil service in practice and to provide statistical information disaggregated by sex on the distribution of men and women in the various occupations and grades in the civil service, and their corresponding earnings.

Article 2. Legislation. In its previous comments, the Committee asked the Government to clarify whether section 102 of the Labour Code and section 13 of the Framework Law on State Guarantees of Equal Rights for Men and Women and Equal Opportunities in the Exercise of such Rights, No. 89 of 1 March 2005, both provided for equal pay for "work of equal value" or for "equal work". The Committee takes due note that the wording of section 140 of the new Labour Code 2017 and section 13 of the above-mentioned Framework

Law of 2005 both guarantee equal remuneration for work of equal value. Noting however that, once again, the report is silent on the application of these provisions in practice, the Committee stresses that the continued persistence of significant gender pay gaps requires that governments, along with employers' and workers' organizations take measures to raise awareness, make assessments, and promote and enforce the application of the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value (see 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 669). Consequently, the Committee reiterates its request to the Government that it provide information on the practical application of section 140 of the Labour Code 2017 and section 13 of Framework Law No. 89 of 1 March 2005.

Article 3. Wage determination. The Committee previously noted the adoption of Government Decree No. 98 of 5 March 2008, to approve the concept of wage reforms in the Republic of Tajikistan, which provides, among others, for mechanisms of state regulation of wage determination. In this context, it requested the Government to provide information on the measures taken to ensure that the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value is being taken into account. The Committee notes that the Government has not provided any information in this regard. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to ensure that the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value is being taken into account in the context of state regulation of wage determination.

Article 4. Collective agreements. The Committee previously requested the Government to provide examples of collective agreements covering different sectors, to indicate how these agreements promote the principle of equal pay for work of equal value, and to indicate the percentage of the workforce covered by collective agreements. The Committee takes note of the Government's indication that there are 20 sectorial trade union committees covering all sectors of employment. The Government also indicates that trade union committees work with employers on basic wage agreements and collective agreements. While taking due note of the information provided, the Committee notes that the Government does not indicate how collective agreements promote the principle of the Convention. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to provide examples of collective agreements covering different sectors and to indicate how these agreements promote the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. It also requests the Government to indicate the percentage of the workforce covered by collective agreements, disaggregated by sex.

Enforcement. The Committee previously noted that a Coordinating Council on Gender Issues has been established in the Ministry of Labour and Social Protection and the State Labour Inspectorate to monitor discrimination against women in the labour market and requested the Government to provide information on its activities regarding equal remuneration for men and women. The Committee also requested the Government to provide information on cases of violations of the principle of equal remuneration dealt by the labour inspectorate or the courts. The Committee notes the Government's indication that no complaints regarding remuneration have been recorded. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the activities of the Coordinating Council on Gender Issues to monitor sex-based discrimination regarding remuneration. With regard to the lack of complaints, the Committee refers the Government to its comments under Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) and requests the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to ensure that the principle of the Convention is enforced by the courts and the labour inspectorate. Once again, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of violations of section 140 of the Labour Code dealt with by the Ministry of Labour and Social Protection and the State Labour Inspectorate, and indicate whether the courts have dealt with any cases concerning the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

The Committee notes with concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee takes note of the supplementary information provided by the Government in light of the decision adopted by the Governing Body at its 338th Session (June 2020). The Committee proceeded with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the supplementary information received from the Government this year, as well as on the basis of the information at its disposal in 2019.

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), which were received on 11 September 2019.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards
(International Labour Conference, 108th Session, June 2019)

Article 2 of the Convention. Equality of opportunity and treatment between men and women. The Committee notes the discussion in the Committee on the Application of Standards (CAS) of the International Labour Conference, at its 108th Session (June 2019), on the application of the Convention, and the conclusions adopted. The conclusions of the CAS called upon the Government to: (1) report on the concrete measures taken to ensure that direct and indirect discrimination on all grounds is prohibited in law and in practice; and (2) provide without delay information on the implementation in practice of the Framework Law on State Guarantees of Equal Rights for Men and Women and Equal Opportunities in the Exercise of such Rights, No. 89 of 1 March 2005 (Law on State Guarantees of 2005).

The Committee welcomes the detailed information provided by the Government in its report regarding the legislative framework and the policies and programmes developed and implemented with respect to equality of opportunity and treatment between men and women. The Committee notes, in particular, that the Government acknowledges that gender equality cannot be achieved if laws and policies are not implemented in practice and indirect discrimination persists. The Government adds that in order to detect indirect discrimination the country's legislation in this area needs to be improved and the first priority is to amend the national legislation. It also indicates that to improve policy to ensure de facto gender equality, the National Development Strategy for 2030 provides for the following measures: (1) improving legislation in order to realize the State guarantees of creating equal opportunities for women and men; (2) developing institutional mechanisms to introduce national and international obligations to ensure gender equality and expand women's opportunities in sectoral policies; (3) activating mechanisms for the literacy and social inclusion of women, including rural women; (4) boosting the gender capacity and gender sensitivity of staff members at agencies in all branches of government; and (5) introducing gender budgeting setting in the budget process. The Committee welcomes the Government's indication that, with a view to achieving de facto gender equality, a working group on the improvement of laws and regulations to eradicate gender stereotypes, protect women's rights and prevent domestic violence has made proposals on introducing the concepts of direct and indirect discrimination, temporary measures, and compulsory gender analysis of laws. As regards the Law on State Guarantees of 2005, the Committee notes that in 2018, the Committee for Women's and Family Affairs (CWFA) monitored its implementation, by collecting and analysing data from central ministries and agencies, and selected local executive authorities. The Government further states that a report, which includes an analysis of the implementation of the law's articles, and conclusions and recommendations to improve its monitoring and implementation, was prepared in this regard.

The Committee notes from ITUC's observations that it regrets the lack of concrete information provided by the Government to the supervisory bodies, which would enable a more comprehensive assessment of the situation in the country. It further notes that ITUC emphasizes the need not only to draft laws but also to implement specific policies to eliminate all forms of discrimination and take proactive measures to identify and address the underlying causes of discrimination and gender inequalities deeply entrenched in traditional and societal values. The Committee notes ITUC's statement that the very name of the body responsible for the implementation of the national policy to protect and ensure the rights and interests of women and their families, the "Committee for Women's and Family Affairs", raises an issue because it appears to enshrine the idea that women are the only ones who have to assume responsibilities in relation to their families. In this regard, the Committee notes the Government's indication that, with the aim of eradicating stereotypes about the roles and duties of women and men in the family and society, and to boost awareness of and ensure equal rights and opportunities for men and women, a range of measures were implemented for different sections of society and the possibilities of the mass media are widely used. More than 200 programmes on understanding the importance of ensuring equal rights and opportunities for men and women were prepared and broadcasted by the members of the CWFA. In its supplementary information, the Government also indicates that it is taking every measure to root out gender discrimination against women based on stereotyped ideas of their capabilities and role in society, which contradict the Convention and hinder women's recruitment and employment.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that expanding economic opportunities for women and their competitiveness in the labour market, and the development of their entrepreneurial activities play a key role in ensuring gender equality. In this regard, it notes the detailed information regarding measures adopted to support the development of women entrepreneurship, through the allocation of grants, access to microcredit and an inter-agency working group to support women's entrepreneurship operating under the State Committee for State Property Investment and Management. The Government also indicates that further to the adoption of concluding observations in 2018 by the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW/C/TJK/CO/6, 14 November 2018, paragraph 37), it has formulated, through broad discussions with the civil society, and adopted in May 2019, a National Plan of Action to Implement the Recommendations of the CEDAW 2019–22. In this regard, the Committee notes that the CEDAW, while welcoming the measures taken to support women entrepreneurs and to regulate domestic work and work from home, expressed concern inter alia about the following: (1) the concentration of women in the informal sector and in low-paying jobs in the healthcare, education and agriculture sectors; (2) the low level of participation of women in the labour market (32.6 per cent) and the low employment rate among women (40.5 per cent), compared with men (59.5 per cent); (3) the absence of social security coverage, the shortage of preschool facilities and family responsibilities non compatible with paid work, which make women particularly prone to unemployment; (4) the adoption in 2017 of the list of occupations for which the employment of women is prohibited; and (5) the lack of access to employment for women with a reduced capacity for competitiveness, such as women with disabilities, mothers with several children, women heads of single-parent families, pregnant women and women who have been left behind by male migrants.

With respect to the employment of women in the civil service, the Committee welcomes the various steps taken by the Government. It notes the indication that, as at 1 July 2019, there were 18,835 active civil servants in total (19,119 as at 1 January 2019), including 4,432 women, which represented 23.5 per cent of civil servants (4,441 or 23.2 per cent as at 1 January 2019). In leadership positions, there were 5,676 persons representing 30.1 per cent of all civil servants and 1,044 of them were women (18.4 per cent in such positions). The Committee further notes, from the Government's additional information, that as at 1 April 2020, women represented 23.7 per cent of civil servants, and 19.1 per cent of leadership positions. With a view to promoting gender equality in the civil service, the Government adds that the Civil Service Agency (CSA) together with all State bodies is taking appropriate steps to recruit women to the civil service at all levels of public administration. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, in the first half of 2019, the CSA together with the Institute for State Administration held 24 professional training courses for civil servants, including four retraining and 20 professional development courses, which were attended by 977 persons – 236, or 24.1 per cent, of whom were women. In line with the requirements of State statistical report form No. 1-GS, "Report on the quantitative and qualitative composition of civil service", the CSA also conducts quarterly monitoring and draws up statistical reports on the number of civil servants, including women, the results of which are transmitted to the appropriate State bodies and discussed at board meetings for the necessary steps to be taken. The Government also mentions positive measures adopted to promote the employment of women in the civil service, through the implementation, since 2017, of the State Programme on the Development, Selection and Placement of Gifted Women and Girls as Leading Cadres of Tajikistan 2017–2022; the establishment of incentives and quotas for women; and, on first appointment to the civil service, the granting of three additional steps on the grading scale, pursuant to Presidential Decree No. 869 adopted in 2017. According to the Government, as a result of implementing those measures, 36 women were recruited to various civil service positions in the first half of 2019.

Welcoming the positive developments regarding the promotion of gender equality in employment and occupation both in the private and the public sectors, the Committee asks the Government to pursue its efforts to foster equality opportunity and treatment between men and women in employment and occupation and, in particular, to take appropriate steps, including through amending legislation, to address indirect discrimination and occupational gender segregation. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on the content, conclusions and recommendations of the report prepared to analyse the implementation of the Law No. 89 on State Guarantees of Equal Rights for Men and Women and Equal Opportunities in the Exercise of such Rights of 2005, as well as on any follow-up measures taken in this regard. The Committee also asks the Government to continue to provide detailed information on the situation of men and women in employment and occupation, both in the private and public sectors, as well as on the results of any positive measures taken to improve women's access to employment, and their results. Noting that the Government's report does not contain any information on any concrete measures taken, and their results, to address direct and indirect discrimination based on grounds other than sex, the Committee asks the Government to provide such information in its next report.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1967)

Previous comment

The Committee notes that the observations of the Confederation of Turkish Trade Unions (TÜRK-İS) transmitted by the Government with its report are identical to those communicated with its previous report, which were addressed in the Committee's 2019 comments.

Articles 1–4 of the Convention. Assessing and addressing the gender pay gap. The Committee welcomes the detailed information provided by the Government in its report on the various programmes and projects being implemented, which aim to increase women's access to employment and addressing vertical and horizontal occupational gender segregation, including the Project of Supporting Employment Policies Sensitive to Gender Equality 2019–22, the Project of Supporting Decent Jobs of the Future Approach with a Gender Equality Focus 2020–23, the Mother at Work Project, and the Project to Support Women's Access to More and Better Job Opportunities – second phase 2019–22. In this context, the Committee refers to its comments under the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111). The Committee notes from the Structure of Earning Survey of 2018 transmitted by the Government that, taking into account the remuneration of women at all education levels, the overall gender pay gap stood at 7.7 per cent in 2018, with the widest gap (28.8 per cent) recorded at the vocational high school level in 2018. The Committee also refers to the report "Measuring the Gender Wage Gap" prepared jointly by the Turkish Statistical Institute (TURKSTAT) and the ILO Office for Türkiye, which shows how and why the gender pay gap varies when alternative sources of data are used. The report provides detailed data on the gender wage gap, including by occupation, sector of the economy, type of economy (private, public, formal, informal) as well as information on the motherhood wage gap. According to this report, the wage gap between women with children, and those without, is 11 per cent; moreover, when comparing the median wage level of mothers to that of fathers, the wage gap rises to 19 per cent. The Committee also notes the indication that the Strategy Document and Action Plan on Women's Empowerment 2018–23 establishes a number of actions aimed at reducing the existing gender pay gap. The Committee recalls that occupational gender segregation, in which women are typically concentrated in lower paying jobs or sectors remains one of the main underlying causes of gender wage gaps between men and women. Accordingly, the Committee asks the Government to intensify and expand its efforts to effectively address occupational segregation across the labour market, including through tackling gender stereotypes regarding women's professional aspirations, preferences and capabilities. The Committee asks the Government to provide detailed updated information on: (i) the nature and impact of specific measures taken or envisaged under the Strategy Document and Action Plan on Women's Empowerment 2018–23, as well as under any other frameworks, to reduce the gender pay gap; and (ii) statistical data on occupation by sector and level of occupation disaggregated by sex and on the gender pay gap, by sector if possible.

Article 1(a). Additional emoluments. Family allowances. Civil Service. The Committee recalls that section 203 of the Civil Servants Act, 1965, provides that family allowances are paid to the father if both parents are civil servants. It notes once again with regret the Government's indication in its report that no change was made in this regard. Once again, the Committee reiterates that the definition of remuneration in the Convention includes all elements that workers may receive in exchange for their work and arising from their employment, whether paid in cash or in kind, and directly or indirectly by the employer. The Committee asks the Government once again to take the necessary measures so that section 203 of the Civil Servants Act, 1965, is amended to ensure that men and women civil servants are entitled to family allowances on an equal footing and to provide information on the progress made to this end. In this regard, the Committee asks the Government to consider the possibility of allowing both spouses to choose who would benefit from such allowances, rather than starting from the principle that they should systematically be paid to the father.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee notes the observations from the Confederation of Public Employees Trade Unions (KESK), received on 1 September 2021 and the Government's reply thereto received on 19 November 2021. The Committee also notes the observations of the Turkish Confederation of Employer Associations (TİSK) received on 7 September 2021. Furthermore, The Committee notes that the observations of the Confederation of Turkish Trade Unions (TÜRK-İS) transmitted by the Government with its report are identical to those communicated with its previous report, which were addressed in the Committee's 2019 comments.

Articles 1 and 4 of the Convention. Discrimination based on political opinion. Activities prejudicial to the security of the State. The Committee notes that, in reply to its request regarding the practical application of the Anti-Terrorism Act and the Penal Code in cases involving journalists, writers and publishers, the Government merely refers to the existing legal provisions guaranteeing protection against anti-union discrimination in the Constitution, the Penal Code and the labour legislation. According to the Government, there is no restriction or prohibition on the use of trade union rights and the detention and conviction by a court of some unionists should not be associated with their trade union activities. The Government adds that judicial proceedings are carried out within the framework of human rights and that it continues to fight effectively and decisively against terrorist organizations threatening national security and public order, targeting the safety of life and property of its citizens. The Committee notes this information but also notes that the Government does not reply to its previous comment. While fully understanding the need for measures to protect the security of the State and recalling that they exist in almost all countries, the Committee is concerned that, depending on their application in practice, such measures could be used to limit the protection which the Convention seeks to guarantee against discrimination based on political opinion. Therefore, the Committee firmly urges once again the Government to provide information on the cases brought before the courts against journalists, writers and publishers under the Anti-Terrorism Act and the Penal Code, indicating the number of cases and the charges brought as well as their outcome. The Committee asks the Government to indicate how it is ensured that the application in practice of the Anti-Terrorism Act and the Penal Code in cases involving such workers does not lead to discrimination based on political opinion.

Article 1(1)(a). Discrimination based on political opinion. Public Sector. Recruitment procedure. Oral exams and security investigations. The Committee notes that the KESK, in its 2021 observations, reiterates the serious concerns about the discrimination based on political opinion raised in its previous observations and reaffirms that there is a broad and vague interpretation of the Turkish Penal Code and the Anti-Terror Law as regards the recruitment of new public officers and the working life of public officers. The KESK also: (1) reiterates concern regarding the impartiality, neutrality and independency of those who serve in committees in charge of making decisions about new public officers' suitability for employment into the public sector, since the introduction of an oral interview phase; (2) alleges that oral exams are used to select those who are loyal to the Government rather than eligible for public services, and security investigations and archive screening (that are extended to family members) are used to block those who are not deemed suitable for public services; (3) indicates that until 2016, there were only a few professions which fell into the category of sensitive and high-level positions that required extra measures namely security investigations and archive screening; and (4) underlines that following the State of Emergency, these extra security measures have been applied to all sectors and dozens of people were not recruited on the ground that there was a judicial investigation against them in the past, even if they were acquitted. The Committee regrets to note that the Government's report does not contain information on the adoption and entry into force of any new legislation, further to the annulment of the regulation on "security investigation" and "archive screening" by the Constitutional Court. The Committee asks the Government to ensure that, during recruitment in the public sector, any new legislation providing for security investigation and oral exams does not lead to discrimination based on the grounds set out in the Convention, in particular discrimination based on political opinion. It also asks the Government to: (i) describe any new procedures of "security investigation" and "archive screening" put in place by law; and (ii) ensure that persons alleging discrimination in recruitment and selection in the public sector have effective access in practice to adequate and timely procedures for a review of their case and to appropriate remedies.

Duties of loyalty, impartiality and neutrality. The Committee notes that, in its report, the Government emphasizes that, according to section 7 of the Civil Servants Law No. 657 on "Impartiality and Loyalty to the State", civil servants shall not become affiliated to political parties, or conduct themselves in any manner aimed at providing advantage or disadvantage for any political party, person or group, and they shall not under any circumstances make any declarations and pursue a course of action with political and ideological aims or participate in such actions. It adds that civil servants are, in all cases, obligated to protect the benefits of the State and shall not perform any activities which are contrary to the Constitution and the national laws, which prejudice the integrity and independence of the country, and which endanger the security of the Republic of Türkiye. The Committee recalls that, in accordance with Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention, discrimination based on political opinion is prohibited. The protection of political opinion applies to opinions which are either expressed or demonstrated but does not apply where violent methods are used. Furthermore, not all distinctions, exclusions and preferences are deemed to be discrimination within the meaning of the Convention, such as measures warranted by the security of the State under Article 4 as mentioned above or inherent requirements of a particular job under Article 1(2). The Committee recalls that it is essential that such restrictions are not carried beyond certain limits, evaluated on a case-by-case basis, and in this regard, it refers the Government to paragraphs 801, 805 and 831 of its 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions. In light of the above, the Committee asks the Government to consider: (i) defining further the duties of impartiality and loyalty of civil servants and limiting the restrictions regarding political activities to determined positions, thereby establishing clear rules of conduct, for instance through the adoption of a code of conduct in consultation with civil servants' organizations; and (ii) adopting a limited list of jobs in the civil service for which political opinion would be considered an inherent requirement.

Massive dismissals: Civil servants, teachers and members of the judiciary. With regard to its previous comments, the Committee notes that the Government refers once again in detail to the legal framework applicable to the dismissals during the state of emergency and the appeal procedure against such decisions. With respect to the appeals lodged and examined by the Inquiry Commission on the State of Emergency Measures set up in 2017, the Committee notes the following information from its website to which the Government refers in its report: (1) by the decree-laws issued within the scope of the state of emergency, a total of 131,922 measures were taken, 125,678 of which were dismissal from public service; (2) the number of applications submitted to the Inquiry Commission was 126,783 as of 31 December 2021; (3) 120,703 decisions were delivered by the Commission and the number of pending applications was 6,080; (4) among the 120,703 decisions delivered between 22 December 2017 and 31 December 2021, 16,060 were accepted (61 of which were related to the opening of organizations that were shut down such as associations, foundations and television channels) and 104,643 were rejected; and (5) a total of 95 per cent of the applications have been decided. The Government further indicates that: (1) the applicants can acquire information on the stage of the applications filed with the Inquiry Commission and the outcome of the decision (“acceptance” or “rejection”) through a dedicated App; (2) the Inquiry Commission delivers individualized and reasoned decisions as a result of the speedy and extensive examination; and (3) out of the 33,956 staff members of the Ministry of National Education who were dismissed from public service pursuant to the emergency decree-laws, 4,360 persons were reinstated into the public service.

The Committee also notes the allegations made by the KESK according to which, although the state of emergency was lifted on 19 July 2018, there are still practices that amount to de facto state of emergency and even martial law in some provinces and in certain periods. The KESK also recalls that there were 4,267 KESK members among these dismissed public employees and although almost 5 years passed, there were still 2,630 pending cases concerning KESK members to be examined by the Inquiry Commission, as of 28 May 2021. The KESK therefore alleges that there is a deliberate delay in examining the applications of its members and reaffirms that the examination by the Commission is not based on clear criteria. The Committee notes the Government’s reply that KESK’s opinion about the Inquiry Commission (that it is not a competent legal body and not an effective remedy) is biased and unfounded and reiterates that the Commission conducts the examination in terms of membership, affiliation, connection or contact with terrorist organizations or structures/entities or groups established by the National Security Council as engaging in activities against the national security of the State. It also indicates that decisions taken by the judicial authorities are monitored through the UYAP (e-Justice) System.

The Committee asks the Government to ensure that the review mechanism (the Inquiry Commission) continues its work in a timely and effective manner on the basis of clear, fair and transparent criteria. The Committee asks the Government: (i) to continue to provide information on the total number of appeals reviewed by the Inquiry Commission or by the courts, and their outcome; (ii) to indicate whether during the proceedings, dismissed employees have the right to present their cases in person or through a representative; and (iii) to provide its comments regarding the KESK’s allegations on the length of the reviews concerning its members.

Articles 2 and 3. Non-discrimination and equality between men and women. Vocational education and training and employment. The Committee welcomes the detailed statistics provided by the Government regarding the representation of women in professions requiring expertise and the number of women who benefited from active labour force and training programmes from 2002 to the end of March 2021. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that significant increases were recorded in female labour force participation and female employment rates between 2002 and 2019 and that several schemes and programmes were put in place to encourage the participation of women in training and employment, such as the “Additional Employment Incentive”, the “Child Care Support”, the “Mother at Work Project”, the “Jobs Clubs” counselling programme, and the “Half Work Allowance” to reconcile work and family responsibilities. The Government refers once again to the Strategy Document and Action Plan on Women's Empowerment (2018–2023) and its objectives, such as addressing gender occupational segregation. It also indicates that Phase II of the More and Better Jobs for Women Programme (2019–2022), funded by the Swedish International Development Cooperation Agency (SIDA) and implemented in collaboration with the ILO Office for Türkiye: (1) focuses on selected sectors including textiles, commerce and office, food, general services, domestic workers and home workers; and (2) addresses the prevention of violence and harassment in the world of work, the gender pay gap, work-life balance and women's leadership. Under the Program, it is envisaged to organize training, revise and implement the Women's Employment Action Plan, conduct an analysis to identify the obstacles to women's employment and provide business development training and support women entrepreneurs. The Committee notes that the KESK reiterates its observations regarding the decrease in women labour force participation and the "objective of the Government to keep women away from public, social, economic and professional life". The KESK also underlines that the withdrawal of Türkiye from the Council of Europe Convention on preventing and combating violence against women and domestic violence (the Istanbul Convention), on 1 July 2021, is an extremely serious issue for women employees. In its response to the KESK's observations, the Government reiterated the information provided on the various programmes aiming at increasing women's employment as well as provided new information on the "Operation for the Empowerment of Women through Cooperatives" that started in September 2021. Noting all this information, the Committee observes however that the participation of women to the labour force decreased from 34.4 per cent in 2019 to 30.8 per cent in 2020 (ILOSTAT) and remained significantly low in comparison to 68.2 per cent for men. The Committee asks the Government to continue taking specific proactive measures to: (i) promote the effective access of women to adequate education and vocational training and to formal and paid employment, including higher level positions; (ii) enable both men and women to reconcile work and family responsibilities, including through the development of childcare and family facilities and support; and (iii) ensure that the results of the various programmes and projects aimed at empowering women and increasing their participation in education, vocational training and formal employment are effectively monitored, assessed and adjusted, if necessary.

The Committee reiterates its request to the Government to take and implement measures to combat persistent gender stereotypes, for example through awareness-raising and information campaigns, in cooperation with the social partners, and provide information in this regard. The Committee also asks the Government to provide information on: (i) the findings of any studies assessing the legislative framework and the practical obstacles concerning women's employment; (ii) the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic on women's participation to the labour force; and (iii) any corrective measures envisaged or adopted.

The Committee asks once again the Government to provide its comments regarding the alleged dismissal or threats of dismissal of pregnant women because of their pregnancy or enjoyment of full maternity leave, and any impact of the childcare leave on women's employment.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 2002)

Previous comment

Articles 1–4 of the Convention. Assessing and addressing the gender wage gap. The Committee notes that, in its report, the Government merely recalls the national legal framework on equal remuneration for men and women. In this regard, the Committee wishes to point out that, while giving legislative effect to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value is important, it is not sufficient to achieve the goal of the Convention. The issue of the gender wage gap also requires positive measures aimed at tackling its structural and underlying causes, such as horizontal and vertical occupational segregation of women into lower paying jobs or occupations and lower-level positions without promotion opportunities (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 669, 710 and 712). The Committee notes that, according to the 2021 and 2022 Global Gender Gap Reports of the World Economic Forum, the labour force participation rate of women is 79.5 per cent (compared with 87.1 per cent for men), with women being almost entirely concentrated in the informal sector (93 per cent), characterized by low wages. It also notes that, according to the Integrated Labour Force Survey 2020/2021, conducted by the National Bureau of Statistics (NBS) and the Office of the Chief Government Statistician Zanzibar (OCGS), only 2.1 per cent of women were employed in the central and local government sector, while 60.3 per cent were employed in the agricultural (own or family farm) sector, also characterized by significantly lower wages. The same survey shows that the average direct wages and salaries of women are lower than those of men in all areas and industries. More generally, the Committee notes that, according to the 2022 Global Gender Gap Report of the World Economic Forum, the gender pay gap is 25.5 percentage points. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take proactive measures to address the existing gender wage gap, both in the public and private sectors, by: (i) identifying and addressing the underlying causes of pay differentials in the country, such as vertical and horizontal job segregation and gender stereotypes, covering both the formal and the informal economy; and (ii) promoting women's access to a wider range of jobs with career prospects and higher pay, including through the elaboration and implementation by employers of plans to promote gender equality in the workplace. It further asks the Government to communicate updated statistical data on the earnings of men and women in all economic sectors and occupations to monitor any progress achieved.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 2002)

Previous comment

Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention. Discrimination based on sex. Job advertisements. The Committee observes that, in its report, the Government provides no information on the concrete measures taken to address the high prevalence of sex discriminatory hiring and advertising practices in the country previously noted, and merely refers to the general provisions of the Employment and Labour Relations Act (ELRA), Cap. 366 2019, and the Employment and Labour Relations (Code of Good Practice) Rules, 2007, on prohibition of discrimination in the workplace. The Committee again urges the Government to take without delay, in cooperation with the social partners, all the necessary measures to ensure that the principle of non-discrimination on the grounds of sex is effectively applied in hiring and advertising practices, including through awareness-raising activities aimed at eliminating stereotyped assumptions by employers of women's or men's suitability for certain jobs. It also again asks the Government to communicate updated statistical data on the percentage of job vacancies still containing a sex preference.

Article 1(1)(b). Additional grounds of discrimination. HIV Status. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the implementing regulations of the HIV and AIDS Prevention and Control Act No. 28 of 2008 were adopted in 2010. It observes, however, that the regulations mentioned by the Government do not concern specifically section 52(m) of Act No. 28 of 2008, which provides that "the Minister may make regulations prescribing the circumstances under which a person may be regarded to stigmatise and discriminate a person living with HIV and AIDS", but sections 52(a) to 52(e) on counselling and testing, use of antiretroviral medicines (ARVs) and disclosure. In addition, although the Government provides no information on the implementation of the third National Multisectoral Strategic Framework for HIV and AIDS for 2013/14 to 2017/18 with respect to employment and occupation discrimination based on HIV and AIDS status in the public and private sectors, the Committee observes that, in November 2018, the Prime Minister's Office published a new National Multisectoral Strategic Framework for HIV and AIDS for 2018/19 to 2022/23, aiming at zero stigma and discrimination against persons living with HIV and AIDS. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that no cases of discrimination on the basis of HIV and AIDS status in employment and occupation were submitted to the labour officers, the courts or any other authority. In that regard, it wishes to draw the Government's attention to the fact that, where no cases or complaints are being lodged, this may indicate a lack of an appropriate legal framework, lack of awareness of rights, lack of confidence in or absence of practical access to procedures, or fear of reprisals (see 2012 General Survey on fundamental Conventions, paragraph 870). Recalling that the effective application of the Convention is an ongoing process requiring a continual cycle of assessment, action, monitoring, further assessment and adjustment, the Committee asks the Government to provide information on: (i) the impact of the measures and initiatives adopted to implement the National Multisectoral Strategic Framework for HIV and AIDS for 2018/19 to 2022/23 with respect to employment and occupation discrimination based on HIV and AIDS status, both in the public and private sectors; (ii) its efforts to ensure effective access to remedies for victims of such discrimination, as well as sufficient resources and adequate training for relevant institutions; and (iii) the number, nature and outcome of cases of employment and occupation discrimination based on HIV and AIDS status examined by the labour inspectorate, the courts or relevant equality bodies.

Articles 2 and 3. Equality of opportunity and treatment for men and women. The Committee notes the general information provided by the Government regarding the provisions of the Employment and Labour Relations Act (ELRA), Cap. 366 2019, and the Public Service Regulations, 2003, on promotion of equality between men and women at the workplace. It observes, however, that the Government provides no information on the specific measures taken to promote women's economic empowerment and access to formal employment and address vertical and horizontal segregation between men and women in the labour market. In this regard, the Committee notes that, according to the Integrated Labour Force Survey 2020/21 conducted by the National Bureau of Statistics (NBS) and the Office of the Chief Government Statistician Zanzibar (OCGS), the unemployment rate is significantly higher for women (12.7 per cent) than men (5.8 per cent). Furthermore, the 2021 Global Gender Gap Report of the World Economic Forum shows that women remain disproportionately concentrated in informal employment, as 93 per cent of working women are employed in the informal sector. The Committee also notes, from the Integrated Labour Force Survey 2020/21, the persistent gender occupational segregation of the labour market, with women still being over-represented in sectors such as the household and domestic worker's sector. In light of the persistent gender stereotypes and occupational gender segregation of the labour market and the absence of substantial progress made in the past years, the Committee urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to promote effective equality of treatment and opportunity for men and women in employment and occupation, in both law and practice. It asks the Government to provide information on the concrete measures implemented, including in collaboration with the social partners, in order to address both vertical and horizontal occupational gender segregation, for example: (i) by promoting women's economic empowerment, access to formal employment as well as to decision-making positions; and (ii) by raising public awareness, with a view to combating stereotypes regarding women's professional aspirations, preferences and capabilities and their role and responsibilities in the family and society. The Committee further asks the Government to provide updated statistical information on the participation of men and women in employment and occupation, disaggregated by occupational categories and positions, both in the public and private sectors, as well as in the informal economy.

Access of women to education and vocational training. The Committee notes the various initiatives taken by the Government to increase the enrolment rate of children and adolescents in education, mainly through the National Strategy on Inclusive Education (2018–2021) and the Secondary Education Improvement Programme (2020–2025). It also notes that, according to 2021 statistics of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), the gross enrolment ratio in primary and secondary education was higher for girls (98.99 per cent for primary and 29.81 per cent for secondary education) than boys (95.37 per cent for primary and 27.54 per cent for secondary education). UNESCO data shows, however, that the enrolment in technical and vocational education and training programmes remains lower for women (0.6 per cent) than men (3.1 per cent), and that the gross enrolment ratio in tertiary education is 7.1 per cent for women, compared to an enrolment ratio of 8.5 per cent for men. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that it instructed all education administrators to stop the practice of mandatory pregnancy testing of girls as a precondition for admission to lower and upper secondary education. The Government adds that pregnant girls can be readmitted to informal school centres, commonly known as "Open Schools". The Committee observes, however, that in its Decision No. 002/2022 of 15 September 2022, the African Committee of Experts on the Rights and Welfare of the Child (ACERWC) found the United Republic of Tanzania in violation of the African Charter on the Rights and Welfare of the Child, and recommended the Government to immediately prohibit mandatory pregnancy testing in schools, review the Education Regulations by indicating that the moral ground of expulsion should not apply in cases of pregnancy, and immediately readmit schoolgirls who have been expelled due to pregnancy. In this regard, the Committee recalls that mandatory pregnancy testing and discrimination on the basis of pregnancy constitutes a serious form of sex discrimination. The Committee therefore urges the Government to explicitly prohibit pregnancy testing as a precondition for admission to all levels of education and provide information on measures taken (including any sanctions imposed), to ensure that this prohibition is effectively applied in practice, meaning that all students expelled due to pregnancy are effectively readmitted to school. The Committee further reiterates its request to the Government to provide information on the measures taken to enhance access of girls and women to vocational training and higher education, in particular to professions where women are under-represented. Please also provide up-to-date information on the number of men and women enrolled in vocational training and education, including information on the share of men and women in the different areas of specialization.

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1992)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations from the International Union of Food, Agricultural, Hotel, Restaurant, Catering, Tobacco and Allied Workers' Associations (IUF), received on 30 August 2021.

Articles 1–4 of the Convention. Assessing and addressing the gender pay gap and its underlying causes. The Committee notes that, according to the observations of the IUF, the issue of unequal remuneration of men and women for work of equal value is one of the components of discrimination and there are a number of manifestations of unequal payments between men and women in the country. According to the IUF, it is difficult to determine the gender pay gap accurately, because State bodies do not publish statistics that allow such an analysis, nor do they publish information about instances of discrimination against workers. The IUF adds that as women fulfil the role of mother and parent and bear primary responsibility for supervising and caring for children, employers perceive them as less attractive employees. It also emphasizes that women's participation in the labour market is limited by widespread adherence to patriarchal stereotypes, in particular with regard to childcare responsibilities, and the manner in which parental leave is used – exclusively by women – increases the income gap between women and men. After their parental leave comes to an end, women continue to shoulder all child and family care duties, which impacts their involvement in paid work, their career growth and, undoubtedly, their wages. The organization adds that adherence to patriarchal stereotypes is manifested, inter alia, in the active promotion of “working from home” which is low-paid and serves to reinforce the perception that women’s work needs to be adapted to their family responsibilities rather than encouraging equal distribution of such responsibilities. In addition, according to the IUF, horizontal segregation in the labour market reflects a clear division between “female” and “male” specialties and occupations, the latter being as a rule more highly paid, while women find themselves predominating in occupations with low wages. Horizontal gender segregation which hinders women’s development and limits their future economic opportunities can also be explained by women’s choice of field of studies and inadequate levels of education. The Committee also notes the IUF’s indication that there is vertical gender occupational segregation in industries employing large numbers of women, with women being under-represented in leadership or senior positions even though they constitute the majority of the workforce. Finally, the IUF stresses that it is necessary to create a robust mechanism to collect data on a regular basis that can be disaggregated by gender, thereby providing useful statistics for monitoring and analysis and to inform policymakers.

The Committee welcomes the statistics disaggregated by sex provided by the Government and those available on the website of the State Committee on Statistics regarding the share of women in employment, by type of economic activity. These data show that the participation of women in employment has decreased from 45.7 per cent in 2016 to 41.4 per cent in 2020 (with more significant decreases in some regions) but the number of women individual entrepreneurs has increased from 69,756 in 2018 to 81,703 in 2020. The Committee also notes the Government’s indication that it is clear that there is a significant gender gap in employment numbers in sectors such as construction (6.2 per cent women and 93.8 per cent men), shipping and storage (7.2 per cent women and 92.8 per cent men), education (75.7 per cent women and 24.3 per cent men), and healthcare and social services (76.8 per cent women and 23.2 per cent men). It also welcomes the establishment, in accordance with Presidential Decision No. 4235 of 7 March 2019, of a list of minimum gender indicators and the adoption on 8 August 2020 of the Presidential Decision No. 4796 on Measures to Further Improve and Develop the National Statistical System of the Republic of Uzbekistan, which covers the improvement of gender statistics. It further notes that a national census is planned for 2022 and the establishment of the Unified National Labour System (UNLS) in accordance with Presidential Decision of 31 October 2019. Furthermore, the Committee notes with interest the Government’s indication that: (1) an analysis of men’s and women’s salaries disaggregated by the most common jobs and professions, in both the public and private sectors, was conducted using data from the UNLS, which showed that the percentage difference between the average monthly salary of men and women in equivalent jobs and professions was less than 10 per cent (for the first quarter of 2021); and (2) the State Committee on Statistics has determined, in line with ILO methodology, that the percentage difference between the average monthly salary of men and women was 34.5 per cent in 2016, 34.6 per cent in 2017, 38.6 per cent in 2018 and 36.2 per cent in 2019.

In light of the above, the Committee asks the Government to take steps to address: (i) pay differentials between men and women, including measures to remove the practical barriers regarding women’s access to jobs with higher pay; (ii) horizontal and vertical occupational gender segregation, with a view to increasing the number of women in male-dominated sectors, including measures to combat gender stereotypes and promote the sharing of family responsibilities; and (iii) the undervaluation of female-dominated occupations resulting in lower remuneration.

In addition, welcoming the significant progress made in the collection and compilation of data disaggregated by sex, the Committee asks the Government to continue to collect, compile and analyse such data, in particular with respect to men's and women's remuneration, if possible by economic sector, and to communicate them as well as any available statistics on the gender pay gap.

Articles 1(b) and 2(2)(a). Equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value. Legislative developments. The Committee recalls that for a number of years it has been referring to the need to amend the Labour Code of 21 December 1995, which prohibits discrimination on the basis of sex with regard to remuneration, but which does not fully reflect the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value as set out in the Convention. The Committee notes with satisfaction that section 244 of the new Labour Code, which was adopted in March 2022 and will enter into force on 30 April 2023, explicitly refers to “ensuring equal pay for men and women for work of equal value”. The Committee also notes the adoption on 2 September 2019 of Law No. LRU-562 on guarantees with respect to equal rights and opportunities for women and men. It notes, however, that section 21 provides that the employer shall ensure “equal wages (remuneration) for women and men for equal labour, and an equal approach to assessment of the quality of work of women and men”. The Committee observes that the law refers to “equal labour” (equal work) which is narrower than “work of equal value”. It recalls that, in a context where there is a significant gender occupational segregation, the concept of “work of equal value” is fundamental to the promotion of genuine gender equality in remuneration as men and women do not perform the same or equal work. Therefore, the concept of “work of equal value” permits a broader scope of comparison between work typically (or mainly) performed by women and work typically (or mainly) performed by men. It includes “equal work” or work performed under “equal conditions”, but also encompasses work that is of an entirely different nature, but which is nevertheless of equal value overall (for more detailed information on the concept of “work of equal value” (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 673–681). The Committee asks the Government to take steps to amend Law No. LRU-562 of 2019 on guarantees with respect to equal rights and opportunities for women and men accordingly so as to give full legislative expression to the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal “value” and align the provisions of the Law with those of the new Labour Code. The Committee asks the Government to provide information on any legislative developments in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Zimbabwe

Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) (ratification: 1989)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions (ZCTU) received on 31 August 2019.

Articles 1(b) and 2(2)(a) of the Convention. Work of equal value. Legislation. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes the ZCTU's statement that it received the draft Labour Bill but that, at the time of its observations, no formal tripartite meeting had taken place to discuss whether the Bill gives effect to the principle of the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's indication, in its report, that the concept of equal remuneration for work of equal value is now fully reflected in the draft Labour Bill. It adds that the ZCTU was given the opportunity to present its proposals on the draft Labour Bill and that its views were taken into account for the final draft. The Government indicates that the Bill is currently being considered by Cabinet. The Committee requests the Government to ensure that the principle of equal remuneration for men and women for work of equal value is fully reflected in the draft Labour Bill to allow for the comparison not only of work that involves similar qualifications and skills, effort, responsibilities and conditions of work, but also of work of an entirely different nature which is nevertheless of equal value. Recalling that the draft Labour Bill has been pending for a number of years, the Committee trusts that the Government will endeavour to enact it in the near future and provide a copy of the legislation once adopted.

Article 2. Measures to address the gender pay gap. With reference to its previous comment, the Committee notes the adoption of the Revised National Gender Policy (2017), supported by the National Gender Policy Implementation Strategy Plan (2019). It notes, however, that the Government does not provide more in-depth information on any measures taken, under the National Gender Policies or otherwise, to effectively address the gender pay gap. The Committee notes the ZCTU's indication that the Government has not taken any action to address the gender pay gap and the situation of women in low-paying jobs. The ZCTU alleges that, in the agricultural sector, women receive lower wages than their male counterparts for the same jobs. The Committee also notes the ZCTU's statement that the situation for women working in the informal economy has worsened due to austerity measures, and that payments that were previously made in United States dollars are now made in local currency, the result being that women who before already earned as little as US$100 per month, now earn US$30. The ZCTU adds that no efforts have been made by the Government to implement the National Gender Policy (2013–17), and that there has not been any consultation with the social partners on the subject. The Committee also notes, from the concluding observations of the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW), the continuing horizontal and vertical occupational segregation, as well as the persistent gender pay gap and women's concentration in low-paying jobs, primarily in agriculture and domestic work (CEDAW/C/ZWE/CO/6, 10 March 2020, paragraph 37). The Committee requests the Government: (i) to take concrete measures, including under the Revised National Gender Policy (2017), to address the structural causes of the gender pay gap, including occupational gender segregation of the labour market and the very low rates of remuneration for jobs predominantly occupied by women; and (ii) to provide information on the progress achieved. Recalling that the National Gender Policy 2013–17 provided for a monitoring and evaluation framework, the Committee once again requests the Government to forward a copy of any report assessing the impact of the policy as well as to provide information on any follow-up measures envisaged.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111) (ratification: 1999)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions (ZCTU) received on 31 August 2019 and 20 January 2020.

Article 1(1)(a) and (b) of the Convention. Grounds of discrimination. Legislation. Referring to its previous comment, in which it noted the Government's indication that section 5(1) of the Labour Act would be amended to incorporate all of the grounds enumerated in the Constitution, including the grounds of "place of birth" and "ethnic origin" which cover "national extraction", the Committee notes with regret the Government's indication, in its report, that the bill amending the Labour Act is still pending. In this regard, it notes the ZCTU's indication that the bill has been on the Parliament's agenda for the last three sessions. It further notes the Government's reply that the labour inspectorate gives the following interpretation to the expressions contained in the Constitution: "nationality: the country of origin of the person/citizenship"; "ethnic origin: the ethnic/tribe group one belongs to"; and "place of birth: area/region in which a person was born". The Committee urges the Government to take all the necessary steps with a view to: (i) enacting the draft Labour Bill in the near future; while (ii) ensuring that the Labour Act prohibits direct and indirect discrimination on at least all of the grounds enumerated in Article 1(1)(a) of the Convention, including national extraction and social origin, for all workers and with respect to all aspects of employment. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard and to provide a copy of the Labour Act once adopted. Recalling that the concept of “national extraction” does not only cover distinctions made on the basis of a person’s place of birth, ancestry or foreign origin, but also discrimination directed against persons who are nationals of the country in question, but who have acquired their citizenship by naturalization or who are descendants of foreign immigrants, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice given to the expressions “nationality”, “ethnic origin” and “place of birth” listed in article 56 of the Constitution, such as extracts of relevant court decisions.

Articles 2 and 3. National policy to promote equality of opportunity and treatment for men and women. The Committee notes the ZCTU’s allegations that the National Gender Policy for 2013–17 has not been allocated a budget nor been implemented. The Committee also notes that the Government does not provide any information on the implementation of the National Gender Policy but states that the issue of gender has been mainstreamed as a cross-cutting issue in the National Development Strategy 1 (NDS1, 2021–2025). The Government indicates that, in order to enhance women’s participation in decision-making positions, 60 seats (out of the 270 seats) of the National Assembly are reserved for women, and that, following the elections in 2018, 86 seats were held by women. The Committee notes, from the Government’s report under the Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100), that it established the Zimbabwe Women Micro Finance Bank (ZWMB) in January 2017 to facilitate financial inclusion of women, and the Women Development Fund and Community Development Fund, a platform that provides loans to women’s community projects at concessionary rates. The Committee further notes, from the Government’s report under the United Nations Universal Periodic Review, that the 2019 Labour Force and Child Labour Survey estimated that there were overall employment and unemployment rates of 84 per cent and 16 per cent respectively. Among those who were employed, 57 per cent were male and 43 per cent were female. The unemployment rate for females (17.2 per cent) was slightly higher than for males (15.7 per cent). There was also a wide disparity on the Employment to Population Ratio, being at 44.4 per cent for males and 28.5 per cent for females. Among people who were employed at management level in the country, the proportion of women had increased to 33.7 per cent (from 27.9 per cent in the 2014 Labour Survey) (A/HRC/WG.6/40/ZWE/1, 9 November 2021, paragraph 108). The Committee also notes, from the concluding observations of the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, the insufficient level of human, technical and financial resources allocated to the implementation of gender equality policies and plans, the absence of sectoral targets, benchmarks and effective coordination arrangements to guide implementation as well as the lack of information on the results and impact of the national gender policy (CEDAW/C/ZWE/CO/6, 10 March 2020, paragraph 19). While taking due note of the information provided by the Government, the Committee requests it to: (i) intensify its efforts to fully implement the National Gender Policy, by allocating it the necessary budget and taking effective measures to address past gender discrimination and enhance women’s economic empowerment and access to decision-making positions; and (ii) provide information on the measures taken and their impact in terms of equality of opportunity and equal treatment for men and women in employment and occupation. The Committee also asks the Government to provide: (i) detailed information on how equality of opportunity and treatment for men and women has been incorporated in the National Development Strategy 1, including on any relevant measures taken in its framework; (ii) information on the number of women who benefited from the Zimbabwe Women Micro Finance Bank or the Women Development Fund and Community Development Fund; and (iii) updated statistical information on the participation of men and women in education, training, employment and occupation, disaggregated by occupational categories and positions.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

In addition, requests regarding certain matters are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 100 (Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Brazil, Bulgaria, Cameroon, Chad, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Côte d'Ivoire, Croatia, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Denmark, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Finland, Grenada, Lebanon, Madagascar, Pakistan, Panama, Paraguay, Philippines, Romania, Russian Federation, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, San Marino, Sao Tome and Principe, Serbia, Singapore, Slovakia, Slovenia, South Africa, South Sudan, Suriname, Syrian Arab Republic, Timor-Leste, Türkiye, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Uzbekistan, Yemen, Zimbabwe); Convention No. 111 (Albania, Algeria, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burundi, Cameroon, Chad, China, Colombia, Comoros, Congo, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Croatia, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Denmark, Denmark: Greenland, Djibouti, Ecuador, Egypt, El Salvador, Fiji, Finland, Grenada, Lebanon, Madagascar, Malawi, Pakistan, Paraguay, Philippines, Romania, Russian Federation, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, San Marino, Sao Tome and Principe, Serbia, Slovakia, Slovenia, South Africa, South Sudan, Suriname, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, Timor-Leste, Türkiye, Uganda, United Republic of Tanzania, Yemen, Zimbabwe); Convention No. 156 (Albania, Argentina, Belgium, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Bulgaria, Costa Rica, Paraguay, Russian Federation, San Marino, Serbia, Slovakia, Slovenia); Convention No. 190 (Uruguay).

Tripartite consultation

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 2002)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2023, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

Article 5(1) of the Convention. Effective tripartite consultations. The Government indicates in its report that the National Labour Board is currently engaged in the revision of the Labour Code. The Committee notes that the Government envisages establishing a subcommittee composed of members of the National Labour Board, along with representatives of workers and employers, to review international labour standards, engage the public in consultations when necessary and to make recommendations to the Minister on actions to be taken. The Committee notes, however, that once again the Government's report does not contain information with regard to tripartite consultations on the matters related to international labour standards covered by Article 5(1) of the Convention. Recalling its comments since 2008 concerning the activities of the National Labour Board, and noting that section B7 of the Labour Code, which establishes the Board's procedures, does not include the matters set out in Article 5(1) of the Convention, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide detailed information on the activities of the National Labour Board on matters related to international labour standards covered by the Convention. It further requests the Government to identify the body or bodies mandated to carry out the tripartite consultations required to give effect to the Convention. The Committee reiterates its request that the Government provide precise and detailed information on the content and outcome of the tripartite consultations held on all matters concerning international labour standards covered by Article 5(1)(a)–(e) of the Convention, especially those relating to the questionnaires on Conference agenda items (Article 5(1)(a)); reports to be presented on the application of ratified Conventions (Article 5(1)(d)); and proposals for the denunciation of ratified Conventions (Article 5(1)(e)).

Article 5(1)(b). Submission to Parliament. The Government reiterates information provided in April 2014, indicating that the 20 instruments adopted by the Conference from its 83rd to its 101st Sessions (1996–2012) were resubmitted to Parliament on 11 March 2014. It adds that a request would be made to the Minister by 15 November 2017 via the Labour Commissioner and Permanent Secretary concerning submission of the instruments to Parliament. The Committee refers to its longstanding observations on the obligation to submit and once again requests the Government to indicate whether effective consultations leading to conclusions or modifications were held with respect to the proposals made to the Parliament of Antigua and Barbuda in connection with the submission of the above-mentioned instruments, including information regarding the date(s) on which the instruments were submitted to Parliament. In addition, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the content, agenda, discussions and resolutions and on the outcome of the tripartite consultations held in relation to the submission of instruments adopted by the Conference as of 2014: the Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930, and the Forced Labour (Supplementary Measures) Recommendation, 2014 (No. 203), adopted by the Conference at its 103rd Session, as well as the Transition from the Informal to the Formal Economy Recommendation, 2015 (No. 204), adopted by the Conference at its 104th Session.

Article 5(1)(c). Examination of unratified Conventions and Recommendations. The Government reports that the unratified conventions noted in its report were submitted to the National Labour Board on 11 November 2017 for re-examination with the social partners. The Committee requests the Government to provide updated information on the outcome of the re-examination of unratified Conventions, in particular: (i) the Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129), which is deemed a governance Convention; (ii) the Holidays with Pay Convention (Revised), 1970 (No. 132), (which revises the Weekly Rest (Industry) Convention, 1921 (No. 14); the Holidays with Pay (Agriculture) Convention, 1952 (No. 101), to which Antigua and Barbuda is a State party); and (iii) the Seafarers' Identity Documents Convention (Revised), 2003 (No. 185), (which revises the Seafarers' Identity Documents Convention, 1958 (No. 108), that has also been ratified by Antigua and Barbuda).

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

El Salvador

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1995)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 1 September 2021. The Committee also notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), received on 10 November 2022, which contain allegations of serious and repeated violations by the Government of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), as well as of the present Convention. Both observations provide information on matters dealt with in this comment, which is examined below. The Government is requested to provide its comments in this respect.

Follow up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (110th Session of the International Labour Conference, May–June 2022)

The Committee notes the discussion on the application of the Convention held in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2022. In its conclusions, the Conference Committee took note of the high-level tripartite mission, accepted by the Government, that took place in May 2022. However, the Committee regretted that five ILO Conventions were ratified without consulting the most representative employers' organizations. The Committee also noted with deep concern the multiple allegations of interference by the authorities in the appointment of employers' and workers' representatives in public tripartite and joint bodies.

Taking into account the discussion of the case, the Committee urged the Government to: (i) refrain from any aggression and from interfering in the establishment and the activities of employers' and workers' organizations, in particular the National Business Association (ANEP); (ii) ensure the effective operation of the Higher Labour Council (CST) and other tripartite entities, respecting the full autonomy of the most representative employers' and workers' organizations and through social dialogue, in order to guarantee their full functioning without any interference; (iii) refrain from unilaterally appointing workers' and employers' representatives for tripartite consultations and institutions, and to develop, in full consultation with the social partners, the appointment procedures of those representatives; (iv) repeal the legal obligation on trade unions to request renewal of their legal status every 12 months and the 23 decrees adopted on 3 June 2021; and (v) develop a time-bound road map to implement without delay all the recommendations made by the ILO high-level tripartite mission.

The Conference Committee requested the Government to present a detailed report on the application of the Convention in law and practice to the Committee of Experts before 1 September 2022, in consultation with the social partners. The Committee also encouraged the Government to continue to avail itself of technical assistance from the Office to ensure full compliance with its obligations under the Convention.

Articles 2 and 3(1) of the Convention. Adequate procedures. Reactivation of the Higher Labour Council. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to continue to provide detailed and updated information on measures adopted to ensure the effective operation of the Higher Labour Council (CST), as well as on the content and outcome of the tripartite consultations held within this tripartite body.

Reactivation and operation of the CST. The Committee notes that the Government reports that the CST is operating effectively. In this regard, the Government reiterates that the CST 2021-2023 was set up in December 2021, and that the workers' and employers' representatives were freely and independently elected, in conformity with section 4 of the CST Statute. The Government states that Mr José Agustín Martínez, Vice-President of the ANEP, was elected as CST Vice-President for the employers' sector, after being elected by the employer organizations; and Mr Jaime Ernesto Ávalos was elected as CST Vice-President for the workers' sector; while the Minister of Labour and Social Welfare, Mr Oscar Rolando Castro, was elected President of the CST. The Government adds that since its instauration, the CST has held five plenary meetings, and ten meetings of its board of officers, in accordance with section 11 of its Statute, which provides that the CST shall meet at least twice yearly. The Government indicates that one of the CST objectives was the tripartite construction of a strategy to generate decent work, for which the CST requested ILO technical assistance. In this connection, the Government indicates that it has held several meetings with representatives of the ILO Regional Office with a view to agreeing on a road map for the elaboration of such a strategy. The Government also reports that, on the basis of its Statute, the CST agreed to establish a Tripartite Technical Commission, the mandate of which would include following up and ensuring the functioning of the CST agenda. The Government indicates that the three groups have formed their delegations on the Tripartite Technical Commission, which is functioning regularly, and has followed up on the above-mentioned strategy, with the assistance of the employment specialist of the ILO Regional Office and has also carried out a review of the Act for the protection of children and adolescents.

The Committee takes note, however, of the ITUC's observations relating to the ILO tripartite mission which took place in the first week of May 2022. The ITUC indicates that the tripartite mission observed that the CST was back in operation, and that several meetings had been held, at which the ratification of several ILO Conventions was discussed. Nevertheless, the ITUC highlights the following persistent problems regarding the application of the Convention: (i) steps must be taken, by filling the empty seats on the body as soon as possible, to ensure representation of employers and workers on an equal footing within the CST; (ii) the administrative process for the designation of workers' representatives continues to be complex, and hampers the operation of the CST; and (iii) trade unions are obliged to renew the composition of their boards each year, making a legal obstacle and complicating the process of appointing workers still further.

The Committee also notes the IOE's observations to the effect that the CST has only been active for ten and a half months since 1 June 2019, that is, for only 25 per cent of the current presidential term, and only during brief periods of time: from September 2019 to March 2020, for a duration of 5.6 months, and between December 2021 and May 2022, for a period of 4.9 months. Moreover, at the end of the High-Level Tripartite Mission on 5 May 2022, the CST became inactive again. According to the IOE's observations, neither the officers, the plenary, nor the different CST commissions have met. On 5 September 2022, the Government convened a meeting of the officers of the CST, at which the Employer Vice-President and his alternate were present, but neither the President nor his alternate attended the meeting. Consequently, the meeting could not be held, for lack of a quorum. The IOE also indicates that although a plenary session had been agreed with Ministry of Labour officials for 4 October 2022, it was never convened. In this way, the IOE stresses, CST inactivity is disrupting the process of reforming the labour legislation. In this connection, the IOE refers to the approval process of the Act for the Overall Protection of Early Childhood, Childhood and Adolescence, and the adoption by the Legislative Assembly of various reforms to the Labour Code on 4 October 2022, where neither the CST nor the social partners were consulted.

The IOE indicates that the Government has, to date, submitted no document or correspondence to the ANEP on the reports it was due to send before 1 September 2022. The IOE claims that the presentation of the five ILO Conventions before the National Assembly on 1 May 2022, and their adoption two weeks afterwards, without conducting prior consultations with the ANEP as the most representative employers' organization in the country, showed clear disregard for social dialogue and tripartite consultation, and thus constituted a violation of the Convention by the Government. The IOE adds that, six months after ratification of the five Conventions, neither the ANEP, nor its constituent organizations, have received information on how they are to be implemented. At the request of the ANEP, in July 2022, the ILO Regional Office gave a tripartite course on the content of the five ratified Conventions. The IOE highlights that although government representatives were present, the higher government authorities were not, and neither was it possible to conduct social dialogue regarding the proper implementation of the Conventions.

With regard to the road map requested by the Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2022, the IOE indicates that the CST has neither sat, nor been consulted in respect of elaborating, in a tripartite manner, a road map to implement, without delay, the recommendations formulated by the ILO High-level tripartite mission. In this regard, the IOE stresses that the free and independent Salvadoran employers grouped within the ANEP, the most representative employers' organization, were still fully disposed and willing to strengthen social dialogue and tripartite consultation.

The Committee observes that the Government does not indicate whether the CST sat during the months after the June International Labour Conference, nor whether it has adopted measures to resolve the difficulties in issuing credentials. The Committee also notes that the Government provides no information on the 23 decrees in question, or the road map requested by the Conference Committee.

Allegations of government interference. The Committee notes that, in response to the allegations of Government interference in the elections of the representatives for tripartite consultation, the Government reiterates that it recognizes the ANEP as one of the most representative employers' organizations in the country and points to the nomination of the President of the ANEP as Vice-President for the employer sector of the CST. The Government states that it has committed no acts of harassment and interference against the ANEP and adds that, within the framework of the CST, it has been working with the employers and workers in a harmonious, professional and technical manner. The Government also refers to the ANEP's participation in the five spaces for social dialogue in the country: the CST; the Social Housing Fund (FSV); the Salvadoran Vocational Training Institute (INFASORP); the Salvadoran Social Security Institute (ISSS) and the National Minimum Wage Board (CNSM). It indicates that the process to appoint the employer representatives on the Board of the ISSS is underway. The Government also refers to 20 autonomous, tripartite and joint bodies, in which the Government, trade unions and other actors participate. It also points to 23 autonomous, tripartite and joint institutions (including the CST and the CNSM) in which the ANEP is represented, with the exception of the ISSS.

The Committee notes however, that the IOE, in its observations, maintains that Government interference is ongoing, and highlights the following examples: in May 2022, the Government convened the election of the employer representatives of the INFASORP, which was suspended on 3 June, without a reason being given, during the discussion of the case of El Salvador at the International Labour Conference. On 23 June 2022, the Government reconvened the election, but altered the rules in a discretionary manner, to include individual enterprises among the electors, a move intended to distort the role of employers' organizations, and to disrupt their unity. The IOE maintains that the Government also contacted various enterprises with a view to coercing them into presenting a series of Government-preferred candidates. At the same time, the Government warned that any candidate put forward by professional associations belonging to the ANEP would be rejected. The IOE states that the INFASORP case provides a clear indication of Government interference in the election process for employer representatives, which undermines social dialogue and tripartite consultation by marginalizing the representatives, and because of the potential lack of legitimacy of the supposed representatives. The IOE indicates that: (i) Despite several employer's organizations belonging to the ANEP registering as electors and putting forward candidates, to date the final ballot has not been counted and there has been no election; (ii) for a number of tripartite and bipartite bodies, the Government has not conducted elections for persons to replace directors appointed by the employers' organizations whose mandate has expired. The IOE indicates that this is the case with the employer directors in the ISSS, whose mandates came to an end in December 2020. The IOE indicates that to date, elections have not been held to replace employer directors whose mandates have expired in the following institutions: the Maritime Port Authority (AMP); the International Centre for Fairs and Conventions (CIFCO); the Independent Executive Committee for Ports (CEPA); the Salvadoran Tourism Corporation (CORSATUR); the Salvadoran Environmental Fund (FONAES); and the National Fund for Public Housing (FONAVIPO). The IOE also indicates that, between April and July 2022, the Government held elections for the employer representatives on the CNSM, for which ANEP affiliated organizations submitted candidates. However, four months after the elections, the persons elected have still not been sworn in. The IOE states that the most serious interference has been in the reforms to the 23 laws, which have prevented employers from being able to elect their representatives to the boards of the 23 tripartite and joint bodies governed by the laws. That faculty has been transferred to the President of the Republic, who not only chooses the employer representatives on the 23 public bodies, but is also empowered to dismiss them, in a discretionary and arbitrary manner. The IOE states that these reforms are still in force, despite the Committee of Experts' conclusions of February 2022, and the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards of June 2022, which both state that these reforms should be repealed as they are contrary to obligations under international ILO Conventions.

The IOE also indicates that, after the President of the Republic's statement of 15 September 2022 announcing his intention to present his candidature for the Presidency in the upcoming elections, the ANEP issued a statement on 19 September, declaring that immediately consecutive presidential re-election is expressly prohibited in the Constitution of the Republic. The IOE claims that the Government representatives subsequently made use of social networks to attack and disqualify the ANEP. Furthermore, the same representatives approached the presidents of ANEP affiliated employers' organizations, and applied pressure on them to give public support to the presidential re-election, and to resign their ANEP membership. Finally, the IOE alleges that the Government has cancelled jointly scheduled and organized meetings and events.

The Committee expresses its deep concern regarding the new allegations of acts of interference, harassment and marginalization against the ANEP as from September 2022. In consequence, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the effective and immediate operation of the CST, respecting the independence of the social partners, including with regard to the appointment of their representatives. The Committee refers to its previous recommendations and requests the Government to report on any developments in this respect, as well as on the content and outcome of tripartite consultations held within the framework of this tripartite body. The Committee also urges the Government to take necessary measures to ensure without delay the repeal of the 23 decrees which transfer the function of electing employers' representatives from the employers to the President of the Republic, thus depriving the employers' organizations of the exercise of their right to freely elect their representatives, in conformity with the instruments ratified by the country. The Committee also urges the Government to take the necessary measures to put a stop to the delays in issuing the credentials of workers' organizations, and to make every effort to ensure the formulation and adoption of the road map requested by the International Labour Conference, without delay.

Article 2. Ensure effective tripartite consultations. Issuance of credentials. The Committee notes that the Government recognizes that the legislation in force requires updating with a view to ensuring issuance of credentials to workers' organizations. In this regard, the Government reports that a study process has begun to propose amendments to the Labour Code in order to fluidify and accelerate the issuance of credentials. The Government adds that, having committed to providing immediate responses, the MTPS has set up a Trade Union Service Office in the Directorate General for Labour, to provide legal assistance to union representatives.

In its observations, the ITUC identifies the requirement under the Labour Code that workers' organizations renew their executive boards every 12 months as a major obstacle to its participation in the CST and other tripartite organizations in the country. The ITUC indicates that the law requiring this renewal is unfounded and considers that it constitutes a form of interference in the functioning of the organizations in question. The ITUC recalls that Article 3 of the Convention establishes that representatives shall be freely chosen, and that the legal requirement of annual renewal is thus a violation of that freedom. Finally, it indicates that the employers' organizations are subject to a two-year renewal period. The ITUC stresses that while progress has been made, all these considerations imply that the Government is still not fulfilling the requirements of the Convention. The Organization insists that the Government take the necessary measures to conform fully with the Convention: (i) ensure without delay the full composition of the CST; (ii) simplify and fluidify the process for designating workers' representatives and (iii) amend the provision of the Labour Code that provides for annual renewal of trade union executive boards. In this regard, the ITUC requests the Government to implement fully the recommendations of the tripartite mission, as well as the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards. The Committee urges the Government to adopt without delay the necessary measures to repeal the legal obligation on trade unions to request renewal of their legal status every 12 months and requests the Government to provide detailed and updated information in its next report on all progress achieved in this respect.

Article 5(1)(b). Effective tripartite consultations. Submission. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government regarding the ten instruments submitted for examination by the CST on 19 May 2022, before transfer to the Legislative Assembly in order to comply with the obligation of submission provided for in article 19(5) of the Constitution of the ILO. While the Committee welcomes the transmission of these instruments to the CST, it recalls that, to be effective, they must be submitted to the legislative body which, in the case of El Salvador, is the Legislative Assembly. The Committee trusts that the Government will report as soon as possible on the submission of the above-mentioned instruments to the legislative body, following their discussion within the CST. The Committee again reiterates that it hopes to see progress in full and sustained compliance with the Convention as soon as possible, including the regular holding of effective tripartite consultations within the CST, on the subjects provided in Article 5 of the Convention, as well as the promotion of stable and continuous social dialogue in the other tripartite entities in the country. In this regard, the Committee recalls that ILO technical assistance remains at the disposal of the tripartite constituents to support the efforts made by all the tripartite actors to ensure full compliance with the provisions of the Convention.

Grenada

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1994)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2023, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

Article 5 of the Convention. Effective tripartite consultations. The Committee recalls that, in its previous comment, it had requested the Government to provide detailed information on each of the tripartite consultations held on matters concerning international labour standards covered by the Convention. The Government indicates in its report that tripartism is working well in the country to the extent that it has moved towards establishing a Committee of Social Partners. The said Committee includes civil society organizations and the conference of churches; it is responsible for the monitoring of the IMF Structural Adjustment Programme 2014–16 in Grenada, including labour reforms. Additionally, the Government specifies that a comprehensive review of the Labour Code was conducted during the 2014–15 period. Moreover, the Government recalls that, pursuant to section 21(2) of the Employment Act, the functions of the Labour Advisory Board reflect the provisions of Article 5(1) of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the activities of the Labour Advisory Board on the tripartite consultations on international labour standards covered by the Convention, including full particulars on the consultations held on each of the matters listed in Article 5(1) of the Convention. The Government is also requested to indicate the intervals at which the abovementioned consultations are held, and the nature of the participation by the social partners during these consultations.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Ireland

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1979)

Previous comment

Article 5 of the Convention. Effective tripartite consultations. The Committee welcomes the information provided by the Government on the activities of the ILO Interdepartmental Group (IDG), established in 2017 to coordinate Ireland's national policy positions on agenda items relating to the ILO Governing Body and the International Labour Conference during Ireland's titular membership on the Governing Body. The Government reports that the quarterly meetings of the IDG are expected to be reduced to biannual meetings following the completion of Ireland's titular membership in June 2021. It adds that, in addition to the regular IDG meetings, the Irish Business and Employers Confederation (DETE) consults the Irish Confederation of Trade Unions (ICTU) and the Irish Business and Employers Confederation (IBEC) on all of the matters covered under Article 5(1). The Committee notes the information provided in the Government's report on consultations held concerning reports to be submitted to the ILO (Article 5(1)(a)), proposals to be made to the competent authority in connection with article 19 submissions (Article 5(1)(b)), unratified Conventions and Recommendations to which effect has not yet been given (Article 5(1)(c)), reports to be submitted to the ILO under article 22 of the ILO Constitution (Article 5(1)(d)) and proposals concerning the denunciation of ratified Conventions (Article 5(1)(e)). The Government adds that the DETE also consults with the social partners on ad hoc projects such as the ILO National Centenary Event in 2019. The Government reports that, following the outbreak of the COVID-19 pandemic in 2020, the IDG met virtually with the social partners. Tripartite consultations were held virtually in February 2021, prior to the March 2021 Governing Body, as well as prior to the June 2021 Conference. In addition, the Committee notes with interest Ireland's ratification of the Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930, in 2019, following tripartite consultations. It further notes the Government's indication that priority consideration is being given to the possible ratification of the Violence and Harassment Convention, 2019 (No. 190), and that tripartite consultations are envisaged in this respect once a review of the Convention's compatibility with the national legislation has been carried out. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide detailed updated information concerning the activities of the ILO Interdepartmental Group relevant to the application of the Convention, as well as on the content and outcome of tripartite consultations held on each of the matters related to international labour standards set out in Article 5(1) of the Convention.

Previous comment

Articles 2(1), 5(1) and 6 of the Convention. Effective tripartite consultations. Reports on consultations. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to provide detailed updated information concerning the procedures put in place to ensure effective tripartite consultations. The Committee further requested the Government to provide updated information on the nature and outcome of tripartite consultations held during the period covered by the report on each of the matters concerning international labour standards set out in Article 5(1)(a)–(e), including information as to the frequency of such consultations and to supply copies of reports produced on the working of the procedures provided for in the Convention (Article 6). The Government reports that consultations regarding the Safety and Health in Mines Convention, 1995 (No. 176), have not yet taken place. The Government undertakes to keep the Committee informed of progress made in this regard. The Committee notes, however, that the Government does not provide information with regard to the procedures in place to ensure effective tripartite consultations concerning the measures to be taken at the national level in relation to international labour standards, as required under Article 2(1) of the Convention. Moreover, the Government does not provide copies of any reports produced on the working of the procedures provided for in the Convention (Article 6). The Committee therefore reiterates its request that the Government provide updated detailed information on the procedures established to ensure effective tripartite consultations (Article 2(1) of the Convention). The Committee also once again requests the Government to communicate concrete information on the content, outcome and frequency of tripartite consultations held during the period covered by the report on each of the matters concerning international labour standards set out in Article 5(1)(a)–(e) of the Convention, particularly in relation to: questionnaires concerning items on the agenda of the Conference (Article 5(1)(a)); the submission of instruments adopted by the Conference to the National Assembly (Article 5(1)(b)), and reports to be made on the application of ratified Conventions (Article 5(1)(d)). In addition, the Committee reiterates its request that the Government supply copies of any reports produced on the operation of the procedures provided for in the Convention (Article 6).

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Authentic Workers' Confederation of the Republic of Mexico (CAT) and the Confederation of Workers of Mexico (CTM), communicated by the Government in its report. The Committee also notes the Government's replies to the observations of the Confederation of Employers of the Mexican Republic (COPARMEX) in 2019, included in its report.

Articles 4 and 5 of the Convention. Effective tripartite consultations. The Committee notes with interest the detailed information provided by the Government on the tripartite consultations held during the period covered by the report on all matters related to international labour standards covered by Article 5(1) of the Convention. In this regard, the Government indicates that the social partners were consulted prior to the submission to the Senate of the Republic of the Violence and Harassment Convention, 2019 (No. 190) and its accompanying Recommendation (No. 206); as well as the Safety and Health in Agriculture Convention, 2001 (No. 184) and its accompanying Recommendation (No. 192). The Committee also notes that, in reply to the 2019 observations of COPARMEX, the Government indicates its agreement that dialogue and information are the basis for gathering more information for opinions and improving decision-making. In this regard, the Government expresses its willingness to continue working to ensure that the most relevant labour policy decisions are adopted using social dialogue mechanisms. With regard to tripartite consultations on unratified instruments (Article 5(1)(c) of the Convention), the CTM points out that these are not effective, as only the instruments are sent to the workers' organizations, and the proposals are examined without taking into consideration their opinions during the discussions or when reports on the matter are drawn up. The CTM emphasizes that social dialogue mechanisms are needed that allow their comments, conclusions and responses to be heard. It also maintains that no support or financing is received for the specialized training required for participants in these procedures, in accordance with Article 4(2) of the Convention. Therefore, intervention, where required, is spontaneous. It emphasizes the need for regular training for the tripartite partners with a view to ensuring their participation in consultations in a professional manner. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that no consultations have been held with the social partners regarding the manner in which the functioning of the procedures required by the Convention might be improved, so that the social partners have all the necessary information far enough in advance to formulate their opinions before a final decision is taken on the matter under consultation. Lastly, the Committee notes the information provided by the Government regarding the tripartite consultations held prior to the adoption of various legislative initiatives and measures relating to labour, such as the reforms introduced to the legislation to regulate labour outsourcing and to transfer the jurisdictional function in labour matters from the conciliation and arbitration boards to labour courts attached to the federal judiciary and state departments judiciaries. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing detailed and updated information on the specific content, frequency and outcome of the tripartite consultations held on all issues relating to international labour standards covered by Article 5(1) of the Convention. In the light of the observations of the CTM, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures adopted or envisaged with a view to building the capacity of the tripartite partners and strengthening mechanisms and procedures, in accordance with Article 4 of the Convention and paragraphs 3(3) and 4 of Recommendation No. 152. It also encourages the Government to adopt the necessary measures to hold consultations with the social partners regarding the manner in which the functioning of the procedures required by the Convention might be improved, so that the social partners have all the necessary information far enough in advance to formulate their opinions before a final decision is taken on the matter under consultation, in particular concerning unratified instruments (Article 5(1)(c) of the Convention). Lastly, the Committee requests the Government to keep it informed of the result of the consultations held with the social partners relating to the possible ratification of Convention No. 184 and Convention No. 190.

Previous comments

The Committee notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), received on 1 September 2021, which were examined in the context of its observation of 2021 regarding the application of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87).

Article 5 of the Convention. Effective tripartite consultations. The Committee notes that the Government once again indicates that it has informed the social partners of the questionnaires on the issues included in the agenda of the International Labour Conference, the replies to the questionnaires under article 19 of the ILO Constitution and the reports on ratified Conventions under article 22 of the ILO Constitution. In this respect, the Committee once more reminds the Government that "... to fulfil their obligations under this provision of the Convention, it is not sufficient for governments to communicate to employers' and workers' organizations copies of the reports that they send to the Office, since any comments that these organizations may subsequently transmit to the Office on these reports cannot replace the consultation which have to be held during the preparation of the reports" (2000 General Survey on tripartite consultation, paragraph 92). The Committee highlights that consultation of the most representative employers' and workers' organizations implies the active participation of the organizations in the formulation and communication of their respective views. The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide detailed and updated information on the frequency, content and results of the tripartite consultations held on all questions related to international labour standards covered by Article 5(1)(a)-(e) of the Convention, in particular those related to the items included on the agenda of the Conference (Article 5(1)(a)); the submission of instruments adopted by the Conference (Article 5(1)(b)); the examination of unratified Conventions (Article 5(1)(c)); the reports that must be made on the application of ratified Conventions (Article 5(1)(d)); and the proposals for the denunciation of ratified Conventions (Article 5(1)(e)). Moreover, the Committee requests the Government to take measures to promote the active participation of the social partners in the tripartite consultations.

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1994)

Previous comment

Article 1 of the Convention. Consultations with representative organizations. In its previous comments, the Committee expressed the firm hope that the pending legislative reforms, particularly the National Labour Institutions Bill still pending before the National Assembly, would be finalized without further delay. It reiterated its request that the Government report on the results of the reform and its impact on the improvement of consultations with representative organizations that enjoy freedom of association, as required under this Convention. In this context, since 2004, the Committee has also consistently reminded the Government that it is important for employers' and workers' organizations to enjoy the right to freedom of association, without which there could be no effective system of tripartite consultation. The Committee also requested the Government to indicate the outcome of the meetings held with the stakeholders in April 2018 in relation to the reforms, and to provide a copy of the relevant legislation once adopted. The Committee notes the Government's reference in its report to the inauguration of the National Labour Advisory Council (NLAC) for 2021–25. According to information available on the Federal Ministry of Information and Culture website, during the inauguration, the Government indicated that, from 2nd to 4th March 2020, the Ministry of Labour had collaborated with the Nigeria Labour Congress (NLC), the Trade Union Congress (TUC) and the Nigeria Employers' Consultative Association (NECA) in reviewing the Draft National Labour Bills, which were withdrawn from the National Assembly for review and resubmission. At that time, the Government further indicated that the adoption of the pending legislative reforms would expand the scope and functions of the NLAC. The Committee therefore expresses once again the firm hope that the pending legislative reforms will be finalized and adopted without further delay. It also reiterates its request that the Government provide detailed information on the results of the reform and its impact on the improvement of consultations with representative organizations that enjoy freedom of association, as required under the present

Convention. The Committee further requests the Government to indicate the content and outcome of the meetings held with the stakeholders in March 2020 in relation to the reforms, and to provide a copy of the relevant legislation once it is adopted.

Article 5(1). Tripartite consultations required by the Convention. In reply to the Committee's previous comments, the Government reports that the social partners are consulted on issues related to international labour standards, particularly regarding the possibility of ratifying ILO Conventions, as well as in relation to reports on ratified Conventions submitted to the ILO pursuant to article 22 of the ILO Constitution. In addition, Conference preparatory meetings are held with the social partners to harmonize the country's position. The Committee notes with interest that, with the support of the ILO Office in Abuja, tripartite consultations were held within the NLAC in a two-day session from 23 to 24 March 2021. The Committee notes from the website of the Federal Ministry of Information and Culture, that the March 2021 session was the first session of the NLAC held since 2014. In addition, the Committee notes the ILO press release of 24 March 2021, according to which, during the March 2021 consultations, the tripartite constituents discussed the possible ratification of the Migrant Workers (Supplementary Provisions) Convention, 1975 (No. 143); the Private Employment Agencies Convention, 1997 (No. 181); the Promotional Framework for Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 2006 (No. 187); and the Violence and Harassment Convention, 2019 (No. 190). The Committee notes that, according to the press release, all four Conventions discussed are to be ratified. Moreover, it was agreed during the March 2021 consultations that the regularity of NLAC meetings would be ensured in conformity with this Convention. Finally, the Committee notes that the ILO is currently supporting the development of the first National Industrial Relations Policy and the Decent Work Country Programme (DWCP) III for Nigeria. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide updated, detailed information on the content, outcome and frequency of tripartite consultations held on all matters concerning international labour standards covered by the Convention, including in relation to: questionnaires on Conference agenda items (Article 5(1)(a)); proposals to be made to the competent authorities in connection with the submission of Conventions and Recommendations pursuant to article 19 of the ILO Constitution (Article 5(1)(b)); the re-examination at appropriate intervals of unratified Conventions and Recommendations to which effect has not yet been given (Article 5(1)(c)); questions arising out of reports to be presented on the application of ratified Conventions (Article 5(1)(d)); and proposals concerning the possible denunciation of ratified Conventions (Article 5(1)(e)).

Article 6. Operation of the consultative procedures. The Committee notes that the Government does not provide information in this regard. The Committee therefore reiterates its request that the Government indicate whether, in accordance with Article 6, the representative organizations have been consulted in the preparation of an annual report on the working of the consultation procedures provided for in the Convention and, if so, to indicate the content and outcome of these consultations.

Peru

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 2004)

Previous comment

The Committee takes note of the observations of the General Confederation of Workers of Peru (CGTP), the Single Confederation of Workers of Peru (CUT-Peru), the Autonomous Workers' Confederation of Peru (CATP), and the Confederation of Workers of Peru (CTP), as well as those of the National Confederation of Private Enterprise Institutions (CONFIEP), received on 1 September 2022. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

Article 2 of the Convention. Appropriate procedures. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the National Labour and Employment Promotion Council (CNTPE) was no longer meeting because the trade union confederations had suspended their participation in the Council in May 2017 due to their disagreement with the approval of standards on collective stoppages and labour inspection and with the submission to the executive of a series of bills on voluntary arbitration, on the grounds that the bills failed to take account of the confederations' inputs. The Committee notes the Government's indication that tripartite consultations on minimum wages and their periodic adjustment were held within the CNTPE between 2018 and 2019. In a complementary manner, a wide-ranging process of social dialogue went ahead on various subjects, such as the National Plan on Competitiveness and Productivity. Moreover, in 2019 roundtables were held on a range of social questions with each of trade unions that are CNTPE members. The Committee notes however that the confederations maintain that despite the agreement reached within the CNTPE to submit the National Plan on Competitiveness and Productivity to tripartite dialogue, the Government approved the Plan on 28 July 2019 without prior consultations with the social partners. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that between 2020 and 2021, while the COVID-19 pandemic prevented the holding of CNTPE sessions, various bilateral meetings and working groups on social and labour issues took place in the context of the crisis. In that regard, the confederations assert that the social partners were not consulted regarding the above-mentioned measures, which also transferred the effects of the health crisis to the workers. They add that they were only convened to meetings at which a restricted range of the measures were presented and were given a very tight deadline to formulate their contributions. Finally, the Committee notes that the Government reports that the relaunching session of the CNTPE for 2021–26 took place on 13 November 2021, in the presence, among other government representatives, of the President of the Republic, as well as representatives of the confederations and of employers' organizations. ILO officials also attended. The Government reports that the CNTPE held two sessions between January and May 2022.

The Committee notes that the confederations, in their observations, claim that social dialogue and its supporting institution in the country, the CNTPE, are seriously debilitated. They argue that CNTPE activities have lacked continuity, and that between 2016 and 2021 only eight of the 72 ordinary sessions that should have been held took place, the CNTPE internal regulations stipulating one ordinary meeting per month. Moreover, the confederations stress that in Act No. 29.381 of 2009, establishing the organization and functions of the Ministry of Labour and Employment Promotion (MTPE), all references to the CNTPE as the consultative body of the MTPE were removed. They maintain that although the Regulation on the organization and functions of the CNTPE (Supreme Decree No. 01-2005-TR) remains in force, the CNTPE currently has no organic support guaranteed by a regulation having force of law. The confederations conclude that measures must be urgently adopted to ensure free enjoyment of trade union rights with a view to ensuring a genuine relaunching of the CNTPE.

The Committee notes that the CONFIEP also argues that the Government is not complying with the mechanisms and procedures for prior tripartite consultation established by the Convention. In the first instance, the CONFIEP indicates that the CNTPE is mandated to give opinions on draft legislation drawn up by the Government. In that connection, the CONFIEP accuses the Government of approving, without prior consultation with the social partners, a series of rules altering the regulations governing the outsourcing of services, and the Regulations of the Act on Collective Labour Relations, making structural changes to the regulation of freedom of association, collective bargaining and arbitration. The CONFIEP also indicates that Ministerial Decision No. 232-2021-TR established the Sectoral Commission for the formulation of the first draft of the Labour Code as a temporary body composed solely of representatives of the MTPE. The Sectoral Commission expressly ruled that the first draft would subsequently be submitted to the CNTPE. However, the CONFIEP states that the first draft was not submitted to the CNTPE but was published on the MTPE website, setting a deadline of only 20 days for the submission of general comments in relation to almost 500 proposed provisions. The CONFIEP reports that as a result of these facts, on 25 April and 28 July 2022, with the International Organisation of Employers' (IOE) endorsement, it sent to requests for urgent intervention to the ILO, alleging serious non-compliance with the Convention and calling for the restoration of tripartite social dialogue in the country without delay. The CONFIEP states that on 26 July 2022, it suspended its participation in the CNTPE because of the serious damage inflicted by the Government on social dialogue and on the CNTPE itself as an institution. In light of the concerns expressed by both the trade union confederations and the CONFIEP, the Committee urges the Government to adopt the necessary measures to guarantee that effective tripartite consultations are held and that the CNTPE can begin functioning again without delay. It also requests the Government to send detailed and updated information on these measures. The Committee firmly hopes that the circumstances obstructing the functioning of the CNTPE can be rapidly resolved.

Article 5. Effective tripartite consultations. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the observations of the CATP, in which the confederation maintained that the Government sent its reports to the workers' organizations with very little time for the latter to formulate their observations. In that connection, the Committee expressed the hope that the Government would take steps to establish an adequate time frame to give employers' and workers' sufficient notice to form their opinions and make any comments they consider appropriate on the drafts communicated by the Government. The Committee notes the Government's indication that during the period covered by the report tripartite consultations were held regarding the submission of the Violence and Harassment Convention, 2019 (No. 190), which was ratified on 8 June 2022. The Government reports that on 23 June 2022 a tripartite workshop on the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006, had been planned, with the participation of ILO and MTPE specialists and of the actors concerned. Regarding consultations on the draft reports on ratified Conventions, the Government indicates that these reports were communicated to the most representative organizations of employers and workers to allow them to formulate their comments thereon. For their part, the trade union confederations maintain that they received the drafts on 2 August 2022, which made the presentation of coherent, documented comments before the closing date for submission of reports (31 August) difficult. The confederations also refer to the MTPE "Guidelines for international affairs relative to the International Labour Organization", which allow a deadline of 20 working days to employers' and workers' organizations for the formulation of their opinions on the draft reports. Given the complexity of some of the issues covered by international standards, the confederations stress that the deadlines should be more generous to allow for the collection and processing of information, and should include a stage of face-to-face dialogue between the parties, prior to the sending of the reports. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide detailed and updated information on the frequency, content and results of the tripartite consultations held on all questions related to international labour standards covered by the Convention. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate the manner in which account is taken of the representative organizations of workers' opinions on the functioning of the procedures for effective prior consultation required by the Convention, and also on the possibility of establishing modified procedures that answer to the concerns expressed by the trade union confederations in their observations.

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the General Workers' Union (UGT), transmitted by the Government in its report, which provide information on the issues addressed in this comment.

Article 5 of the Convention. Effective tripartite consultations. The Committee notes the indication in the Government's report that it has engaged in consultations with the most representative workers' and employers' organizations on each of the issues set out in Article 5 of the Convention. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that, during the 107th, 108th, 109th and 110th Sessions of the International Labour Conference, the Government held information sessions and technical discussions with the social partners, in order to organize the Government delegation for the Conference. The Government also informs that a study is ongoing into the feasibility of ratifying the Violence and Harassment Convention, 2019 (No. 190). The Committee notes that Portugal ratified the Work in Fishing Convention, 2007 (No. 188), on 26 November 2019 and the Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930, on 23 December 2020. The Committee also notes that, in its observations, the UGT reiterates that with respect to ratified Conventions and unratified Conventions and Recommendations to which effect has not yet been given consultation procedures are respected in a timely and appropriate manner. However, it considers that the procedure for the ratification of Conventions should be simpler and shorter, and that the information on the basis for the decision to ratify or not a given Convention should be clearer and shared in due time with the social partners. The Committee takes note of the Government's reply to these observations, in which it reiterates that studies on the feasibility of ratifying new Conventions are complex, since they involve the consultation of several departments of the public administration depending on the matters covered by the Conventions under consideration. In addition, it indicates that the possibility of making legislative amendments identified by the study as necessary must often be assessed and that this assessment varies depending on the content of the Convention. The Government reiterates that the public administration often lacks the necessary human resources to be able to carry out feasibility studies quickly. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide detailed and updated information on the content and outcome of the tripartite consultations held on each of the matters covered by Article 5(1) of the Convention. In particular, the Committee requests the Government to provide updated information on the consultations held on the possibility of ratifying the Violence and Harassment Convention, 2019 (No. 190).

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1994)

Articles 2 and 5(1) of the Convention. Effective tripartite consultations. In its 2016 observation, the Committee reiterated its request that the Government provide information on the consultations held within the National Tripartite Council and the other tripartite bodies on the matters set out in Article 5(1)(a)–(e) of the Convention. The Government indicates in its report that it has constituted a national task force on the review of the application of Conventions and reports on international labour standards to address the issues raised by the Committee in its previous reports. It adds that consultations were held on international labour standards covered by Article 5(1) of the Convention and on the implementation of the Decent Work Country Programme, minimum wages, and matters related to the Industrial Court. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide specific information on the content and outcome of tripartite consultations held within the National Tripartite Council, as well as other tripartite bodies on all matters concerning international labour standards as set out in Article 5(1)(a) through (e) of the Convention, in particular replies to questionnaires on Conference agenda items (Article 5(1)(a)); proposals to be made to the competent authority or authorities in connection with the submission of instruments adopted by the Conference to Parliament (Article 5(1)(b)); the re-examination at appropriate intervals of unratified Conventions and Recommendations to which effect has not yet been given (Article 5(1)(c)); and reports to be presented on the application of ratified Conventions (Article 5(1)(d)).

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144) (ratification: 1983)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Federation of Chambers and Associations of Commerce and Production (FEDECAMARAS), received on 11 February 2022, and those communicated by the Government in its report. It also notes the observations of the Bolivarian Socialist Confederation of Men and Women Workers in Urban and Rural Areas and Fishing of Venezuela (CBST-CCP), received on 22 April 2022, and those communicated by the Government. The Committee further notes the observations of the Confederation of Workers of Venezuela (CTV), the Federation of University Teachers' Associations of Venezuela (FAPUV) and the Independent Trade Union Alliance Confederation of Workers (CTASI), which were communicated by the Government. The Committee also notes the observations of the National Union of State and Public Service Workers (UNETE), received on 5 September 2022. The Committee requests the Government to provide its response to the latter observations.

Follow-up to the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry (complaint made under article 26 of the Constitution of the ILO)

The Committee notes the discussions held at the 344th, 345th and 346th Sessions of the Governing Body (March, June and October-November 2022) on developments in relation to the Social Dialogue Forum concerning the implementation of the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry in relation to the Government of the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela, and the decisions adopted by the Governing Body in this regard. The Committee observes that the Governing Body will once again at its 347th Session (March 2023) examine the progress made by the Government in giving effect to the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry, and will continue its examination of possible measures to achieve this objective.

Articles 2, 5 and 6 of the Convention. Effective tripartite consultations. The Committee welcomes the actions taken by the Government in the various dialogue mechanisms established with a view to giving effect to the Convention and reinforcing social dialogue in the country, and encourages the Government to continue these activities. In this regard, the Committee notes the Government's indication that progress continues to be made in the implementation of its national dialogue policy with all of the productive sectors in the country. The Government considers that broad and inclusive social dialogue is being reinforced with a view to improving the application of international labour standards, in accordance with the provisions of the Convention and the recommendations of the various ILO supervisory bodies. In this connection, the Government reports that, with ILO technical assistance and the virtual presence of the ILO Director-General, the Social Dialogue Forum was inaugurated virtually on 7 March 2022, and carried out in-person sessions from 25 to 29 April 2022. The following workers' and employers' organizations of the country participated in the Forum: CBST-CCP, CTASI, CTV, CGT, UNETE, the Confederation of Autonomous Trade Unions (CODESA), FEDECAMARAS and the Federation of Crafts, Micro, Small and Medium-sized Industries and Enterprises of Venezuela (FEDEINDUSTRIA). During the Social Dialogue Forum, subjects were discussed relating to the Conventions covered by the Commission of Inquiry. The Government indicates that the Social Dialogue Forum resulted in a plan of action and its respective timetable of activities, which were supported by the representatives of the tripartite constituents present (with the exception of CODESA and UNETE who, although they participated actively in the Social Dialogue Forum, refrained from supporting the plan of action). The Government indicates that, with a view to the implementation of the plan of action, bilateral meetings were commenced with the various social partners between 11 and 15 July 2022, with a view to continuing to make progress towards the achievement of the general commitments, and those specific to each of the workers' and employers' organizations.

The Committee also notes the information provided by the Government in the Progress Report on Developments concerning the Social Dialogue Forum, which was adopted by the Government Body at its 346th Session (October-November 2022). It notes the follow-up session of the Social Dialogue Forum held in September 2022, with ILO technical assistance. Representatives of FEDECAMARAS, CBST-CCP, FEDEINDUSTRIA, CTASI, CTV and CGT participated in the second in-person session of the Social Dialogue Forum. The participants agreed to update the plan of action adopted during the first in-person session of the Social Dialogue Forum with a view to adopting and implementing an agreed timetable for effective annual consultations on international labour standards. In particular, it was agreed: (i) to hold training programmes on international labour standards (one of them focusing on Conventions for which reports are due); (ii) to hold a preparatory meeting for the Conference; (iii) that the Government would send the draft reports on ratified Conventions to the employers' and workers' organizations sufficiently in advance and grouped by subjects; and (iv) to organize thematic meetings with representatives of employers' and workers' organizations for consultation on the reports. The Government indicates that a third session of the Social Dialogue Forum will be held from 6 to 10 February 2023.

In this context, the Committee welcomes the various activities that the Government indicates that it has undertaken to carry out or has implemented with a view to giving effect to the Convention and reinforcing social dialogue, including those implemented within the framework of the plan of action and the timetable adopted as a result of the Social Dialogue Forum:

- (i) The draft reports on ratified Conventions for the 2022 reporting period were sent to the social partners between 15 July and 10 August 2022. Then, on 9 and 11 August 2022, in-person meetings were held with the social partners to discuss the content of the draft reports before the final texts were sent to the ILO on 1 September 2022. During the consultations, it was agreed that the workers' and employers' organizations that wished to do so would provide their observations on the draft reports to the national Labour Office and these would be attached to the report.
- (ii) In the context of the first session of the Social Dialogue Forum, at the urging of the Government, parallel meetings were held between employers' and workers' organizations with a view to reaching agreement on the composition of the national delegation which attended the 110th Session of the Conference (27 May to 11 June 2022).
- (iii) Minutes were exchanged between the principal commissions of the National Assembly and the Ministerial Office for Labour with a view to promoting social dialogue and consultations with workers' and employers' organizations on draft legislation with a direct impact on the world of work. The Government indicates that, at the request of the social partners, the necessary coordination is being carried out for the holding of consultations on various draft legislative texts respecting special conditions of work supplementing or derived from the Basic Labour Act (LOTTT).
- (iv) On 4 July 2022, a meeting was held between the Minister of the People's Power for Industry and National Production and the representatives of FEDECAMARAS and FEDEINDUSTRIA with a view to reviewing and developing various measures related to national production.
- (v) The Government indicates that, on 23 August 2022, the inclusion was approved of the employers' organizations FEDECAMARAS and FEDINDUSTRIA in the National Productive Economy Council, which has the objective of achieving the structural transformation of the country to restimulate production.

The Committee encourages the Government to continue its efforts in this regard.

The Committee also notes the emphasis placed by the CBST-CCP in its observations on the measures intended to reinforce social dialogue, to which the Government refers in its report. FEDECAMARAS views positively the acceptance by the Government of ILO technical assistance and the holding of the Social Dialogue Forum. FEDECAMARAS nevertheless considers that, while there has been an improvement in 2022 in relations with the Government and meetings have been held between the partners which have been respectful and cordial, social dialogue in the country is still characterized by certain delays and weaknesses that require urgent attention. In this regard, FEDECAMARAS expresses concern at the fact that the Government has not formally accepted the recommendations of the 2019 Commission of Inquiry and has not yet established a structured tripartite consultation body, which would make the process of dialogue more effective. It adds that the meetings that have been held do not comply with the formalities recommended by the Commission of Inquiry and the ILO supervisory bodies, such as an independent chair or secretariat and a follow-up mechanism on compliance with the agreements reached, the adoption of an agreed schedule of meetings and the keeping of records. The Committee also notes that the CTASI, CTV and FAPUV consider that the tripartite consultations held have not been effective and, although the bilateral meetings held between the Government and the representative organizations are useful to promote social dialogue, they are not sufficiently effective to fully comply with the Convention. UNETE considers that effective tripartite consultations have still not been held on the subjects relating to international labour standards covered by the Convention. In this regard, the Committee notes the information provided by the social partners in their observations concerning the aspects of the tripartite consultations required by the Convention and the Tripartite Consultation (Activities of the International Labour Organisation) Recommendation, 1976 (No. 152), for which the adoption of additional measures is necessary to ensure their application and guarantee effective consultations:

- (i) With regard to the tripartite consultations held on draft reports on ratified Conventions (Article 5(1)(d) of the Convention), the Committee observes that the workers' organizations CTASI, CTV and FAPUV as well as FEDECAMARAS indicate that there has been an improvement in the process of consultation, as the draft reports have been provided to the social partners for their subsequent tripartite discussion prior to their being sent to the ILO. However, they emphasize that it is still necessary for the reports to be provided to them earlier and for more meetings to be held for their review, in light of the high number of reports for which to comments should be made. In this regard, CTASI, CTV and FAPUV consider that the draft reports provided by the Government in 2022 were not received sufficiently early, with meetings in some cases being held with workers' organizations only one day after their receipt of the draft reports. UNETE complains that the draft reports were only received on 31 August 2022, one day before they were sent to the ILO. In this regard, the Committee observes that, within the context of the second Social Dialogue Forum, the tripartite constituents agreed to advance the beginning of the preparatory work for the sending of reports in 2023 and to provide the draft reports at least two weeks before the meetings for consultation with the social partners. In this respect, the Committee recalls that, in order "to be 'effective', consultations must take place before final decisions are taken, irrespective of the nature or form of the procedures adopted. [...] The effectiveness of consultations thus presupposes in practice that employers' and workers' representatives have all the necessary information far enough in advance to formulate their own opinions" (2000 General Survey on tripartite consultation, paragraph 31).
- (ii) With reference to the holding of tripartite consultations on labour legislation and social and economic policies (Paragraph 6 of Recommendation No. 152), FEDECAMARAS emphasizes that mechanisms for the direct consultation of workers' and employers' organizations have not been adopted in practice. FEDECAMARAS indicates that the social partners were not consulted in relation to the adoption by the National Assembly of a series of laws (such as the Basic Act on Special Economic Zones). FEDECAMARAS and the workers' organizations CTASI, CTV and FAPUV also indicate that they were not consulted in relation to their adoption in first reading in July and August 2022 of ten Bills on special labour systems under the LOTTT (such as the Special Bill on workers with disabilities). The Committee observes that, according to the report of the Governing Body of 2022, on 11 October 2022, a public consultation was held with employers' and workers' organizations on the Homeworkers' Act with the participation of the CBST-CCP, CTASI, CTV, CGT, FEDECAMARAS and FEDEINDUSTRIA.

- (iii) The CTASI, CTV and FAPUV indicate that they have not received a reply from the Government concerning their call to ratify Conventions Nos 151, 154, 189 and 190 (Article 5(1)(c) of the Convention).

While taking due note of the action taken by the Government with a view to reinforcing social dialogue and tripartite consultations, the Committee once again refers to the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry and requests the Government, in consultation with the social partners and with ILO assistance, to take additional measures to ensure the proper functioning of effective tripartite consultation procedures, including the establishment of mechanisms to institutionalize social dialogue and tripartite consultation. The Committee also requests the Government to continue providing updated information on the measures adopted in this respect to give full effect to the Convention, and to take into account the guidance contained in Recommendation No. 152, including in relation to the consultations undertaken, the nature and form of the procedures established, the measures taken to strengthen these mechanisms and the capacity-building measures implemented for the tripartite constituents, taking national circumstances into account, and the good practices and challenges that have been identified.

Direct requests

In addition, requests regarding certain matters are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 144 (Afghanistan, Angola, Barbados, Belize, Cabo Verde, Cameroon, Congo, Cook Islands, Dominica, Gabon, Georgia, Greece, Guatemala, Guinea, Guyana, Honduras, Hungary, Indonesia, Iraq, Kazakhstan, Kenya, Kyrgyzstan, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Latvia, Liberia, Lithuania, Malta, Montenegro, Mozambique, Namibia, Nepal, Netherlands, Netherlands: Aruba, Netherlands: Curaçao, Niger, Republic of Korea, Romania, Rwanda, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Sao Tome and Principe, Singapore, Slovenia, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan, Ukraine, Uzbekistan, Yemen).

Labour administration and inspection

Albania

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 2004)

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 2007)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

COVID-19 measures. The Committee notes the Government's statement in its report regarding the labour inspection activities related to COVID-19. In particular, the Government indicates that the State Labour Inspectorate and Social Services (SLSSI), together with the State Health Inspectorate, is part of a task force responsible for monitoring the relevant protocols to reduce the transmission of infection among employees with a view to ensuring a safe and healthy working environment.

Articles 10, 11 and 16 of Convention No. 81 and Articles 14, 15 and 21 of Convention No. 129. Staffing and material means of the labour inspection services; scope of inspections carried out. The Committee previously noted that the number of labour inspectors was not sufficient to perform fully the inspection tasks required by law and that the lack of financial resources limited the ability of inspectors to travel. The Committee notes with concern the Government's indication in its report that the number of employees of the SLSSI remains unchanged at 155, with 37 at the central level and 118 at the regional level. It also notes the Government's indication that the total budget of the SLSSI for 2020 amounts to 186,300,000 Albanian lek (ALL) (approximately US$1,781,000) of which ALL120,278,000 (approximately US$1,150,000) is the salary fund, ALL20,086,000 (approximately US$192,000) is the Social Insurance Fund and the rest are investments and operating expenses. Six vehicles are available, of which three are used by the Central Directorate. Only three out of 12 regional branches have a vehicle at their disposal. Moreover, the Government indicates that there are 46 tablets and 55 laptops available for inspectors. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the budget allocated to labour inspection is sufficient to secure the effective discharge of the duties of the inspectorate, including the provision of suitably equipped offices and necessary transport facilities. The Committee also once again requests the Government to provide specific information on the staffing and material means of the SLSSI in performing inspections in agriculture, including transportation and local offices.

Articles 12(1) and 16 of Convention No. 81 and Article 16(1) and 21 of Convention No. 129. Right of inspectors to free entry of workplaces and undertaking of inspections as often as is necessary to ensure the effective application of the relevant legal provisions. The Committee previously noted that 10 per cent of inspections were unscheduled and/or emergency inspections, for which an authorizing officer shall issue an authorization within 24 hours.

The Committee notes the Government's information that 13,079 entities were inspected in 2019, of which 78 per cent were planned inspections. Among the 2,823 unscheduled inspections, 197 were due to occupational accidents, 600 were in response to complaints and 2,026 were carried out following indications of flagrant violations. During the first three months of 2020, a total of 2,524 entities were inspected, of which 90 per cent were planned inspections. Among the 239 unscheduled inspections, 38 were due to occupational accidents, 135 were in response to complaints and 66 were carried out following indications of flagrant violations.

The Committee also notes the Government's reference, regarding inspection procedures, to Law No. 10433 of 2011 on inspection and Law No. 9643 of 2006 on labour inspection. Section 13 of the Law on labour inspection provides that the labour inspector and controller are authorized to enter the working premises of any entity without prior notice. According to section 26 of the Law on inspection, inspections shall be carried out in the implementation of the inspection programme as a principle, and "off-programme" inspections may only be carried out in prescribed situations. Section 27 of the Law on inspection also provides that the administrative inspection procedure is initiated as a rule, upon the issuance of the authorization by the Chief Inspector or the chief inspector of the territorial branch. The inspection may only be initiated without authorization where a flagrant violation is found to be occurring or the occurrence of events, accidents or incidents that have affected or may affect life or health or the environment. The initiation of such an inspection shall be noted immediately in a special part of the inspection report, and the inspector is obliged to notify, without delay, the person responsible for the issuance of the authorization. Section 27 further provides that although the issuance of an authorization in violation of the relevant provisions shall not invalidate the decision of the inspection, it does constitute a disciplinary violation.

Referring to its 2006 General Survey, Labour Inspection, paragraphs 265 and 266, the Committee observes that, restrictions maintained on inspectors' free initiative in this regard, such as the requirement for a formal authorization issued by a higher authority, can only stand in the way of achieving the objectives of labour inspection as set out in the instruments. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary legislative measures to ensure that labour inspectors are empowered to make visits to workplaces liable to inspection without previous notice in conformity with Article 12(1)(a) of Convention No. 81 and Article 16(1)(a) of Convention No. 129, and that they are able to undertake labour inspections as often and as thoroughly as is necessary to ensure the effective application of the legal provisions, in conformity with Article 16 of Convention No. 81 and Article 21 of Convention No. 129. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard and to continue to provide information on the undertaking of inspections in practice, indicating the number of scheduled and unscheduled inspections, as well as the total number of workplaces liable to inspection. Lastly, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any disciplinary measures imposed on labour inspectors related to the procedures for the authorization of inspection under the Law on inspection.

Article 6 of Convention No. 81 and Article 8 of Convention No. 129. Conditions of service. The Committee notes the Government's indication, in response to the Committee's previous comments on the remuneration scale and career prospects of labour inspectors, that the transfer and promotion of labour inspectors, as civil servants, is subject to Law No. 152 of 2013 on the Civil Service, as well as Decision of the Council of Ministers (DCM) No. 243 of 2015 on admission, movement, probationary period and appointment in the executive category and DCM No. 242 of 2015 on filling vacancies in the lower and middle management category. Regarding the current levels of remuneration, the Government provides information on the current salary categories of labour inspectors, and indicates that field inspectors receive a basic salary of ALL38,000, with a supplemental salary related to educational level and seniority. The Government also indicates that it is unable to provide comparative information between labour inspectors and tax inspectors due to limited data. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that the issue of the payment of inspectors will be addressed in the framework of the salary and job classification reform in process. The Committee requests the Government to pursue its efforts to improve the conditions of service of labour inspectors within the framework of the current salary and job classification reform, and to provide information on any progress made or results achieved. It also requests the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure the availability of comparative information on the actual remuneration scale of labour inspectors in relation to other comparable categories of government employees exercising similar functions, such as tax inspectors or police officers, and to provide this information, when available.

Articles 5(a), 17 and 18 of Convention No. 81 and Articles 12(1), 22 and 24 of Convention No. 129. Prosecutions and penalties. The Committee previously noted the Government's indication that the policy pursued by the SLSSI intended to reduce the number of fines in a rational way, and it requested the Government to provide statistical information regarding prosecutions and penalties.

The Committee notes the Government's indication, and the information in the Annual Reports on Inspection Activities for 2018 and 2019 (available on the Government's website), that 175 fines were imposed in 2018 and 160 fines in 2019 (compared with the 381 fines in 2011 previously noted by the Committee). Fines were collected with a total value of ALL26,138,600 (approximately US$249,900) and ALL559,268 (approximately US$5,340) in interest on arrears from fines. Moreover, in 2019, 53 inspections decisions were appealed to SLSSI, of which 45 were upheld. There were also 44 judicial processes related to the sanctions imposed on various entities, where the inspection decision was upheld in 23 cases (with an additional 18 cases still ongoing). The Committee also notes that, according to 2019 Annual Report on Inspection Activities, administrative measures (a warning, fine or a suspension of activities) were imposed following 27 per cent of the total inspections carried out. Moreover, a higher percentage of violations were detected during unscheduled inspections, including in 78.6 per cent of inspections undertaken following accidents, 64 per cent of inspections following indications of flagrant violations and 48 per cent of those following complaints. Noting with concern the significant decline in the number of fines imposed since 2011, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures it is taking to ensure the application of adequate penalties for violations of the legal provisions enforceable by labour inspectors. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the reasons for this decline, and to continue to provide detailed information on the number and nature of fines imposed, the outcomes of the judicial appeals of inspection decisions and the percentage of violations detected during unscheduled and scheduled inspections respectively.

Matters specifically relating to labour inspection in agriculture

Articles 6(1)(a) and (b) and (3), and 19 of Convention No. 129. Labour inspection activities in agriculture. The Committee previously noted that the number of inspections in the agricultural sector constituted 0.8 per cent of total inspections, and that nearly half of the workforce in Albania was employed in the agricultural sector.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that in 2019, 284 inspections were carried out in the agriculture, forestry and fishery sector (2.1 per cent of the total inspections carried out), covering 1,519 employees (0.5 per cent of the total number of employees in workplaces inspected). Nineteen administrative measures were imposed, including six suspensions of work (due to violations of legal provisions on employment), nine warnings and one fine. During the first three months of 2020, 67 inspections in agriculture, forestry and fishery (2.6 per cent of the total inspections carried out), covering 450 employees (0.8 per cent of employees in workplaces inspected). Ten administrative measures were imposed, including three suspensions of work, six warnings and one fine. The Government also indicates that there are no specific trainings targeting inspections in the agriculture sector, but the topics of trainings conducted in 2019 will have a direct impact on inspections in all economic sectors. Noting the continuing low percentage of the inspection visits carried out in agriculture, the Committee once again requests the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure the enforcement of laws and regulations in agriculture, including with respect to occupational safety and health (OSH), and to continue to provide information on the number of inspections carried out in that sector. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on measures undertaken or envisaged to ensure that training is provided to labour inspectors on agriculture-related subjects, and on any progress made in this respect.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Bahrain

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1981)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the General Federation of Bahrain Trade Union (GFBTU) received on 31 August 2022.

Article 3(1) and (2) of the Convention. Labour inspection activities concerning the enforcement of the legislation in relation to the employment of foreign workers. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the task of receiving notices by employers about foreign workers who have left their employment is assigned to the Labour Market Regulatory Authority (LMRA), according to the 2006 Labour Market Regulations Act No. 19. The Government indicates that the labour inspection service in the Ministry of Labour and Social Development has no functions or responsibilities in respect of the notices submitted by employers concerning expatriate workers who have left their employment in violation of the terms of the work permit. In this regard, the Government refers to Decision No. 77 of 2008 which provides that an employer is required to notify the LMRA in the event that a foreign worker leaves his employment in violation of the terms of the work permit, so that the work permit granted to that worker can be cancelled. The Government indicates that the notices concerning the departure of expatriate workers were recorded by the labour inspection system until 2014, but that after that date the LMRA was assigned this task.

The Committee also notes that, according to the Government, in order to protect the rights of the worker in an irregular situation, the existence of an employment relationship must be proven, which is burdensome for foreign workers. The Government adds that workers are afraid to identify themselves to authorities such as labour inspectors. The Government indicates that the labour inspectors do not exempt employers from their responsibilities towards workers in their employment, requiring them to ensure all rights granted to workers by law. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on specific measures undertaken by labour inspectors to monitor and enforce the rights of migrant workers found to be in an irregular situation, including the provision of information and advice, in particular where these workers are subject to a deportation or expulsion order. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of cases in which foreign workers in an irregular situation have been granted their due rights, including unpaid wages and benefits.

Articles 10, 11 and 16. Sufficient number of inspectors and effectiveness of the labour inspection system. The Committee notes that, according to the annual report for 2021, there are six labour inspectors for the commerce sector and six labour inspectors for the industry and construction sectors, resulting in a total of 12 inspectors, compared to 45 inspectors in 2011. In its observations the GFBTU indicates that the total number of inspectors is very low in comparison to the number of establishments. In particular, the GFBTU indicates that there are only ten inspectors while there are about 80.000 enterprises in the country, a proportion that highlights the urgent need to increase the number of inspectors to ensure sufficient coverage of all workplaces. Concerning the material means allocated to labour inspectors, the Government indicates that inspectors are provided with administrative offices equipped with modern means of communication and devices and other equipment required to perform their functions. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that labour inspectors receive a communication and travel allowance for the performance of their duties. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures so that the number of labour inspectors is sufficient to ensure that workplaces are inspected as often and as thoroughly as is necessary to ensure the effective application of the relevant legal provisions. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the reasons for the decrease in the number of inspectors and the specific measures taken or envisaged for the recruitment of new labour inspectors.

Article 17. Effective enforcement of penalties for the violation of labour law provisions. The Committee notes the Government's indication that section 15 of the Ministerial Order No. 29 of 2013 provides that inspection visits must be repeated on a number of occasions before a violation report is issued. The Government indicates that in case of infringements the labour inspectors first issue a warning to the employer with a deadline for compliance of no more than one month from the inspection visit. A follow up inspection is then conducted at the expiration of such deadline and if no progress is recorded, the labour inspectors report the violation. The Government notes that the low number of violation reports issued in comparison to the number of inspections is due to the follow-up work of inspectors and to the corrective measures adopted by employers after the warning.

In this regard, the Committee notes from the Government report that labour inspectors carried out 2.727 inspection visits in 2021, but that only 74 violation reports were issued, and that the number of violations identified has been very low in relation to the number of inspections for several years. The Committee recalls that according to Article 17(2) of the Convention, it shall be left to the discretion of labour inspectors to give warning and advice instead of instituting or recommending proceedings, but also that Article 17(1) provides for the possibility of prompt legal proceedings with respect to persons who violate or neglect to observe legal provisions enforceable by labour inspectors. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures in order to ensure compliance with this Article of the Convention. In that regard, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number and type of infringements detected and the measures adopted by labour inspectors, including statistics on the number of warnings and violation reports issued.

Article 18. Provision of adequate penalties for violations of the legal provisions enforceable by labour inspectors. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Labour Law in the Private Sector (Law No. 36/2012) provides for penalties for violations of Part Six of the law, concerning wages. The Committee notes that this law does not contain provisions for penalties in case of violations of Part Seven (Hours of Work and Periods of Rest) and Part Eight (Holidays) of the Labour Law. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that adequate penalties are provided for by national laws or regulations in relation to all violations of the legal provisions that are enforceable by labour inspectors.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Bangladesh

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1972)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Trade Union's International Labour Standards Committee (TU-ILS Committee), received on 1 September 2022, referring to the matters addressed below. The Committee also notes the reply of the Government to the observations submitted by International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in 2021.

The Committee notes that the complaint submitted in 2019 under article 26 of the ILO Constitution, concerning non-observance by the Government of Bangladesh of the Convention as well as of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), and the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98), is pending before the Governing Body. At its 346th Session (November 2022), taking note of the report submitted by the Government on 9 September 2022 on the progress made with the implementation of the road map of actions, the Governing Body, on the recommendation of its Officers, decided to: (i) request the Government of Bangladesh to report on further progress made in the implementation of the road map of actions to address all the outstanding issues mentioned in the article 26 complaint at its 347th Session (March 2023); and (ii) to defer the decision on further action in respect of the complaint to that session.

The Committee takes note of the additional information provided by the Government on 9 September 2022 on the progress made in the implementation of the road map to address all the outstanding issues mentioned in the article 26 complaint.

Legislative developments. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its report concerning the establishment of an 18-member Tripartite Law Review Committee (TLRC) headed by the Additional Secretary (Labour) in March 2022 to work on the labour law reform. A separate 12-member working committee was also formed in July 2022, headed by the Joint Secretary (Labour), to support the Law Review Committee. The Government indicates that these two new committees are tasked to identify the areas in the existing law that need to be reformed in order to bring them in line with international labour standards. The Committee also notes, in the additional information provided concerning the implementation of the first priority area of the road map of actions (labour law reform), that the Bangladesh Labour Rules, 2015 were amended and published through gazette notification on 1 September 2022. Concerning the amendment of the Bangladesh Labour Act, 2006 (as amended in 2018) (BLA), the Committee notes the Government's indication that the proposed revisions received by stakeholders (government, employers and workers organizations) will be compiled and sent to the TLRC by 30 October 2022. Upon completion of the work by the TLRC, the National Tripartite Consultative Council (NTCC) will be in a position to take up the issue of the amendments of the BLA. The Committee also notes the adoption of the Export Processing Zone (EPZ) Labour Rules in October 2022. The Committee also notes the observation from the TU-ILS Committee which indicates that the TLRC has been recently reformed, but that the legislative reform process is not advancing at the expected speed. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide detailed information on the progress made in the legislative reform process and on the measures adopted in order to ensure that such process takes into account the outstanding issues concerning the application of the Convention raised by the Committee.

Articles 2, 4, 12 and 23 of the Convention. Labour inspection in EPZs and special economic zones (SEZs). The Committee notes that in reply to its previous request the Government indicates that pursuant to the preamble and section 3(A), 4(d), 7(k) and 5A(2) of the Bangladesh Export Processing Zone Authority (BEPZA) Act, 1980, the BEPZA is the only appropriate authority of the Government for development, operation, management and control of the EPZs. The Government indicates that the BEPZA has been successfully performing its duties and responsibilities of administration and inspection in EPZs for the last four decades. The Government indicates that nevertheless it has adopted measures in order to ensure the operation of the Department of Inspection for Factories and Establishments (DIFE) in the EPZs, namely: (i) modalities of DIFE inspections in the EPZs have been incorporated in the amended EPZ Labour Rules; (ii) an EPZ inspection checklist has been prepared and shared with DIFE on 1 December 2021; (iii) on 16 May 2022, a meeting was held between the BEPZA and DIFE under the chair of the Minister of Law, Justice and Parliamentary Affairs regarding a transparent and accountable mechanism of inspections; and (iv) as of August 2022, the DIFE inspected 25 factories in EPZs and found overall compliances of the factories inspected.

The Committee also notes that the TU-ILS Committee indicates in its observations that there has been no noticeable impact from the development of the EPZ inspection checklist. The TU-ILS Committee adds that pursuant to section 168 of the EPZ Labour Act, the DIFE is only empowered to carry out announced inspections in the EPZs, after the approval of the Executive Chairman of the BEPZA. The trade unions indicate that the legislation should be amended in order to ensure that DIFE is in charge of inspections in the EPZs and that, until then, reports on the inspection of factories within the EPZ area on safety issues should be submitted to the DIFE by BEPZA on a monthly basis.

The Committee notes with concern that, according to section 289 of the EPZ Labour Rules of 2022, the Executive Chairman of the BEPZA remains the authority responsible for inspections in the EPZs. While the Committee also notes that, according to section 290, the inspectors of the DIFE may inspect any industry of any zone established within their jurisdiction by giving an intimation to the Executive Chairman, the rules provide that inspection shall be carried out in accordance with the checklist prepared by the authority. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that labour inspectors are empowered to enter freely establishments in EPZs and SEZs without any restrictions. The Committee requests the Government to indicate whether, under the EPZ Labour Rules 2022, DIFE inspectors are required to receive approval from the Executive Chairman prior to the inspection of EPZs, as foreseen in section 168 of the EPZ Labour Act. If such approval is necessary, the Committee requests that the Government provide information on the number of requests made, the number of requests approved, the time elapsed between each request and approval, and any reasons given for each failure to approve. It also requests the Government to provide copy of the EPZ inspection checklist and to indicate its impact on EPZ inspections, including whether labour inspectors are free to carry out any examination, test or enquiry which they may consider necessary in order to satisfy themselves that the legal provisions are being strictly observed. Further, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the progress made, in the context of the labour law reform mentioned above, in the amendment of section 168 of the EPZ Labour Act. Noting the information on the number of factory inspections undertaken by the DIFE in the EPZs, the Committee requests the Government to provide further details on the numbers of labour inspections undertaken in EPZs and SEZs that are in operation, disaggregated into inspections by the DIFE and inspections under the BEPZA, including whether the inspections were announced or unannounced, whether in response to a complaint or to an accident, and the number and nature of all violations detected and the measures taken as a result.

Articles 5(b) and 15(a). Cooperation with employers and workers. Impartiality of labour inspectors. The Committee notes that the TU-ILS Committee refers in its observation to allegations of corruption and undue pressure on DIFE inspectors in the performance of their duties. The trade unions indicate that labour inspectors are politically influenced or induced for various reasons to overlook safety and law enforcement issues. The trade unions refer in particular to the 2021 fire incident in the Hashem Food Factory where several workers died. According to the TU-ILS Committee, an inspection carried out two weeks before the incident considered the factory in compliance with safety rules. However, according to the trade unions, an investigation after the incident indicated a lack of fire safety measures. According to the trade unions, there is a lack of accountability in the inspection system and there are no penalties or departmental actions applied to labour inspectors when they fail to perform their duties. The trade unions also indicate that while inspections should be unannounced according to the law, there are times when an informal relationship is established between the factory management and the inspectors and, as a result, the establishment receives advanced notice of the inspection. The TU-ILS Committee also indicates that there is limited engagement of workers in the inspection process, noting that the quality of inspections should be ensured through tripartite accountability mechanisms established at the central, territorial and enterprise level. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in respect of these trade unions observations.

Article 6. Status and conditions of service of labour inspectors. The Committee notes that in reply to its previous comment, the Government provides the structure of the current workforce of the DIFE with the indication of the number of positions filled and vacant at each grade. The Committee notes the Government's indication that inspectors normally enter into service at the 10th grade as labour inspector and at the 9th grade as assistant inspector general and that with satisfactory performance inspectors can be promoted to higher level. Concerning the condition of service of labour inspectors, the Committee notes the Government's indication that labour inspectors are appointed to permanent positions, and that the remuneration and employment tenure are similar to those of tax collectors and the police. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the structure of the DIFE workforce, including the number of officers appointed at each grade. Noting the absence of information on this point, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the number and grade of labour inspectors that left the DIFE. The Committee reiterates its request for detailed information comparing the remuneration and employment tenures of labour inspectors to those of tax collectors and the police.

Articles 5, 7, 10, 11 and 16. Human and material resources of the labour inspectorate. Frequency and thoroughness of labour inspections. Cooperation with employers and workers organizations. The Committee notes that in reply to its previous comment concerning the staffing of the DIFE, the Government indicates that, as of 30 June 2022, out of the 575 sanctioned posts, 366 are filled (313 in 2020) while 209 remain vacant. The Government also indicates that police and medical checks for additional 54 new recruits are ongoing and that a request will be submitted to the Ministry of Labour and Employment (MoLE) for the recruitment of another 46 inspectors. The Committee notes the Government's indication that in 2022, the MoLE issued the final order for creation of an additional 136 posts of labour inspectors, and for the creation of eight new field offices. Concerning promotions, the Government states that 11 existing staff of DIFE were promoted to the post of labour inspectors general and that the gradations for the posts of deputy inspectors general and assistant inspectors general are underway. Finally, the Government indicates that a new organogram with 1,791 posts (currently 993 posts), of which 942 are for inspectors, was sent to the Ministry of Public Administration (MoPA) for approval and it is currently under consideration. The Committee notes that according to the TU-ILS Committee, there is a lack of inspectors to cover all the factories in the country. Concerning the number of inspection visits, the Committee notes the Government's indication on the number of inspections conducted by the DIFE in the first seven months of 2022, disaggregated by sector. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the progress made in the recruitment and promotion of inspectors, as well as on the approval of the organigram of the DIFE. It also requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of inspections undertaken by the DIFE, disaggregated by sector of economic activity.

Concerning the material resources available to the DIFE, the Committee notes the Government's indication that labour inspectors have at their disposal five cars (previously one), three jeeps, 27 minibuses, 292 laptops and 339 desktop computers. The Committee notes that the 425 Android tablets, reported as available to labour inspectors in the previous Government report, are not listed in the material resources at the disposal of the DIFE. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the material resources of the DIFE, including any IT equipment available to the inspectors during inspection visits and how these material resources are distributed across different offices. The Committee also request the Government to provide information on the annual budget allocated to the DIFE.

Articles 12(1) and 15(c). Inspections without previous notice. Duty of confidentiality in relation to complaints. The Committee notes that in reply to its previous comment, the Government states that: (i) according to the BLA, 2006 and the standard operating procedure (SOP) issued on the basis of the Act, inspectors are entitled to perform announced and unannounced visits; (ii) for special cases such as those involving child labour, complaints investigation, probabilities of hiding evidences etc, an unannounced visit is conducted; (iii) inspectors prefer to conduct unannounced inspections to check if there are concealed issues but that, in cases where a prior document is required, the visit would be announced; (iv) the labour inspector has the discretion to decide whether to conduct announced or unannounced visits. The Government also provides the number of announced (959) and unannounced inspections (4,855) conducted in 2021-2022, collected through the Labour Inspection Management Application (LIMA). In this respect, the Committee notes that the total number of inspections for 2021-22 collected through the LIMA and offline (43,644) is significantly higher than the total announced and unannounced inspections for the same period. Furthermore, the Committee notes that according to the SOP on Labour Inspection, regular inspections will usually be announced unless that is inconvenient for the performance of the duties of the inspectors. The SOP also provides that a minimum of 50 per cent regular visits should be announced, while special inspections (such as complaint investigation, accident investigation, etc.) are usually unannounced unless the announcement of the visit is necessary, for instance for ensuring the presence of witnesses. The Committee recalls once again the importance of undertaking a sufficient number of inspections that are unannounced to ensure that when inspections are conducted as a result of a complaint without prior notice, the fact of the complaint is kept confidential.

Concerning the confidentiality of complaints, the Committee notes the observation of the TU-ILS Committee indicating that: (i) the hotline provides an opportunity to file a complaint anonymously but sometimes it does not work; (ii) there is no information provided by the DIFE regarding the anonymity of the complaints and therefore workers are not aware that they can file a complaint without fear of retaliation; (iii) currently, an ID card is required to submit a complaint and DIFE should set up complaint boxes in factories to be inspected during inspection (out of the range of CCTV); (iv) there should be sanctions provided in the law for the disclosure of the details of a complaint by DIFE officials. The Committee also takes note of the Government's indication that the modalities to ensure confidentiality are provided in the relevant SOP. Moreover, the Committee notes that in the additional information provided by the Government concerning the implementation of the third priority area of the road map of actions (labour inspection and enforcement), the Government states that (i) the helpline activated in June 2020 continues to operate and to receive complaints that are now managed through a database;

(ii) the officials dealing with the helpline are being trained regularly; (iii) the complaint management cell, established at the DIFE in December 2020, was reorganized in January 2022 and consists of eight labour inspectors tasked to monitor the complaints received and addressed, update the number of complaints received and resolved, and arrange training for labour inspectors.

The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments to the observations of the trade unions. The Committee also requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of announced and unannounced inspections conducted by the DIFE and to indicate the number of inspections conducted as a result of a complaint, and the outcome of all such inspections. With reference to the discrepancy noted between the total of announced and unannounced inspections and the total number of visits for the same period, the Committee requests the Government to provide more detailed information on the types of inspections conducted, including whether they were announced or unannounced.

Articles 17 and 18. Legal proceedings. Effectively enforced and sufficiently dissuasive penalties. The Committee previously noted that (i) the legal unit of the DIFE counts one officer and (ii) the Government planned to expand it to nine officers. The Committee notes the Government's indication that in August 2022 one additional post of legal officer was approved. The Government also indicates that, in order to improve the proceedings for the enforcement of legal provisions, two foundation training courses for 60 inspectors were completed in the financial year 2021–22. These courses trained labour inspectors on the main provisions of the BLA, 2006 and Bangladesh Labour Rules, 2015. Concerning the measures introduced or envisaged to ensure that penalties for labour law violations are sufficiently dissuasive, the Committee notes the Government's indication that there was an increase in the fines for the protection of women workers deprived of maternal welfare benefits and an increase in the amount of compensation in case of death or disability of workers following an occupational accident. In this regard, the Committee notes that, in their observation, the TU-ILS Committee indicates that penalties should be revised in consultation with trade unions. In addition, according to the trade unions, in cases of wage arrears, the existing 25 per cent interest for delayed payment is insufficient and should be increased to ensure effective deterrence. Concerning violations, the Government provides the numbers of cases filed and resolved for the period 2021–2022, including the number of cases of child labour identified. The Committee also notes that, in their observation, the trade unions indicate that labour justice in Bangladesh is long and cumbersome and that therefore it is discouraging for workers to file a complaint. The trade unions also indicate that there is a need to strengthen the enforcement process of labour courts decisions and that both the Department of Labour and the DIFE should be involved in the implementation of labour court judgments. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the progresses made in the established of a fully operational legal unit in the DIFE. Noting the observation from the trade unions and the limited progress reported by the Government on this matter, the Committee requests the Government to pursue its efforts to ensure that penalties for labour law violations are sufficiently dissuasive. Noting the absence of information in this respect, the Committee once again requests that the Government indicate the specific outcome of cases that are referred to the labour courts (such as the imposition of fines, the amounts collected from fines imposed, and also sentences of imprisonment) and to specify the legal provisions to which they relate. Finally, the Committee requests the Government to continue to provide up-to-date information on the number and nature of violations detected.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

[The Government is asked to reply in full to the present comments in 2023.]

Article 3(1) and (2) of the Convention. Additional functions entrusted to labour inspectors. The Committee notes that in the report on the activities of the General Labour Inspectorate Executive Agency (GLIEA) in 2021, 288 inspections were carried out which aimed at establishing compliance with the legal requirements for employment of foreigners in the country. It also indicates that 375 violations were found (they were 66 in 2015, 123 in 2016, and 272 in 2017), of which 122 for providing labour without the corresponding permit or registration with the Employment Agency; 105 for not notifying the GLIEA of the date of commencement of the employment relation with a foreign worker; ten for hiring foreigners illegally staying in the country; eight for employment of foreign workers who do not have the right to access the labour market in the Republic of Bulgaria. The Government notes an increasing trend of foreigners working without a work permit or without registering their employment with the Employment Agency. The Government indicates that an important way to limit these violations is a close cooperation between GLIEA and the Employment Agency. The Government adds that it is unable, for technical reasons, to provide data on the number of applied criminal penalties for violations concerning the employment of foreign workers in an irregular situation, as well as for cases concerning migrant workers in an irregular situation who received their delayed wages. The Committee recalls that the enforcement of provisions regarding foreign workers that are illegally in the country does not fall within the primary functions of the labour inspectors under Article 3(1) of the Convention. Noting the absence of sufficient information in this regard and the indication of the Government concerning an increasing trend of foreigners working without a work permit or without registering their employment, the Committee requests the Government to indicate if the GLIEA continues to undertake joint inspection activities with the authorities in charge of national security. The Committee also requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of foreign workers in an irregular situation detected by labour inspectors and to indicate the role of labour inspectors in informing migrant workers about their labour rights and in enforcing those rights, including improved data on the recovery of wage and social security credits specific to foreign workers without a residence permit.

Central African Republic

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1964)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Article 3(2) of the Convention. Duties of labour inspectors. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that a third of labour inspectors had supervisory duties and that, under the Labour Code, labour inspectors were responsible for the conciliation of collective and individual labour disputes. It asked the Government to provide an estimate of the time spent on the primary functions as set out in Article 3(1) of the Convention as compared to the other functions of the labour inspectorate. In this regard, the Committee observes that, according to the technical memorandum on the National Strategy for the Development and Modernization of the Labour Administration System of the Central African Republic, prepared in 2017 with the support of the ILO and attached to the Government report, the conciliation of individual and collective labour disputes constitutes the majority of inspectors' work. The Committee also notes that, under the Labour Code, inspectors are assigned other duties relating to the exercise of freedom of association and collective bargaining (such as registering trade unions, supervising elections of staff representatives, facilitating the conclusion of collective labour agreements and receiving advance notice of strikes and lockouts). The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to ensure that any additional duties assigned to labour inspectors do not interfere with the exercise of their primary duties. It further requests the Government to provide information on the steps taken in this regard and on the time and resources spent by labour inspectors on their various duties.

Articles 11 and 16. Material means and transport facilities placed at the disposal of labour inspectors and reimbursement of necessary expenses. Frequency of inspection visits and effectiveness of the system. In its previous comments, the Committee noted: (a) the persistent lack of material means placed at the disposal of the labour inspection services, including for offices and transport facilities, as well as for the reimbursement of necessary expenses; and (b) the infrequency of inspection visits. The Committee notes in this regard the information provided by the Government in its report on its efforts in 2017 to provide every Regional Directorate of Labour with a motorbike. The Government points out that the prefectural services sometimes rely on employers to provide them with transportation and that the recently created prefectural services do not have their own facilities. The Committee also notes the information provided in the 2013 partial activity report of the Ministry of Labour, Employment, Vocational Training and Social Security, according to which various types of difficulties have hindered the effective realization of the objectives pursued by the General Directorate of Labour and Social Welfare, such as security problems and the plundering of the Directorate. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that the political and military difficulties that arose in 2012 continue to have a negative impact on several reform projects under way. While taking due note of the difficult situation in the country, the Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to address the difficulties identified and to guarantee the effectiveness of the system, including by taking the necessary measures to provide labour inspectors with the means necessary for the effective performance of their duties. Recalling that the provision of transport facilities by employers may pose problems relating to the principles of impartiality and independence of labour inspectors, the Committee also requests the Government to continue its efforts to furnish labour inspectors with the transport facilities necessary for the performance of their duties, in accordance with Article 11(b) of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Article 3(1) and (2) of the Convention. Cooperation with the police in combating illegal work. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that inspection staff of the Labour Affairs Bureau (DSAL) continued to assist in joint operations with the police to combat illegal work by checking the papers of employed persons or by acting as eyewitnesses.

The Government once again states that the involvement of the inspection staff in these operations does not interfere with the performance of their duties to ensure the protection of the rights of workers. It indicates that when the DSAL receives a worker's complaint alleging a labour right violation and requiring assistance, even if the worker concerned does not have a proper work permit, the DSAL will in any case initiate an investigation and request the employer to pay the wage or compensation due to the de facto labour relationship. If the employer does not pay the amount due as requested, the case will be notified to the prosecutor. The Government also indicates in its report that, from 2014 to 2021, there are some cases transferred to the judicial authority involving irregular workers, namely two cases concerning wage arrears, one concerning medical expenses and compensation for work accident and two concerning death compensation due to work accident. The Government further clarifies that the offence of "illegal employment" committed by the employer under section 16 of Law No. 6/2004 on Illegal Entry, Illegal Stay and Deportation is a crime and is administered by the Special Administrative Region Government Security Police. On the other hand, irregular work is an administrative violation punishable for both workers and employers and regulated by the Law No. 21/2009 on the Employment of Foreign Employees and the Administrative Regulation No. 17/2004 on the Prohibition of Irregular Work. The DSAL imposes penalties on the offenders according to the law, so there is no case of irregular worker transferred to the judicial authority.

The Committee notes, however, that according to the 2021 annual inspection reports, 453 inspection visits were carried out relating to the implementation of the Law No. 21/2009 on the Employment of Foreign Employees and the Administrative Regulation No. 17/2004 on the Prohibition of Illegal Work, in addition to 40 joint inspection visits together with other authorities. Fines of 6,487,500 Macanese pataca (approximately US$787,280) were imposed, involving 320 employers, as well as 117 workers without work permits, 103 non-residents performing lucrative activities and 61 migrant workers carrying out work outside permitted scope.

In this regard, the Committee once again emphasizes that workers in a vulnerable situation may not be willing to cooperate with the labour inspection services or report any labour rights' violation if they fear negative consequences, such as being fined, losing their job or being expelled from the country. The Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that any further duties which may be entrusted to labour inspectors shall not be such as to interfere with the effective discharge of their primary duties, that is to secure the enforcement of the legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers while engaged in their work. The Committee also requests that the Government continue to provide statistical information on the inspection visits carried out relating to the enforcement of Law No. 21/2009 on the Employment of Foreign Employees and the Administrative Regulation No. 17/2004 on the Prohibition of Illegal Work, as well as the number of workers subjected to any sanctions and the number of fines imposed. It further requests the Government to provide information on the enforcement of outstanding rights of undocumented migrant workers (including outstanding wages and other benefits deriving from their employment relationship).

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1976)

Previous comments on Convention No. 81: observation and direct request

Previous comments on Convention No. 129: observation and direct request

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of the ratified Conventions on labour inspection, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 81 (labour inspection) and 129 (labour inspection in agriculture) together.

The Committee notes the observations of the Single Confederation of Workers of Colombia (CUT) and the Confederation of Workers of Colombia (CTC), received on 1 September 2018, as well as the joint observations of the CUT, CTC and the General Confederation of Labour (CGT), communicated with the Government's reports, on the application of Conventions Nos 81 and 129. The Committee also notes the joint observations from the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) and the National Association of Employers of Colombia (ANDI), received on 31 August 2018, the observations of the IOE, received on 31 August 2022, and the observations of the ANDI, communicated with the Government's reports, on the application of Conventions Nos 81 and 129. In addition, the Committee takes note of the Government's comments, received on 16 November 2018, relating to the observations of the CUT, CTC, IOE and ANDI of 2018.

Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's comments on the previous observations of the CTC, CGT, CUT, IOE and ANDI, received in 2015, on the application of Conventions Nos 81 and 129.

Articles 3(1), 9, 13, 14, 20 and 21 of Convention No. 81 and Articles 6(1), 11, 18, 19, 26 and 27 of Convention No. 129. Labour inspection functions in the area of occupational safety and health (OSH). Industrial accidents and cases of occupational disease. The Committee notes the Government's indication in its reports that, pursuant to Decisions No. 3029 and 3233 of 2022, internal working groups on occupational risks inspection were established in various territorial directorates and special offices in order to strengthen inspection in this domain. The Committee notes that, according to the aforementioned decisions, each group must include at least four officials, including a coordinator who must hold a valid licence for the design, administration and implementation of OSH management systems, as well as having had the necessary training in this regard. Furthermore, the Committee notes that the functions of each group include monitoring and supervising the application of OSH standards and ordering the immediate cessation of work in the event of failure to comply with the rules on the prevention of occupational hazards if there is a serious and imminent danger to the safety or health of the workers, until the failure is resolved. In respect of the latter function, the Committee recalls that Article 13(2)(b) of Convention No. 81 and Article 18(2)(b) of Convention No. 129 empower labour inspectors to adopt measures with immediate executory force, which may go as far as halting work, in the event of imminent danger to health or safety, without requiring the danger to be serious. Accordingly, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary steps to amend Decisions Nos 3029 and 3233 of 2022 in order to ensure that they are consistent with these provisions of the Conventions.

In addition, the Committee requests the Government to describe the composition of the internal working group on occupational risks inspection, and to specify whether the inspectors in that group perform only the functions assigned to it.

The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of the aforementioned decisions. In particular, the Committee requests the Government to provide statistical information on the preventive measures taken by inspectors: (i) in order to eliminate defects in workplaces (including in connection with the use of hazardous materials and substances in agriculture) which they may have reasonable cause to believe constitute a danger to the health or safety of workers (Article 13(1) of Convention No. 81 and Article 18(1) of Convention No. 129); (ii) to make or cause to make orders that such alterations to the installation, plant, premises, tools, equipment or machines are carried out, within a specified time limit, as may be necessary to ensure compliance with the legal provisions relating to health or safety (Article 13(2)(a) of Convention No. 81 and Article 18(2)(a) of Convention No. 129); and (iii) to make or have made orders requiring measures with immediate executory force, which can go as far as halting the work, in the event of imminent danger to the health or safety of workers (Article 13(2)(b) of Convention No. 81 and Article 18(2)(b) of Convention No. 129).

Noting that the CGT refers, in its observations, to a high rate of accidents in the mining sector and that the quarterly bulletins on inspection, monitoring and control do not contain relevant information, the Committee requests the Government to provide annual statistics, disaggregated by sector, on occupational accidents, including their causes, as well as on occupational diseases, including their causes.

Article 3(2) of Convention No. 81 and Article 6(3) of Convention No. 129. Additional functions of labour inspectors. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that by Decision No. 3445 of 2021, the Ministry of Labour, territorial directorates, special offices and labour inspectorates were assigned new responsibilities with regard to inspections, as well as conciliation and assistance to citizens. The Government also refers to Decision No. 1043 of 2022 which details the remit of assistance to citizens. The Committee notes that these decisions provide for the establishment of different internal working groups for inspection, conciliation and/or assistance to citizens in various units of the Ministry of Labour.

With regard to its previous comments on assistance to citizen services, the Committee notes the Government's indication that such services: (i) are concentrated in the aforementioned assistance to citizen groups of territorial directorates and special offices; (ii) seek to supply technical information and advice to employers and workers on the most effective means of compliance with the legal provisions; and (iii) also include the issuance of authorizations, approvals and certificates and the administration of registrations and deposits provided for in the relevant legislation.

Further to its previous comments on conciliation functions, the Committee notes the Government's indication that these functions: (i) do not affect labour inspectors' activities relating to the management of inspections, monitoring and control of labour standards; and (ii) can be carried out not only by inspectors but also by regional and local representatives of the Office of the Ombudsperson, agents of the Public Prosecutor's Office dealing with labour issues (procurators delegated to labour courts) and, failing all of the above, by civil or mixed municipal judges, pursuant to section 28 of Law No. 640 of 2001.

The Committee notes that, in their observations, the CTC, CUT and CGT mention: (i) that labour inspectors are not performing their advisory function on labour matters sufficiently; and (ii) that they could be performing their conciliation function by reducing their preventive, investigative, disciplinary and advisory function. The Committee notes that the Government finds the position of workers' organizations in respect of the first question difficult to understand and acknowledges that they have previously indicated that they disagree with the assistance to citizen service functions entrusted to inspectors.

Lastly, the Committee notes that, according to the statistics contained in the quarterly bulletins on inspection, monitoring and control, in 2021 the labour inspectorate dealt with a total of 17,080 conciliations and 96,764 consultations in the context of assistance to citizens.

The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that labour inspectors are primarily responsible for securing compliance with the legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers while engaged in their work, and, therefore, to consider entrusting the functions of conciliation and assistance to citizens (with the exception of those aimed at supplying technical information and advice to employers and workers on the most effective means of complying with the legal provisions) to other units authorized in this regard. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on these measures.

With reference to Decisions Nos 3445 and 1043 adopted in 2021 and 2022, respectively, the Committee requests the Government to describe the composition of the internal inspection, conciliation and assistance to citizen groups, indicate the precise number of labour inspectors and other officials involved in these groups, and specify whether the inspectors involved perform only the functions assigned to the group to which they are attached. The Committee also requests the Government to provide detailed information on the time and resources allocated by inspectors to assistance to citizens and allocated to conciliation activities, and on the combined amount of such time and resources as a percentage of the time and resources allocated by inspectors to the discharge of their primary functions, as envisaged under Article 3(1) of Convention No. 81 and Article 6(1) of Convention No. 129.

Articles 10 and 16 of Convention No. 81 and Articles 14 and 21 of Convention No. 129. Number of labour inspectors. Frequency of inspections. Further to its previous comments on the filling of vacant labour inspector posts and the assignment of inspectors to regions outside the capital, the Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) in 2016, a competition was held to fill vacant posts in the public administration career system permanently, including labour inspector posts; (ii) there were 904 inspector posts in 2018 and 355 new posts were created in 2021; and (iii) there were 866 active inspectors in 2019 and 816 in 2021, specifying their geographical distribution at the national level (117 inspectors in the territorial directorate of Bogota D.C. and the remainder in other directorates and special offices). The Committee notes that the Government does not provide updated information on the number of existing labour inspector posts or on the number that remain vacant.

In addition, in response to its previous comments on the number of inspections undertaken, including the decrease in that number in previous years, the Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) between 2011 and 2014, the total number of inspections carried out decreased both because the activities of the labour inspectorate focused on critical sectors of the economy (specifically, on mining, ports, flower growing, palm growing and sugar) and on detecting situations of unwarranted use of labour intermediation and also because additional formalities were introduced to the legislation on administrative procedure regulating these activities in 2012 and the procedure therefore takes longer to complete; and (ii) the number of inspections was 7,289 in 2015, 6,351 in 2016, 5,445 in 2017 and 762 in the first quarter of 2018. The Committee notes that the Government does not provide information on the number of inspections carried out subsequent to the latter date nor does it indicate the number of inspections that took place in agricultural enterprises.

Furthermore, the Committee notes that, in their observations, the CTC, CUT and CGT consider the number of labour inspectors to be insufficient and, in addition, indicate that the 355 new labour inspector positions are currently vacant. The Committee notes the Government's indication, in this regard, that the number of inspectors has been gradually increasing in recent years, which has resulted in their greater presence throughout the country, and that although the number of posts should remain under constant review, any adjustment must be made in accordance with the relevant technical and budgetary considerations.

The Committee requests the Government to adopt the necessary measures to ensure that the number of labour inspectors is sufficient to guarantee that establishments are inspected as often and as thoroughly as necessary in order to ensure the effective application of the relevant legal provisions.

The Committee also requests the Government to provide updated information on: (i) the number of labour inspector posts, specifying how many are currently occupied by active inspectors and their geographical distribution, as well as any measures taken or envisaged to fill the vacant posts; and (ii) the number of inspections carried out annually, disaggregated by sector.

Articles 11(1)(b), (2) and 15(a) of Convention No. 81 and Articles 15(1)(b), (2) and 20(a) of Convention No. 129. Transport facilities. Principle of the independence and impartiality of labour inspectors. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) the Constitutional Court declared inadmissible a constitutional claim filed in 2015 by the Ministry of Labour in respect of section 3(2) of Law No. 1610 of 2013, which allows labour inspectors to seek logistical assistance from employers or workers, where conditions on the ground so require, in order to access workplaces liable to inspection; (ii) the Ministry of Labour gave instructions to inspectors to refrain from applying the aforementioned provision until the matter was properly resolved; (iii) inspectors travel in vehicles supplied by the Ministry of Labour in order to provide their services in rural areas; and (iv) labour inspectors are entitled to reimbursement of the full cost of transport and the transport expenses that they incur in accordance with Circular No. 12 of 2018, which reorganized the distribution of the budget of territorial directorates with a view to ensuring that inspectors have all necessary financial resources to discharge their functions.

The Committee notes that, in their observations, the CTC, CUT and CGT: (i) indicate that labour inspectors are not independent with regard to transport, since the necessary resources may be provided by trade unions or by employers; (ii) note that because Colombia has inaccessible rural areas, many of which are war-torn, inspections are difficult when inspectors do not have reliable access to vehicles or security measures; (iii) consider that the Government should provide information on the vehicles, among other resources, available to inspectors, in order to determine if they are sufficient. The Committee further notes that under the Public Policy for the prevention, inspection, monitoring and control of labour 2020–2030, it is envisaged that each region will carry out a transport study so that the minimum costs associated with the performance of labour inspection functions, including inspections, can be established in order to assign an appropriate budget.

The Committee urges the Government, in the interest of legal certainty, to consider amending section 3(2) of Law No. 1610 of 2013, with a view to excluding the possibility of labour inspectors seeking logistical assistance from employers or workers in order to gain access to workplaces liable to inspection. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate whether, in practice, inspectors are in fact disregarding the aforementioned provision, and to provide information on the percentage of inspection visits carried out using transport facilities provided by employers or workers. Furthermore, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any study conducted relating to transport for inspectors, the findings and the actions taken or envisaged in this regard. In addition, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any measures adopted or envisaged to ensure the safety of inspectors performing functions in regions where law and order could pose a problem.

Lastly, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on progress made with regard to the purchase of vehicles for labour inspection services and to describe the availability of means of transport in the different territorial labour inspection services.

Articles 17 and 18 of Convention No. 81 and Articles 22 and 24 of Convention No. 129. Adequate and effectively enforced penalties. Discretion to give a warning or advice. 1. Fines imposed and collected. Further to its previous comments on the body responsible for the collection of fines, the Committee notes that, according to the information provided by the Government, fines imposed by the labour inspectorate prior to 1 January 2020 continue to be collected by the National Apprenticeship Service (SENA) and incorporated in its budget, and fines imposed from that date are collected by the debt enforcement group of the legal advisory office of the Ministry of Labour and allocated to the Labour and Social Security Inspection, Monitoring and Control Strengthening Fund (FIVICOT), established in 2019 under section 201 of Law No. 1955 of 2019 (approving the National Development Plan 2018–2022), as a special State account, without legal personality, attached to the aforementioned Ministry. FIVICOT resources will be used to strengthen labour and social security inspection, monitoring and control functions.

Further to its previous comments on progress made in the effective collection of fines imposed, the Committee notes the Government's indication concerning activities carried out between 2015 and 2018 to improve the collection of fines allocated to the SENA, including the use of precautionary measures in collection procedures, the submission by the SENA of monthly reports to the Ministry of Labour on the management of fine collection at the national level and the introduction of a process linking the Ministry of Labour's Inspection, Monitoring and Control System (SISINFO) and the SENA's Information, Collection, Budget and Recovery System (SIREC), which will allow enforced penalties to be transferred directly to the SENA.

In their observations, the CTC and CUT indicate that there are consistently more unenforced than enforced penalties, that there are delays in the resolution of administrative sanctioning proceedings, that the Ministry of Labour forwards the decisions handed down in these proceedings to the SENA with unjustified delay and that the effectiveness of the SENA in the collection of fines is low. The Government indicates in this regard that: (i) unenforced penalties are not payable pending appeals against them, but will be collected once the appeals are resolved and the penalties become final; (ii) in order to comply with the terms of the resolution procedures for which the labour inspectorate has responsibility, these procedures have been clearly defined, a manual on the functions and competencies of inspectors was adopted in 2018, and inspectors have received training on compliance with the procedural terms; and

(iii) the effectiveness of the SENA with regard to the collection of fines increased from 32 per cent in 2013 and 56 per cent in 2015 to 77 per cent in 2017.

Further to its previous comments on statistics relating to violations detected, penalties imposed and the collection of penalties, the Committee notes the information provided by the Government for the period 2018–2021 in connection with: (i) the number of administrative investigations launched by the labour inspectorate; (3,056 in 2018, 2,584 in 2019, 1,376 in 2020 and 2,006 in 2021); (ii) the number of penalties (enforced and unenforced) imposed in all economic sectors (3,334 in 2018, 3,341 in 2019, 1,639 in 2020 and 3,432 in 2021), including in the agricultural sector (94 in 2018, 107 in 2019, 49 in 2020 and 135 in 2021), with disaggregated information on sugar cane, palm and flower industries; (iii) the total value of the aforementioned fines (124,458,958,537 Colombian pesos (COP) in 2018 and COP67,071,024,937 in 2021), including in the agricultural sector (COP5,305,600,134 in 2018 and COP2,210,211,035 in 2021), as well as with disaggregated information on the aforementioned industries; and (iv) the amount of the fines collected (COP15,157,812,093 in 2018 – collected by the SENA – and a total of COP6,561,296,813 in 2021 – collected by the SENA for FIVICOT). The Committee notes that the Government has not provided the statistics requested on either the number or the nature of the violations giving rise to all of the penalties imposed.

Furthermore, on the basis of the above information, the Committee notes that during the period 2018–21, while the total number of penalties increased in 2021 (after having decreased between 2018 and 2020 by approximately 50 per cent), the number of administrative investigations launched decreased by approximately 34 per cent, the amount of fines imposed decreased by approximately 45 per cent, and the amount of fines collected decreased by approximately 55 per cent; and that the proportion of fines collected to fines imposed was approximately 12 per cent in 2018 and approximately 10 per cent in 2021. In this respect, the Committee notes the indication in Chapter 3 of OECD Reviews of Labour Market and Social Policies: Colombia 2022 that the decrease in sanctioning procedures and the consequent reduction in the number of penalties imposed by the labour inspectorate are the result of its shift in focus from reactive to preventive visits, which currently account for roughly 80 per cent of all inspections. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the reasons for the decrease in the number of administrative investigations launched, and the numbers and amounts of penalties imposed, as well as information on the low proportion of fines collected in relation to fines imposed.

The Committee also requests the Government to provide updated information on the number and nature of violations detected, as well as on the penalties imposed and the matters concerned, including the size of the fines applied and collected, disaggregated by sector. Furthermore, the Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the steps taken in order to improve the effective collection of fines, both with regard to the SENA and FIVICOT, including information on the state of progress of the interlinkage between SISINFO and SIREC and its impact on the collection of fines.

2. Discretion of labour inspectors to give warning or advice. The Committee notes that the Government reports the adoption of Decision No. 772 of 2021, which establishes guidelines for the exercise of the preventive function in the form of prior notice, with a view to further developing this function entrusted to labour inspectors under section 3(1) of Law No. 1610 of 2013. The Committee notes that, according to the information provided by the Government, this preventive function: (i) requires inspectors to carry out more information and awareness-raising work in relation to workers and employers; (ii) empowers inspectors to take steps to ensure compliance with workers' rights and avoid possible disputes between workers and employers, such as, for example, by the promotion and approval of a compliance and improvement plan with corrective and preventive measures agreed by the employer and the workers; (iii) is performed by inspectors automatically or in response to a complaint about an alleged violation of workers' rights and before carrying out preliminary inquiries or initiating administrative sanctioning proceedings, without being a prior stage for these; (iv) does not seek to establish whether a violation has been committed (feasible only under administrative penalty proceedings), which is why the worker and employer concerned are not deemed parties; and (v) ceases to be exercised when the case is transferred to the competent authority, is archived having been expressly withdrawn by the complainants or when a preliminary investigation or administrative sanctioning proceedings are instituted when the inspectors deem that the events at issue in the proceedings have not been resolved and constitute a violation of labour standards. The Government indicates that the exercise of the preventive function under the above conditions aims to provide a prompt and timely response to claims of labour rights violations, as well as to rationalize the use of resources by avoiding the precipitous launch of preliminary inquiries or institution of administrative sanctioning proceedings.

In their observations, while the CTC, CUT and CGT express the wish that the activities of the labour inspectorate should centre on education and prevention, they also refer to the lack of information from the Government on the number of preventive actions taken, as well as the impact of such actions on reducing labour rights violations or promoting labour rights. In this regard, the Committee notes that section 11 of Decision No. 772 provides that actions taken in performance of the preventive function must be recorded on a digital platform in order to facilitate their monitoring and control.

In connection with the discretion of labour inspectors to give warning or advice, the Committee deems it useful to recall that the discretion provided for in this regard in Article 17(2) of Convention No. 81 and Article 22(2) of Convention No. 129 implies that inspection staff have the necessary capacity for judgement to be able to distinguish between serious or repeated wilful non-compliance, culpable negligence or flagrant ill-will, which call for a penalty, and an involuntary or minor violation, which may lead to a mere warning. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of the preventive powers of labour inspectors provided for in Decision No. 772 of 2021, specifying the cases in which labour inspectors may take such actions and the number of actions taken (as a percentage of total inspection activities). In addition, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken to monitor and control these preventive actions, as well as their outcomes.

3. Suspension or termination of administrative sanctioning proceedings. The Committee notes that section 200 of Law No. 1955 of 2019 empowers the Ministry of Labour to suspend or terminate administrative sanctioning proceedings for violation of labour standards, other than those relating to the formalization of labour, by means of an agreement with the employers under investigation, provided that they recognize their failure to comply with the relevant labour standards and undertake to implement corrective measures within one year through an improvement plan which must be approved by the Ministry of Labour. Once the improvement plan is fully implemented, the administrative sanctioning procedure is terminated. With regard to the imposition of penalties, the provision in question stipulates that: (i) if the agreement between the Ministry of Labour and the employers concerned is concluded at the preliminary inquiries stage, no penalty shall be applied; (ii) if it is concluded between the filing of charges and the presentation of pleadings, the penalty shall be reduced by half; (iii) if it is concluded between the evidentiary stage and the submission of allegations, the penalty shall be reduced by one third; (iv) the penalty shall not be reduced in the event that the employer repeats the violations; and (v) if the improvement plan is not complied with, the suspension shall be lifted and the remaining stages of the procedure shall continue, without any reduction of the penalty. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of the power provided for in section 200 of Law No. 1955 of 2019, to specify the officers authorized to exercise it and the circumstances under which they may do so and to indicate the number of administrative sanctioning proceedings suspended or terminated pursuant to the exercise of that power (as a percentage of total current sanctioning proceedings). The Committee also requests the Government to provide a copy of any supplementary regulations adopted by the Ministry of Labour pursuant to the aforementioned provision.

In addition, the Committee notes that, in their observations, the CTC, CUT and CGT contend that the aforementioned provision does not provide for: (i) the participation of the workers or workers' organizations concerned in the conclusion, implementation and monitoring of agreements to suspend sanctioning proceedings or in the associated improvement plans; or (ii) redress for harm caused to workers or their representatives by the conduct under investigation. These workers' organizations consider that this situation poses a risk of impunity and the possibility of concluding agreements that do not adequately protect the rights of workers who have filed complaints the investigation of which may eventually be suspended or terminated. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Costa Rica

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1960)

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1972)

Previous comment on Convention No. 81

Previous comment on Convention No. 129

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of the ratified Conventions on labour inspection, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 81 (labour inspection), and 129 (labour inspection in agriculture) together.

The Committee notes the observations of the Costa Rican Confederation of Democratic Workers (CCTD) of 2018 on the application of Convention No. 81, forwarded together with the Government's report, as well as the observations of the Costa Rican Federation of Chambers and Associations of Private Enterprise (UCCAEP) with the support of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), received on 1 September 2018 on the application of Conventions Nos 81 and 129, and the Government's reply to these observations. The Committee also notes the observations of the UCCAEP of 2022 forwarded together with the Government's report on the application of Convention No. 81. The Committee also notes the joint observations of the Confederation of Workers Rerum Novarum (CTRN), the Costa Rican Workers' Movement Central (CMTC) and the Juanito Mora Porras Trade Union Federation (CSJMP), received on 5 September 2018, on the application of Conventions Nos 81 and 129, and the Government's reply to these observations, as well as the joint observations of the CTRN, the CMTC, the General Confederation of Workers (CGT) and the Workers' Unitary Confederation (CUT), received on 31 August 2022, concerning Convention No. 129.

Legislation. The Committee notes the Bill on the strengthening of the General Labour Inspectorate (file No. 21.706). The Committee also notes that, in their observations, the CTRN, CMTC, CGT and CUT refer to the Bill and forward a legal report prepared by the Studies, References and Technical Services Department of the Legislative Assembly, which analyses the Bill. According to the report, the Bill proposes reforms to the Organic Law of the Ministry of Labour and Social Security (MTSS), the Labour Code and the Childhood and Adolescence Code, in order to provide the General Labour Inspectorate with sufficient powers to enforce labour legislation, order corrective measures and even impose administrative penalties. The Committee requests the Government to provide an indication of any progress made in the adoption of the Bill. The Committee also requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that any new legislation on labour inspection is in full conformity with the provisions of the Conventions. The Committee reminds the Government that, if it deems it necessary, it may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office within the framework of this legislative process.

Article 3 of Convention No. 81 and Article 6 of Convention No. 129. Duties of labour inspectors in the area of dispute resolution. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, with the implementation of the Labour Procedures Reform Act of 2017, significant changes were made to the structure and functions of certain departments of the Ministry of Labour and Social Security. In particular, the Government indicates that, with the adoption of Decree No. 41059-MTSS, published in Official Gazette No. 81 of 10 May 2018, a new organizational structure was established through which the Labour Relations Department of the Labour Affairs Department (DAL) has been subdivided into eight regional alternative dispute resolution units, which operate independently from the labour inspectorates in each region. The Government indicates that while conciliation activities used to be included among the duties of labour inspectors in regional offices, this practice no longer takes place. It also indicates that, while there are specific situations in the regional offices where inspectors assist in conciliation and administrative activities, inspection activities take priority. With the creation of this new structure, the Government also indicates that a recruitment and selection process was carried out to fill the 40 new positions for arbitrators, conciliators, notifiers, legal advisers and support staff. The Committee notes that, in order to implement the Labour Procedures Reform, Regulation No. 40875-MTSS-JP on the resolution of legal labour disputes was published, which grants the MTSS the competence to compile a list of arbitrators to attend arbitration proceedings, and the power to regulate the functioning of the alternative dispute resolution centres.

The Committee also notes that in their observations, the CTRN, CMTC, CGT and CUT indicate that inspectors perform other activities including conciliation and office work, making it inconceivable that labour and social rights could be protected. The Committee takes note of Decree No. 41059-MTSS of 2018 and requests the Government to ensure that in the application of this Decree, labour inspectors will not assume tasks that hinder the effective performance of their main functions or impair in any way the effective performance of the latter.

Articles 10, 11 and 16 of Convention No. 81 and Articles 14, 15 and 21 of Convention No. 129. Adequacy of the number of labour inspectors and measures necessary for inspection. The Government indicates that, as a consequence of the implementation of the Labour Procedures Reform, the human resources and budget of the National Labour Inspectorate (DNI) have been strengthened, thus increasing its staff by 40 per cent and its budget by almost 20 per cent. The Committee also notes that, according to the observations of the CTRN, CMTC, CGT and CUT, the number of labour inspectors in 2021 was 115, compared with 98 in 2015. The Government also indicates that in December 2021 the Ministry of Labour and Social Security initiated an internal competitions process enabling dozens of interim workers to become permanent in their posts, including in the labour inspectorate. The Government indicates that, while the Labour Procedures Reform Act doubtless involved the strengthening of human resources at the National Labour Inspectorate, over the last two years, due to the national fiscal context and the policy of reining in public spending, certain positions that were vacant due to retirement or transfers were frozen and subsequently cut. Additionally, a significant number of persons have retired over the last two years. Measures have also been implemented in the regional offices to improve the performance of inspection activities, including improvements in infrastructure, such as inspection rooms and rooms for alternative dispute resolution, audio and video equipment, as well as protective equipment and special accessories for the field work carried out by inspection staff. The Committee notes the Government's indication that on 13 January 2017, the National Insurance Institute (INS) and MTSS signed a vehicle loan agreement, thereby facilitating logistical support for workplace inspections.

In this regard, the Committee notes the indication by the CTRN, CMTC and CSJMP that: (i) inspectors do not have the materials, working tools or transport facilities necessary for the performance of their inspection duties; (ii) the number of inspectors is still insufficient given the new duties taken on by the National Labour Inspectorate following the Labour Procedures Reform, including involvement in the processing, monitoring and protection of workers affected by acts of discrimination. They also indicate that, despite the fact that the Ministry of Labour and Social Security appointed 30 new inspectors since the entry into force of the Reform up to the beginning of September 2018, approximately the same number of inspectors retired. In light of the low number of inspectors, they indicate that it is materially impossible for them to monitor compliance in workplaces with regard to non-discrimination in wages between men and women, occupational safety and hygiene standards to prevent occupational accidents and diseases, and the payment of the minimum wage by employers, among other labour guarantees.

The Committee also notes that, according to the 2021 statistical yearbook of the Ministry of Labour and Social Security, the coverage rate of workers was 22.1 per cent in 2018, 30.1 per cent in 2019, 8.9 per cent in 2020, and 10.9 per cent in 2021.

The Committee notes that, in response to its previous comments concerning Convention No. 129 on the scheduling of inspection visits to undertakings with seasonal production, the Government indicates that the regional offices schedule inspections according to the harvesting and sowing season. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the number of labour inspectors is sufficient to secure the effective discharge of the duties of the inspectorate, including in the agricultural sector, and that workplaces are inspected as often and as thoroughly as is necessary to ensure the effective application of the provisions of these Conventions. The Committee also requests the Government to continue providing information on the number of inspections carried out, the number of employers and workers covered by inspections, and the material means placed at the disposal of labour inspectors for the discharge of their duties.

Article 12(1) of Convention No. 81 and Article 16(1) of Convention No. 129. Free access of labour inspectors to workplaces. The Committee once again notes that the right to enter freely at night workplaces liable to inspection is restricted by section 89 of the Organic Act of the Ministry of Labour and Social Security to workplaces in which night work is carried out. The Committee recalls that in accordance with Article 12(1)(a) of Convention No. 81 and Article 16(1)(a) of Convention No. 129, labour inspectors provided with proper credentials shall be empowered to enter freely and without previous notice at any hour of the day or night any workplace liable to inspection. The Committee urges the Government to ensure that appropriate measures are taken without further delay to bring national legislation into conformity with the requirements of the Conventions in this regard, in order that labour inspectors are empowered to enter at night all workplaces liable to inspection, regardless of the working hours of those workplaces. The Committee requests the Government to keep the ILO informed of any progress made in this regard, including in the context of the Bill on strengthening the labour inspectorate.

Articles 12(2) and 15(c) of Convention No. 81 and Articles 16(3) and 20(c) of Convention No. 129. Notification of the inspector's presence to the employer when carrying out an inspection and the principle of confidentiality. With regard to the notification of the labour inspector's presence to the employer when carrying out a visit, the Committee notes the Government's indication that within the MTSS a committee led by the Deputy Minister for Labour is updating the Manual of Legal Procedures of the Labour Inspectorate (Directive DMT-014-2014). The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to update the Manual of Legal Procedures of the Labour Inspectorate in accordance with Conventions Nos 81 and 129 and to give an indication of the progress made in this respect.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Croatia

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1991)

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1991)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee notes the observations of the Union of Autonomous Trade Unions of Croatia (UATUC) and the Independent Trade Unions of Croatia (NHS) on Convention No. 81, received in 2016.

Article 3(2) of Convention No. 81 and Article 6(3) of Convention No. 129. Additional functions entrusted to labour inspectors. The Committee notes that the Government has not replied to its previous request regarding the role of the labour inspectorate and the justice system in the enforcement of the Foreigners Act (FA) and on joint activities involving the labour inspectorate in combating undeclared work. The Committee notes that pursuant to section 3(2) of the Labour Inspection Act (LIA), labour inspectors conduct inspections in connection with the implementation of other legislation whenever stipulated in specific legislation. The Committee also notes that the Annual Report of the labour inspectorate of 2017, referred to by the Government, contains information on the work of labour inspectors in the enforcement of the provisions of the FA, including measures relating to the work of foreigners without a permit or a work registration certificate (section 208 of the FA). The Committee recalls once again its previous comments that the Convention does not contain any provision suggesting that any workers be excluded from the protection afforded by labour inspection on account of their irregular employment status, and that the primary duty of labour inspectors is to secure the enforcement of the legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers and not to enforce immigration law. It further recalls that pursuant to Article 3(2) of Convention No. 81 and Article 6(3) of Convention No. 129, any further duties which may be entrusted to labour inspectors shall not be such as to interfere with the effective discharge of their primary duties. The Committee requests the Government to take measures to ensure that the functions assigned to labour inspectors do not interfere with the main objective of labour inspectors to ensure the protection of workers in accordance with labour inspectors' primary duties as provided for in Article 3(2) of Convention No. 81 and Article 6(3) of Convention No. 129. It also once again requests the Government to provide detailed information regarding the role of labour inspectors in the enforcement of the FA, as well as any other joint activities between the labour inspectorate and other state bodies aimed at combating undeclared work, including the scope of these activities, the proportion of labour inspection activities and resources directed to the enforcement of the FA or otherwise combating undeclared work, and the impact of these activities on the work of the labour inspectorate with regard to the enforcement of legal provisions on conditions of work and the protection of workers.

Articles 3(2), 10, and 16 of Convention No. 81 and Articles 6(3), 14 and 21 of Convention No. 129. Number of labour inspectors for the effective discharge of the duties of the inspectorate and additional duties. The Committee notes the observations by the UATUC and the NHS that there is an insufficient number of labour inspectors, and that the existing inspection staff is burdened by the quantity of work related to workers' claims in cases of employer bankruptcy, which prevents them from discharging their primary tasks in the fields of employment relations and occupational health and safety (OSH). The UATUC and NHS further note the likely imminent retirement of many labour inspectors, and that the lack of inspectors has a significant influence on the regularity and quality of inspections in the field of OSH and labour relations. The Committee notes the Government's statement that, as of 31 December 2016, the labour inspectorate employed a total of 226 labour inspectors and 10 other civil servants in positions related to IT and analytical activities for the improvement of the work carried out by the labour inspectorate and that by 31 December 2017, the number of labour inspectors had increased to 229. Nonetheless, the Government also identifies the insufficient number of labour inspectors as one of the difficulties encountered in the application of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information regarding the measures taken or envisaged to ensure that a sufficient number of labour inspectors is appointed, in accordance with Article 10 of Convention No. 81 and Article 14 of Convention No. 129, and that existing labour inspectors' additional duties do not interfere with the effective discharge of their primary duties.

Articles 5(a), 17 and 18 of Convention No. 81 and Articles 12, 22(1) and 24 of Convention No. 129. Institution of legal proceedings and enforcement of adequate penalties. In its previous comments, the Committee noted a decrease in the rate of cases in which the legal proceedings initiated by labour inspectors were declared inadmissible by the misdemeanour courts due to the expiration of the statute of limitations (from 58 to 36.5 per cent), due primarily to the adoption of the Misdemeanours Act modifying the applicable time limits. The Committee notes an absence of information in response to its previous request regarding additional measures to give effect to Articles 5(a), 17 and 18 of Convention No. 81. Recalling the importance of cooperation between the labour inspection system and the justice system, the Committee requests the Government to provide information regarding any measures taken or envisaged to accelerate the examination of cases referred by labour inspectors to the courts and to ensure effective enforcement of adequate and sufficiently dissuasive penalties, including detailed information on the progress achieved or the difficulties encountered as well as statistical information on the number of legal proceedings initiated by labour inspectors that were declared inadmissible, and the main reasons for their inadmissibility.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Cyprus

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1960)

Previous comment

Article 3(2). Additional labour inspection duties entrusted to labour inspectors. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government's indication that the Department of Labour Relations (DLR) is not the competent authority for the enforcement of immigration law but that it cooperates, within its remit, with the Cyprus Police when dealing with such cases. In this respect, the Government reiterates that the DLR and the Centralized Labour Inspectorate (CLI) gathered detailed information on the number of migrant workers covered by inspection visits in 2015, 2016 and 2017, including the number of "unregistered foreign employees" and the number of "illegal foreign employees" detected. The Committee notes, however, that these statistics are not reflected in the labour inspection reports. The Government also indicates that there is a clear separation between police duties and those of labour inspectors. During an inspection, inspectors will inform employees about their rights and investigate any possible violation of the law, irrespective of the legal status of the worker and of police presence at the inspection. The Government indicates that police and other authorities are informed in case of illegal employment. The Committee recalls once again that, pursuant to Article 3 of the Convention, the functions of the labour inspection system are to secure the enforcement of the legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers while engaged in their work, and that any further duties which may be entrusted to labour inspectors shall not be such as to interfere with the effective discharge of their primary duties. In its 2006 General Survey on labour inspection, paragraph 78, the Committee indicated that any function of verifying the legality of employment should have as its corollary the reinstatement of the statutory rights of all the workers if it is to be compatible with the objective of labour inspection, which is to protect the rights and interests of all workers and to improve their working conditions. The Committee once again requests the Government to take measures to ensure that the functions assigned to labour inspectors do not interfere with their main objective, which is to ensure the protection of workers while engaged in their work (as provided for in Article 3(1)), including taking further measures to separate labour inspectors from police activities related to migrant workers in an irregular situation. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the proportion of labour inspectors' time and resources that are spent on functions related to control of the regularity of employment of migrant workers. It also requests the Government to continue to provide information on specific measures undertaken by the inspectorate to ensure the enforcement of the rights of migrant workers found to be in an irregular situation. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of migrant workers in an irregular situation who have been granted their due rights (number of cases in which foreign workers have been paid outstanding wages and benefits) or where their situation has been regularized.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Djibouti

Convention concerning Statistics of Wages and Hours of Work, 1938 (No. 63) (ratification: 1978)

Technical assistance. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its brief report, including its request for ILO technical assistance to assist it in filling the gaps in implementation of the Convention. It recalls that the Government had not submitted information since October 2005. The Committee notes the information concerning the 2012 Statistical Yearbook, which is available online, as well as the 2015 Household Survey, to be published in June 2016. The Committee further notes that, according to the information available to the ILO Department of Statistics, labour market statistics in Djibouti are not compiled on a regular basis. The Committee requests that the Government provide information on the results and methodology of the 2015 Household Survey, as soon as it becomes available, and to regularly provide information on the application of the Convention.

The Committee notes the recommendations of the Standards Review Mechanism Tripartite Working Group and the corresponding decision of the Governing Body at its 328th Session in October–November 2016 (GB/328/LILS/2/1) calling upon the Office to commence follow-up with Member States that are still bound by this Convention, encouraging them to ratify the Labour Statistics Convention, 1985 (No. 160), as the most up-to-date instrument in this area, and resulting in the automatic denunciation of Convention No. 63. The Committee reminds the Government of the availability of ILO technical assistance in this regard.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Ecuador

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1975)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Trade Union Association of Agricultural, Banana and Rural Workers (ASTAC), received on 24 January 2020 and 30 August 2022, and the joint observations of ASTAC and the Ecuadorean Confederation of Unitary Class Organizations of Workers (CEDOCUT), received on 1 October 2020 on the application of this Convention. Furthermore, the Committee notes the joint observations of the Ecuadorian Confederation of Free Trade Unions (CEOSL), the Ecuadorian Federation of Municipal and Provincial Workers (FETMYP), the National Federation of Education Workers (UNE) and the National Ecuadorian Federation of workers of provincial governments (FENOGOPRE), received on 1 September 2022 on the application of the Convention.

Articles 6, 10 and 16 of the Convention. Status and conditions of service of labour inspectors. Inspection staff and coverage of inspection needs. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, in 2020, there was a total of 160 inspectors at the national level, while, at 31 August 2022, this figure was 200 (99 with permanent appointments and 101 with temporary appointments). While it welcomes the increase in the number of inspectors, the Committee also notes that the 31 labour inspectors recruited between 2020 and August 2022 were appointed on a temporary basis (8 in 2020, 7 in 2021 and 16 between 1 January and 31 August 2022) and that the majority of inspectors are appointed on a temporary basis. In this regard, the Committee notes the Government's indication that, due the COVID-19 pandemic, it was necessary to reduce public spending and remove public posts in 2020, with the exception of labour inspectorate positions. In particular, the Government indicates that it was vital to allocate resources to health, and to set aside the call for a merit-based competitive exam to fill labour inspector vacancies. Furthermore, the Government indicates that the low number of inspectors with permanent appointments in August 2022 is due to the fact that merit-based competitive exams involve considerable budgetary expenditure, and the regulations governing the examination processes are currently being amended. Despite the fact that there are inspectors with temporary appointments and occasional contracts, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the stability of employment of these inspectors is guaranteed and that this stability is not affected by government changes.

Concerning the observations of the social partners, the Committee notes the following: (i) ASTAC indicates that there were only four inspectors in the province of Los Ríos, which meant that it was impossible for them to carry out their work; (ii) ASTAC and CEDOCUT indicate that, in accordance with their analysis of personnel distribution data, there were 196 inspectors in August 2020, and that there is no transparency on the part of the Government regarding the number of labour inspectors. They also indicate that, in recent years, there has been evidence of setbacks in the duties of labour inspectors, and that the situation was exacerbated by the reduction and restriction of spending by public institutions, which enables labour inspectors to obtain sufficient resources to carry out their work; and (iii) the CEOSL, FETMYP, UNE and FENOGOPRE indicate that the increase in the number of inspectors is not sufficient for them to carry out their duties.

The Committee also notes the Government's indication that, between 1 January and 24 September 2020, the number of inspections was 6,446 (2,857 in progress, 3,222 archived and 367 that resulted in penalties). In this regard, the Government indicates that, with the aim of adapting labour inspections to the mobility restrictions resulting from the pandemic, telematic tools were adopted to carry out control and monitoring work in relation to workers' rights. The Committee also notes that the Government does not provide information on the inspections carried out in 2021 and 2022.

The Committee understands the impact and difficulties caused by the COVID-19 pandemic. The Committee requests the Government to make every effort to ensure stability of employment for labour inspectors with temporary appointments, in accordance with Article 6 of the Convention. The Committee also requests the Government to provide detailed information on the conditions of service of labour inspectors, including their levels of remuneration and their employment tenure in comparison to the remuneration levels and job tenure of other officials exercising functions of similar complexity and responsibility, such as tax collectors and the police. The Committee also requests the Government to provide: (i) information on the measures adopted or envisaged in order to ensure that the number of labour inspectors is sufficient for the effective performance of their duties; (ii) updated statistical information on the number of inspectors and of inspections carried out; and (iii) detailed information on the manner in which it is ensured that workplaces are inspected with necessary frequency and thoroughness to ensure the effective application of the provisions of this Convention.

The Committee notes that, in its observations, ASTAC indicates that, in the province of Los Ríos, acts of corruption of inspectors were reported, and that a higher body should be established to assess the performance of inspectors, as corruption comes predominantly from within enterprises. The Committee requests the Government to provide comments in this respect.

Articles 12 and 17. Free initiative of labour inspectors to enter workplaces without prior notice, and discretion to initiate legal proceedings without previous warning. The Committee notes that the Government refers to four types of inspections: (i) targeted inspections; (ii) comprehensive inspections;

(iii) inspections by means of electronic verification; and (iv) random inspections. The Government indicates that, during comprehensive inspections, labour inspectors shall review and plan for the assigned inspections, according to the non-compliances established by the computer systems of the Ministry of Labour. Where there are potential cases of non-compliance, the employer is notified electronically in order for an inspection to be conducted after the 15-day period following the issuance of the notification. At the site of the field inspection, the employer shall be notified of the cases of non-compliance identified, in order for the employer to justify, correct or remedy the non-compliance observed, within a period of five days. Where the case of non-compliance has been justified or the facts have been disproved, within the time frame established, the proceedings are closed. In the opposite case, if, within the five days following the notification issued during the field inspection, the cases of non-compliance have not been corrected or remedied, the employer shall be notified of a decision containing the date of a hearing, in order for the employer to justify the cases of non-compliance. If the hearing takes place, the inspector shall review the information submitted and draft a report within five days, which shall be brought to the attention of the regional labour director. The regional director has a period of 15 days to issue an administrative decision to impose a penalty or terminate the proceedings. The Committee notes that, according to the procedure described by the Government and established in Ministerial Decision No. MDT-2016-0303 of 29 December 2016, pursuant to which it was agreed to issue the "General Rules Applicable to Comprehensive Labour Inspections", and its amendment by Ministerial Decision No. MDT-2017-0110 of 10 July 2017, labour inspectors must give prior notice of the inspection to the employer. Labour inspectors are also required to give notice of compliance to the employer, while administrative decisions imposing penalties may only be issued by the regional director at the end of the hearing.

In their joint observations, the CEOSL, FETMYP, UNE and FENOGOPRE indicate that labour inspectors cannot enter, freely and without prior notice, establishments subject to inspections, as inspectors only conduct their activities during working hours, from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., and are required to give prior notice of the inspection to the employer. In particular, they indicate that comprehensive field inspections require 15-days' notice to be given to the employer in accordance with section 12(1) of Ministerial Decision No. MDT-2016-0303 of 3 February 2017. In this regard, they also indicate that only inspections on request are conducted, as evidenced by the procedures for conducting targeted, electronic and comprehensive field inspections.

The Committee recalls that, in accordance with Article 12(1)(a) of the Convention, labour inspectors shall be empowered to enter freely and without previous notice at any hour of the day or night any workplace liable to inspection. The Committee also recalls that Article 17 of the Convention provides that, with certain exceptions, persons who violate or neglect to observe legal provisions enforceable by labour inspectors shall be liable to prompt legal proceedings without previous warning, and that it shall be left to the discretion of labour inspectors to give warning and advice instead of instituting or recommending proceedings. The Committee requests the Government to adopt measures to ensure that labour inspectors are empowered, in law and practice and in line with Article 12(1)(a) and (b) of the Convention, to make visits without previous notice. The Committee also requests the Government adopt the necessary measures to ensure that labour inspectors are able to prompt legal proceedings without previous warning, where required, in accordance with Article 17 of the Convention. Furthermore, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of announced and unannounced inspections conducted by labour inspectors, and to indicate in detail the number of violations detected and the specific sanctions imposed through both announced and unannounced inspections.

Articles 19, 20 and 21. Periodic reports and the preparation, publication and transmission of an annual report on the work of the inspection services. The Committee notes that the Office has not received the annual report on the activities of the labour inspection services. In this regard, the Committee notes that the 2019 accountability report contains information on the total number of inspections carried out and the penalties imposed. The Committee once again requests the Government to make every effort possible to ensure that the central authority on labour inspection transmits to the ILO an annual report on the work of the inspection services containing all the information required under Article 21(a)–(g) of the Convention. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the publication of the annual report in accordance with Article 20(1) of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1950)

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1974)

Previous comment on Conventions Nos 81 and 129

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of ratified Conventions on labour inspection, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 81 (labour inspection) and 129 (labour inspection in agriculture) together.

The Committee notes the observations of the Central Organization of Finnish Trade Unions (SAK) on the application of Convention No. 81, communicated with the Government's report.

Article 3(1) and (2) of Convention No. 81 and Article 6(1) and (3) of Convention No. 129. Cooperation with the police in the control of immigration law. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the indication in the report of the Government that the labour inspectorate still carries out joint inspections with the police and the Finnish Border Guard in industries such as agriculture, restaurants, and construction, as it has been established that there are workers without the necessary work permits in these sectors. According to the Government, cooperation between various authorities is considered an effective method to tackle the informal economy and allows the authorities to make effective use of their different powers. The Government indicates that, based on the feedback received, the cooperation between authorities does not cause fear in the workplace and instead, increases trust in the maintenance of a fair and harmonious labour market, encouraging employers to comply with their statutory obligations. The Government further states that labour inspection related to migrant workers aims to ensure that workers have safe working conditions and terms of employment that are compliant with legislation, and that the labour inspectorate provides guidance to workers on minimum terms of employment. The Government nevertheless indicates that all matters related to unpaid wages and social benefits are handled by the Centre for Economic Development, Transport and the Environment (ELY Centre), and the labour inspectorate does not have any data regarding the wages or social security benefits paid to migrant labourers. Furthermore, the Committee observes that the Government also refers to the expectation of potential opposition and aggressive behaviour at certain inspections of this type, making the presence of the police and the Finnish Border Guard useful to ensure the safety of labour inspectors. The Committee refers the Government to its 2006 General Survey on labour inspection, paragraph 78, and underlines that the objective of labour inspection can only be met if workers are convinced that the primary task of the inspectorate is to enforce legal provisions relating to conditions of work and protection of workers. The Committee also notes the observations of the SAK, indicating that the current resources for occupational safety and health (OSH) enforcement are inadequate, and that addressing that enforcement in relation to labour abuses in the shadow economy should not be achieved at the expense of OSH enforcement. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that labour inspectors' participation in joint inspections does not interfere with the effective discharge of their primary duties under Article 3(1) of Convention No. 81 and Article 6(1) of Convention No. 129. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information on the measures taken to ensure that labour inspectors' participation in joint inspections does not prejudice in any way the authority and impartiality which are necessary to inspectors in their relations with employers and workers. In addition, the Committee requests the Government to provide further detailed information on the procedure for enforcing employers' obligations arising from the statutory rights of undocumented migrant workers for the period of their effective employment relationship, including information on the labour inspectorate's advisory role in directing such workers to the ELY Centre and to social security authorities.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1959)

Previous comment

Articles 10, 11 and 16 of the Convention. Human resources and material means of the labour inspectorate and coverage of workplaces. In its previous report, the Government had stated that it faced challenges including an insufficient number of inspectors and inadequate logistical support for inspections and enforcement. In reply to the previous comment of the Committee, the Government indicates that it has recruited over 75 labour officers and inspectors to increase staffing levels. The Committee notes that according to the Government, the Labour Department counts 170 inspectors. The Committee notes, however, that this figure is similar to the one reported in 2017, when the Government indicated a total of 171 inspectors. Concerning the reasons for the decline of inspections undertaken by the Department of Factories Inspectorate between 2014 and 2016, the Government indicates that such decline was due to the attrition rate of workers, which the country witnessed between 2014 and 2016. The Government also indicates that, after this period, more inspectors have been recruited and that it is still recruiting additional staff to enable the Department to enhance its inspectorate work. The Committee notes that the Government does not provide information on the number of staff in the Department of Factories Inspectorate. Further, the Committee notes that, according to the Statistical Reports of the Ministry of Employment and Labour Relations for the years 2018, 2019 and 2020, the number of labour inspections undertaken by the Labour Departments were 284 in 2018, 202 in 2019 and 256 in 2020. The Committee also notes that the inspections in the field of occupational safety and health, undertaken by the Department of Factories Inspectorate were 2,147 in 2018, to 2,936 in 2019 and 2,676 in 2020. With respect to material resources available to the labour inspectorate, the Government indicates that office equipment and vehicles were provided to the Labour Department and the Department of Factories Inspectorate to enhance their operations. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of labour inspections undertaken by the Labour Department and the Department of Factories Inspectorate and the number of inspectors in each Department. The Committee also requests the Government to explain whether the current number of Labour Department inspectors is adequate to conduct effective inspections of workplaces in light of the Government's prior indication that it was not. Further, the Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken to ensure that the labour inspection services have at their disposal the required material resources to enable them to effectively carry out their duties.

Articles 17, 18 and 21(e). Enforcement of the legal provisions relating to the conditions of work and the protection of workers. The Committee previously requested information on the application of penalties, as well as concerning the revision of penalties for labour law provisions. The Committee notes in this regard the Government's indication that it will provide the requested information in its next report. The Committee further notes that a training for labour inspectors and the Office of the Attorney General was organized in June 2022 under the Trade for Decent Work Programme (T4DW). The Committee notes that in its report under Convention No. 182, the Government indicates that such training resulted in useful recommendations for improving the collaboration between the Office of the Attorney General and the labour inspectorate on the prosecution of cases of child labour and other violations at the workplace. The Committee renews its request for the Government to provide detailed statistics on the violations detected, the number and nature of penalties imposed and the amount of fines collected. It also requests the Government to indicate the follow-up actions for issues of non-compliance detected, including statistics on the outcome of the cases transmitted for prosecution. In addition, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any revision of “penalty units”, as defined pursuant to the Fines (Penalty Units) Act of 2000, with a view to ensuring that there are adequate penalties for violations of the legal provisions enforceable by labour inspectors.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Greece

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1955)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Greek General Confederation of Labour (GSEE), received on 1 September 2021, the additional observations of the GSEE and the observations of the Federation of Associations of the Ministry of Labour (OSYPE), received on 13 May 2022, as well as the Government's reply.

Articles 3 and 4 of the Convention. Restructuring of the labour inspection system. Organization and effective functioning of the system of labour inspection. Supervision and control by a central authority. The Committee notes the adoption of Law 4808/2021, which establishes a new framework for the organization and operation of the labour inspectorate and envisages its transformation into an independent authority separated from the Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs (MLSA). The Committee notes that the GSEE and the OSYPE allege that the new law was adopted without consultations and foresees a far-reaching transformation of the governance, administration and operation of the labour inspectorate. In its reply, the Government indicates that the Minister held repeated meetings with employers' and workers' representatives prior to the adoption of the law, as well as before and after its submission to the Parliament. The Government indicates that the labour inspectorate's transformation into an independent authority aims to ensure the effectiveness of public administration in monitoring compliance with the labour and social insurance law through the creation of an adequate framework of independence, transparency and accountability, as well as the establishment of a climate of trust towards inspection institutions.

The Committee notes that under section 102 of Law 4808/2021, for the commencement of operation of the labour inspectorate, a relevant decision of the MLSA should be issued. Furthermore, according to the same section of the law, from the commencement of operation of the new labour inspectorate, the existing Labour Inspection Body (SEPE) is abolished, as the new labour inspectorate replaces it automatically in all rights, claims, obligations, legal relations and pending lawsuits. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the new labour inspectorate has started its operations as of July 2022, pursuant to Decision No. 67759 (G.G. 3795/B ' /19.07.2022). The Government explains that in accordance with section 102(6) of Law 4808/2021, from the beginning of the operation of the new labour inspectorate, where SEPE is referred to in existing legal provisions, the new labour inspectorate shall be implied, and where the General Inspector is referred to, the Governor or the Administrative Board of the labour inspectorate shall be implied. In this respect, the Government refers to Decision No. 1955 (G.G. 14/ 13.01.2022) on the appointment of the Administration Board Members of the Labour Inspectorate and Decision No. 52272 (G.G. 455/02.06.2022) on the Appointment of the Governor of the Independent Authority of the Labour Inspectorate. The Committee notes that a new project entitled “Support to the Operational Modernisation of the Labour Inspectorate and the Mediation and Arbitration Service (OMED) in Greece” will be implemented in close cooperation with the ILO and with funding from the European Union, with the aim to support the Greek authorities in the restructuring of the labour inspectorate into an independent body.

The GSEE indicates that the new law removes the institutional responsibility of the MLSA to oversee compliance with labour and social security standards by the labour inspectorate and creates an adverse impact in labour inspectorate’s provision of services. According to the trade union, without the MLSA having the main supervisory and coordinating role, the uniform enforcement of the labour law will no longer be possible. Furthermore, according to the GSEE, separating the labour inspectorate from the central office of the MLSA, where all relevant employment policy departments are placed, will certainly disrupt the link to continuous information on all labour matters required for the design and fulfilment of the labour inspectorate mission. In its observations, the OSYPE indicates that the separation of the labour inspectorate from the MLSA signifies a separation from all directorates responsible for the interpretation of the rules of labour law, as well as from the information system ERGANI which belongs to the MLSA and is the most critical tool both for the identification of undeclared work and for the compliance of the terms of employment contracts by companies. In its reply, the Government clarifies that, under the new legislative framework, the labour inspectorate takes the role of the central authority, which has hierarchical structure and uniform administrative bodies (Administrative Board and Governor). It indicates that the bodies’ term of office and the way they are selected ensure that they shall not be affected by any government change. Regarding ERGANI, the Government indicates that under section 8(1) “Access and management” of the Ministerial Decision No. 40331 (B’ 3520/2019), which is currently in force, it is provided that SEPE (now replaced by the Labour Inspectorate) has access to all relevant forms and data submitted, which according to the Government also means full access to ERGANI.

The Committee notes that the GSEE also highlights the need for a nation-wide upgrading of the Labour Inspectorate that will: (i) increase regional directorates in line with the country’s regions and spread their local departments in each regional unit; and (ii) institutionalize controls by inspectors in neighbouring regions other than the region in which they are based, with a view to enhancing transparency of controls. In its reply the Government indicates section 21(4) of Law 3996/2011, which refers to the Regional Committees for Social Inspection of the Labour Inspectorate (PEKEE), is still in force. Thus, the Committee understands that the internal structure of the labour inspectorate has remained the same. The Committee requests the Government to provide, information on the capacity of the new labour inspectorate to fulfil its functions under Article 3(1) of the Convention, including with regard to the period of transition between the SEPE and the new inspectorate. The Committee also requests the Government to continue to provide information on the structure of the labour inspectorate as an independent authority and to provide an organigram of the new structure.

Article 3(1)(a), (b) and (2). Labour inspection activities in the area of undeclared work and illegal employment, including in relation to foreign workers. The Committee recalls that from 2016 to 2020 a development cooperation project on “Supporting the transition from informal to formal economy and addressing undeclared work in Greece” was implemented by the Government in close collaboration with the ILO and the social partners in Greece, supporting the implementation of the road map to tackling undeclared work in the country. The Committee notes that a series of legislative changes were adopted in the area of protection of workers’ rights, including through law 4554/2018, as amended by Law 4635/2019, which includes a section entitled “combating undeclared work” providing for administrative sanctions for undeclared work and foresees the establishment of a “Register of Delinquent Employers in matters of Undeclared Work”. The Government indicates that the said system is being developed at the ERGANI Information System of the MLSA. In its observations, the GSEE indicates that the implementation of the agreed road map on undeclared work, for which the joint action by the labour inspectorate and the competent departments of the MLSA is instrumental, has not been completed. It further indicates that undeclared work is the norm in the agricultural sector and states that the secession of the labour inspectorate from the MLSA, introduced by the recent reform, will further intensify the reluctance of the Government to ratify the Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129), despite the commitments made in the context of the ILO technical assistance and the road map for undeclared work. In its reply the Government indicates that the new labour inspectorate has the competence to carry out inspections in the agricultural sector under article 2(2) of Law 3996/2011, which remains in force. The Government also indicates that, taking into account that trafficking in human beings for labour exploitation is directly related to undeclared work, the labour inspectorate assists the work of other authorities that are primarily responsible for identifying victims of human trafficking, such as the Hellenic Police. Furthermore, the Government indicates that in a meeting of the Supreme Labour Council in October 2022, the need to prioritize the consideration of ratification of Convention No. 129 was highlighted, taking into account the new legislative framework in force for the Labour Inspectorate. The Committee recalls that, pursuant to Article 3(1) and (2) of Convention No. 81 (and Article 6(1) and (3) of Convention No. 129), the functions of the system of labour inspection shall be to secure the enforcement of the legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers while engaged in their work, and any further duties which may be entrusted to labour inspectors shall not be such as to interfere with the effective discharge of their primary duties. The Committee requests the Government to provide information with regard to the development and the functioning of the Register of Delinquent Employers in matters of Undeclared Work. In addition, the Committee requests the Government to provide further information on the functions relating to the control of undeclared work entrusted to the new labour inspectorate, including its cooperation with the police, and to provide information on the specific measures taken to ensure that these functions do not negatively impact the mandatory functions of the labour inspection system concerning the protection of workers, including their safety and health. The Committee accordingly reiterates its request that the Government provide detailed information on the total number of labour inspections, including specifically the number of OSH inspections and those relating to undeclared work. The Committee once again requests the Government to indicate the role and activities of labour inspectors in relation to foreign workers where they are found to be in an irregular situation. In this regard, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the number of foreign workers in an irregular situation who have been granted their due rights (number of cases in which foreign workers have been paid outstanding wages and benefits) or where their situation has been regularized.

Article 6. Status and conditions of service of labour inspectors. Independence of inspectors. The Committee notes that section 104 of Law 4808/2021 provides for the functional independence of the Governor and the members of the labour inspectorate's Governing Board, while section 114 defines the powers of the Governor which include, inter alia, the authority to define the service status, the salary status, the disciplinary procedure, the organizational structure of the staff positions, as well as the power to set up the Executive and Disciplinary Boards and to lay down the rules for their decision making. The Committee notes the observations of the GSEE and the OSYPE according to which the guarantees on independence as enshrined in the Law 3996/2011, are undermined by the reform. More specifically the GSEE and the OSYPE indicate that: (i) section 104 does not provide guarantees of independence for all employees of the labour inspectorate; (ii) the way the Governor and the Governing Board are chosen does not guarantee in the first place the independence of inspectors themselves; (iii) the law allows for an overconcentration of powers in the Governor's person, and the exercise of the powers without any control; and (iv) the guarantees of the Civil Servants Code no longer exist since the Disciplinary and Service Boards fall under the uncontrolled power of the Governor, and courts do not have jurisdiction to judge the disputes in question. Regarding the status and conditions of service of labour inspectors, the GSEE and the OSYPE indicate that the law brings a complete dependence of the inspectors on the Governor for all matters concerning their employment status. The Committee notes that in its observations, OSYPE also indicates that the separation of the labour inspectorate from the MLSA changes the regime and the terms of employment for inspectors specifically taking into account that the provisions of Law 4808/2021 make no explicit reference to "labour inspectors", but rather generally refers to "employees" of the independent authority, a working status which is unilaterally regulated by the Governor. In its reply, the Government indicates that according to section 114 of the law 4808/2021, the Governor shall establish or merge Personnel and Disciplinary Boards at the labour inspectorate, as well as Special Assessment Committees and determine the specific issues of their operation in accordance with the provisions in force. According to the Government, this means that the legislation does not authorize the Governor of the labour inspectorate to deviate from the general provisions on disciplinary control and the bodies thereof. With regard to the independence of the labour inspection authority, the Government indicates that in accordance with the Constitution, the provisions of Law 3051/2002 and the Standing Orders of the Hellenic Parliament, independent authorities, as administrative State bodies under a legal status similar to that of the Government, are subject only to judicial control and parliamentary scrutiny. The Committee also notes that section 117 of the new law provides that all existing staff of the SEPE are automatically transferred to the new labour inspectorate, with the same type of employment relationship they had under the SEPE. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the conditions of service of labour inspectors under the new labour inspectorate, including their levels of remuneration and their employment tenure in comparison to the remuneration levels and job tenure of other officials with similar functions, such as tax collectors and the police. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on any decision adopted by the Governor of the labour inspectorate in the implementation of section 114 of the law 4808/2021 concerning arrangements for disciplinary and personnel matters.

Article 10. Number of inspectors. The Committee takes note of a series of measures and legislation adopted to address structural and staffing problems, particularly staff reduction in SEPE. It notes particularly that through the Presidential Decree No. 134/2017 "Organization of the Ministry of Labour, Social Security and Social Solidarity" (OG 168/A'/06.11.2017), the number of directorates, departments, inspectors' statutory posts and special labour inspectors' posts increased. Furthermore, the Government indicates that SEPE was staffed via transfers and appointments of employees, including following the Law 4440/2016, on the basis of which 55 employees were transferred and posted to SEPE. The Committee notes that in 2018, the SEPE had a workforce of 732 employees, out of which 621 were labour inspectors and 372 labour relations inspectors. In its observations, the GSEE calls on the importance of taking measures to strengthen the human resources of the labour inspectorate by means of expedited procedures in the context of mobility or recruitment and to quickly staff the labour inspection offices operated by a single-person, with a view to enhancing the effectiveness of SEPE and also to discharge the inspectors from bureaucratic work so that they are able to perform their auditing unobstructed. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect. The Committee also requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of labour inspectors, including on the recruitment of additional staff, in order to ensure that there is a sufficient number for the effective discharge of the duties of the inspectorate, especially in the context of the new labour inspectorate.

Article 11. Material resources of the labour inspectorate. Reimbursement of expenses incurred by labour inspectors in the exercise of their duties. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the observations made by the Union of Occupational Safety and Health Inspectors according to which: (i) the majority of travel expenses incurred by labour inspectors are not covered; (ii) there was a reduction in budget between 2009 and 2014, and the number of travel facilities is insufficient; and (iii) labour inspectors are not provided with the personal protective equipment required for inspections in high-risk workplaces. The Committee notes that the Government did not provide any relevant information on this matter. In its observations, the GSEE calls on the importance of taking measures to support and upgrade the logistical infrastructure of SEPE by ensuring appropriate building facilities, as well as the provision of service vehicles, modern work environment measuring instruments and personal protective equipment to inspectors. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect. The Committee also requests once again that the Government indicate the measures taken to ensure that labour inspectors are reimbursed for all expenses incurred in the performance of their duties, and that they are provided with the required personal protective equipment to ensure adequate protection against risks to their safety and health during the performance of their duties. It also requests the Government to provide information on the budget allocated to the labour inspection service, especially in the context of the creation of the new labour inspectorate, and to describe the availability of transport facilities and suitably equipped offices throughout the territorial structures of the labour inspection service.

Articles 17 and 18. Adequate penalties imposed and effectively enforced. The Committee notes the information provided in the Government's report regarding the activities of the SEPE, in particular the violations detected, the number of cases brought to the courts, and the penalties imposed up to 2020. The Committee notes that Ministerial Decision 80016/2022 categorizes the types of violations and determines the amount of fines to be imposed by the labour inspectorate for violations of labour law. In its observations, the GSEE points to a significant and unjustified reduction of fines for breach of labour law, which benefits and encourages employers' infringements. In this respect GSEE places emphasis on the need to immediately re-evaluate the system of fines and their calculation involving representatives of SEPE. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect and to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to ensure the establishment of adequate penalties for the violation of legal provisions enforceable by labour inspectors. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide detailed information on the number of violations detected, the number of cases brought to the courts, and the penalties subsequently imposed.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Guinea

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1959)

Previous comment

The Committee notes that, in March 2021, the Governing Body declared receivable a representation submitted by the International Union of Food, Agricultural, Hotel, Restaurant, Catering, Tobacco and Allied Workers' Associations (IUF) under article 24 of the ILO Constitution, alleging non-observance by Guinea of the Convention, as well as of the Promotional Framework for Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 2006 (No. 187), and the Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95), and appointed a tripartite committee to examine it (GB.341/INS/14/6, March 2021). The Committee notes that the allegations contained in the representation refer to Articles 3, 6, 9, 10, 11 and 12 of Convention No. 81. In accordance with its usual practice, the Committee has decided to suspend its examination of these issues pending the decision of the Governing Body in respect of the representation.

Article 7 of the Convention. Training of labour inspectors. Further to its previous comment, the Committee notes the Government's indication that, apart from the mandatory one-year training course provided for in the General Statute for Public Officials, labour inspectors do not receive any special training for the performance of their duties. However, in 2021, 36 officials newly placed at the disposal of the General Labour Inspectorate (IGT) benefited from three months of initial training at the initiative of the General Labour Inspectorate. In addition, in 2021, Guinea benefited from ILO technical assistance, which was provided through workshops held jointly with the IGT. A total of 10 inspectors participated in this training, which will serve to operationalize, at national level, the National Social Dialogue Council. Currently, a training programme on child labour and trafficking is planned for labour inspectors and certain officials of the labour administration using technical and financial assistance from the United Nations Children's Fund (UNICEF). The Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to ensure that labour inspectors are adequately trained for the performance of their duties. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the progress made in this regard.

Articles 20 and 21. Annual labour inspection report. The Committee notes the quarterly reports of the IGT for 2022, appended to the Government's report, providing information on activities related to inspection and other functions performed by labour inspectors, the types of violations detected and the measures taken in response. The Committee notes, however, that these reports do not contain the statistical information required in accordance with Article 21 of the Convention. In particular, the Government indicates that information on workplaces liable to inspection can be collected through the systematic inspection of enterprises. The Government also indicates that the labour inspection reports will soon be published on the website of the Ministry of Labour and Public Service. While noting the Government's efforts to transmit an annual inspection report in accordance with Article 20 of the Convention, the Committee encourages the Government to adopt all the necessary measures to ensure that all the information required by Article 21 of the Convention is collected and published in the annual labour inspection report.

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1971)

Previous comment on Convention No. 81

Previous comment on Convention No. 129

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of the ratified Conventions on labour inspection, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 81 (labour inspection) and 129 (labour inspection in agriculture) together.

Articles 6 and 10 of Convention No. 81 and Articles 8 and 14 of Convention No. 129. Status and conditions of service of labour inspectors and number of labour inspectors. The Committee previously noted from the annual report of the Labour and Occupational Safety and Health Department (LOSHD) that, due to resignations or non-renewal of contracts, the number of labour inspection staff significantly decreased, and that it was not possible to find suitable candidates to fill the vacant positions. The Committee further recalled its earlier observation, according to which the salary of labour inspectors was less than half that of tax inspectors and approximately half that of National Insurance Scheme Inspectors. The Government indicates that, in 2021, the Ministry of Labour filled all the vacancies for labour officers and that promotion from labour officer to senior labour officer is possible and is based on performance. The Government indicates that a total of 12 labour officers and nine occupational safety and health (OSH) officers were hired in 2021. The Committee notes the Government's indication that salary scales have not been revised, but are comparable with those in the public service. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the total number of labour inspectors and to indicate the number of new recruitments and promotions of incumbent staff. It also requests the Government to provide details on the salary scale and career stability of labour inspectors and to provide a comparison in relation to those of other similar categories of public officials, specifically including tax inspectors and National Insurance Scheme Inspectors.

Articles 20 and 21 of Convention No. 81 and Articles 25, 26 and 27 of Convention No. 129. Annual labour inspection reports. Concerning the Committee's previous comment on the establishment of a register of workplaces liable to inspection and the number of workers employed therein, the Government indicates in its report that there is a requirement for industrial workplaces to register with the Ministry of Labour on a yearly basis by, for example, indicating the number of workers being employed. The Government notes, however, that not all industrial establishments are registering with the Ministry and that efforts are being made to ensure that this registration takes place. The Government indicates that employers are informed that the failure to register with the Ministry of Labour is a breach of the OSH Act and that legal actions may be instituted against them. For the years 2020 and 2021, a total of 424 workplaces were registered, mainly for businesses located in Region 4. The Government notes that a strategy is being designed to establish a similar system in other regions to facilitate the registration process. The Committee notes the Government's indication that ILO technical assistance would be welcomed to establish a recording system to facilitate the registration of workplaces. The Committee notes that no labour inspection report was transmitted to the ILO and that the Government report contains limited information on the activities of labour inspectors for 2021, such as the number of inspection visits, the number of charges filed and the number of non-fatal occupational accidents in the agricultural sector. Therefore, the Committee requests the Government to pursue its effort to ensure that the labour inspection report is compiled and published in accordance with Article 20 of Convention No. 81 and Articles 25 and 26 of Convention No. 129 and that such report contains information on all the subjects listed in Article 21 of Convention No. 81 and Article 27 of Convention No. 129. The Committee hopes that the technical assistance requested by the Government will be provided in the near future, with a view to ensuring the establishment of a register of enterprises and full compliance with Articles 20 and 21 of Convention No. 81 and Articles 25, 26 and 27 of Convention No. 129.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Haiti

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1952)

The Committee notes the observations of the Confederation of Haitian Workers (CTH) and the Confederation of Public and Private Sector Workers (CTSP) received on 2nd of November 2022. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

The Committee notes with concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee notes the observations of the Confederation of Public and Private Sector Workers (CTSP) received on 1 September 2019, in which it reiterated its observations of 2016, 2017 and 2018 and adds that the situation has deteriorated.

Articles 3, 12, 13, 15, 16, 17 and 18 of the Convention. Discharge of primary duties of the labour inspectorate. Appropriate sanctions. In its previous comment, the Committee noted the Government's indications concerning the obstacles faced in applying the Convention in practice, particularly the inadequate numbers of labour inspectors, and requested the Government to supply detailed information together with statistics on the planning and implementation of systematic inspections throughout the country, including in the export processing zones, and also their results. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government concerning the planning and implementation of inspection visits in two of the ten departments in the country in several activity sectors, including: (i) in the western department: 64 inspections (32 initial inspections and 32 catch-up inspections) conducted in 2017; 16 inspections (11 of which in the textile industry), 31 unannounced inspection visits in enterprises and 24 investigations, conducted in 2018; and 42 visits planned and ten advice services carried out in 2019; and (ii) in the north-eastern department, ten initial inspections and ten follow-up inspections were conducted in 2018. The Government indicates that the main objective of labour inspection over this period has been redressing the inconformity identified, rather than imposing penalties. The Committee also notes that the CTSP in its observations indicates that inspectors do not provide technical advice to workers and employers, but limit themselves to calculating the statutory benefits due in disputes between employers and workers. The CTSP also indicates that there are no statistics on labour inspection in the country; to its knowledge, there is no planning or implementation of systematic inspections throughout the country; and, in practice, labour inspection was carried out only in the textile industry. While duly noting the progress achieved since 2017 by the labour inspectorate in the country, particularly concerning the planning and implementation of visits in two of the ten departments in the country, the Committee requests the Government to strengthen its efforts to progressively expand the planning and conducting of inspection visits to all regions and all economic sectors of the country. The Committee also requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken in this regard, including the statistics concerning the number of inspections planned and conducted, disaggregated by sector, along with details of the results of these visits, including the warnings issues, legal procedures brought or recommended, and penalties imposed and applied. The Committee also requests the Government to ensure that, during their inspection visits, the inspectors perform their primary functions in conformity with Article 3 of the Convention.

Articles 6, 10 and 11. Human and material resources available to the labour inspectorate. The Committee notes the Government's indication in reply to its previous comments that: (i) between 2014 and 2017, thanks to the project to build the capacities of the Ministry of Social Affairs and Labour (ILO/MAST), piloted by the ILO, a team was established of 20 officials, 12 of whom are inspectors in the field and eight are trainers; (ii) in 2018, means of transport (six motorcycles and a car) were provided to certain regional MAST offices and that efforts are envisaged to equip all inspection services with the means necessary to guarantee labour inspection in workplaces; and (iii) it planned to upwardly revise the salaries of labour inspectors in the same way as all other inspectors of the public administration. The Committee notes the CTSP's observations, according to which the Government has not made an effort to change the status of labour inspectors in order to provide them with better employment conditions, such as a decent salary, a guarantee of productive employment and social advantages, which could jeopardize the independence of inspectors. The Committee requests the Government to pursue its efforts towards progressively increasing the number of inspectors and the material means placed at their disposal to enable them to effectively discharge the functions of the inspection services. The Committee also requests the Government to take the necessary measures to improve the conditions of service of the inspectors, including increasing their remuneration. In this regard, it requests the Government to provide information on the salary scales and labour inspectors' career prospects, compared with public servants who carry out similar functions within other government services, such as tax inspectors and the police.

Articles 6, 7(1) and Article 15(a). Recruitment of inspectors. Prohibition from having any direct or indirect interest in the undertakings. In its previous comment, the Committee noted that, in its observations, the CTSP indicated that recruitment of labour inspectors was carried out on the basis of clientelism. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, to ensure full application of sections 47 to 75 of the Decree of 17 May 2005, revising the general public service regulations, which regulate the recruitment procedure of public service agents, including labour inspectors, an administrative structure has been established for this purpose, entitled the Office for Human Resources Management (OMRH). The Committee also notes that the CTSP reiterated in 2019 its previous observations on this matter and indicated the further deterioration of the labour inspectorate's independence vis-à-vis employers. The Committee requests the Government to ensure that labour inspectors are recruited with sole regard to their qualifications for the performance of their duties and that their status and conditions of service are such that they are independent of changes of government and of improper external influences in conformity with Articles 6 and 7(1) of the Convention. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the composition of the OMRH as well as on its prerogatives.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Hungary

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1994)

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1994)

Previous comment

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of ratified Conventions on labour inspection, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 81 (labour inspection) and 129 (labour inspection in agriculture) together.

Article 3(1) and (2) of Convention No. 81 and Article 6(1) and (3) of Convention No. 129. Additional functions entrusted to labour inspectors. The Committee notes that the Labour Inspection Act, which entrusted labour inspectors, among other things, with the control of the work and residence permits of foreign workers, and the notification to the immigration police of any decision concerning the infringement of the provisions on the employment of foreign workers, has been repealed. The Committee notes that the functions entrusted to labour inspectors are now defined in the Employment Supervision Act and the Decree No. 115/2021. Under this Decree, the employment supervision authority, in the context of the control of regularity of employment, is tasked to regulate and control the work permit of third-country nationals. The Government indicates that, as of 1 March 2021, section 10(2) of the Employment Supervision Act introduced a new rule to ensure further protection of employees' rights. If the employer fails to meet its reporting obligation related to the establishment of a legal relationship involving employment, the employment supervisory authority determines the existence of a legal relationship involving employment from the 30th day calculated retroactively from the start of the infringement, unless it is established during the administrative procedure, that failure to report employment exceeded thirty days. The Committee also notes that according to section 15 of the Decree No. 115/2021, if the employment supervisory authority establishes a violation of the legislation concerning the employment of a third-country national, it shall send its final decision to the immigration enforcement authority. The Committee notes that the proportion of workers in an irregular situation employed in agriculture increased noticeably from 2018 to 2020. Out of 5,267 employees checked in 2018, 1,065 were found to be in an irregular situation (20.22 per cent), while in 2020, out of the 3,613 employees checked, 859 were found to be in an irregular situation (23.78 per cent). The Committee notes that the Government does not provide information as to the number of cases in which such workers have been granted their due rights. Regarding the manner in which it is ensured that labour inspectors treat as absolutely confidential the source of any complaint bringing to their notice a defect or breach of legal provisions, the Committee takes note of the provisions of the Act CLXV of 2013 on complaints and whistleblowing, the Employment Supervision Act, and the Code of General Administrative Procedure which set out rules relating to the confidential processing of data. The Committee once again requests the Government to take measures to ensure that, in accordance with Article 3(2) of Convention No. 81 and Article 6(3) of Convention No. 129, the additional functions assigned to labour inspectors do not interfere with the main objective of labour inspectors to ensure the protection of workers. In that regard, the Committee requests that the Government provide information on the proportion of labour inspectors' time that is spent on functions related to control of regularity of employment, including work permit regulation for third party nationals. In addition, the Committee requests the Government to provide further information on the manner in which the labour inspectorate discharges its primary duties in ensuring the enforcement of employers' obligations with regard to the statutory rights of workers found to be in an irregular situation (such as the payment of wages and any other benefits owed for the period of their effective employment relationship), especially in the context of the possibility of retroactive determination of the existence of a legal relationship provided for in the legislation. Noting the increased proportion of irregular workers employed particularly in the agricultural sector, the Committee reiterates its request that the Government provide specific information on the number of cases in which workers found to be in an irregular situation have been granted their due rights, such as the payment of outstanding wages or social security benefits.

Articles 10 and 16 of Convention No. 81 and Articles 14 and 21 of Convention No. 129. Number of labour inspectors and effectiveness of the labour inspection system. The Committee notes that the number of labour inspectors continued to decrease, from 368 in 2017 to 300 in 2021. At the same time the number of inspections conducted and violations detected also continued to decrease, from 14,298 inspections and 10,407 cases of irregularities in 2018 to 9,462 inspections and 6,649 cases of irregularities in 2020, and to 2,523 inspections and to 1,791 cases of irregularities in the first half of 2021. The Government indicates that the decline in the number of inspections in the years 2020 and 2021 are also attributable to consequences of the COVID-19 pandemic, reporting that employers suspended or reduced certain activities, and a substantial share of capacities of the occupational safety authority was allocated to investigation of suspected cases of occupational disease related to COVID-19. The Committee notes that the Government report and the labour inspection reports do not include statistics on accidents and diseases. Noting the continuing decline in the number of inspectors as well as the decrease in the number of inspections and detected violations over a four-year period, the Committee once again requests that the Government take the necessary measures to ensure that the number of labour inspections are adequate to ensure the effective protection of workers. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide statistical information on the number of labour inspectors, inspection visits, violations detected and penalties imposed. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of occupational accidents and diseases.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

India

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1949)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) and by the Indian Central Trade Unions (ICTUs), both received on 1 September 2022, as well as the Government's reply to the latter. The Committee also notes that the Government had provided written information, on a voluntary basis, in its submission of 20 May 2021 in connection with the proceedings of the Committee on the Application of Standards (CAS).

Furthermore, the Committee notes that, in reply to the points raised in previous ITUC observations, the Government indicates that the ordinances amending the labour law, which were adopted by some of the states in 2020 in response to COVID-19, did not enter into force as the central Government, which has concurrent legislative competencies on labour matters, did not concur with any of them. With regard to the executive order by the Madhya Pradesh Government, which exempted the application of several provisions of the Factories Act, the Government informs that the order had a limited validity of three months and was not extended. In addition, the Committee welcomes the information that in the case of Gujarat, the decision to increase overtime hours from 8 hours to 12 hours a day, without payment of overtime, was struck down by the Supreme Court of India.

With regard to the direct contacts mission requested by the CAS in 2019, the Committee notes that in the context of the COVID-19 pandemic, the Government organized a series of digital technical meetings with the Office to address the issues raised in the CAS and in the Committee's observations. The meetings were attended by senior representatives of the Government and the management of the Standards Department. The Committee also notes that in its observations, ITUC calls on the Government to accept a direct contacts mission of the ILO to assess the implementation of Convention No. 81 in law and in practice and to provide the necessary technical assistance.

Articles 2 and 4 of the Convention. Labour inspection in Special Economic Zones (SEZs). The Committee notes the observations by the ITUC and the ICTUs expressing continuing concern about a lack of effective labour inspection, with continuous violations in the SEZs. ITUC also expresses concerns over the fact that inspections are being carried out by development commissioners, who also have a responsibility to promote investment in the SEZs. Moreover, the ICTUs indicate that trade unions are restricted in entering the SEZs and filing complaints, and that they are not informed of inspections conducted in these zones.

The Committee also notes the indication by the Government that the powers of labour inspectors in SEZs have been delegated to development commissioners merely due to administrative difficulties, as some SEZs have jurisdiction over more than one state. The Committee further notes the information provided by the Government that the current administrative arrangements in SEZs do not impede the conduct of independent inspections and that the implementation of safety provisions related to factories still rests with specialized labour inspectors. Furthermore, the Committee notes the information that, according to office memoranda issued in May 2019 and June 2021 by the Ministry of Labour, the SEZs' development commissioners have been advised that labour inspections should take place without prior notice. Finally, the Committee notes the Government's indication, in response to the Committee's request for statistical data concerning the conduct of inspections in the SEZs, that in light of disruptions during the COVID-19 pandemic the requisite information will be made available after resumption of normalcy in industries.

Welcoming the information already provided and acknowledging the difficulties regarding the generation of meaningful data for the period 2020–21, in light of the COVID-19 pandemic, the Committee requests the Government to provide in its next report detailed statistical information on the number of labour inspectors responsible for inspections in these zones, the number of inspection visits (indicating the inspections conducted by labour inspectors and by development commissioners), the number and nature of offences reported and the number of penalties and amount of fines imposed, in addition to information on criminal prosecutions, if any. It also requests the Government to indicate in which SEZs inspection has been delegated to development commissioners, and how often inspections carried out by development commissioners take place without notice. Finally, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the number and nature of any complaints filed with respect to labour inspection in the SEZs, and whether trade unions have access to the SEZs where complaints have been filed and where they have not been.

Articles 4, 20 and 21. Availability of statistical information on the activities of the labour inspection services at the central and state levels. Availability of statistics in specific sectors. The Committee notes that in reply to the Committee's request for annual labour inspection reports, the Government refers to the annual reports of the Ministry of Labour and Employment published on its website, which contain statistical information on inspection activities at the central level (including the number of labour inspections, the number of irregularities detected, the number of prosecutions and convictions, as well as the number of accidents in mines). The Committee also notes the information provided by the Government on the development of the Shram Suvidha web portal at the Ministry of Labour and Employment, which is to facilitate reporting and submission of returns, and the Government's broader efforts to expand and improve the registration of workplaces through the Employees Provident Fund Organization (EPFO) website, in addition to efforts undertaken for the registration of workers in the informal sector, through the e-Shram portal. At the same time, the Committee notes the observations made by ITUC and the ICTUs that the statistical data provided does not allow for an assessment of the effective operation of the labour inspection services. The Committee also notes the Government's reply to these observations, with additional information on the digital initiative taken by the Government to facilitate reporting of inspections and augment transparency. Furthermore, the Committee notes the Government's indication that it is actively undertaking an All India Survey on migrant workers, domestic workers and transport sector workers, which is to inform the development of policies for the welfare of those workers.

The Committee requests the Government to pursue its efforts to ensure that the central authority transmits to the ILO annual reports on labour inspection activities containing all the information required by Article 21. The Committee encourages the Government to continue its efforts towards the registration of workplaces and the improvement of its data collection system in all sectors, and requests that the Government keep the Committee updated on progress made in this regard. Further, the Committee requests the Government to indicate in what specific ways the data generated by its new digital initiatives are used by the labour inspection services for the planning of inspections.

Articles 10 and 11. Material means and human resources. The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report, that sufficient resources have been at the disposal of Central Labour Inspection agencies and State Governments, including adequate transport facilities or allowances, and that facilities like mobiles and laptops are being provided to inspection personnel by the respective state governments. However, the Committee also notes the continuing concern expressed by ITUC, in its observations, that the human and material resources of the labour inspectorate remain inadequate. The Committee requests the Government to provide updated information on the number of labour inspectors and more concrete information on the material resources and transport facilities of the labour inspection services.

Articles 12 and 17. Free initiative of labour inspectors to enter workplaces without prior notice, and discretion to initiate legal proceedings without previous warning. The Committee notes the Government's response to the Committee's request for information as well as the concerns expressed by ITUC and the ICTUs in relation to certain provisions in the occupational safety and health (OSH) and Working Conditions Code of particular relevance to labour inspection, including the use of the term 'inspector cum facilitator' instead of 'inspector', which had been opposed by the central trade unions, and the distinction between 'inspections' and 'surveys', as referred to in the Codes. With regard to the term 'inspector cum facilitator', the Government explains that the addition of the word 'facilitator' points to efforts to strengthen the rights of workers by extending advice and support regarding compliance with various provisions of the Code. Regarding the legal provisions on the prior announcement of visits related to 'surveys', the Government explains that section 20 of the OSH and Working Conditions Code dealing with 'surveys' does not relate to inspections, but rather aims at allowing the government to conduct examinations of facilities and the testing of plant and machinery, outside the inspection system. Finally, in response to the concern expressed by the ICTUs that the web-based randomized inspections referred to in sections 34 and 37 of the OSH and Working Conditions Code may confine inspections to a randomly computer-generated list, the Government indicates that the web-based allocation of inspections does not impede the powers of labour inspectors to conduct free and independent inspections, based on the requisite intelligence. More broadly, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the recently introduced labour Codes do not compromise the powers of inspectors and that all inspections carried out by Central government are unannounced. The Government indicates that the OSH and Working Conditions Code does not envisage any restriction to the powers of labour inspectors to enter freely and without prior notice, at any hours of the day or night, any workplace liable to inspection, and that any guideline framed under the Code on Wages will not include instructions which are in violation of Article 12(1)(a) of Convention No. 81. The Committee notes nonetheless that the Government did not provide an answer to the question related to section 110 of the OSH and Working Conditions Code, according to which prosecution proceedings against an employer for any offence shall not be initiated by inspectors-cum-facilitators before an opportunity is given to the employer concerned to comply with relevant provisions of the Code within a period of thirty days from the date of notice, except for the case of an accident or a violation of the same nature repeated within a period of three years from the date on which the first violation was committed.

The Committee further notes that the Code on Wages provides that inspectors-cum-facilitators shall, before the initiation of prosecution for an offence, give employers an opportunity to comply with the provisions of the Code within a certain time limit (section 54(3)).

The Committee recalls that under Article 17 of the Convention, with certain exceptions, persons who violate or neglect to observe legal provisions enforceable by labour inspectors shall be liable to prompt legal proceedings without previous warning, and that it must be left to the discretion of labour inspectors to give a warning or advice instead of instituting or recommending proceedings.

The Committee requests that the Government take the necessary measures to ensure that labour inspectors are able to initiate legal proceedings without previous warning, in conformity with Article 17 of the Convention. The Committee also requests the Government to transmit to the Committee examples of guidelines framed under the Code on Wages, as cited above, and examples of instances when inspectors-cum-facilitators have delayed or deferred inspections of establishments as well as examples when they have deferred initiation of prosecutions. Noting the Government's explanation regarding limitations on meaningful data collection over the past two years, due to the COVID-19 pandemic, the Committee requests that the Government provide detailed information in its next report on the number and nature of offences reported, the number of penalties and amount of fines imposed, and the criminal prosecutions initiated, if any.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 2004)

Previous comment

Articles 1, 4, 10 and 11 of the Convention. Impact of decentralization on the effective functioning of the labour inspection system. Number of labour inspectors and material means placed at their disposal. The Government indicates in its report that the Ministry of Manpower has a policy on increasing the number of labour inspectors, based on the Minister of Manpower Regulation No. 4 of 2017. It adds that in 2020, 1,694 labour inspectors (1,169 men and 525 women) were employed across 34 provinces in the country, with the district of East Java employing most labour inspectors (182). The Committee notes that this represents an increase in the number of inspectors in comparison to 2018 when 1,574 inspectors were reported but that this number is still lower than the 1,927 inspectors reported in 2016. With respect to the improvement of facilities and infrastructure, the Government indicates that it is encouraging local governments to allocate their regional funds for labour inspection facilities and infrastructure in their respective regions. The Committee notes that, in 2020, the Labour Inspection Committee made recommendations to the Ministry of Manpower in order to accelerate labour inspection reforms, to initiate centralized implementation of labour inspection, and to provide facilities and infrastructure that meet health standards and protocols that allow labour inspectors to carry out their duties and functions. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that labour inspectors are appointed in sufficient numbers, in accordance with Article 10 of the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information on the total number of appointed labour inspectors (disaggregated by gender), and the allocation of resources to labour inspection officers by the provincial and city/district levels of government. The Committee also requests the Government to provide detailed information on the measures taken to follow up with respect to the recommendations of the Labour Inspection Committee concerning labour inspection reforms, centralized implementation of labour inspection, and improvement of conditions of work of labour inspectors.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1952)

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1981)

Previous comment

Article 3(1) and (2) of Convention No. 81 and Article 6(1) and (3) of Convention No. 129. Additional functions entrusted to labour inspectors related to immigration. The Committee previously noted the Government's indication on the actions taken by labour inspectors regarding the regularization of employment relationship of migrant workers in an irregular situation, as well as the related rights granted to them. The Committee also noted that inspection personnel shall notify the public security authorities of the presence of any irregular migrant workers, as "illegal entry to and residence in the State territory" remains a criminal offence.

The Committee notes that, according to the report of the Government, when inspections reveal failures to comply with contractual obligations, therefore creating financial credits for workers, the labour inspectors may, through a certified notice of findings, ensure the recovery of the credits (wages, social security, etc.) of the concerned workers, including foreign workers without regular residence permit. The Government indicates however, that the current system of collection of statistical data only allows for an overview of the total figures in this regard, without specific reference to workers without residence permit.

In reply to the previous Committee's comment, the Government also indicates that the current system for monitoring results of inspection activities by the National Labour Inspectorate's (INL) regional offices identifies the number of migrant workers without work permits encountered in the course of inspections (778 in 2020 and 739 in 2021), but does not record data specific to the delivery to those workers of the information sheet, introduced by the Interministerial Decree of 2007 and implementing section 1(3) of Legislative Decree No. 109/2012.

The Committee also notes that, pursuant to sections 18 and 22 (12-quater) of Legislative Decree No. 286/1998, residence permits may be granted to concerned workers in "special cases", for reasons of social protection and in cases of particular exploitation. The Committee notes that for granting such permit, the irregular migrant worker in an exploitative situation is required to file a complaint and cooperate in the criminal proceedings against the employer. The Committee also notes that according to section 22 (12-sexies) of the same Decree, this residence permit allows for work to be carried out and can be converted, upon expiry, into a residence permit for employment or self-employment. The Government indicates that this special residence permit is a useful tool to encourage migrant workers in an irregular situation to cooperate with inspection services, without fearing negative repercussions, such as losing their jobs or being deported. The Government also refers to inspection activities carried out within the three-year Plan against exploitation and gangmasters in Agriculture (2020–22), through two projects financed respectively by the European Commission (SU.PR.EME Italia) and the Ministry of Labour and Social Policy (A.L.T. Caporalato!). It states that the inter-provincial inspection task forces, the multi-agency working method and the collaboration between public and private entities contribute to improving the situation of migrant workers.

The Committee further notes that, as previously reported, the Government indicates that labour inspectors shall communicate the presence of migrant workers in an irregular situation to the public security authority and that illegal entry and stay in the country and the employment of workers without permit are defined as offences by sections 10bis and 22(12) of Legislative Decree No. 286/1998. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of migrant workers in an irregular situation detected by labour inspectors and on the role of labour inspectors in informing migrant workers about their labour rights and in enforcing those rights, including: (i) improved data on the recovery of wage and social security credits specific to foreign workers without a residence permit; and (ii) the number of “special case” residence permits granted and a result of cooperation by those individuals with inspection services. It also requests the Government to provide information on the time and resources of the labour inspectorate that are allocated to the task of verifying the legality of the immigration status in practice as a proportion of inspectors’ overall time and resources.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1962)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Jamaica Confederation of Trade Unions (JCTU) and the Jamaica Employers Federation (JEF), received on 1 January 2022.

Article 12(1)(a) and (c)(ii) of the Convention. Unannounced visits. Production of documents. The Committee notes the Government’s indication, in response to the Committee’s previous request concerning measures to give effect to Article 12(1)(a) and (c)(ii), that in accordance with the requirements under section 13(2)(b) of The Charter of Fundamental Rights and Freedoms (Constitutional Amendment) Act, 2011, any power of entry of labour officers should not prejudice the rights and freedoms of others. The Government adds that, in this connection, legislation requiring the power of entry by labour inspectors has to have provisions requiring reasonable notice before a proposed entry, except in circumstances where the officer has a search warrant.

The Committee also notes that the JEF is in agreement with the Government’s response and is particularly concerned about the proposed ability to enter premises at any time of the day or night. In addition, the Committee notes that, according to JCTU, in many reported circumstances, including in the construction industry, confining labour inspectors to giving notice before a proposed entry invalidates the intent of the inspection, as it facilitates the employer to artificially make adjustments or instruct responses that would affect the inspector’s assessment. The Committee further notes that, according to JCTU, similar powers of “unannounced entry” are afforded to other arms of Government in situations where this is deemed necessary. The Committee emphasizes that the conditions for the exercise of the right of free entry to workplaces set out in the Convention are intended to enable inspectors to carry out inspections of workplaces in order to enforce legal provisions relating to conditions of work. On this understanding, unannounced visits enable the inspector to enter work premises without warning the employer, especially in cases where the employer may be expected to attempt to conceal a violation by changing the usual conditions of work, preventing a witness from being present or making it impossible to carry out an inspection (see the 2006 General Survey on labour inspection, paragraph 263). The Committee therefore requests the Government to take concrete measures, including in the context of a possible adoption of the new draft OSH Bill, to ensure, in accordance with Article 12(1)(a) and (c)(ii) of the Convention, that labour inspectors provided with proper credentials are empowered to enter freely and without previous notice at any hour of the day or night any workplace liable to inspection, and to require the production of any books, registers or other documents the keeping of which is prescribed by national laws or regulations relating to conditions of work, in order to see that they are in conformity with the legal provisions, and to copy such documents or make extracts from them.

Article 13(2)(b). Measures with immediate executory force in the event of imminent danger to the health or safety of the workers. The Committee notes that the Government does not provide further information on this point. It notes that according to the information contained in the annual report of the Ministry of Labour and Social Security (MLSS) for 2017-2018, while the main operational activities of the Occupational Safety and Health Department (OSHD) focus on the administration of the Factories Act, 1943 and associated Regulations, other entities, including governmental organizations, are requesting the services of the OSHD to develop programmes and provide OSH auditing services. The Committee once again requests the Government to take prompt measures, including in the context of the drafting of the new OSH Bill, to ensure that labour inspectors are empowered to order measures with immediate executory force to eliminate imminent danger to the safety and health of workers in all industrial workplaces, and to provide information on the measures taken in this respect. It also requests the Government to provide statistical information on the preventive measures taken by labour inspectors with immediate executory force, in application of Article 13(2)(b) of the Convention.

Japan

Previous comments: observation and direct request

The Committee notes the observations of the Japanese Trade Union Confederation (JTUC-RENGO) communicated with the Government's report. It also notes the observations of the National Confederation of Trade Unions (ZENROREN), received on 31 August 2021.

Articles 3(1)(b) and 13 of the Convention. Preventive measures for workers engaged in decommissioning work and decontamination work with radioactive materials. The Committee takes note of the detailed information provided by the Government on the number of inspections carried out with respect to business operators engaged in decommissioning and decontamination work by the Fukushima Labour Bureau by 2019, and the number and nature of violations detected. In 2018 and 2019, the number of inspections for business operators increased in both decommissioning work (from 290 business operators to 325) and decontamination work (from 267 business operators to 338), while the percentage of those operators where violations were detected increased from approximately 53 per cent to 58 per cent in decommissioning work and increased from approximately 61 per cent to 67 per cent in decontamination work. The Committee notes the Government's additional comment that figures for 2018 and 2019 on decontamination work are not strictly comparable.

The Committee further notes that the number of inspections of business operators engaged in decontamination works has decreased substantially over a longer period (from 1299 in 2015 to 338 in 2019). In addition, since the earthquake in 2011, five business operators engaged in decommissioning work and 17 business operators engaged in decontamination work have been referred to the Public Prosecutor's Office by the Fukushima Labour Bureau. Such cases included a failure to provide notification without delay of industrial accidents to the director of the competent Labour Standards Inspection Office, and a case where the operator exposed workers to machine-related dangers in the decontamination work. The Government provides information on the causes of the violations and the details of the guidance given to the business operators engaged in decommissioning work at Fukushima Daiichi Nuclear Power Station and decontamination work in the Fukushima Prefecture. The Government indicates that, regarding the health and safety-related measures at workplaces, the percentage of violation is low in workplaces engaged in decommissioning work and higher in workplaces engaged in decontamination work. The Government provides guidance to prevent similar violations from occurring once corrective action has been confirmed, noting that such guidance is an important measure to prevent exposure to ionizing radiation. With regard to health management-related violations, a certain number of workplaces engaged in decommissioning and decontamination work were found to be in violation of the requirement to monitor working hours in order to provide interview-guidance by doctors, an important measure to ensure the health of workers who work long hours. In addition, in many cases the submission of reports of ionizing radiation medical examination of radiation workers to the director of the Competent Labour Standards Inspection Office was neglected. The Government provides guidance to ensure that both requirements are met. With regard to labour management, the Government indicates that since there are many violations due to lack of understanding of laws and regulations, the contents of laws and regulations are carefully explained during supervision and guidance. The Government will continue to provide necessary guidance to business operators engaged in decommissioning work to ensure that safety and health measures are implemented in accordance with related laws and regulations. In addition, necessary guidance will be provided to intermediate storage facilities and operators carrying contaminated soil, with a focus on measures to prevent industrial accidents associated with work, as well as to operators carrying out decontamination work in Designated Site Areas for Reconstruction and Revitalization. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the causes of violations and the measures taken to secure the enforcement of applicable labour standards in decommissioning and decontamination works, the number of inspections undertaken, as well as the number and nature of violations detected in these areas. It also requests the Government to provide information on the reasons for the substantial decrease of inspections of business operators engaged in decontamination works from 2015 to 2019. The Committee reiterates its request that the Government provide information on the number of anonymous complaints and how often these result in detection of violations. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the outcome of the five cases related to decommissioning work and the 17 cases relating to decontamination work referred to the Public Prosecutor's Office, including the penalties applied.

Articles 10 and 16. Sufficient number of labour inspectors. In reply to the Committee's previous request, the Government indicates that, as of March 2021, the number of labour standards inspectors increased by 90 from March 2017 to March 2021. The Committee notes that as of March 2021 there were 3,018 inspectors in total with 238 inspectors having been appointed in 2020 including 72 female inspectors. In this respect, the Government indicates that it aims to make the best efforts to ensure the number necessary to strengthen the Labour Standards Inspection Offices. The JTUC-RENGO highlights the importance of improving the system of labour standards supervisory organizations, including by increasing the number of labour standard inspectors even further to achieve continuous and active implementation of labour standards-related laws and regulations, including strict supervision and guidance to ensure compliance with relevant regulations restricting overtime work. The Committee notes that, although the Government reports an increase of labour standards inspectors, ZENROREN highlights the need for drastic expansion and improvement of the structure of labour administration's set-up involved in inspections, including by increasing the number of inspectors, technical officers and clerical workers in the office in order to ensure and improve the inspectors' working conditions. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the specific measures taken to ensure that the number of labour inspectors is sufficient to secure the effective discharge of the duties of the inspectorate related to labour standards laws and regulations as well as other laws, and to continue to provide information on the number of labour inspectors, disaggregated by both prefecture and gender.

Article 18. Safety of labour inspectors. Obstruction in the performance of their duties. The Committee notes that according to ZENROREN, an opinion survey conducted by the All-Labour Ministry Workers' Union (Zenrodo) on labour inspectors showed that more than half of the labour inspectors in Japan have at some point felt threatened or have experienced physical violence or intimidation. The respondents in their comments identified a series of incidents of violence most of which occur during inspection visits of business offices on short notice rather than when meeting business owners in the Labour Standards Inspection Office. ZENROREN is of the opinion that when inspectors feel threatened or suffer physical violence, they are obstructed in the performance of their duties. It indicates, that, while in the past, inspection was conducted in principle by one inspector alone, from 2019, in view of the need to ensure inspectors' safety and to train younger inspectors, inspection is performed in teams. It highlights however the difficulties arising from the fact that some inspection offices have fewer than ten (some even only two inspectors) which makes it very difficult to send more than one inspector to a business establishment at a time. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in relation to the observations related to violence, harassment and other external pressure faced by labour inspectors. It requests the Government to provide detailed information on cases of aggression against labour inspection staff and on the judicial follow-up to such situations, and also to provide details of penalties imposed under this Article in cases of obstruction of labour inspectors in the performance of their duties. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to ensure the safety of labour inspectors and the effective discharge of their duties in cases of obstruction.

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1979)

Previous comment on Convention No. 81

Previous comment on Convention No. 129

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of ratified Conventions on labour inspection, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 81 (labour inspection) and 129 (labour inspection in agriculture) together.

Articles 3(1), 4 and 5(b) of Convention No. 81 and Articles. 6(1), 7 and 13 of Convention No. 129. Structure of the labour inspection system, cooperation between inspection services and supervision and control by a central authority. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the absence of an individual or a department with oversight responsibility for the various inspection activities, as well as the limited cooperation between the two inspection systems under the Department of Labour (DOL) and the Department of Occupational Safety and Health (DOSH). In its report, the Government indicates that the two inspectorate services under the DOL and the DOSH were placed under a common oversight authority, the State Department of Labour, which is also the central authority for purposes of reporting. The Committee also notes that the Government refers to the development of more measures to centralise supervision and control of both departments but does not indicate whether the post of chief inspector has been established and filled. Therefore, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on additional measures taken toward the centralization of supervision and control of the two inspection systems, including the possibility of placing labour inspection under the responsibility of one chief inspector who would be responsible for the overall coordination of the Ministry of Labour's inspection services. In this respect, it requests the Government to indicate whether the post of chief inspector has been established and filled.

Articles 10, 11 and 16 of Convention No. 81 and Articles 14,15 and 21 of Convention No. 129. Lack of human and material resources and appropriate means of transport. Efficiency of inspections. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the resource constraints in budgetary allocation led to a lack of inspectorate staff, lack of material resources, including facilities, and lack of transport, which affected the efficient delivery of labour inspection services, including in the agricultural sector. It further noted that the civil service was undergoing a reform and that subsequently, understaffed and under-resourced departments would benefit from the deployment of personnel from overstaffed agencies. In its report, the Government indicates that it has put in place measures to boost institutional capacity of the inspectorates to enhance resource allocation and effective enforcement of laws. The Committee notes that 40 officers were employed by the Ministry at the entry level of its inspectorate service in both the DOL and the DOSH in 2017. It further notes that the inspectorate staff has designated authorized officers under section 35 of the Labour Institutions Act (powers of labour officer), but the Government does not indicate the number of the nominated officers and the time of their appointment. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the geographical distribution of the inspectorate staff to all 47 counties aims at ensuring adequate representation and coverage of all sectors. The Government indicates that the labour inspectorate staff are provided with operational offices fully equipped for administration purposes and for the effective performance of their duties. Furthermore, according to the Government, staff reimbursements are adequately provided on instances where the labour inspectors need to use their own funds for the performance of their duties. However, the Committee notes that due to continued funding problems, the challenge remains of inadequate transport, in terms of required vehicles that would allow for movement to the various vast regions of the country. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged, including within the framework of the civil service reform, to ensure that the number of labour inspectors is sufficient to secure the effective discharge of the duties of the inspectorate. It requests the Government to provide detailed information on the number of labour inspectors working for the DOL and the DOSH, indicating their years of experience, areas of specialization, and geographical distribution. Noting the funding constraints, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the steps taken or envisaged to ensure that the labour inspectorate is provided with the material resources and transport facilities necessary for the effective performance of their duties.

Previous comment

Articles 12, 16, 17 and 18 of the Convention. Limitations and restrictions of labour inspection. Effective enforcement of penalties for labour law provisions. 1. Moratorium on labour inspections. Further to its previous comments on this matter, the Committee takes due note that the moratorium on inspections has expired on 1 January 2022. In this regard, it notes that Government Decision No. 586 of 2018 on the introduction of a temporary ban on the inspection of economic entities was declared null and void by virtue of Resolution of the Cabinet of Ministers No. 9 of 14 January 2022 on the invalidation of certain decisions of the Cabinet of Ministers (section 1, Annex, paragraph 2836). It also notes that the annual reports on the work of the labour inspectorate covering the period 2019–20 provide detailed statistics on the number of inspection visits carried out during the reference period.

The Committee also notes that the labour inspection system has been reorganized as set out in the Regulations on the Service for Control and Supervision of Labour Legislation under the Ministry of Labour, Social Security and Migration, approved by Government Decision No. 317 of 17 December 2021. According to these Regulations, the Service for Control and Supervision of Labour Legislation is now the body authorized to perform the functions of state supervision and control of compliance with labour legislation (sections 1 and 10). The Committee observes that, according to section 11(7) of Law No. 72 of 2007 on the conduct of inspections in enterprises, in exceptional cases the Government has the right to introduce a temporary ban (moratorium) on conducting inspections in order to improve the economic situation. Recalling that a moratorium placed on labour inspection would substantially undermine the inherent functioning of the labour inspection system and would be contrary to the provisions of the Convention, the Committee urges the Government to take all necessary measures to amend the legislation and to ensure that no moratorium on labour inspections be placed in the future and that labour inspectors are able to undertake labour inspections as often and as thoroughly as is necessary to ensure the effective application of the legal provisions, in compliance with Article 16 of the Convention.

2. Other limitations on labour inspection. The Committee has repeatedly referred to the serious limitations on the powers of labour inspectors and on the undertaking of labour inspections set forth in Law No. 72 of 2007 on the conduct of inspections in enterprises. The Committee notes with deep concern that such limitations remain in force. It also notes the Government's indication concerning the provision of administrative penalties for violations of labour legislation contained in the Code of Offences, which was adopted on 28 October 2021 by Law No. 126. In this respect, it notes that sections 87 to 93 of this Code provide for fines for violations of the legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers while engaged in their work. The Committee notes that, despite the adoption of the Code of Offences, which penalizes violations to labour legislation, labour inspections continue to be hampered by the limitations established by Law No. 72 of 2007. Therefore, the effective enforcement of the penalties set out in sections 87 to 93 of the Code of Offences is also undermined.

Furthermore, the Committee notes with deep concern that the Government refers once again to its statements made in 2019, concerning the status quo of labour inspection in the country asserting that, under Law No. 72, the authorized state body may carry out unplanned on-site inspections only after the Ministry of Economy has given its consent, that this is the only form of inspection during which labour inspectors can check that employers comply with the requirements of labour legislation, and that if the organization has a qualified lawyer, any inspection with prior notice or limited to a review of documents provided by the employer has almost no chance of identifying actual breaches of labour legislation, even if they are serious.

Lastly, the Committee notes the information provided by the Government on the inventory and revision of laws carried out by the inter-agency expert group by virtue of Presidential Decree No. 26 of 8 February 2021 on the Conduct of an Inventory of the Legislation. With reference to its 2019 general observation on the labour inspection Conventions, the Committee urges the Government to bring its national legislation into full conformity with the Convention. Specifically, it requests the Government to take prompt measures to ensure that labour inspectors are empowered to make visits to workplaces liable to inspection without previous notice, in conformity with Article 12(1)(a) of the Convention, that they are able to undertake labour inspections as often and as thoroughly as is necessary to ensure the effective application of the legal provisions, in conformity with Article 16 of the Convention, and that they are able to initiate or recommend immediate legal proceedings without prior warning, where required, in conformity with Article 17 of the Convention.

In this connection, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in order to ensure the amendment of Law No. 72 of 2007 on the conduct of inspections in enterprises, including consideration given to this issue within the National Tripartite Commission and in the context of the inventory and revision of laws carried out by the inter-agency expert group. It further urges the Government to intensify its efforts to ensure the effective enforcement of penalties for violations of the legal provisions enforceable by labour inspectors as set out in the Code of Offences, in conformity with Article 18 of the Convention. In addition, the Committee requests the Government to provide statistics regarding the number of inspection visits undertaken by labour inspectors without previous notice, as compared to inspection visits undertaken with prior notice, as well as statistics on the number of penalties effectively enforced.

Article 13(2)(b). Measures with immediate executory force to ensure the safety and health of workers. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's reference to the inventory of policy frameworks, strategies, programmes and laws carried out by the inter-agency expert group by virtue of Presidential Decree No. 26 of 2021 on the conduct of an inventory of the legislation, as well as its indication that the public authorities are actively working to improve legislation, which will include revising existing laws. The Committee notes, however, that no concrete measures have yet been taken to empower labour inspectors to issue orders requiring measures with immediate executory force in case of imminent danger to the health and safety of workers. It also notes the information contained in the annual reports, according to which, in the period from 2018 to 2020, there were 75 fatal accidents. The Committee therefore urges the Government to intensify its efforts to bring the national legislation into conformity with Article 13(2)(b) of the Convention. In addition, it requests the Government to provide information on the number of orders requiring measures with immediate executory force issued by labour inspectors per year and to indicate the cause and outcome of such orders.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Lebanon

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1962)

Previous comment

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's overdue report on Convention No. 81 has not been received. In light of its urgent appeal launched to the Government in 2021, the Committee proceeds with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal.

Article 3(1) and (2) of the Convention. Primary functions and additional duties of labour inspectors.
1. Supervision of union matters. The Committee previously noted that, pursuant to section 2(c) of Decree No. 3273 of 26 June 2000, the labour inspectorate has the power to monitor vocational organizations and confederations at all levels in order to check whether the latter, in their operations, are exceeding the limits prescribed by law and by their rules of procedure and statutes. It recalls that for many years it had requested the Government to take steps to limit labour inspectors' intervention in internal trade union affairs. The Committee also noted the Government's reply in its report received in 2016 that the role of labour inspectors is limited to accessing union records, and only in cases where a union submits its final account or if a union council member files a complaint. The Committee nevertheless wishes to recall that, according to Article 3(1) of the Convention, the primary functions of the labour inspection system shall be to monitor and secure the conditions of work and the protection of workers while engaged in their work, and that in accordance with Article 3(2), any further duties which may be entrusted to labour inspectors shall not be such as to interfere with the effective discharge of their primary duties or to prejudice in any way the authority or impartiality of inspectors in their relations with employers and workers. In this respect, the Committee had expressed reservations in its 2006 General Survey on labour inspection, paragraph 80, regarding an excessively close supervision by labour inspectors of the activities of trade unions and employers' organizations, to the extent that it may amount to interference in these organizations' legitimate activities. The Committee urges the Government once more to take the necessary steps to ensure that the functions assigned to labour inspectors do not interfere with the main objective of labour inspection, which is to provide for the protection of workers in accordance with Article 3(1) of the Convention. In this respect, it urges the Government to ensure that any supervision of trade union activities is carried out only in relation to the protection of the rights of trade unions and their members and does not take the form of interference in their legitimate activities and internal affairs.

2. Work permits for migrant workers. While noting information in the 2022 follow-up Labour Force Survey for Lebanon concerning a possible out-migration of migrant workers, particularly domestic workers, from Lebanon since 2018, the Committee also notes indications provided by the ILO Decent Work Technical Support Team that the system for monitoring work permits through the labour inspectorate has remained unchanged in its essence. The Committee requests the Government to take measures to ensure that the functions assigned to labour inspectors to monitor work permits do not interfere with the main objective of labour inspection to secure the enforcement of legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers, as required under Article 3(1) of the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information on the time and resources spent on labour inspection activities related to the issuance, renewal, and inspection of work permits, compared to activities aiming at the enforcement of legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers.

Article 12(1) and (2). Right of inspectors to enter freely any workplace liable to inspection. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to amend Memorandum No. 68/2 of 2009, which requires prior authorization in writing for all unscheduled inspection visits, although according to section 6 of Decree No. 3273 of 2000 on Labour Inspection, labour inspectors shall have the authority to enter freely and without prior notice all enterprises under their supervision during hours of work at the enterprise. The Committee also noted the Government's indication in its report received in 2016 that written authorization is provided in order for an inspection to be carried out, and that inspections are carried out as part of an inspector's annual or monthly programme. In this regard, the Committee recalls once more Article 12 of the Convention, which provides that labour inspectors provided with proper credentials shall be empowered to enter freely and without previous notice at any hour of the day or night any workplace liable to inspection. It recalls that the requirement to obtain prior permission to undertake an inspection in all cases constitutes a restriction on the free initiative of inspectors to undertake an inspection, including where they have reason to believe that an undertaking is in violation of the legal provisions. The Committee urges the Government to take measures to amend Memorandum No. 68/2 of 2009 to ensure that labour inspectors provided with proper credentials are empowered to enter freely any workplace liable to inspection, in accordance with Article 12(1) of the Convention, and to provide copies of any texts or documents showing progress in this regard.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1994)

Previous comment

Article 3(1) and (2) of the Convention. Additional functions entrusted to labour inspectors. Labour inspection activities in the area of irregular work. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on the actions undertaken by the labour inspectorate and the judicial authorities to ensure the enforcement of employers' obligations with regard to the statutory rights of workers found, in the course of inspections, to be working irregularly. The Committee notes the Government's indication regarding a series of activities aiming at the prevention and control of illegal work, undeclared work, undeclared self-employment and violations of the procedure for employing third-country nationals. The Committee notes in this respect that in 2020, the state labour inspectorate (SLI) carried out 4,161 inspections focused on illegal work, which resulted in the detection of 1,794 workers who were working illegally. The Government indicates that in 2020 the SLI undertook a series of consultations with employers, workers and their representative organizations on the issue of illegal work, focusing on the activities of small and medium-sized enterprises and first-year entities. The Government also provides details on the inspections of entities in the areas of the highest risk of breaching the requirements of occupational safety and health and labour legislation and reports the establishment of inspection groups specialised in controlling illegal labour.

The Committee notes that the Government does not provide information on cases in which the statutory rights of workers found to be working irregularly have been reinstated. In addition, the Committee notes that section 56 of the Law on Employment provides for measures to be taken by labour inspectors in cases of illegal work. The Committee further notes that according to this section, when such cases concern foreign workers, the labour inspectors request the employer to terminate the labour relations and notify the immigration authorities. The Committee recalls that the function of verifying the legality of employment should have as its corollary the reinstatement of the statutory rights of all the workers if it is to be compatible with the objective of labour inspection, which is to protect the rights and interests of all workers and to improve their working conditions (see 2006 General Survey on labour inspection, paragraph 78). In this respect, the Committee also recalls that workers in a vulnerable situation may not be willing to cooperate with the labour inspection services if they fear negative consequences as a result of inspection activities (see 2017 General Survey on instruments concerning occupational safety and health, paragraph 452). The Committee requests the Government to take measures to ensure that the functions assigned to labour inspectors with regard to irregular work do not interfere with the main objective of labour inspectors to ensure the protection of workers in accordance with labour inspectors' primary duties as set forth in Article 3(1) of the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information on the time and resources that are allocated to the prevention and control of illegal or undeclared work as a proportion of inspectors' overall time and resources. It once again requests the Government to indicate how the SLI ensures the enforcement of employers' obligations with regard to the statutory rights of the workers found to be working irregularly, including migrant workers.

Madagascar

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1971)

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1971)

Previous comments: observation and direct request

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of ratified Conventions on labour inspection, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 81 (labour inspection) and 129 (labour inspection in agriculture) together.

The Committee notes the observations of the General Confederation of Workers' Unions of Madagascar (FISEMA) and the Trade Union Confederation of Malagasy Revolutionary Workers (FISEMARE), received on 1 September 2022.

Article 3(2) of Convention No. 81 and Article 6(3) of Convention No. 129. Additional duties of labour inspectors. Further to its previous comment, the Committee notes the Government's indication that labour inspectors are making efforts to discharge duties other than their primary duties. The Committee notes the observations of FISEMA in this regard that the predominance of mediation and conciliation activities within the labour inspection services is to the detriment of inspections in enterprise, thereby giving employers more power to act as they wish in matters of industrial relations and occupational safety and health standards. The Committee recalls that, in accordance with Article 3(2) of Convention No. 81 and Article 6(3) of Convention No. 129, any further duties entrusted to labour inspectors, including conciliation, should not be such as to interfere with the effective discharge of their primary duties or to prejudice in any way the authority and impartiality which are necessary to inspectors in their relations with employers and workers. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary steps without delay to ensure that, in accordance with Article 3(2) of Convention No. 81 and Article 6(3) of Convention No. 129, duties other than primary duties assigned to inspectors do not interfere with the performance of the latter. It also requests the Government to provide detailed information on the time and resources dedicated to conciliation and mediation activities carried out by the labour inspectors, by percentage of total time and resources that inspectors dedicate to the discharge of their primary duties.

Articles 6, 10 and 11 of Convention No. 81 and Articles 8, 14 and 15 of Convention No. 129. Status and conditions of service of labour inspectors and controllers. Resources at the disposal of the labour inspectorate. Further to its previous comment, the Committee notes that the Government indicates that the protocol agreement signed on 10 April 2015 between the Ministry of Economy and Finance and the Autonomous Trade Union of Labour Inspectors (SAIT) providing for a compensation award in connection with the duties of labour inspectors has no legal scope because the decree issuing the regulations on compensation has not been adopted. While noting the Government's indication that the draft review of the General Civil Service Regulations has been delayed because of the priority given to the fight against COVID-19, the Committee notes with regret that no information has been provided on the adoption of special regulations for labour inspectors and controllers as part of this review. The Government also indicates that it is endeavouring to maintain dialogue with the labour inspectors' union and that efforts are being made to improve their conditions of service by increasing the material resources available to them, in particular through the provision of work vehicles for the regional labour directorates, computer equipment and the construction of administrative buildings for use as offices. The Committee notes that the staff numbers in the labour inspectorate have risen from 128 labour inspectors in 2017 to 189 inspectors and 193 controllers on duty in 2021, and that four regional departments are now equipped with work vehicles, namely Analamanga, Atsinanana, Diana and Upper Matsiatra. In this regard, the Committee notes the observations of FISEMA that the labour inspection services in industry and trade still suffer from insufficient human and material resources, which affects their effectiveness. In addition, despite announcements by successive governments to establish a labour inspection system in the agricultural sector, no specific information or draft text has been received by the trade union organizations, while fundamental rights, social protection, freedom of association and equality of treatment and remuneration of agricultural workers are not fully guaranteed, as the majority of them work in the informal economy. Recalling that Article 6 of Convention No. 81 and Article 8 of Convention No. 129 provide that inspection staff shall be composed of public officials whose status and conditions of service assure them stability of employment and make them independent of changes of government and of improper external influences, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures, without delay, including the adoption of staff regulations specifically for labour inspectors and controllers in the context of the draft review of the General Civil Service Regulations. The Committee also requests the Government to continue to intensify its efforts to increase the resources at the disposal of labour inspectors and to provide information on the specific measures taken in this respect, including for inspection in the agricultural sector. It also requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of labour inspectors, resources and means of transport assigned to the labour inspection services.

Article 7(3) of Convention No. 81 and Article 9(3) of Convention No. 129. Training for labour inspectors. Further to its previous comment, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the General Labour Directorate has undertaken to organize training to strengthen the capacities of labour inspectors to ensure that inspection activities reach all current branches of activity. In this context, the introduction of a subject on inspection in the agricultural sector for labour inspectors in training at the National School of Administration of Madagascar (ENAM) is especially necessary. The Committee notes that under Order No. 10989/2021 on the opening of a direct competition and a vocational competition, the number of inspectors in training at ENAM has been doubled (from 25 to 50) to cover all activity sectors, including the agricultural sector. It also notes the subjects and the programme of the direct competition and the vocational competition, in the annex to the above-mentioned Order but notes, however, that the Government has not provided any information on further training of labour inspectors. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure further training for labour inspectors, and to provide information on the duration of the training, the number of participants and the subjects covered. It also requests the Government to intensify its efforts to provide labour inspectors with specialized agricultural training.

Articles 19, 20 and 21 of Convention No. 81 and Articles 25, 26 and 27 of Convention No. 129. Submission of periodic reports to the central inspection authority. Preparation, publication and transmission of the annual inspection report. Further to its previous comment, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the results of labour inspection activities and inspection reports are submitted periodically (quarterly and annually) to the central inspection authorities. The Committee notes the observations of FISEMA that the production of activity reports is still lacking, despite their previous observations in this respect. The Committee urges the Government to take all necessary measures to ensure the preparation and publication of an annual report on the work of the labour inspection services, in accordance with Article 20 of Convention No. 81 and Articles 25 and 26 of Convention No. 129, and to take the necessary steps to ensure that these reports contain information on all the subjects listed in Article 21 of Convention No. 81 and Article 27 of Convention No. 129.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1965)

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1988)

Previous comment

Articles 6, 10 and 16 of the Convention No. 81 and Articles 8, 14 and 21 of Convention No. 129. Numbers of labour inspectors and inspection visits. Conditions of employment. The Committee notes that in reply to its previous request concerning the decrease in the number of inspections, the Government indicates that the Department of Industrial Relations and Employment (DIER) carried out 1,022 inspections in 2019, 854 during 2020 and 1,107 between January and July 2021. The Committee also notes that with regard to its previous request concerning the condition of service of labour inspectors, the Government indicates that these conditions recently changed in order to retain staff by providing more opportunities for advancements. The Committee notes the Government's indication that there are currently ten inspectors and two overseeing managers within the DIER. The Committee notes that the staff composition of the DIER is the same as in 2019. The Committee also notes that according to the Government report, the inspectors of the Occupational Health and Safety Authority (OHSA) decreased from 14 to 12 from 2020 to 2021. The Committee requests the Government to provide details of the changes that have occurred in the conditions of service of labour inspectors and to indicate how such changes may serve to attract and retain a sufficient number of motivated staff. In this regard, the Committee requests comparative information on the remuneration scale and opportunities for advancement of labour inspectors in relation to other categories of government employees exercising similar functions, such as tax inspectors or police officers. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the reasons for the decrease in staff in the OHSA. In addition, the Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of labour inspectors working at the DIER and at the OHSA, as well as the number of inspections undertaken by these entities.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1958)

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1979)

Previous comment on Convention No. 81

Previous comment on Convention No. 129

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of the ratified Conventions on labour inspection, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 81 (labour inspection) and 129 (labour inspection in agriculture) together.

The Committee notes the observations of the Democratic Confederation of Labour (CDT) and the National Union of Labour in Morocco (UNTM), transmitted with the Government's reports in 2017 concerning both Conventions.

Article 3(1) and (2) of Convention No. 81 and Article 6(1) and (3) of Convention No. 129. Additional duties of labour inspectors. Further to its previous comment, the Committee notes that, according to the information contained in the annual labour inspection report in Morocco 2020 - 2021, labour inspectors play a very important role in the resolution of individual and collective disputes, under sections 532 and 551 of the Labour Code. In 2021, labour inspectors carried out 24,860 inspections compared to 33,362 in 2018. In addition, only 991 inspections were carried out in occupational safety and health, compared to 2,488 in 2018. However, labour inspectors examined 56,509 individual disputes and took measures to prevent the outbreak of 1,234 collective disputes in 2021. The UNTM indicates in its observations that the function of conciliator is performed to the detriment of law enforcement, and therefore tends to exacerbate the number of individual and collective labour disputes.

The Committee notes that the time spent by labour inspectors on conciliation may be to the detriment of the performance of their primary duties, especially when resources are limited. In this respect, the Committee recalls that, according to Article 3(2) of Convention No. 81 and Article 6(3) of Convention No. 129, other duties entrusted to labour inspectors should not interfere with the performance of their primary duties. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to remedy this situation and to ensure that, in accordance with Article 3(2) of Convention No. 81 and Article 6(3) of Convention No. 129, the additional functions of conciliation entrusted to labour inspectors do not interfere with the performance of their primary duties. In this respect, it requests the Government to continue to provide information on the time spent on the primary duties within the meaning of Article 3(1) of Convention No. 81 and Article 6(1) of Convention No. 129 in relation to the other functions of labour inspection.

Article 6 of Convention No. 81 and Article 8 of Convention No. 129. Independence of labour inspectors of improper external influences. The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that, between 2014 and 2016, there were six legal proceedings against labour inspectors' decisions and reports under section 17 of Dahir No. 1-58-008 on the general statute of the public service, one of which had been resolved by court of first instance with an acquittal, and the other five of which were before the competent courts. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide detailed information on the practical application of section 17 of Dahir No. 1-58-008, in particular on the legal proceedings undertaken against labour inspectors in recent years (alleged offences, legal provisions invoked, duration of proceedings and so forth) and their outcome. It also requests the Government to specify the criminal penalties that labour inspectors may face relating to actions or measures taken in the performance of their duties, as well as the corresponding legal provisions that provide for such penalties.

Articles 12 and 15(c) of Convention No. 81 and Articles 16 and 20(c) of Convention No. 129. Confidentiality regarding the source of complaints during inspections; inspections without prior notice. The Committee notes that the Government has not provided any new information in this regard. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to take measures to introduce a specific legal obligation of confidentiality, by providing that labour inspectors shall treat as absolutely confidential the source of any complaint bringing to their notice a defect or breach of legal provisions and shall give no intimation to the employer or his representative that a visit of inspection was made in consequence of the receipt of such a complaint, as stipulated in Article 15(c) of Convention No. 81 and Article 20(c) of Convention No. 129. Recalling that confidentiality is only possible in practice if the inspection method used includes a considerable number of routine inspections, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide statistics on the number of inspections, indicating the type of each inspection (routine visits, visits to monitor the application of enforcement orders, visits pursuant to a complaint and so forth).

Articles 13, 17 and 18 of Convention No. 81 and Articles 18, 22, 23 and 24 of Convention No. 129. 1. Prosecution of violations and effectively applied penalties. Further to its previous comment, the Committee notes that, according to the statistics contained in the 2020–21 inspection report, the number of reports drawn up remains low compared to the number of violations detected. In 2021, there were 227,830 observations on the application of the legislation in the industry, trade and services sectors, with 76 reports drawn up noting 1,094 violations. The Committee also notes the observations of the CDT that there is a lack of follow-up to reports of violations. In addition, the UNTM indicates in its observations that there is a lack of information on the follow-up to legal actions and to the various obstacles to the performance of inspectors' duties. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide statistical information on the observations made, the violations noted and the reports drawn up by labour inspectors. It also requests the Government to provide further information on the follow-up to these observations in cases where reports are not drawn up, including areas of compliance that were addressed and remedies applied, and the penalties imposed.

2. Supervisory activities of inspectors in agriculture and action taken on safety and health injunctions and breaches of the legislation. Further to its previous comment on Convention No. 129, the Committee notes that the Government does not provide any information on the action taken on safety and health injunctions and breaches of the legislation, including for failure to execute injunctions issued to eliminate risk to the workers' safety and health (section 543 of the Labour Code), or the recommendation (section 545 of the Labour Code) for the prosecution of employers in breach of the regulations or an order to take preventive action. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the results of the exercise of labour inspectors' powers of injunction and of initiating legal proceedings, as defined in the above legislation.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Netherlands

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1951)

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1973)

Previous comment

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of the ratified Conventions on labour inspection, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 81 (labour inspection) and 129 (labour inspection in agriculture) together.

The Committee notes the joint observations of the Netherlands Trade Union Confederation (FNV) and the National Federation of Christian Trade Unions (CNV) on Convention No. 81, received in 2021, which reiterate the observations of the FNV, CNV and the Trade Union Federation for Professionals (VCP) received in 2017 and refer to the additional matters addressed below.

Articles 3, 10 and 16 of Convention No. 81 and Articles 6, 14 and 21 of Convention No. 129. Number of labour inspectors and the frequency of labour inspections to ensure the effective discharge of inspection duties. Workload of labour inspectors. Time spent on administrative tasks. Further to its previous comment on ensuring a sufficient number of labour inspectors and inspections to achieve adequate coverage of workplaces liable to inspection, the Committee notes that the Government indicates in its report that: (i) given the lack of information on the capacity of the labour inspectorate, in 2017 the inspectorate started with the Inspection Control Framework (ICF), which allows it to focus on certain risks or subjects, determine what it requires in terms of capacity (financially) to cover the chosen focus, as well as to use risk-based supervision and to be result-oriented; (ii) also in 2017, the coalitions parties in the Parliament made 50 million euros per year progressively available for strengthening the enforcement chain of the labour inspectorate in accordance with the ICF; (iii) between 2018 and 2020, the available resources of the labour inspectorate were mostly used for the recruitment, selection and supervision of new labour inspectors and investigators; (iv) in 2019 and 2020, the labour inspectorate had 1,335 and 1,348 full-time labour inspectors, respectively, and it is projected to grow to 1,541 full-time labour inspectors by the end of 2022 and to be at full capacity in 2023; and (v) in 2019 and 2020, 11,744 and 15,462 inspection visits were carried out, respectively. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that the labour inspectorate currently pursues four goals under the ICF, namely: (a) restoring the balance between reactive investigations and active prevention-oriented inspections in the field of OSH; (b) increasing the proportion of joint inspections of companies falling under the legislation relating to the control of major hazards involving dangerous substances; (c) increasing the extent to which the labour inspectorate works in an information-driven way; and (d) increasing the inspection coverage of fair working conditions. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the implementation of the Inspection Control Framework, the achievement of each of its four goals and its concrete impact on the work of the labour inspectorate, including on the inspectorate's capacity to carry out its primary functions as set forth in Article 3(1) of Convention 81 and Article 6(1) of Convention 129, and to inspect workplaces with the necessary frequency and thoroughness. Noting the above-mentioned increase in the number of labour inspectors, it requests the Government to continue to provide information on the total number of labour inspectors, inspection visits, workplaces liable to inspection and workers employed therein, violations detected and penalties imposed, as well as on the number of industrial accidents and occupational diseases. The Committee requests the Government to specify in the requested information the statistics relating to the agricultural sector.

Furthermore, the Committee notes the information provided by the Government in reply to its previous comment on the meaning of the term "social impact" of the work of the labour inspectorate, which implies that the labour inspectorate tries to enforce regulations at workplaces where the risks are the highest and that by eliminating the highest risks it makes sure that the main harm is taken care of.

In this regard, the Committee recalls that the report of the tripartite committee adopted by the Governing Body at its 322nd Session (November 2014) concerning the representation made under article 24 of the ILO Constitution relating to Conventions Nos 81 and 129 and the Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155) requested the Government to ensure that the number and frequency of labour inspections is sufficient to ensure the effective discharge of inspection duties and compliance with the respective legal provisions in all workplaces, including enterprises that are not considered to be in high-risk sectors and small enterprises (paragraph 137). The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures adopted or envisaged to ensure that non-high-risk workplaces and small enterprises are inspected as often and as thoroughly as is necessary to ensure the effective application of the relevant legal provisions.

Lastly, with regard to the administrative tasks entrusted to labour inspectors, the Committee takes note of the Government's information indicating that multiple measures have been taken to facilitate labour inspectors in administrative tasks, such as the provision of standardized formats for letters and fine reports, the deployment of senior inspectors as peer review of, or support for, other inspectors in the drafting of reports, as well as the establishment of an inspection support desk ("Inspectieondersteuning") which assists inspectors in the administrative preparation of inspection projects by refining information, conducting preliminary research and selecting the correct addresses of companies to be inspected. The Government also indicates that the adoption of measures to facilitate the work of inspectors will continue to be one of the focuses of the labour inspectorate. The Committee takes note of the information provided and it requests once again the Government to specify the proportion of time spent by labour inspectors on administrative tasks, in relation to the primary functions of labour inspection.

Article 3(1) and (2) of Convention No. 81 and Article 6(1) and (3) of Convention No. 129. Functions of labour inspectors with regard to foreign workers. Further to its previous comment on inspections performed in conjunction with the police department that deals with residency issues, the Committee notes that the Government indicates in its report that when working jointly with the police department, while the police investigates whether there are migrants in an irregular situation, the labour inspectorate is concerned with compliance of the labour legislation with respect to migrant workers, who are entitled to fair work and wages irrespective of their legal status. The Committee recalls that the involvement of inspection staff in joint operations with the police is not conducive to the relationship of trust that it is essential to enlisting the cooperation of employers and workers. Workers in a vulnerable situation may not be willing to cooperate with the labour inspection services if they fear negative consequences as a result of inspection activities, such as being fined, losing their job or being expelled from the country. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information on the concrete actions undertaken by labour inspectors in cases where, in the discharge of their duties, they encounter violations of the legal provisions related to conditions of work and protection of wages for migrant workers, including those in an irregular situation, specifying how it ensures that these workers are actually granted their statutory rights, such as the payment of unpaid wages, social security benefits or the conclusion of an employment contract, and further specifying the amounts recovered and the number of contracts concluded in this respect.

The Committee notes that the FNV and CNV reiterate that migrant workers are especially vulnerable to abusive labour conditions and are very critical of the results of the work of the labour inspectorate in this respect, indicating that: (a) cases (i.e. accidents at work, physical abuse and unpaid wages) take so long to be inspected that, in the meantime, the workers concerned may be dismissed, feel victimized or are discouraged from filing again a complaint; (b) obvious infringements are not inspected, nor are they fined; and (c) inspections operate in a very fragmented manner, with the result that cases are not coordinated. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed comments in this respect.

The Committee notes that the FNV and CNV also reiterate that very few cases of non-compliance are actually brought to the courts by migrant workers without the required work permit or residence permit and that while these possibilities exist formally, the protection of undocumented migrant workers lacks substance. Moreover, the FNV and CNV state that the number of prosecuted cases of labour exploitation and convicted offenders decreases every year and therefore the prosecution of such cases is lagging behind and labour exploitation often remains unpunished in the Netherlands. In this respect, the Committee notes the Government's indication that several complaints are filed with the labour inspectorate on cases that may involve labour exploitation, but that only a few are brought to court because most cases either do not have the characteristics of labour exploitation or do not meet the high burden of proof established in this respect, although in such cases there may be a serious detriment to workers by employers that can be examined and investigated under administrative law. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number and outcome of judicial proceedings on all matters, including labour exploitation, resulting from inspections carried out or actions taken by labour inspectors.

Lastly, the Committee also notes that the FNV and CNV indicate that the aforementioned vulnerability of migrant workers is sustained by the role of temporary employment agencies, which number 14,000 companies (22,000 if payrolling enterprises are included) and actively recruit migrant workers in the Netherlands, sometimes under deceptive pretensions. The FNV and CNV also indicate that migrant workers have become a business model for temporary employment agencies as well as for housing facilitators and transporting companies. In this regard, the Committee notes the Government's indication that an advisory team was set up to advise the Cabinet on the protection of migrant workers and actions to be taken with respect to them, including combating labour exploitation, and that in October 2020 this team recommended increasing the capacity of the labour inspectorate in order to strengthen supervision in the temporary employment agency sector. The Government states that if a new Cabinet decides to consider such a recommendation, the labour inspection's coverage of the temporary employment agency sector would increase and thus also the likelihood of detection of malpractices. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures adopted or envisaged to strengthen labour inspection in temporary employment agencies, including the follow-up measures taken following the recommendation of the Cabinet's advisory team in 2020 on this matter.

Noting that the FNV and CNV reiterate that the labour inspectorate is neither authorized nor sufficiently equipped to ensure the application of the collective agreements in relation to temporary posted workers, the Committee again requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

New Zealand

Labour Statistics Convention, 1985 (No. 160) (ratification: 2001)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of Business New Zealand (BusinessNZ) and the New Zealand Council of Trade Unions (NZCTU), communicated together with the Government's report.

Part II. Application of the Articles of the Convention. The Committee welcomes the comprehensive report provided by the Government. It notes the Government's indication that there have been certain changes in the application of the Convention during the reporting period. The Labour Market Statistics series was changed as of June quarter of 2016, with the inclusion of additional questions in the Household Labour Force Survey. The Government explains that the change was made to improve the relevance and quality of the labour market statistics compiled through the Survey, as the new content collects more information about the nature of people's employment conditions and work arrangements. The Government also notes that, as of June 2019, the sample size for the Household Economic Survey was expanded from 5,500 households to 28,500 households in compiling information on household income, housing costs and child poverty. This change is intended to reduce margins of error in the data, as well as to provide information at a sub-population level.

Articles 7 and 8 of the Convention. Employment, unemployment and underemployment statistics. Statistics on the structure and distribution of the economically active population. The Committee notes that the Government continues to provide statistics on the economically active population, employment and unemployment to the ILO Department of Statistics (ILOSTAT) for dissemination through its website. In this respect, the latest Labour Force Survey (LFS) figures relate to 2021. Moreover, in response to the Committee's previous comment, the Government indicates that changes made to the Labour Market Statistics series and Household Labour Force Survey questionnaire implement developments with respect to Resolution I adopted by the 19th International Conference of Labour Statisticians (ICLS) on Statistics of work, employment and labour underutilization (2013). With respect to Article 8, the Committee notes that the Government continues to provide data on the structure and distribution of the economically active population to ILOSTAT for dissemination on its website, most recently via the 2021 ILOSTAT questionnaire. The Government notes that the Census of Population and Dwellings was last undertaken in 2018 and data was supplied to ILOSTAT for dissemination. The Government points out that participation in the 2018 Census was lower than in previous censuses. As a result, data was used from alternative sources and different methodologies to produce a fit-for-purpose dataset. It adds that planning is currently underway for the next New Zealand Census of Population and Dwellings, which will take place in March 2023. In this context, the Committee notes the observations of BusinessNZ, which indicates that information under Article 8 of the Convention is now considerably outdated, given that the most recent census was conducted in 2018. According to BusinessNZ the 2018 census was a 'digital first' census, which some 70 per cent of New Zealanders were expected to complete. This expectation was, however, not realized. The Committee invites the Government to continue to provide statistical data and methodological information relevant to the application of Articles 7 and 8 of the Convention, and to supply updated information in relation to the 2023 census once it becomes available. The Government is also requested to continue to provide information on any developments in relation to the implementation of the Resolution concerning statistics of work, employment and labour underutilization (Resolution I), adopted by the 19th International Conference of Labour Statisticians (October 2013), as well as in relation to the Resolution concerning statistics on work relationships (Resolution I), adopted by the 20th International Conference of Labour Statisticians (October 2018).

Article 9. Current statistics of average earnings and hours of work. Statistics of time rates of wages and normal hours of work. The Committee notes that statistics on hours actually worked continue to be collected in the Household Labour Force Survey and submitted to ILOSTAT through its annual questionnaire. The most recent statistics supplied refer to 2020. Current statistics on average hourly and weekly gross earnings, average weekly hours paid for, and the corresponding number of filled jobs, continue to be compiled quarterly, from the Quarterly Employment Survey (QES) conducted by Statistics New Zealand in March, June, September and December. In its reply to the observations of the NZCTU, the Government indicates that the QES has been revised, but that this revision does not include additional measures, nor does it affect the scope of the QES. Revisions to coverage related to sample redesign and increased coverage of industries, rather than to scope of coverage or definitions. The Government also notes that in preparation to make these changes, the Government consulted extensively with key users of the QES, as well as some data providers. It adds that the social partners were invited to be part of the consultation process. The Committee notes that, in its observations, BusinessNZ indicates that changes made to the QES appear to address the concerns raised by the NZCTU. At the same time, the Committee notes the NZCTU's indication that the sample size of the Household Labour Force Survey (HLFS) is too small to allow for reliable disaggregation of statistics by ethnicity, or for cross-tabulation of regional data by industry. NZCTU therefore considers that the availability and reliability of statistics on earnings, hours of work, wage structure and distribution would be enhanced by carrying out a more regular survey with a larger sample size. Responding to the observations of the NZCTU indicating that the official statistics available on wage rates in collective agreements in New Zealand show only changes in wages (increases or decreases) from the quarterly Labour Cost Index Survey, the Government indicates that the Labour Cost Index does not measure average earnings or hours of work and thus falls outside the scope of Article 9. The NZCTU also observes that there is currently some uncertainty around arrangements for the collection and analysis of statistics derived from collective Agreements, but that discussions are currently underway on how this will be arranged and funded in the future. The Committee requests that the Government provide updated information on the concepts, definitions and methodology used in the statistics covered by Article 9 of the Convention to ILOSTAT through its annual questionnaire for dissemination. The Committee also requests the Government to continue to include information on the application in practice of Article 9 of the Convention by providing information on the consultations held and cooperation with the social partners when designing and revising such concepts, definitions and methodology.

Article 14. Statistics of occupational injuries and diseases. The Committee notes that the Government continues to supply statistics on fatal and non-fatal occupational injuries disaggregated by economic activity via the ILOSTAT annual questionnaire on labour statistics. The latest statistics refer to 2019 and are published on the Government website. Responding to the Committee's previous comment, the Government provides information on the steps that it has taken during the reporting period to improve the quality of the statistics on occupational injuries and diseases. In addition, the Government notes that Stats NZ chairs an Injury Information Working Group, which is working across government units to improve the quality of injury data (including data on workplace injuries). The "Serious injury outcome indicators" series and the "Inquiry statistics – Work-related claims" series are published on the Stats NZ website and cover the years 2000–19.

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government on developments in relation to the quality and availability of data compiled under Article 14. In this regard, it notes with interest the Government's indication that the issue noted by the Independent Taskforce on Workplace Health and Safety concerning unreliability of data involving workplace fatalities has been resolved. The Committee also notes with interest that the recommendation issued by the Independent Taskforce on Workplace Health and Safety to "improve the quality and availability of data and information on workplace injury and occupational health performance by establishing a sector-leading research, evaluation and monitoring function within the new agency" has been picked up in the Government's 2013 response to the independent Taskforce Report known as 'Working Safer: A blueprint for health and safety at work'. Following the 2013 report, the Government set up a research, evaluation and monitoring function with WorkSafe. The Committee notes the Government's indication that WorkSafe collects and publishes a range of data on selected industries and types of work covering annual and monthly data on fatalities, injuries, accident types, notifications, and WorkSafe activities such as enforcement, investigations and assessment. The data comes from both WorkSafe's own registers and from the claims register of the Accident Compensation Corporation (ACC). This information is published on the WorkSafe Data Centre web page. The Committee notes that WorkSafe also commissions and publishes a range of research into particular industries and other aspects of the health and safety at work system. These publications are published on the Work Safe Research web page. In addition, WorkSafe and ACC both contribute data to the "Safe Work Australia Comparative Monitoring Report" published by Safe Work Australia. In its observations, BusinessNZ indicates that WorkSafe's 2020 annual report provides information on progress made in addressing workplace health and safety. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide updated information on any developments in relation to the collection, compilation and publication of statistics on occupational injuries and diseases, including in relation to any measures taken to implement the recommendations of the Independent Taskforce on Workplace Health and Safety. In addition, the Committee requests that the Government continue to supply up-to-date statistics to ILOSTAT through its annual questionnaire, taking into account the decision of the International Labour Conference at its 110th Session in June 2022 to include “a safe and healthy working environment” as a fundamental principle and right at work under paragraph 2 of the ILO Declaration on Fundamental Principles and Rights at Work.

North Macedonia

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1991)

Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129) (ratification: 1991)

The Committee notes with concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Article 3(1)(a) and (2) of Convention No. 81 and Article 6(1) and (3) of Convention No. 129. Labour inspection activities with regard to foreign workers and the protection of foreign workers in an irregular situation. The Committee notes the Government's indication, in reply to its previous comments, that labour inspectors carry out the supervision of the implementation of the Law on Employment of Foreign Nationals (LEFN) during regular inspections in the areas of labour relations. The Committee notes that, pursuant to section 18(2) of the Law, the monitoring of its implementation shall be carried out by the State Labour Inspectorate (SLI) and pursuant to section 18(3), labour inspections related to work permits and illegal employment or work of foreign nationals may be carried out ex officio or at the request of the Employment Service Agency (ESA). The SLI is then obliged to submit reports every six months regarding the instituted procedures and imposed misdemeanour sanctions to the ESA pursuant to section 18(4) of the LEFN. Fines can be imposed not only on an employer or a facilitator of illegal work, but also on a foreign national if she or he does not present the work permit when requested by the SLI (section 27). The Committee recalls that, pursuant to Article 3 of Convention No. 81 and Article 6 of Convention No. 129, the functions of the system of labour inspection shall be to secure the enforcement of the legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers while engaged in their work. Further, in its 2006 General Survey, Labour inspection, paragraph 78, the Committee indicated that any function of verifying the legality of employment should have as its corollary the reinstatement of the statutory rights of all the workers if it is to be compatible with the objective of labour inspection, which is to protect the rights and interests of all workers and to improve their working conditions. Referring to paragraph 452 of the 2017 General Survey on certain occupational safety and health instruments, the Committee recalls that workers in a vulnerable situation may not be willing to cooperate with the labour inspection services if they fear negative consequences as a result of inspection activities, such as the loss of their job or expulsion from the country. The Committee requests the Government to take specific measures to ensure that the functions assigned to labour inspectors do not interfere with the main objective of labour inspectors, which is to ensure the protection of workers in accordance with Article 3(2) of Convention No. 81 and Article 6(3) of Convention No. 129. It requests the Government to provide information on action undertaken by the inspectorate to ensure the enforcement of the rights of foreign workers found to be in an irregular situation. It further asks the Government to provide information on the number of cases in which foreign workers found to be in an irregular situation have been granted their due rights, such as the payment of outstanding wages or social security benefits.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Republic of Korea

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1992)

Previous comments: observation and direct request

The Committee notes the observations of the Federation of Korean Trade Unions (FKTU), the Korean Confederation of Trade Unions (KCTU) and the Korea Enterprises Federation (KEF), communicated with the Government's report, as well as the Government's response.

Articles 6, 10 and 16 of the Convention. Conditions of service of labour inspectors. Number of labour inspectors and inspection visits. The Committee previously noted that the increase in the number of labour inspectors was not sufficient to cover the increase in the volume of cases handled by them, and that labour inspectors were likely to be exposed to overtime work of more than 12 hours a week.

In response to the previous requests of the Committee, the Government indicates that the number of labour inspectors continues to increase every year, from 1,694 in 2016 to 2,894 in 2019 (2,213 for labour standards and 681 for occupational safety and health) to 3,122 in 2021 and that additional recruitment is still ongoing. The Government also indicates that the monthly average amount of overtime was 18.71 hours in 2020, reduced by 16.6 per cent (3.72 hours) compared to 2016. The overtime allowances are paid per hour, calculated as 150 per cent of the hourly amount converted from the monthly wage based on each salary grade. The Committee also notes that, according to the salary table provided by the Government, labour inspectors receive similar remuneration with the police and firefighting officials. The Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to ensure that the number of labour inspectors is sufficient to secure the effective discharge of the duties of the inspectorate. It also requests the Government to continue providing information on the number of labour inspectors, the amount of overtime worked by inspectors, and any updates on comparative remuneration between labour inspectors, police, and firefighting officials.

Article 12(1)(a). Unannounced visits. The Government indicates that, while unannounced inspections were carried out from 2015 to 2017 regarding basic employment rules in small businesses and vulnerable sectors, since 2018 the inspection plans were communicated in advance to allow employers to voluntarily rectify faults, considering that small businesses need prior instructions and guidance as they are more likely to violate the law by ignorance. The Committee notes that, according to the statistics information provided by the Government, in 2017, 5,859 announced inspections were carried out in total, while 16,705 inspection visits were conducted without prior notice. As from 2018, the large majority of inspections were announced inspections. In 2019, there were 20,714 announced inspection and 4,700 unannounced inspections carried out. In addition, the number of violations detected increased substantially, from 45,955 (17,835 by announced inspection and 28,120 by unannounced inspection) in 2017, to 89,564 (71,350 by announced inspection and 18,214 by unannounced inspection) in 2019. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that, while the number of inspections decreased after 2019 because of reduced face-to-face contact in the context of COVID-19, it intends to rebound the target number of inspection visits and increase unannounced inspections. The Government indicates that unannounced inspections include planned inspections targeting vulnerable sectors to cover institutional blind spots, report-based inspections related to wage arrears and complaint-based inspections. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that labour inspectors are empowered to make visits to workplaces liable to inspection without previous notice in conformity with Article 12(1)(a). It also requests the Government to provide further information on the measures taken to ensure the compliance of SMEs with basic employment rules, including the number of inspections of different types carried out and the results achieved.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Russian Federation

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1998)

Previous comments: observation and direct request

The Committee notes the observations of the Confederation of Labour of Russia (KTR), received on 31 August 2021.

Article 3(1) and (2) of the Convention. Additional functions entrusted to the labour inspectorate. Functions of the labour inspection with regard to undeclared work. In its observations, the KTR indicates that the number of cases in which the inspectors have identified workers in informal labour relations is insignificant compared to assessments of the scale of undisclosed labour relations in the Russian Federation. It observes that the reports of the Federal Service for Labour and Employment (Rostrud) do not refer to the number of criminal or administrative cases launched in connection with the identification of informal employment by inspectors, nor to the number of fines imposed. The Committee notes that KTR also indicates that Rostrud, aside from monitoring in the sphere of labour relations, is also responsible for monitoring and oversight in other social spheres. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect. It also requests the Government to indicate whether labour inspectors are given additional duties other than their primary duties listed in Article 3(1) of the Convention. Furthermore, it requests the Government to provide data concerning the enforcement of the legal provisions relating to conditions of work and the protection of workers through the activities of the labour inspectorate with regard to undeclared work (the number of cases in which workers were registered with the social security authorities, the number of cases in which workers were paid outstanding salaries resulting from their past employment relationship, etc.). The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the estimated numbers of unregistered workers and uninsured workers.

The Committee notes the KTR's indication that the inspectorate does not monitor legislation determining the rights of trade unions, including guarantees of protection from discrimination based on trade union involvement, since the relevant legislation is not part of labour law. Concerning this matter, the Committee refers to its observation under the Convention on the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining, 1949 (No. 98), concerning adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination and interference.

Articles 6 and 10. Conditions of service. Number of labour inspectors. The Committee notes that in reply to its previous comment concerning the recruitment of an adequate number of inspectors, the Government indicates that at present, the maximum number of personnel at Rostrud is approved by Resolution No. 1724 of 2017. The Committee also notes that the Government report does not contain information concerning the number of labour inspectors. However, the Committee notes with concern that according to the reports on the activities of Rostrud as shared by KTR, the number of labour inspectors continued to decline from 1,820, in 2019, to 1,793 in 2020. According to these reports, as of August 2021, there were 44 vacancies for state labour inspectors.

Concerning the condition of service of the labour inspectorate, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the Decree No. 481 of 7 October 2019 increased official salaries of all civil servants by 1.043 times. The Government also reports on a series of activities to ensure professional development and integration of new employees in Rostrud's territorial bodies, such as mentoring of new recruits and targeted training for a pre-selected number of labour inspectors in order to promote their career progression.

The Committee also notes that in its observation the KTR states that, despite the extended duties of labour inspectors, the number of inspectors is not increasing, but rather, continues to fall. Regarding the conditions of service, the KTR indicates that the upper limit for salaries of labour inspectors did not exceed the average Russian monthly wage in 2020 in any of the constituent entities that have vacancies. According to the KTR, the wage of state labour inspectors is not even half of the average wage of other federal civil servants at the regional level. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect. Moreover, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the number of labour inspectors is sufficient to secure the effective discharge of the duties of the inspection service. In this regard, it requests once again the Government to provide information on the efforts made to recruit new labour inspectors and to fill the existing vacancies. It further requests the Government to provide information on the number of labour inspectors and on the career structure of the Rostrud, including grade and positions as well as the number of appointments made at each position. Noting the absence of information on this matter, the Committee requests once again that the Government provide detailed information on: (i) the levels of remuneration of labour inspectors in comparison to the remuneration levels of other officials exercising functions of similar complexity and responsibility such as tax inspectors and the police; and (ii) the reason for the high attrition rate of labour inspectors.

Article 5(b). Collaboration with representatives of employers and workers. The Committee takes note of the KTR observations according to which national legislation provides only for a general indication of the need for the Inspectorate to cooperate with trade unions and does not provide for the right of trade unions to lodge a complaint with the Inspectorate, or for the Inspectorate's cooperation on the consideration of such appeals. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on measures taken to promote collaboration between the labour inspectorate and employers and workers or their organizations.

Articles 7(3), 17 and 18. Enforcement of labour law provisions. For many years the Committee has been noting a disparity between the number of cases reported by the labour inspectorate, the number of investigations initiated and the number of convictions. The Committee takes note of the information provided by the Government regarding the monitoring activities for 2019 and 2020. However, the Committee notes that the Government's report is silent on the number of criminal cases instituted and the actual convictions. The Committee notes that, in 2020, the courts annulled 942 decisions taken by labour inspectors. In its observations, the KTR indicates that although the reports of Rostrud provide general indicators for administrative proceedings against employers, there is a lack of information about all categories of violations for which employers have been subjected to administrative proceedings. The KTR also indicates that state labour inspectors' powers are confined to responding to undisputed cases of violations of labour law, although the official understanding of "undisputed cases of violations of labour law" and the limitations on the powers of state labour inspectors in such cases have not been formally established. The trade union adds that this approach to labour inspectors is due to ambiguous legal practices that consider unlawful the act of state labour inspectors issuing employers with binding orders or imposing fines for violations of the law, if by doing so the inspector is "resolving an individual labour dispute". According to the KTR, since the legislation does not establish clear criteria that would allow the differentiation of a "labour dispute" from a situation in which a state labour inspector is entitled to intervene, state labour inspectors' orders on any issue may in practice be declared unlawful by the court in connection with inspectors exceeding their authority and interfering in a "labour dispute". Regarding concrete measures taken to address the deficiencies identified, the Government reports a series of trainings but does not provide specific information regarding the training for labour inspectors on the establishment and completion of non-compliance reports, including the collection of the necessary evidence, as previously requested by the Committee. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments with respect to the KTR observations. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the effective enforcement of the legal provisions enforceable by labour inspectors. It once again requests the Government to provide information on concrete measures taken to address the deficiencies identified, such as training for labour inspectors on the establishment and completion of non-compliance reports, including: (i) the collection of the necessary evidence; (ii) the improvement of communication and coordination activities with the judiciary on the required evidence to establish and effectively prosecute labour law violations; and (iii) the need for timely communication of the outcome of cases to the labour inspectorate. The Committee requests the Government to provide concrete statistics on the administrative and criminal cases reported by the labour inspectorate, the investigations and prosecutions initiated, and the penalties imposed as a result. In view of the KTR observations, the Committee also requests information on the reasons for the cancellations by the courts of the decisions taken by labour inspectors.

Article 12. Labour inspectors' powers and prerogatives. In reply to the Committee's previous comment, the Government indicates that the new Federal Act No. 248-FZ of 31 July 2020 provides for unannounced inspection visits, which shall be carried out without prior notification and during which the inspector has unimpeded access to documents, facilities and premises, as well as the right to perform a series of monitoring actions. In this respect, the Committee notes that the inspector can conduct an oral interview of the controlled person under section 78 of the Federal Act No. 248-FZ. The Committee notes that in its observations, the KTR indicates that Federal Act No. 248-FZ was adopted without regard to the view of the KTR and retained restrictions on the powers of state labour inspectors. In particular, it indicates that: (i) physical inspections are possible only if an inspector cannot verify the completeness and accuracy of the documents and explanations submitted by an employer, in order to assess the lawfulness of the employer's activity (inactivity) by another means (Act No. 248-FZ, section 73(3)); (ii) unplanned inspection visits are allowed only with the consent of the prosecutor, except in situations where they are conducted on special grounds, such as on the instruction of the Russian President or the Russian Government, at the request of the prosecutor, or in the absence of evidence of the execution by the employer of a previously issued order (Act No. 248-FZ, sections 73(5) and 57(1)(3-6), 57(3) and 66(12)); and (iii) employers must be given notice at least 24 hours prior to the start of an unplanned inspection visit (Act No. 248-FZ, section 73(6)). Furthermore, the Committee notes with concern that many of the restrictions on the powers of labour inspectors noted previously by the Committee remain in place, including restrictions on the free initiative of labour inspectors to undertake inspections without prior notice (sections 9(12) and 10(16) of Law No. 294-FZ) and on the free access of labour inspectors to workplaces at any hour of the day or night (sections 10(5) and 18(4) of Law No. 294-FZ), as well as the enumeration of limited grounds on which unscheduled inspection visits may be undertaken (section 10(2) of Law No. 294-FZ and section 10 of Regulation No. 875). The Committee also notes that, for a number of years it has been noting that pursuant to section 19(6)(1) and (2) of the Code of Administrative Offences, labour inspectors may incur administrative liability where they fail to observe certain restrictions. The Committee notes that the Government has not provided relevant information on this matter. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments with respect to the KTR observations. Recalling and emphasizing the importance of fully empowering labour inspectors to make visits without previous notice in order to guarantee effective supervision, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to bring the national legislation into conformity with Article 12 of the Convention, particularly by ensuring that labour inspectors are empowered to make visits without previous notice, in line with Article 12(1)(a) and (b) of the Convention. The Committee reiterates its request that the Government provide further information on the cases brought against officials of the state labour inspectorates under section 19(6) of the Code on Administrative Offences, indicating the requirements of the legislation on state control that were violated, particularly specifying violations related to undertaking labour inspections on grounds other than those permitted in law, and any penalties assessed against inspectors based on such violations.

Article 14. Notification of industrial accidents and cases of occupational diseases to the labour inspectorate. For a number of years, the Committee has been requesting the Government to provide information on any legislative changes establishing the systematic notification of the labour inspectorate of cases of occupational diseases. The Committee recalls that according to the Order of the Ministry of Health No. 176 of 28 May 2001, the Sanitary and Epidemiological Supervision Centre shall inform the territorial state labour inspector only for acute diseases. In its observations, the KTR indicates that the Inspectorate does not have the authority to collect full information on industrial accidents and occupational diseases and refers to section 228.1 of the Labour Code, according to which, employers are only required to inform the Inspectorate of group industrial accidents, serious industrial accidents or fatal industrial accidents. The Committee emphasizes once again that the systematic notification of the labour inspectorate of industrial accidents and cases of occupational diseases is important to fulfil its functions and obligations, including the planning of labour inspection visits and the inclusion of such information in the annual reports on labour inspection. Therefore, the Committee requests once again that the Government provide information on any measures taken or envisaged to establish a procedure to ensure that the labour inspectorate is notified of all types of industrial accidents and cases of occupational diseases. It also requests the Government to ensure that representative statistics in this regard are included in the annual labour inspection report.

Article 16. Frequency and thoroughness of labour inspections. In reply to the Committee's previous comment, the Government indicates that inspections visits using the risk-based approach are only carried out on a scheduled basis. The Government adds that, by 1 July of the year preceding the scheduled inspection year, certain information on employers whose activities are classified as high- and significant- risk is posted and kept up-to-date on the official Internet website of Rostrud. The Government also indicates that it developed a series of online tools to reinforce Rostrud's preventive work in the form of online consulting for employees and employers. This also includes the possibility for employers to conduct self-inspections through an electronic checklist. The Government adds that, the Federal Act No. 122-FZ of 24 April 2020 on Experimenting with the Use of Electronic Work Documents, will facilitate implementation of electronic oversight while avoiding direct interaction with employers, thereby substantially reducing inspectors' workload. In its observations, the KTR points to increased intervals between inspections; and indicates that the criteria for assigning employers to the various risk categories give rise to the following concerns: (i) regulations offer no instructions on the right of workers and trade unions to contact the Inspectorate with information on facts affecting the assignment of an employer to a risk category; (ii) the assignment of employers to risk categories is largely based on the formal criterion of the main type of economic activity indicated by the employer, with no consideration given to the fact that employers may at the same time in practice carry out activities assigned to a higher risk; (iii) one of the criteria influencing the establishment of employers' risk categories is the existence or absence of administrative proceedings for the violation of labour law which is taken into consideration irrespective of their number, and thus does not encourage unscrupulous employers to observe labour law if they have already been held administratively liable for its violation; (iv) the consideration of the criteria of the number of workers on a company's staff, and type of economic activity, means that the majority of small- and medium-sized enterprises are considered low-risk and thus excluded from planned inspections.

The Committee takes note of the number of inspections, including scheduled inspections carried out by the State Labour Inspectorate for the period 2016–20. It notes that the number of inspections significantly decreased from 131,286 in 2019 to 69,895 in 2020, a decrease which according to the Government was due to restrictions associated with adoption of decisions taken in the context of the COVID-19 pandemic. In this respect, the KTR refers once again to constraints on the work of the state labour inspectorate in the context of the pandemic through legislations adopted since 2020, and to an increase in workers' complaints about the non-observance by employers of labour law. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments with respect to the KTR observations. It requests the Government to take measures, including legislative amendments, with regard to the criteria for assigning employers to the various risk categories to ensure that workplaces are inspected as often and as thoroughly as is necessary to ensure the effective application of the relevant legal provisions. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide statistics on the number of labour inspections undertaken each year, including the number of scheduled and unscheduled inspections, and of inspections undertaken on-site and those conducted without a visit to the establishment. It requests once again that the Government provide the breakdown of inspections in small, medium-sized and large enterprises. Further, the Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the circumstances under which employers conduct self-inspections, and to indicate the number of self-assessments conducted and the number of follow-up inspection visits by labour inspectors in case of violations. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate whether any COVID-19 related restrictions to labour inspection are still in place.

Articles 20 and 21. Annual labour inspection report. The Committee takes note of the observations of the KTR according to which, although the Inspectorate's reports contain a range of statistical information on the number of complaints received by the Inspectorate and the distribution of visits by economic sector, they do not provide statistical information on occupational diseases and contain only some statistical data on serious industrial accidents rather than on all accidents. The Committee requests the Government to provide its reply in this respect and indicate any steps taken or envisaged in order to publish a consolidated labour inspection report containing detailed information on all the items listed in Article 21(a)–(g) of the Convention.

Rwanda

Previous comments: observation and direct request

Article 3(1) and (2) of the Convention. Additional functions entrusted to labour inspectors. Conciliation. With reference to its previous comment, the Committee notes the Government's indication that it adopted Law No. 66/2018 of 30/08/2018 regulating labour in Rwanda (the Labour Code), which revises Law No. 13/2009 of 27 May 2009 (the 2009 Labour Code). The Committee notes in particular that sections 102 and 103 of the Labour Code provide that labour inspectors are responsible for mediating individual and collective labour disputes. In addition, the Government indicates that section 3 of the Ministerial Order No. 001/19.20 of 17/03/2020 relating to labour inspection sets out the responsibilities of the labour inspectorate as including the conciliation of labour disputes. In this regard, the Committee notes that sections 10 to 16 of the Order provide for the procedure to be followed for the settlement of labour disputes when mediated by labour inspectors. The Committee notes that the Government did not make use of the review of the Labour Code undertaken in 2018 to bring its legislation in line with the requirements of Article 3(2) of the Convention. The Committee recalls that the time spent by inspectors on conciliation may be detrimental to the performance of their primary duties, as defined in Article 3(1) of the Convention, particularly in a context where resources are limited. Further, the Committee draws the Government's attention in this regard to the guidance provided in Paragraph 8 of the Labour Inspection Recommendation, 1947 (No. 81), stating that the functions of labour inspectors should not include that of acting as conciliator or arbitrator in proceedings concerning labour disputes. The Committee therefore asks the Government to: (i) take the necessary measures to discharge labour inspectors of any mediation functions regarding individual and collective labour disputes; (ii) amend the legal framework to this effect, in particular sections 102 and 103 of the Labour Code and sections 3 and 10 to 16 of the Ministerial Order No. 001/19.20 of 17/03/2020; and (iii) keep the Office informed of the progress made in this respect.

Article 12(1)(a). Powers of labour inspectors to enter freely at any hour of the day or night any workplace liable to inspection. With reference to its previous comment, the Committee notes that section 6(2)(1) of the Ministerial Order No. 001/19.20 of 17/03/2020 relating to labour inspection provides that, upon presentation of identification, a labour inspector can enter an enterprise of his or her jurisdiction during working hours, without notice for inspection purpose. The Committee notes that the new Ministerial Order continues to limit the power of labour inspectors to conduct inspection visits to the working hours of the undertaking. The Committee notes that, for many years, it has been requesting the Government to bring the provisions of national legislation in line with Article 12(1)(a) of the Convention. It recalls once again that labour inspectors should be empowered to enter workplaces liable to inspection at any hours of the day and night. In this regard the Committee once again refers to paragraph 270 of its 2006 General Survey on labour inspection, which refers, for example, to the appropriate timing of visits necessary to carry out technical inspections when machinery or production processes are stopped, or to check for abusive night conditions in a workplace officially operating during the daytime. The Committee therefore urges the Government to bring its legislation in line with Article 12(1)(a) of the Convention so as to ensure that the powers of entry of labour inspectors are extended to any hour of the day or night regardless of the working hours of the workplaces liable to inspection.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Uganda

Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) (ratification: 1963)

Previous comment

Article 4 of the Convention. Supervision and control by a central authority. The Committee notes the Government's response to its previous request, to place the labour inspection system under a central authority following its decentralization, that while the central government plays a supervisory role, the system of labour inspection is decentralized and local governments directly supervise the labour inspectors in their jurisdictions. The Government indicates that while no new legislation has been adopted, the Ministry of Gender, Labour and Social Development has developed a position paper to have the labour inspection system placed under the central inspections authority. The paper is in initial stages and will be subject to consultations. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that the decentralization poses a challenge for the undertaking of a sufficient number of inspections and for the preparation of the annual labour inspection report. The Committee urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to place the labour inspection system under a central authority with a view to ensuring coherence in the functioning of the system. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the legislative and practical steps taken, including the consultations held in that respect.

Articles 10, 11 and 16. Resources of the labour inspection system and inspection visits. The Committee takes due note of the Government's indication that it has increased the total number of inspectors to 231: 58 inspectors at the central inspection system (including 27 specialized occupational safety and health inspectors), and an additional 173 inspectors engaged for local governments, city authorities and municipal councils. The Government indicates that, at the central level, while 82 positions have been approved, only 71 per cent have been filled. The Government also indicates, in response to the Committee's previous request on human and material resources, that : (i) it has committed 5 per cent of the Government's Social Development Non-wage Recurrent Transfer Grant to the districts to reduce the financial constraints on the district's labour inspection; (ii) at the national level, the OSH Department at the Ministry of Gender, Labour and Social Development received funding for joint inspections between headquarters, district inspectors and other key inspection stakeholders; and (iii) it has put in place measures to enhance the operationalization of local offices for labour inspectors, including providing necessary equipment and developing projects and programmes for the construction of better offices. However, the Committee further notes the Government's indication that it is faced with administrative and financial constraints that include the decentralization of the labour department, and that as this department is not a priority, it is inadequately financed and hence there are few inspections. In addition, the Government indicates that most labour inspectors lack necessary transport equipment such as motor vehicles and motorcycles that are necessary for the execution of their mandate, but that labour inspectors are reimbursed for travel and incidental expense in performing their duties. The Committee urges the Government to take further measures to ensure that there are a sufficient number of labour inspectors provided with adequate resources, in conformity with Articles 10 and 11 of the Convention. It also requests the Government to take immediate measures to ensure that workplaces are inspected as often as is necessary for the effective application of the relevant legal provisions, as required by Article 16 of the Convention. In this respect, it requests the Government to take measures to ensure the filling of the vacant positions, and to address the lack of necessary transport facilities for inspectors. Finally, the Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken, as well as information on the total number of inspector positions, the number of filled positions, and the number of inspection visits carried out.

Articles 19, 20 and 21. Reports from local inspection offices and publication and communication of an annual report on labour inspection. The Committee notes the Government's indication, in response to its previous comment, that under the decentralized structures, labour inspectors report directly to the districts, which leads to irregularities of reporting to the central inspection authority. The Government indicates that it mostly receives reports from local labour offices only upon demand, but that the Ministry has communicated to the local authorities regarding the requirements to submit reports. The Government states that efforts are being made to ensure that annual inspection reports are developed, published and transmitted as required. In line with the requirements of Article 21 of the Convention, and recalling that section 20 of the Uganda Employment Act of 2006 also provides for the annual publication of a report, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that annual reports on labour inspection are published and communicated regularly to the ILO, and that they contain the information required by Article 21(a)–(g).

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Direct requests

In addition, requests regarding certain matters are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 63 (Chile, Cuba, Egypt, Nicaragua, United Republic of Tanzania); Convention No. 81 (Albania, Algeria, Angola, Antigua and Barbuda, Austria, Bahrain, Bangladesh, Barbados, Belgium, Benin, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Brazil, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Cabo Verde, Cameroon, Canada, Central African Republic, Chad, China: Hong Kong Special Administrative Region, China: Macau Special Administrative Region, Colombia, Comoros, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cyprus, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Denmark, Djibouti, Ecuador, Finland, Ghana, Greece, Guinea-Bissau, Guyana, Haiti, Hungary, India, Indonesia, Italy, Jamaica, Japan, Kenya, Kyrgyzstan, Lebanon, Libya, Lithuania, Madagascar, Malawi, Malta, Morocco, Namibia, Netherlands, Netherlands: Caribbean Part of the Netherlands, Netherlands: Sint Maarten, New Zealand, Niger, North Macedonia, Republic of Korea, Rwanda, Uganda, Uzbekistan); Convention No. 85 (United Republic of Tanzania: Zanzibar); Convention No. 129 (Albania, Belgium, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Burkina Faso, Colombia, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Croatia, Denmark, Finland, Guyana, Hungary, Italy, Kenya, Madagascar, Malawi, Malta, Morocco, Netherlands, North Macedonia, Uzbekistan); Convention No. 150 (Central African Republic, China, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Denmark, El Salvador, Finland, Lebanon, Malawi, Morocco, Namibia, Niger, North Macedonia, Rwanda); Convention No. 160 (Cyprus, Denmark, El Salvador, Lithuania, Mauritius, Mexico, Republic of Moldova).

Employment policy and promotion

Armenia

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1994)

Previous comment

Article 1 of the Convention. Employment trends and implementation of an active employment policy. The Committee notes the signing of the Decent Work Country Programme (DWCP) for 2019-2023, which sets priorities and key country outcomes that were developed in close consultation with the tripartite constituents and other national stakeholders. The Committee notes that, according to information available on the ILO website, despite large-scale reforms in the employment sphere over the past years, there are still pressing issues to be addressed. These include the gap between labour force supply and demand, existing barriers to employment for first-time labour market entrants, groups in vulnerable situations and skilled workers. Under the second DWCP priority, the national constituents undertake to develop a new National Employment Strategy (NES), addressing these and other issues, such as youth and rural employment, informality and entrepreneurship development. The NES, once developed and adopted, is to become a core national policy document for a comprehensive employment policy framework to support inclusive and sustainable economic growth in Armenia. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that the 2021 programme of the Government of the Republic of Armenia includes among its key priorities the eradication of poverty through the promotion of employment and education. In this context, the Government indicates that it is taking steps to review the employment policies, one of which is the wide-scale programme "Work Armenia!", which focuses on promoting employment among women and young persons. Lastly, the Government indicates that measures have been taken to introduce career guidance activities in vocational education and training (VET) institutions, including in the framework of the "Better Qualifications for Better Jobs 2017-2019 Budget Support Agreement between the Government of the Republic of Armenia and the European Union (EU).

With regard to employment trends, the Government reports that, as of 1 January 2021, 87,999 job seekers were registered in the regional centres of the United Social Service (former State Employment Agency) of the Ministry of Labour and Social Issues, representing an increase of 3.6 per cent in comparison with the same period of the previous year. In the same period, 10,109 people were employed (25.2 per cent less as compared to the previous year), 1,450 persons were not included in the employment regulation state programs (a decrease of 40 per cent as compared to the previous year). Moreover, there were 61,320 persons unemployed (a decrease of 0.7 per cent in comparison with the previous year). The Government adds that the number of unemployed women remained high (39,653 women), representing 64.7 per cent of the total number of unemployed persons. Moreover, the Government indicates that regional disparities also remain and reports that in 2020, the highest employment was registered in Yerevan (2,253 jobseekers were hired in 2020) and the lowest in Vayots Dzor (only 273 jobseekers were hired). In this context, the Government refers to the implementation of the programme "Support for Livestock breeding" since 2019, with the objective of promoting employment and overcoming poverty in certain regions. The Government reports that in 2019, 1,098 persons participated in the program. The Committee further notes that, according to information derived from the Household Labour Force Survey available to the ILO Department of Statistics (ILOSTAT), in 2020, the labour force participation rate was 66.5 per cent (71.1 per cent for men and 62.6 per cent for women), the employment-population ratio was 58.4 per cent (60.5 per cent for men and 56.6 per cent for women). Finally, the unemployment rate was 12.2 per cent (14.9 per cent for men and 9.6 per cent for women). The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide detailed updated information on the nature, scope and impact of the measures taken to promote full productive employment, including those adopted in the framework of the Decent Work Country Programme (DWCP) 2019-2023. It also requests the Government to provide detailed updated information on progress made in respect of the development and adoption of the National Employment Strategy (NES), and to provide a copy once it is adopted. In addition, the Committee requests the Government to continue to provide detailed updated information, including statistical data disaggregated by sex and age, on employment trends in the country, particularly on employment, unemployment and underemployment.

Groups vulnerable to decent work deficits. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, in 2020, 5,675 persons were registered in state employment regulation programmes, of which 54.5 per cent were women, 22.4 per cent were young people aged 16 to 29 and 6.2 per cent were persons with disabilities. The Government adds that 1,162 of the participants in these programmes acquired stable employment or became self-employed during 2020, 62 of which were persons with disabilities. In addition, the Government reports that 3,256 people became temporarily employed in paid seasonal public works, including 265 persons with disabilities. The Committee also notes the information provided by the Government regarding the adoption of new programmes aimed at promoting women's employment. The Government indicates that support is provided for jobseekers with children under the age of three. Assistance for childcare is also provided to parents returning to work while the child is under the age of two years. These measures aim to facilitate the return to work of people on childcare leave. In addition, on-the-job training is provided to mothers who do not have a competitive professional qualification in the job market to enable them to acquire competitive work skills at the workplace. The Committee nevertheless notes that, in its concluding observations of 31 October 2022, the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) noted with concern the limited access to stable and adequately remunerated employment for disadvantaged and marginalized groups of women, including women belonging to ethnic minorities, internally displaced women, women in a refugee-like situation, migrant women and women with disabilities (document CEDAW/C/ARM/CO/7, paragraph 35 (f)). Moreover, the Committee notes the information provided by the Government on the implementation and impact of different programmes aimed at promoting the employment of persons with disabilities, including the provision of financial assistance (reimbursement of 50 per cent of the monthly salary for one year) to employers of persons with disabilities. The Government also refers to the provision of a one-time compensation to employers hiring persons with disabilities to train them to support their acquisition of adequate skills and abilities, as well as for the adjustment of the workplace to their needs. The Government reports that, in 2020, there were 522 beneficiaries of financial support for training and 4 beneficiaries of the financial support for workplace adjustments. In addition, the Government refers to the adoption of Decision No. 1616-N of 14 November, 2019, which introduced amendments to several government employment programmes, with a view to expanding their scope and improving their implementation. For instance, the requirement of having the status of unemployed person for at least three months has been removed. The Government indicates that this conditional requirement was hindering the implementation of those employment programs which require a quick response to make the job seeker more competitive in the labour market and enable the jobseeker to rapidly meet the needs of the employer. Finally, the Government refers to the implementation of employment programmes to promote employment of the unemployed citizens of the Artsakh Republic, who were deported in 2020 due to the war with Azerbaijan: these targeted programmes include a three-month internship programme and a programme providing temporary employment through the paid public works system. The Committee nevertheless notes that the Government does not provide information on the measures taken in the area of vocational education and training aimed at promoting employment among young persons. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide detailed updated information, including statistical data disaggregated by sex, age and region, on the nature, scope and impact of the measures and programmes implemented to promote the employment of groups vulnerable to decent work deficits, including women, young persons, persons with disabilities and persons vulnerable to intersectional discrimination. With regard to the active labour market measures directed at young persons, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the nature, scope and the impact of the measures taken in the area of vocational education and training in relation to improving the employability of young persons.

Article 2. Implementation of active labour market measures. The Committee notes the Government's indication that no control mechanisms are established under the national legislation to monitor the activities of private employment agencies. The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide detailed information on any measures taken or envisaged, in consultation with the social partners, to regulate the activities of private recruitment agencies operating on Armenian territory. In this regard, the Committee invites the Government to consider the possibility of ratifying the Private Employment Agencies Convention, 1997 (No. 181), as the most updated instrument in this area.

Undeclared work. The Government indicates that amendments were introduced to the Tax Code of the Republic of Armenia during the reporting period with a view to strengthening the requirements regarding the formalization of employees. The Government reports that these amendments have contributed to increasing the number of registered employees and to strengthen the efficiency of the accuracy checks carried out to formalize the employees recruited, in accordance with the legislation and/or submit a registration statement for the employee. The Government reports that, between 2018 and 2020, 6,235 unregistered employees were identified. In addition, the number of jobs held by taxpayers with declared income increased from 513 000 in January 2019 to 593 000 in January 2021. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide updated disaggregated information on the impact of the measures taken to reduce the number of undeclared workers and facilitate their integration into the formal economy.

Article 3. Consultation of the social partners. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the State Employment Agency has continued to actively cooperate with the Republican and Territorial Coordination Committees on labour market issues, annual employment programs, and providing information on the implementation of the annual state employment regulation programs. The Government points out that, each year, the Republican Harmonisation Committee discusses and submits its opinions on the draft annual programme to the Republican Tripartite Commission, which is responsible for ensuring the implementation of the Republican Collective Agreement. The final draft annual programme, containing the views expressed by both parties, is then transmitted to the Government of the Republic of Armenia for approval. The Committee requests the Government to provide concrete examples of the manner in which the views of the social partners are taken into account in the development, implementation and review of employment policies and programmes.

Cameroon

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1970)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the General Union of Workers of Cameroon (UGTC), received on 16 September 2021, concerning the application of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this regard.

Article 1 of the Convention. Implementation of an active employment policy. The Government indicates that, as part of the promotion of self-employment, Framework Act No. 2019/004 of 25 April 2019 governing the social economy in Cameroon has been adopted and the corresponding decree has been signed. The Committee notes the UGTC's indication that it was not consulted on Act No. 2019/004 of 25 April 2019 and the related decree. Furthermore, the Committee notes the adoption, on 3 January 2020, of Decree No. 2020/0001 on the structuring and functioning of the network of social economy units. With regard to the development and implementation of an active employment policy, the Committee notes that in May 2017, the strategic components of the National Employment Policy (PNE) were developed with the technical and financial support of the ILO and approved by the interministerial committee responsible for monitoring employment in Cameroon. In this context, the UGTC observes that, despite the ILO's support, Cameroon has not yet adopted an act on employment policy. The Committee notes that, according to the ILO study, "Evaluation des besoins des unités de l'économie sociale et identification des chaînes de valeur prioritaires pour la création d'emplois décents au Cameroun" (Assessment of the needs of social economy units and identification of priority value chains for the creation of decent jobs in Cameroon), the Government has embarked on a process of structural reforms and macroeconomic policies, set out in Cameroon's National Development Strategy 2030. This strategy is reflected in Cameroon's development policy documents for the next ten years, namely the National Development Strategy 2020–30 (SND 2020-2030), the Rural Sector Development Strategy/National Agricultural Investment Plan 2020-2030 (SDSR/PNIA 2020-2030), and in the main lines of the National Social Economy Development Programme (PNDES), offering decent and productive employment opportunities to all. While noting the efforts made by the Government in the context of structural reforms and macroeconomic policies, the Committee recalls that the main requirement of the Convention is to declare and pursue a national employment policy for the promotion of employment and decent work, and urges the Government to take the necessary measures to finalize the development of the new national employment policy, in consultation with the social partners and relevant stakeholders. The Committee requests the Government to keep it informed of the measures taken and progress made in this regard, and to provide a copy of the new policy once it has been adopted.

Article 1(3). Coordination of education and training policy with employment policy. The Government indicates that, as part of the employment strategy, Act No. 2018/010 of 11 July 2018 governing vocational training has been adopted. The Government also indicates that the Act provides for the creation of the National Council for Vocational Guidance and Training, which is responsible for monitoring and evaluating the implementation of vocational training policy and strategies. It adds that eight regulatory texts establishing the modalities of application of the Act have already been signed. The Committee notes that, according to the provisions of Act No. 2018/010, in particular section 8(1) and (2), vocational training is governed by the principles of tripartism between the State, the employer and the worker (section 1), and that the State ensures that vocational training meets the needs expressed by socio-occupational groups, in order to minimize the mismatch between training and employment (section 2). It also notes that section 47(5) of the Act stipulates that the State shall ensure the relevance, quality and continuous adaptation of vocational training to national economic and socio-cultural realities, and to the international environment. Noting that the Government has not replied to the points raised previously, the Committee once again requests the Government to indicate how the State ensures consistency in the organization of vocational training as part of national or regional planning, in order to overcome the difficulty of coordinating education and training policy with employment policy. It also requests the Government to provide information on the consultations held with employers' and workers' organizations and to provide, in particular, specific examples of the manner in which the social partners' views are taken into account in the preparation and implementation of draft legislation, and in any other measures related to the development and implementation of a coordinated education and training policy. The Government is also requested to provide information on the impact of the implementation of the new Act on the occupational integration of categories of workers, particularly young workers, in the labour market.

Informal economy. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its 2021 report under the Termination of Employment Convention, 1982 (No. 158), concerning the introduction of facilitation and support measures for workers in the informal sector. In particular, the Government mentions support for small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs) in the textile and innovation sectors, social safety net mechanisms with an increase in family allowances to 60 per cent, the waiving of penalties for the late payment of social security contributions, a three-month suspension of checks on the National Social Insurance Fund (CNPS), tax exemptions for informal production units, and the application of tax and customs reforms to lighten the burden on employers. In this regard, the Committee notes that, according to the ILO study, “Etude sur la migration de l’économie informelle vers l’économie formelle : proposition de stratégie pour le groupement inter-patronal du Cameroun” (Study on Migration from the Informal to the Formal Economy: Proposed Strategy for the Network of Employers’ Organizations of Cameroon), the Government has implemented initiatives to reduce the size and expansion of the informal sector in Cameroon. In particular, it has created Enterprise Creation Formality Centres (CFCE) and fostered the creation of Approved Management Centres (CGA) to limit barriers to entry into the formal sector. The Committee requests the Government to provide up-to-date information on the impact of measures taken to facilitate the transition from the informal to the formal economy. In addition, it requests the Government to provide detailed information on the manner in which the facilitation and support measures taken contribute to the creation of decent jobs and provide adequate protection to workers in the informal economy.

Article 2. Collection and use of data on employment. The Committee notes that the Government does not provide any information in this regard. Given that data collection allows the results of employment policies to be examined and evaluated, and the monitoring of progress towards full, productive and freely chosen employment, the Committee once again request the Government to specify the active employment policy measures adopted as a result of the establishment of the various bodies responsible for collecting information on employment. It also requests the Government to indicate to what extent and the manner in which labour market information is used as a basis for the establishment of the new employment policy (Article 2).

Article 3. Participation of the social partners in the development and implementation of employment policies. The Committee notes the UGTC’s observations that trade union organizations are not part of the National Council for Vocational Guidance and Training. In this regard, it also notes the observations forwarded by the UGTC under the Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144), particularly concerning the lack of representativeness in the sectors of activity and the absence of a forum for inter-union reflection. Recalling the importance of the participation of the social partners and persons concerned in the consultation process with respect to the development and implementation of a national employment policy, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the participation of the social partners in the development and implementation of the national employment policy. The Committee also requests the Government to take all the necessary measures to facilitate the consultation of representatives of workers, including rural workers and informal economy workers, in the development and implementation of employment policy, as provided for in Article 3 of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Canada

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1966)

Previous comment

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Employment trends and active labour market measures. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the concerns raised by the Canadian Labour Congress (CLC) with respect to the lack of an active policy to promote full, productive and freely chosen employment that is articulated and integrated into socio-economic decision-making, as required by Article 1 of the Convention. The CLC indicated that the aims set out in Article 2 are difficult to coherently implement through measurable objectives that could lead to concrete reporting for the evaluation of programmes. The Committee requested that the Government indicate the manner in which active labour market measures are kept under review within the framework of an overall coordinated economic and social policy. The Government indicates that the Labour Market Development Agreements (LMDAs) and Workforce Development Agreements (WDAs) include a Performance Measurement Strategy. The data collected under the Strategy allow provincial and territorial governments to support the continuous improvement of programmes and services and ensure that investments are producing concrete results for the population, such as increased income and sustainable jobs. Under the Performance Measurement Strategy, provinces and territories provide the federal Government with data on the number of persons benefitting from employment measures and interventions completed under the LMDAs and the WDAs. The Committee notes that, according to the 2020-21 Employment Insurance Monitoring and Assessment Report, individuals that receive training and employment supports while receiving Employment Insurance (EI) income benefits earn more and reduce their dependence on EI and social assistance. The LMDAs provide labour market support measures to workers and employers across Canada. These supports range from less-intensive employment counselling and job search assistance to more intensive measures, such as skills training and experiential learning through targeted wage subsidies. Recent evaluations have examined the effectiveness of LMDA-funded supports and identified lessons learned for the efficient design and delivery of particular measures. According to the cited report, the incremental impact analysis demonstrated that Employment Assistance Services (EAS), Skills Development (SD) and Targeted Wage Subsidies (TWS) resulted in improvements in labour market attachments overall. These supports have also been shown to benefit sub-groups of participants: females, males, young persons, older workers, indigenous people, persons with disabilities, recent immigrants and visible minorities. The Committee notes that, according to the 2022 Budget, the federal Government provides more than 3 billion Canadian dollars (CAD) in funding annually to provinces and territories for the purpose of providing training and employment support through the Labour Market Transfer Agreements. These investments help more than 1 million Canadians every year prepare for their next job through programmes ranging from skills training and wage subsidies, to career counselling and job search assistance. Budget 2022 also proposes to amend Part II of the Employment Insurance Act to ensure that more workers are eligible to receive assistance before becoming unemployed, as well as to ensure that employers can receive direct support to re-train their workers. During the first months of the pandemic, the Canadian economy experienced its steepest output decline since quarterly data were first recorded in 1960. The Committee notes that the unemployment rate in February 2022 stood at 5.5 per cent, lower than prior to the COVID-19 pandemic. It further notes from Budget 2022 that, with the unemployment rate hitting near-record lows, some businesses are struggling to find workers, whereas many Canadians – women with young children, new graduates, newcomers, black and racialized Canadians, indigenous peoples, and persons with disabilities, among others – are facing barriers to securing meaningful and well-paid work. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing up-to-date information on the measures adopted or envisaged to achieve the objectives of the Convention and, in particular, on how these have helped the beneficiaries obtain full, productive and sustainable employment and decent work. It further requests the Government to continue to provide information, including statistical data disaggregated by sex, age and economic sector, on the current situation and trends regarding the active population, employment, unemployment and underemployment.

Article 3. Participation of the social partners in the formulation and implementation of policies. The Government reports that, pursuant to the LMDAs and WDAs, the payment of annual funding to provinces and territories is tied to deliverables, including annual plans and reports in which provinces and territories are required to provide information on consultations undertaken with employers' and workers' organizations. More specifically, provinces and territories must provide a description of the consultation process and the results of the process in their annual plans and reports, as well as a list of the stakeholders consulted. Broad-based consultations with provinces, territories and stakeholders provide an opportunity to identify ways to improve the labour market transfer agreements and guide future investments to strengthen labour market programming. The feedback received from labour market transfer agreement consultations held in 2016 with the Forum of Labour Market Ministers (FLMM) led to a significant reform of these agreements to expand and improve skills training and employment supports. Consultations also take place, on a needed basis, with federal, provincial, and territorial governments through the FLMM Working Group on Labour Market Transfer Agreements and Performance Measurement. This Forum enables partners to oversee and review the implementation of the performance measurement plan on LMDAs and WDAs, to ensure that it captures the key performance indicators required to fully capture the outcomes of programmes and services. The Committee recalls that Article 3 of the Convention calls for measures and programmes to be adopted and implemented under the national employment policy through an inclusive process of consultation with the social partners and persons affected by the measures to be taken (2020 General Survey, Promoting employment and decent work in a changing landscape, paragraph 94). Paragraph 5 of Recommendation No. 169 indicates that policies, plans and programmes adopted in the framework of the employment policy should be drawn up and implemented in consultation and cooperation with employers' and workers' organizations and other representatives of the persons concerned. The Committee requests the Government to provide updated detailed information on the content and outcomes of effective consultations held with the social partners on the matters covered by the Convention, including the consultations involving representatives of the persons affected by the employment measures to be taken.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Comoros

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes with concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee notes the observations made by the Workers Confederation of Comoros (CTC), received on 1 August 2017. It requests the Government to provide its comments on the matter.

Article 1 of the Convention. Implementation of an active employment policy. Youth employment. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to indicate in its next report whether the Act issuing the national employment policy had been adopted and to indicate whether specific difficulties had been encountered in achieving the objectives set out in the national Poverty Reduction and Growth Strategy Paper (PRGSP). The Committee notes with interest that the national employment policy act (PNE) was adopted through the promulgation on 3 July 2014 of Decree No. 14-11/PR enacting Framework Act No. 14-020/AU of 21 May 2014 issuing the national employment policy. The Government indicates that this Act aims to provide a common and coherent vision of the strategic approaches for taking national action on employment, by increasing opportunities for low-income population groups to access decent work and a stable and sustainable income. The Government adds that in November 2014, with ILO support, it developed and adopted the Emergency Plan for Youth Employment (PUREJ), which is part of the process to implement the PNE. The PUREJ involves the adoption of programmes to promote youth employment which result from priority measures identified in the strategic framework of the PNE and integrated in the Strategy for Accelerated Growth and Sustainable Development (SCA2D). The Government adds that the overall objective of the PUREJ is to ensure strong employment growth in the short and medium term. In this context, the PUREJ focuses mainly on the promotion of youth employment in job-creating sectors for a period of two years, in order to contribute to the diversification of the economy, the production of goods and services and the building of social peace. The Government points out that the objective was to create 5,000 new decent and productive jobs for young persons and women by the end of 2016, through the development of skills in line with the needs of priority sectors of the Comorian economy and support for the promotion of employment and vocational integration. The Committee notes that in May 2015 the Government signed, together with the constituents and the ILO, the second generation Decent Work Country Programme (DWCP), of which the main priority is to ensure the promotion and governance of employment. The Committee notes the observations of the CTC which indicate that the implementation of the PNE is not effective. It points out that the vocational training component, which is being conducted through a project with the European Union, is the only one being applied. In this regard, the provisions and mechanisms of the PNE have not been implemented and the text has not been disseminated to the public. The CTC also reports the dismissal of over 5,000 young persons without compensation. The Committee once again requests the Government to indicate whether specific difficulties have been encountered in achieving the objectives set out in the PRGSP. It requests the Government to provide more detailed information on the measures taken with a view to achieving the employment priorities established in the framework of the DWCP 2015–19, and on the impact of measures and programmes such as the PUREJ, which are aimed at increasing access to decent work for young persons. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the number of young persons who have benefited from these programmes.

Article 2. Collection and use of employment data. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide detailed information on the progress made with the collection of data on the labour market, and on the manner in which this data is taken into consideration during the formulation and implementation of the employment policy. It reminds the Government that it may avail itself of ILO technical assistance if it so wishes.

Article 3. Participation of the social partners. The Committee once again requests the Government to include full information on the consultations envisaged in Article 3 of the Convention, which requires the participation of all of the persons affected, and particularly employers' and workers' representatives, in the formulation and implementation of employment policies. The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary measures without delay.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Previous comments

The Committee notes the Government's replies to the observations of the Confederation of Workers Rerum Novarum (CTRN) in 2017, which were included in its report. The Committee also notes the observations of the CTRN, received on 31 August 2021. The Committee requests the Government to send its reply in this respect.

Article 1 of the Convention. Formulation and implementation of an active employment policy. The Committee notes the copy of the study by the Ministry of National Planning and Economic Policy (MIDEPLAN), provided by the Government, which presents the challenges identified during the implementation, in 2019, of the Bicentennial National Development and Public Investment Plan (PNDIP) 2019–22. The PNDIP provides for the adoption of measures to strengthen the productive capacity of the country and to promote employment. The Committee observes that, according to the study, the current challenges include the need to bring education into line with labour market requirements, as, although efforts have been made in this regard, the 2018 National Survey of Enterprises (ENAE) shows that there is a number of job vacancies due to the lack of skills required for those jobs among applicants. The study also shows that women and young persons have the lowest employment rates and limited access to employment opportunities due to lack of experience and training in non-traditional branches of activity (such as science, technology and engineering). The Committee also notes that, despite the implementation of various programmes and measures to consolidate and improve the competitiveness of small and medium enterprises (SMEs) (which constitute 97.5 per cent of the business environment), the COVID-19 pandemic has had adverse effects on the economy, including the contraction of economic activity, a decrease in employment and changes in employment contracts.

The Committee also notes that, in its observations, the CTRN reports a lack of employment policy in the country. It also states that the COVID-19 pandemic exacerbated the existing employment issues in the country. In this regard, the CTRN highlights the increase in unemployment and underemployment, and in violations of social and labour rights, such as failure to pay minimum wages and wage reductions. The CTRN also states that, between 2019 and 2020, levels of poverty (without taking into account revenue from the health emergency) increased from 21 per cent to 30.4 per cent, while levels of extreme poverty increased from 5.8 per cent to 11 per cent. In its reply to the 2017 observations of the CTRN, the Government refers to the continued implementation of the National Strategy for Employment and Productive Development (ENDEP), which aims to “increase opportunities to enable women and men to find decent and productive work, through a combined effort of economic and social policy, and the public and private sectors, which fosters inclusive growth and the reduction of poverty and inequality”. The Government also provides information on the adoption of a project to support the implementation of this strategy with the help of the ILO Office in San José. However, the Committee notes the Government’s indication that it does not have any information on the impact of the measures adopted to achieve the objective of the Convention, including those adopted under the ENDEP. In this regard, the Committee underscores the importance of having statistical information that allows for the evaluation of the impact of measures adopted to create jobs. The Committee recalls that “a comprehensive, participative and transparent monitoring and evaluation mechanism enables all the parties concerned to identify achievements and challenges in meeting policy objectives. The Committee emphasizes that it is essential to ensure that policies are (..) monitored and evaluated in relation to the established targets and indicators” (2020 General Survey, Promoting employment and decent work in a changing landscape, paragraphs 112 and 153). Lastly, the Committee notes the approval of Act No. 9635, Act on strengthening public finances, on 3 December 2018, which, among other measures, provides for the adjustment of the wages and benefits of public servants. The CTRN maintains that the above-mentioned Act was adopted despite being contrary to a number of ILO Conventions, such as the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) and the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98), as observed in a technical memorandum drafted by the ILO. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the impact of the measures adopted to achieve the objectives of the Convention, including those adopted under the ENDEP and the Bicentennial National Development and Public Investment Plan (PNDIP) 2019–22. The Committee reminds the Government that it may avail itself of ILO technical assistance in that respect. Regarding the Act on strengthening public finances, the Committee refers to its 2020 observation on the application of Convention No. 98, in which, while it noted the repeated observations of the CTRN reporting that the Act was contrary to the Convention, the Committee requested the Government to provide its comments in that respect.

Article 3. Participation of the social partners. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that no consultations on employment policies and programmes were held with the social partners during the period covered by the report. Furthermore, the CTRN reports that the Higher Labour Council (CST) was not convened during this period to hold tripartite consultations on employment policies and programmes. In this regard, the Committee underscores that it is essential to ensure that policies are developed, implemented and evaluated through a consultative process with the social partners and representatives of those concerned by the measures to be taken (2020 General Survey, paragraph 153). The Committee requests the Government to indicate the manner in which representatives of workers’ and employers’ organizations have been consulted, as well as representatives of the parties involved in the design, development, implementation, monitoring and revision of the active labour market measures adopted, including the Act on strengthening public finances.

Cyprus

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1966)

Previous comment

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Implementation of an active employment policy. Labour trends. The Committee notes the information on trends in employment and unemployment provided by the Government, derived from the Labour Force Surveys conducted by the Statistical Service of Cyprus in 2018, 2019 and 2020. The Government indicates that the labour market situation has deteriorated further in the period since the outbreak of COVID-19. In this context, the Committee notes that, according to the 2020 Labour Force Survey, the unemployment rate increased from 7.1 per cent in 2019 to 7.6 per cent in 2020. The employment rate (for the 20-64 age group) fell from 75.7 per cent to 74.9 per cent during the same period. The Government refers to the implementation of a number of active employment measures, including the Scheme Providing Incentives for the Employment of Unemployed Persons (2020-2024) and the new Subsidy Scheme Providing Incentives for the Employment of Persons with Chronic Diseases (2019-2024). The Government also refers to other employment promotion measures, such as steps taken to strengthen the public employment services and a programme to place Guaranteed Minimum Income (GMI) beneficiaries in employment for 6 months, to provide them with work experience opportunities in the public sector. In addition, the Committee notes the Government's indication that, from 2014 to 2019, Subsidy Schemes providing incentives to promote the employment of various categories of jobseekers have continued to be implemented by the Department of Labour and that the Government also continues to provide incentives to promote employment in the private sector. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide detailed updated information, including statistical information, disaggregated by sex and age, on the nature, scope and impact of employment measures implemented, including the various Subsidy Schemes in place, in particular on the number of jobs generated and the number of beneficiaries placed into employment. The Government is further requested to describe how the information compiled from the Labour Force Surveys is utilized in the design, implementation, monitoring and review of employment policies at the national level.

Specific categories of workers. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government concerning the development and implementation of targeted employment measures for specific groups of persons in vulnerable situations. In particular, it notes with interest that the Government continues to provide targeted training and incentives to encourage private sector enterprises to employ workers belonging to the disadvantaged target groups, including the long-term unemployed, young persons, older workers, those with chronic diseases, detainees and persons with disabilities. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide updated information, including statistical data disaggregated by age and sex, as well as by the target groups referenced above, on the nature, scope and impact of the active labour market measures implemented to increase the employability of persons in vulnerable situations and promote their access to sustainable and lasting employment opportunities.

Women's employment. The Committee notes that, in 2020, the unemployment rate for men increased from 6.3 per cent to 7.6 per cent, whereas the unemployment rate for women decreased, falling from 8 per cent to 7.6 per cent. The Committee nevertheless notes that the Government does not provide information with regard to the measures taken or envisaged to promote women's employment, particularly women belonging to disadvantaged groups, who frequently face double discrimination. Noting that the rate of unemployment of women declined in 2020, the Committee requests the Government to provide information indicating the reasons for this decline, particularly given that it occurred during the COVID-19 pandemic. The Committee also requests the Government to intensify strengthen its efforts to promote the active participation of women in the labour market and their access to sustainable employment and decent work, particularly for those facing multiple and intersecting discrimination, such as women with disabilities. It requests the Government to provide information on the nature, scope and impact of measures taken in this respect.

Youth employment. The Government refers to subsidy schemes for youth employment, such as the Scheme Providing Incentives for the Employment of Unemployed Young People up to 25 years old, which operated between 2016 and 2019. It also refers to new schemes being implemented (2020-2024), which continue to provide incentives to encourage private sector enterprises to employ young people between 15–29 years old who are not in Employment or Education or Training (NEETs). The Committee also notes the information provided concerning various schemes for youth employment implemented by the Human Resources Development Authority. In particular, the Committee notes that the youth unemployment rate decreased in 2019, falling from 20.2 per cent in 2018 to 16.6 per cent in 2019 and to 18.2 in 2020. At the same time, youth employment increased from 31.3 per cent in 2018 to 32.4 per cent in 2019; however, the youth employment rate subsequently declined to 31.3 per cent in 2020. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing detailed updated information, disaggregated by sex and age, on the nature, scope and impact of incentives and other measures taken to promote the employment and lasting labour market integration of young people, including measures to support young women and men during school to work transitions.

Education and training policies and programmes. The Committee notes the education and training measures implemented by the Human Resources Development Authority, including on-the-job training programmes with companies in Cyprus or abroad, six-month job placements accompanied by training allowances, job placements with Guaranteed Minimum Income (GMI) for the acquisition of work experience in the public sector, as well as training schemes for specific categories of workers who face difficulties in accessing the labour market, including young people, the long-term unemployed and persons with disabilities. In particular, the Committee notes the Small Units for Entrepreneurship Scheme, which has enabled 48 persons with disabilities to create their own small enterprises, as well as the Vocational Training Scheme for persons with disabilities, which has provided specific vocational skills to 41 applicants to help them keep their jobs or to enhance their employability with a view to improving their access to new employment opportunities. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide updated detailed information on the impact of the measures taken to promote education and training and on the relation of these measures to prospective employment opportunities, as well as the number of persons placed in employment as a result of such measures.

Article 3. Participation of the social partners. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in reply to its previous request concerning the application of Article 3. The Government is requested to continue to provide updated information in this respect.

Djibouti

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), received on 25 August 2022. It also notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 1 September 2022. The Committee notes that both observations raise issues in relation to the application of the Convention.

Article 1 of the Convention. Adoption and implementation of an active employment policy. ILO technical assistance. In response to previous comments, the Government indicates in its report that, although the strategy for the formulation of a national employment policy was commenced in April 2003, and new structures have been established, the preparation of a national employment policy paper has still not been completed. The Committee notes that the National Employment Forum held in 2010 showed the need to develop a new employment policy adapted to labour market needs, which will have to target as a priority the reform of the vocational training system and the improvement of employment support services. The Government indicates that, out of a population of 818,159 inhabitants of working age, recent estimates place the unemployment rate at 48.4 per cent. It also indicates that, following a mission for the evaluation of technical cooperation undertaken by the ILO in March 2011, the Government reiterated its commitment to developing a Djibouti Decent Work Programme. It adds that it is still awaiting Office support for this purpose. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to ensure that employment, as a key element of poverty reduction, is central to macroeconomic and social policies, and on the progress made in the adoption of a national policy for the achievement of full employment within the meaning of the Convention.

Youth employment. The Government indicates that in 2012, despite a certain improvement, unemployment particularly affected young persons with higher education degrees. Moreover, although the country does not currently have a formal strategy to promote youth employment, several initiatives have been established to improve the operation of the labour market, promote entrepreneurship and provide training adapted to labour market needs. The Committee invites the Government to provide information on the manner in which the measures adopted have resulted in productive and lasting employment opportunities for young persons, and on the collaboration of the social partners in their implementation.

Article 2. Collection and use of employment data. In March 2014, the Government provided the summary of the employment situation prepared by the National Employment and Skills Observatory. The number of jobs is increasing (30,118 jobs created in 2007, 35,393 in 2008 and 37,837 in 2010). The Committee invites the Government to indicate the measures taken to improve the labour market information system and to consolidate the mechanisms linking this system with decision-making in the field of employment policy. It also requests the Government to provide updated statistical data disaggregated by age and sex, as well as any other relevant data relating to the size and distribution of the workforce, the nature and scope of unemployment and underemployment and the respective trends.

Article 3. Collaboration of the social partners. The Committee recalls the importance of the consultations required by the Convention and once again requests the Government to provide information on the measures adopted or envisaged for the consultation of the representatives of the persons affected on employment policies.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Dominican Republic

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 2001)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Autonomous Confederation of Workers' Unions (CASC), the National Confederation of Dominican Workers (CNTD) and the National Confederation of Trade Union Unity (CNUS), received on 1 September 2021. The Committee requests the Government to send its comments in this regard.

Articles 1–3 of the Convention. Formulation and implementation of an active employment policy. Consultations. The Committee notes the Government's indication, in reply to its previous comments, that the National Employment Plan (PNE) adopted in 2014 was not implemented because of institutional and financial restrictions. The Government adds that, even though certain projects in the PNE were implemented, no evaluations of their impact were carried out. The Committee notes the information available on the Ministry of Labour's website concerning the process of preparing a new National Employment Plan (PLANE), with the support of "Eurosocial+", the European Union (EU) programme for social cohesion in Latin America. The objective of the new PLANE is to promote the creation of 600,000 new decent jobs for the 2021–24 period, which is 200,000 more than in the 2014 PLANE. The PLANE project measures include: economic incentives for investment; technical and vocational training to promote the development of human talent and the employability of the population in situations of great vulnerability; the modernization of the Public Employment Service; and technical and financial support for independent workers, micro, small and medium-sized enterprises (MSMEs), and green job initiatives. The Committee also notes that the National Employment Commission, a tripartite advisory body, was reactivated in May 2021, after six years of inactivity, with a view to launching the consultation process for the development of PLANE. The resulting project is the product of a process in which numerous actors have participated, through virtual thematic forums and numerous electronic consultations, such as representatives of the social partners, various government entities, academic experts and members of civil society. On 17 February 2022, the proposal for the new PLANE was presented to representatives of the social partners and public bodies for their comments, before its final draft. With regard to labour market trends, the Government states that, according to information from the Dominican Labour Market Observatory (OMLAD), between 2018 and 2021 the employment rate fell from 59.5 per cent to 56.8 per cent (71.8 per cent for men and 42.9 per cent for women), the unemployment rate rose from 5.3 per cent to 8 per cent (4.6 per cent for men and 12.8 per cent for women). The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed, up-to-date information on the status of the preparation of the new National Employment Plan (PLANE) and to send a copy of it once it has been adopted. The Committee also requests the Government to send detailed, up-to-date information on the content and results of the consultations held with the social partners and representatives of stakeholders, in particular representatives of the workers in rural areas and in the informal economy, regarding employment policies and programmes. The Committee further requests the Government to send up-to-date statistical information, disaggregated by age, sex and region, on labour market trends, including employment, unemployment and underemployment rates.

Coordination of training policies with employment policies. In its reply to the Committee's previous comments, the Government indicates that since 2016 there have not been any data on the impact of implemented training programmes owing to a lack of economic resources. The Government expresses the hope that after the implementation of employment recovery measures in the context of the COVID-19 pandemic, it will be possible to establish a basis to make it easier to conduct these studies. Moreover, the Government refers to the implementation of the Technical and Vocational Education and Training Support Programme (PRO ETP II), financed by the EU and the Spanish International Cooperation Agency (AECID). The general objective of the programme is to strengthen the technical and vocational education and training (ETFP) system to better respond to the demands of the education and production sectors and the training needs of the economically active population. As a specific objective, it is proposed to contribute to the strengthening of the institutional, normative and functional components of the national EFTP system. In this regard, it is planned to adopt measures aimed, inter alia, at: improving the capacities of the systems linked to the national vocational training system to ensure their participation in the preparation, implementation, monitoring and validation of the National Qualification Network; increasing the capacities of the competent institutions for improving the quality and relevance of the provision of EFTP in order to adapt it to the labour market; and linking the private sector to mechanisms for the design and implementation of EFTP policies through public-private partnerships for development. To achieve these objectives, it is planned, inter alia, to update the electronic employment exchange, and also to implement a labour information system which collates labour market indicators and statistics from various public institutions. Lastly, the Committee notes that the workers' confederations indicate in their observations that the National Institute for Vocational and Technical Training (INFOTEP) has expanded the provision of training and has conducted a survey to identify the requirements of the main occupations in demand and establish a skills and learning strategy to improve the country's competitiveness in the context of the digital era and the future of work. However, they point out that the training plans to promote employment are not coordinated. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information, including statistics disaggregated by age, sex and region, on the various training programmes implemented, including the Technical and Vocational Education and Training Support Programme (PRO ETP II), and also on their impact on securing lasting employment for men and women. With regard to the collection of data on the impact of these programmes, the Committee reminds the Government that it may avail itself of ILO technical assistance in this regard. Moreover, in the light of the observations of the workers' confederations, the Committee requests the Government to send detailed information on how the various programmes of training for employment are coordinated and in what manner consultations with the social partners are ensured.

Specific groups vulnerable to decent work deficits. The Committee observes that, according to ILOSTAT, in 2020, the overall unemployment rate of young persons was 14.9 per cent (11.6 per cent for women and 20.7 per cent for men), whereas 33.7 per cent of all young persons were either unemployed or not studying or receiving training (44.2 per cent for women and 31.1 per cent for men). The Committee notes the information supplied by the Government on the measures adopted to promote youth employment, such as the adoption in 2019 of the Primer empleo (initial employment) programme, which provides 6,200 young persons between 18 and 29 years of age with access to employment in the form of training for employment with formal enterprises, in particular promoting the participation of women and single mothers and persons with disabilities. The Government also refers to the implementation of the Escuela taller (workshop as school) programme, which provides young persons in vulnerable situations with job training in diverse areas such as crafts, carpentry, construction and electricity. The Government states that from 2015 to the first half of 2021 a total of 571 men and 265 women participated in the programme. Furthermore, the Government refers to the discussion on 25 May 2021 in the Chamber of Deputies of the bill on initial employment, which provides young graduates with the opportunity for internships or half-time work in various institutions so that they can develop acquired knowledge. The Committee notes that the workers' organizations claim in their observations that young persons who have finished higher education face major difficulties regarding access to the labour market because of the lack of job placement strategies for young persons. They also assert that bureaucratic obstacles and high demands regarding levels of previous experience make it difficult for young persons to secure their first job or a change of job. Moreover, they criticize the fact that many of the jobs on offer are precarious, temporary, offer low wages and do not provide opportunities for development. The Government, on the other hand, indicates that in order to promote jobs for women, adequate services with equal opportunities are provided in the programmes implemented by the Ministry of Labour and awareness-raising measures aimed at enterprises have been implemented to promote women's employment. In this regard, the Government states that it has requested enterprises to omit age and gender requirements in job vacancy profiles. Lastly, the Committee refers to its comments on the application of the Vocational Rehabilitation and Employment (Disabled Persons) Convention, 1983 (No. 159), in which it notes the detailed information provided by the Government on the measures taken by the National Council on Disability (CONADIS) to promote employment for persons with disabilities, as well as on the implementation of Basic Act No. 5-13 on equal rights for persons with disabilities, section III of which establishes a quota of two per cent for hiring persons with disabilities in private enterprises (compared with five per cent in the public sector). The Committee requests the Government to continue providing detailed, up-to-date information on the measures taken or contemplated to promote access to formal and lasting employment for groups vulnerable to decent work deficits, in particular young persons, women and persons with disabilities. The Committee also requests the Government to send up-to-date statistical information on the impact of such measures. It further requests the Government to provide up-to-date information on the status of the adoption of the bill on initial employment and to send a copy of it once it has been adopted.

Migrant workers. In its reply to the Committee's previous comments, the Government indicates that the labour legislation prohibits any kind of discriminatory practice in the hire of persons, whether national or foreign, in the context of an employment contract or a job application (principles IV and VII of the Labour Code). The Government states that a total of 3,931 persons, including workers, employers and public employees, have received training on various aspects of equal opportunities and non-discrimination in employment and occupation. Moreover, it reports on the establishment of the Labour Migration Committee, which is composed of representatives of various national institutions such as the Social Security Treasury (TSS), the National Institute for Migration (INM) and the Ministry of External Relations (MIREX). In this regard, the Government indicates that it is receiving advice and support from the International Organization for Migration (IOM) and the ILO. The Committee notes the adoption on 22 January 2021 of Resolution No. 119-21 normalizing the irregular migration situation of Venezuelan nationals on Dominican territory. Through this resolution, Venezuelan nationals who entered Dominican territory using a tourist card or a visa issued by the Dominican authorities and who have stayed on Dominican territory beyond the authorized period of validity, are eligible for an extension of stay and can apply for a non-resident permit in the student or temporary worker subcategories. The Committee requests the Government to send detailed, up-to-date information on the nature and impact of the measures adopted to prevent abuse in the recruitment of foreign workers in the country, including Resolution No. 119-21, and of national workers who emigrate in search of job opportunities abroad, including those adopted within the Labour Migration Committee.

Informal economy. The Committee notes that, on the basis of the “Eurosocial+” programme report of 28 September 2021 on the updating of PLANE, informality has become established in the country as a structural problem stemming from an economic model that maintains sustained growth in sectors which either do not create employment or do so in precarious forms. The Government also indicates that as a result of the pandemic, there has been an increase in informality, especially in the commerce and construction sectors. According to statistical information from OMLAD, the rate of informality in 2021 was 57.7 per cent (61.7 per cent for men and 51.5 per cent for women). In this regard, it is envisaged that PLANE will include measures for the development of passive employment measures, as well as the establishment of policies for the social protection of informal workers and the reduction of informality in the labour market. Moreover, the Government reports on the implementation of various measures aimed at combating informality in the context of the pandemic through support to MSMEs, such as the implementation of the recovery programme with DOP 4,100 earmarked for MSMEs. Lastly, the Committee notes the information provided by the Government, disaggregated by sex, age and region, on the number of formal workers who entered the labour market for the first time between 2012 and July 2021. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing detailed, up-to-date information on the nature and impact of the measures adopted to combat the high rate of informality in the country.

Micro, small and medium-sized enterprises (MSMEs). The Committee notes the information supplied by the Government on the measures taken to facilitate the establishment of MSMEs and cooperatives in the country. The Government refers, inter alia, to the implementation since 2013 of the “formalization single window” (VUF) for facilitating the establishment of MSMEs in all provinces of the country. The Committee notes with interest the Government’s indication that the functioning of the VUF has enabled the time and cost of registering enterprises to be reduced. The Government states that between 2014 and 2020 the percentage of enterprises registered through the VUF increased from 1.56 per cent to 66 per cent of all established enterprises. According to the MSME Policy Department, between 2012 and 2021 a total of 229,358 enterprises were established through in-person channels and between October 2013 and June 2021 a total of 36,695 enterprises were established through the FormalízateRD web portal. However, the Government indicates that it does not have any information on the number of jobs created by new enterprises. The Government also indicates that it is planned to amend Act No. 127-64 on cooperative associations and its implementing regulations, with the aim of modernizing the text and adapting the regulations to simplify the administrative procedures for setting up an enterprise. The Government adds that, between 2012 and 2021, a total of 479 cooperatives were created, with 133 in agriculture and two relating to commerce. As regards policies for the award of public contracts to SMEs, the Government indicates that, under sections 25 and 26 of Act No. 488-18, 15 per cent of purchases of goods and services by public institutions must go to MSMEs, and 20 per cent to those headed by women (with over 50 per cent in shareholding or social capital). Lastly, the Government indicates that the 2016 analysis of the impact of the public procurement and contracts policy on MSMEs and women revealed a positive impact on beneficiary enterprises, which experienced greater economic benefits, greater professionalization and less staff rotation, as well as an increase in the average wages of their workers. The Committee notes the observations of the workers' organizations, which indicate that in July 2021 a tripartite agreement was reached to modify wage fixing, since the previous methodology used to fix wages did not include MSMEs, thereby generating precarity and job informality among their workers. The workers' organizations also point out that Act No. 688-16 on entrepreneurship was adopted without prior consultation of the social partners, and they state that under that Act the enterprises covered by it are exempt from paying pension contributions for the first three years from the date of formalization. They object to the fact that this obstructs the development of the workers' pension fund, pushing back the age at which they can access their pensions. The Committee requests the Government to continue sending detailed, up-to-date information on the measures taken or contemplated to facilitate the establishment of MSMEs and cooperatives, particularly in disadvantaged regions with the highest unemployment rates. In particular, it requests the Government to send information on the status of the amendment of Act No. 127-64 on cooperative associations and its implementing regulations. The Committee also requests the Government to send statistical information on the number and type of enterprises established. As regards the collection of statistical information on the number of jobs created by those enterprises, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard and reminds it that it may avail itself of ILO technical assistance in this regard. Lastly, the Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the impact of policies for awarding public contracts to SMEs.

Fee-Charging Employment Agencies Convention (Revised), 1949 (No. 96) (ratification: 1981)

Previous comment

Part II of the Convention. Abolition of fee-charging employment agencies. The Committee notes the Government's indication that a new Employment Bill has been drafted with ILO technical assistance. The Government reports that the draft Employment Bill has been discussed on several occasions within the tripartite Labour Advisory Board (LAB). The Government makes particular reference to section 131 of the draft Employment Bill, which prohibits triangular forms of employment. It adds that the draft Bill will be forwarded to the Cabinet and subsequently to Parliament for its approval. The Committee nevertheless observes that the Government has not provided updated information on the manner in which the Convention is applied in practice. The Committee therefore reiterates its request that the Government provide updated information on the national legislation giving effect to Part II of the Convention. The Government is also requested to provide a copy of the new Employment Bill once it is adopted. The Committee also reiterates its request that the Government provide detailed updated information on the manner in which the Convention is applied in practice, including, for instance, extracts from official reports, information regarding the number and nature of the contraventions reported and any other particulars bearing on the practical application of the Convention.

Revision of Convention No. 96. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on any developments, in consultation with the social partners, concerning the possible ratification of the Private Employment Agencies Convention, 1997 (No. 181). In this regard, the Committee notes that the Government indicates that there is no information available on the outcome of the tripartite consultations held within the LAB with regard to the possible denunciation of Convention No. 96 and ratification of Convention No. 181. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it commits itself to fully implement the provisions of Convention No. 96 until such time as it is officially denounced subsequent to the ratification of Convention No. 181. In this respect, the Committee recalls that the Governing Body of the ILO (at its 337th Session in October 2019), on the recommendation of the Standards Review Mechanism Tripartite Working Group (SRM TWG), classified Convention No. 96 as being in the category of instruments that are no longer up to date and placed an item on the agenda of the 119th Session of the International Labour Conference in 2030 for due consideration to be given to its abrogation. The Committee recalls that the Governing Body of the ILO, at its 273rd Session in November 1998, invited the States parties to Convention No. 96 to contemplate the possibility of ratifying Convention No. 181. Such ratification would entail the immediate denunciation of Convention No. 96. Recalling that the ratification and application of Convention No. 181 would contribute to strengthening vigilance with regard to the activities of private employment agencies and the protection of workers, the Committee encourages the Government to follow up on the decision adopted by the Governing Body at its 337th Session (October 2019) approving the recommendations of the SRM TWG and to consider ratifying the Private Employment Agencies Convention, 1997 (No. 181), which is the most up-to-date instrument in this subject area. The Committee reminds the Government that it may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office in this regard.

Finland

Employment Service Convention, 1948 (No. 88) (ratification: 1989)

The Committee notes the observations made by the Federation of Finnish Enterprises (SY), the Central Organization of Finnish Trade Unions (SAK), the Finnish Confederation of Salaried Employees (STTK), the Confederation of Unions for Academic Professionals in Finland (AKAVA) and the Confederation of Finnish Industries (EK), transmitted together with the Government's report.

Article 1 of the Convention. Contribution of the employment service to employment promotion. The Government refers in its report to the Local Government Pilots on Promoting Employment (1269/2020), which began on 1 March 2021 and will end on 30 June 2023 and involve a total of 25 areas and 118 municipalities. The Government is transferring responsibilities for employment and economic development services (TE services) to municipalities and strengthening their role as strategic partners. The pilot projects aim to increase the effectiveness of employment promotion efforts through enhanced coordination of the resources, skills and services of the State and municipalities. In this regard, a funding model is to be created for municipalities to enable them to develop their employment promotion activities in order to increase employment by 7,000 to 10,000 people, including for all jobseekers under the age of 30 and all immigrants and foreign-language speakers. The Government also refers to temporary amendments made to employment legislation and regulations, in particular amendments made to Chapter 2, section 4, subsection 2 of the Act (1456/2016), which requires the authorities to provide jobseekers with the interview opportunities at regular intervals. Regarding the activities of the public employment service, the Committee notes the information provided by the Government drawn from the annual Employment Service Statistics. In particular, it notes that, in 2020, the number of job vacancies decreased, while the monthly registration of unemployed jobseekers increased up to 30 per cent compared to the previous year. In respect of the "Nordic job search model", which seeks to reform both the provision of employment services and the criteria for receiving unemployment benefits as part of the implementation of labour market policy, the Committee notes the observations of EK, which emphasizes that the Nordic model should make use of private employment services, which play a significant role in matching labour supply and demand. The EK further observes that a portal should be built for private providers of TE services to give them access to the pool of applicants in public TE services. With regard to the public employment service (PES) reform, the Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its report on the application of the Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122), in particular the implementation of the TE-Digi project, which aims to modernize the electronic service system of the TE public services to better respond to the future needs of the employment services and the investment plan of the Ministry of Economic Affairs and Employment and KEHA Centre for the development of new knowledge-based management and operating models in TE services. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide updated, detailed information, including disaggregated statistical data, showing the impact of the reforms on effective recruitment and placement of workers and on specialization by occupation or branch of activity within the employment services to respond adequately to the needs of jobseekers, including for groups in vulnerable situations, such as persons with disabilities and other groups, particularly those vulnerable to intersectional discrimination. It further requests the Government to provide information on the measures adopted or envisaged to facilitate effective collaboration between the public employment service and private employment agencies in order to achieve the optimal functioning of the labour market and contribute to the objective of full employment.

Article 9. Staff of the employment service. In response to the Committee's previous comments, the Government indicates that the human resources in the Employment and Economic Development Offices (PES) have increased since 2017. In this respect, the Committee notes the statistics provided by the Government, which show that, in 2021, 3,963 persons were working in employment and economic development services (TE services). It further notes that the local government pilots on employment launched in March 2021 will change the structure of the Employment and Economic Development Offices of the PES, by transferring TE staff to municipalities. With regard to PES staff, the Government indicates that the Nordic labour market service model, which entered into force in 2022 and is designed to streamline and customize the job search process, will increase the resources for TE services by €70 million a year. More than 1,000 experts will be hired to provide customer service, representing an increase of 40 per cent compared with the resources of TE Offices in 2019. In this regard, the Federation of Finnish Enterprises (SY) observes that, while the Nordic job search model could improve the efficiency of the PES, the operations of the PES must be closely monitored and evaluated. In addition, the SAK, the STTK and AKAVA observe that labour market organizations are concerned about how high-quality services can be guaranteed for the unemployed, even with the additional resources mentioned by the Government. They emphasize that it is the quality of services and not their quantity that matters in meeting the needs of unemployed persons. The Committee requests the Government to communicate updated information on measures taken or envisaged to provide specialized training to the new and existing public servants in the public employment service to allow them to ensure a service which responds to the concerns of all unemployed persons, including disadvantaged categories of persons such as young people, older workers, migrant workers, workers with disabilities and those belonging to groups vulnerable to intersectional discrimination.

Vocational Rehabilitation and Employment (Disabled Persons) Convention, 1983 (No. 159) (ratification: 1985)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations made by the Federation of Finnish Enterprises (SY), the Confederation of Finnish Industries (EK), the Central Organization of Finnish Trade Unions (SAK), the Finnish Confederation of Salaried Employees (STTK) and the Confederation of Unions for Academic Professionals in Finland (AKAVA), transmitted together with the Government's report.

Articles 3 and 7 of the Convention. Promotion of vocational rehabilitation and employment opportunities for persons with disabilities. The Government indicates that the Act on the Rehabilitation Benefits and Rehabilitation Allowance Benefits of the Social Insurance Institution of Finland (1097/2018) was amended in January 2019. The amendment introduced a new section 7a to the Act on the organization of vocational rehabilitation for young adults. Under the new provision, insured persons between the ages of 16 and 29 are entitled to vocational rehabilitation if their functional capacity is materially impaired and rehabilitation is appropriate to support or promote their functional capacity and life management skills, as well as their ability to study or to secure employment. The Government adds that the Social Insurance Institution shall arrange vocational rehabilitation services for young adults that determine and assess their needs for rehabilitation, rehabilitation opportunities, study and employment opportunities, together with coaching services (subsection 4 of section 7a). Young adults no longer need to submit forms or medical certificates at the stage of applying for rehabilitation and are more actively guided to Social Insurance Institution rehabilitation through their own networks, such as the Ohjaamo One-Stop Guidance Centres and Outreach youth work. The Government indicates that the number of unemployed people with disabilities and long-term illnesses declined until the beginning of the coronavirus pandemic in April 2020 and that the negative effects of the pandemic on unemployment were significantly less pronounced for these persons. The Committee notes that various measures have been taken and new projects, such as the Work Ability Programme and the “Career opportunities for people with partial work ability” (OTE) have been carried out to improve the labour market opportunities of persons with partial work ability. The Committee notes that, during the OTE project (2015–2018), the number of unemployed persons with partial work ability decreased by 30.2 per cent and persons with partial work ability found employment mostly in the open labour market and in all sectors. The Government indicates that, following the OTE key project, there were 12,000 fewer unemployed jobseekers with partial work ability than at the start of the project, which generated direct savings of €100 million per year, as unemployment costs were reduced. The Committee notes that, from 2015 to 2020, the unemployment rate of persons with disabilities and long-term illnesses declined from 52,654 to 46,799, respectively. The Government also refers to the IPS-Sijoita ja valmenna! project (Individual Placement and Support project), which was launched in different parts of Finland in early 2021 to ensure that services supporting work ability are equally available and accessible to persons with disabilities. The Committee notes that the Government plans to extend the IPS-Sijoita ja valmenna! operating model to a total of six hospital districts to support people with mental health disorders on an equal basis to assist them in entering, returning and remaining in the labour market. It further plans to increase the number of work ability coordinators in the Employment and Economic Development Offices (TE Offices) to support people with an impaired ability for work. With regard to people with partial work ability, the Government indicates that a Special Task Company (Välittäjä Oy) has been established to advance the employment of people with partial work ability who occupy a weak position in the labour market. The Välittäjä Oy offers a supported job, as well as the training and other support needed to enable people with partial work ability to secure employment in the open labour market. The Government also refers to subsection 3 of section 7 of the Act on the Rehabilitation Benefits and Rehabilitation Allowance Benefits of the Social Insurance Institution of Finland (566/2005), which governs a business subsidy for vocational rehabilitation. In this regard, the SY observes that wage subsidies for promoting the employment of persons with disabilities should not be used as a permanent solution for employing disadvantaged groups. In addition, the EK observes that the use of wage subsidies for the employment of people with disabilities is justified; however, it considers that wage subsidies must not be used in a way that distorts competition and must be limited to measures that support the employment of persons with disabilities who are facing the most severe employment-related difficulties. The SAK, the STTK and the AKAVA observe that employers’ attitudes towards the employment of people with partial work ability have become more positive. They further observe that the 2021 report of the Ministry of Economic Affairs and Employment emphasizes that employers require more information and support in relation to the recruitment of people with partial work ability and in planning the modifications these persons may require for work purposes. They also observe that vocational rehabilitation for persons already in employment must begin at a sufficiently early stage while the employee is still able to work. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing detailed and up-to-date information, including statistics disaggregated by sex, age and occupation relating to the impact of the measures adopted to promote employment opportunities for persons with disabilities in the open labour market. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the manner in which the organizations of workers and employers, as well as representative organizations of and for persons with disabilities, are consulted with regard to the implementation, monitoring and review of the vocational rehabilitation and employment policy for persons with disabilities.

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1971)

Previous comments

Article 1(2) of the Convention. Implementation of an active employment policy. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on the active employment policy and its impact with regard to the creation of productive employment and combating unemployment and underemployment, and to indicate whether any other mechanism is envisaged to replace the “small and medium-sized enterprise recruitment bonus”. The Government indicates in its report that since the entry into force of Act No. 2018-771 of 5 September 2018 on the freedom to choose one’s professional future, the employment policy in France has continued to evolve particularly in terms of combating unemployment and increasing labour market dynamism. The Government also indicates that measures to facilitate both job retention and recruitment, particularly for the most vulnerable groups, such as young persons, have been established as part of the “Recovery France” plan. In addition, new comprehensive and integrated job search support measures have been established within public employment services, such as Pôle emploi or local branches. The Government indicates that additional resources will be allocated to Pôle emploi as part of the “National Recovery and Resilience Plan”. Furthermore, the part-time economic activity scheme has been made more flexible and generous in order to contain the rise in unemployment. The retraining and skills enhancement schemes have also been strengthened with, inter alia, FNE-Training (a scheme dedicated to training for part-time employees or those in enterprises facing economic difficulties) or the scaling-up of the ProA scheme (work-study promotion or retraining schemes). A new scheme to anticipate economic change and retraining needs, entitled “Collective Transitions”, has also been introduced. In this respect, the Committee notes the detailed statistics provided by the Government, particularly those relating to the number of people registered with Pôle emploi and required to seek employment (categories A, B, C), which stood at 5,688,700 in the second quarter of 2021. It also notes the INSEE annual data for 2021 on underemployment, disaggregated by sex (8.6 per cent for women and 4.3 per cent for men) and age (10.4 per cent for young persons aged 15–24, 6 per cent for those aged 25–49 and 6.1 per cent for workers aged 50 or over). With regard to employment trends, the Committee notes the data relating to labour market analyses and indicators (INSEE), in particular those relating to trends in salaried employment, excluding temporary work, by status and by activity sector from 2015 to 2020, and in temporary work by user sector from 2000 to 2020. Regarding bonuses and recruitment grants, the Government refers to the introduction of bonuses and recruitment grants with a view to promoting the integration of particular categories of workers who face obstacles in accessing the labour market, such as young persons, persons with disabilities, the long-term unemployed and older workers. In this respect, the Committee notes the establishment of specific measures to promote the integration of older workers into the labour market, such as through the payment of a €2,000 grant to employers who recruit job seekers aged 45 or over. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that the French employment policy has been significantly affected by the health crisis and that several measures have been put in place to mitigate the impact of the pandemic on governmental employment policies, particularly within the framework of the "Recovery France" and "A solution for every young person" plans. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide detailed and up-to-date information, including statistics, disaggregated by age and sex, on the nature, scope and impact of the active labour market measures taken to promote sustainable employment and decent work, particularly within the framework of the implementation of the provisions of Act No. 2018-771 of 5 September 2018 on the freedom to choose one's professional future and the implementation of the "Recovery France" plan and the National Recovery and Resilience Plan.

Article 3. Participation of the social partners. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in response to its previous request concerning the application of the provisions of Article 3.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Coordinating Committee of Agricultural, Commercial, Industrial and Financial Associations (CACIF), supported by the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), received on 1 October 2020, and the Government's reply, received on 14 November 2020. The Committee also notes the observations of the Autonomous Popular Trade Union Movement, Global Unions of Guatemala, received on 16 October 2020. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this regard.

Articles 1 and 3 of the Convention. Implementation of a national employment policy. Consultations with the social partners. The Committee notes with interest the efforts made by the Government to achieve the objectives of the Convention within the framework of a coordinated economic and social policy. In this connection, the Committee notes the launching in February 2017 of the National Decent Employment Policy (PNED) 2017-32, which is articulated with the National K'atún Development Plan 2032. The PNED was developed with the technical support of the ILO and the participation of a broad range of actors at the national and regional levels, including representatives of workers' and employers' organizations, and of women, indigenous peoples and youth. The PNED envisages the adoption of measures in four thematic areas: employment generation, human capital development, a conducive environment for enterprise development and formalization. The PNED includes priority measures for: persons with disabilities, returning migrants, older persons, the indigenous population, the LGBTI community, young persons with a criminal record and refugees. The Committee also notes that the Government reports the establishment of the National Decent Employment Commission (CONED) as the body responsible for the implementation of the actions envisaged in each of the four thematic areas of the PNED through a Technical Institutional Round Table composed of four subcommittees which include representatives of employers' and workers' organizations. The thematic priority of employment generation includes among its priority actions the implementation of: (i) the National Plan for the Generation of Decent Employment, which envisages the adoption of measures with a view to the generation of decent jobs in sectors that make a greater contribution to the economic growth and competitiveness of the country; (ii) the National Programme of Migration for Development, which has the objective of putting to good use the knowledge acquired abroad by Guatemalan migrants which are applicable to national development; and (iii) the Programme for the Reinforcement of the Public Employment Service, which envisages the adoption of measures to improve the functioning of the National Network of Employment Services. The Committee also notes the information provided by the Government on the measures implemented within the context of the reinforcement of public employment services, such as the organization of employment fairs and kiosks, the establishment of a window for returning migrants and the conclusion of agreements with organizations focusing on migrants. Finally, the Committee notes the statistical data provided by the Government on the number of persons in vulnerable groups who received guidance and were helped by public employment services to enter the labour market in 2019 and 2020.

However, the Committee notes that the Trade Union Movement, in its observations, considers that there is no effective national employment policy promoting decent work so that citizens have the opportunity to choose work in accordance with their capacities and experience. The Trade Union Movement indicates that, as a consequence, work in the informal economy is growing disproportionately and part-time work is increasing in the formal economy, which is resulting in a reduction in workers' rights, such as the right to social security and to receive the minimum wage. Moreover, the rise in unemployment and migration to departmental and local capitals is increasing further. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing detailed and updated information on the nature, scope and impact of the measures adopted to promote full, productive and freely chosen employment, including those adopted within the framework of the National Decent Employment Policy (PNED) 2017-32. It also requests the Government to provide information, including specific examples, on the manner in which consultations have been held, and their views taken into consideration, with employers' and workers' organizations and representatives of other groups affected (such as women, young persons, indigenous peoples and workers in the informal economy) with a view to the development and implementation of employment policies and programmes, as well as the nature, scope and outcome of the consultations.

Education and training. The Committee observes that the thematic area of the PNED covering the development of human capital includes, among other priority action, the implementation of the National Youth Training Programme in Transversal and Specific Skills with the objective of promoting training for work. The Government indicates that, within this context, Ministerial Decision No. 3386-2018 was approved institutionalizing the National Labour Training System (SINAFOL) as the structure which manages and articulates the government institutions, the productive sector and the social partners with a view to determining and implementing technical education and training policies and strategies in the country. The objectives of the SINAFOL include the improvement of technical labour and vocational training, the reduction in the gap between the supply of training and productive demand, the design of training supply associated with occupational groups and vocational qualifications. The Government also refers to the creation of the National Vocational Training Commission with the objective of promoting the articulation and coordination of Government institutions, the productive sector and the social partners with a view to implementing and revising every five years the model of technical vocational training. In 2018, the Skills Certification System (SCC) was developed and its implementation was launched with the objective of recognizing and certifying the skills, knowledge, capacities, abilities and competences of persons engaged in trades and occupations learned over a lifetime. In this respect, the Government reports the establishment of various sectoral round tables for the development of national catalogues of families of occupations, vocational skills and training modules. The Government indicates that representatives of the productive sector and training related to each occupational family participated in these round tables. The Committee also notes the Government's reference to the implementation of various vocational education and training programmes, including the implementation of the Guatemala Vocational Training Threshold Programme, with the support of the United States of America, which provides for the adoption of reforms in the education sector and the mobilization of resources with a view to improving the quality and pertinence of middle-level education; and the Labour Skills Certification Programme, which promotes the certification of the competences of citizens who have knowledge or skills. With reference to the latter Programme, the CACIF proposes to seek opportunities through other approaches, such as dual education. The Committee also notes the information contained in the Government's report on the number of participants in the Technical Capacity-building for Employment Programme, through which capacity-building opportunities are provided to vulnerable groups (such as young persons who are neither studying nor working, the unemployed and underemployed, persons with disabilities and returning migrants) with a view to strengthening their skills and competences through the provision of a technical background and vocational training with a view to their appropriate labour market integration. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing updated information on the nature and impact, including statistical data disaggregated by sex and age, of the measures implemented in the field of vocational education and training in relation to potential employment opportunities. It also requests the Government to provide information on the measures adopted to ensure the effective coordination of vocational education and training policies and programmes with employment policies and programmes.

Labour market information. The Committee observes that, according to the data of the National Statistical Institute (INE), during the second half of 2019, the participation rate was 59.1 per cent (83.1 per cent for men and only 38.7 per cent for women) and the gross occupation rate was 58 per cent (81.7 per cent for men compared with 37.7 per cent for women). The Government adds that the open unemployment rate was 2 per cent (1.7 per cent for men and 2.5 per cent for women), while the visible underemployment rate was 6.5 per cent (6.2 per cent for men and 7.1 per cent for women). The Committee also notes that the PNED envisages the establishment of a National Labour Information System (SNIL) with a view to implementing an evaluation and monitoring system of the PNED and making available to labour market institutions, employers and the population in general all the available labour market information. Noting that the employment rate of men is more than twice that of women, the Committee request the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to promote productive, sustainable and decent work for women, as well as on the impact of these measures on women's employment. It also requests the Government to continue providing updated statistical data, disaggregated by sex and age, on labour market trends, including employment, unemployment and underemployment (visible and invisible) and informality rates, disaggregated by sex, age and rural and urban areas. The Committee further requests the Government to provide statistical data on the labour market situation and trends as a basis for identifying the impact of the measures adopted to promote the employment of specific categories of workers, such as women, young persons, older persons, migrant workers, persons with disabilities, indigenous peoples, and workers in the rural sector and the informal economy. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in the establishment of the National Labour Information System (SNIL).

Youth employment. The Committee observes, based on the National Employment and Income Survey (ENEI), that in 2019 the youth unemployment rate was 4.6 per cent (4 per cent for men and 5.7 per cent for women) and the rate of young persons who neither study nor work was 28.2 per cent (9.5 per cent for men and 45.8 per cent for women). The Committee notes the information provided by the Government on the implementation of various programmes to promote youth employment. The Government refers, among other measures, to the implementation of the Strategic Institutional Plan 2016-21 of the Technical Capacity-building and Productivity Institute (INTECAP), the objectives of which include the extension of the coverage of initial certifiable training, with emphasis on vocational training for youth. The Government indicates that 145,496 men and 88,983 women benefited from the INTECAP in 2018. The Committee also notes the information provided by the Government on the labour market integration of young persons following the certifiable training provided by the INTECAP. The Government adds that, through the Artisanal Social Grant Programme, conditional cash transfers are provided with a view to strengthening skills for the manufacture of artisanal products. The Government indicates that around 3,000 persons in 51 municipal areas have benefited from such grants, of whom 98 per cent were poor or extremely poor women. The Government also refers to the implementation of the National Workshop Schools Programme, which seeks to contribute to poverty reduction among young persons through training for employment, as well as the First Job Social Grant Programme, which has the objective of facilitating the formal labour market integration of unemployed young persons between 18 and 25 years of age living in poverty or extreme poverty through their temporary recruitment by enterprises as apprentices. Finally, the Committee notes the detailed information provided by the Government on the measures implemented by the National Employment Service to promote youth employment (such as employment guidance and mediation services, the organization of employment fairs, vocational training and capacity-building) and on the impact of these measures. The Committee requests the Government to provide updated information on the nature and impact of the measures implemented to promote youth employment, particularly for the most underprivileged categories of young persons. It also requests the Government to continue providing updated statistical data, disaggregated by age and sex, on youth employment trends.

Persons with disabilities. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government on the number of persons with disabilities who found employment, and the numbers of enterprises and persons in the public and private sectors who received training on the subject of disability within the framework of the Social Inclusion Programme (Empléate Inclusivo), which promotes the access of persons with disabilities to decent work through the improvement of their employability. The Government also refers to the holding of consultation workshops on the proposed legislative initiative for the promotion of work, employment and entrepreneurship for persons with disabilities. Nevertheless, the Government indicates that statistical data is not available on the labour market situation of persons with disabilities as the employment surveys carried out by the INE do not cover the subject of disability. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing detailed and updated information on the measures adopted with a view to promoting the access of persons with disabilities to the open labour market. In this respect, the Government is requested to make every effort to compile, analyse and then communicate statistical data on the labour market situation of persons with disabilities so as to enable the assessment of the impact of the measures taken to increase access to the open labour market for persons with disabilities. It also requests the Government to provide information on the situation with regard to the proposed legislative initiative on the promotion of work, employment and entrepreneurship by persons with disabilities, and to provide a copy once it has been adopted.

Informal economy. The Committee notes that, according to the data of the Labour Market Observatory (OML), during the second half of 2019, 65.3 per cent of the occupied population in the country were working in the informal economy (63.8 per cent of men and 68 per cent of women). The Committee observes that the PNED includes among its thematic areas the facilitation of the transition to formality of economic units and workers in the informal economy. In this connection, the Government indicates that in 2019, with the technical assistance of the ILO and the support of EUROSOCIAL, the National Formalization Strategy was designed and that it provides for the adoption of measures to increase the coverage of social protection, the facilitation of administrative procedures, the simplification of the tax system, vocational training and action to improve productivity. The Government also reports the establishment of the Subcommission for the Transition to Formality, which is composed of various national institutions, including the Guatemalan Social Security Institute (IGSS), the CACIF and workers' organizations. The Committee also notes the information provided by the Government on a series of measures adopted to promote the transition from informality to formality, including: the introduction of reforms to the Code of Commerce to facilitate and simplify the establishment of formal enterprises; the development of the "Así se hace" ("This is how it is done") portal as a tool for carrying out administrative procedures for the registration of enterprises; and campaigns to promote formalization. In this regard, the CACIF emphasizes the need to take preventive action in relation to inspection with a view to reducing current deficiencies. In its response, the Government refers to the development of a strategic plan for the reinforcement of the General Labour Inspectorate with a view to improving the enforcement of labour legislation. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that action has been taken since 2017, with ILO technical assistance, with a view to determining a National Wage Policy based on tripartite social dialogue and ensuring effective compliance with the minimum wage in both the formal and informal economies. However, the Committee observes the indication by the CACIF in its observations that there has been no progress in the development of the National Wage Policy. In this regard, the Government indicates that there is currently a proposed Bill and that a road map has been developed with a view to its adoption.

The Committee also notes that in December 2018 a paper was presented on the statistical definition of the informal sector and informal employment in Guatemala, with a view to establishing a concept of the informal economy in the country, in accordance with the most recent recommendations of the ILO International Conference of Labour Statisticians (ICLS). The Government also reports the implementation of a pilot plan for formalization involving traders in the informal economy in the municipalities of Tecpán and Chimaltenango. Finally, the Committee notes the measure taken for the provision of assistance to informal economy workers in the context of the COVID-19 pandemic. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing detailed and updated information on the scope of the informal economy and on the nature and impact of the measures adopted under the PNED to facilitate the transition to the formal economy, particularly in rural areas of the country, including those adopted within the context of the National Formalization Strategy.

Rural employment. The Committee notes that, according to the ENEI, in the first quarter of 2019, 31.9 per cent of the economically active population were engaged in activities in the agricultural, stock-raising and forestry sector, and the open underemployment rate in the sector was 36.2 per cent. The Committee observes that the priority action set out in PNED includes the preparation of the "Rural Development Plan, An Agricultural and Stock-raising Revolution", with a view to promoting decent work in rural areas with the participation of producers' associations through the implementation of productive investment plans for rural areas and technological packages. The Committee also notes the information provided by the Government on the findings of the diagnosis of decent rural youth employment undertaken by the OML with the cooperation of the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO). The objective of the diagnosis was to identify opportunities for the generation of employment and self-employment in rural areas, identify occupational trends and training needs and design proposals for interventions through active employment policies focusing on rural youth employment. The Government adds that progress has also been made in the accessibility of employment guidance and placement services in rural areas, as there is at least one employment manager in each of the 22 departments of the country. Moreover, a rural focus has been adopted for the Municipal Employment Single Windows (VUMES) located in municipal areas with a scarce network of enterprises with the objective of providing support to persons living in rural areas and engaged in agricultural activities. The CACIF considers that it is necessary to establish annual targets for the VUMES as a means of measuring their outreach and impact with a view to developing strategies to promote and generate formal employment in rural areas. In this regard, the Government indicates that the intervention strategy of the VUMES includes quality standards and follow-up and measurement indicators, as well as annual targets for the number of beneficiaries to be provided with support in relation to the needs of each area. The Government also refers to the implementation of the Rural Education Project V (PROEDUCV) with the support of the Development Bank of the Federal Republic of Germany (KfW). The objective of the project is to improve the supply of technical education with a view to promoting the access of young persons with few resources, and particularly rural and indigenous young persons, to training for quality employment adapted to the needs of the labour market. The Committee notes that the Trade Union Movement in its observations denounces the precarious conditions of workers in the agricultural sector. It also denounces the existence of child labour in the sector, including in palm oil enterprises, and irregularities in their investigation. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the nature, scope and impact of the measures adopted to promote rural employment, including updated statistics disaggregated by sex, age, socio-occupational category, economic sector and region. With regard to the concerns expressed by the Trade Union Movement in relation to the precarious working conditions and existence of cases of child labour in plantations, the Committee refers the Government to its 2021 comments on the Plantations Convention, 1958 \(No. 110\), and requests the Government to provide detailed and updated information on the inspections carried out in plantations, including the violations of labour standards reported.

Employment Service Convention, 1948 (No. 88) (ratification: 1961)

Articles 1 and 3 of the Convention. Contribution of the employment service to employment promotion. The Committee notes that the attachments mentioned in the Government's report have not been provided. The Committee recalls the Government's previous indication that the revised National Employment Policy (NEP), adopted on 19 July 2017, provides for the establishment of at least two community employment centres (CECs) in all local government areas in the country, which are intended to provide a full range of employment services to jobseekers in both rural and urban areas, including training, referrals, career counselling and information on job vacancies. In this context, the Committee notes the Government's clarification that there are 774 local government areas in the country rather than 744, as previously reported. The Government also indicates that the labour offices in the country's 36 states (including in the Federal Capital Territory) each have a section that serves as a public employment centre. The Committee reiterates its previous request that the Government provide specific updated information on the nature, scope and impact of measures taken or envisaged to implement the provisions of the National Employment Policy (NEP) with respect to the structure and functioning of the employment service. It also once again requests the Government to provide statistical information disaggregated by age and sex, on the number and location of public employment offices that have been established and are in operation, the number of new staff recruited for these offices, the number of applications for employment received, the number of vacancies notified, and the number of persons placed in employment by such offices. The Committee also reiterates its request that the Government indicate the manner in which the employment service, in cooperation with the other public and private bodies concerned, ensures the best possible organization of the labour market with a view to the achievement and maintenance of full, productive and freely chosen employment.

Articles 4 and 5. Consultations with the social partners. The Committee welcomes the Government's indication that a National Labour Advisory Council (NLAC) has been inaugurated, and that issues related to Articles 4 and 5 of the Convention will be discussed at the NLAC's meetings. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the procedures adopted for the appointment of workers' and employers' representatives to the National Labour Advisory Council (NLAC), as well as on the consultations held within the NLAC regarding the organization and operation of the employment service. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate whether and to what extent measures have been taken to establish committees at the regional or local level as contemplated in Article 4(2) of the Convention.

Article 6. Organization of the employment service. The Committee had previously noted that some of the employment exchanges and the professional and executive registries in place had been upgraded to model job centres. Noting that the Government has not provided information in response to its previous comments, the Committee reiterates its request that it provide updated detailed information, including disaggregated statistical data, on the impact of the reorganization and restructuring of the employment service under the National Employment Policy (NEP), as well as up-to-date information on the operation of the job centres and their contribution towards meeting the needs of workers and employers, especially in regions with high levels of unemployment. The Committee also requests the Government to provide updated information in relation to the operation of the job centres in all 774 local government areas, including the number and location of community employment centres (CECs), the number and distribution of staff, the training provided to them, and the impact of their activities in ensuring the best possible organization of the national labour market. In addition, the Government is requested to provide information on any additional measures taken or envisaged to respond to the needs of workers and employers throughout the country, particularly in those regions of the country with high levels of unemployment.

Article 7. Particular categories of jobseekers. The Committee had previously noted the provisions in sections 4.7.3 and 4.7.4 of the NEP, which called for the Government to develop and implement a range of measures to ensure the increased participation of women and young persons in the workforce and the full employability of persons with disabilities. In this context, the Committee welcomes the adoption in 2018 of the Discrimination Against Persons with Disabilities (Prohibition) Act, as envisaged under section 4.7.4 of the NEP. It notes that the Act prohibits discrimination on the ground of disability by any person or institution in any manner or circumstance (section 1(1) of the Act), and provides that a person with a disability has the right to work on an equal basis with others, including the right to the opportunity to gain a living by work freely chosen or accepted in an open labour market and work environment (section 28(1)). The Act also establishes the National Commission for Persons with Disabilities, whose powers include the establishment and promotion of inclusive school, vocational and rehabilitation centres for the development of persons with disabilities, as well as receiving complaints made by persons with disabilities with respect to the violation of their rights (section 37(j) and (n)). The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information, including statistical data disaggregated by age and sex, on the impact of the Discrimination Against Persons with Disabilities (Prohibition) Act, 2018 on access to employment services, as well as any other measures adopted or envisaged to promote the employment of persons with disabilities on the labour market. Referring to its previous comments, the Committee also requests the Government to provide detailed updated information on the nature, scope and impact of measures taken to promote women's employment, including in the framework of the self-employment promotion programmes for women mentorship and the gender-specific career counselling services.

Article 8. Employment of young persons. With respect to measures taken to promote youth employment, the Government reports that section 1(2) of the Finance Act of 2020 establishes an exemption from the payment of the tertiary education tax for small companies with a turnover of up to 25 million naira (approximately US$58,100), with the aim of encouraging youth entrepreneurship. It further indicates that the Nigerian Youth Investment Fund (NYIF) provides a sustainable pool of resources through which young people can access capital support for their businesses. The Committee notes with interest the adoption of the Nigerian Youth Employment Action Plan 2021-2024 (NIYEAP), developed with the support of the Office, and which is centred around four priority areas of intervention: employability, entrepreneurship, employment and equality of opportunity. It also notes that the NIYEAP is informed by the ILO Call for Action on Youth Employment and aligned with the Global Initiative on Decent Jobs for Youth. The NIYEAP's strategic lines of action in relation to employment include strengthening online and offline career information, counselling and guidance services, promoting availability of accurate up-to-date information on jobseekers and vacancies and increasing the capacity of resource and service centres. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed updated information, including statistical data disaggregated by age and sex, on the impact of the measures taken by the employment services to assist young persons in securing lasting employment and decent work. The Committee further requests the Government to communicate information in relation to vocational guidance, education and training and employment placement services or other relevant services offered by the public employment service with a view to enabling young persons to acquire the necessary skills to enable them to access opportunities for sustainable, decent and freely chosen employment. It reiterates its request that the Government provide information on the specific services and activities provided by the employment service with a view to achieving the objectives set out in section 4.7.1 of the National Employment Policy (NEP), namely generating employment opportunities and promoting skills acquisition for young persons.

Article 10. Measures to encourage the full use of employment service facilities. The Committee notes that the Government does not provide information responding to its previous comments on this point. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to provide detailed information on the measures taken or envisaged by the employment service in collaboration with the social partners to encourage the full use of employment service facilities, including specific examples of activities carried out to reach out to employed and unemployed persons throughout the country.

Article 11. Cooperation between public and private employment agencies not conducted with a view to profit. The Government reports that there is effective cooperation between the public employment service and private employment agencies (PEAs). In this respect, it indicates that: (i) annual national workshops are organized for PEAs, in collaboration with the Human Capital Providers Association of Nigeria (HuCaPAN), on the topics of labour administration, decent work, labour market information and challenges faced by PEAs in the field; (ii) stakeholder meetings are organized with the aim of encouraging exchanges of ideas; (iii) the Ministry monitors PEAs on a yearly basis; and (iv) the HuCaPAN occasionally donates working materials to support the private employment services. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing up-to-date information on the measures adopted or envisaged to promote and maintain cooperation between the public employment service and PEAs not conducted with a view to profit, including with respect to the content and outcome of the annual national workshops held between the public employment service and PEAs.

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Korea Enterprises Federation (KEF) submitted with the Government's 2019 and 2020 reports and the Government's responses thereto. The Committee also notes the observations of the Korean Confederation of Trade Unions (KCTU) received on 20 September 2019. The Government is requested to provide its comments in this respect.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Overall labour market trends. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government on labour market trends, indicating that the labour participation rate for persons 15 to 64 years of age increased from 63.2 per cent in 2017 to 63.3 per cent in 2019. It adds that the overall employment rate for persons 15–64 increased year-on-year, from 66.6 per cent in 2017 to 66.8 per cent in 2019, whereas the overall unemployment rate increased slightly, from 3.7 per cent in 2017 to 3.8 per cent in 2019. The Committee notes that, according to data available to the ILO Statistics Department (ILOSTAT), as of 2021, the labour participation rate had declined only slightly from 2019 pre-pandemic levels, reaching 63.1 per cent (72.7 per cent men and 53.7 per cent women). It also notes that, while the overall unemployment rate remained relatively stable, declining to 3.6 per cent from 2019 to 2021, the unemployment rate for young persons aged 15–24 in 2021 was more than twice as high as that of the 15–64 age bracket, reaching 8.1 per cent during this period. In respect of active labour market measures, the Government refers to the adoption of the Plan to Develop Public Employment Service in June 2019. Currently, there are 989 public employment service centres operated by eight ministries and an additional 232 centres operated by local governments. In addition, a plan to achieve innovation in vocational skills development was adopted in April 2019. The annual number of trainees among jobseekers and unemployed persons participating in vocational training programmes was 280,000 in 2019, while the number of employed persons participating in such programmes was 294,000. The Government indicates that the Minister of Employment and Labour formulates a basic employment policy plan every five years in accordance with the Basic Employment Policy Act. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide comprehensive updated information on overall labour market trends, including statistical data disaggregated by sex and age, relating to employment, unemployment and underemployment. It further requests the Government to continue to provide detailed updated information regarding the nature, scope and impact of active labour market measures implemented to promote full, productive and freely chosen employment in the Republic of Korea.

Measures addressing dualism in the labour market. The Government reports that the share of non-regular workers among wage workers increased by 3.9 per cent from 32.5 per cent in 2013 to 36.4 per cent in 2019. Among non-regular workers, the number of temporary and part-time workers increased, while the number of non-standard workers, such as dispatched and agency workers decreased. The Committee notes that the Policy Directions for Referral Workers in the Private Sector were adopted and came into force on 4 December 2019. Moreover, the Committee notes that, in the private sector, the Government provides subsidies to small and micro enterprises (SMEs) to assist them in converting non-regular workers into regular workers. The proportion of voluntary non-regular workers also increased. In this respect, the Committee notes the information provided by the Government on the measures taken to convert non-regular workers in the public sector into regular workers. As of May 2020, the converting process for 181,000 non-regular workers reached 95.4 per cent of the target number of 205,000. Moreover, in smaller organizations, 5,743 out of 6,195 non-regular workers were converted to regular status. Moreover, in the private sector, the Government provides subsidies to small and micro enterprises (SMEs) to assist them in converting non-regular workers into regular workers. However, the Committee notes that the Government does not provide information on the status of the proposed amendments to the Act on the Protection of Dispatched Workers. It notes that, according to the observations of the KCTU, a significant percentage of non-regular workers in the public sector were converted to regular status by newly established subsidiaries of public institutes, whose main function is to hire these workers to work for their parent companies. The KCTU points out that this leaves the converted workers in triangular employment relationships, in which they are classified as a category separate from that of regular workers and subject to a different system of wages. The KCTU expresses the view that the policy support provided by the Government to promote the voluntary conversion of non-regular workers in the private sector to regular workers to be limited and short-term in nature. The Committee notes that, according to the 2021 OECD Inclusive Growth Review of Korea: Creating Opportunities for All, despite the Government's efforts, labour market dualism remains a key challenge. The report indicates that the proportion of non-regular workers remains high, with women, young persons and older workers being disproportionately employed in non-regular employment, where they earn approximately one-third less than regular workers. Only 70.8 per cent of non-regular workers are covered by unemployment insurance. Temporary workers earn less than 60 per cent of the hourly wage of a regular worker and have lower probabilities of moving into regular employment than unemployed persons. In this context, the Committee notes that the Government does not provide information on the status of the proposed amendments to the Act on the Protection of Dispatched Workers. In addition, the Committee notes the observations of the KCTU, in which it notes that the Government's efforts to promote flexible working hours is one of the main reasons for the low-wage structure in Korea, leading to a decline in the quality of employment. It adds that, despite efforts made to reduce working hours in recent years, this has been offset by employers' recourse to flexible hours and special exceptions which allow employers in specific industries to have workers continue to work beyond the legally permitted maximum hours and/or to change the length of their breaks. The Committee requests the Government to intensify its efforts to reduce labour market dualism in both public and private sector with a view to creating full, productive and lasting employment opportunities for both regular and non-regular workers. It also requests the Government to continue to provide detailed updated information on progress made or results achieved in this regard, including information on the status of the amendments to the Act on the Protection of Dispatched Workers. In addition, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken to address the concerns raised by the Korean Confederation of Trade Unions (KCTU) with respect to the wage structure, working hours and quality of jobs in the industries eligible for special exceptions.

Job creation policy and the COVID-19 pandemic. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the "Five-year Job Policy Roadmap" was adopted in October 2017, establishing job creation as a national priority. As implementing measures taken under the Roadmap, the employment rate and the number of the employed for the overall population increased. The Government nevertheless indicates that the country is facing economic recession and employment shock due to the COVID-19 pandemic. In response to the difficulties in the labour market, the Government invested approximately 12 trillion won to develop and actively carry out additional measures to stabilize employment and create jobs, by expanding employee retention subsidy, designating sectors to receive special employment support, deferring the deadline for social insurance contributions, introducing emergency employment stability subsidies, a loan for the employment retention fund and providing subsidies under labour-management agreements to maintain employment. In addition, the Government established and implemented the "Korea New Deal Initiative" in July 2020 to protect jobs and to support domestic demand. In particular, the Initiative aims to expand the employment and social safety net to better protect those who are particularly vulnerable in time of crisis. The KEF indicates in its observations that, although the government estimates that employment indicators such as the employment-to-population ratio continue to improve since various measures to support employment have been implemented, the number of employed persons has been decreasing since the pandemic began. Noting the difficulties in labour market due to the COVID-19 pandemic, the Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to create full, productive and sustainable employment opportunities for all, particularly the most vulnerable during the crisis. It also requests the Government to continue to provide information on the nature of the measures taken and results achieved in this regard. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the role of the social partners during the development and implementation of these measures.

Youth employment. The Committee notes that, according to the observations of the KEF, it is necessary to improve the assessment of the employment impact of the measures taken in respect of youth employment, and to better manage and monitor the existing subsidies, such as allowances for young job seekers, so that they are used for their purpose. The Committee notes the Government's response to the KEF's observations, indicating that it recognizes the recent rise in the extended unemployment rate of young persons, from 21.7 per cent in 2016 to 23.8 per cent in 2019, and that market response to measures taken is lagging behind actual progress. The Government indicates that there has nevertheless been continuous improvement of the youth employment indicators year on year. It adds that the youth unemployment rate also shows an overall decreasing trend despite some fluctuations. The Government further states that it is facing the biggest challenge to youth employment over the next three to four years due to demographic changes, with a large number of young persons entering labour market. To address this challenge, a youth employment strategy was developed in March 2018, focusing on providing strong incentives for companies to hire young persons and addressing problems in the job-seeking process. The Government also refers to the implementation of various initiatives, including the K-Digital Training Programme, to provide training through business, universities and institutions equipped with innovative technologies and training capacity, with the aim of fostering 180,000 young persons in high-tech industries. In particular, tailored vocational training and employment support are provided to youth not in employment, education or training through the Naeil Irum (achieve tomorrow) School Programme. The Committee notes that, on 27 August 2021, the Government introduced amendments to the Special Act on the Protection of Youth Employment, which extended the regulations on the employment of unemployed youth in public institutions for a two-year period. Pursuant to section 5 of the Special Act, public institutions are required to employ unemployed young persons (15-34), who must constitute 3 per cent of their total workforce. The Committee also notes steps taken by the Government to diversify the programmes offered by the Youth Advancement Support Project, which supports young persons who have given up on finding a job or are experiencing job anxiety and depression, as well as the Youth Job Leap Incentive, which provides support to SMEs to encourage them to employ young people facing difficulties in entering the labour market. In the context of the COVID-19 crisis, the Government increased the number of recipients of the youth job search allowance from 50,000 to 100,000 persons and the employment success package programme from 50,000 to 130,000 persons. Additional budgets have also been allocated through the additional youth employment subsidy program, providing support to 90,000 persons. Noting the increasing number of young persons seeking to enter the labour market, the Committee requests the Government to strengthen its efforts to promote the long-term integration of young persons in the labour market, including educated young persons and other categories of young people who encounter difficulties in finding employment. It also requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged in this regard, as well as any progress made or results achieved.

Employment of women. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government on the adoption of the 6th Basic Plan for Equal Employment to improve the quantity and quality of employment of women in December 2017 and its implementation, by providing systematic support for maternity protection, promoting a discrimination-free working environment and supporting work-life balance. Various measures are being taken under the 6th Basic Plan, such as extending the scope of application of the Equal Employment Opportunity Act to all workplaces, strengthening protection and monitoring of sexual harassment at work, imposing obligations on employers to address the gender wage gap, promoting education that is free of gender stereotypes, providing re-employment support for women whose careers have been interrupted, as well as increasing parental leave benefits and extending the paid paternity leave from 3 days to 10 days. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that the employment rate of women is continuously increasing, notably among women in their 30s, from 55.5 per cent in 2013 to 60.7 per cent in 2019. However, the Committee notes that, despite the reduced gap, the overall employment rate of women 15 to 64 is still significantly lower than that of their male counterparts, increasing from 70.7 per cent in 2019 to 72.7 per cent in 2021 for men and from 51.6 per cent in 2019 to 53.7 per cent in 2021 for women. The Committee further notes that, according to the observations of the KCTU, women account for 55.6 per cent of all non-regular workers and this proportion has been steadily increasing since 2003. The KCTU indicates that, after their job breaks due to marriage and pregnancy, women re-enter the labour market through precarious and irregular jobs, working for limited terms or in part time in cleaning, domestic work and service jobs. The Committee notes that, according to the 2021 OECD report, while the gender wage gap has declined significantly since 1992, from 47 per cent in 1992 to 32 per cent in 2019, at 32 per cent it is still the highest among the OECD countries. Against this backdrop, the Committee notes that, pursuant to the revision of the Gender Equality Act and the Labour Relations Commission Act adopted on 21 May 2021, the Labour Relations Commission Correction system to Address Gender Discrimination in Employment came into effect on 19 May 2022. In addition to imposing penalties on employers for gender discrimination in employment, the correction system allows workers who have been subjected to discrimination to apply for and receive redress, including improvement of working conditions and appropriate compensation. The Committee requests the Government to strengthen its efforts to increase women's participation in the labour market, particularly in full, productive and sustainable employment, and to provide updated comprehensive information on the nature and impact of measures taken. Recalling its previous comments regarding the Workers with Family Responsibilities Convention, 1981 (No. 156), the Committee also requests the Government to continue to provide information on measures taken or envisaged to assist both female and male workers to reconcile their work and family responsibilities.

Employment of older workers. The Committee previously noted that retired employees continue to work in non-regular and part-time positions until their late sixties due to an inadequate social safety net, and that measures were taken to strengthen the outplacement and re-employment services to older workers with lifetime planning and vocational skills, including through the wage peak system. The Committee notes the Government's indication that an analysis of the employment effect of the subsidy for employing older workers and the mid-long term policy direction for employment stability of older workers, carried out by the Korea Labour Institute in 2017, shows that the wage peak system has an overall positive impact on employment of older workers. The Government also indicates that tailored training programmes are provided to older workers, however, it is hard to measure the number of persons placed in employment as a result of the customized training, due to the lack of accumulated data samples of trainees. The Committee also notes that the statistic information provided by the Government shows an overall increase from 2013 to 2018 in the employment rate of older workers, from 73.2 per cent to 75.2 per cent among those aged 50-59 and from 38.4 per cent to 40.1 per cent among those aged 60 and over. The Committee notes that, according to the 2021 OECD report, at 34 per cent, the employment rate of workers over 65 in Korea is twice the OECD average. The report also notes, however, that low job quality for older Koreans remains a significant challenge, with many retired workers finding new employment in precarious and low-paid jobs, or in self-employment. The 2021 OECD report notes that Korea is well above the OECD average, reaching 45.7 per cent of those over 65 years of age. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide detailed information on the measures taken to promote productive employment opportunities for older workers and their outcomes. It also requests the Government to continue to provide statistical information on employment creation, job placement results and income levels of older workers.

Migrant workers. The Committee notes the absence of information in this regard. Recalling its previous comments under the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111), the Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the situation of migrant workers in the labour market.

Article 3. Participation of the social partners. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication that social partners participate in the formulation and implementation of employment policies through meetings held within various tripartite structures. In particular, the ESLC was established in November 2018. A tripartite joint implementation monitoring group was formed at the ESLC to monitor the implementation of the Tripartite Jobs Pact. In July 2020, a tripartite agreement was concluded to overcome the COVID-19 crisis through the ESLC aiming to maintain jobs. The implementation of this agreement is monitored by a special committee established in August 2020. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on consultations held with the social partners on the matters covered by the Convention. It also requests the Government to provide detailed information on consultations held with representatives of the persons affected by employment policy measures, and representatives of workers in non-standard forms of employment.

Romania

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1973)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Employment trends and active labour market policies. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the overall employment rate for the active population (15-64 years) reached 66.0 per cent in the third quarter of 2020, showing an upward trend compared to 63.9 per cent in 2017. It also notes the persistently lower employment rates for women in 2017 (55.8 per cent for women compared to 71.8 per cent for men) and in the third quarter of 2020 (56.9 per cent for women compared to 74.9 per cent for men). The Committee notes that, according to ILOSTAT data, the overall unemployment rate in 2020 was 5 per cent (5.3 per cent for men and 4.7 per cent for women, respectively). The Government refers to the Human Capital Operational Program (HCOP) as an important tool for financing employment measures, structures in seven priority axes, including employment (axes 1, 2 and 3), social inclusion (axes 4 and 5), education (axis 6) and technical assistance (axis 7). The Government also indicates that Act No. 76/2002 on the unemployment insurance system and employment stimulation during the period 2016–18 was amended, with the aim of increasing employment opportunities for registered unemployed persons and jobseekers and stimulating employers to hire registered unemployed persons. The Committee notes that job subsidies are provided to employers who offer employment opportunities to specific groups of workers, including new graduates, persons with disabilities, registered unemployed persons over the age of 45, long-term unemployed persons, young people in the NEET category (not in employment, education or training), youth at risk of social marginalization and unemployed single parents. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing updated detailed information on general employment trends, including statistical data disaggregated by sex and age. It further requests the Government to continue providing information on the impact of its employment policy measures in terms of the creation of productive employment and decent jobs, job creation, particularly for specific groups such as women, youth at risk of social marginalization, persons with disabilities, older workers and the long-term unemployed.

Youth employment. The Committee notes that the unemployment rate of youth (15–24 years) stood at 18.3 per cent in 2017, rising to 19.2 per cent in the third quarter of 2020. Moreover, according to the 2020 European Commission Country Report for Romania (SWD (2020) 522 final), in 2018 the percentage of young people not in education, employment or training (NEET) was one of the highest in the European Union, with three times as many NEETs among the young rural resident population (15–24) compared to those living in urban areas. The Government indicates that, as part of its efforts to support the labour market integration of young persons, particularly those in the NEET category, the Ministry of Labour and Social Justice elaborated the Youth Guarantee Implementation Plan 2017–2020. The Government also reports that it approved a draft Youth Law on 5 July 2018 which was sent to Parliament. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing updated detailed information, including statistical data disaggregated by age, sex and rural/urban areas on the nature and impact of the measures taken to facilitate lasting employment opportunities for young people, especially those classified as NEETs. It also requests the Government to provide information on progress made regarding the adoption of the new Youth Law, and to provide a copy once adopted.

Roma minority. The Committee notes the Government's reference to the Strategy for the Inclusion of Romanian citizens belonging to the Roma Minority 2012–2020 as well as to axes 4 and 5 of the HCOP, which focus on reducing social exclusion. The Government indicates that the National Agency for Employment is responsible for implementing measures taken to attain the employment objectives, based on annual employment programs. Measures taken include the provision of information on employment services in communities with large numbers of Roma, allocation of territorial budgets, job exchanges and development of collaboration with Roma representatives. The Committee notes that the Government exceeded its target of providing employment to 5,385 members of the Roma community in 2015, with 6,295 Roma being placed in employment; however, the targets set for 2016 and 2017 were not fully achieved. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide updated detailed information, including statistical data disaggregated by sex and age, on the nature and impact of the measures taken to promote access to lasting employment and decent work for members of the Roma community.

Article 3. Participation of the social partners in the formulation and implementation of policies. The Committee previously requested the Government to provide specific examples of how the social partners are effectively consulted and participate in decision making on the matters covered by the Convention. In this respect, the Committee notes the Government's reference to the development of the Youth Guarantee Implementation Plan, indicating that the social partners were consulted during this process. The Government also indicates that social partners and non-governmental organizations play an important role in the implementation of various programmes and projects related to employment, promotion of youth-related initiatives, training ventures, job placement, apprenticeship and traineeship programmes. The Committee further notes that the National Employment Program, developed each year by the National Agency for Employment since 2002, is formulated on the basis of proposals from the county employment agencies and the Bucharest Municipality Agency, taking into account the economic and social situation at the territorial level and the strategic targets in the programmatic documents adopted at national level. The Government indicates that the National Employment Program targets specific groups that encounter difficulty in accessing the labour market, such as members of the Roma community, persons with disabilities, young persons covered by the child protection system, foreigners, refugees and beneficiaries of other forms of international protection, persons who have executed custodial sentences and victims of trafficking. The Committee requests the Government to provide updated information on the manner in which the social partners are effectively consulted and participate in the development of the National Employment Programme each year. It also requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to ensure that these consultations include representatives of other segments of the economically active population, including representatives of the Roma community, persons with disabilities, women and young persons, as well as of persons working in informal economy.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Uganda

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1967)

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Coordination of employment policy with poverty reduction. The Committee previously requested information on the second National Development Plan 2015/16–2019/20 (NDPII), including on the results of programmes aimed at stimulating growth and economic development, raising living standards, responding to labour force needs and addressing both unemployment and underemployment. The Government's report does not contain information on the NDPII, instead it refers to continued challenges such as the gender pay gap, lower wages in rural areas than in urban areas, and comparatively low labour productivity. The Committee notes with interest the adoption of the third National Development Plan 2020/21–2024/25 (NDPIII), whose principal goal is "Increased Household Incomes and Improved Quality of Life of Ugandans". According to the NDPIII, the proportion of the labour force in paid employment increased between 2011/12–2016/17, and enrolment in business, technical and vocational education and training increased significantly. The NDPIII nevertheless indicates that labour underutilization remains a challenge, as a large number of Ugandans are underemployed. The Committee notes that, according to the ILOSTAT database, as of 2017, the overall unemployment rate in Uganda stood at 9.8 per cent (8.4 per cent for men and 11.7 per cent for women, respectively). The labour force participation rate was 49.1 per cent in the same year, with a higher participation rate for men than for women (56.9 and 41.8 per cent, respectively). The ILOSTAT database also indicates that the composite rate of labour underutilization for 2017 stood at 30.9 per cent. In this context, the Committee notes that the five strategic objectives of the NDPIII include strengthening the private sector's capacity to drive growth and create jobs, as well as enhancing the productivity and social well-being of the population. Noting the continued challenges identified by the Government in its report, the Committee requests the Government to provide detailed updated information on the active labour market measures taken and the results achieved in the implementation of the NDPIII, in terms of stimulating growth and economic development, raising living standards, responding to labour force needs and addressing unemployment and underemployment. The Committee further requests the Government to provide up-to-date statistics on current trends regarding employment, unemployment and underemployment, disaggregated by sex, age, religion, economic sector and region.

Impact of COVID-19. The Committee notes that, according to a 2020 report from the World Bank, fiscal year 2020 saw a real GDP growth of 2.9 per cent in Uganda, less than half of the 6.8 per cent recorded in fiscal year 2019, mainly due to the impact of the COVID-19 crisis. The World Bank further indicates that employment recovered following the easing of mobility restrictions, with an increase in the share of employment in agriculture, but that it had not returned to previous levels in urban areas. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information on the nature and impact of response and recovery measures taken in the context of the COVID-19 pandemic with a view to promoting inclusive sustainable employment and decent work. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the challenges encountered and the lessons learned in this context.

Promotion of youth employment. The Committee previously requested information on the measures envisaged or adopted to reduce the unemployment rates of young people as well as the proportion of young people in informal employment. In this respect, the Committee notes that, as of June 2020, according to the NDPIII, the youth unemployment rate stood at 13.3 per cent, and that it seeks to reduce this rate to 9.7 per cent unemployment by the end of the five-year period. According to the NDPIII, there is a large youth population in Uganda (78 per cent); however, a mismatch exists between the skills required by the labour market and the knowledge taught by training institutions. The Committee notes the high proportion of young people in informal employment. The NDPIII indicates that most non-farming employment is in the informal sector (91 per cent), with young people occupying 94.7 per cent of these jobs. The NDPIII envisages various new projects related to youth employment for the period 2020/21–2024/25, including the Youth Livelihood Programme Phase 2 and the Micro, Small and Medium Enterprise Nurturing for Youth Employment Project. The Committee notes the adoption of the Technical and Vocational Education and Training (TVET) Policy in 2019, which aims to reform the TVET system. The TVET Policy establishes a number of objectives, including improving the quality of the TVET system and strengthening the role of employers and business communities in TVET delivery. The Committee notes that, to promote the economic relevance of TVET, the TVET Policy calls for establishing and linking the TVET Management Information System to the Labour Market Information System as well as to promote lifelong learning opportunities for TVET. The Committee encourages the Government to pursue its efforts to address the issues related to youth employment identified in the NDPIII, including the skills mismatch and measures to anticipate the future needs of the labour market in the provision of TVET. It requests the Government to provide detailed information on the nature of programmes and projects implemented to promote youth employment, including in the field of TVET and in the context of the NDPIII, and their impact on access for young people to sustainable employment and decent work. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to provide up-to-date statistics on youth employment and unemployment rates, disaggregated by sex, age, urban versus rural areas and education level, where available.

Promotion of women's employment. In its previous comments, the Committee requested information on measures to combat persistent occupational segregation on the basis of sex and to increase the participation rate of women in the formal labour market. The Committee notes that the Uganda Women Empowerment Programme supported 43,977 women beneficiaries through 3,448 projects in the fiscal year 2017–18. The Committee nevertheless observes that the information contained in the NDPIII, also indicates that many women do not have access to arable land, and suggests that gender inequalities persist in the country, including in employment and education. The Government also provides statistics from 2016 indicating that disparities exist in the share of women and men in employment, with men accounting for most of paid employment, while women constitute the majority of the self-employed population. The Committee notes that, in its concluding observations of 12 May 2016, the Committee on the Rights of Persons with Disabilities expressed concern that women with disabilities face multiple forms of discrimination, noting the lack of measures for the development, advancement and empowerment of women and girls with disabilities and expressing concern about the few opportunities open for employment for persons with disabilities (document CRPD/C/UGA/CO/1, paragraphs 10 and 52). As regards discrimination against women, including with respect to access to resources, the Committee refers the Government to its comments adopted in 2020 under the Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 (No. 100) and the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111). In addition, the Committee requests the Government to continue to take the necessary measures, including in the context of the NDPIII, to promote access for women to full, productive and freely chosen employment. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the results achieved through such measures, including statistics on the participation rate of women, including women with disabilities, in the informal and formal labour market.

Informal economy. The Committee notes that the Government refers to exclusions from social protection and other critical challenges existing in the informal sector, including gaps in social dialogue, widespread labour rights violations and decent work deficits. The Government nevertheless states that there is political commitment and will to overcome these challenges. In this regard, the Committee notes that the NDPIII includes a Private Sector Development Programme which has, as one of its key expected results, the reduction of the informal sector to 45 per cent in 2024/25. According to the NDPIII, the private sector in Uganda is dominated by about 1.1 million micro-, small and medium-sized enterprises (MSMEs), which altogether employ approximately 2.5 million people. Furthermore, most of the country's start-ups do not last more than two years, because of factors such as inadequate entrepreneurial ability and low-skilled labour. The Committee notes that, according to 2020 data from the UN Capital Development Fund, the COVID-19 crisis is also likely to have an impact on informal workers, with an estimated 4.4 million informal sector workers losing their earning or seeing it fall below the poverty line. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information on the impact of COVID-19 on employment in the informal economy in Uganda, the active labour market measures taken to tackle the challenges identified, and the measures taken to extend access to justice, property rights, labour rights and business rights to informal economy workers and businesses. It also requests the Government to provide information on the nature and impact of employment programmes developed and implemented in the context of the NDPIII, including the Private Sector Development Programme.

Article 3. Participation of the social partners. The Committee notes from section 1.4 of the NDPIII (approach and formulation process) that its strategic direction was informed by an extensive consultation process, based on background analytical work on past industrialization efforts and strategies, trends in key growth areas (agriculture, ICT, minerals, oil and gas), export and import performances, and sector priority papers, among others. The NDPIII also indicates that sector, regional, district and community level stakeholders were consulted in the formulation process, and that other stakeholders, including industrial and business owners, civil society, faith-based organizations and non-governmental organizations also participated in the process. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information on consultations held with employers' and workers' organizations in the formulation, implementation and monitoring of the NDPIII.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Ukraine

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1968)

The Committee notes the observations of the Confederation of Free Trade Unions of Ukraine (KVPU), as well as the observations of the Federation of Trade Unions of Ukraine (FPU), received on 6 October 2022, concerning the application of the Convention.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Implementation of an active employment policy. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on how measures taken in the framework of the Government's action plan have translated into the creation of productive and lasting employment opportunities, and the impact of such measures taken to increase the participation of specific groups in the labour market, including women, young people, older workers and persons with disabilities. The Government reports that the employment rate in 2017 stood at 56.1 per cent, while the unemployment rate was 9.5 per cent. It indicates that, in light of these figures, the employment situation in Ukraine remains complicated, but there are signs of gradual stabilization. The Government states that 2017 saw a drop in the unemployment rate in ten provinces. In addition, the number of self-employed persons rose by 0.3 per cent and the number of persons in informal employment dropped by 299,100 persons. The Committee notes that, in order to assist jobseekers to find jobs more quickly and to meet employers' recruitment needs, the State Employment Service (SES) introduced new methods of working with clients, which have led to better outcomes in its main areas of work, including improved use of information technology. The Committee notes that the Cabinet of Ministers, through its Directive No. 275-r of 3 April 2017, approved a medium-term Plan of Priority Actions through 2020, whose objectives envisage a system to support a highly-skilled workforce. The SES is undergoing reforms to transform it into a client-oriented agency providing a wide range of services, including training that meets the needs of the economy, and new forms of vocational training for the registered unemployed. The Government indicates that Cabinet of Ministers Directive No. 418-r of 27

May 2017 reoriented the SES toward employment promotion, adding that there has been a shift in focus from paying unemployment benefits to getting unemployed persons back into the work force as rapidly as possible. The Government reports that, in 2017, the SES helped 783,000 persons to secure jobs, including: 350,000 women; 297,000 young people under the age of 35, 13,000 persons with disabilities and 92,000 older workers (those with ten or fewer years until retirement). The Government adds that of those who found work in 2017, 45 per cent found a job before they had been officially registered as unemployed. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide detailed, updated information, including statistical data disaggregated by sex, age and region, regarding the employment situation in the country. It further requests the Government to provide updated information concerning the activities of the SES, including with respect to the manner in which its placement activities have led to lasting employment opportunities. It also requests the Government to provide information on the manner in which those persons who found a job prior to registering with the SES as unemployed were placed in employment, whether this was through the SES or other channels. The Committee reiterates its request that the Government provide copies of legislation and regulations adopted or envisaged relevant to active labour market measures, including with respect to the nature and extent of State Employment Service Reforms. The Government is also requested to provide information on the impact of measures taken or envisaged to increase the participation of specific groups, including women, older workers, young persons, persons with disabilities, and the long-term unemployed.

Coordination of education and training programmes with employment policy. The Committee observes that the Government's priority action plan emphasizes the need to modernize vocational guidance and training to increase the skills of the labour force and meet employers' needs, as well as to anticipate future labour market needs. In this respect, the Government reports that work began in 2017 to develop occupational standards to improve qualifications and enhance educational standards, bring training into line with employers' needs and validate informal education. The Committee also notes the information provided by the Government regarding measures taken to enhance the system of vocational training, retraining and skills development for unemployed persons to increase their employability. In addition, amendments were introduced in September 2017 to the Conceptual Framework of the State Vocational Guidance System to improve training for young persons. The Committee further notes the amendments to the Employment Act and the Arrangement for the Distribution of Vouchers to Support Employability, which expanded the categories of persons entitled to receive training vouchers. The Committee requests the Government to provide information concerning initiatives taken in collaboration with the social partners to facilitate skills training and increase employability, as well as information on the impact of such initiatives in assisting unemployed persons to enter and remain in the labour market. The Committee further requests the Government to supply information on the manner in which forecasting of labour market needs is carried out on a regular basis and the measures taken to improve the coordination of anticipated labour market needs with education and skills development with the aim of avoiding skills mismatches. It also reiterates its request that the Government provide a copy of the legislation on "Professional Education" once it is adopted.

Youth employment. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to provide information about the impact and sustainability of the measures taken to tackle youth unemployment and promote the long-term integration of young persons in the labour market. The Committee also requested the Government to provide information regarding the measures taken or envisaged to prevent the use of discriminatory restrictions in job vacancy announcements, including restrictions on the basis of age. With respect to the employment situation of young persons, the Government reports that a total of 431,000 young persons were registered as unemployed in 2017 – 87,000 less than in 2016. It adds that, in 2018, this number fell to 122,000. The Government further reports that the SES placed 297,000 young persons in employment in 2017, noting that half of them were placed in employment before being officially registered as unemployed. Moreover, vocational guidance services were provided to 410,000 unemployed young persons, as well as to over one million persons studying at various institutions. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, to match the skills of jobseekers as closely as possible to the needs of employers, and at the request of employers, the SES organized vocational training for 53,000 people under the age of 35. In this way, 297,000 young people were helped by the SES to find a job and 61,000 young people started to work in community or in temporary works. However, the Committee notes that the Government does not provide any information about any possible measures taken or envisaged concerning discriminatory restrictions in job vacancy announcements. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide detailed information, including statistical data disaggregated by sex and age, concerning the employment situation of young persons in Ukraine. The Committee reiterates its request that the Government provide detailed information on measures taken to prevent and prohibit the use of discriminatory restrictions, including age restrictions, in job vacancy announcements, as well as on the manner in which such measures are implemented.

ILO technical assistance. The Committee notes the technical assistance provided by the Office with regard to the formulation of legislation on employment promotion as well as to the introduction of new definitions of jobseeker and unemployed in Ukraine's labour law. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on progress made in this regard, and to communicate a copy of the legislation when adopted.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela

Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122) (ratification: 1982)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations submitted jointly by the Confederation of Workers of Venezuela (CTV), and the Federation of University Teachers' Associations of Venezuela (FAPUV), the Independent Trade Union Alliance Confederation of Workers (CTASI), as well as the observations submitted by the Federation of Chambers and Associations of Commerce and Production of Venezuela (FEDECAMARAS), transmitted together with the Government's report.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Implementation of the employment policy within the framework of a coordinated economic and social policy. Measures to respond to the economic crisis. The Committee takes note of the information provided by the Government regarding the measures adopted with a view to promoting and guaranteeing the protection and generation of employment in the country. The Government refers to the continued adoption of various decrees establishing security of employment for public and private sector workers for a period of two years, with a view to protecting and preserving jobs in the country. The Government once again indicates that during this period no dismissals may be made without just cause and dismissals may only be carried out in accordance with the procedures established in the labour legislation. The Government informs that the security of employment policy was extended until 2022. The Committee also notes that, in their observations, CTASI, CTV and FAPUV argue that the security of employment decrees do not generate jobs, since they are not always effective due to the small number of workers in the formal sector. FEDECAMARAS argues that the security of employment policy has a negative impact on productivity, which has led to a loss of interest among employers in hiring workers. FEDECAMARAS adds that, in order to achieve more efficient results in terms of employment and productivity, the policy should be adjusted to offer greater protection only to those workers who are in a situation of greater vulnerability.

The Committee notes, on the other hand, the Government's indications that a series of measures have been adopted with a view to implementing an ongoing wage protection policy that is adjusted to the economic reality of the country. In particular, the Government indicates that, under the last salary increase, the minimum wage was set at 130 bolívars per month as of 15 March 2022 and the minimum monthly amount that workers must receive through the "socialist cestaticket" food subsidy was set at 45 bolívars. The Government indicates that together the minimum wage and the "socialist cestaticket" constitute the minimum legal income to be received by workers, which has been increasing progressively. The Government also refers to the implementation of various social programmes aimed at protecting vulnerable households, such as the Hogares de la Patria (Homes of the Motherland) programme, through which a monthly subsidy is granted based on the number of members of the family group. The Committee notes that, in its observations, FEDECAMARAS points out that the national minimum wage policy is not adjusted to the economic reality of the country, since the inflation rate reported by the Central Bank of Venezuela is much higher than the nominal adjustments to the minimum wage. In this regard, FEDECAMARAS states that, although 13 salary adjustments were decreed from 2013 to 2022, the minimum wage has fallen by 45.3 per cent. FEDECAMARAS points out that, taking into consideration the high inflation and the devaluation of the national currency, the minimum wage is equivalent to only US$16 per month and the food subsidy to US$5.85 per month.

Finally, the Government indicates that, during the reporting period, discussions were initiated in the National Assembly on 10 special laws for the benefit of specific categories of workers that are intended to complement the provisions of the Basic Labour Act (LOTT), including an Act on Domestic Workers, an Act on the Work of Persons with Disabilities and an Act on Home Workers. The Government indicates that it is expected that, within the framework of the public consultations held by the National Assembly in relation to this draft legislation, priority will be given to consultations with employers' and workers' organizations through an effective, open and inclusive dialogue. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide detailed and updated information on the nature, scope and impact of the specific measures taken to develop and adopt an active employment policy aimed at promoting full, productive and freely chosen employment in full compliance with the Convention. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the status of the adoption of the ten special laws concerning specific categories of workers and to send a copy of these laws once they have been adopted.

Labour market trends. The Committee notes the Government's indications that, in the first half of 2021, the employment rate was 91.1 per cent. In addition, the Government indicates that, from 2011 to the first half of 2021, the employment rate of women increased by 20.2 per cent, with a total of 5,205,275 women in employment. The employment rate of men also increased by 20.2 per cent, with a total of 8,190,482 men in employment. The Government indicates that, in the same period, the number of persons employed in the formal sector increased from 6,774,123 to 7,042,956, and the number employed in the informal sector increased from 5,230,828 to 6,352,801. The Committee notes CTASI, CTV and FAPUV's allegations that the informal sector is growing disproportionately due to the lack of opportunities in the formal sector. In this regard, they point out that, according to data from the national survey of living conditions (ENCOVI), between 2014 and 2021, formal employment decreased by 21.8 percentage points. They indicate that only 40 per cent of those employed are in the formal sector. Regarding unemployment levels, the Government reports that, between 2019 and 2021, the unemployment rate increased from 6.6 per cent to 8.9 per cent. The number of unemployed persons aged 65 years and over increased from 59,789 in 2019 to 147,679 in 2020. The Committee notes that, in its observations, FEDECAMARAS highlights the need to reconcile the figures from the different official sources to effectively determine the impact on employment of the economic downturn, the exile of more than six million Venezuelan citizens and the COVID-19 pandemic. FEDECAMARAS stresses that it is also necessary to review, update and jointly discuss the statistical information from different sources, both official and private, to serve as a basis for defining employment policy. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide detailed information, including updated statistics, disaggregated by sex, age and rural and urban areas, on the labour market situation and trends, including on employment, unemployment and underemployment rates (visible and invisible) and informality. It also requests the Government to provide detailed and updated information on the functioning of the labour market information system, including information on how the data collected are used to design, implement and review the employment policy measures that have been taken or are planned.

Education and training. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, through the Meeting Centres for Education and Work (CEETs), together with the implementation of various Missions and the National Institute for Socialist Training and Education (INCES), measures are provided for the professionalization of workers, such as certification, accreditation, and vocational education and training. The Committee also notes the statistical information provided by the Government regarding the number of workers served by the CEETs, as well as the number of certifications awarded for inventiveness, innovation and improved productivity. However, the Committee notes that CTASI, CTV and FAPUV maintain that the training programmes provided have limited scope. In this regard, they point out that, according to data from the 2021 ENCOVI, the proportion of unskilled workers had increased from 9.7 per cent to 36 per cent over the preceding five years. Likewise, CTASI, CTV and FAPUV allege that the educational system is deteriorating due to the closing or inactivity of educational institutions, the exodus of teachers and students and the steady and growing decline in the number of students enrolled. CTASI, CTV and FAPUV indicate that, according to data from a study by the Andrés Bello Catholic University (UCAB), between 2018 and 2022, some 1.2 million young people dropped out of education and the number of students enrolled in basic education decreased by 15.7 per cent. They also allege that 85 per cent of educational centres do not have access to the internet, 69 per cent have limited electrical services and 45 per cent do not have water. The Committee refers to its comments on the application of the Human Resources Development Convention, 1975 (No. 142), and requests the Government to provide detailed and updated information on the scope and impact, including statistical information disaggregated by age and sex, of the measures implemented in the field of education and vocational training and their relation to potential employment opportunities. The Committee also requests the Government to provide detailed information on the measures taken to ensure effective coordination between education and vocational training policies and programmes and employment policies and programmes.

Youth employment. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, in the first half of 2021, the unemployment rate among young people aged 15 to 24 years was 17.2 per cent (20.6 per cent among women and 15.3 per cent among men), which is almost double the national rate (8.9 per cent). The Government adds that young people represent 25.8 per cent of the total unemployed population, 12.6 per cent of the employed population and 33.1 per cent of the inactive population. The Committee also notes that the Government reports the continued implementation of the Major Youth Employment Mission with the objective of providing opportunities for young people to enter the labour market. The Government indicates that, in the framework of this Major Mission, 2,181,468 young people received assistance, more than 500,000 young people have been placed in different workplaces, and support has been provided to more than 38,000 young people through the Emprender Juntos platform. The Committee notes, however, that CTASI, CTV and FAPUV maintain that the work offered to young people through the Major Mission is precarious, low-paying, unstable and subject to political affiliation. FEDECAMARAS points out that it is necessary to review the labour regime and benefits granted to young people in order to stimulate their employment and stem the flow of young people to other countries. In this regard, CTASI, CTV and FAPUV note that, according to ENCOVI data from 2021, some 86 per cent of migrants are young people of working age who migrate in search of employment. Finally, the Committee notes that the Government has still not responded to its request, first made in 2016, to provide an evaluation, prepared with the participation of the social partners, of the active employment policy measures implemented to reduce youth unemployment and promote their sustainable integration into the labour market. The Committee therefore expresses its firm hope that the Government will present in its next report an evaluation, undertaken with the participation of the social partners, of the impact of the active employment policy measures implemented to reduce youth unemployment and promote their sustainable integration into the labour market, particularly for the most underprivileged categories of young persons. The Committee also requests the Government to continue providing updated detailed statistical data, disaggregated by age and sex, on youth employment trends.

Development of small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs). The Committee notes the Government's indication that, in accordance with Article 308 of the Constitution of the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela, the State is responsible for protecting and promoting, among other entities, small and medium-sized industries, cooperatives, micro-enterprises and any other form of community association. The Government indicates that the body responsible for the protection and promotion of SMEs is the Ministry of People's Power for National Commerce. The Committee also notes that the Government refers to the adoption, in the context of the COVID-19 pandemic, of the plan for assisting SMEs, which includes the adoption of measures to simplify the procedures for the creation of companies, establish a maximum time for the formalization of SMEs and provide them with advice. In addition, certain tax exemptions were introduced for these enterprises (such as exemption from the payment of taxes in relation to the registration of trademarks, patents and copyrights) and time frames were established for the payment of certain taxes. The Government indicates that, under the plan for assisting SMEs, 19,173 enterprises were formalized, of which 15,493 were involved in the sale of goods and 3,680 in production. The Government reports that a total of 27,818 SMEs are authorized to operate in the country. Finally, the Government refers to the implementation of programmes aimed at promoting SMEs in the footwear industry (Plan Z) and in the manufacture of school supplies and uniforms (Plan Escolar). The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed and updated information on the impact on job creations of the measures adopted to promote the establishment and productivity of small and medium-sized enterprises.

Article 3. Participation of the social partners. The Committee notes that the Government refers to meetings held with various sectors of the country, such as the productive, social and labour and political sectors, in which topics related to the world of work have been addressed. In this regard, the Government indicates that, on 5 and 7 April 2022, it held meetings with members of various civil society organizations, in which the measures to be adopted to implement the agenda of citizen demands formulated through social dialogue were discussed. The Government also reports that the inaugural session of the Social Dialogue Forum was held virtually on 7 March 2022 and an in-person session was held from 25 to 28 April 2022. The Government indicates that, within the framework of the Social Dialogue Forum, it met with workers' and employers' organizations, and that it received technical assistance from the ILO. The Government reports that, following the Forum, it has continued to hold meetings with the social partners covering various social and labour topics. The Government reports that, on 4 July 2022, it met with several chambers of industry including the Federation of Craft, Micro, Small and Medium-Sized Business Associations of Venezuela (FEDEINDUSTRIA) and the Venezuelan Confederation of Industrialists (CONINDUSTRIA), with a view to exchanging ideas in relation to the strengthening of national production and the generation of decent jobs. In addition, on 20 July 2022, a meeting was held with, among other actors, representatives of the trade union and business sector, during which the Basic Act on Special Economic Zones (ZEEs) was signed and the first five ZEEs were established. The Commission notes, however, that CTASI, CTV and FAPUV emphasize that the Government only refers in a general manner to the holding of such meetings and does not provide information on their content or outcomes. They stress that, for the dialogue to be effective, the State must include independent social organizations in the consultations. The Committee also notes that FEDECAMARAS highlights the need to hold tripartite consultations with the aim of designing an employment policy coordinated among all social actors to promote and guarantee full, productive and freely chosen employment, in accordance with the requirements of the Convention. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take immediate steps to ensure effective consultations with and participation of the social partners in respect of employment policies, as required by this Article of the Convention. In addition, the Committee refers to its comments on the application of the Tripartite Consultations (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144). It further requests the Government to provide information that includes specific examples of how account has been taken of the views of employers' and workers' organizations in the formulation and implementation of employment policies and programmes and the nature, scope and outcomes of those consultations.

Direct requests

In addition, requests regarding certain matters are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 2 (Colombia, Egypt, Estonia); Convention No. 88 (Canada, China: Macau Special Administrative Region, Colombia, Costa Rica, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechia, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Denmark, Djibouti, Dominican Republic, Egypt, France, France: French Polynesia, Lebanon, Netherlands: Sint Maarten, Nicaragua); Convention No. 96 (Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Egypt, Mexico); Convention No. 122 (Albania, Algeria, Antigua and Barbuda, Austria, Azerbaijan, Barbados, Belarus, Belgium, Bulgaria, Burkina Faso, Cambodia, Cameroon, Canada, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China: Hong Kong Special Administrative Region, China: Macau Special Administrative Region, Costa Rica, Cuba, Czechia, Denmark, Denmark: Greenland, Ecuador, Fiji, Finland, France, France: French Polynesia, France: New Caledonia, Hungary, Iraq, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Lebanon, Netherlands: Aruba, Netherlands: Curaçao, Netherlands: Sint Maarten, Niger, Papua New Guinea, Romania, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Slovenia, Sri Lanka, Tajikistan, Togo, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland: Guernsey, Yemen); Convention No. 159 (Chile, China, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Cuba, Cyprus, Czechia, Dominican Republic, Egypt, Fiji, France, Kyrgyzstan, Lebanon, San Marino, Tajikistan, Thailand, Uganda, Ukraine, Yemen); Convention No. 181 (Czechia, Finland, France, Niger, Rwanda, Zambia).

Vocational guidance and training

Paid Educational Leave Convention, 1974 (No. 140) (ratification: 1983)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Bolivarian Socialist Confederation of Men and Women Workers in Urban and Rural Areas and Fishing of Venezuela (CBST-CCP), received on 1 September 2022. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

Articles 2 to 6 of the Convention. Development and application of the policy to promote the granting of paid educational leave. Participation of the social partners. The Committee notes that the Government refers to articles 298 and 299 of the Basic Act concerning labour and men and women workers (LOTTT), which ascribes responsibility to the State for generating the opportunities for social, technical, scientific and humanistic training of workers, and for encouraging the development of their productive capacities to ensure their integration into the social process of work. In this connection, the Government reiterates that, as provided under section 316 of the LOTTT, “men and women employers may grant leave to men and women workers who are engaged in studies”. Equally, the Government reiterates that employers are obliged to hire apprentices where required to do so by the technical training programme regulations (section 304 of the LOTTT) and may be called on to provide the necessary space and personnel for the development of training plans for their workers, in addition to the programmes undertaken by the National Executive (section 311 of the LOTTT). The Committee also notes that the Government once again indicates that paid educational leave is guaranteed when collective agreements are promoted, which sometimes include the right to such leave. The Government also repeats that the worker and employer decide on how the educational leave will be taken, in such a way that it has the least possible impact on working time. The Government adds that, for this purpose, it could be agreed to change the worker’s hours and establish the manner in which the worker must make up the hours to achieve the work goals. In this regard, the Committee stresses that the obligation to make up hours of work is not compatible with the Convention and recalls once more “the essential requirement that educational or training activities should take place during working hours. The time devoted to these activities must be included in working hours if there is to be genuine educational leave ...” (1991 General Survey on human resources development, paragraph 349). With regard to the implementation of policies to promote the granting of paid educational leave, the Government indicates in a general manner that measures have been adopted with a view to encouraging continuous and lifelong training for workers, through training centres and the implementation of trade union training programmes by the workers national federations. In this connection, the Government refers to the signing of agreements between higher education centres and non-governmental organizations working in the field of workers’ rights and in international trade unionism with a view to promoting trade union organizations. The Committee nevertheless observes that once again the Government does not indicate whether these activities are carried out within the framework of paid educational leave. The Committee also notes that the Government reports that between 2017 and 2022, a total of 28 collective agreements were signed in the public and private sectors, within the framework of which 167,256 women and 90,039 men have benefited contractually from paid educational leave. However, once again the Government provides no information on the conditions that must be met by the workers to be eligible for paid educational leave, nor on the duration of the leave, and the amounts of financial benefits paid. Finally, the Committee notes that the CBST-CCP indicates in its observations that, through its principal federations, it has succeeded in promoting the training and education of workers, including educational leave granted to workers by employers. As an example, the CBST-CCP refers to two collective agreements in the educational and petrol sectors that include clauses related to paid educational leave and the promotion of training for workers. The Committee urges the Government to provide detailed and updated information on the formulation and application, in collaboration with the social partners, of policies to promote the granting of paid educational leave for vocational training at whatever level, and also for general, social, civic and trade union education, in conformity with Article 2 of the Convention, and provide copies of the pertinent texts. Moreover, the Committee urges the Government to provide detailed and updated information on the manner in which paid educational leave is granted, and particularly: (a) the conditions that workers must fulfil to benefit from such leave; and (b) the duration of the leave; and (c) the level of the financial benefits paid. The Committee also requests the Government to provide updated statistics, disaggregated by sex, showing the number of workers granted paid educational leave.

Human Resources Development Convention, 1975 (No. 142) (ratification: 1984)

Articles 1–5 of the Convention. Implementation of policies and programmes of vocational guidance and training. Cooperation with the social partners. The Committee notes that the Government reports that the National System for the Training and Self-Training of the Working Class was launched on 24 February 2021, with the objective of creating spaces for the academic training of workers. With a view to defining its course of action, round tables were set up with educational missions and universities and with the involvement of, among other actors, representatives of workers' organizations and the Meeting Centres for Education and Work (CEET). Technical working groups were also set up in each federal entity to identify the professional and academic training needs of the workers in the different workplaces involved. The Government indicates that the main purpose of these round tables is to develop and implement in practice the objectives related to training established in the agenda of the Presidential Council of the People's Government of the Working Class. These objectives include: accrediting and certifying the practical knowledge acquired by workers, systematizing the technical innovation projects carried out by workers, accrediting facilitators in workplaces to contribute to the training of their colleagues, and formulating formal and specific educational plans at the national and local levels in areas such as agriculture, fishing and mining. The Committee also notes that the Government reports that, as of 17 December 2021, in various cities 1,418 persons had graduated from training provided by the educational programmes ("missions") (the Robinson Mission and the Ribas Mission), universities and the National Institute for Socialist Training and Education (INCES). The Government adds that 2,642 workers received an accreditation. It also reports that, as of May 2022, eight innovations had been systematized, and 24 workers had been certified in relation to innovations and/or processes improving productivity in cement, cardboard and food workplaces. The Committee also takes note of the information provided by the Government regarding the number of the persons who took part in the different training programmes implemented by INCES in 2022. Regarding access to training for persons with disabilities, the Government reports that 839 workers with disabilities participated in training and self-training activities between 2021 and 2022. Finally, the Committee notes that the Government refers generally to the implementation through INCES of various collective, comprehensive, continuous and permanent training and self-training programmes for workers.

The Committee notes, however, that the information provided by the Government does not allow an assessment of the impact of the measures adopted in the area of vocational training and guidance on groups of workers in vulnerable situations, such as women, young persons, indigenous or tribal persons and persons in rural areas or remote communities. In this respect, the Committee recalls that Article 1, paragraph 5 of the Convention provides that the "policies and programmes [of vocational guidance and vocational training] shall encourage and enable all persons, on an equal basis and without any discrimination whatsoever, to develop and use their capabilities for work in their own best interests and in accordance with their own aspirations, account being taken of the needs of society.” In the same vein, subparagraphs 5(g) and (h) of the Human Resources Development Recommendation, 2004 (No. 195) refer to the necessity of adopting measures to promote equal opportunities for women and men in education, training and lifelong learning; and promote access to such education for youth, low-skilled people, people with disabilities, migrants, older workers, indigenous people, ethnic minority groups and the socially excluded, and for workers in small and medium-sized enterprises, in the informal economy, in the rural sector and in self-employment. Finally, the Committee notes that the Government also fails to indicate how it is ensured that workers are free to choose the vocational guidance and training programmes they attend. The Committee therefore urges the Government to provide detailed and updated information on the nature and impact of the measures taken to guarantee access to vocational training and guidance for workers, particularly groups of workers in vulnerable situations, such as women, young people, older persons, persons with disabilities, indigenous or tribal peoples and persons in rural areas or remote communities. In addition, the Committee urges the Government to indicate how it is guaranteed that workers have the freedom to choose the vocational guidance and training programmes in which they participate, in conformity with Article 1(5) of the Convention.

Article 5. Cooperation with the workers’ and employers’ organizations. The Committee recalls that for more than ten years it has been requesting the Government to provide information on the manner in which cooperation is ensured with the social partners and representatives of the private sector in the development and implementation of vocational training and guidance programmes and policies to achieve the objectives of the Convention. The Committee notes, however, that the Government has still not provided any information in this respect. The Committee therefore urges the Government to provide specific and detailed information on the manner in which the social partners and representatives of the private sector have been consulted on the development, implementation and follow-up of vocational training and guidance policies and programmes.

Termination of Employment Convention, 1982 (No. 158) (ratification: 1988)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the General Union of Workers of Cameroon (UGTC), received on 20 September 2021. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

Article 2 of the Convention. Exclusions. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in reply to its previous comments.

Articles 4 and 11. Valid reason for termination of employment. Period of notice. The Government indicates that the conditions of employment of public servants are defined in Decree No. 94/199 of 7 October 1994 issuing the General Public Service Regulations, which govern termination of employment on grounds of irreversible physical incapacity incompatible with the post occupied, unsatisfactory performance in terms of results and their evaluation, and termination based on special regulations providing for the reorganization of services and the elimination of posts, without the possibility of staff redeployment (Decree No. 94/199, section 119(a) and (b)). Moreover, section 121 governs the dismissal procedure further to misconduct by a public servant. However, the Committee notes that Decree No. 94/199 does not contain any provisions relating to the public employer's obligation to notify the official in writing of the reason for termination, or any provisions specifying invalid grounds for termination (Articles 4 and 5 of the Convention). With regard to the private sector, the Committee notes the observations of the UGTC referring to an increase in the number of unfair dismissals in the wood sector, in sport (particularly at the Cameroonian Football Federation (FECAFOOT) and in domestic work. The Government indicates that domestic workers in Cameroon are governed by Decree No. 68/DF/253 of 10 July 1968, as amended by Decree No. 76/162 of 22 April 1976. The Committee notes that Decree No. 76/162 does not contain any provisions relating to the employer's obligation to inform a domestic worker of the grounds for the termination of employment. The Committee nevertheless welcomes the Government's indication that it has launched the process of revising the regulations governing domestic workers and that a draft decree is being finalized with the aim of further incorporate the provisions of the Convention. With respect to workers in the informal economy, the Committee refers the Government to its comments relating to the Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122). With regard to the period of notice of termination, the Government indicates that the notice period provided for in sections 34 ff of the Labour Code is clearly defined in terms of duration and conditions of eligibility through the provisions of Order No. 10/MTPS/DT of 19 April 1976. However, the Committee notes that the Order of 1976 was repealed by Order No. 15/MTPS/DT of 26 May 1993 determining the conditions and duration of the notice period, taking account of the category and seniority of the worker concerned. On the basis of this Order, employers and labour inspectors implement a reasonable period of notice of termination. The Committee also notes that, in cases of violations, labour inspectors send compliance notices to the employers concerned and, on the basis of section 4 of the above-mentioned Order, the competent court imposes the penalties provided for in section R 370, subparagraph 12 of the Penal Code. In light of the observations of the General Union of Workers of Cameroon (UGTC), the Committee once again requests the Government to provide detailed, up-to-date information on the manner in which it is ensured that all the workers covered by the Convention receive a reasonable period of notice, including a written notification of the reason for termination of employment, in accordance with Articles 4 and 11 of the Convention. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the revision of the regulations governing domestic workers and to send a copy of the decree once it has been adopted.

Articles 7 and 8. Procedure prior to or at the time of termination. Appeal procedure. The Government indicates that in practice section 34 of the Labour Code is enforced systematically through labour inspectors during inspections and even in the follow-up to labour disputes giving rise to attempts at conciliation. The Government indicates that nearly 4,500 inspections were carried out in 2020 by labour inspectors in enterprises. It adds that the inspection reports provide sufficient information on cases of termination of employment and the handling thereof. With regard to the termination procedure subject to authorization by the labour inspector, the Government indicates that this exclusively concerns staff delegates, whose function is protected by section 130 of the Labour Code. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the most recurrent findings, further to inspections and re-inspections, have related to non-observance by employers of the labour laws and regulations, particularly non-payment or irregular payment of wages, non-observance of clauses in contracts between parties which duly deal with the right to reclassification, to promotion and other benefits arising from the employment contract, the non-payment of social contributions, and the non-observance of health and safety measures in workplaces. The Committee also notes, with respect to labour disputes, that a total of 9,546 conciliation procedures were conducted by labour inspectors in 2019, of which less than 25 per cent resulted in non-conciliation reports leading to referral to the judicial authorities. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the number and type of violations recorded by the labour inspection authorities. The Committee also requests the Government to send copies of relevant court decisions giving effect to Articles 7 and 8 of the Convention.

Article 12(3). Definition of serious misconduct. Severance allowance and other income protection. The Government indicates that, in practice and following the texts in force, establishing misconduct is essentially a task for the judge. The Government adds that it is from this perspective that section 36(2) of the Labour Code stipulates that it shall be the competent court which assesses the seriousness of the misconduct in all cases of termination and it is for the employer to supply proof of the legitimacy of the alleged reason for termination (section 39(3) of the Labour Code). The Committee notes the examples of case law in this field provided by the Government. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing examples of case law relevant to the application of the Convention, and also information on the role of collective agreements in granting a severance allowance and other income protection to the worker concerned.

Articles 13 and 14. Consultation of workers' representatives. Terminations of employment for economic, technological, structural or similar reasons. With regard to the consultation of representatives, the Government indicates that recourse to terminations of employment for economic reasons still involves in practice the participation of labour inspectors, who have competence for enforcing the provisions of section 40 of the Labour Code and those of Order No. 21/MTPS/SG/CJ of 26 May 1993 establishing procedures for termination for economic reasons, section 3(1) of which provides in particular that the employer must send the staff delegates a list of the workers that he proposes to dismiss and that the delegates are required to send their replies to the employer within eight days. The Government adds that a tripartite consultation framework, involving the employer and staff delegates backed by the competent labour inspector, is generally put in place to accompany the termination process in question, in accordance with the relevant rules in this field. With regard to termination, the UGTC reiterates its previous observations concerning the dismissal of 14,000 workers, which was announced during the COVID-19 pandemic by the Employers' Association of Cameroon (GICAM), without consultation with the UGTC or the Government. The Government indicates that the labour inspectors handled the requests for termination on economic grounds or for temporary lay-offs on a case-by-case basis in enterprises. Some requests were clearly refused on grounds of violation of the procedure. In this regard, the Committee notes that the GICAM, in its Bulletin No. 80 of November 2020, reported on the negative impact of the pandemic on Cameroonian enterprises and on employment, particularly with regard to the temporary laying off of some 54,000 workers and the dismissal of some 14,000 persons. It also notes the observations of the UGTC indicating that the Government has not yet responded to the issues arising from these terminations, particularly as regards support measures for the dismissed workers. The Committee requests the Government to send detailed information on the consultations held with staff delegates and labour inspectors, particularly in the context of temporary lay-offs and terminations of workers' employment on economic grounds during the COVID-19 pandemic. The Committee also requests the Government to include in its next report statistics on the activities of the labour inspectorate and the courts with regard to terminations of employment, particularly the number of requests for termination examined by the labour inspectorate in relation to collective dismissals. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on support given to dismissed workers and on the steps taken to mitigate the effects of terminations on economic or similar grounds, such as those envisaged in Paragraphs 25 and 26 of the Termination of Employment Recommendation, 1982 (No. 166).

Application of the Convention in practice. COVID-19 pandemic. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing detailed, up-to-date information on the manner in which the Convention is applied in practice, and on the consultations held with the social partners concerning issues relating to the application of the Convention. The Committee also requests the Government to send copies of recent court decisions concerning issues relating to the application of the Convention.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

Termination of Employment Convention, 1982 (No. 158) (ratification: 1987)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Observations by the Labour Confederation of Congo (CCT). Abusive dismissals. In its previous comments, the Committee invited the Government to provide its own comments on the observations of the CCT, indicating whether the dismissal of around 40 employees of a private multinational enterprise governed by French law were based on valid reasons (Article 4 of the Convention) and whether the dismissed workers were entitled to severance allowances (Article 12). It also requested the Government to provide information on the measures adopted to mitigate the effects of the dismissals, such as those envisaged in Paragraphs 25 and 26 of the Termination of Employment Recommendation, 1982 (No. 166). In its report, the Government indicates that section 78 of the Labour Code adopted in 2002 prohibits mass dismissals, and that the information held by the Government does not indicate that the dismissed workers did not receive severance allowances, as no complaint was noted. The Committee notes that, with regard to measures adopted to mitigate the effects of the dismissals, the Government indicates that the provisions of section 78 of the Labour Code guarantee priority hiring in the event of a resumption of activity. The Committee also notes that section 78 provides that mass dismissals on economic grounds are prohibited, "except for possible exceptions that will be determined by an order of the Minister responsible for labour and social security" and sets out the applicable procedure. Noting that the Government provides information of a general nature concerning the above-mentioned dismissals, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the procedure followed in the case reported by the CCT, including copies of inspection reports, where possible. It once again requests the Government to provide specific information indicating whether the dismissals were based on valid reasons (Article 4 of the Convention) and whether the dismissed workers were entitled to severance allowances (Article 12). It also once again requests the Government to provide specific information on the measures adopted in this particular case to mitigate the effects of the dismissals, such as those envisaged in Paragraphs 25 and 26 of the Termination of Employment Recommendation, 1982 (No. 166).

In its previous comments, the Committee also requested the Government to provide a report containing information on the practice of the labour inspectorate and the decision of the courts on matters of principle relating to the application of Articles 4, 5 and 7 of the Convention. It also requested it to indicate the number of appeals against termination, their outcome, the nature of the remedy awarded and the average time taken for an appeal to be decided (Parts IV and V of the report form). The Committee notes that the Government has provided inspection reports from 2014, 2015, 2016 and 2017 but that these reports do not contain information on the application of the above-mentioned Articles. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to provide information on the practice of the labour inspectorate and the decision of the courts on matters of principle relating to the application of Articles 4, 5 and 7 of the Convention. It also reiterates its request to the Government to indicate the number of appeals against termination, their outcome, the nature of the remedy awarded and the average time taken for an appeal to be decided (Parts IV and V of the report form).

Article 7. Procedure prior to, or at the time of, termination. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to provide copies of collective agreements which provide for the possibility of a specific procedure to be followed prior to, or at the time of, termination, as required by the Convention, and to indicate the manner in which this provision of the Convention is given effect for workers not covered by collective agreements. The Government indicates that: (i) it ensures that collective agreements are in conformity with sections 63, 72, 73 and 75 of the Labour Code; and (ii) in addition to enterprise collective agreements, there is the national inter-occupational labour agreement, of which it provides a copy. The Committee nevertheless notes that the copy of the latter agreement was already provided by the Government in its 2013 report and that, in this regard, it considered that the above-mentioned collective agreement did not appear to envisage the possibility of a specific procedure to be followed prior to, or at the time of, termination. The Government adds that enterprises that have not concluded collective agreements are required to adhere to the sectoral collective agreement and the procedure to be followed prior to, or at the time of, termination is provided by the implementing measures, such as Order No. 12/CAB.MIN/TPS/116/2005 of 26 October 2005, determining the terms of dismissal of workers. The Committee notes with interest that Act No. 16/010 of 15 July 2016, amending and supplementing Act No. 015-2002 issuing the Labour Code, with respect to section 62, provides that “when the employer envisages dismissal for grounds related to the worker’s aptitude or conduct, he or she is required, before any decision is taken, to allow the person concerned to defend himself or herself against the allegations made or to provide an explanation for the grounds put forward”. The Committee requests the Government to provide up-to-date information on the application in practice of the Labour Code with regard to the possibility offered to workers to defend themselves against the allegations against them before any dismissal measures are imposed, as well as the application of the above Order. It also once again requests the Government to provide copies of the collective agreements which provide for the procedure to be followed prior to, or at the time of, termination.

Article 12. Severance allowance and other income protection. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that national legislation does not provide for severance allowances or other forms of income protection for dismissed workers. The Committee therefore reiterated its request to the Government to indicate the manner in which effect is given to Article 12 of the Convention. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that in order to prevent workers from being adversely affected, tax deductions are limited to 10 per cent during the notice period. However, other categories are not taxed, except for non-statutory family benefits. Noting, once again, the absence of specific information in the Government’s report in response to the Committee’s request, it urges the Government to provide detailed information indicating the manner in which effect is given to Article 12 of the Convention.

Articles 13 and 14. Terminations for economic or similar reasons. In its previous report in 2013, the Government indicated that the Ministry of Employment, Labour and Social Welfare signed 15 orders authorizing collective terminations for economic or similar reasons, covering 701 workers in 2012–13. The Committee invited the Government to indicate whether the dismissed workers were entitled to severance allowances (Article 12) and to provide information on the measures taken to mitigate the effects of terminations for economic or similar reasons, as envisaged in Paragraphs 25 and 26 of the Termination of Employment Recommendation, 1982 (No. 166). Noting that the Government’s report does not contain information in this regard, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide the information requested.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

France

Termination of Employment Convention, 1982 (No. 158) (ratification: 1989)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the French Democratic Confederation of Labour (CFDT), received on 6 September 2021, and the Government's response, received on 7 October 2021. It also notes the observations of the French Confederation of Management – General Confederation of Professional and Managerial Employees (CFE-CGC) provided with the Government's report. The Committee notes that the observations concern in particular the application of Article 10 of the Convention.

Follow-up on the recommendations of the tripartite committee (representation made under article 24 of the ILO Constitution)

Article 4 of the Convention. Valid reason for termination based on the operational requirements of the undertaking, establishment or service. The Committee notes the Government's indications that Act No. 2016-1088 of 8 August 2016 on work, the modernization of social dialogue and the safeguarding of career progression clarifies the definition of economic grounds for termination of employment, in order to make the applicable rules clearer, in particular in small and medium-sized enterprises. The Government indicates that the definition of termination of employment on economic grounds includes the grounds contained in the case law of the Court of Cassation, namely the cessation of the enterprise's activity and the restructuring of the enterprise in order to safeguard its competitiveness. In addition, the difficulties that can justify termination of employment on economic grounds are defined taking into account elements from case law, including a drop in orders or sales, operating losses, a significant deterioration in cash flow or any evidence of such difficulties. In its report, approved by the Governing Body in March 2022, the tripartite committee set up to examine the representation alleging non-observance by France of the Convention observed that the Convention and Recommendation do not define the concept of operational requirements of the enterprise and that the supervisory bodies have illustrated the concept on the basis of specific elements (paragraph 54 of the report). The tripartite committee considered that determining whether the concept of operational requirements has been respected within the meaning of Article 4 of the Convention is a matter for the national courts. The Committee requests the Government to provide examples of judicial decisions on the effective application of Article 4 of the Convention, particularly decisions concerning dismissals on the grounds of the operational needs of the enterprise. In particular, it requests the Government to communicate the criteria used by the judges in these decisions.

Articles 8 and 9. Reasonable period of time. Judicial review of the grounds for dismissal. The Committee notes that, according to section L. 2254-2 of the Labour Code, a "dismissal is based on specific grounds that constitute real and serious justification". It notes that the initial reference to the obligation to state, in the letter of dismissal, the specific grounds on which the dismissal is based has been removed (but not the obligation itself, as section L. 2254-2 (V) refers to section L. 1232-6). In paragraph 58 of its report, the tripartite committee considered that, beyond the explicit reference in section L. 2254-2 of the Labour Code to the real and serious nature of the termination of employment on the grounds of an employee's refusal to have his or her employment contract amended as a result of the conclusion of a collective performance agreement, the judge must be able to continue to conduct a genuine judicial review. The tripartite committee indeed considers that the provisions of section L. 2254-2 merely recall the requirement that any termination of employment must be based on real and serious justification. It is for the judge to determine as part of the judicial proceedings on termination based on section L. 2254-2 whether a valid reason exists within the meaning of Article 4 of the Convention, that is, whether the reason for the termination is based on "the operational requirements of the undertaking, establishment or service”, it having been established that, during the judicial examination, the burden of proof must not rest on the employee alone. Referring to Order No. 017-1387 of 22 September 2017 concerning the predictability and security of employment relationships, the Government indicates that the time limits for appeals against the termination of an employment contract have been harmonized at one year. The Committee recalls that all parties concerned should seek to avert or minimize as far as possible termination of employment for reasons of an economic, technological, structural or similar nature, without prejudice to the efficient operation of the undertaking, establishment or service, and to mitigate the adverse effects of any termination of employment for these reasons on the worker or workers concerned (Paragraph 19(1) of the Termination of Employment Recommendation, 1982 (No. 166)). The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the results of judicial reviews of dismissals based on section L. 2254-2, and on the impact of the change in the time limits for appeals.

Article 10. Payment of adequate compensation or such other relief as may be deemed appropriate. The Committee notes that, in its observations, the CFDT refers to the scale setting limits for the compensation of employees who have been dismissed without real and serious justification and refers to the incompatibility of the limits set with the principle of adequate compensation, as set out in Article 10 of the Convention. Indeed, the CFDT indicates that the compensation of the damage as provided for by this scale does not always make it possible to adequately compensate the employee for the unjustified termination of his or her employment, in particular when the damage is very significant and the employee’s length of service in the enterprise is short. In its observations, the CFE-CGC states that it considers this scale to be in breach of Articles 8 and 10 of the Convention. The Government points out that the scale mechanism provided for in Ordinance No. 2017-1387 and ratified by Act No. 2018-217 was submitted to the Constitutional Council, which declared section L. 1235-3 of the Labour Code establishing the compensation scale to be in conformity with the Constitution. The Government specifies that the scale system is a compulsory framework of compensation that the judge must use when declaring an employee’s dismissal to be without real and serious justification. In no case does the scale system allow the employer to terminate employment without justification, as the amount set by the scale and proposed by the judge is the compensation for the damages suffered by the employee. Currently, when the employee’s dismissal has no real and serious justification, the judge may order the reinstatement of the employee if neither party opposes it. If the employer or the employee refuse the reinstatement, the judge awards compensation. The judge may take into account elements related to the employee’s particular situation (age, health, family situation, etc.) when setting the amount of compensation in compliance with the minimum and maximum limits of the scale. In its report, the tripartite committee considered – aside from cases of termination concerning a fundamental right, to which the principle of full compensation applies, and irrespective of the compensation for separate damage – that the compatibility of a scale, and the related upper limit, with Article 10 of the Convention depends on whether sufficient protection is ensured for persons whose employment has been unfairly terminated and, in all cases, whether adequate compensation is paid (paragraph 80 of the report). Under these circumstances, the tripartite committee invited the Government to examine at regular intervals, in consultation with the social partners, the compensation procedures provided for in section L. 1235-3, to ensure that in all cases the parameters for compensation provided for in the scale ensure adequate compensation for damage suffered as a result of the unfair termination of employment (paragraph 81 of the report). The Committee notes the Court of Cassation rulings of 11 May 2022 (Appeal No. 21-15.247 (Ruling No. 1), and Appeal No. 21-14.490 (Ruling No. 2)). The Court holds that the provisions of section L. 1235-3 of the Labour Code are compatible with the provisions of Article 10 of the Convention. It notes that the scale takes into account the gravity of the employer’s misconduct by excluding from its scope of application terminations of employment that are set aside for one of the reasons listed in section L. 1235-3-1 of the Labour Code. The Court noted that the term “adequate” in Article 10 of the Convention means that compensation for unjustified termination of employment must be sufficiently dissuasive to avoid unjustified termination of employment and must reasonably allow compensation for the unjustified loss of employment. It affirmed that the provisions of section L. 1235-3 of the Labour Code, which provide for compensation ranging between minimum and maximum amounts, varying according to the amount of the employee's monthly salary and length of service, reasonably allow for compensation for unjustified loss of employment. The Committee also notes that, according to the European Committee of Social Rights (ECSR) (Complaints Nos 160/2018 and 171/2018, decision published on 26 September 2022) the upper limits set by section L.1235-3 of the Labour Code are not sufficiently high to provide adequate reparation for the damage suffered by the victim and be dissuasive for the employer. The ECSR also notes that the upper limit of the compensation scale does not allow for higher compensation to be awarded on the basis of the personal and individual situation of the worker, as the courts can only order compensation for unjustified dismissal within the lower and upper limits of the scale, unless the application of section L. 1235-3 of the Labour Code is excluded. The ECSR is of the opinion that the courts have a narrow margin of manoeuvre in deciding the case on its merits by considering individual circumstances of unjustified dismissals. For this reason, the real damage suffered by the worker in question linked to the individual characteristics of the case may be neglected and therefore, the worker may not be fully compensated. The Committee notes the December 2021 report of the Committee for the Evaluation of the Orders of 22 September 2017, mentioning that in the sample of appellate court decisions studied by the Committee, the amount of compensation paid is between the upper and lower limits of the scale in 90 per cent of the cases for dismissals after the application of the scale, whereas this was the case for 44 per cent before the reform. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the review, in consultation with the social partners, of the compensation procedures provided for in section L. 1235-3, so as to ensure that the parameters of compensation provided for in the scale allow, in all cases, adequate compensation for the damages suffered as a result of unfair dismissal.

Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes the observations of the CFDT on the legislative developments in the area of legislative developments in relation to the laws on termination of employment on economic grounds, in particular with regard to the need to have statistical data on the application of the Convention in practice. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide any general information on how the Convention is applied in practice, including, for example, available statistics on the activities of the appeal bodies (such as the number of appeals against dismissal measures, the outcome of such appeals, the nature of the reparations granted, the average length of time taken for the appeal to be decided), and the number of dismissals on economic or similar grounds.

Papua New Guinea

Termination of Employment Convention, 1982 (No. 158) (ratification: 2000)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2023, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

Article 1 of the Convention. For a number of years, the Committee has requested information concerning the ongoing revision of the Industrial Relations Bill which, according to the Government's 2013 report, includes provisions on termination of employment with the objective of giving effect to the Convention. In its reply to the Committee's previous comments, the Government indicates that the draft Industrial Relations Bill is still pending with the Department of Labour and Industrial Relations and is undergoing final technical consultations. The Government adds that the Department of Labour and Industrial Relations Technical Working Committee has carried out various consultations with national stakeholders, such as the Department Attorney General's Office, the Office of the Solicitor General, the Constitution Law Reform Commission, the Department of Personnel Management, the Department of Treasury and the Department of Planning, Trade Commerce and Industry, as well as with external technical partners, including the ILO. Referring to its previous comments, the Committee once again expresses the hope that the Government will take the necessary measures to ensure that the new legislation gives full effect to the provisions of the Convention. It also reiterates its request that the Government provide a detailed report to the ILO and a copy of the legislation as soon as it is enacted, so as to enable the Committee to examine its compliance with the Convention.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela

Termination of Employment Convention, 1982 (No. 158) (ratification: 1985)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Confederation of Workers of Venezuela (CTV), the Federation of University Teachers' Associations of Venezuela (FAPUV) and the Independent Trade Union Alliance Confederation of Workers (CTASI), as well as the observations of the Federation of Chambers and Associations of Commerce and Production of Venezuela (FEDECAMARAS), communicated together with the Government's report.

Article 8 of the Convention. Remedies against unjustified dismissal. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to specify the manner in which it guarantees the impartiality of labour inspectors when effectively certifying a reinstatement order in cases of dismissal. It also requested the Government to indicate the number of occasions on which appeals had been made to set aside a dismissal, and the number of occasions on which appeals had been upheld. The Committee further requested the Government to indicate, with regard to the 972 workers in toll stations belonging to the Ministry of Transport, whether they had been reinstated. The Committee notes that the Government refers to sections 508 and 509 of the Basic Labour Act (LOTTT), setting out the competences of labour inspectors, who are called upon to ensure the correct application of the provisions of labour law. The Government indicates that, as a consequence, in their decisions they must uphold the rule of law and social justice in an impartial and balanced manner. Where appropriate, employers can be penalized in accordance with the provisions of the law. With reference to appeals to set aside dismissals, the Government indicates that the parties are entitled to pursue the necessary remedies through both administrative and judicial channels. The Government reiterates that, in accordance with section 425(9) of the LOTTT, in order to be able to give effect to an administrative appeal, labour inspectors are first required to certify the effective implementation of the reinstatement order and the restoration of the legal situation. The Government reports that between 2017 and the first half of 2022, labour inspectors certified 8,518 orders for reinstatement and the restoration of rights. In this regard, the Committee notes the renewed indication by FEDECAMARAS that the requirement to abide by reinstatement orders as a precondition for appealing against administrative instructions in practice raises an obstacle to access to justice for employers and has severe consequences on enterprise productivity. FEDECAMARAS emphasizes the need to adopt legal and practical measures with a view to ensuring that the procedure of termination of employment is more flexible and less traumatic, in order to improve efficiency and productivity.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that, due to the separation of powers, it does not have information on the number of occasions on which appeals were made to the national courts and on which they were upheld. The Government indicates that it is therefore only in a position to report the notifications that were effectively made to the labour inspection services to initiate the appellate procedure. In this regard, the Government indicates that, between 2017 and 2022, a total of 517 appeals were made against the commencement of the procedure. The Government adds that appeals for orders to be set aside can themselves be appealed to the courts. Nevertheless, the rate of final decisions in which reinstatement orders are set aside is very low, as the majority of appeals against reinstatement orders are not upheld (between 2017 and 2020, only 73 appeals against reinstatement orders were upheld).

The Committee further notes that the CTV, FAPUV and CTASI in their observations indicate that the State does not abide by reinstatement orders. The workers' organizations report that decisions are awaited from the judicial system and the national executive authorities in relation to the dismissal, in violation of their trade union rights, of five union leaders. The CTV, FAPUV and CTASI add that, on 15 January 2021, a procedure was initiated for the mass dismissal of more than 1,000 officials and workers of the National Assembly (representing over one third of the total workforce), without fulfilling the prior steps required by law, such as the presentation of claims to assess the reasons for dismissal, the opening of disciplinary procedures and the establishment of working groups with the unions. The workers' organizations indicate that, in relation to the dismissals, there were not only infringements of the right to due process and the right of workers to defend themselves, but also of maternal and trade union protections, as the dismissed workers included pregnant women and trade union leaders. They add that the National Union of Men and Women Public Officials in the Legislative Career Stream and Men and Women Workers of the National Assembly (SINFUCAN) has denounced these acts and taken action in various national bodies for the reinstatement of the workers. They add that, in communication No. 191/2022 of 24 February 2022, the former Minister of Labour announced that the implementation of the reinstatement procedures for workers in the Legislative Assembly was set for 7 March 2022. However, the CTV, FAPUV and CTASI complain that the orders have still not been implemented and call for their application. Finally, with reference to the dismissal of 972 workers in toll stations belonging to the Ministry of Transport, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the reinstatement procedures have been set in motion. Moreover, in view of the high number of persons affected, technical working groups have been set up throughout the territory with a view to preventing industrial disputes. The Government adds that 862 workers have been reassigned in the various units of the Ministry of Transport and local authorities, while 110 workers have decided to accept cash payments in accordance with the law rather than reinstatement. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed and updated information on the number of appeals against dismissal and the number of occasions on which appeals have been upheld. The Committee also requests the Government to provide detailed and updated information on the grounds on which a reinstatement order can be set aside, including extracts from relevant court decisions. With reference to the workers dismissed from the National Assembly, the Committee requests the Government to indicate whether they have been reinstated and the dates of their reinstatement.

Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, between 2017 and 2022, a total of 125,438 appeals for reinstatement were submitted, of which 63,825 resulted in reinstatement orders. With regard to the number of occasions on which the courts upheld a reinstatement order, the Government indicates that, in accordance with the law (sections 8 and 79 of the Basic Act on Administrative Procedures and sections 512, 537 and 538 of the LOTTT), and with national case law (such as ruling No. 0845 of 11 July 2013 of the Administrative Policy Chamber of the Supreme Court of Justice), the judicial authorities are not competent to monitor the implementation of administrative instructions issued by the labour inspection services ordering reinstatement and the payment of wage arrears. The Government adds that there is a special procedure through which labour inspectors can enforce the execution of their administrative instructions, including those ordering reinstatement and the payment of wage arrears. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, between 2017 and 2022, labour courts at the national level handed down 318 decisions confirming reinstatement orders issued by the labour inspection services. Nevertheless, the Committee notes that the Government has not provided information on the number of procedures in the labour inspection services following complaints of dismissal, transfer or demotion and procedures to authorize dismissals.

The Committee also notes the Government's indication concerning the finalization of the plan for the restoration of rights and liabilities in cases of insolvency, and the updated plan for the prevention of procedural delays and situations of non-compliance, on which progress had been subject to difficulties encountered by the public administration. The Government adds that, as a result of the implementation of these plans, many administrative delays have been overcome. It adds that measures have been adopted to avoid situations in which procedures are not followed through and in order to be able to ensure greater efficiency and a more appropriate response to procedures that have been commenced, such as the transformation of sub-inspectorates into Labour Inspectorates, thereby extending their competence with a view to ensuring a greater response capacity. Moreover, a policy has also been implemented with a view to improving accessibility to administrative justice in remote areas through mobile inspection services. However, the Committee notes the indication by FEDECAMARAS that procedures for the confirmation of the reasons for dismissal and for reinstatement generally last months, and even years, as a result of delays in the process due to the lack of sufficient personnel to deal with the high volume of applications. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing detailed and updated information on the number of dismissals and the number of reinstatement orders issued by the labour inspection services. The Committee also requests the Government to provide detailed and updated information on the impact of the measures adopted in ensuring greater efficiency and increasing the capacity to deal with procedures that have been commenced.

Burundi

Minimum Wage-Fixing Machinery Convention, 1928 (No. 26) (ratification: 1963)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Trade Union Confederation of Burundi (COSYBU), received on 29 August 2022.

Article 3 of the Convention. Operation of the minimum wage-fixing machinery. Further to its previous comment, the Committee notes that the Government indicates in its report that the guaranteed inter-occupational minimum wage (SMIG) is currently under revision, and that an independent consultant has already been engaged to conduct an analysis of the evolution of the socio-economic situation. That analysis will be taken as a reference to fix the criteria for updating the SMIG and will provide a document containing the criteria for fixing the new SMIG. It further notes that the COSYBU indicates in its observations that the tripartite committee has just adopted the final report of the study conducted into updating the SMIG and that the next stages are its examination by the National Labour Council and by the Government. The COSYBU also indicates that the minimum wages applicable by category as fixed by collective agreements in the various branches of activity or in enterprises have not yet been fixed. The Committee observes with regret that, despite the steps taken to reactivate the minimum wage review process, the SMIG has not been readjusted since 1988 and minimum wages applicable by category through collective agreements in branches of activity or in enterprises have not yet been fixed. Therefore, the Committee again urges the Government to take the necessary steps to readjust the SMIG without delay, in consultation with the workers' and employers' organizations concerned so as to ensure that new minimum rates of wages are fixed for workers employed in certain trades in which no arrangements exist for the effective regulation of wages by collective agreements or otherwise and wages are exceptionally low. It also requests the Government to provide information on the minimum wages applicable by category in the various branches of activity or in enterprises, including home working trades, once these have been fixed by collective agreement.

Cameroon

Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95) (ratification: 1960)

Minimum Wage Fixing Convention, 1970 (No. 131) (ratification: 1973)

Previous comment

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of the ratified Conventions on wages, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 95 (protection of wages) and 131 (minimum wages) together.

The Committee notes the observations of the Cameroon Workers' Trade Union Confederation (CSTC), received on 31 August 2022, and the Government's reply to the observations of the CSTC on Convention No. 131, received on 15 November 2022.

A. Minimum wages

Article 5 of Convention No. 131. Measures to ensure effective application of the provisions of minimum wages. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its report concerning the objectives set regarding labour inspections in enterprises. The Committee notes, however, that, according to the observations of the CSTC, difficulties persist in the application of the guaranteed minimum inter-occupational wage (SMIG) in practice, and that the labour inspectorate has difficulties in ensuring that employers of domestic workers in private homes apply the SMIG. The Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to strengthen monitoring of the application of the provisions of minimum wages, including in the informal economy, and to provide information on the results of the measures taken.

B. Protection of wages

Article 8 of Convention No. 95. Deductions from wages. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes that, according to the Government's report, section 75 of the Labour Code, under the terms of which deductions from wages, known as consignations, can be envisaged in the individual labour contract, has still not been revised. The Committee recalls that Article 8(1) of the Convention provides that deductions shall be permitted only under conditions and to the extent prescribed, not by individual agreement, but by national laws, or fixed by collective agreement or arbitration award. Recalling that this Article makes exclusive reference to national legislation, collective agreements and arbitration awards, and that provisions in national legislation permitting deductions by virtue of individual agreements or consent are not compatible with this Article (2003 General Survey on protection of wages, paragraph 217), the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to bring section 75 of the Labour Code into conformity with Article 8(1). The Committee also requests the Government to indicate the way in which section 75(1) of the Labour Code is applied in practice, including by providing examples of consignations provided for in the individual labour contracts.

Article 12(1). Regular payment of wages. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication that, in the event of delays in the payment of wages, redress available to the workers comprises raising the matter with the employer for the payment of wages, or referring the matter to the labour inspectorate. The Committee also notes that, according to the Government, the number of enterprises concerned by wage arrears rose from 152 in 2017 to 289 in 2020, before falling by more than half, following the strengthening of labour inspection measures. The Committee notes, however, that the CSTC, in its observations, indicates that it has detected cases of workers who have accumulated up to 36 months of wage arrears. The CSTC also refers to situations where, after a case has been brought to the labour inspectorate and a conciliation procedure for the payment of a number of months of wages has been concluded, new wage arrears accumulate. The Committee therefore requests the Government to continue its efforts to remedy the problems detected relating to wage arrears to ensure the regular payment of wages, in accordance with Article 12(1) of the Convention. The Committee also requests the Government to provide detailed information on the measures taken, including any court decision or arbitration award issued in connection with this Article of the Convention, and the progress achieved in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Central African Republic

Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95) (ratification: 1960)

Minimum Wage Fixing Convention, 1970 (No. 131) (ratification: 2006)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

In order to provide a comprehensive review of the issues relating to the application of the ratified Conventions on wages, the Committee considers it appropriate to consider Conventions Nos 131 (minimum wages) and 95 (protection of wages) in a single comment.

Minimum wages

Article 4 of Convention No. 131. Periodical adjustment of minimum wage rates. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, according to the information available, the last decree fixing the guaranteed inter-occupational minimum wage (SMIG) and the guaranteed agricultural minimum wage (SMAG) was adopted in 1991. It notes with concern the Government's indication in its report that there has been no fixing or adjustment of minimum wages during the period covered by the report and that it does not provide information on the operation of the Standing National Labour Council (CNPT), a tripartite body whose functions include, under section 226 of the Labour Code, issuing an opinion when the SMIG and SMAG are being fixed. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to review, without delay, the minimum wage rates and to adjust the SMIG and SMAG levels in the light of this review. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard, including on any opinion issued by the CNPT in this context.

Protection of wages

Article 12 of Convention No. 95. Regular payment of wages. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on the settlement of wage arrears in the public sector. It notes that the Government's report does not contain information in this regard. The Committee recalls that the application in practice of Article 12 comprises three essential elements: (i) efficient control; (ii) appropriate sanctions; and (iii) the means to redress the injury caused (see General Survey of 2003 on the protection of wages, paragraph 368). The Committee notes that the Labour Code contains provisions regulating these three elements, but that the Code excludes public employees from its scope of application. The remuneration of public employees is regulated by Act No. 09.014 of 10 August 2009 issuing the General Conditions of Service of the Central African Public Service, which does not contain provisions implementing the three elements mentioned above. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to provide information on the settlement of wage arrears in the public sector. It also requests the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure the regular payment of wages in this sector through the provision of efficient control, the adoption of appropriate sanctions in cases of non-observance, and the existence of means to redress any injuries caused. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Comoros

Minimum Wage-Fixing Machinery Convention, 1928 (No. 26) (ratification: 1978)

Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95) (ratification: 1978)

Minimum Wage Fixing Machinery (Agriculture) Convention, 1951 (No. 99) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Minimum wages

Article 3 of Convention No. 26 and Article 3 of Convention No. 99. Minimum wage fixing machinery and the methods to be followed in its operation. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on any decree or order adopted with respect to the minimum wage after obtaining the opinion of the Labour and Employment Advisory Council (CCTE), in accordance with section 106 of the Labour Code. The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that in 2015, the CCTE examined seven regulatory texts including the decree fixing the inter-occupational guaranteed minimum wage (SMIG) for workers covered by the Labour Code. The Government adds that the tripartite members of the CCTE recommended that an expanded consultation framework should be established as soon as possible in order to examine the subject in greater depth through additional studies, taking into consideration the experience of other countries with regard to wage fixing as well as the country's socioeconomic situation. The Committee notes that according to the CTTC, despite the discussions held by the CCTE in 2015, no text setting minimum wages was adopted. The Committee further notes that sections 90-92 of the Labour Code provide that collective agreements concluded by joint committees, composed of representatives of the most representative employers' organizations and trade unions in the sector, may be extended and then determine the wages that must be applied for each occupational category. In this context, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to give effect to the provisions of section 106 of the Labour Code without delay and to provide information in this respect. It also requests the Government to provide information on the collective agreements in force fixing wage rates for specific categories of workers and their possible extension pursuant to sections 90 and 92 of the Labour Code.

Article 4 of Convention No. 26 and Article 4 of Convention No. 99. System of supervision and sanctions. The Committee notes that the CTTC indicates that the agricultural sector, like other sectors of the informal economy, is beyond the control of the State with regard to wages. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this regard.

Protection of wages

Articles 8 and 10 of Convention No. 95. Deductions from wages, attachment or assignment of wages. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes that the Government indicates in its report that it intends to submit a draft order to the CCTE to determine the parts of wages that are liable to progressive deductions, as well as the part that is exempt from any attachment or assignment. The Committee notes that such an order is provided for under sections 114 and 119 of the Labour Code, as amended in 2012. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to adopt the order without delay and to provide information in this respect.

Article 12(1). Regular payment of wages. Application in practice. Further to its previous comments on the need to resolve the situation of wage arrears, including in the public service, the Committee notes that the Government indicates that efforts have been made to address this problem but challenges remain. The Government affirms its willingness to end the non-payment of wages, in particular in the public sector. The Committee also notes that the CTTC underscores the lack of progress with regard to the settlement of wage arrears, including in the public sector for the period from 1995 to 2009. The Committee recalls that workers shall receive remuneration for the work done and that the fundamental nature of wages stems from their essential role in ensuring workers' livelihood. The Committee requests the Government to intensify its efforts to resolve the question of wage arrears definitively, particularly in the public sector, and to provide information in this regard.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Costa Rica

Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95) (ratification: 1960)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Costa Rican Federation of Chambers and Associations of Private Enterprise (UCCAEP) communicated with the Government's report.

Article 3(1) of the Convention. Prohibition of the payment of wages in the form of vouchers, coupons or in any other form alleged to represent legal tender. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes that the Government reiterates that coffee payment vouchers are not used as a means of payment, nor replace payment in cash, but rather constitute a monitoring mechanism so that pickers on poorer plantations have tangible evidence of the amount in cash that they should receive from their employer at the end of the week. The Government indicates that this method is also a security guarantee for the producer against the risk of crime involved in keeping legal tender on some plantations. The Committee notes with regret that section 165 of the Labour Code, which provides that coffee plantations may pay workers with tokens representing legal tender, has not yet been amended. While noting the information provided by the Government on the details and reasons for such practices in the coffee sector, the Committee requests the Government to take all necessary measures, including through the labour inspection system and the establishment of adequate penalties for any infringements, to ensure that all workers in the coffee sector receive the whole amount of their wage in legal tender, at the end of the week, in accordance with the requirements of the Convention. The Committee also requests the Government to adopt without delay the necessary measures to amend section 165 of the Labour Code to guarantee the prohibition of the payment of wages in the form of promissory notes, vouchers, coupons, or in any other form alleged to represent legal tender, in accordance with Article 3(1) of the Convention. It also requests the Committee to provide specific information on any legislative changes adopted in this respect, and on the inspections carried out in coffee plantations, the infringements detected, and the penalties applied.

Article 4(2)(b). Fair and reasonable value attributed to allowances in kind. With regard to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's reference to various rulings of the Second Chamber of the Supreme Court of Justice concerning the requirements for allowances in kind, including the determination of the value of the wage in kind based on objective appraisal and wage-fixing parameters (ruling No. 00075-2004 of 11 February 2004) and the remunerative nature of allowances in kind (rulings Nos 00075-2004 of 11 February 2004 and 00611-2004 of 21 July 2004). The Committee also notes that section 166 of the Labour Code has not been amended to ensure that the value attributed to allowances in kind is fair and reasonable. The Committee recalls that Article 4(2) of the Convention imposes an obligation as to the result to be achieved and therefore requires the adoption of measures to ensure that any allowances in kind are attributed a fair and reasonable value, for example specific regulations establishing the value of the allowances in kind, or methods of determining or supervising the value attributed to them (2003 General Survey on protection of wages, paragraphs 153 and 160). In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to adopt the necessary measures to effectively guarantee that the value attributed to allowances in kind is fair and reasonable, in accordance with Article 4(2) of the Convention. It also requests the Government to provide information on the measures adopted in this respect.

Previous comment

Article 8 of the Convention. Deductions from wages. Further to its previous comments on the absence of limits on the amounts of authorized deductions from wages, the Committee notes that the Government's report does not contain information on this subject. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures, on the basis of discussions in the National Labour Council, to establish limits on the permitted amount of deductions from wages, and to provide information in this regard.

Djibouti

Minimum Wage-Fixing Machinery Convention, 1928 (No. 26) (ratification: 1978)

Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95) (ratification: 1978)

Minimum Wage Fixing Machinery (Agriculture) Convention, 1951 (No. 99)
(ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes the joint observations of the General Union of Djibouti Workers (UGTD) and the Labour Union of Djibouti (UDT) received on 4 May 2021 on Convention No. 95.

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of the ratified Conventions on wages, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 26 and 99 (minimum wages) and 95 (protection of wages) together.

Minimum wages

Articles 1 to 3 of Convention No. 26 and Articles 1 and 3 of Convention No. 99. Minimum wage fixing machinery. Further to its latest comments on the need to reintroduce the guaranteed interoccupational minimum wage (SMIG), which was withdrawn from the legislation in 1997, the Committee welcomes the information provided by the Government in its report, particularly in respect of the approval by the National Council for Labour, Employment and Social Security of a draft amendment to the Labour Code aimed at reintroducing the minimum wage. The Committee notes with satisfaction that Act No. 221/AN/17/8th L of 2017, by amending section 60 of the Labour Code, effectively reintroduced the SMIG as from 1 January 2018.

Protection of wages

Articles 8(1) and 10 of Convention No. 95. Deductions from and attachments of wages. Further to its latest comments on the need to review the conditions in which wage deductions can be made and to limit the amount thereof, the Committee notes the Government's reference in its report to a draft text fixing portions of wages that are subject to progressive deductions and the related rates, which is under examination. The Committee also notes that by amending section 141 of the Labour Code, Act No. 221/AN/17/8th L of 2017 removed the possibility of allowing deductions from wages on the basis of an individual agreement. It also notes with satisfaction that the Code of Civil Procedure, adopted in 2018, fixes the portions of wages that may be subject to attachment. Lastly, it notes that a limit on the amount of deductions from wages made otherwise than by attachment is yet to be established. The Committee therefore requests the Government to indicate the progress made towards the adoption of a decree limiting the amount of these deductions, as provided for in section 142 of the Labour Code.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Ecuador

Minimum Wage Fixing Convention, 1970 (No. 131) (ratification: 1970)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Ecuadorian Confederation of Free Trade Unions (CEOSL), the Ecuadorian Federation of Municipal and Provincial Workers (FETMYP), the National Federation of Education Workers (UNE) and the National Ecuadorian Federation of Workers of Provincial Governments (FENOGOPRE), received on 1 September 2022. The Committee requests the Government to provide its response in this regard.

Article 3 of the Convention. Elements for the determination of the minimum wage. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indications in its report that: (1)

Ministerial Decision No. MDT-2020-249 of 30 November 2020 provided that there was no wage adjustment for 2021 and maintained the minimum wage at US$400 a month; (2) the decision was adopted following several sessions of dialogue with representatives in the National Labour and Wage Council (CNTS) and with the technical support of the competent state institutions, in which analysis covered not only the consumer price index, but also various relevant indicators of the difficult economic situation faced by the country as a result of the COVID-19 pandemic; and (3) various indicators were analysed, including; the consumer price index, the needs of workers, the cost of living, economic factors and productivity levels, which are factors that are in conformity with the provisions of the Convention. The Government adds that when the wage increase for 2021 was analysed in 2020, Ecuador was experiencing an unprecedented economic crisis, despite which tripartite dialogue sessions were held in the CNTS on wage fixing, during which employer and worker representatives made their proposals and indicated their positions on wage adjustments and, even though consensus was not achieved among the representatives in the Council, each of the proposals, indicators and positions expressed by both partners were taken into consideration in the analysis for the purpose of issuing the aforementioned ministerial decision which maintained the 2020 wage level without adjustment in 2021. The Government adds that for 2022, giving effect to the provisions of the national legislation and Convention No. 131, the Ministry of Labour, through Ministerial Decision No. MDT-2021-276 of 21 December 2021, set the unified basic wage for workers in general, including workers in small industry, agriculture, export processing zones, paid domestic workers, craft operators and micro-enterprise collaborators, at US$425 a month. According to the Government, the unified basic wage was referred to the CNTS for consideration, as a result of which the 2022 adjustment was the subject of tripartite social dialogue, with the participation of state institutions, which reported the trends in the various indicators in relation to: (a) fluctuations in the cost of living; (b) economic growth; and (c) the employment situation in the country.

The Committee notes that in their observations the CEOSL, FETMYP, UNE and FENOGOPRE: (1) point out that, when determining the unified basic wage for 2022, the same legal parameters were not applied as those used for 2021; (2) indicate that Ministerial Decision No. MDT-2021-276, which determined the basic wage for 2022, indicates in its introductory paragraphs that “consensus was not reached in the CNTS between the representatives of workers and employers on the determination of the unified basic wage which will be in force as from 1 January 2022”; and (3) nevertheless, instead of setting the wage increase as a percentage rise equivalent to the projected consumer price index, as set out in the national legislation, the wage was increased by 6.25 per cent at the request of the President of the Republic. In this way, the wage for 2022 was increased by US$25. The trade union organizations provide explanations of the formula established in the legislation (Ministerial Decision No. MDT-2020-185) for the calculation of the adjustment in the unified basic wage and add that: (i) the formula may or may not be used by the Council for the determination of the wage; (ii) if it is followed, it does not include the cost of the basic family basket, nor the cost of the basic living basket; and (iii) these components are defined by the Ecuadorian Institute of Statistics and Census and, in July 2022, the basic family basket was US$753.62 a month and the basic living basket was US$793.33, which are far from the current basic wage of US$425. In the view of the trade union organizations, the State should establish a compulsory formula for the determination of basic wages which takes into account the value of the basic family and living baskets. The Committee notes all the information provided by the Government and the observations of the trade union organizations, concerning which the Government has not provided its response. The Committee notes the different positions on the elements taken into account to determine the level of minimum wages in 2022, and the proposed formula for determining the minimum wage to be considered for the future. The Committee hopes that tripartite dialogue with the representative organizations of workers and employers concerned, in which there is a sincere, technical and constructive exchange, will make it possible to determine a minimum wage which, in so far as possible and appropriate in relation to national practice and conditions, will take into consideration all the elements referred to in Article 3(a) and (b). It requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard.

Article 4(2) and (3). Consultations. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication that: (1) in accordance with section 117 of the Labour Code, the unified basic wage in the country for private sector workers is established annually, for which purpose the National Labour and Wage Council holds sessions to analyse the employment policy and determine wage adjustments with the participation of representatives of both employers and workers; (2) the CNTS engages in exhaustive consultation with employers' and workers' organizations; (3) each partner in the CNTS has the right to speak and vote on a basis of equality and the resulting decisions and recommendations therefore require the support of the majority of representatives on the Council; (4) in 2021, five meetings were held to examine the labour situation and the annual wage adjustment, in which the representatives participated in an exhaustive discussion of the criteria and the proposals put forward by both partners; (5) the Ministry of Labour participated in these tripartite discussions with a view to reaching consensus between the partners; and (6) mechanisms have also been established in the national legislation to support the representatives of the partners in their decision-making, such as the option for the representatives to have technical advisors and the participation of public institutions.

The Committee notes the indications of the CEOSL, FETMYP, UNE and FENOGOPRE that: (1) the United Workers' Front (which represents 450,000 workers in the public and private sectors, rural areas and cities) and Public Services International in Ecuador, which have been present in Ecuador since 1989, were not able to participate in the tripartite discussions, despite their high level of representation among workers, or in the decisions taken by the CNTS; (2) the denial of the participation of these organizations is due to the lack of clarity in the parameters used by the Executive Secretariat of the CNTS in drawing up the list of the ten most representative organizations at the national level; (3) this lack of transparency enables the Ministry of Labour to nominate pre-Government organizations and the legislation should therefore be revised to clarify and make more transparent the criterion of most representative, in accordance with ILO guidance and, in short, allow other organizations to be part of the Council. Finally, the trade union organizations recall that the ILO provided technical assistance to the State at the end of 2019, when a road map was prepared which envisaged the strengthening of the CNTS and the broadening of its membership, but that it has not been implemented more than two years later. The Committee recalls that, when examining the application of the Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144), by Ecuador, it requested the Government to adopt the measures necessary to ensure that all the country's "most representative organizations" of employers and workers can participate in the CNTS and other consultative bodies of a tripartite nature (2021 observation). The Committee trusts that appropriate measures will be taken to enable full consultations to be held with all the representative organizations of workers and employers concerned, in accordance with Article 4(2). It requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard.

The Committee recalls that the Government may, in relation to all the matters raised, have recourse to ILO technical assistance, if it so wishes.

Article 3 of the Convention. Operation of the minimum wage-fixing machinery. With regard to its previous comment, the Committee notes with regret that the Government's report does not contain any new information in this respect and that a new updated minimum wage for the private sector has still not been fixed. Recalling that the minimum wage in the private sector has not been readjusted since 1988, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to fix an updated minimum wage for the private sector as soon as possible, on the basis of the proposals of the multidisciplinary commission established by the Prime Minister's Ordinance of 9 June 2021, after consultation with the workers' and employers' representative organizations, in application of the legislation in force. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information in this regard, in particular on the commission's composition, functioning, meetings and results.

Article 2 of Convention No. 131. Sanctions. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes that the Government's report does not contain information on the measures taken to give effect to this Article of the Convention. It also notes that in its 2021 report on Convention No. 81, the Government indicates that the new Code of Offences adopted on 28 October 2021 by Act No. 128, which provides for sanctions for violations of labour legislation (sections 87 to 95), does not contain sanctions for failure to apply the minimum wage. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that failure to apply the minimum wage makes the person or persons concerned liable to appropriate penal or other sanctions, in accordance with Article 2 of the Convention, and to provide information in this regard.

Article 3. Elements to be considered in determining the minimum wage level. The Committee notes that in reply to its previous request, the Government reiterates that the minimum wage is set at 30 per cent of the minimum subsistence level, based on the principle of a progressive raise to the minimum subsistence level for a person of working age, and does not provide any information on the criteria used to determine this ratio. In this context, the Committee expects that at the next adjustment of the minimum wage, so far as possible and appropriate in relation to national practice and conditions, account will be taken of both the needs of workers and their families, and of economic factors, as provided for in Article 3 of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

Article 4. Consultation with the social partners. The Committee notes that in response to its previous comments, the Government indicates that the National Tripartite Commission has not been able to meet for a considerable time, albeit it will consider the issue of the minimum wage raise at its next meeting. In light of this information, the Committee requests the Government to take all necessary measures to ensure that full consultation with the employers' and workers' representatives is held in connection with the fixing and adjustment of the minimum wage level, and to provide information in this regard. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the composition, and functioning of the National Tripartite Commission, and its work in the context of the next examination of the minimum wage.

Protection of wages

Article 12 of Convention No. 95. Regular payment of wages. Further to its previous comments on the persisting situation of wage arrears in the country, the Committee notes that the Government indicates in its report that this issue will be considered at a meeting of the National Tripartite Commission. The Committee requests the Government to intensify its efforts to address and remedy the issue of wage arrears in consultation with the social partners, including in the framework of the National Tripartite Commission, and to provide specific information on the measures adopted in this respect, including strict supervision, severe sanctions, and appropriate compensation to workers for the losses incurred.

Minimum Wage Fixing Convention, 1970 (No. 131) (ratification: 1971)

Previous comment

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of the ratified Conventions on wages, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 131 (minimum wage) and 95 (protection of wages) together.

Minimum wage

Article 4 of Convention No. 131. Minimum wage-fixing machinery. The Committee notes that in reply to its previous comment, the Government indicates in its report that the Consultative Council for Wages to be appointed under section 19 of the Labour Relation Act (No. 12 of 2010) has not yet been established but that a committee on wages has been established to prepare a draft law on wages. Recalling that minimum wages were last adjusted in the country in 2011, the Committee urges the Government to take all necessary measures to ensure that full consultation with the employers' and workers' representatives is held in connection with the fixing and adjustment of the minimum wage level, and to provide information in this regard. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on: (i) the composition, functioning and work of the committee on wages; and (ii) the progress made in the adoption of any draft law on wages.

Protection of wages

Article 12 of Convention No. 95. Regular payment of wages and final settlement of wages due. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that a wages release committee has been established within the Ministry of Civil Service Affairs to address the challenges that prevent the payment of wages by ailing firms and foreign companies that have withdrawn from the country. Moreover, the Committee notes that the Government does not communicate information on the implementation of Decision No. 20/2007, concerning the organization, import and employment of foreign labour, and Decision No. 56/2006, concerning the establishment of a multi-stakeholder committee to examine wage claims of migrant workers who had been expelled from the country as illegal immigrants. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that any situation of wage arrears or other difficulties experienced in the payment of wages to workers, including migrant and public sector workers, are effectively addressed, and to provide information in this regard. It also requests the Government to provide information on the mandate, composition and functioning of the wages release committee and on the implementation of Decisions Nos 20/2007 and 56/2006.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Madagascar

Minimum Wage-Fixing Machinery Convention, 1928 (No. 26) (ratification: 1960)

Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95) (ratification: 1960)

Previous comment

In order to provide an overview of matters relating to the application of the ratified Conventions on wages, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine the application of Conventions Nos 26 (minimum wages) and 95 (protection of wages) in a single comment.

The Committee notes the observations of the Trade Union Confederation of Malagasy Revolutionary Workers (FISEMARE) and the General Confederation of Workers' Unions of Madagascar (FISEMA), received on 1 September 2022.

Minimum wages

Article 3 of Convention No. 26. Minimum wage-fixing machinery and consultation of the social partners. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its report on the adoption of Decree No. 2022-626 of 4 May 2022 setting the minimum starting wage in the private sector, for which the implementing order is still being prepared. The Government adds that the new minimum starting wage was set taking into account the protocol containing the outcome of wage bargaining, submitted to the National Labour Council (CNT) for its views on 5 April 2022, and that it includes a supplement covered by the State. In this regard, the Committee notes the observations of the FISEMA and the FISEMARE, which indicate that: (i) the minimum wage-fixing machinery no longer takes into account the real situation and the minimum subsistence level for workers; and (ii) there is a significant period of time between the declaration of the new minimum starting wage and the publication of the corresponding order, which accentuates the difficulties faced by workers in meeting their living expenses, particularly in light of price rises. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that, within the context of the operationalization of the CNT, standing committees have been established to ensure the sound functioning of the CNT, including the purchasing power and wages committee. In this connection, it notes the observations of the FISEMA concerning the dysfunctionality of the CNT and that the purchasing power and wages committee has been created but is not yet operational. It also notes the emphasis by the FISEMARE that, despite the existence of regular dialogue between employers and workers on wage increases, in the last resort, the rates of minimum wages are set by employers. The Committee requests the Government to intensify its efforts to make the CNT operational, and to provide information on this subject, including on the establishment of the purchasing power and wages committee, its work and achievements. The Committee also requests the Government to take the necessary measures to adopt, as soon as possible, the implementing order of Decree No. 2022-626 of 4 May 2022, and to provide information on the progress made in this regard.

Article 4. System of supervision and sanctions. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication that, since 2019, the labour inspection services, together with the National Social Insurance Fund, have established a task force responsible for monitoring regularly the application of the Decree on the minimum starting wage, and that: (i) in the event of failure to apply the minimum starting wage, the labour administration makes time-bound recommendations with a view to ensuring effective compliance with the Decree on the minimum starting wage; and (ii) if these recommendations are not given effect, labour inspectors indicate the offences in a report referred to the Office of the Prosecutor-General of the Republic. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the activities of the task force, including statistics on cases of failure to apply the minimum starting wage, and the measures adopted to resolve the issue.

Article 8 of Convention No. 95. Deductions from wages. The Committee notes that, in reply to its previous comment, the Government indicates in its report that: (i) no deduction from wages may be made without the consent of the worker; and (ii) labour inspectors organize information sessions and training for public institutions and the social partners with a view to preventing risks of abuse in this field. However, the Committee notes that the Government does not indicate the manner in which the deductions authorized in sections 69 and 71 of the Labour Code are limited. The Committee recalls that, in accordance with Article 8(1) of the Convention, deductions from wages shall be permitted only under conditions and to the extent prescribed by national laws or regulations, or fixed by collective agreement or arbitration award. The Committee therefore requests the Government to indicate the measures adopted or envisaged that are necessary to establish precise and overall limits on the deductions from wages authorized in sections 69 and 71 of the Labour Code. It requests the Government to provide information on this subject.

Article 12. Regular payment of wages and final settlement of all wages upon the termination of the contract. Further to its previous comment, the Committee notes that the Government has not provided information on delays in the payment of wages and of social security contributions, as well as cases of the non-payment of the remaining amounts due to workers on the termination of the employment relationship. It also notes that the FISEMA denounces the existence of several months of wage arrears, including social security contributions, in the public sector and considers that the labour inspection services have no authority in relation to this situation. The Committee once again requests the Government to take all the necessary measures, including action by the labour inspection services and the imposition of effective penalties in the event of non-compliance, to resolve these difficulties and to provide information on this subject.

Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95) (ratification: 1960)

Previous comment

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of ratified Conventions on wages, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 26 (minimum wage) and 95 (protection of wages) together.

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) on the application of Conventions Nos 26 and 95, received on 1 September 2022.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 110th Session, May–June 2022)

The Committee notes the discussion that took place in the Committee on the Application of Standards (hereinafter Conference Committee) in June 2022 concerning the application of Conventions Nos 26 and 95. The Committee notes that the Conference Committee urged the Government to: (i) consult with the social partners on the issue of extending the minimum wage coverage to the categories of workers currently excluded by the National Minimum Wage Act 2019; (ii) ensure, in consultation with social partners, that men and women receive equal remuneration for work of equal value, including with regard to minimum wage coverage; (iii) establish, in consultation with social partners, an effective system of supervision and sanctions to ensure that the national minimum wage is applied at all levels; (iv) consult with social partners on the issue of the application of the scope of wage protection to domestic workers; (v) consult with the social partners on the provisions of section 35 of the Labour Act that allow the Minister of Labour to authorize deferred payment of up to 50 per cent of workers' wages until the completion of their contract, in light of Articles 6 and 12(1) of Convention No. 95; and (vi) consult with social partners with a view to amending sections 6(1) and 7(1) of the Labour Act to come into line with Convention No. 95. In addition, the Conference Committee requested that the Government avail itself, without delay, of technical assistance from the Office to ensure compliance with the Conventions in law and practice.

The Committee notes the indication in the report of the Government that a tripartite meeting on the Conference Committee conclusions was organized on 10 August 2022, with the Government, the Nigeria Employers' Consultative Association (NECA), the Nigeria Labour Congress (NLC), the Trade Union Congress (TUC) and the ILO in attendance. The Government indicates that decisions were adopted at the meeting to ensure the full application of Conventions Nos 26 and 95, including a road map recommending a second tripartite meeting and the submission of recommendations to the National Labour Advisory Council (NLAC). The Committee notes that many of the decisions adopted refer to the Labour Standards Bill, pending its adoption, and the revision of the National Minimum Wage Act 2019. The Committee requests the Government to continue to take all necessary measures to ensure the appropriate follow-up to the conclusions of the Conference Committee as early as possible, in consultation with the social partners, and to provide information in this regard. The Committee also expresses the firm hope that the measures taken, including the adoption and revision of the relevant implementing legislation, will provide an adequate response to the following comments of the Committee.

A. Minimum wage

Article 1 of Convention No. 26. Scope of minimum wage protection. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the scope of the minimum wage may be revisited in the next review of the National Minimum Wage Act 2019. The Committee also notes that a proposal for the extension of the minimum wage coverage is included in the road map adopted by the tripartite constituents on 10 August 2022. The Committee hopes that in the context of the initiatives referred to by the Government, all the necessary measures will be taken to fix minimum rates of wages for workers employed in certain trades or parts of trades in which no arrangements exist for the effective regulation of wages by collective agreement or otherwise and where wages are exceptionally low. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress made with regard to the road map's implementation.

Article 4(1). System of supervision and sanctions. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the four states which have yet to apply the national minimum wage are being monitored by the state labour offices of the Federal Ministry of Labour and Employment, and by the National Salaries, Incomes and Wages Commission. The Committee also notes that, at the tripartite meeting on 10 August 2022, the constituents agreed: (i) to establish a tripartite structure to review sanctions, identify gaps and make proposals towards strengthening the supervision and enforcement of the National Minimum Wage Act 2019; and (ii) to recommend additional capacity building for labour officers on the need for effective and adequate monitoring and enforcement of sanctions. The Committee requests the Government to continue to take the necessary measures to ensure, by way of a system of supervision and sanctions, that wages are not paid at less than the minimum wage rates in cases where they are applicable. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information on the measures taken in this regard, including those taken to ensure that the four states that have yet to apply the national minimum wage, comply with the National Minimum Wage Act 2019.

B. Protection of wages

Article 2 of Convention No. 95. Protection of wages of homeworkers and domestic workers. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the Labour Standards Bill, which focuses on domestic workers rather than homeworkers, has been reviewed and validated by the social partners and is awaiting further action. The Committee nevertheless observes an absence of information concerning the time frame for adopting this legislation. The Committee once again requests the Government to continue to make every effort to ensure the protection of wages of domestic workers, including through the adoption of the Labour Standards Bill, and to provide information on any progress made in this respect.

Articles 6, 7(2), 12(1) and 14. Workers' freedom to dispose of their wages. Work stores. Regular payment of wages. Information on wages before entering employment and wage statements. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) section 35 of the Labour Act has been raised during the National Tripartite Labour Bill Reviews and deleted from the Labour Standards Bill, and the protection of wages and of workers' freedom to dispose of their wages are covered under sections 11, 12 and 13 of the Labour Standards Bill; (ii) the recommended amendment concerning work stores and section 6 of the Labour Act has been executed in the Labour Standards Bill; and (iii) payslips are available on request retrospectively, and section 14 of the Labour Standards Bill would provide for written particulars of terms of employment to be provided before the start of employment. Taking due note of this information, the Committee encourages the Government to pursue its efforts to ensure the application in law and in practice of these provisions of the Convention, including through the adoption of the Labour Standards Bill. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any court decision or arbitration award issued in relation to these Articles of the Convention.

Article 12(1). Regular payment of wages. Following its previous comments on this issue, the Committee notes the observations of the ITUC, indicating that wage arrears have become an issue of great concern for workers and that wages are not paid regularly in several states. The Committee also notes the information provided by the Government on the measures envisaged in this regard, including its intention to utilise the NLAC to drive home the need to protect wages. The Committee requests the Government to continue to take all necessary measures to address this issue, including the strengthening of supervision and sanctions, and to provide information on the progress made.

Rwanda

Minimum Wage-Fixing Machinery Convention, 1928 (No. 26) (ratification: 1962)

Previous comment

Articles 1 and 3(2) of the Convention. Minimum wage-fixing machinery. Consultation of employers' and workers' organizations. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes with regret that the Government indicates in its report that the draft Ministerial Order determining the minimum wage has not yet been adopted. The Government also indicates that: (i) the draft Ministerial Order was discussed within the tripartite National Labour Council in 2018 and is presently still subject to consultation between all relevant stakeholders; and (ii) the negative impact of the COVID-19 pandemic on the labour market and the economy will also call for relevant assessments to be made. Recalling that the last adjustment to minimum wage rates was made in 1980, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to fix new minimum wage rates, including through the adoption of the Ministerial Order determining the minimum wage, without delay and in consultation with social partners.

Article 4. Sanctions. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes that the Government indicates that section 23 of the Ministerial Order No. 001/19.20 of 17 March 2020 relating to Labour Inspection establishes the modalities of application of administrative fines for obstructing the work of the labour inspectorate, as provided under section 120 of the Labour Code. The Committee observes that neither the Labour Code nor the Ministerial Order provide for sanctions in the case of violations of provisions concerning minimum wages. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to put in place a system of sanctions, to ensure that wages are not paid at less than the minimum wage rates determined.

Tajikistan

Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95) (ratification: 1993)

Article 7(2) of the Convention. Works stores. The Committee notes that the Government's report does not contain information in response to its previous request on this issue. The Committee therefore requests the Government once again to provide information on the measures adopted with the object of ensuring that goods at work stores are sold, and services provided at fair and reasonable prices, or that stores established and services operated by the employer are not operated for the purpose of securing a profit, but for the benefit of the workers concerned, as required by this Article of the Convention.

Articles 12 and 15(b). Regular payment of wages. Control of compliance. Further to its previous comments concerning wage arrears in the country, the Committee notes that the Government indicates that the total amount of arrears of wages as of 1 May 2020, including arrears from previous years, increased by 78.8 per cent compared to the same period in 2019. The Government further indicates that local government authorities have adopted decisions and that the leaders of provinces, towns and districts have adopted decrees to establish the "Executive Unit for the Elimination of Wage Arrears". Concerning enforcement activities, the Committee notes that the Government's report does not contain information in response to its previous request. Taking note with concern of the continued situation of wage arrears in the country and its dramatic increase in 2020, the Committee requests the Government to step up its efforts to address this issue and to provide information on the results of the measures adopted and envisaged in this regard. The Committee also requests once again the Government to provide information on the number of inspection visits undertaken to ensure compliance with the timely payment of wages by sector, the number of cases of non-compliance detected and the measures taken to settle all outstanding payments, including adequate penalties or other appropriate remedies.

Articles 14(b) and 15(d). Wage statements and record-keeping. Further to its previous comments requesting the Government to indicate how effect is given to these provisions, the Committee notes that the Government's report is silent on this issue. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to: (i) specify how it is ensured that workers are informed at the time of each payment of the particulars of their wages for the period concerned, for example by means of payslips (Article 14(b)), and (ii) indicate any legislative or administrative provisions regulating the form and manner in which payroll records must be kept, as well as the specific wage particulars to be shown in those records (Article 15(d)).

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Uganda

Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95) (ratification: 1963)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2023, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of ratified Conventions on wages, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 26 (minimum wage) and 95 (protection of wages) together.

Legislative developments. The Committee notes that, according to information provided by the ILO Country Office for the United Republic of Tanzania, Burundi, Kenya, Rwanda and Uganda, the Employment Act 2006 is currently being revised in consultation with social partners. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the developments in this regard, and to provide a copy of the amended Employment Act 2006, once adopted. The Committee also hopes that its comments on the Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95) will be taken into account in the framework of the revision of the Act, and recalls that the Government can avail itself of the technical assistance of the ILO in this regard.

Minimum wage

Article 3 of Convention No. 26. Operation of the minimum wage fixing machinery. The Committee recalls that, following the discussion of this case before the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2014, it had requested the Government to provide information with regard to the announced reactivation of the Minimum Wages Advisory Board and the subsequent fixation of a new minimum wage in the country. The Committee notes that the Government indicates in its report that a Minimum Wages Advisory Board was appointed in 2015 and that it undertook a comprehensive study of the economy with a view to providing advice to the Government on the feasibility of fixing a minimum wage in the country and the form that the minimum wage should take. The Government also indicates that the report of the Board was under discussion in the Cabinet. Despite the progress made with the reactivation of the minimum wage fixing mechanism in 2015, the Committee notes with concern that the minimum wage, which was last set in 1984, has yet to be adjusted. It therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to revise the level of the minimum wage without further delay. Recalling the importance of ensuring the close involvement of employers' and workers' organizations at all stages of this process, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the composition of the Minimum Wages Advisory Board and on the consultations undertaken with the social partners in revising the level of the minimum wage.

Protection of wages

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report on Convention No. 95, due since 2017, has not been received. In light of its urgent appeal launched to the Government in 2020, the Committee proceeds with the examination of the application of Convention No. 95 on the basis of the information at its disposal.

Following its examination of the information at its disposal, the Committee notes that it is still missing important information on measures giving effect to Articles 1, 4, 7(2), 8, 10, 12(1) and 14(a) of Convention No. 95. The Committee is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments with regard to those Articles.

Article 1 of Convention No. 95. Coverage of all parts of the remuneration. The Committee notes that the definition of "wages" in section 2 of the Employment Act excludes "contributions made or to be made by the employer in respect of his or her employee's insurance, medical care, welfare, education, training, invalidity, retirement pension, post-service gratuity or severance allowance". The Committee recalls that the definition of wages for the purposes of the Convention is very broad and that it intends to cover the benefits excluded under section 2 of the Employment Act. Since this Act is the main legislation implementing the Convention, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken to provide workers with the protection afforded in the Convention in relation to the elements of their remuneration which are excluded under section 2 of the Employment Act.

Article 4. Partial payment in kind. The Committee notes that sections 41(3) and 97(2)(i) of the Employment Act address the issue of partial payment of wages in kind and provide that the Minister may adopt regulations on this matter. It requests the Government to indicate whether such regulations have been adopted.

Article 7(2). Works stores. The Committee notes that section 41(4) of the Employment Act provides that an employee shall not be obliged to make use of any shops established by the employer for the use of his or her employees or services operated in connection with the undertaking. The Committee recalls that Article 7(2) requires that where access to other stores or services other than those operated by the employer is not possible, the competent authority shall take appropriate measures in order to ensure that goods and services are sold at a fair and reasonable price and in the interest of the workers. The Committee therefore requests the Government to indicate what measures are in place in order to ensure the application of this provision of the Convention.

Articles 8 and 10. Deductions from wages and attachment of wages. The Committee notes that section 46(1) of the Employment Act provides a list of authorized deductions from wages and that section 46(3) provides that attachment of wages shall be limited to no more than two-thirds of all remuneration due in respect of a specific pay period. The Committee therefore notes that, while there is an overall limit on attachment of wages, there is no such limit for deductions from wages. In this regard, the Committee recalls that, in addition to setting specific limits for each type of deduction, it is also important to establish an overall limit beyond which wages cannot be further reduced, in order to protect the income of workers in the case of multiple deductions. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures for the establishment of specific and overall limits to deductions from wages.

Article 12(1). Regular payment of wages. With reference to its previous request concerning the issue of irregular payment of wages, the Committee notes that the Government merely repeats in its report the information previously provided. In relation to the lack of a functional Industrial Court, which had been noted in its previous comments, the Committee notes that information is available on the Court's website indicating that a number of awards have been adopted since 2015. It also notes that two judges and the registrar of the Court have participated in a training activity on international labour standards delivered by the International Training Centre of the ILO in Turin in June 2017. In this context, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide up-to-date information on the situation of wage arrears in the country, including data on the number of workers affected by non-payment or delayed payment of wages, the sectors concerned and the results of labour inspections on these issues, and to indicate whether the Industrial Court has been dealing with any such cases.

Article 14(a). Information on wages before entering employment. The Committee notes that section 59 of the Employment Act provides that an employee shall receive from the employer information on wages not later than 12 weeks after the date on which employment commences. The Committee recalls that Article 14(a) requires effective measures to be taken in order to ensure that employees are informed of the conditions in respect of wages before they enter employment. The Committee therefore requests the Government to indicate which measures are in place in order to ensure full implementation of this Article of the Convention.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Minimum Wage-Fixing Machinery Convention, 1928 (No. 26) (ratification: 1944)

Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95) (ratification: 1982)

Previous comments

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of the ratified Conventions on wages, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 26 (minimum wage) and 95 (protection of wages) together.

The Committee notes the observations concerning Convention No. 26 made by the Federation of Chambers and Associations of Commerce and Production of Venezuela (FEDECAMARAS), received on 11 February 2022. The Committee also notes that the Bolivarian Socialist Confederation of Men and Women Workers in Urban and Rural Areas and Fishing of Venezuela (CBST-CCP) sent observations concerning Convention No. 26 that were received on 24 April 2022. The Committee also notes the following observations communicated with the Government's report, formulated by: (i) FEDECAMARAS, on Convention No. 26; (ii) CBST-CCP, on Convention no. 26; and (iii) jointly, from the Confederation of Workers of Venezuela (CTV) the Federation of University Teachers' Associations of Venezuela (FAPUV) and the Independent Trade Union Alliance Confederation of Workers (CTASI), on Conventions Nos 26 and 95. The Committee also notes the observations formulated by the National Union of State and Public Service Workers (UNETE), on Convention No. 26, received on 5 September 2022.

Minimum wage

Follow-up to the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry (complaint made under article 26 of the Constitution of the ILO)

Article 3 of Convention No. 26. Participation of the social partners in minimum wage fixing. With regard to its previous comment, the Committee notes the discussions at the 344th, 345th and 346th Sessions (March, June and November 2022) of the Governing Body on the progress report concerning the operation of the social dialogue forum in giving effect to the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry, as well as the corresponding decisions adopted. In particular, the Committee notes that: (i) the inaugural session of the social dialogue forum (the forum) was held in a virtual format on 7 March 2022, chaired by the Minister of Popular Power for the Social Process of Labour, with the participation of the Director-General of the ILO and of the following employers' and workers' organizations: FEDECAMARAS; CBST-CCP; the Venezuelan Federation of Craft, Micro, Small and Medium-Sized Business Associations (FEDEINDUSTRIA); CTASI; CTV; UNETE; the General Confederation of Labour (CGT); and the Confederation of Autonomous Trade Unions (CODESA). The inaugural session adopted the terms of reference for the forum, which included addressing all pending questions concerning the application of Conventions Nos 26, 87 and 144; (ii) the first in-person session of the forum was held in Caracas from 25 to 28 April 2022, with ILO technical assistance. It produced a plan of action including a timetable of activities related to compliance with the cited Conventions; and (iii) a follow-up session of the forum was held in Caracas from 26 to 29 September 2022, with ILO technical assistance; it assessed the activities undertaken as part of the implementation of the plan of action adopted in April and agreed on updating the plan of action. The Committee notes that the Governing Body will again examine the progress made by the Government in ensuring compliance with the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry at its 347th Session (March 2023).

Further to its previous comments on this matter, the Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that: (i) on 20 December 2021, formal written consultations were undertaken, that included relevant statistical data for analysis, as a basis for opinion and response, with FEDECAMARAS, FEDEINDUSTRIA, CBST, CTASI, CTV, UNETE, CGT, and CODESA; (ii) on 3 March 2022, the President of the Republic publicly announced the proposal for an increase in wages equivalent to half a Petro (cryptocurrency), and this was made effective by Decree No. 4653, published in Official Gazette No. 6691, Special Edition of 15 March 2022; and (iii) on 4 March consultations were held with the above-mentioned social partners regarding the impact of the President's announcement. The Government also indicates that, in line with undertakings made at the April and September 2022 meetings of the forum, the following activities related to compliance with the Convention were carried out: (i) in the week of 13 to 19 July, a round of dialogue meetings were held with the employers' and workers' organizations concerned regarding compliance with the Conventions, including Convention No. 26; (ii) on 7 and 12 September 2022, meetings were held with the workers' organizations (CBST-CCP; CTASI; and CTV) and employers' organizations (FEDECAMARAS and FEDEINDUSTRIA) respectively, to exchange views on the method for fixing minimum wages, including the criteria and source of the relevant economic, social and labour reference data; (iii) on 20 October 2022, a tripartite meeting was held to discuss the constitution of a working party with regard to fixing the minimum wage; and (iv) on 25 October a workshop was held on indicators related to the minimum wage, with the support of the Minister of Popular Power for Planning. The Government also indicates that it has drawn up a timetable, included as an annex to its report, for tripartite and bipartite activities to be conducted between the second half of November 2022 and February 2023, which include: (i) the holding of a tripartite workshop on minimum wage methodology with ILO technical assistance (22 November 2022); (ii) dispatching formal invitations for consultations on minimum wage increases to the workers' and employers' organizations (15 December 2022); (iii) the organization of bipartite sectoral meetings to exchange views on proposals for the minimum wage (18 January 2023); and (iv) the holding of a tripartite meeting on methods of defining the minimum wage (25 January 2023). Lastly, the Government indicates that the third in-person session of the forum will be held in the week of 6 to 10 February 2023, with ILO technical assistance.

In this regard, the Committee notes that in its observations, FEDECAMARAS indicates that: (i) in November 2021, the Ministry of Popular Power for the Social Process of Labour (MPPPST) forwarded to FEDECAMARAS the rules established for the consultation process on the minimum wage (broad consultation once annually, meetings during the first quarter of each year with the social partners and relevant institutions and bodies, and a written communication accompanied by elements of the national and international context that impact on the socio-economic reality and relevant official indicators, such as the cost of the basic food basket); (ii) by a communication dated 20 December 2021, the MPPPST submitted several economic, poverty and labour force indicators to FEDECAMARAS; (iii) by a communication of 23 February 2022, the MPPPST requested FEDECAMARAS to present additional, updated information concerning the increase of the minimum wage; (iv) on 3 March 2022, without organizing the consultation and meetings foreseen for the first quarter of 2022, the President of the Republic announced publicly an increase in the minimum wage; (v) on 4 March 2022, the MPPPST sent a communication to FEDECAMARAS requesting the organization's opinion and recommendations on the impact and implications of the measures announced; on the same day, a meeting took place between the MPPPST with the participation of FEDECAMARAS and FEDEINDUSTRIA, at which FEDECAMARAS expressed concern at the failure to comply with the proposed methodology, and in particular at the lack of real discussion and effective dialogue between the tripartite actors on this matter; and (vi) the announced wage increase became effective after publication in the Official Gazette of 15 March 2022.

For its part, the CBST-CCP indicates in its observations that the Government regularly sends, once or twice annually, written communications to the workers' and employers' organizations regarding the minimum wage consultations.

The Committee also notes that in their joint observations, the CTV, the FAPUV and the CTASI indicate that by official letter No. 502/2021, the MPPPST requested their opinions, expectations, and suggestions on how the wages dynamic within the country should be aligned with the Convention; the CTASI, while considering this approach inappropriate, put forward a proposal, but received no response. In this regard, the above-mentioned organizations state that the steps taken are insufficient and cannot be considered as complying with the Convention, since in practice no account is taken of proposals and contributions made by the trade union organizations, and the national executive simply and unilaterally determines the increase in the national minimum wage.

The Committee also notes that FEDECAMARAS, the CTV, the FAPUV and the CTASI all concur that the meeting to discuss wage indicators, scheduled for July 2022 in the timetable annexed to the plan of action adopted in April 2022, did not take place.

Finally, the Committee notes that the UNETE indicates in its observations that the Government has not adopted a single measure requiring consultation with the employers' and workers' organizations on fixing the minimum wage.

Regarding the March 2022 wage increase, the Committee observes that: (i) while it was preceded by communications sent several months previously requesting the social partners' opinions on the issue, it did not comply with the methodology established previously by the Government, consisting of structured meetings intended to result in full compliance with the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry; and (ii) FEDECAMARAS, the CTV, the FAPUV, the CTASI and also the UNETE all agree that their proposals and contributions are not truly taken into account in final decision taking. Regarding the plan of action for Convention No. 26 adopted in April 2022, the Committee notes that it did not follow the programmed time frame, since only two meetings were held on indicators, and those were out of sync with the schedule that had been fixed, prior to the September forum meeting. Finally, the Committee observes that the plan of action adopted in September 2022 includes: (1) setting up a series of technical round tables to devise the methods of fixing the minimum wage, with ILO technical assistance; (2) implementing a timetable drawn up by the Government to that end, to be completed by February 2023; (3) dispatching of formal invitations to consult on increasing the minimum wage; (4) the holding of meetings to discuss proposals for the minimum wage; and (5) the holding of a tripartite meeting to devise methods for fixing the minimum wage. In light of the above, the Committee notes with regret the MPPPST's failure to comply with the proposed methodology for the consultation process on fixing the increase of the minimum wage that was decreed in March 2022. The Committee firmly hopes that, in the framework of opportunities opened up by the process begun with the establishment and follow-up of the social dialogue forum, all measures provided in the plan of action updated in September 2022 will be implemented, including the timetable of activities presented by the Government. It also hopes that these measures will yield tangible progress in the development and application of methods of fixing the minimum wage, as required by the Convention and in following the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry. In particular, the Committee urges the Government, at the next increase of the minimum wage, to take the necessary measures to ensure that the increase is preceded by a thorough consultation process, conducted sufficiently in advance, within a framework of structured, informed and effective discussions, in which due account is taken of the proposals made on this matter by the employers' and workers' organizations.

Protection of wages

Article 4 of Convention No. 95. Payment in kind. "Socialist cestaticket" (food voucher). With regard to its previous comments, the Committee notes from the Government's report that: (i) regarding payment of the "socialist cestaticket" benefit, roundtables have been set up with active participation of the employers' and workers' organizations, and these have concluded agreements that are beneficial for the workers; and (ii) as of 15 March 2022, the value of the "socialist cestaticket" was increased, without affecting the benefit provided by the Local Supply and Production Committees (CLAP) in the distribution of subsidized foodstuffs. The Committee also notes that the CTV, FAPUV and CTASI state in their joint observations that payment of wages with various types of vouchers or with food is common in the public and private sector. In this regard, the Committee notes with regret that, on the basis of the information presented by the Government, and the observations of the above-mentioned workers' organizations, it cannot be concluded that progress has been made in resolving this issue. While referring back to the analysis it has made in previous years on this matter (see in particular the observation adopted in 2017), the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures without delay, through dialogue with the representative organizations of the employers and workers, to examine solutions that allow the full application of Article 4 of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this respect, in particular with regard to the composition and operation of the above-mentioned roundtables, and the agreements reached following the debate held within them.

Articles 5 and 14. Electronic payment of wages. Information on constituent elements of wages. The Committee notes the Government's indication, in response to its previous comment, that it is providing information and instructions to the workforce regarding the correct use of electronic means to obtain their wages. The Committee also notes that the CTV, the FAPUV and the CTASI indicate that the electronic payment of wages causes immense problems for workers, especially for those who live in localities where there are no banking services, no electricity and no transport to take them to another locality. The above-mentioned workers' organizations particularly stress that workers have serious difficulty in withdrawing sums sufficient to cover their most basic needs, and meanwhile the money that they are unable to withdraw from their accounts falls in value every day. The Committee notes with regret that no progress has been made regarding this issue. The same workers' organizations indicate that the payrolls are managed by the “sistema patria”, which makes it impossible for the worker to obtain a receipt detailing their income and payroll deductions, a method that is tantamount to an attack on the worker’s wages, given the absence of an office to which to make claims regarding omissions or errors in the payment of wages. The Committee once more requests the Government to take effective measures in consultation with the social partners to address the issues both of the electronic payment of wages, and of providing information to workers concerning the constituent elements of their wages, in conformity with the Convention, and to provide information in this respect.

Article 12. Delayed payment of wages. The Committee notes the Government’s indication, in response to its previous comment, that the Constitutional Chamber of the Supreme Court of Justice, in ruling No. 5 of 19 January 2017, ordered the National Budget Office (ONAPRE) of the National Executive, to pay the wages owed to workers of the national legislative body, and the wage claims were subsequently settled through the Ministry of Finance.

[The Government is asked to reply in full to the present comments in 2023.]

Direct requests

In addition, requests regarding certain matters are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 26 (Congo, Côte d’Ivoire); Convention No. 95 (Central African Republic, Chad, Congo, Côte d’Ivoire, Lebanon, Libya, Niger, Saudi Arabia); Convention No. 99 (Côte d’Ivoire); Convention No. 131 (Cameroon, El Salvador, Lebanon, Morocco, Nepal, Niger).

The Committee noted the information supplied by the following States in answer to a direct request with regard to: Convention No. 26 (China: Macau Special Administrative Region, Colombia, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Myanmar); Convention No. 95 (Colombia, Cyprus); Convention No. 99 (Colombia); Convention No. 131 (Netherlands).

Weekly Rest (Industry) Convention, 1921 (No. 14) (ratification: 1934)

Previous comment

Articles 4, 5 and 6 of the Convention. Exceptions to weekly rest. Compensation. Consultation. Following its previous comments on the flexible working time schemes provided for by the Measures for the Examination and Approval of Flexible Working Hours Arrangement and Consolidated Hours Scheme (No. 503), 1994 (hereinafter, Approval Measures), the Committee notes that the Government indicates in its report that: (i) in accordance with the provisions of section 39 of the Labour Law and the Approval Measures, if an enterprise cannot implement the standard working-hour system due to its production characteristics, with the approval of the labour administrative department, it can implement other work and rest systems such as the integrated working hour system; (ii) the integrated working hour system is mainly applicable to the positions that need continuous work within a certain period of time, such as those in transportation, railway, post and telecommunications, water transportation, aviation, fishery and other sectors, as well as the positions in the sectors that require to arrange concentrated work and concentrated rest due to seasonal and natural conditions, such as the positions in geological and natural resource exploration, construction, salt making, sugar making, tourism and other sectors; (iii) if an enterprise makes the workers who follow the integrated working hour system work on official holidays, they shall pay overtime wages according to the standard of extended working hours on official holidays; (iv) the departments of human resources and social security at all levels have strictly enforced the approval procedures, requiring enterprises to fully consult their employees and the trade union of the enterprise, failure to which will result in disapproval; (v) if an employer infringes upon the rights of workers to rest and remuneration, he or she will be punished according to law, and workers have the right to safeguard their rights and interests by complaining to the labour inspectorate and applying for arbitration of labour disputes; and (vi) from 2013 to 2021, labour inspectorates at all levels have investigated and dealt with a total of 120,000 cases of various violations of working hours and provisions on rest and vacation, including violations of the provisions on weekly rest. In this respect, the Committee observes that according to section 44 of the Labour Law, overtime compensation, including work during weekly rest, shall be paid if no compensatory rest is granted, and that the Approval measures do not seem to contain provisions regarding the granting of compensatory rest in case of work during the weekly rest period. The Committee recalls that Article 5 of the Convention requires workers who are deprived of their weekly rest to be granted compensatory rest irrespective of any monetary compensation, in order to protect the physical and mental health of workers. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that in law and in practice, compensatory rest is granted to workers who are required to work in their weekly rest day. It also requests the Government to continue making every effort to ensure that authorizations to work during the weekly period are granted, special regard being had to all proper humanitarian and economic considerations and after consultation with responsible associations of employers and workers. It finally requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this respect, including regarding the activities of the labour inspectorate to prevent and sanction infringements to workers' weekly rest entitlements.

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of the Conventions on working time, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 1 (hours of work (industry)), 14 (weekly rest (industry)) and 106 (weekly rest (commerce and offices)) together.

Hours of work

Articles 2(b) and (c), 4 and 5 of Convention No.1. Variable distribution of working hours. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes that the Government in its report refers to section 33(2) of Law No. 7/2008, which provides that the employer may, depending on the characteristics of the operation of the undertaking, agree with the worker that the daily working period exceeds the limits of 8 hours per day, provided that the worker has 10 consecutive hours of rest per day, totalling not less than 12 hours, and that the working period may not exceed 48 hours per week. The Committee also notes that under section 40(3) of the Law No. 7/2008, the organization of shift work shall be subject to the maximum limits of the normal working period and shall guarantee the worker 10 consecutive hours of rest per day, totalling not less than 12 hours, and the working hours may be fixed with continuous or interspersed working periods. In this respect, the Committee recalls that the averaging of hours of work in general is authorized in the Convention only over a reference period of one week, and provided that a daily limit of nine hours is required (Article 2(b)); in all the other cases in which the averaging of working hours is allowed over reference periods longer than a week, the circumstances are clearly specified, as follows: (i) in case of shift work, it shall be permissible to employ persons in excess of 8 hours in any 1 day and 48 hours in any 1 week, if the average number of hours over a period of three weeks or less does not exceed 8 per day and 48 per week (Article 2(c)); (ii) in those processes which are required by reason of the nature of the process to be carried on continuously by a succession of shifts, the daily and weekly limit of hours of work may be exceeded subject to the condition that the working hours shall not exceed 56 in the week on the average (Article 4); and (iii) in exceptional cases where it is recognized that the limits of 8 hours a day and 48 hours a week cannot be applied, but only in such cases, agreements between workers' and employers' organizations concerning the daily limit of work over a longer period of time may be given the force of regulations, provided that the average number of hours worked per week, over the number of weeks covered by such an agreement, shall not exceed 48 (Article 5). Therefore, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to bring the above provisions of the Law No. 7/2008 into conformity with the requirements of the Convention, and to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

Article 6. Temporary exceptions. Circumstances and limits. The Committee observes that section 36 of the Law No. 7/2008 providing for overtime: (i) only prescribes the circumstances under which an employer may request an employee to work overtime without the employee's consent and remains silent on the circumstances under which resort to overtime can be made with the employee's consent; and (ii) does not seem to fix any clear limits to additional hours. The Committee also observes that section 37(2) of the Law No. 7/2008 provides that additional hours performed at the request of the employer with the consent of the worker or at the initiative of the worker with the consent of the employer are remunerated at a rate 20 per cent higher than normal hours. The Committee recalls that: (i) temporary exceptions to normal hours of work are authorized in the Convention in very limited and well-circumscribed cases; (ii) regulations shall fix the maximum of additional hours; and (iii) the rate of pay for overtime shall not be less than one and one-quarter times the regular rate. Therefore, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures, including the revision of Law No. 7/2008, to: (i) define the exceptional circumstances under which normal hours of work may be temporarily increased in industrial establishments; (ii) fix the maximum of additional hours allowed; and (iii) provide a rate of pay for overtime at least one and one-quarter times the regular rate, in accordance with this Article of the Convention.

Weekly rest

Articles 4 and 5 of Convention No. 14 and Articles 7 and 8 of Convention No. 106. Exceptions and compensatory rest. Following its previous comments on sections 42.2 (flexible weekly rest scheme) and 43.3 (work voluntarily performed by workers on their weekly rest day) of the Law No. 7/2008, the Committee notes that the Government indicates in its reports that: (i) due to the nature of the activities in industry and enterprises, and in order to promote the sustainable development of the society, a more flexible approach is adopted in the law to regulate the weekly rest days, while balancing the interests of both employers and employees; (ii) the 2020 amendment of Law No. 7/2008, adds the requirement of recording the workers' voluntariness to perform work on weekly rest day; (iii) the provision does not provide for overtime remuneration as compensation for work performed on weekly rest day, but rather the compensatory rest should take precedence; and (iv) since the compensatory rest must be taken within 30 days of work, if the compensatory time off cannot be taken, the provision provides for overtime remuneration instead. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures, including the revision of Law No. 7/2008, to ensure that in case of exceptions to the principle of weekly rest, all workers working on their weekly rest day benefit in respect of each period of seven days, to rest of a total duration at least equivalent to 24 consecutive hours, irrespective of any monetary compensation.

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of ratified Conventions on hours of work, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 1 (hours of work in industry), 14 (weekly rest in industry), 30 (hours of work in commerce and offices), 52 (holidays with pay), 101 (holidays with pay in agriculture) and 106 (weekly rest in commerce and offices) in the same comment.

The Committee notes the observations of the Single Confederation of Workers (CUT), the Confederation of Workers of Colombia (CTC) and the General Confederation of Workers (CGT) on the application of Conventions Nos 1, 14, 30 and 52, sent together with the Government's reports. The Committee also notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), received on 31 August 2022, and the observations of the National Employers Association of Colombia (ANDI), sent together with the Government's reports, on the application of Conventions Nos 1 and 14. The Committee invites the Government, in the context of the social dialogue established in the country, to analyse with the social partners the reported situation of non-observation of the Conventions in the specific sectors referred to by the trade union confederations in their observations, and if such non-observance is established, to take the necessary measures in this regard.

Legislative developments. The Committee notes the Government's reference in its reports to the adoption of Act No. 2101 of 2021 amending section 161 of the Substantive Labour Code (CST) (Labour Code) in order to reduce weekly working time from 48 to 42 hours in the private sector. The Government also indicates that the aforementioned Act will be implemented gradually between 2023 and 2026, without any cut in wages for workers. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that the purpose of this reduction is to give workers more space for family, social, recreational and cultural activities. The Committee further notes that the CUT, CTC and CGT indicate in their observations that, in the context of the State National Agreement of 2021, it has been agreed to establish a commission with representatives from the Administrative Department of the Public Service, the Ministry of Labour and the signatory trade union organizations with a view to drawing up a proposal to reduce working hours for public sector workers, without undermining their rights relating to wages. The Committee also notes that the IOE and the ANDI refer in their observations to the adoption of Act No. 2191 of 2022 governing the right of workers to disconnect from work outside the working day, during their rest periods and when on holiday. Lastly, the Committee duly notes the Government's proposal to conduct a tripartite analysis of the regulations in force, in the context of the Standing Advisory Committee on Wage and Labour Policies, in order to seek alternatives that address the observations of the workers' organizations. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on progress achieved in relation to revision of the limits on hours of work and hours of rest in the public sector. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the results of any tripartite examination of the regulations on working time. The Committee reminds the Government that it may avail itself, if it thinks it necessary, of technical assistance from the Office with regard to the points raised below.

Hours of work

Article 2 of Convention No. 1 and Article 3 of Convention No. 30. Limits on normal hours of work. The Committee notes that section 161(1) of the Labour Code, after its amendment by Act No. 2101, provides that maximum normal weekly working time is 42 hours, which, by joint agreement between the worker and the employer, can be spread over 5 or 6 days in the week, while still guaranteeing the weekly day of rest. The Committee observes that this provision does not establish a daily limit on hours of work. In this regard, the Committee notes that the CUT, CTC and CGT indicate that they consider it dangerous and disadvantageous that the maximum daily limit of eight hours of work, which existed before the adoption of Act No. 2101, has disappeared. Recalling that the Conventions establish a double cumulative limit on normal working hours of eight hours per day and 48 hours per week, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that a specific daily limit on normal hours of work is established in law and practice, in accordance with the requirements of the Conventions.

Article 2(b) of Convention No. 1 and Article 4 of Convention No. 30. Variable distribution of normal hours of work within the week. The Committee notes the indication of the CUT, CTC and CGT that, in the context of flexible daily hours of work authorized by section 161(c) of the Labour Code (distribution of 42 weekly hours over a maximum of six days per week, with a minimum of four continuous hours and a maximum of nine hours per day, subject to agreement between the employer and the worker), some workers, especially in the flower industry, currently work up to ten hours per day and others, such as workers in the plastics industry, work days of 12 hours or more. The Committee observes that while the limits of 42 hours per week and nine hours per day established by section 161(c) of the Labour Code are in conformity with the above-mentioned Articles of the Conventions, the limits on daily hours of work applied in practice in some industries, as referred to in the observations of the CUT, CTC and CGT, are not in conformity. In this regard, the Committee recalls that, in cases of variable distribution of working hours in the week, Convention No. 1 establishes a maximum limit of nine hours per day for industry workers, and Convention No. 30 sets a maximum limit of ten hours per day for workers in commerce and offices. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that: (i) the labour inspectorate does not receive a significant volume of complaints relating to hours of work; (ii) there is a need to reinforce routine inspections to extend coverage and increase monitoring of working hours in certain sectors of the economy which, in the context of flexibilization of working hours, exceed the established limit on hours; and (iii) it is hoped that improvements will be made in the supervision of hours of work in the informal economy through the introduction of pedagogical initiatives and action by the labour inspectorate. While emphasizing the importance, when establishing flexible arrangements for hours of work, of ensuring the existence of reasonable limits on the maximum duration of daily and weekly hours of work so that these are not prejudicial to the health of workers or to the necessary work-life balance (2018 General Survey concerning working-time instruments, paragraph 178), the Committee requests the Government to continue taking the necessary steps to monitor compliance with the legal provisions on hours of work, particularly in the informal economy and in sectors of the economy where working hours apply that exceed the limits established in the Conventions. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on such measures and the results achieved.

Articles 6(1)(b) and (2) of Convention No. 1 and Article 7(2), (3) and (4) of Convention No. 30. Temporary exceptions. Circumstances for and limits on additional hours of work. Remuneration. With regard to its previous comments on limits on additional hours of work, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the unnumbered section added to the Labour Code by section 22 of Act No. 50 of 1990 provides that additional hours, by day or by night, shall in no case exceed two hours per day and 12 hours per week; when working hours are extended, through agreements between employers and workers, to ten hours per day, additional hours shall not be worked on that day. In this regard, the Committee notes that Article 7(3) of Convention No. 30 requires not only a daily limit of additional hours of work undertaken by workers in commerce and offices, but also a yearly limit. In this connection, the Committee notes that the CUT, CTC and CGT indicate that the absence of monthly and annual limits on additional hours of work in the national legislation is one of the reasons for inappropriate use of such hours. The same organizations refer to individual cases of workers, mainly in the dock work sector, working exceptionally long hours (in some cases up to 18 hours a day), thus accumulating a high monthly and yearly number of additional hours. They further indicate that such hours are often unpaid. While recalling the impact that long hours of work can have on workers' health and work-private life balance, the Committee emphasizes the fundamental importance of prescribing clear statutory limits for the additional hours of work to be undertaken daily, weekly and yearly and of keeping the number of additional hours allowed within reasonable limits that take into account both the health and well-being of workers and the employers' productivity needs (2018 General Survey concerning working-time instruments, paragraph 151).

Regarding the circumstances in which recourse to additional hours of work is authorized, the Committee notes that section 162(1) of the Labour Code excludes certain categories of workers from the limits established in section 161 (those holding management posts, domestic workers, workers who perform discontinuous or intermittent work, and driver-mechanics). The Committee also notes that section 162(2) also establishes that the activities not included in the preceding subsection shall only exceed the limits set out in section 161 with the expressed authorization of the Ministry of Labour. In this connection, the Committee notes that the CUT, CTC and CGT indicate, in their observations, that the legislation does not clearly establish the conditions in which additional hours of work may be authorized. In this regard, the Committee recalls the importance of national legislation and practice restricting recourse to exemptions from these maximum limits to cases of clear, well-defined and limited circumstances such as accident, actual or threatened, force majeure or urgent work to be done to plant or machinery (2018 General Survey concerning working-time instruments, paragraph 119). In light of the above, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that: (i) recourse to additional hours of work is limited to clear, well-defined circumstances; (ii) reasonable limits to additional working hours are established and respected; and (iii) additional working hours are effectively remunerated in conformity with the Conventions. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of section 162(2) of the Labour Code, giving details of the number of authorizations issued by the Ministry of Labour by virtue of this provision, the activities and sectors concerned, the approximate number of workers affected by its application, and the maximum number of authorized additional working hours.

Weekly rest

Article 4 of Convention No. 14 and Article 7(1) and (4) of Convention No. 106. Permanent exemptions from the principle of weekly rest. With regard to its previous comments, the Committee notes that the Government provides no information on the regulation of section 175(1) of the Labour Code, which authorizes special weekly rest schemes for work that cannot be interrupted due to its nature or for technical reasons, and for work to meet urgent needs, such as public services or the preparation and sale of food. In this connection, the Committee notes that the CUT, CTC and CGT indicate that the principle of weekly rest does not apply to private security workers, who generally work 12-hour rotating shifts (12 hours of work followed by 12 hours of rest, without enjoying weekly rest of 24 consecutive hours); they also indicate that such special weekly rest regimes need urgent regulation, as provided for under section 175(2) of the Labour Code. The Committee requests the Government, taking special account of all relevant social and economic considerations, and in consultation with the representative organizations of employers and workers, to adopt the necessary measures to regulate section 175(1) of the Labour Code to ensure that such exceptions remain within the limits established by these Articles of the Conventions. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate the categories of workers to which section 175(1) of the Labour Code applies in practice. The Committee further requests the Government to provide its comments on the observations of the CUT, CTC and CGT concerning the absence of weekly rest for workers in private security work.

Article 5 of Convention No. 14 and Article 7(2) of Convention No. 106. Compensatory rest. In relation to its previous comments on sections 180 and 184 of the Labour Code, the Committee notes the Government's indications that, in order to establish whether workers have the right to compensatory rest and/or monetary remuneration, it is necessary to determine whether the work on the usual weekly rest day is regular or occasional. The Government also indicates that, under section 180 of the Labour Code, a worker who undertakes work on the weekly rest day on an occasional basis (up to two Sundays per calendar month, according to section 179(2)) may choose either a compensatory cash payment or compensatory rest. In this respect, the Committee reiterates the importance of granting compensatory rest in all cases to workers deprived of their weekly rest, irrespective of any monetary compensation. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that compensatory rest is granted to all workers who work on their weekly rest day, including those who undertake work on an exceptional basis or work that cannot be suspended, irrespective of any monetary compensation, in accordance with these Articles of the Convention.

Paid annual leave

Articles 2(1) and 4 of Convention No. 52 and Articles 1 and 8 of Convention No. 101. Right to paid annual leave. Relinquishment. The Committee notes that, in response to its previous comments, the Government indicates that, under section 189 of the Labour Code, the employer and the worker may agree in writing, upon the worker's request, that up to half of the 15 working days of paid annual leave be paid in cash, which implies that the worker must enjoy at least seven and a half days of leave for each year of service and that the remaining days of leave (seven and a half days or less) may be paid in cash. The Committee recalls that Article 4 of Convention No. 52 and Article 8 of Convention No. 101 provide that any agreement to relinquish the right to an annual holiday with pay, or to forgo such a holiday, shall be void, it being understood that this principle applies to the duration of annual holiday with pay as established by each ratifying Member State, whatever its length. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to bring section 189 of the Labour Code into line with these Articles of the Conventions.

The Committee also notes that the CUT, CTC and CGT indicate that: (i) the successive hiring of workers for a determined period by cooperatives, temporary work agencies and outsourcing agencies makes it impossible to effectively enjoy annual leave, since at the end of each one-year contract, annual leave is paid in cash to the workers, who are immediately hired again on a temporary basis; and (ii) Ministry of Labour Circular No. 21 of 2020 established the possibility of granting annual leave in advance during the health emergency caused by the pandemic; however, since no limits have been set in this respect, workers who took advance annual leave that was allocated for subsequent years will not be able to take this entitlement again for several years. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect and to take the necessary measures to guarantee in practice that all workers enjoy a period of annual leave which is paid after one year of continuous service, in accordance with the Conventions.

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of the ratified Conventions on working time, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 1 (hours of work in industry), 14 (weekly rest in industry) and 106 (weekly rest in commerce and offices) together.

The Committee notes the observations submitted jointly by the Confederation of Workers Rerum Novarum (CTRN), the Costa Rican Workers' Movement Central (CMTC), the General Confederation of Workers (CGT) and the Workers' Unitary Confederation (CUT) and the Costa Rican Trade Union and Social Unity Bloc (BUSSCO), on Convention No. 1, received on 21 August 2022. The Committee also notes the observations of the Costa Rican Federation of Chambers and Associations of Private Enterprise (UCCAEP) on Conventions Nos 1, 14 and 106 submitted together with the Government's report.

Legislative developments. The Committee notes that, in their observations, the CTRN, CMTC, CGT, CUT and BUSSCO indicate that the Legislative Assembly is currently debating the draft Bill No. 21182 on the amendment of sections 136, 142 and 144 and the addition of sections 145 bis and 145 ter of the Labour Code, to update the exceptional periods of work and safeguard the rights of workers. The workers' organizations claim that the draft Bill, among other things: (i) fixes mandatory 12-hour days, which would affect the balance between work, rest and family life; (ii) eliminates the guarantee of pay for overtime; and (iii) incorporates annualized working hours into work that is seasonal, temporary or a continuous process, which would make workers' periods of work more intense.

The Committee notes that, in December 2021, the Office provided technical assistance regarding the Bill, at the request of the Permanent Committee on Fiscal Affairs of the Legislative Assembly. The Committee trusts that the Act to be adopted on working time will be in full conformity with the provisions of the Convention and requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in the process of adopting the draft Bill. The Committee recalls that the Government may avail itself of ILO technical assistance if it so wishes.

Hours of work

Articles 3 and 6(1)(b) and (2) of the Convention. Temporary exceptions. Circumstances and limits to additional hours. Pay. Bus drivers. Regarding the circumstances in which recourse to overtime is authorized (sections 139 and 140 of the Labour Code), the Committee observes that: (1) neither section 139 nor section 140 of the Labour Code fixes in a precise and exhaustive manner the circumstances in which recourse to overtime is authorized; and (2) section 139(2) provides for unpaid overtime under one circumstance (errors committed by the employee) which is not covered by the Convention. The Committee recalls that the Convention only allows exceptions to the limits on periods of work in case of accident, actual or threatened, or in case of urgent work to be done to machinery or plant, or in case of "force majeure" or to deal with exceptional cases of pressure of work.

Further to its previous comments on bus drivers, the Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that: (i) according to the information provided by the National Labour Inspectorate of the Ministry of Labour and Social Security, 64 infringements of normal hours of work and 107 infringements related to overtime were identified in the road transport sector in general between 2015 and 2021; (ii) with regard to bus companies, during the same period, 309 cases of infringements of all kinds were detected; (iii) as a result of the actions carried out by the National Labour Inspectorate, 257 cases were resolved at the administrative level, 9 cases were resolved at the judicial level, 34 cases are being processed at the judicial level and 9 cases are being processed at the administrative level; in addition, in 191 cases the labour inspectorate's warnings were complied with, while in 42 cases they were not complied with. In this regard, the Committee also notes that in their joint observations, the CTRN, CMTC, CGT, CUT and BUSSCO indicate that: (i) while the regular period of work for bus drivers is eight hours a day, in most bus companies, drivers negotiate 12 hours a day or more with their employers; (ii) in some bus companies, drivers are required to perform tasks related to vehicle maintenance and the management of the money collected, outside their regular period of work, for which they are not paid; and (iii) during an inspection of a road transport company, in response to a number of complaints of labour exploitation, it was found that drivers' period of work exceeded 12 hours a day, reaching up to 19 hours a day in some cases; it was also found that the company did not pay overtime. In this regard, the Committee notes the UCCAEP's indication that: (i) since the adoption of Act No. 7679 of 1997 repealing section 146 of the Labour Code, the activity of bus drivers has been adjusted to a period of work of eight hours a day; (ii) the cases of infringements detected by the labour inspectorate have been resolved at administrative or judicial level, or are still in process, and therefore there is no evidence of a widespread practice of infringement of periods of work and overtime pay; and (iii) the problem of a lack of bus drivers results in the use of overtime to ensure continuity in the public service.

In this regard, recalling the impact that long hours can have on workers' health and work-private life balance, the Committee refers to the 2018 General Survey concerning working-time instruments, paragraphs 119 and 151.

Consequently, the Committee requests the Government to continue taking the necessary measures, including by revising these provisions of the Labour Code and monitoring compliance with the legislation in force, to ensure that both in law and in practice: (i) recourse to overtime is limited to clear and well-defined circumstances; (ii) reasonable legal limits on overtime are established and enforced; and (iii) such hours are effectively paid, in accordance with the provisions of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this respect, including statistics on labour inspection activities related to hours of work and rest in the road transport sector, including violations found and penalties assessed.

Weekly rest

Articles 4 and 5 of Convention No. 14 and Articles 7 and 8 of Convention No. 106. Permanent or temporary exemptions to weekly rest – Compensatory rest. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication in its reports that no amendments have been made to section 152(3) of the Labour Code, which provides that work shall be permitted on the weekly rest day, by agreement between the parties, in the case of work which is not arduous, unhealthy or hazardous, and which is carried out in agricultural or livestock breeding grounds, industrial undertakings which require continuity of work owing to the nature of the needs which they satisfy or for obvious public or social interest. The Committee also notes that section 152(5) of the Labour Code provides that in the case of activities of obvious public or social interest and where the worker does not agree to work on rest days, the employer may apply to the Ministry of Labour for authorization to grant rest periods on a cumulative monthly basis, and the Ministry may grant or refuse the authorization requested. The Committee observes that: (i) section 152(5) of the Labour Code does not guarantee the granting of compensatory rest in case of work on the weekly rest day, as the Ministry of Labour may refuse the requested authorization; and (ii) for other activities set out in section 152(3) of the Labour Code, no compensatory rest is provided for. Consequently, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures, including by amending this section of the Labour Code, to ensure that, in the case of exemptions from the principle of weekly rest, all workers are entitled in respect of each period of seven days to compensatory rest of a total duration comprising not less than 24 hours, regardless of any monetary compensation. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information in this regard.

Holidays with Pay Convention (Revised), 1970 (No. 132) (ratification: 1996)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Article 9 of the Convention. Postponement or accumulation of annual holidays. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes with satisfaction that by Act No. 365/2011 Coll., sections 218 and 222 of the Labour Code have been amended and now provide that where leave cannot be taken until the end of the subsequent calendar year because the employee has been recognized as temporarily unfit for work, the employer shall grant such leave after the termination of the employee's incapacity to work. The Committee notes the Government's explanations that Act No. 365/2011 Coll. was adopted with a view to improving the position of employees in cases where paid leave cannot be taken in the calendar year in which it falls due, and guarantees that the right to leave does not expire by the mere lapse of time.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

The Committee notes the joint observations of the Confederation of Haitian Workers (CTH) and of the Confederation of Public and Private Sector Workers (CTSP) received on 2 November 2022 on the application of the Conventions.

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2023, then it will proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of the ratified Conventions on working time, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 1, 14, 30 and 106 in a single comment.

The Committee notes the observations of the Confederation of Public and Private Sector Workers (CTSP), received on 29 August 2018, the Association of Haitian Industries (ADIH), received on 31 August 2018, and the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 1 September 2018.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards
(International Labour Conference, 107th Session, May–June 2018)

The Committee notes the discussion which took place in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (Conference Committee), including with regard to the impact of the 2017 Act to organizing and regulating work over a 24-period divided into three segments of eight hours (hereinafter: Act on working time) on the application of the ratified Conventions on working time. In its conclusions, the Conference Committee asked the Government to: (i) review in consultation with the most representative employers' and workers' organizations the conformity of the Labour Code and the Act on working time, with respect to the ratified ILO Conventions on working time; (ii) strengthen the labour inspectorate and other relevant enforcement mechanisms to ensure that workers benefit from the protection afforded by the Conventions; (iii) report to the Committee of Experts on these measures; and (iv) avail itself of technical assistance to address these matters.

The Committee notes that, at the end of the discussion in the Conference Committee, the Government recalled that the Conventions that Haiti had ratified were part of its body of domestic law under article 276-2 of the Constitution of Haiti, and took precedence over national laws in the hierarchy of standards and could be invoked without reserve before the courts. Taking note of the observations of the Committee of Experts concerning the application of the Act on working time, the Government indicated that it was planning to hold tripartite consultations to identify and overcome the main difficulties encountered in the application of the Act, and to issue orders or regulations. The Government also indicated that it was aware of the delay in finalizing the process of reforming the Labour Code. Discussions had begun at the level of the Prime Minister's Office and would be continued within a tripartite framework, in the spirit of the San José Agreement of 21 March 2018 signed by the social partners, taking into account the Office's recommendations.

Furthermore, the Committee notes that the CTSP, in its observations, expresses regret at the lack of progress on working time issues since the discussion in the Conference Committee. However, the CTSP indicates that discussions on the reform of the Labour Code have resumed. The Committee also notes that the ADIH confirms that tripartite discussions on the reform of the Labour Code resumed in August 2018. According to the ADIH, the Act on working time should be repealed and the employers' and workers' organizations should be consulted on the application of the Conventions ratified in this field. The Committee further notes that the ITUC refers to the discussion of the case during the Conference Committee and indicates in particular that: (i) the Act on working time, which liberalizes the regulations on this subject, is giving rise to serious abuses; (ii) the Act was adopted without consultation and outside the process of negotiation of a new Labour Code; and (iii) the situation is aggravated by the lack of resources for labour inspection. The ITUC refers in particular to: (i) workers in the informal economy and in domestic work who are subjected to indecent working conditions in terms of both working time and leave entitlement; (ii) security personnel and subcontracted workers in the textile sector, where there is a regrettable lack of fixed working hours and a refusal by employers to pay overtime; and (iii) workers in export processing zones who are particularly subjected to abuses. The Committee requests the Government to send its comments on all the above observations.

Lastly, the Committee notes the Government's communication received on 30 October 2018 in which it informs the Committee that, further to the conclusions of the Conference Committee, it has requested ILO technical assistance to help it, inter alia, to submit the reports due, to strengthen the inspection services, to consolidate social dialogue with a view to pursuing social reforms, and to address the other matters raised by the Conference Committee. The Government also indicates that it hopes to receive this assistance before the next session of the International Labour Conference. The Committee hopes that this technical assistance will be made available without delay. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the results of the planned technical assistance, and also on the measures taken to ensure the effective application in law and practice of the ratified Conventions on working time.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Lithuania

Hours of Work (Industry) Convention, 1919 (No. 1) (ratification: 1931)

Forty-Hour Week Convention, 1935 (No. 47) (ratification: 1994)

Previous comment on Convention No. 1

Previous comment on Convention No. 47

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of ratified Conventions on working time, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions No. 1 and 47 (hours of work) together.

Legislative developments. The Committee notes the adoption of a new Labour Code (Law No. XII-2603) on 14 September 2016, which entered into force on 1 July 2017 and repealed the previous Labour Code (Law No. IX-926), with all amendments and additions.

Hours of work

Articles 2(b), 2(c), 4, and 5 of Convention No. 1 and Article 1 of Convention No. 47. Variable distribution of working hours. Circumstances. The principle of a 40-hour week. The Committee notes that sections 113 to 116 of the Labour Code regulate working time arrangements which include the averaging of working hours. Specifically, it notes that section 113(1) provides that the reference periods for these arrangements may not exceed three consecutive months; while section 114(2) sets as maximum limits for these arrangements 12 working hours per day and 60 per week, which is to include overtime and work done according to an agreement on additional work. In this respect, the Committee observes that none of these provisions sets any precise circumstances under which resort to averaging of working hours is allowed. The Committee recalls that the averaging of hours of work in general is authorized in the Convention only over a reference period of one week, and provided that a daily limit of nine hours is required (Article 2(b)); and that in all the other cases in which the averaging of working hours is allowed over reference periods longer than a week, the circumstances are clearly specified, as follows:

- (i) in case of shift work, it shall be permissible to employ persons in excess of 8 hours in any one day and 48 hours in any one week, if the average number of hours over a period of three weeks or less does not exceed 8 per day and 48 per week (Article 2(c));
- (ii) in those processes which are required by reason of the nature of the process to be carried on continuously by a succession of shifts, the daily and weekly limit of hours of work may be exceeded subject to the condition that the working hours shall not exceed 56 in the week on the average (Article 4); and
- (iii) in exceptional cases where it is recognized that the limits of 8 hours a day and 48 hours a week cannot be applied, agreements between workers' and employers' organizations may fix a longer daily limit of works, provided that the average number of hours worked per week, over the number of weeks covered by any such agreement, shall not exceed 48 (Article 5).

Therefore, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to bring the above provisions of the Labour Code in conformity with the requirements of Convention No. 1.

Regarding the principle of the 40-hour week, the Committee notes that, in response to its previous comments, the Government indicates that section 112(3) of the Labour Code provides that an employee's standard working hours shall be 40 per week. The Committee observes however that by virtue of section 121 of the Labour Code, Government Resolution No. 534 of 28 June 2017 determines the peculiarities of working time and rest time in transport, electronic communications, postal, agricultural, peat excavation, agricultural processing, energy companies, medical and social care, educational institutions, fishing vessels and other economic activities, and provides for a list of jobs for which working hours of up to 24 hours a day may be applied. The Committee also observes that section 114(2) of the Labour Code prescribes, in cases of averaging in working time arrangements, maximum limits of 12 and 60 daily and weekly working hours respectively, in a context of undefined circumstances for resorting to averaging and over reference periods that extend up to three months.

Recalling that these provisions authorize practices that would possibly lead to unreasonably long hours of work, in direct contradiction to the principle of progressive reduction of hours of work, the Committee requests the Government to take the measures necessary to ensure that the principle of a 40-hour week provided for by Convention No. 47 is fully applied both in law and in practice.

Article 6 of Convention No. 1. Temporary exceptions. Circumstances. The Committee notes that section 119(2) of the Labour Code stipulates that the employer may only instruct an employee to perform overtime work with the employee's consent, except in cases where:

- (i) unplanned work critical to society must be performed or action must be taken to prevent calamities, dangers, accidents or natural disasters or to eliminate the consequences thereof that require prompt eradication;
- (ii) it is necessary to complete a job or eliminate a failure due to which a large number of employees would have to cease work or materials, products or equipment would be damaged; and
- (iii) this is stipulated in the collective agreement.

In this respect, the Committee observes that section 119 only prescribes the circumstances under which an employer may request an employee to work overtime without his or her consent, while remaining silent on the circumstances under which resort to overtime can be made with the employee's consent and by collective agreement. The Committee recalls that temporary exceptions to normal hours of work are authorized in the Convention in very limited and well-circumscribed cases. Recalling the impact that long hours of work can have on workers' health and work-private life balance, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to define the exceptional circumstances under which normal hours of work may be temporarily increased in industrial establishments, in accordance with this Article of the Convention.

Weekly Rest (Industry) Convention, 1921 (No. 14) (ratification: 1960)

Holidays with Pay Convention (Revised), 1970 (No. 132) (ratification: 1972)

Previous comment on Convention No. 14

Previous comment on Convention No. 132

In order to provide an overview of matters relating to the application of the ratified Conventions on working time, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine the application of Conventions Nos 14 (weekly rest in industry) and 132 (holidays with pay) in a single comment.

The Committee notes the observations of the Trade Union Confederation of Malagasy Revolutionary Workers (FISEMARE) and the General Confederation of Workers' Unions of Madagascar (FISEMA), received on 1 September 2022. It also notes the observations of the FISEMA and the Christian Confederation of Malagasy Trade Unions (SEKRIMA), received with the Government's report.

A. Weekly rest

Articles 4 and 5 of Convention No. 14. Total or partial exceptions – Compensatory rest. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that no new legislative measures have been adopted to bring sections 13 to 15 of Decree No. 62-150 of 28 March 1962, which envisage exemptions from weekly rest without any compensatory rest, with Article 5 of the Convention. In this regard, the Committee notes the observations of the FISEMA according to which no draft decree to amend Decree No. 62-150 has been discussed in the National Labour Council. It also notes the denunciation by the FISEMA that the weekly rest of certain employees in textile and industrial enterprises is not respected and that measures should be taken to penalize those enterprises. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that compensatory rest is granted to the workers covered by the Convention who are required to work on their weekly rest day and to provide information on any progress achieved in this regard.

B. Holidays with pay

Article 9(1) and (3) of Convention No. 132. Postponement and accumulation of paid holiday. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that section 88(5) of the Labour Code, under the terms of which workers have the possibility to accumulate their whole holiday entitlement over a period of three years preceding retirement, is not in conformity with the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that no measures have been adopted to bring the current legislation into conformity with Article 9(1) and (3) of the Convention. The Committee recalls that Article 9 of the Convention provides that an uninterrupted part of the annual holiday with pay consisting of at least two working weeks shall be granted and taken each year, and the remainder may be postponed for a limited period. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to bring the legislation and practice into conformity with the Convention on this point.

Article 12. Prohibition of relinquishing annual holiday in exchange for financial compensation. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication that it is compulsory to take annual holiday and that it is prohibited to relinquish this right in exchange for financial compensation. The Committee notes that the FISEMA once again reports cases in which workers relinquish their annual leave in exchange for financial compensation. The FISEMARE observes a significant decrease in practices of "buying back holidays" in recent years, but indicates that the limitation to three years of the right to take annual holidays is problematic. The Committee requests the Government to reply to these observations and to provide details on the number of workers involved and the length of the annual leave period which is exchanged for financial compensation.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Malta

Hours of Work (Industry) Convention, 1919 (No. 1) (ratification: 1988)

Previous comment

Article 2 of the Convention. Limits to hours of work. Further to its previous comment on the opt-out clause contained in section 20 of the Organisation of Working Time Regulations, 2004, the Committee notes that the Government's report does not contain any new information in this regard. The Committee recalls that this section of the Regulations which provides that the statutory limits on working time shall not apply in relation to a worker who has agreed with his employer in writing that these limits should not apply, allows for exceptions to the standards of 8 hours a day and 48 hours a week under conditions that go far beyond those prescribed by the Convention. It therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to bring section 20 of the Organisation of Working Time Regulations into full conformity with the requirements of the Convention.

Articles 2(b) and (c), 4, and 5. Variable distribution of working hours. The Committee notes that the Government does not communicate any new information regarding its previous comments on section 7 of the Organization of Working Time Regulations, 2004, which foresees the averaging of working hours over reference periods going up to 52 weeks, with no specified exceptional circumstances for resorting to it. The Committee recalls that the averaging of hours of work in general is authorized in the Convention over a reference period of one week, provided that a daily limit of nine hours is respected (Article 2(b)); in all the other cases in which the averaging of working hours is allowed over reference periods longer than a week, the circumstances are clearly specified, as follows: (i) in case of shift work, it shall be permissible to employ persons in excess of 8 hours in any one day and 48 hours in any one week, if the average number of hours over a period of three weeks or less does not exceed 8 per day and 48 per week (Article 2(c)); (ii) in those processes which are required by reason of the nature of the process to be carried on continuously by a succession of shifts, the daily and weekly limit of hours of work may be exceeded subject to the condition that the working hours shall not exceed 56 in the week on the average (Article 4); and (iii) in exceptional cases where it is recognized that the limits of 8 hours a day and 48 hours a week cannot be applied, but only in such cases, agreements between workers' and employers' organisations concerning the daily limit of work over a longer period of time may be given the force of regulations, provided that the average number of hours worked per week, over the number of weeks covered by any such agreement, shall not exceed 48 (Article 5). Recalling that calculating hours of work as an average over a reference period of up to one year allows for too many exceptions to normal hours of work and can result in highly variable working hours over long periods, long working days and the absence of compensation (2018 General Survey on working time instruments, paragraph 68), the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to bring section 7 of the Organization of Working Time Regulations, 2004 in conformity with the requirements of the Convention.

The Committee raises other questions in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Myanmar

Holidays with Pay Convention, 1936 (No. 52) (ratification: 1954)

Article 2(1) and (4) of the Convention. Postponement and division of annual holidays with pay. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to take measures for the timely revision of section 4(3) of the Leave and Holidays Act, which allows for the accumulation of holidays over a period of three years. The Committee notes that the Government's report does not contain any information in this respect. In this context, the Committee once more requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the minimum annual holiday with pay prescribed by Article 2(1) of the Convention is not divided or postponed so that all workers effectively enjoy at least six uninterrupted days of holidays with pay per year.

Article 2(2). Annual holiday with pay for persons under 16 years of age. In previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to bring in line with the Convention section 4(1)(a) of Leave and Holidays Act 1951 which grants ten consecutive days of holidays with pay to employees aged 15 years, while Article 2(2) of the Convention requires 12 days for workers under 16 years of age. The Committee notes that the Government does not provide any relevant information in this respect. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that workers aged 15 years enjoy at least 12 consecutive days of annual holidays with pay as required by the Convention.

Article 2(3). Public and customary holidays and interruptions of attendance at work due to sickness. The Committee notes that section 3(2) of the Leave and Holidays Act prescribes that if any public holiday falls on any weekly day of rest or on any other holiday, an alternative holiday shall not be allowed. The Committee observes that this provision is not in conformity with Article 2(3)(a) of the Convention which prescribes that public and customary holidays shall not be included in the annual holiday with pay period. Moreover, the Committee notes that no provision of the Leave and Holiday Act seems to provide that interruptions of attendance at work due to sickness shall not be included in the annual holiday with pay, as required by Article 2(3)(b) of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that public and customary holidays and interruptions of attendance at work due to sickness are not counted as part of the annual holidays with pay period as required by the Convention.

Article 2(5). Increase of the duration of the annual holiday with pay with the length of service. The Committee notes that no provision of the Leave and Holidays Act seems to prescribe the increase of the duration of the annual holiday with pay with the length of service as required by Article 2(5) of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to give effect to this provision of the Convention.

Previous comment on Convention No. 14

Previous comment on Convention No. 47

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of ratified Conventions on working time, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 14 (weekly rest) and 47 (40-hour week) together.

The Committee notes the observations of Business New Zealand and the New Zealand Council of Trade Unions (NZCTU) on the application of Conventions Nos 14 and 47, communicated with the Government's report.

A. Hours of work

Article 1 of Convention No. 47. Forty-hour week. The Committee notes that section 11B(2) of the Minimum Wage Act 1983, as amended up to 2021, prescribes that the maximum number of hours (excluding overtime) to be worked by any worker in any week may be fixed at a number greater than 40 if the parties to the individual agreement agree. The Committee observes that no weekly or daily limits to the working hours seem to be provided for in the above-mentioned Act for the cases contemplated in section 11B(2). Moreover, the Committee notes that, according to the statistics included in the report of the Government, on average: (i) for the year starting in March 2020, 11.70 per cent of people employed worked between 41 and 49 hours per week, 9.9 per cent worked between 50 and 59 hours per week and 6.20 worked more than 60 hours a week; and (ii) for the year starting in March 2021, 11.5 per cent of employed people worked between 41 and 49 hours a week, and 15.1 per cent worked between 50 and 59 hours a week, with no data on workers working more than 60 hours a week. The Committee further notes the observations of the NZCTU, reiterating its concerns that the national legislation does not provide for effective protection of the 40-hour week principle as enshrined in the Convention, and indicating that this situation is exacerbated by the relative weakness of New Zealand's institutions and mechanisms for collective bargaining. The Committee recalls that provisions such as section 11B(2) of the Minimum Wage Act 1983 authorize practices that may lead to unreasonably long hours of work, in direct contradiction to the principle of progressive reduction of hours of work. Therefore the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures as may be judged appropriate, such as the fixing of reasonable limits to the extension by individual agreement of the 40-hour week, to secure the full application, in both law and practice, of the principle of a 40-hour week provided for by the Convention. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this respect.

B. Weekly rest

Article 2 of Convention No. 14. Right to 24-hour weekly rest. Following its previous comments on the absence of national legislative provisions expressly setting out a weekly rest of 24 hours, the Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that no legislative measures affecting the application of the Convention have been taken since then. In this respect, the Committee notes the observations of the NZCTU urging the Government to initiate a consultation process with social partners on how to bring laws and regulations into compliance with the Convention. Accordingly, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures without delay to ensure that, in practice as well as in law, all workers employed in any industrial undertaking, public or private, or in any branch thereof, effectively enjoy an uninterrupted weekly rest period comprising not less than 24 hours in the course of each period of seven days, as required under the Convention.

Hours of Work (Industry) Convention, 1919 (No. 1) (ratification: 1934)

Hours of Work (Commerce and Offices) Convention, 1930 (No. 30) (ratification: 1934)

Previous comment on Convention No. 1

Previous comment on Convention No. 30

In order to provide an overview of the issues relating to the application of the ratified Conventions on working time, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 1 (hours of work in industry) and 30 (hours of work in commerce and offices) in the same comment.

Articles 3 and 6(1)(b) of Convention No. 1 and Article 7(2) of Convention No. 30. Exceptions to the limit on hours of work. In relation to its previous comment, the Committee notes that the Government does not provide any information in its report on section 57 of the Labour Code, which provides that work done outside normal working hours constitutes additional hours (overtime) but work done to rectify errors that can be attributed to the worker does not. The Committee recalls that the Conventions in question only allow exceptions to the limit on working hours: in case of accident, actual or threatened, force majeure, or urgent work to machinery or plant; in order to prevent the loss of perishable goods or avoid endangering the technical results of the work; in order to allow for special work such as stocktaking and the preparation of balance sheets, settlement days, liquidations, and the balancing and closing of accounts; and in order to deal with cases of abnormal pressure of work. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that the above-mentioned section is amended, in order to guarantee that the national legislation only allows the limits on daily and weekly hours of work to be exceeded in the circumstances specified in the Conventions, and to provide information on the measures taken in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Direct requests

In addition, requests regarding certain matters are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 1 (Chile, Comoros, Czechia, Djibouti, Equatorial Guinea, Lebanon, Libya, Malta, Myanmar, Nicaragua); Convention No. 14 (Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, China: Hong Kong Special Administrative Region, Côte d'Ivoire, Czechia, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Denmark: Faroe Islands, Djibouti, Ethiopia, Equatorial Guinea, Libya, Lithuania, Myanmar, Netherlands: Caribbean Part of the Netherlands, Netherlands: Sint Maarten); Convention No. 30 (Chile, Equatorial Guinea, Lebanon, Nicaragua); Convention No. 47 (Finland); Convention No. 52 (Central African Republic, Comoros, Denmark: Faroe Islands, Djibouti, Lebanon, Libya, New Zealand); Convention No. 89 (Comoros, Costa Rica, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Djibouti, Lebanon, Libya); Convention No. 101 (Central African Republic, Djibouti, Ecuador, Netherlands: Caribbean Part of the Netherlands, New Zealand); Convention No. 106 (Cyprus, Denmark: Faroe Islands, Djibouti, Ethiopia, Lebanon, Netherlands: Caribbean Part of the Netherlands, Netherlands: Sint Maarten, North Macedonia); Convention No. 132 (Cameroon, Chad, Finland, Madagascar); Convention No. 153 (Ecuador); Convention No. 171 (Côte d'Ivoire, Czechia, Madagascar); Convention No. 175 (Finland).

The Committee noted the information supplied by the following States in answer to a direct request with regard to: Convention No. 14 (Cameroon, Denmark: Greenland, Finland, France: French Polynesia, Malta, Nepal, Niger); Convention No. 30 (Morocco); Convention No. 89 (Cameroon, France: French Polynesia); Convention No. 101 (Netherlands: Sint Maarten) Convention No. 106 (Cameroon, Denmark: Greenland, France: French Polynesia, Malta); Convention No. 132 (Malta); Convention No. 171 (Cyprus).

Occupational safety and health

Belize

Radiation Protection Convention, 1960 (No. 115) (ratification: 1983)

Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155) (ratification: 1999)

The Committee notes that the Government's reports have not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's reports, due since 2015, have not been received. In light of its urgent appeal launched to the Government in 2020, the Committee proceeds with the examination of the application of the Conventions on the basis of the information at its disposal.

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of ratified Conventions on occupational safety and health (OSH), the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 115 (radiation protection) and 155 (OSH) together.

A. General provisions

Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155)

Articles 4, 7 and 8 of the Convention. Formulation and review of the national OSH policy. Legislation. The Committee previously noted the Government's reiterated reference to an OSH Bill developed in 2003. The Committee observes that a draft OSH Bill was introduced in 2014, but has not been adopted. In its previous comments, the Committee also noted that the National OSH Policy was approved in 2004, which set up both general and specific objectives, including the principle of prevention and the promotion and maintenance of OSH standards at all workplaces. However, the Committee notes that the 2004 Policy has not been reviewed or updated. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the status of the OSH Bill, and on any new legislation adopted which relates to the application of the Convention. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate the measures taken for the review and update of the 2004 National OSH Policy, including any consultation held with social partners. Furthermore, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken or envisaged to review the situation of OSH and the working environment in the country, either overall or in respect of particular areas, with a view to identifying major problems and effective methods for dealing with them.

Article 5. Main spheres of action affecting OSH and the work environment. The Committee notes that the 2004 National OSH Policy provides for training and education in the field of OSH and defines the role and responsibilities of different stakeholders in this regard, putting emphasis on communication and cooperation (in accordance with Article 5(c) and (d)). The Committee notes, however, that the 2004 National OSH Policy does not address other elements required by Article 5 of the Convention, including the design, testing, choice, substitution, installation, arrangement, use and maintenance of the material elements of work (Article 5(a)) and the relationships between the material elements of work and the persons who carry out or supervise the work (Article 5(b)). The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken or envisaged to give effect to Article 5(a) and (b) of the Convention.

Article 11(c) and (e). Notification of occupational accidents and diseases. Production and publication of annual statistics. The Committee notes that the Social Security Board publishes annual statistical reports, including information on occupational injuries due to accidents. The Social Security's Statistical Report of 2019 contains information on the number, nature and causes of occupational injuries for 2015–19, and the sectors in which they occurred. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any applicable procedures regarding the notification by employers of occupational accidents and diseases to the competent authority. It also requests the Government to indicate whether statistics on occupational diseases are collected and published, in addition to those on occupational accidents.

Article 11(f). Introduction of systems to examine chemical, physical and biological agents in respect of the risk to the health of workers. The Committee previously noted that, in November 2010, the Government launched the Strategic Approach to International Chemicals Management (SAICM), entailing the implementation of a chemicals management system in two phases through a multi-sectoral approach. Phase II of this project was launched in June 2012, aiming at the development of a legal and institutional framework for the management of chemicals, including market surveillance measures. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in chemical management, including legal and institutional initiatives taken in this regard. It also requests the Government to indicate whether there are any similar management frameworks regarding physical and biological agents.

Article 12. Obligations of persons who design, manufacture, import, provide or transfer machinery, equipment or substances for occupational use. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken or envisaged, in law and in practice, to ensure the responsibilities of those who design, manufacture, import, provide or transfer machinery, equipment or substances for occupational use with regard to the safety and security of concerned persons, as required by Article 12 of the Convention.

Article 17. Collaboration where two or more undertakings are engaged in activities simultaneously at one workplace. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken to ensure collaboration in applying the requirements of the Convention, whenever two or more undertakings are engaged in activities simultaneously at one workplace.

Article 18. Emergencies and first aid. The Committee notes that both the Factory Act (section 12(1)(c)) and the Labour Act (section 155(b)) provide for the development of regulations on the provision of first-aid equipment. The Committee requests the Government to indicate whether there are any laws or regulations adopted (including under the Factory Act or the Labour Act) to provide for measures to be taken in case of emergencies and accidents, including adequate first-aid arrangements.

Article 21. Expenditure on OSH measures. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken to ensure that OSH measures do not involve any expenditure for workers.

B. Protection against specific risks

Radiation Protection Convention, 1960 (No. 115)

Article 3(1) of the Convention. Protection measures. The Committee notes that, according to section 94 of the Labour Act, the Minister of Labour may adopt regulations regarding any operation involving the exposure of workers to ionizing radiations, to: (i) prohibit the employment of, or modify or limit the hours of employment of all persons or any class of persons in connection with any such operations; or (ii) prohibit, limit or control the use of any material or process in connection with any such operation, and may impose duties on owners, employers, employed persons and other persons, as well as occupiers. In addition, while reiterating its concern at the absence of a government report, the Committee notes with interest the adoption of the Radiation Safety and Security Act in October 2020, following technical assistance from the International Agency for Atomic Energy (IAEA). It notes that the Radiation Safety and Security Act establishes the Office of Radiation Safety and Security within the Ministry responsible for the environment (the Office). Pursuant to section 42 of this Act, this Office shall prescribe requirements for radiation protection to be met before any activity or practice can be licensed, including all steps that shall be taken by the licensee for the protection and safety of workers by keeping doses below the relevant threshold. The Committee requests the Government to indicate whether any regulations have been adopted by the Minister of Labour pursuant to section 94 of the Labour Act. It also requests the Government to provide detailed information on the requirements prescribed for licensees under section 42 of the Radiation Safety and Security Act, regarding the protection of workers against ionizing radiation.

Article 3(2). Data collection. The Committee notes that, according to section 9(1)(l), (m) and (n) of the Radiation Safety and Security Act, the Office shall establish and maintain a national register of radiation sources, persons licenced to carry out activities or practices under the Act, as well as other registers as necessary. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the implementation in practice of these provisions, such as the information required for the purpose of the register and the method of data collection.

Articles 6 and 8. Determination and review of maximum permissible doses. The Committee notes that, according to section 41(2) of the Radiation Safety and Security Act, the Office shall prescribe dose limits for persons that may not be exceeded in conducting activities or practices involving, among others, the production or use of radiation sources. Section 41(3) further provides that any dose limits prescribed shall take into account the recommendations of the IAEA and the International Commission on Radiation Protection. The Committee observes that there do not seem to be any dose limits prescribed by the Office following the adoption of the Radiation Safety and Security Act in October 2020. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken to ensure that the maximum permissible doses or amounts are determined without delay. It also requests the Government to provide information on any mechanism ensuring the review of such dose limits.

Article 9. Warning of the presence of hazards from ionizing radiations and instructions for workers directly engaged in radiation work. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken to ensure that: (i) appropriate warnings are used to indicate the presence of hazards from ionizing radiations; and (ii) adequate instructions are provided to all workers directly engaged in radiation work before and during such employment.

Article 12. Medical examination. The Committee notes that, according to the 2004 National OSH Policy, the employer is required to make provisions for pre-employment, pre-placement and periodic medical examinations for the persons they employ, while the Ministry of Health shall work towards the establishment of an occupational health unit, which will, among other functions, provide medical assistance in this regard. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information on the medical examinations prescribed and provided in practice to workers directly engaged in radiation work, including examinations prior to or shortly after taking up such work, and their subsequent examinations at appropriate intervals.

Article 13. Measures in case of irradiation or radioactive contamination. The Committee notes that Part VIII of the Radiation Safety and Security Act provides for emergency preparedness and response. However, the Committee notes that it does not contain any provisions addressing the protection of workers as required by Article 13(a), (c) and (d) of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken or envisaged, in law or in practice, in case of exposure of workers to ionizing radiations with regard to the protection of workers as required by the Convention, including appropriate medical examination of affected workers, examination of the conditions in which workers' duties are performed and any necessary remedial action.

Article 14. Employment involving exposure to ionizing radiation contrary to medical advice. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to ensure that workers are not employed or engaged in work liable to expose them to ionizing radiations contrary to qualified medical advice, including measures for the provision of alternative employment.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Cabo Verde

Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155) (ratification: 2000)

Previous comment

Article 11(e) of the Convention. Annual publication of information on measures taken in pursuance of the national policy and application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes the detailed information included with the Government's report on occupational accidents between 2017 and 2021. The Committee notes with concern the recent increase in the number of occupational accidents: from 238 in 2019 (of which 5 were fatal) to 782 in 2020 (of which 9 were fatal) and 1,112 in 2021 (of which 3 were fatal). The Committee also notes that, as the Tripartite OSH Commission is not functioning, the Commission has not been able to make public the results obtained with regard to the National OSH Policy. The Committee also notes that, while hospitals are required to collect and report to the General Labour Inspectorate data on the diagnosis of occupational diseases, the reports of the labour inspection offices do not contain statistics on this subject. Noting the increase in the number of occupational accidents, the Committee urges the Government to take all necessary steps to strengthen preventive OSH measures and to provide information on the reasons for this increase. In addition, it requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken or envisaged to ensure the annual publication of information on the measures taken under the National OSH Policy. With regard to occupational diseases, the Committee refers to its comment in relation to the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), on the elements to be included in the reports of the labour inspectorate.

Articles 13 and 19(f). Protection of workers who have removed themselves from situations presenting an imminent and serious danger. In response to the Committee's previous comment, the Government indicates that Decree-Laws Nos 55/99 and 64/2010 set out the OSH obligations of the different stakeholders and that the General Labour Inspectorate, which has carried out several awareness-raising activities on OSH, is obliged to verify compliance with these provisions. In addition, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the labour inspection services have the power to suspend the activities of any enterprise that endangers the safety and health of workers and reserve the right to impose a fine. The Committee notes that while section 241 of the Labour Code provides that workers may terminate the employment relationship in the event of a serious threat to their health or physical integrity and receive compensation, there is no provision for the protection of workers who have withdrawn from a work situation which they had reasonable cause to believe presented an imminent and serious danger to their life or health, as required by Articles 13 and 19(f) of the Convention. The Committee reiterates its request to the Government to give effect to the above-mentioned Articles of the Convention and to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Asbestos Convention, 1986 (No. 162) (ratification: 1989)

Previous comment

Articles 6(3), 9 and 12 to 22 of the Convention. Application of the Convention in law and in practice. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the absence of information on specific legal or practical measures aimed at the prevention and control of health hazards related to asbestos and at giving effect to a certain number of Articles of the Convention, that is, Articles 6(3), 9, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, and 22. The Committee urges the Government to take steps to adopt specific laws and regulations expressly aimed at the prevention and control of, and protection of workers against, health hazards due to occupational exposure to asbestos. It requests the Government to provide information on the steps taken in this connection, in particular with respect to the application of Articles 6(3) (preparation of procedures for dealing with emergency situations), 9 (adequate work practices, special rules and procedures), 12 (spraying of asbestos), 13 (notifying the competent authority of certain types of work involving exposure to asbestos), 14 (responsibility of producers and suppliers of asbestos and of makers and suppliers of products containing asbestos), 15 (limits for the exposure of workers to asbestos), 16 (practical measures for the prevention and control of the exposure of workers to asbestos), 17 (demolition work), 18 (special protective clothing, personal protective equipment and washing facilities), 19 (responsibility of the employer for the disposal of waste containing asbestos), 20 (workplace monitoring), 21 (monitoring of workers' health) and 22 (measures for education and training).

[The Government is asked to reply in full to the present comments in 2025.]

Central African Republic

Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155) (ratification: 2006)

Articles 4, 5 and 8 of the Convention. National policy. Spheres of action. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes that the Government reiterates in its report that the Directorate of Occupational Medicine has launched a project on the national policy on occupational health and safety (OSH). While taking due note of this information, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to formulate, implement and periodically review a coherent national policy on OSH and the working environment, in consultation with the most representative organizations of employers and workers, and to take such steps as may be necessary, by laws or regulations, to give effect to this policy, in accordance with Articles 4, 5 and 8 of the Convention.

Article 7. Periodic review of the situation regarding OSH and the working environment. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes that the Government reiterates that the situation regarding OSH and the working environment is not reviewed neither systematically nor at appropriate intervals, due to a lack of material, human and financial resources. While noting the Government's indications concerning the lack of resources, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the situation regarding OSH and the working environment is subject to an overall review at appropriate intervals.

Articles 13 and 19(f). Situation of imminent and serious danger to life or health. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes that the Government's report does not contain information on: (a) the measures taken or envisaged to ensure that any worker who has removed himself from a work situation which he has reasonable justification to believe presents an imminent and serious danger to his life or health shall be protected from undue consequences of such an action, in accordance with Article 13 of the Convention; and (b) the arrangements that have been made to ensure that an employer cannot require workers to return to a work situation where there is continuing imminent and serious danger to life or health, in accordance with Article 19(f) of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to give effect to Articles 13 and 19(f) of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155) (ratification: 2007)

Safety and Health in Construction Convention, 1988 (No. 167) (ratification: 2002)

Previous comment

Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155)

Article 11(c) and (e) of the Convention. Production of annual statistics on occupational accidents and diseases and application of the Convention in practice. Following its previous comment, the Committee notes the Government's response in its report that 17,064 cases of occupational disease were reported in 2020, including 14,408 cases of pneumoconiosis, while 15,407 cases were reported in 2021, including 11,809 cases of pneumoconiosis. Moreover, 29,519 fatal occupational accidents were reported in 2019, while 27,412 such accidents were reported in 2020. The Committee also notes that, according to the 14th Five-Year National Plan for Occupational Safety (2021–2025), from 2015 to 2020 there was a decrease in all types of accidents by 43.3 per cent, in large accidents by 36.1 per cent and in very serious accidents by 57.9 per cent respectively, and the number of deaths decreased by 38.8 per cent. The Government further indicates that targeted measures were undertaken to control and eliminate occupational diseases at the source, including the implementation of the pneumoconiosis prevention and control campaign in key industries, such as construction, metallurgy, coal mines and non-coal mines. Awareness-raising activities continue to be organized, aimed at disseminating relevant policies and laws, scientific knowledge, and good practices. Taking due note of the continued decrease in the number of occupational accidents and cases of occupational disease, the Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts with regard to the prevention of such accidents and diseases, and to continue to provide information on specific preventive measures taken in this regard, including those in the context of implementing the 14th Five-Year National Plan for Occupational Safety, and the impact of such measures. The Committee also requests the Government to continue to provide detailed statistics on occupational accidents and diseases at the national level, indicating the causes and consequences.

Safety and Health in Construction Convention, 1988 (No. 167)

Article 8 of the Convention. Cooperation between two or more employers undertaking activities simultaneously at one construction site. Following its previous comment, the Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that accident prevention was a priority in the 14th Five-Year National Plan for Occupational Safety. Measures envisaged include enhancing the management of recruitment and qualification of subcontractors, as well as strengthening the enforcement of related legislation and regulations. The Government also refers to the Notice on further strengthening the safety management of construction projects with higher risk issued by the Ministry of Housing and Urban-Rural Development (MoHURD) in 2017, which stresses that the main contractor is responsible for the safety of the entire project, while subcontractors are responsible for the safety within the scope of the subcontracted parts, as provided for by section 24 of the Administrative Regulations on Work Safety in Construction Projects. The Committee further notes that, according to the 2019 Circular on Safety Accidents in Housing and Municipal Engineering, in terms of serious accidents, 82.61 per cent were related to large construction projects with multiple parts and operators, particularly in earthwork and foundation excavation, formwork support systems and construction crane machinery. The Committee requests the Government to pursue its efforts to ensure the implementation of prescribed safety and health measures under the responsibility of the principal contractor whenever two or more employers undertake activities simultaneously at one construction site, particularly with respect to construction sites with several tiers of subcontracting. Noting that a large proportion of accidents occurred in construction projects with multiple parts and operators, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the enforcement of section 24 of the Administrative Regulations on Work Safety in Construction Projects in practice, including inspections undertaken, violations detected, and penalties applied for non-compliance.

Article 18(1). Work at heights including roof work. The Committee notes the Government's reference to the Circular on the Governance Action of Occupational Safety in Construction issued by the MoHURD in March 2022, which further specifies the requirements of safety measures for work at heights, including the identification of risks and prevention actions, as well as the use of both collective and individual protection equipment. Moreover, the MoHURD updated the Criteria for Determining Major Hazards and Accident Risks in Construction in April 2022, which identifies some types of work at heights as a major accident risk. The Government also indicates that the number of deaths due to falls from height in construction continues to decrease (441 in 2019, 428 in 2020 and 413 in 2021). The Committee notes, however, that according to the 2019 Circular on Safety Accidents in Housing and Municipal Engineering, falls from heights remained the main cause of accidents in construction, representing 53.69 per cent of total accidents in 2019, increased from 52.2 per cent in 2018. The Committee also notes that there was only one accident due to fall from height falling into the categories of large, serious and very serious accidents (defined as accidents causing more than three deaths or with a particularly significant economic impact). The Committee urges the Government to pursue its efforts to enforce safety measures for work at heights and to promote the use of safety equipment at all construction sites. It also requests the Government to continue to provide information on the enforcement measures implemented in this regard (including the number and nature of violations detected and penalties applied) and the number of occupational accidents reported due to falls from heights.

Article 35. Effective enforcement of the provisions of the Convention and application in practice. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government, in response to its previous request, on the measures taken by the MoHURD to improve the implementation of the Convention, including: (i) the elaboration of guidelines for workplan design in construction projects with higher risks consisting of multiple components and operators in 2021; (ii) the development of a list of work process and techniques, equipment and materials to be eliminated in building construction and infrastructure projects in 2021; and (iii) the implementation of targeted measures to strengthen occupational safety in housing and municipal engineering projects. The Government also indicates that 1,530 cases of occupational disease were reported in the construction industry from 2019 – 2021, mostly related to civil engineering projects (1,256 cases). Moreover, the most prevalent occupational disease remains pneumoconiosis (1,257 cases). The Committee further notes with concern that, according to the 2019 Notification of Safety Accidents in Housing and Municipal Engineering, in 2019, there were 773 work safety accidents with 904 deaths, an increase from 2018 by 39 cases and 64 persons respectively. About 80 per cent of the accidents could be attributed to violations of OSH-related rules and regulations when performing work, 60 per cent were related to violations of statutory construction procedures, while 40 per cent were due to neglect of duties by key personnel responsible for OSH. The Committee urges the Government to reinforce its efforts to ensure the application of the Convention in practice, and to continue to provide information on the concrete steps taken to reduce the number of occupational accidents in the construction sector. It also urges the Government to continue to take measures to ensure the effective enforcement of the Convention through the provision of appropriate inspection services in the sector, as well as appropriate penalties and corrective measures. Lastly, the Committee requests the Government to continue to provide detailed information on the application of the Convention in practice.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Previous comment on Convention No. 167: direct request

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of ratified occupational safety and health (OSH) Conventions, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine the application of Conventions Nos 162 (asbestos), 167 (OSH in construction), 170 (chemicals) and 174 (major industrial accidents) together in a single comment.

The Committee notes the joint observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) and the National Employers Association of Colombia (ANDI), received on 31 August 2018, on the application of Convention No. 162, as well as the Government's comments on these observations, received on 20 November 2018.

A. Protection against specific risks

1. Asbestos Convention, 1986 (No. 162)

Legislation. The Committee notes with satisfaction the adoption of Act No. 1968 of 2019, which prohibits the use of asbestos on the national territory as from 1 January 2021 and establishes guarantees for the health protection of nationals of Colombia.

Articles 3(2) and 14 of the Convention. Periodic review of national laws and regulations. Labelling of containers and products. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes with interest the adoption of Decision No. 534 of 2020 issuing specific measures respecting the labelling of products containing asbestos, giving effect to a judicial ruling of 2020, which ordered the Ministry of Labour to issue regulations on this matter. The Committee notes that the Decision: (i) provides that all products manufactured, put up for sale, imported, exported or distributed which contain any type of asbestos in any proportion shall be marked with a visible label with the wording “warning this product contains asbestos”, without prejudice to the labelling and information requirements set out in other relevant standards (section 3); and (ii) contains specific provisions requiring that the label is visible immediately, truthful and adequate (section 4). The Committee notes this information, which responds to its previous request.

Articles 4 and 17. Consultations with employers’ and workers’ organizations. Demolition and removal. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes that Act No. 1968 of 2019 provides for: (i) the formulation of a public policy for the replacement of previously installed asbestos within a period of five years of its promulgation (section 3); and (ii) the creation of a National Commission for the Replacement of Asbestos, which the Committee observes includes representatives of five ministries and other actors, but does not appear to include representatives of the social partners among its members (section 6). The Government specifies that the policy will be focused on promoting the overall management of installed asbestos products and their waste, and the strengthening of technical capacities, information management, communication and awareness-raising of strategic actors, based on the implementation of a plan of action for the period 2022–30.

The Committee also notes the Government’s indication that the public policy for the replacement of asbestos is being drawn up by the chemical safety working group of the National Technical Intersectoral Commission for Environmental Health (CONASA), under the leadership of the Ministry of the Environment and Sustainable Development and with the participation of the Ministry of Labour, other Ministries, Government bodies, various actors from the private sector, academics and social organizations. The Government emphasizes that in June 2021 consultations were held and the progress made in drawing up the policy was presented to the various actors, including the National Association of Public Service and Communication Enterprises of Colombia (ANDESCO), the Colombian Fibre Association (ASCOLFIBRAS) and the Colombia Free from Asbestos Foundation (FUNDCLAS). The Committee observes that it appears that workers’ organizations have not been participating in the process of drawing up the public policy for the replacement of asbestos.

The Committee also notes that the ANDI and the IOE indicate in their observations that the materials present in constructions are fibre-cement materials in which the fibres are coated in cement as a binder and there is no indication that friable asbestos has been used in construction in Colombia. With reference to these observations, the Government reiterates that, due to the environmental and geographical conditions in Colombia, asbestos and friable insulation materials containing asbestos have not been used in construction. The Committee requests the Government to adopt the necessary measures to ensure that, within the framework of the public policy for the replacement of installed asbestos it is guaranteed that: (i) both the demolition of installations or structures containing friable asbestos insulation materials, and the removal of asbestos from buildings or structures in which asbestos is liable to become airborne, may be undertaken only by employers or contractors who are recognized by the competent authority as qualified to carry out such work in accordance with the provisions of the Convention and who have been empowered to undertake such work (Article 17(1) of the Convention); (ii) before starting demolition work, the employer or contractor shall be required to draw up a work plan specifying the measures to be taken, including measures to provide all necessary protection to the workers, limit the release of asbestos dust into the air and provide for the disposal of waste containing asbestos (Article 17(2) of the Convention); and (iii) the workers or their representatives are consulted on the work plan referred to above (Article 17(3) of the Convention). The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the results of these measures.

The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on: (i) the process of the preparation and implementation of the public policy for the replacement of installed asbestos; and (ii) the functioning and activities of the National Commission for the Replacement of Asbestos. Moreover, while noting the Government's indication that it plans to strengthen consultation mechanisms with the most representative organizations of employers and workers with a view to giving effect to the provisions of Act No. 1968 of 2019, the Committee requests it to specify whether the most representative organizations of employers and workers concerned have been consulted in relation to the public policy for the replacement of installed asbestos, including within the framework of the activities of the National Commission for the Replacement of Asbestos.

2. Chemicals Convention, 1990 (No. 170)

Legislation. The Committee notes with satisfaction the promulgation of Decree No. 1496 of 2018 adopting the United Nations Globally Harmonized System of Classification and Labelling of Chemicals (GHS). The Government indicates that the draft text of the Decree was circulated in the National OSH Committee, which is a technical body composed of representatives of workers, employers and Government bodies.

Articles 9, 10 and 11 of the Convention. Responsibilities of suppliers. Responsibilities of employers for the identification and transfer of chemicals. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes that Decree No. 1496 of 2018 (sections 8, 9, 15 and 17), Decree No. 1076 of 2015 issuing the consolidated regulations for the environment and sustainable development sector (sections 2.2.7B.1.3.2(2) and 2.2.7B.1.2.6) and Decision No. 773 of 2021 determining the action to be taken by employers for the application of the GHS in the workplace (sections 5, 6 and 21(2), (4), (5) and (9)) contain provisions which give effect to these Articles of the Convention.

Article 18(1) and (2). Right of workers to remove themselves from danger and to be protected against undue consequences. The Committee once again urges the Government to adopt the necessary measures to ensure that workers have the right to remove themselves from danger resulting from the use of chemicals when they have reasonable justification to believe there is an imminent and serious risk to their safety or health and to be protected against undue consequences for doing so, in accordance with Article 18(1) and (2) of the Convention.

3. Prevention of Major Industrial Accidents Convention, 1993 (No. 174)

Article 4 of the Convention. National policy and consultation of employers' and workers' organizations. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes with satisfaction the adoption of Decree No. 1347 of 2021 amending Decree No. 1072 of 2015 issuing consolidated labour regulations, with a view to establishing provisions relating to the Programme for the Prevention of Major Accidents (PPAM). The Committee notes that, under the terms of sections 2.2.4.12.1 and 2.2.4.12.6 of the Decree, the PPAM includes all the comprehensive measures, procedures and interventions undertaken to increase the levels of protection of workers, the population and the environment through the management of the risk of major accidents in classified installations. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that the draft text of the Decree was referred to the National OSH Committee in order to receive its comments. The Committee further notes that sections 2.2.4.12.21 to 2.2.4.12.23 provide for the creation, composition and functions of an interinstitutional technical working group in support of the PPAM composed permanently of representatives of various Government bodies, the responsibilities of which include the preparation of the necessary technical measures for the implementation of the PPAM. In this regard, the Committee recalls that Article 4 of the Convention provides that, in consultation with the most representative organizations of employers and workers, and in light of national conditions and practices, a coherent national policy concerning the protection of workers, the public and the environment against the risk of major accidents shall be implemented and periodically reviewed. The Committee therefore requests the Government to indicate the measures adopted for the implementation and periodic review of the PPAM in consultation with the representative organizations of employers and workers.

The Committee also notes the Government's indication concerning the preparation of draft decisions to regulate specific aspects of Decree No. 1347 of 2021, including: the design, implementation and monitoring of the management system for the prevention of major accidents; the identification of hazards, analysis, evaluation and action to deal with risks of major accidents, and the notification, reporting and investigation of major accidents. The Committee encourages the Government, during the process of the adoption of any supplementary regulations under Decree No. 1347 of 2021, to take into account the matters addressed in its direct request on Convention No. 174 with a view to ensuring the conformity of the legal framework for the prevention of major industrial accidents with the Convention.

B. Protection in specific branches of activity

Safety and Health in Construction Convention, 1988 (No. 167)

Article 12(1) and (2) of the Convention. Right of workers to remove themselves from a situation of imminent and serious danger to their safety and health, and the employers' obligation to stop the operation and evacuate workers. The Committee once again requests the Government to adopt the necessary measures to ensure that: (i) national laws or regulations provide that workers shall have the right to remove themselves from danger when they have good reason to believe that there is an imminent and serious danger to their safety and health, and the duty to inform their supervisor immediately (Article 12(1) of the Convention); and (ii) where there is an imminent danger to the safety of workers, the employer shall take immediate steps to stop the operation and evacuate workers as appropriate (Article 12(2) of the Convention).

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Comoros

White Lead (Painting) Convention, 1921 (No. 13) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Articles 1, 2 and 3 of the Convention. Prohibition of the use of white lead and sulphate of lead in the internal painting of buildings. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its report that there are no specific provisions in national legislation applying the Convention, but that the Labour Code contains general indications in this respect. The Committee hopes that the Government, in its next report, will be able to provide detailed information on the measures taken in law and practice to regulate the use of white lead and sulphate of lead and of all products containing these pigments, in accordance with the provisions of the Convention.

Application in practice. The Committee notes the Government's indication that there is no report of the inspection services which would provide information on the manner in which the Convention is applied in practice or which would provide statistical data relating to it. The Committee requests the Government to provide information when it is available on the application of the Convention in practice, including statistical information on cases of lead poisoning among working painters, indicating, in particular, morbidity and mortality due to lead poisoning.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Croatia

Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155) (ratification: 1991)

Occupational Health Services Convention, 1985 (No. 161) (ratification: 1991)

Asbestos Convention, 1986 (No. 162) (ratification: 1991)

The Committee notes that the Government's reports have not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of ratified Conventions on occupational safety and health (OSH), the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 155 (OSH), 161 (occupational health services) and 162 (asbestos) together.

The Committee notes the observations of the Union of Autonomous Trade Unions of Croatia (UATUC) and the Independent Trade Unions of Croatia (NHS), received in 2016.

A. General provisions

Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155)

Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes the information in the registry of the Croatian Institute for Health Protection and Safety at Work (CIHPSW) for 2017, and notes with concern that the total number of recorded cases of occupational diseases increased between 2016 and 2017, from 153 in 2016 to 172 in 2017. It also notes the information that, according to the Annual Report in 2017 of the labour inspectorate, there were 22 fatalities at work in 2017. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the manner in which the Convention is applied, and to continue to provide the number, nature and cause of occupational accidents and cases of occupational disease reported.

Occupational Health Services Convention, 1985 (No. 161)

Articles 5(a), (b), (c), (d), (e), (g), (h), (i) and (k) and 6 of the Convention. Establishment and functions of occupational health services. The Committee notes the repeal of the former Occupational Safety and Health Act by the OSH Act 2014, and recalls that sections 22 and 82 of the repealed legislation gave effect to Article 5 of the Convention. The Committee notes that section 80 of the OSH Act 2014 requires the employer to provide employees with occupational medical services so as to ensure health surveillance appropriate to risks, hazards and exertions during work with a view to protecting the health of employees. Section 81 of the OSH Act 2014 further provides that occupational medicine activities, as well as the plan and programme of health protection measures, shall be prescribed by special regulations on health protection and health insurance, and that the minimum hours that the occupational medicine specialist is required to be present at the workplace shall be stipulated in an Ordinance. In this respect, the Committee notes the observations of the UATUC and the NHS, stating that, as of 2016, the Ministry of Health had not adopted regulations prescribing elements such as the minimum hours the occupational medicine specialist has to spend at the workplace, or the procedures for administering first aid. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that the occupational medicine specialist's participation in risk assessments at the workplace is not prescribed by national legislation, and that experience indicates that the employer rarely consults occupational medicine specialists during such assessments in practice, even though Article 5(a) of the Convention prescribes that the functions of occupational health services shall include the identification and assessment of the risks from health hazards in the workplace. In addition, section 20 of the Health Care Act (as amended) sets out types of healthcare that fall within the category of specific healthcare for workers, but provides that the content of measures on specific healthcare of workers and the method for implementing them shall be laid down by the Minister of Health in an Ordinance at the proposal of the CIHPSW, subject to prior approval by the Minister of Labour and the Pension System. The UATUC and NHS indicate, however, that these measures have not been prescribed. Noting that the OSH Act 2014 does not directly give effect to the majority of the provisions of Article 5 and requires the adoption of special regulations that have yet to be adopted, the Committee urges the Government to provide the information on the measures taken to give full effect to Articles 5 and 6 of the Convention. The Committee further requests the Government to indicate whether measures have been taken to adopt special regulations concerning occupational health activities and the plan and programme of health protection measures, as envisaged by section 81 of the OSH Act 2014, as well as the Ordinances referred to in section 20 of the Health Care Act. The Committee requests the Government to provide the list of such regulations where they have been adopted.

B. Protection from specific risks

Effective compensation of workers of the Salonit factory. In its previous comments, the Committee requested information regarding the application in practice of the Law on compensation of workers employed with Salonit d.d. (No. 84/11), pursuant to which workers employed in the Salonit factory (which manufactured asbestos products) when it declared bankruptcy in 2006 could apply for compensation within 60 days (section 2). In this regard, the Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that the payment to the workers of compensation due to job loss was planned in instalments over two years in 2011 and 2012. The Committee notes with interest the Government's indication that all requests for compensation have been resolved, with all 170 workers from the Salonit factory being compensated where they were eligible for compensation and had submitted a request to the Fund for Environmental Protection and Energy Efficiency. The Committee also notes the information provided by the Government regarding the establishment of an Ad-hoc Commission for Complaints to deal with appeals against the decisions taken by the Fund, consisting of representatives from the Ministry for Environmental Protection, Physical Planning and Construction, Ministry of Economy, Labour and Entrepreneurship, Ministry of Finance, Ministry of Justice and Fund for Environmental Protection and Energy Efficiency. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on any developments regarding this issue, including the number of appeals launched, and on the decisions taken by the Ad-hoc Commission for Complaints.

The Commission for Settling Claims for Compensation by Workers Suffering from Occupational Diseases Due to Exposure to Asbestos (the Commission). The Committee notes the information provided by the Government that, since the establishment of the Commission in 2007 until mid-2016, 1,318 claims had been resolved (1,072 resulting in compensation), 22 were pending before the courts, and 245 were yet to be resolved. The Committee notes the observations by the UATUC and the NHS, which provide different statistics regarding resolved and unresolved claims for compensation. The Committee also notes an absence of information regarding measures taken to raise the awareness of workers regarding possibilities for seeking redress. The Committee requests the Government to continue to ensure that all claims and requests for compensation by workers suffering from an occupational disease due to exposure to asbestos during the course of their employment are handled as expeditiously as possible. It requests the Government to provide information on progress in this respect, as well as on the measures taken to raise the awareness of such workers regarding the possibilities for seeking redress.

Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government regarding the registry of the CIHPSW on asbestos-induced occupational diseases, which are published annually online and includes up-to-date data and statistics on asbestos-induced diseases, broken down by geographical distribution, types of disease, gender, age, types of education and training and other metrics. The Committee notes that, according to the data of the CIHPSW, 89 cases of asbestos-induced occupational illnesses were registered in 2017, of which 79 (88.8 per cent) were men and ten (11.2 per cent) were women. In addition, the Committee notes that, according to the data of the CIHPSW, the percentage of occupational diseases caused by exposure to asbestos in 2017 was 52 per cent (89 out of 172 recorded cases). Noting the percentage, which remains high, of occupational diseases caused by asbestos, the Committee urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure the medical surveillance in practice of workers that are or have been exposed to asbestos. The Committee further requests the Government to continue to provide information regarding the application of this Convention in practice, including any measures taken at the institutional level in the application of the Convention. In addition, the Committee requests the Government to provide information regarding the application in practice of the prohibition on the usage of asbestos and asbestos-containing materials in Croatia, which entered into force on 1 January 2006.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Ecuador

Radiation Protection Convention, 1960 (No. 115) (ratification: 1970)

Working Environment (Air Pollution, Noise and Vibration) Convention, 1977 (No. 148) (ratification: 1978)

Asbestos Convention, 1986 (No. 162) (ratification: 1990)

Previous comment on Convention No. 115

Previous comment on Convention No. 148

Previous comment on Convention No. 162

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of the ratified Conventions on occupational safety and health, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 115 (radiation protection), 148 (air pollution, noise and vibration) and 162 (asbestos) together.

A. Protection against specific risks

1. Radiation Protection Convention, 1960 (No. 115)

Article 3(1) and Article 6(2) of the Convention. Protection measures adopted in the light of current knowledge. The Committee notes that the Government indicates in its report, in reply to its previous request, that the Ministry of Labour, in coordination with the Ecuadorian Atomic Energy Commission, is to organize technical working parties to update the Regulations on radiological safety, issued under Decree No. 3640 of 8 August 1979, and that it will communicate a copy of the regulations following their adoption. In this connection, the Government indicates that consideration will be given to current knowledge in the area of ionizing radiation summarized in the general observation of 2015, as well as other measures established by the International Commission on Radiological Protection (ICRP) and the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA). The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to update its legislation in line with the Convention, taking account of the 2015 general observation, and to communicate a copy of the amended regulations once they are adopted.

2. Working Environment (Air Pollution, Noise and Vibration) Convention, 1977 (No. 148)

Article 8(1) and (3) of the Convention. Air pollution and vibration. The Committee notes with regret the Government's indication in its report that the criteria and exposure limits to air pollution and vibration are still not specified in national law. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures, including in the framework of the updating of the Regulations on occupational safety and health and improvement of the working environment, to update its national legislation to establish the criteria and exposure limits to air pollution and vibration, and to communicate a copy of the relevant legal text, once adopted. It also asks the Government to indicate the manner in which these limits shall be periodically revised, in conformity with Article 8(3) of the Convention.

Article 12. Notification to the competent authority of processes, substances, machinery and equipment which involve exposure. The Committee notes that Decision No. 2 of the Ecuadorian Standard-setting Service (INEN) provides for the obligation to notify the INEN regarding chemical substances that cause damage to the central nervous system, vision, brain, and other organs of the human body. However, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the national legislation does not specifically provide for notification to the competent authority in respect of other types of air pollution, nor of noise and vibration. The Committee also notes that the Ministry of Labour will proceed to update the Regulations on occupational safety and health and improvement of the working environment to bring them into compliance with Article 12 of this Convention. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to update its legislation in conformity with the provisions of this Convention and to communicate progress made in this respect.

3. Asbestos Convention, 1986 (No. 162)

Article 17(1) and (2) of the Convention. Demolition of plants and structures containing friable asbestos insulation materials. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, by virtue of section 149 of the Regulation on security in construction and public works, builders and contractors shall establish procedures that guarantee and monitor the treatment and safe elimination of waste, effluents and emissions in a manner that does not present a hazard to workers or to the environment. However, the Government indicates that it is not established that such procedures must be carried out by builders and contractors recognized by the competent authority. Equally, the Committee notes that under section 152 of the Regulation, plans for the construction, refurbishment or rehabilitation of work centres shall be approved by the Ministry of Labour through its safety and health units. In this respect, the Government indicates that this section does not require the production of a work plan specifically for demolition in case of asbestos. The Committee requests the Government to adopt the necessary measures to ensure that: (i) the work involving demolition and disposal provided for under Article 17 of the Convention is undertaken only by employers or contractors recognized by the competent authority as qualified to carry out such work; and (ii) that such employers or contractors shall draw up a work plan specifying the measures to be taken before starting demolition work.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Ethiopia

Previous comment: direct request

Articles 13 and 19(f) of the Convention. Protection of workers who have removed themselves from a situation presenting an imminent and serious danger. The Committee previously noted that section 93 of the Labour Proclamation provided an obligation for workers to report to the employer any situation which they have reason to believe could present a hazard, but that the legislation did not refer to the protection of workers who had removed themselves from such danger.

The Committee welcomes the Government's indication, in response to the Committee's request, that it will examine section 93 in the future with a view to its amendment. Noting the ongoing process to revise the national OSH legislative framework, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that workers who remove themselves from a work situation which they have reasonable justification to believe presents an imminent and serious danger to their life or health, are protected from undue consequences and cannot be required to return to a work situation where there is a continuing imminent and serious danger to life or health.

Article 17. Collaboration between two or more employers at the same workplace. The Committee notes the Government's indication, in reply to its previous request concerning the absence of legislative provisions giving effect to Article 17 of the Convention, that collaboration between two employers at the same workplace is not prescribed by the Labour Proclamation. The Government indicates that two or more undertakings working in the same workplace usually have a subcontracting or joint work agreement between them, including safety and health duties and responsibilities. The Government indicates that labour inspectors dealing with such situations will usually examine the specific circumstances and operations of the two undertakings engaged in activities at the same workplace in the course of inspections. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that whenever two or more undertakings engage in activities simultaneously at one workplace, they shall collaborate in applying OSH measures. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this respect, including any measures prescribed in the context of the ongoing process to strengthen the national OSH legislative framework.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Lebanon

Radiation Protection Convention, 1960 (No. 115) (ratification: 1977)

The Committee notes with concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Articles 3(1) and 6 of the Convention. All appropriate steps to ensure the effective protection of workers, in the light of available knowledge and maximum permissible doses of ionizing radiation. 1. Lens of the eye. The Committee notes that table 2 of Decree No. 11802, regarding the organization of prevention, safety and professional hygiene, sets the dose limitation to the lens of the eye as 150 mSv per year. With reference to paragraph 32 of its 2015 general observation on the application of Convention No. 115, the Committee requests the Government to take measures to ensure that the dose limits to the lens of the eye are set as 20 mSv per year, averaged over defined periods of five years, with no single year exceeding 50 mSv per year.

2. Protection for pregnant and breastfeeding workers. With reference to paragraph 33 of its 2015 general observation on the application of Convention No. 115, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on any measures to establish the maximum permissible dose for workers who are pregnant or breastfeeding.

Articles 6(1), 7(1)–(2) and 8. Dose limits for persons between 16 and 18 years. The Committee previously requested the Government to indicate whether Decree No. 700 of 1999 had been revised with a view to setting limits for workers under the age of 18 years involved in ionizing radiation work and prohibiting the engagement of workers under the age of 16 in such work. The Committee notes the Government's indication, in response, that Decree No. 700 has been repealed and replaced by Decree No. 8987 of 2012. Decree No. 8987 provides that engaging workers under the age of 18 in activities where they are exposed to carcinogenic substances, radiations or substances that may cause infertility or birth defects is totally prohibited (section 1 and Annex 1). It also notes that section 21 of Decree No. 11802 sets general dose limits for workers over 18 years of age in the terms of table 2 of the Decree's Annex. However, the Committee notes that Annex 2 of Decree No. 8987, concerning a list of work activities which are likely to harm the health, safety or morals of workers under the age of 16 years, and are allowed for workers aged 16 and over, includes those exposing workers to atomic or ionizing radiation, provided that these workers are offered full protection of their physical, mental and moral health and that these minors receive special education or appropriate vocational training, with an exception of the works totally banned in the terms of Annex 1. With reference to its 2015 general observation on the application of Convention No. 115, the Committee recalls that for occupational exposure of apprentices aged 16 to 18 years of age who are being trained for employment involving radiation and for exposure of students aged 16 to 18 who use sources in the course of their studies, the dose limits are: (a) an effective dose of 6 mSv in a year; (b) an equivalent dose to the lens of the eye of 20 mSv in a year; and (c) an equivalent dose to the extremities (hands and feet) or to the skin of 150 mSv in a year. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures, including in the course of the ongoing labour law reform, to ensure that specific dose levels are fixed for workers between the ages of 16 and 18 engaged in radiation work.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Madagascar

Guarding of Machinery Convention, 1963 (No. 119) (ratification: 1964)

Previous comment

Articles 2 and 4 of the Convention. Obligations relating to the hire, transfer and exhibition of machinery. Legislation. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes with regret the Government's indication that no steps have been taken to revise Order No. 889 of 20 May 1960 establishing general measures for occupational hygiene and safety and health. In this regard, the Committee recalls that, under Article 4 of the Convention, the obligation to ensure compliance with the provisions of Article 2 shall rest on the vendor, the person letting out on hire or transferring the machinery in any other manner, or the exhibitor and, where appropriate under national laws or regulations, on their respective agents. The Committee once again requests the Government to take all necessary measures without delay to ensure the application of Articles 2 and 4 of the Convention, prohibiting the vendor, the person letting out on hire or transferring the machinery in any other manner, the exhibitor or the manufacturer, to sell, let out on hire, transfer in any other manner or exhibit machinery without appropriate guards. The Committee also requests the Government to take the appropriate steps to include in the applicable legislation the list of dangerous parts of machinery specified in Article 2(3) and (4).

Articles 6 and 11. Prohibition on the use of machinery without appropriate guards. The Committee requests the Government to take measures to: (i) prohibit the use of machinery any dangerous part of which, including the point of operation, is without appropriate guards; (ii) prohibit the use of machinery by any worker without the guards provided being in position and prohibit any worker being required to use machinery without the guards provided being in position.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Morocco

Safety and Health in Mines Convention, 1995 (No. 176) (ratification: 2013)

Previous comment: direct request

Article 5(4)(a) of the Convention. Requirements established in laws and regulations. Mine rescue. The Committee notes that sections 304, 305 and 315-319 of the Labour Code provide requirements concerning medical services and sections 37, 161 and 162 of the General Regulations on the operation of non-fuel producing mines (the General Regulations) provide requirements for first aid. However, there do not appear to be specific provisions concerning mine rescue. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to establish in national laws and regulations the requirements to be followed in relation to mine rescue.

Article 5(4)(b). Self-rescue respiratory devices. The Committee notes the Government's indication in reply to its previous comment that section 161 bis of the General Regulations broadens the coverage of first aid from victims of electrical accidents to persons at risk of asphyxia. However, the Committee notes that it does not cover the provision of self-rescue respiratory devices, as envisaged in Article 5(4)(b) of the Convention. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that national laws and regulations include the requirement to provide and maintain adequate self-rescue respiratory devices for workers in underground coal mines and, where necessary, in other underground mines.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Netherlands

Asbestos Convention, 1986 (No. 162) (ratification: 1999)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the joint observations of the Netherlands Trade Union Confederation (FNV) and the National Federation of Christian Trade Unions (CNV) received on 31 August 2021 and the comments provided by the Government in this respect.

Article 5 of the Convention. Adequate and appropriate system of inspection. Effective enforcement and compliance. Further to its previous comment, the Committee notes that the Government refers to the asbestos supervision programme of the labour inspectorate which aims to increase compliance with the relevant legislation by companies holding certificates for asbestos removal work. The Government specifies that under this programme: (i) there is the objective of inspecting certified companies at least once every three years; (ii) in practice 90 per cent of these companies were inspected in this period; (iii) notorious non-compliant companies are visited several times a year and may have their activities temporarily suspended (three suspensions were issued in 2020 following the detection of serious and frequent violations); (iv) awareness-raising of employers and workers about the dangers and risks of asbestos is carried out in asbestos removal companies; and (v) in 2020, the programme focused on targeting illegal asbestos removals as well as on occupational groups working in installation and plumbing companies. The Government also refers to the increased capacity of the labour inspectorate and to the development of new assessment tools for certified companies engaged in asbestos removal and for workers. The Government further indicates that, in 2020 violations were identified in about 55 per cent of the companies inspected, most of which had committed serious violations, including the absence of risk assessments and the illegal removal of asbestos and that there is an ongoing criminal investigation in relation to illegal asbestos removal.

The Committee notes that the FNV and CNV reiterate observations on the functioning of the certification system for asbestos removal companies, stating that those that systematically fail to comply with the legislation can continue to operate and their certificates are very rarely removed. In their view, following serious violations where workers are exposed to asbestos beyond the limit value of 2000 fibres/m³, the companies' operations should not be stopped temporarily, but permanently.

In this regard, the Committee takes note of the Government's indications that: (i) the measures adopted by the labour inspectorate with respect to offending certified companies should be proportionate to the seriousness of the violations detected and it would not be proportionate to ban the operation of these companies following the detection of one serious violation; (ii) ordering a temporary halt of all activities of such companies is a serious measure applied by the labour inspectorate that can have direct and major consequences; (iii) the labour inspectorate reports suspicions of non-compliance by a certified company to the certification bodies, which determine whether this is the case and then take action; (iv) when non-compliance with the requirements of the certification system is detected, the certification bodies take appropriate measures against certified companies, including issuing a warning, unconditional or conditional suspension of activities and, as a final measure, withdrawal of the certificate (after giving the certified company the opportunity to implement the required improvements); and (v) the labour inspectorate supervises the certification system, including the manner in which certification bodies carry out their tasks and is authorized, if necessary, to impose measures on certification bodies, including suspension or revocation of their designation where there are serious shortcomings. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on specific measures taken in practice by the labour inspectorate to ensure compliance with the provisions of the Convention, including information on the number of inspectors dedicated to asbestos-related inspections, inspection visits, violations detected, and penalties imposed, as well as activities to supervise the certification system for asbestos removal. The Committee also requests the Government to provide further information on certified companies whose certificates to work with asbestos have been withdrawn by the competent certifying bodies, following inspections carried out or actions taken by the labour inspectorate.

Benzene Convention, 1971 (No. 136) (ratification: 1981)

Occupational Cancer Convention, 1974 (No. 139) (ratification: 1981)

Previous comment on Convention No. 136: direct request

Previous comment on Convention No. 139

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of the ratified Conventions on occupational safety and health, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 136 (benzene) and 139 (occupational cancer) together.

Protection against specific risks

1. Benzene Convention, 1971 (No. 136)

Article 8 of the Convention. Provision of adequate means of personal protection and limitation of the duration of exposure to concentrations of benzene which exceed the maximum limit. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication that workers have adequate means of personal protection at their disposal, which reduces the risk of occupational exposure. In this connection, the Committee notes that sections 137 and 138 of Act No. 618 of 2007, provide that work clothing and personal protective equipment shall be adequate and ensure effective protection.

With reference to its earlier comments on the obligation of the employer to limit the duration of workers' exposure to concentrations of benzene which exceed the maximum limit, the Committee notes with regret that the Government has failed to respond to the request that the Committee has been formulating for several years. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures in the near future to guarantee that the duration of workers' exposure to concentrations of benzene in the air of places of employment that exceed 25 parts per million (80 mg/m³) is limited, in accordance with Article 8(2) of the Convention.

Article 11. Prohibition of the employment of pregnant women and nursing mothers in work processes involving exposure to benzene. With regard to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication that, given the existence of specific legal standards to protect working conditions of pregnant women and nursing mothers, this category of workers is not prohibited from working. The Government adds that pregnant women and nursing mothers are monitored and supervised by the General Directorate of Occupational Safety and Health, the General Labour Inspectorate, the Ministry of Health, the National Commission for the Registration and Monitoring of Toxic Substances (CNRCST) and the Nicaraguan Social Security Institute. The Committee urges the Government, once again, to take the necessary measures to ensure that women medically certified as pregnant, and nursing mothers are not employed in work processes involving exposure to benzene or products containing benzene and to provide information on the specific measures adopted in this respect.

2. Occupational Cancer Convention, 1974 (No. 139)

Article 2(1). Obligation to have carcinogenic substances and agents replaced by non-carcinogenic substances or agents. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee observes that the Government provides general information on the process of authorization, restriction, prohibition and registration of chemical substances, which includes thorough toxicological assessments of their environmental, sanitary, agricultural, and domestic effects and those of substitute substances, carried out by the CNRCST, but makes no reference to the replacement of carcinogenic substances or agents by non-carcinogenic or less harmful substances or agents. While noting that the Government indicates that the CNRCST is mandated to regulate chemical substances, pesticides and other toxic substances, the Committee urges the Government to adopt the necessary measures to identify the carcinogenic substances and agents that must be replaced and to take the steps required for their replacement within the framework of the CNRCST or any other institution competent in the matter.

Article 5. Medical examinations during or after employment. The Committee notes that sections 23 to 27 of Act No. 618 of 2007, the General Act on Occupational Safety and Health, provide for medical examinations before and during employment but do not include the post-employment examinations required by the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to adopt measures to ensure that such medical examinations, or investigations of a biological or other nature, as may be required to assess workers' exposure or state of health in respect of occupational hazards are provided following a period of employment.

Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155) (ratification: 2009)

Previous comment on Convention No. 155: direct request

Previous comment on Convention No. 161: direct request

In order to provide an overview of the issues relating to the application of the ratified Conventions on occupational safety and health (OSH), the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 155 (OSH) and 161 (occupational health services) in the same comment.

Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155)

Articles 13 and 19(f) of the Convention. Protection of workers who have removed themselves from a situation presenting an imminent and serious danger. The Committee previously noted that the obligation in section 139 of the Labour Code to notify the employer of any work situation presenting a danger did not give full effect to Articles 13 and 19(f) of Convention No. 155. In this regard, the Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that workers can inform the OSH committees, which in turn inform the labour inspectors, who refer the matter to a judge for an urgent application, if the employer asks the workers to resume work in a situation where there is continuing imminent and serious danger to life or health. However, the Committee notes an absence of information on the manner in which it is ensured that any workers who have removed themselves from a work situation which they have reasonable justification to believe presents an imminent and serious danger to their life or health are protected from undue consequences, in accordance with Article 13 of Convention No. 155. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that any workers who have removed themselves from a work situation which they have reasonable justification to believe presents an imminent and serious danger to their life or health are protected from undue consequences, in accordance with Article 13 of Convention No. 155. Also noting that OSH committees are not established in all enterprises, the Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the manner in which it is ensured in practice that workers cannot be required to return to a work situation where there is continuing imminent and serious danger to life or health, until the employer has taken remedial action (Article 19(f)).

Occupational Health Services Convention, 1985 (No. 161)

Article 2 of the Convention. Formulation, implementation and periodic review, in consultation with the most representative organizations of employers and workers, of a coherent national policy on occupational health services. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the adoption of the national OSH policy on 30 June 2017, and observes that this policy contains information on occupational health services but not on any strategy devoted to these services. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary steps to formulate, implement and periodically review a coherent national policy on occupational health services, in consultation with the most representative organizations of employers and workers.

Article 3. Progressive development of occupational health services for all workers. The Committee previously asked the Government to indicate the extent to which workers benefit in practice from health services. It notes the Government's reply that enterprise health services do not exist in sectors other than mining. In this regard, section 362 of Decree No. 2017-682/PRN/MET/PS issuing the regulatory part of the Labour Code establishes the possibility for establishments with fewer than 250 workers to adopt healthcare agreements, laying down obligations regarding visits, medical examinations, and urgent and first aid treatment, in medical centres and official dispensaries. However, the Government indicates that even though the healthcare agreement system is widespread, the services covered by these agreements are not occupational medical services. The Committee hopes that the Government will take the necessary steps to progressively develop occupational health services for all workers. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the extent to which workers benefit in practice from health services in all sectors and on the steps taken to develop occupational health services for all workers.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Uganda

Asbestos Convention, 1986 (No. 162) (ratification: 1990)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report, due since 2018, has not been received. In light of its urgent appeal launched to the Government in 2020, the Committee proceeds with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal.

Articles 3–18 and 20–22 of the Convention. Application of the Convention in law and in practice. Following its examination of the information at its disposal, the Committee notes that important information on measures giving effect to Articles 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 20, 21 and 22 of the Convention has not been submitted, namely:

- specific laws or regulations for the prevention and control of, and protection of workers against, health hazards due to occupational exposure to asbestos;

- specific regulations, if any, adopted in application of the National Environment Act 2019 (pursuant to section 71 of the Act) and repealing the National Environment (Waste Management) Regulations S.I No. 52/1999; and
- the application of measures taken to prevent, control, and to protect workers against, asbestos-related health hazards in practice.

The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the points listed above without delay, including copies of the relevant pieces of legislation.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155) (ratification: 2012)

Previous comments on C115

Previous comments on C139, C155 and C176

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of ratified Conventions on occupational safety and health (OSH), the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Conventions Nos 115 (radiation protection), 139 (occupational cancer), 155 (OSH) and 176 (safety and health in mines) together.

The Committee notes the joint observations of the Confederation of Free Trade Unions of Ukraine (KVPU) and the Federation of Trade Unions of Ukraine (FPU), received 6 October 2022, concerning the Draft Law on Labour and the Draft Law on Safety and Health at Work.

The KVPU and the FPU indicate that the Draft Law on Labour is not in conformity with Convention No. 155, with respect to Articles 4 (consultation with the most representative organizations of employers and workers in the development, implementation and review of the national OSH policy), 5(e) (the protection of workers and their representatives from disciplinary measures), 8 (implementation of the national policy) and 10 (measures to provide guidance to employers and workers). The KVPU and FPU further state that the Draft Law on Safety and Health at Work is not in conformity with Convention No. 155, and in particular, Articles 4, 5(e), 8, 10, 13 (protection for a worker that has removed themselves from a dangerous work situation) and Article 19 (arrangements at the level of the undertaking relating to rights and duties of workers and their representatives, and cooperation). The unions indicate that the Draft Law on Safety and Health at Work has been developed to replace the current Labour Protection Act, and that it will significantly narrow the content and scope of existing guarantees and rights of employees related to safe and healthy working conditions. The unions allege that this Draft Law will remove the right to benefits and compensation for work in difficult and harmful working conditions, currently contained in the Labour Protection Act, and that the Draft does not stipulate minimum funding for preventive measures. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect. The Committee also requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that any legislation adopted on safety and health is in conformity with ratified OSH Conventions, and it recalls that the Government can avail itself of the technical assistance of the ILO in this regard. Lastly, recalling the importance of consultations with the representative organizations of employers and workers in the implementation of Convention No. 155, it requests the Government to provide information on the consultations held with the organizations of employers and workers on the development of the Draft Law on Labour and the Draft Law on Safety and Health at Work.

Application of Conventions No. 115 and No. 155 in practice. Nuclear power plant workers. The Committee notes that the Report on developments relating to the resolution concerning the Russian Federation's aggression against Ukraine from the perspective of the mandate of the International Labour Organization, presented to the Governing Body at its 346th Session, October–November 2022 (GB.346/INS/14), noted rising concerns about the safety of workers in the occupied Zaporizhzhya Nuclear Power Plant. The Report highlighted concerns regarding the deteriorating working conditions and the safety of workers, mainly due to potential increased exposure to radiation, which would require continuous on-site and off-site monitoring and emergency preparedness measures. In a report published on 6 September 2022, the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) underlined that substantial risks remain to the safety and integrity of the plant. In a statement released 20 November 2022, the Director General of the IAEA reiterated the urgent need for measures to help prevent a nuclear accident at the Zaporizhzhya Nuclear Power Plant. The Committee urges that all necessary measures be taken to protect the safety and health of nuclear power plant workers. In particular, it urges the strengthening of the implementation of Convention No. 115 with a view to ensuring the effective protection of workers against ionising radiations in the course of their work.

The Committee notes the extremely difficult situation in the country since 24 February 2022, and notes that in this context, no reports have been sent from the Government on the application of ratified OSH Conventions. The Committee therefore repeats its previous comments:

The Committee takes note of the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) on the application of Conventions Nos 155 and 176, received on 16 September 2020, alleging that there is a lack of preventive and protective measures to protect workers against the spread of COVID-19 and a shortage of personal protective equipment throughout the country, but especially in the healthcare and mining sector. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

The Committee also notes the observations of the Confederation of Free Trade Unions of Ukraine (KVPU) on the application of Conventions Nos 155 and 176, received in 2019.

Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155)

Article 11(c) of the Convention. Notification of occupational accidents and diseases. The Committee notes that, according to the observations of the KVPU, employers do not follow, in practice, the notification procedures established by Decision No. 337 of the Cabinet of Ministers of Ukraine of 17 April 2019 approving the Procedure for Investigating and Recording Accidents and Occupational Diseases. The KVPU alleges that employers transmitted the notifications in violation of the deadlines, for 120 out of the 209 accidents registered by the State Labour Service (SLS) in the first half of 2019. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect, and to take the necessary measures to ensure that Decision No. 337 is fully applied in practice with a view to ensuring the notification of occupational accidents and diseases by employers.

Occupational Cancer Convention, 1974 (No. 139)

Articles 2, 3 and 4 of the Convention. Replacement of carcinogenic substances and agents, measures to be taken to protect workers, record keeping, and provision of information. The Committee notes that the Government's report does not respond to its previous comments on the issues covered by Articles 2 (replacement of carcinogenic substances and agents), (measures taken to protect workers and for record keeping) and 4 (providing workers with information on the dangers involved and the measures to be taken) of the Convention. The Committee also notes with concern that the Government: (1) reiterates previously raised difficulties in the application in practice of those Articles, including lack of funding, leading to the absence of measures to replace carcinogenic substances and agents by non-carcinogenic or less harmful substances or agents, and of an appropriate system to record the number of workers exposed to carcinogenic substances and agents; and (2) indicates that there are currently no special measures to ensure that workers who have been, are or may be exposed to carcinogenic substances and agents, are provided with all possible information regarding the dangers involved and the measures that should be taken. Taking into account the difficulties raised, the Committee urges the Government to take all the necessary measures to ensure that full effect is given to Articles 2, 3 and 4 of the Convention in the near future, and to provide information on the measures taken in this respect.

Safety and Health in Mines Convention, 1995 (No. 176)

Articles 5(1), (2)(e) and 16 of the Convention. Supervision of safety and health in mines, suspension of mining activities, corrective measures and enforcement. In response to its previous comments on inspections undertaken in mines, the Committee notes the statistics provided in the Government's report regarding the number of inspections conducted, violations detected and total amount of fines imposed. The Committee also notes the observations of the KVPU, alleging that the application of Act No. 877-V of 2007 on Fundamental Principles of State Supervision and Monitoring of Economic Activity restricts inspection in mines. The KVPU also refers to an incident in 2017–18 in which there were two fatal accidents at the same mining workplace within a year of each other, due to the failure to respect an order prohibiting the use of certain equipment, issued by the administrative court following an application by the State Labour Service (SLS). Referring to its comments concerning restrictions on the powers of labour inspectors, adopted in 2020 under the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), and the Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129), the Committee requests the Government to take all the necessary measures to ensure the effective enforcement of the provisions of this Convention, in accordance with Article 16. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to continue to provide statistics on violations detected during inspections, and detailed information on the measures taken by inspectors in such cases, including penalties imposed and other corrective measures. In addition, the Committee requests the Government to provide further information on the application in practice of Article 5(2)(e), regarding the power of the competent authorities to suspend or restrict mining activities on safety and health grounds, until the condition giving rise to the suspension or restriction has been corrected.

Articles 5(2)(c) and (d), 7 and 10(d). Measures to eliminate or minimize the risks to safety and health in mines. Procedures for investigating fatal and serious accidents and the compilation and publication of statistics. Appropriate remedial measures and measures taken to prevent future accidents by employers as a result of investigations. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's reference to the procedure for investigating accidents in enterprises in the coal industry, pursuant to Decision No. 337 of the Cabinet of Ministers of Ukraine of 17 April 2019 approving the Procedure for Investigating and Recording Accidents and Occupational Diseases. The Committee notes, however, that, according to the Government, 23 per cent of investigations mandated in 2018 are still outstanding, along with 5 per cent of the ones mandated in 2017 and 5 per cent of those mandated in 2016, due primarily to the lack of conclusions that should result from the investigation procedure. The KVPU also alleges that the established notification procedures for occupational accidents and diseases are not followed in practice. As regards measures taken to address the causes of such accidents, the Government indicates that the SLS established a commission to review regulatory documents on removing gases, ventilation and combating gas-dynamic phenomena, but does not refer to measures taken in mines in general. The Committee nevertheless notes the observations from the ITUC, which refers to the high rate of occupational accidents and diseases in the mining sector, and alleges that occupational fatalities and diseases in mining are underestimated as there is scant data in the industry. The ITUC further alleges that, according to the SLS, 68.7 per cent of workers in mining have been working in conditions which fail to meet sanitary and hygienic standards, that 53.5 per cent work with excessive dust, 42.3 per cent with excessive noise, 14.2 per cent with excessive vibration, and 9.8 per cent with excessive exposure of harmful chemicals. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in respect of the ITUC's observations. The Committee also requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that full effect is given to Article 10(d) of the Convention, requiring that employers shall ensure that all accidents and dangerous occurrences are investigated and appropriate remedial action is taken in practice. As regards Article 5(2)(d) on the compilation and publication of statistics on accidents, occupational diseases and dangerous occurrences, the Committee refers to its comments adopted in 2020 concerning Article 11(c) of Convention No. 155. The Committee also requests the Government to provide further detailed information on the measures taken to ensure the application, in mines, of the employers' duties contained in Articles 7 and 10.

Article 5(2)(f). Rights of workers and their representatives to be consulted on and participate in OSH measures. Further to its previous comments on procedures to implement the rights of workers and their representatives to be consulted on and participate in OSH measures (Article 5(2)(f)), the Committee notes that section 42 of the Labour Protection Act provides that OSH representatives may apply for assistance to the bodies in charge of state supervision over OSH, and have a right to participate and make appropriate proposals during inspections. The Committee also notes, however, the observations of the KVPU, alleging that the national legislation does not provide for mandatory and documented procedures to secure real forms of participation by workers' and their representatives in consultations on OSH at the workplace. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect and to provide further information on the establishment of effective procedures to ensure the implementation of the rights of workers and their representatives to be consulted on OSH matters, and to participate in measures, relating to safety and health at the workplace in accordance with the provisions of the Article.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela

Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155) (ratification: 1984)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations on the application of the Convention submitted jointly by the Independent Trade Union Alliance Confederation of Workers (CTASI), the Confederation of Workers of Venezuela (CTV), and the Federation of University Teachers' Associations of Venezuela (FAPUV), received on 1 September 2022. The Committee also notes the observations submitted by the Federation of Chambers and Associations of Commerce and Production of Venezuela (FEDECAMARAS), received on 2 September 2022. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

Articles 4, 7 and 8 of the Convention. Implementing and periodically reviewing a coherent national policy on occupational safety and health and the working environment, and measures to give effect to the above-mentioned national policy in consultation with the most representative organizations of employers and workers concerned. In relation to its previous comments, the Committee notes that section 11 of the 2005 Basic Act on prevention, conditions of work and the working environment (LOPCYMAT) sets out 12 elements to be included in the national occupational safety and health (OSH) policy, which include the mechanisms and policies for coordination between the competent bodies and entities in occupational health and safety and prevention. In this respect, the Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its report on the various measures to implement the national OSH policy though the training of prevention delegates by the National Institute for Occupational Safety, Health and Prevention (INPSASEL), the undertaking of a considerable number of investigations into occupational accidents and diseases, and the carrying out of 90,523 occupational safety and health inspections from 2016 to July 2022.

The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not provided information on the implementation and periodic review of the national policy or the manner in which consultations are held on the implementation measures for the policy with the most representative employers' and workers' organizations concerned. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures without delay to ensure that consultations are held with the most representative workers' and employers' organizations concerned regarding the implementation and periodic review of its national policy, as well as on the necessary measures adopted to give effect to this policy in accordance with Articles 4 and 8 of the Convention, and to provide specific information on the measures taken in this respect, including the employers' and workers' organizations consulted and the results of such consultations. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to ensure that the occupational safety and health situation and working environment is reviewed at appropriate intervals, as well as information on the outcomes of this review, including the main problems identified, the means of resolving them and priorities for action.

Article 5(e). Protection of workers and their representatives from disciplinary measures as a result of actions properly taken by them in conformity with the national OSH and working environment policy. In relation to its previous comments on the dismissal of prevention delegates, the Committee notes with concern the joint observations of CTASI, CTV and FAPUV alleging the dismissal of union leaders in the cement industry for reporting the occurrence of occupational accidents. The Committee notes that, in accordance with section 11(5) of the LOPCYMAT of 2005, the national OSH policy must include safeguards and other protections for workers who act individually or collectively in defence of their rights. The Committee urges the Government to examine, together with the trade union organizations concerned, the situation of the trade union leaders who have been adversely affected and, in the event that they have been dismissed as a result of actions justifiably taken by them in accordance with national policy, to reinstate them immediately in their jobs without loss of benefits in compliance with section 11(5) of the 2005 LOPCYMAT and Article 5(e) of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this respect, including the conclusions of the examination carried out together with the trade union organizations and the measures taken as a result. The Committee also requests the Government to provide specific information in relation to the review of the unjustified dismissal of prevention delegates to which the Committee referred in its previous comments and the measures adopted as a result of this review.

Articles 6 and 15. Functions and responsibilities and coordination between the various authorities and bodies. In relation to its previous comments in which it took note that the National Council for Occupational Safety and Health was not operational, the Committee notes with regret that the Government has not provided information regarding making the Council operational or on the measures taken or envisaged to ensure the necessary coordination between the various authorities and bodies responsible for giving effect to the provisions of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the National Council for Occupational Safety and Health, established pursuant to section 36 of the 2005 LOPCYMAT, becomes operational. The Committee also once again requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to ensure the necessary coordination between the various authorities and bodies responsible for giving effect to the provisions of the Convention, as well as on the consultations held with the most representative organizations of employers and workers concerning these measures and on their outcomes.

Article 11(d). Holding of inquiries where cases of occupational accidents appear to reflect serious situations and application of the Convention in practice. The occupational safety and health situation in the electricity, petroleum, cement and healthcare sectors. In relation to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication that, in accordance with the protocol established by INPSASEL on the investigation of occupational accidents, serious, very serious and fatal occupational accidents notified to the State-level Departments of Occupational Safety and Health (GERESAT) are investigated immediately. The Government adds that, in relation to occupational diseases, the investigation protocol establishes that they must be investigated according to the order in which they are presented, notified or recorded. The Committee notes that under the 2005 LOPCYMAT, the OSH services, which are multidisciplinary and preventive in nature (section 39), have the obligation to investigate occupational accidents and diseases in order to explain what happened and take the necessary corrective measures (section 40(14)).

With regard to the measures taken in relation to OSH conditions in the cement and petroleum sectors, the Committee notes the Government's indication that INPSASEL receives and records notifications of occupational accidents and then carries out the related investigations and inspections. In this regard, the Government reports the number of occupational accidents notified to INPSASEL between 2017 and July 2022 in the petroleum sector (2,467 accidents) and in the cement sector (489 accidents), as well as the number of inspections carried out between 2021 and July 2022 in the petroleum sector (18 inspections) and in the cement sector (4 inspections).

The Committee also notes with concern the information provided by CTASI, CTV and FAPUV in their joint observations on OSH conditions, in which they allege that: (i) in the electricity sector, a lack of minimum safe working conditions poses a serious danger to workers and led to the death of six workers between March and June 2022: three workers died after an electrical tower on which they were working collapsed and three workers were electrocuted while attempting to correct electrical faults; (ii) in the oil sector, fires, explosions and gas fumes have caused occupational accidents, and oil spills have damaged nets and boat engines, preventing fishermen from working, and have caused farmers to lose animals and crops; (iii) in the cement sector, OSH conditions, including a lack of provision of adequate work equipment and tools, led to the death of two workers while performing their duties in 2022; and (iv) in health centres, the lack of water and disinfectant for cleaning facilities, the reuse of masks due to insufficient supplies, and the failure to provide protective barriers have led to the infection and death of medical personnel, as well as the closure of 80 per cent of health centres nationwide. Taking due note of the information provided by the above-mentioned organizations, the Committee urges the Government to establish a forum for dialogue with these organizations in order to discuss the necessary measures to be taken in relation to OSH conditions in the electricity, petroleum, cement and healthcare sectors. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the investigations carried out into serious and fatal occupational accidents in the electricity, petroleum, cement and healthcare sectors.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

In addition, requests regarding certain matters are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 13 (Cameroon, Central African Republic, Chad, Chile, Colombia, Côte d'Ivoire, Djibouti, Madagascar, Morocco, Nicaragua, Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela); Convention No. 45 (Cameroon, China, Costa Rica, Côte d'Ivoire, Croatia, Ecuador, Guinea-Bissau, Morocco, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela); Convention No. 62 (Central African Republic, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Malta, Netherlands); Convention No. 115 (Chile, China, China: Macau Special Administrative Region, Djibouti, Finland, France: French Polynesia, Lebanon, Lithuania, Netherlands, Nicaragua, Ukraine); Convention No. 119 (Central African Republic, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Ecuador, Finland, Madagascar, Malta, Morocco, Nicaragua, Niger, North Macedonia, Ukraine); Convention No. 120 (Central African Republic, Costa Rica, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Djibouti, Finland, Lebanon, Madagascar, Saudi Arabia, Ukraine, Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela); Convention No. 127 (Chile, Costa Rica, Lebanon, Lithuania, Madagascar, Malta, Nicaragua, Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela); Convention No. 136 (Chile, Colombia, Côte d'Ivoire, Ecuador, Finland, Lebanon, Malta, Morocco, Nicaragua); Convention No. 139 (Croatia, Ecuador, Finland, Lebanon, Netherlands, Nicaragua, North Macedonia, Ukraine, Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela); Convention No. 148 (China: Hong Kong Special Administrative Region, China: Macau Special Administrative Region, Costa Rica, Croatia, Ecuador, Finland, Lebanon, Malta, Netherlands, Niger, North Macedonia); Convention No. 155 (Cabo Verde, Central African Republic, China, China: Macau Special Administrative Region, Côte d'Ivoire, Croatia, Cyprus, Ethiopia, Finland, Malawi, Netherlands, New Zealand, Niger, Rwanda, Ukraine, Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela); Convention No. 161 (Chile, Colombia, Côte d'Ivoire, Croatia, Finland, Niger, North Macedonia, San Marino, Ukraine); Convention No. 162 (Cameroon, Chile, Colombia, Croatia, Cyprus, Ecuador, Finland, Morocco, Netherlands); Convention No. 167 (China, China: Macau Special Administrative Region, Colombia, Finland, Guinea, Russian Federation); Convention No. 170 (China, Colombia, Côte d'Ivoire, Cyprus, Finland, Lebanon, Netherlands); Convention No. 174 (Colombia, Finland, Lebanon, Netherlands, Ukraine); Convention No. 176 (Finland, Lebanon, Morocco, Ukraine); Convention No. 184 (Finland, Malawi, Serbia, Ukraine); Convention No. 187 (Chile, Côte d'Ivoire, Cyprus, Finland, Iceland, Malawi, Morocco, Niger, Philippines, Rwanda).

The Committee noted the information supplied by the following State in answer to a direct request with regard to: Convention No. 13 (Finland).

Central African Republic

Workmen's Compensation (Occupational Diseases) Convention, 1925 (No. 18) (ratification: 1964)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. List of recognized occupational diseases. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee once again notes with concern that the list of occupational diseases envisaged in section 91 of the Social Security Code of 2006 and section 81 of Decree No. 09-116 of 27 April 2009, on the application of the Social Security Code, has still not been adopted by the Ministers responsible for social security and public health. The Government indicates in this regard that in 2013 a national delegation participated in the work of the technical committee responsible for finalizing the harmonized list of occupational diseases at the Inter-African Conference on Social Insurance (CIPRES) and that the committee responsible for preparing the list has taken up its work once again. The recurrent crises experienced by the country in recent years have however prevented the Government from finalizing the process of the preparation of the list of occupational diseases. The Committee wishes to emphasize that, without a list of occupational diseases, it is impossible to implement not only compensation, but also the prevention of such diseases. The Committee therefore once again expresses the hope that the technical committee responsible for the adoption of the list of occupational diseases will be in a position to complete its work in the very near future and that the Ministries concerned will be able to adopt the schedules of occupational diseases envisaged in the Social Security Code and Decree No. 09-116, taking duly into consideration the Schedule annexed to the Convention. In this regard, the Committee draws the Government's attention to the List of Occupational Diseases Recommendation, 2002 (No. 194), which contains the most up-to-date list of occupational diseases at the international level.

Recommendations of the Standards Review Mechanism. The Committee notes that, according to the recommendations made by the Tripartite Working Group of the Standards Review Mechanism, as approved by the ILO Governing Body, Member States which have ratified the Convention are encouraged to ratify the Employment Injury Benefits Convention, 1964 [Schedule I amended in 1980] (No. 121), and/or the Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952 (No. 102), and accept the obligations in its Part VI, as the most up-to-date instruments in this subject area (GB.328/LILS/2/1). The Committee reminds the Government of the possibility of having recourse to ILO technical assistance in this regard.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Equality of Treatment (Social Security) Convention, 1962 (No. 118) (ratification: 1964)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee recalls that, following the adoption of Act No. 06-035 of 28 December 2006 issuing the Social Security Code, Decree No. 09-116 of 27 April 2009 implementing that Act, and Decree No. 09-115 of 27 April 2009 determining the legal and institutional status of the National Social Security Fund, the national law and regulations continue to be based on the principle that equality of treatment is subject, contrary to Article 4(1) of the Convention, to the condition of the residence of foreign nationals in the national territory. The provision of benefits abroad is only possible if it is provided for by a bilateral or multilateral social security agreement, which is contrary to the provisions of Article 5(1) of the Convention. In the Central African Republic, this provision of the Convention requires the provision of old-age benefit and employment injury pensions, without other conditions, to its own nationals and to the nationals of any other Member which has accepted the obligations of the Convention in respect of these benefits. The Committee notes that the Government, in its report, does not indicate any measures adopted or envisaged with a view to amending the national legislation to bring it into conformity with these provisions of the Convention. In light of the information available, the Committee concludes once again that the national legislation continues not to give full effect to the essential provisions of the Convention. The Committee expects that the Government will take the necessary measures to make appropriate amendments to the legislation so as to give full effect to the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Sickness Insurance (Industry) Convention, 1927 (No. 24) (ratification: 1931)

Sickness Insurance (Agriculture) Convention, 1927 (No. 25) (ratification: 1931)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Article 7(1) of the Conventions. Contribution to the establishment of the sickness insurance fund. With regard to its previous comments, the Committee notes from the Government's report that, in accordance with sections 158 and 184 and following. of Legislative Decree No. 1 of 2006, the public health system and the private health scheme are financed with a 7 per cent contribution from workers' pay or income, besides additional contributions by workers in the private scheme. The Committee notes that the State contributes to both schemes in certain circumstances. One of the circumstances in which the State shall contribute is established by Act No. 20850 of 2015, which envisages a financial protection system for high-cost diagnoses and treatment. Another circumstance is provided for by Act No. 21010 of 2017, which has created a fund to finance the Insurance to Support Children (SANNA), which benefits working parents of children under the ages of 15 or 18 years with serious health conditions. In addition, the Committee notes that the SANNA also receives the monthly contributions paid by the employer or the self-employed worker, the amount of which is 0.03 per cent of taxable income. While noting the employers' contribution to the establishment of the sickness insurance fund in respect of compensation to support children with serious health conditions, the Committee observes that the sickness insurance, which includes medical care and sickness benefits, is mainly financed by insured persons, with the State's participation in certain circumstances. In this regard, the Committee recalls the importance of fulfilling the basic principle provided for in Article 7(1) of the Conventions, under which workers and employers shall share in providing the financial resources of the sickness insurance fund. The Committee requests the Government, in consultation with the social partners, to ensure the full application of the principle provided for in these Articles of the Conventions and to provide information in this respect.

The Committee has been informed that, based on the recommendations of the Standards Review Mechanism Tripartite Working Group (SRM tripartite working group), the Governing Body decided that Member States for which Conventions Nos 24 and 25 are in force should be encouraged to ratify the more recent Medical Care and Sickness Benefits Convention, 1969 (No. 130), or the Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952 (No. 102), accepting Parts II and III (see GB.328/LILS/2/1). Conventions Nos 130 and 102 reflect the more modern approach to medical care and sickness benefits. The Committee therefore encourages the Government to follow up the Governing Body decision at its 328th Session (October–November 2016) approving the recommendations of the SRM tripartite working group and to consider ratifying Convention No. 130 or No. 102 (Parts II and III), as the most up-to-date instruments in this subject area. The Committee reminds the Government of the possibility to avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office in this regard.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Invalidity, Old-Age and Survivors' Benefits Convention, 1967 (No. 128) (ratification: 1976)

Previous comment

Article 25, in conjunction with Article 21 of the Convention. Duration of payment of survivors' benefits. The Committee notes from the Government's report that, pursuant to the 2022 reform of the survivors' pension scheme, the duration of the surviving spouse's pension is limited to a period of ten years, or until the youngest child reaches the age of 18. The Committee recalls that Article 25 of the Convention requires survivors' benefits be granted throughout the contingency, which is the loss of support suffered by the spouse or child as the result of the death of the breadwinner, as per Article 21(1). While the entitlement of spouses to survivors' benefits may be conditional upon them being incapable of self-support, the Convention does not allow such entitlement to be based on other conditions such as caring for a dependent or to be limited in time, without this limitation being justified by a change in their own circumstances. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that survivors' benefits are paid throughout the contingency, in line with Article 25 of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Workmen's Compensation (Accidents) Convention, 1925 (No. 17) (ratification: 1977)

Equality of Treatment (Accident Compensation) Convention, 1925 (No. 19) (ratification: 1977)

The Committee notes with concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of ratified Conventions on workmen's compensation, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine Convention No. 17 (accidents) and No. 19 (equality of treatment) together.

Convention No. 17. Application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee hoped that the Government would make every effort to complete the reforms required to guarantee the protection afforded by the Convention to injured workers. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its report according to which, issues in the application of the Convention were due to the delayed implementation of the Occupational Accidents and Occupational Diseases Branch, established by the Social Security Code (Decree No. 13955 of 1963) but not yet established in practice. The Committee notes with concern that compensation in case of work-related accidents is still regulated by Legislative Decree No. 136 of 1983, which it has previously found not to be in compliance with the requirements of the Convention in many respects: Article 2 – the necessity to make the above Legislative Decree applicable to apprentices; Article 5 – the necessity to provide in the event of employment injury that the compensation shall be paid in the form of periodical payments to the injured worker or his or her dependants, provided that it may only be paid in the form of a lump sum where there are guarantees that it will be properly utilized; Article 6 – the payments of compensation in case of temporary incapacity from the fifth day following the accident at the latest and throughout the duration of the invalidity, that is until the worker is cured, or up to the date of the commencement of the periodical payments for permanent incapacity; Article 7 – necessity to provide additional compensation where the worker requires the constant help of another person; Article 8 – provision for review of the periodical payments either automatically or at the request of the beneficiary in the event of a change in the condition of the worker; and Article 11 – making provision for guarantees in the event of the insolvency of the insurer, inter alia. The Committee observes that, despite the comments it has been making for many years, the measures necessary to bring the national legislation into conformity with the Convention have still not been taken. The Committee once again requests the Government to report on measures envisaged or taken with a view to giving full effect to the Convention, including measures related to the amendment of Legislative Decree No. 136 of 1983 and the implementation of the Occupational Accidents and Occupational Diseases branch of the Social Security Code.

Article 1(1) and (2) of Convention No. 19. Equality of treatment for survivors. In its previous comments, the Committee recalled that, for many years, it has been drawing the Government's attention to the issue of the right of survivors of foreign workers, originating from a country party to Convention No. 19, to receive a pension even if they did not reside in Lebanon at the time of the accident causing the death of their breadwinner, and hoped that the new Labour Code would guarantee this right in law and practice and would not forestall the corresponding amendment of the legislation governing compensation for employment injuries, namely section 10 of Legislative Decree No. 136 of 1983 and sections 9(3), subparagraphs (2) and (4) of the Social Security Code. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it would be necessary to amend the relevant provisions in the Social Security Code once the Occupational Accidents and Occupational Diseases Branch is enacted to give effect to the Convention. Recalling that the Convention guarantees equality of treatment between the dependants of nationals and those of foreign workers from a country which has ratified the Convention without any requirement as to residence and irrespective of any reciprocity condition, the Committee once again requests the Government to take necessary measures to bring the national legislation in conformity with the Convention.

The Committee has been informed that, based on the recommendations of the Standards Review Mechanism Tripartite Working Group (SRM tripartite working group), the Governing Body has decided that Member States for which Convention No. 17 is in force should be encouraged to ratify the more recent Employment Injury Benefits Convention, 1964 [Schedule I amended in 1980] (No. 121), or the Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952 (No. 102), accepting its Part VI (see GB.328/LILS/2/1). Conventions Nos 102 and 121 reflect the more modern approach to employment injury benefits. The Committee therefore encourages the Government to follow up the Governing Body's decision at its 328th Session (October–November 2016) approving the recommendations of the SRM tripartite working group and to consider ratifying Conventions Nos 102 (Part VI) or 121 as the most up-to-date instruments in this subject area. The Committee reminds the Government of the possibility to avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office in this regard.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Equality of Treatment (Social Security) Convention, 1962 (No. 118) (ratification: 1975)

Employment Injury Benefits Convention, 1964 [Schedule I amended in 1980] (No. 121) (ratification: 1975)

Invalidity, Old-Age and Survivors' Benefits Convention, 1967 (No. 128) (ratification: 1975)

Previous comment

Article 65, 66 or 67, of Convention No. 102, Article 19 or 20 of Convention No. 121, Article 26, 27 or 28 of Convention No. 128. Review of the level of social security benefits. Since 2004, the Committee has been requesting the Government to take measures to give full effect to the provisions of the above-mentioned Conventions, in law and in practice. In this regard, the Committee takes note of the indication by the Government in its report that the level of social security benefits provided in Libya in accordance with Law No. 16 of 1985 must not be less than the minimum wage, currently set in 450 dinars per month, and that pursuant to a Council of Ministers Decision No. 1 of 2021, a study is being conducted to evaluate the possibility of increasing the level of social security benefits up to a maximum of 800 dinars per month for low-income families. The Government also indicate its intent to request ILO's technical assistance in this regard. The Committee requests the Government to: (i) indicate which are the benefits concerned by this evaluation; (ii) provide information on the findings and recommendations of the study; and (iii) supply information on any measure taken or envisaged to increase the level of benefits provided in application of Conventions Nos 102, 121 or 128, as the case may be, together with the statistical information necessary for the Committee to assess the conformity of the benefit levels with the requirements of the Conventions concerned. The Committee strongly encourages the Government to avail itself of ILO technical assistance.

Application of Conventions Nos 102, 121 and 128 in law and in practice. Since 2004, the Committee has been requesting the Government to provide information on developments in respect of measures taken to give full effect to the provisions of the above-mentioned Conventions, including statistical data as to the coverage and adequacy of benefits provided by the Social Security Fund. In order to be able to resume the examination of the pending technical issues under the above-mentioned Conventions, the Committee requests the Government to supply, without further delay, detailed statistical data and information in the manner provided by the report forms, particularly concerning information in conformity with Title I of Article 76 of the report form for Convention No. 102, Title V of Article 12 of the report form of Convention No. 118, Titles I to V of the Articles 13, 14, and 18, and Article 21 of the report form of Convention No. 121, Titles under Parts V and VII of the report form of Convention No. 128.

Article 3(1) of Convention No. 118. Equality of treatment. For over 20 years, the Committee has found that several provisions of the national legislation are not in conformity with Article 3(1) of the Convention, since they establish different conditions and requirements for the entitlement of non-Libyan workers to social security benefits. The Committee recalls that this concerns, in particular:

- (i) section 38 of Social Security Act No. 13 of 1980 and Regulations 28–33 of the Social Pensions Regulations of 1981, which provide that non-Libyan workers receive a lump sum for premature termination of work, while nationals are guaranteed the maintenance of their wages or remuneration;
- (ii) sections 5(c) and 8(b) of the Social Security Act that, which do not provide for the compulsory affiliation of self-employed non-Libyan workers or those working in the public administration to the social security scheme;
- (iii) Regulation 16(2) and (3) and Regulation 95(3) of the Social Pensions Regulations, under which non-Libyan nationals who have not completed the minimum period of ten years of contributions to the social security scheme are not entitled to an old-age pension or to a pension for total incapacity due to a non-occupational injury, while Libyan workers are;
- (iv) Regulation 174(2) of the Social Pensions Regulations, under which the minimum qualifying period of ten years of contributions is also required for benefits due to survivors of a non-Libyan national, as opposed to Libyan nationals.

The Committee recalls that Article 3(1) of the Convention requires Member States for whom the Convention is in force to grant within their territory to the nationals of any other Member for which the Convention is in force equality of treatment under its legislation with its own nationals, both as regards coverage and as regards the right to benefits, in respect of every branch of social security for which it has accepted the obligations of the Convention. Consequently, it urges the Government to make the necessary amendments to its national legislation, and in particular to the provisions mentioned above to ensure the full application, in law and in practice, of this Article.

Articles 5 and 10 of Convention No. 118. Payment of benefits abroad. The Committee notes that section 161 of the Social Pensions Regulations of 1981 expressly provides that pensions or other cash benefits may be transferred to beneficiaries resident abroad only where that is envisaged by agreements to which Libya is a party. The Committee recalls once more that, in accordance with Article 5 of the Convention (read in conjunction with Article 10), each Member which has ratified the Convention must guarantee both to its own nationals and to the nationals of any other Member that has accepted the obligations of the Convention in respect of the branch in question, as well as to refugees and stateless persons, when they are resident abroad, the provision of invalidity benefits, old-age benefits, survivors' benefits, death grants and employment injury pensions. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to give effect to Articles 5 and 10 of the Convention by ensuring that pensions and cash benefits can be paid to workers and their survivors, including refugees and stateless persons, residing abroad regardless of the existence of bilateral agreements between Libya and the other Member State in which they reside.

Netherlands

Employment Injury Benefits Convention, 1964 [Schedule I amended in 1980] (No. 121) (ratification: 1966)

Previous comment: direct request

The Committee notes the observations of the National Federation of Christian Trade Unions (CNV), the Netherlands Trade Union Confederation (FNV), and the Trade Union Federation for Professionals (VCP), received on 31 August 2021 and 31 August 2022 and requests the Government to provide its reply to them

Article 14 of the Convention. Minimum degree of loss of earning capacity. The Committee previously observed that a minimum degree of 35 per cent incapacity for the entitlement to the cash benefits under the Work and Income (Employment Capacity) Act of 2006 (WIA) was set too high to comply with Article 14. The Committee notes the indication by the Government in its report that the minimum degree of 35 per cent incapacity was set in an agreement with the trade unions and the employers' organizations. The Government further indicates that according to the financial assessments, the reduction of the minimum degree would lead to higher costs and entail major adjustments of the scheme which requires a complex and thorough analysis.

The Committee notes the observations of the CNV, the FNV, and the VCP indicating that: (1) for many years, they have been proposing that the minimum degree of incapacity should be lowered from 35 per cent to 15 per cent; (2) contrary to the original purpose of the WIA according to which persons with less than 35 per cent of incapacity were supposed to stay on the labour market, it appears in practice that the loss of 35 per cent capacity for work or less often constitutes an obstacle for employers to keep such workers; and (3) a substantial group of people fall outside the income protection provided under the WIA requiring the minimum degree of 35 per cent incapacity.

The Committee recalls that according to Article 14 of the Convention, the degree of loss of earning capacity for which cash benefits become payable shall be prescribed in such a manner as to avoid hardship. The Committee further recalls that according to Article 14 of the Convention, cash benefits in excess of such minimum degree may take the form of periodical payments or lump-sum payments if partial loss of earning capacity is not substantial. In this respect, the Committee previously observed that incapacity below 25 per cent could be regarded as not substantial and compensated by lump-sum payments, in line with Paragraph 10 of the Employment Injury Benefits Recommendation, 1964

(No. 121). The Committee also pointed out to the fact that, depending on the existence of other complementary income guarantees, lump-sum compensation had been considered by the Committee to be in compliance with the Convention in certain cases for incapacity up to 35 per cent. However, the WIA provides for neither periodic cash benefits, nor lump-sum payments in case of incapacity below 35 per cent.

While taking due note of the explanations provided by the Government, the Committee recalls its earlier position and analysis and is still of the opinion that the minimum degree of 35 per cent incapacity for the entitlement to cash benefits is not in compliance with the provisions of Article 14 of the Convention. The Committee urges the Government, without further delay, to take the necessary measures in full consultation with the most representative trade union and employers' organizations to bring the national legislation in line with Article 14 of the Convention by ensuring that persons with incapacity below 35 per cent are entitled to cash benefits in case of employment injury, and to report on the measures taken for that purpose.

Article 14(2), in conjunction with Articles 6(c) and 22(1). Total loss of earning capacity likely to be permanent. The Committee previously observed that a person who is completely (at least 80 per cent) and permanently incapable for work shall be entitled to the benefits under the Income Provision for Persons with Full Occupational Disability Scheme (IVA benefits), as per section 47 of the WIA. The IVA benefit amounts for 75 per cent of the previous monthly wage but it is subject to reduction if a beneficiary earns an income (sections 51-52 of the WIA). In this respect, the Committee observes that the Convention does not authorize any reduction of cash benefits in case a fully incapacitated person earns additional income from any gainful occupation, leaving him or her free to combine invalidity benefit with work. The Committee recalls that according to Article 6(c) of the Convention, the definition of the contingency of total or partial loss of earning capacity likely to be permanent does not include actual suspension of earnings in comparison with, for example, the definition of temporary incapacity for work, as per Article 6(b) of the Convention. The Committee further recalls that the provisions of the WIA allowing the reduction of the IVA benefit in case a beneficiary earns income from a gainful occupation go beyond the requirements of Article 22(1) of the Convention which limits the grounds for suspension of benefits. The Committee requests once again the Government to take the necessary measures, without further delay, to ensure that the IVA benefit is not subject to reduction when a beneficiary earns income from any gainful occupation, in line with Articles 14(2) and 22(1) of the Convention.

Article 14(3), in conjunction with Article 9. Substantial partial loss of earning capacity likely to be permanent. (i) Entitlement conditions for the WGA wage-related benefit. The Committee previously noted that to be entitled to the benefits under the Resumption of Work for Persons with Partial Disability Scheme, WGA (WGA wage-related benefit), a person with incapacity for work of between 35–80 per cent was obligated to register as a jobseeker, make sufficient attempts to obtain suitable work, and accept an offer of such work (section 30 of the WIA). The entitlement to the WGA wage-related benefit depends on the insured being also entitled to unemployment benefit (section 58 of the WIA). Those not eligible for unemployment benefit can get the WGA wage supplement benefit or the WGA follow-up benefit (section 54(4) of the WIA).

The Committee recalls once again that subjecting the entitlement to the benefit to an obligation to make use of the remaining earning capacity is not foreseen by the Convention (Articles 9 and 14(3)). The Committee therefore considers that under the conditions prescribed by section 30 of the WIA, the WGA wage-related benefit is not in conformity with the requirements set out in the above-mentioned Articles of the Convention. Considering that the WGA wage-related benefit shall not be subject to the conditions set out by section 30 of the WIA to be considered for the purpose of the application of the Convention, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the compliance of the entitlement conditions for the WGA wage-related benefit with Articles 9 and 14(3) of the Convention.

(ii) Qualifying period for the entitlement to the WGA wage-related benefit. The Committee notes that the entitlement to the WGA wage-related benefit is subject to the qualifying period of employment for at least one working hour per calendar week in at least 26 calendar weeks (section 58 of the WIA). In this respect, the Committee recalls that under Article 9(2) of the Convention, eligibility for benefits may not be made subject to the length of employment, to the duration of insurance or to the payment of contributions. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the entitlement to the WGA wage-related benefit is not subject to a requirement of completion of certain length of employment or the duration of insurance, in line with Article 9(2) of the Convention.

(iii) Duration of the WGA wage-related benefit. The Committee notes that the WGA wage-related benefit is paid for at least three months and at most 24 months (section 59 of the WIA). It further observes that the duration of the WGA wage-related benefit is subject to the length of the previous employment period. In particular, one month of the payment of benefit is equal to one calendar year of employment (section 59 of the WIA). In this respect, the Committee recalls that the Convention does not permit the benefit to be affected by the length of employment and requires that the benefit is granted throughout the contingency (Article 9(2) and (3)). The Committee therefore considers that the WGA wage-related benefit may only be taken into account for the purpose of the application of the Convention in its minimum duration of three months. The Committee thus requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the compliance of the duration of the WGA wage-related benefit with Article 9(2) and (3) of the Convention, should the Government wish to consider the WGA wage-related benefit beyond its minimum duration for the purpose of the application of the Convention.

Article 14(3), in conjunction with Article 9. Substantial partial loss of earning capacity likely to be permanent. Entitlement to the WGA wage supplement benefit. The Committee previously noted that the WGA wage supplement benefit was provided after the payment of the WGA wage-related benefit, or in case a person was not entitled to the WGA wage-related benefit (section 60 of the WIA). The Committee further observed that the WGA wage supplement benefit was subject to the income requirement that a person partially capable of work must earn per calendar month an income from work which is at least equal to 50 per cent of his or her remaining earning capacity (section 60 of the WIA). The Committee recalls once again that the requirement to use the residual earning capacity as a condition for entitlement is not in conformity with the Convention, which guarantees entitlement to benefits at the prescribed level without regard to the residual earning capacity and additional income which could be earned by the workers with partial incapacity (Articles 9 and 14(3)). The Committee thus requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the compliance of the entitlement conditions of the WGA wage supplement benefit with Articles 9 and 14(3) of the Convention, should the Government wish to consider the WGA wage supplement benefit for the purpose of the application of the Convention.

Article 14(3), in conjunction with Article 19. Level of the WGA follow-up benefit. The Committee previously observed that the WGA follow-up benefit was a flat rate benefit calculated on the basis of the legal minimum wage and not as a percentage of the beneficiary's previous wage. The Committee, however, recalls that according to Article 14(3) of the Convention, the benefit for partial incapacity shall represent a suitable proportion of the benefit for total incapacity the level of which shall be at least of 60 per cent of the standard's beneficiary earnings (Article 19 and Schedule II). The Committee notes that the IVA benefit which is provided in case of total incapacity is determined as 75 per cent of the previous monthly wage (section 51 of the WIA). The Committee therefore considers that the WGA follow-up benefit does not represent a suitable proportion of the IVA benefit, particularly as regards persons with income above the legal minimum wage. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures, without further delay, to ensure that the level of the WGA follow-up benefit is in line with the requirements of Articles 14(3) and 19 of the Convention.

Based on the above, the Committee notes with deep concern that the cash benefits provided under the Work and Income (Employment Capacity) Act of 2006 (WIA) do not ensure the level of protection set out in the Convention on a range of issues and that, despite its comments on the non-compliance of the provisions of the WIA since 2007, no change has been made to the national legislation to bring it in line with the requirements of the Convention. The Committee reminds the Government of the possibility to avail itself of ILO technical assistance in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Previous comment

In order to provide an overview of matters relating to the application of the ratified Conventions on social security, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine the application of Conventions Nos 12, 17, 18, 19, 24 and 25 in a single comment.

Article 1 of Conventions Nos 12, 17, 18, 19, 24 and 25. In its previous comments, the Committee emphasized the need to extend the coverage of the social security system and requested the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard. As the Government's report does not contain specific information on this subject, the Committee notes the information contained in the Statistical Yearbook 2020, published in February 2021 by the Nicaraguan Social Security Institute (INSS), which shows that the numbers of persons registered with the social security system have fallen constantly since 2016, with a reduction of 27 per cent in the number of insured persons as a proportion of the economically active population and 35 per cent as a proportion of the population that is actually employed. The total number of insured persons fell from 914,196 in 2017 to 714,465 in 2020 (page 328). The Committee also observes that the proportion of the population covered by sickness insurance has decreased, as has the number of newly insured persons, falling from 124,802 to 59,603 (page 327). Moreover, according to the continuous household survey, published by the National Development Institute of Nicaragua in April 2021, the informal employment rate was around 45 per cent. The Committee also observes that, according to the ILO Social Protection Platform, in 2021, only 14.5 per cent of the population was effectively covered by at least one social protection benefit.

The Committee expresses concern at the above statistics, which point to a constant reduction in social insurance rates and in the number of persons protected, and an accelerating increase in the informal employment rate. In this regard, the Committee draws the Government's attention to Article 1 of Conventions Nos 12, 17, 18, 19, 24 and 25, which guarantee the effective coverage and protection of workers and their families in the event of disease and accidents, whether occupational or of any other type. In light of the above, the Committee urges the Government to:

- (i) provide comprehensive statistical data on the current coverage of the social security system, disaggregated by branch in the various sectors of activity (industry, agriculture, informal economy, etc.) in relation to the total number of workers, in accordance with the questions contained in the report forms for the various Conventions concerned; and

- (ii) indicate the priorities adopted for the progressive extension of the coverage of the social security system and the measures envisaged or adopted, including in export processing zones and the agricultural sector.*

Conclusions and recommendations of the Standards Review Mechanism. The Committee recalls the recommendations of the Tripartite Working Group of the Standards Review Mechanism (SRM), on the basis of which the Governing Body decided that Member States for which Conventions Nos 17, 18, 24 and 25 are still in force should be encouraged to ratify the Employment Injury Benefits Convention, 1964 [Schedule I amended in 1980 (No. 121), and the Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952 (No. 102). The Committee encourages the Government to give effect to the decision adopted by the Governing Body at its 328th Session (October-November 2016) and to consider the ratification of the most up-to-date social security instruments.

The Committee recalls that the Government may avail itself of ILO technical assistance in this respect.

Previous comment: direct request

Article 36(3) of the Convention, in conjunction with Article 72. Employment injury benefits for incapacity of less than 30 per cent. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes from the Government's report that persons with incapacity for work above 30 per cent due to employment injury are entitled to periodic cash benefits under the National Insurance Scheme. In addition, lump-sum payments for loss of future income and for non-economic losses (reduced quality of life) are provided to persons with incapacity for work, including those with incapacity below 30 per cent, under the mandatory Occupational Injury Insurance Scheme ("yrkesskadeforsikringsloven"), which is outside the framework of the National Insurance Scheme.

The Committee recalls that Article 36(1) and (2) of the Convention pursues the primary aim to ensure a permanent compensation, i.e. a periodical benefit in case of permanent total or partial loss of earning capacity caused by an employment injury. As an exception, Article 36(3)(a) of the Convention allows for the conversion of a periodical benefit into a lump-sum payment where the degree of incapacity is slight. The Committee has previously admitted incapacity below 30 per cent as a slight degree and allowed the conversion of periodical benefits into lump-sum payments which should bear an "equitable relationship" to the periodical payment otherwise due. In this respect, the Committee observes that the National Insurance Scheme does not provide any cash benefits in case of incapacity below 30 per cent. The Committee further observes that the compensation provided by the Occupational Injury Insurance Scheme constitutes a different additional payment, which is not made in lieu of a periodical payment otherwise due by the National Insurance Scheme, as in fact it bears no relationship to such a payment.

The Committee also recalls that according to Article 72(1) of the Convention, where the administration is not entrusted to an institution regulated by the public authorities or to a Government department responsible to a legislature, representatives of the persons protected shall participate in the management, or be associated therewith in a consultative capacity, under prescribed conditions. In this respect, the Committee observes from the information provided by the Government that the Occupational Injury Insurance Scheme is administered by private insurance companies. The Committee however observes that the Occupational Injury Insurance Act of 1989 does not indicate whether and how representatives of the persons protected may participate in the management of the Occupational Injury Insurance Scheme.

The Committee further takes note of the statement by the Government that improving the Norwegian Occupational Injury Scheme is part of its political platform. The Government considers the question of whether the National Insurance Scheme should provide disability benefit in the event of occupational injuries when the degree of incapacity is lower than 30 per cent to be a natural part of this work, and this would include considering the question of whether a disability benefit granted at low degrees of incapacity should be commuted into a lump-sum.

In view of the above, the Committee firmly hopes that, in the course of the intended reform, the Government will take the necessary measures to give full effect to Article 36 of the Convention by reducing the minimum threshold for the payment of periodic cash benefits under the National Insurance Scheme below 30 per cent of incapacity, subject to the possibility of commuting such benefits into a lump sum.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Previous comment

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report does not contain information in reply to its previous comments. The Committee therefore refers to its previous comments and once again addresses the following requests to the Government.

Article 4(3) of the Convention. Medical benefits. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the provision of medical benefits, including care during confinement, free-of-charge, and the freedom of choice of doctor and medical establishment, irrespective of income level or State contribution, for women in groups B (persons receiving the minimum wage), C and D (persons receiving income higher than the minimum wage).

Article 4(5). Social assistance benefits. The Committee requests the Government to adopt the necessary measures to ensure the provision of maternity benefits to women who fail to meet the conditions for eligibility set out in section 4 of Legislative Decree No. 44 of 1978, which specifies the requirement of six months contributions for eligibility for maternity benefits. For that purpose, the Committee invites the Government to consider the possibility of extending the coverage of the family subsidy and SUF Maternal benefits to these women, and requests the Government to provide information in this regard.

Articles 3(c) and 4. Payment of maternity cash benefits and prohibition of dismissal during maternity leave. The Committee takes note of the information provided by the Government in reply to its previous comments, concerning the provision of maternity leave pay and maternity medical benefits to women workers who have been dismissed during maternity leave. It notes that, according to the Government, maternity leave pay is provided by employers to women who have been dismissed, unless it is proven by the employer that the dismissal was related to the workers' misconduct, as set out in section 9 of the Employment Ordinance. The Committee recalls that Article 4 of the Convention affords full protection to women against dismissal during maternity-related leave.

The Committee observes that making employers directly liable for the costs of maternity benefits interrupts the provision of those benefits in case of unlawful termination of employment, and, therefore, may well lead to discrimination on the labour market. In allowing the dismissal of workers during maternity leave, section 9 of the Employment Ordinance is not only inconsistent with Article 4, but also with Article 3(c) of the Convention, once it results in the cessation of payment of maternity cash benefits to women for the full and healthy maintenance of herself and her child, which is not connected to the modality of possible dismissals during this period. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to bring the national legislation into conformity with the Convention, by amending, as soon as possible, section 9 of the Employment Ordinance to expressly prohibit employers from giving notice of dismissal to their workers for whatever reason during maternity-related leave, and to guarantee that, during this period, maternity benefits will be provided.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Article 4(5) of the Convention. Women who fail to qualify for benefits. The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report does not provide any information in reply to its previous comments, which it has been making since 2011, concerning benefits paid out of social assistance funds for women who have not completed the minimum qualifying period or paid 12 uninterrupted monthly contributions in order to receive maternity benefits through the social security system. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to ensure the payment of maternity benefits: (i) paid out of social assistance funds for women who are still not covered by the social security system; (ii) in the context of social assistance for women who do not meet the conditions established by the Social Security Act, and to indicate the type and the amount of benefits provided in these two settings.

Article 4(4) and (8). Financing of maternity benefits. The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that, under section 22 of the "General regulations on cash subsidies" (Resolution No. C.S. 318 of 1978), social security institutions and funds are partially responsible for cash maternity benefits and that the responsibility for paying these benefits is shared between employers (up to 25 per cent) and the Government (funded up to 75 per cent through social security). The Committee recalls that, under Article 4(4) and (8) of the Convention, the benefits shall be provided either by means of social insurance or through public funds. The Committee also recalls that the direct payment of maternity benefits by employers, even partially, imposes a financial burden on employers and may create a possible source of discrimination against women. The Committee encourages the Government to analyse and consider the possibility of moving gradually from a hybrid system in which employers also bear part of the cost of cash maternity benefits to a system totally supported by social security, and to share the results of such analysis and consideration.

Previous comments

Article 3(2), (3) and (4) of the Convention. Maternity leave and cash benefits duration. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to harmonize the legislative provisions governing maternity leave in the Labour Relations Act (No. 12) and maternity benefits in the Social Security Act (No. 13) to guarantee that maternity benefits were secured throughout the statutory duration of maternity leave, i.e. 14 weeks, in application of Article 3 of the Convention. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in this regard, according to which action had been taken by the Social Security Fund (letter No. 39 mim/ta'/2021 of 24 August 2021), to request the legislative authorities to address this issue by amending the Social Security Act. The Committee hopes that the legislative amendments needed to ensure that maternity benefits are provided to women workers throughout the entire period of maternity leave, i.e. 14 weeks, will be enacted without further delay, and requests the Government to take the necessary measures for that purpose, to give full effect to Article 3(2), (3) and (4) of the Convention. The Committee further requests the Government to provide the text of the relevant legislative provisions once adopted.

Article 4(4) and (8). Cash benefits. The Committee notes the indication provided by the Government, in reply to its previous request, that the establishment of a separate maternity branch within the social security system was accepted and that the Social Security Fund would be informed about such changes. The Committee welcomes this development and hopes that the measures necessary to give effect to Article 4(4) and (8), will be taken without further delay, with a view to ensuring the provision of cash and medical benefits by means of compulsory social insurance or by means of public funds, and to ensure that employers are not individually liable for the cost of maternity benefits. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the legislative provisions and other measures taken for this purpose.

Article 6. Employment protection. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to amend the Labour Relations Act (No. 12) to ensure that it would be prohibited to give notice of dismissal or terminate the employment relationship during maternity leave and any supplementary leave granted in case of illness medically certified as arising out of pregnancy or childbirth, as well as at such a time that the notice would expire during such absence. The Committee takes note of the information provided by the Government that the Labour Relations Act would address issues related to maternity leave, pregnancy and breastfeeding complications. The Committee notes, however, that section 25 of the Labour Relations Act, which allows for notice of dismissal and termination of employment relationships during pregnancy or maternity leave in cases when there is a justifiable reason not related to pregnancy or maternity, has not been amended and, that it is still not fully compliant with Article 6 of the Convention, which does not allow for such exceptions. The Committee therefore hopes the Government will shortly enact amendments to section 25 of the Labour Relations Act, ensuring that the national legislation expressly prohibits employers from giving notice of dismissal to workers during pregnancy or maternity related leave. The Committee further requests the Government to provide the text of the legislative provisions to that effect.

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the National Federation of Christian Trade Unions (CNV) and the Netherlands Trade Union Confederation (FNV) communicated with the Government's report.

Article 9(1) of the Convention. Discrimination in employment, including access to employment. With respect to its previous request to take measures to effectively tackle the problems of application in practice of the prohibition of discrimination based on maternity, the Committee takes note of the adoption in 2017 of the Action Plan against Pregnancy Discrimination, which aims to strengthen labour inspections, increase pregnant women's knowledge and awareness of their rights, and increase the willingness to report cases of pregnancy discrimination. According to the Government, the measures taken under the Action Plan against Pregnancy Discrimination included the launch by the Netherlands Institute for Human Rights of a hotline to report cases of discrimination and conduct of the anti-discrimination campaign in the labour market. The Government further indicates that, pursuant to the 2020 report of the Netherlands Institute for Human Rights on the impact of pregnancy and parenthood on women's employment opportunities, the incidence of pregnancy discrimination is persistent. In this respect, the Committee notes the observations of the CNV and the FNV indicating that 43 per cent of pregnant women experience some form of discrimination and that women in temporary employment are particularly vulnerable to the discriminatory treatment. While acknowledging the efforts undertaken by the Government under the Action Plan against Pregnancy Discrimination of 2017, the CNV and the FNV allege the lack of sanctions imposed on employers for discrimination on the grounds of pregnancy and maternity. The Committee requests the Government to continue to take measures to ensure that maternity does not constitute a source of discrimination in employment, pursuant to Article 9 of the Convention. The Committee further requests the Government to provide information on the impact of the Action Plan against Pregnancy Discrimination of 2017 in reducing discrimination in employment on the ground of maternity. It also requests the Government to provide detailed information on the number of cases involving discrimination in employment based on maternity detected by or reported to labour inspectors or the courts, as well as the sanctions imposed on employers and remedies provided to victims.

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2023, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

Article 6 of the Convention. Legislation giving effect to the Convention. The Committee notes that the Government has never supplied any information of a practical nature concerning the application of the Convention. It would therefore be grateful if the Government would collect and transmit together with its next report up-to-date information on the average number of public contracts granted annually and the approximate number of workers engaged in their execution, extracts from inspection reports showing cases where payments have been retained, contracts have been cancelled or contractors have been excluded from public tendering for breach of the Fair Wages Rules, as well as any other particulars which would enable the Committee to have a clear understanding of the manner in which the Convention is applied in practice.

Moreover, the Committee understands that the Government has entered into a World Bank-financed technical assistance project for growth and social protection with a view to improving, among other things, the transparent operation and the efficient management of public procurement. In this connection, the Committee would appreciate receiving additional information on the implementation of this project and the results obtained, in particular as regards any amendments introduced or envisaged to public procurement laws and regulations which might affect the application of the Convention.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Article 2 of the Convention. Insertion of labour clauses in public contracts. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government regarding amendments to the Financial and Administrative Regulation (Ministerial Decision No. 162 of 2019) for the employment and protection of informal workers (contractors, agricultural, seasonal and temporary workers and similar) and Act No. 182 of 2018 on Agreements Concluded by Public Entities, which regulates the conclusion of public contracts. The Government refers in its report to sections 21, 29 and 32 of Ministerial Decision No. 162 of 2019 regulating the wages and conditions of work of informal workers, as well as to section 32 of the Labour Code, No. 12 of 2003 regarding the terms and conditions of employment contracts for all workers (wages, hours of work, etc.). The Committee nevertheless notes that none of the above-mentioned legislation contains any provisions ensuring the application of the core requirement of the Convention, namely the insertion in public contracts of labour clauses of the type prescribed by Article 2. In this regard, the Committee refers to its 2009 comments on the application of the Convention, in which it noted the concrete steps taken by the Government of Egypt to give effect to the core requirement of the Convention under General Circular No. 8 issued by the Minister of Finance (23 June 2008). That Circular added two new bidding terms to the Public Tenders Law (No. 89/1998), stipulating that: (i) workers engaged in the execution of the (public) contract must receive wages and bonuses not lower than those received by workers carrying out similar work in the same governorate; and (ii) they must enjoy the same working hours and conditions prevailing in the region, according to a general agreement or custom. Noting the Government's expressed commitment to take the necessary measures to ensure the full application of the Convention, the Committee reiterates its hope that the necessary measures will be taken by the Ministry of Manpower and Migration to ensure that the two bidding terms set out in the General Circular No. 8 of 2008 will be incorporated as standard clauses into all future public procurement contracts. The Committee requests the Government to communicate, together with its next report, copies of standard bidding documents currently in use, sample tender letters and concession agreements used in public procurement procedures, to enable the Committee to more fully appreciate and assess the manner in which the Convention is implemented in both law and practice. The Committee reminds the Government that it may avail itself of technical assistance in this regard.

Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94)

Previous comment

Article 2 of the Convention. Insertion of labour clauses in public contracts. In its previous comments, initially made in 2013, the Committee requested the Government to indicate the measures it intended to take to bring its national legislation into full conformity with the requirements of the Convention. The Government reports that the provisions of the Convention are given effect through the general terms of contracts issued by the Public Works Department, which is the main implementer of public projects in Sarawak. It adds that the contracts specify, among other things, the engagement of workers and labour, the removal of workers and other personnel, days and hours of work and insurance for workers. The Government further indicates that requirements governing the payment of wages, hours of work and other working conditions are provided under the Labour Ordinance of Sarawak (Amendment) Act 2005. The Committee notes that the Labour Ordinance does not address public contracts and that the Government does not provide specific information regarding the manner in which Article 2 of the Convention is given effect. In this respect, the Committee draws the Government's attention to paragraph 45 of the 2008 General Survey on labour clauses in public contracts, in which it pointed out that the essential purpose of the Convention is to ensure that workers employed under public contracts shall enjoy the same conditions as workers whose conditions of employment are fixed not only by national legislation but also by collective agreements or arbitration awards, and that in many cases the provisions of the national legislation respecting wages, hours of work and other conditions of employment provide merely for minimum standards which may be exceeded by collective agreements. Therefore, the Committee emphasized that the mere fact of the national legislation being applicable to all workers does not release the States which have ratified the Convention from the obligation to take the necessary steps to ensure that public contracts contain the labour clauses specified in Article 2 of the Convention. Recalling that it has been commenting for a number of years on the Government's failure to fully implement the core requirements of the Convention, the Committee reiterates its request that the Government clarify whether the public procurement legislation currently in force addresses in any manner the question of labour clauses in public contract. The Committee urges the Government to take all necessary measures without delay to bring its national legislation into full conformity with Article 2 of the Convention. It further requests the Government to keep the Office informed of progress made and recalls that the Government may avail itself of the technical assistance of the ILO in this regard, should it wish to do so.

Application of the Convention. Part V of the report form. The Committee requests the Government to provide a detailed report with full particulars on each of the provisions of the Convention, to enable the Office to assess the extent to which the provisions of the Convention are applied in law and practice, and to transmit copies of any relevant bidding documents currently in use.

Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94) (ratification: 1954)

Previous comment

Article 2 of the Convention. Inclusion of labour clauses in public contracts. For over 14 years, the Committee has been requesting the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the scope of the provisions of Decree No. 475/005 on public contracts for services is extended to cover all types of public contracts envisaged by the Convention. Equally, since 2012, the Committee has been requesting the Government to amend Act No. 18.098 to bring it into full compliance with the requirements of Article 2 of the Convention, as it only requires compliance with wage rates fixed by wage boards, and not with the more favourable conditions (including working hours, holidays, and sick leave) provided for in legislation, collective agreements, or arbitration awards, in conformity with the Convention.

The Committee notes that the Government once again refers, with reference to public works contracts, to Decree No. 257/015, approving the single document setting out the regulations and general conditions of public works contracts. Section 38, on compliance with the single document labour legislation, establishes that the contractor shall comply with the legislation and regulations on risk prevention applicable to the work undertaken. In particular, the contractor is required to: respect the wage rates fixed by the wage boards; hold valid insurance for occupational accidents and diseases for workers; and comply with the provisions of Acts Nos 18.099 of 24 January 2007 and 18.251 of 6 January 2008 on occupational liability in enterprise decentralization processes. The Committee notes that section 5 of Act No. 18.099 provides that “workers supplied by temporary employment enterprises shall receive benefits no less favourable than those fixed by wage boards, collective agreements or executive decree, according to their category and in concordance with the area of activity of the enterprise by which they are employed”. The Committee notes, however, that this provision is applicable only to workers supplied by temporary employment enterprises. The Government also indicates that the above-mentioned section is included in the standard documents produced, and placed at the disposal of institutions, by the Regulatory Agency for State Procurement (ARCE). In this connection, the Government gives the example of the Framework Agreement, Proclamation and Consulting Contract.

Regarding supply and service contracts, the Government refers to the single document setting out the regulations and general conditions of supply and non-personal service contracts (Decree No. 131/014). The Government indicates that although the said single document does not include clauses on compliance with labour, social insurance, and occupational safety obligations, it is governed by the regulations in force, in particular Acts Nos 18.099 and 18.251. In this regard, the Committee recalls that the mere application of general labour law is not sufficient to guarantee the application of the Convention. The Convention requires bidders to be informed in advance, by means of standard labour clauses included in tender documents, that, if selected, they would have to observe in the performance of the contract wages and other labour conditions not less favourable than the highest minimum standards established locally by law, arbitration or collective bargaining (A practical guide to Convention No. 94, pages 15 and 20). Lastly, the Committee notes the adoption of Act No. 19.889 of 9 July 2020, which introduces sections 329 to 339 of the Labour Code, on the establishment of the Regulatory Agency for State Procurement (ARCE). The Agency’s mandate includes: providing advice on matters related to procurement or contracts involving the expenditure of public funds; and the completion, in specific circumstances, of the administrative contracting procedures for the acquisition of goods and services, in compliance with the regulations in force. The Committee once again points out that it has been commenting for a number of years on the fact that the Government has not given effect to the Convention. In this regard, it recalls that the inclusion of the labour clauses identified in Article 2 of the Convention in all contracts concluded by the public authorities covered by the Convention, does not necessarily require the enactment of new legislation, but can also be achieved through administrative instructions or circulars. The Committee hopes that the Government will adopt without delay all the necessary measures to bring its national legislation into full conformity with the fundamental requirements of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to keep it informed of the progress achieved and again recalls that the Government may, if it so wishes, avail itself of ILO technical assistance in this respect.

The Committee notes the observations of the Confederation of Workers of Venezuela (CTV), the Federation of University Teachers' Associations of Venezuela (FAPUV), the Independent Trade Union Alliance of Workers (CTASI), as well as those of the Bolivarian Socialist Confederation of Men and Women Workers in Urban and Rural Areas and Fishing of Venezuela (CBST-CCP), received together with the Government's report. The Committee also notes the observations of the National Union of State and Public Service Workers (UNETE), received on 5 September 2022. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

Parts I and II of the Convention. Improvement of standards of living. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government on the measures adopted in respect of food security, housing and healthcare, including access to medicines. The Government recalls the creation in 2004 of the People's Ministry for Food (MINPPAL) to guarantee supply to the population and access to the food basket through the formulation, implementation, follow-up and assessment of policies for commerce, industry, merchandise and food distribution. The Government also reports that the Food Production and Distribution Company (PDVAL) has been affiliated to MINPPAL since July 2008, with a view to providing foodstuffs and basic products. Since 2016, the Local Supply and Production Committees (CLAPs) ensure the distribution and commercialization of food and products of prime necessity. The Government also refers to the holding of various fairs with the aim of ensuring that the population has access to animal and fish protein. With regard to housing, the Government again refers to the implementation since 2011 of the "Major Mission for Housing in Venezuela", which aims to construct 5 million decent dwellings. In this connection, the Government reports that production at the PetroCasa enterprise has been relaunched, with a view to ensuring the supply of materials for the construction of new housing. Moreover, the modalities for access to financial resources of that Mission have been widened, in particular through credits (the "Manage your credit" programme) and new financial instruments (the "Invest, save and build your own home" programme). The Government also refers to the "New Neighbourhood, Tricolour Neighbourhood" mission, the goal of which is to provide decent housing for families in high risk or high vulnerability areas, through the rehabilitation or replacement of housing, in collaboration with communities. The Government reports that as of June 2022, a total of 4,100,000 dwellings had been delivered under the Major Mission and, through the New Neighbourhood, Tricolour Neighbourhood programme, 1,923,458 dwellings had been rehabilitated and 1,221,145 land titles had been granted. On another matter, the Committee notes the Government's indication that access to health is ensured for the entire population via the 593 Areas of Integrated Community Health (ASIC). The Government also refers to the "Within the Neighbourhood Mission", which provides medical care to low-income neighbourhoods. The Community Pharmacies were set up in 2019, with the goal of ensuring free access to medicines to all sectors of the population, in partnership with the Social Pharmacy Network “FarmaPatria”. The Community Pharmacies guarantee access to pharmaceuticals in a timely, effective and controlled manner, especially for persons suffering from chronic diseases. The Government adds that the Mobile Community Pharmacies programme brings medicines and basic necessities to municipalities and parishes and also promotes health prevention campaigns. In this connection, the Committee notes that the CBST-CCP, in its observations, indicates that COVID-19 vaccines have been administered to 95 per cent of the population of the country. Finally, the Government indicates that between 2018 and 2022 a total of 4,039 retirements and 1,629 pensions were granted. The Committee also notes the information provided by the CBST-CCP in respect of the clauses on paid social benefits included in collective agreements signed in the university, educational and petrol sectors by affiliated trade unions and federations.

Nevertheless, the Committee once again expresses deep concern regarding the worsening living conditions of the Venezuelan population, which the CTV, the FAPUV, the CTASI and the UNETE denounce in their observations. The workers’ organizations particularly criticize the social food programmes implemented by the Government for serious defects in terms of their planning, management and assessment. The CTV, the FAPUV and the CTASI indicate that the distribution of foodstuffs, carried out through the CLAPs, is not universal in coverage and they maintain that the quantities have been reduced so that they currently supply only 17 per cent of the nutritional requirements of the population. Equally, the UNETE denounces acts of corruption in the distribution of food. The CTV, the FAPUV, the CTASI and the UNETE stress that, as a result of the expropriation of the agri-food enterprises by the Government (these enterprises represented 80 per cent of national food production), they have been abandoned or have become non-operational. This has resulted in thousands of workers losing their jobs and has increased the food sector’s dependence on imports, which amount to 82 per cent of food in the country. In the same manner, the CTV, the FAPUV and the CTASI indicate that, according to a February 2020 report on food security by the World Food Programme (WFP), one in three Venezuelans is in a situation of food insecurity and needs humanitarian aid. According to the same report, approximately nine million Venezuelans have insufficient income to purchase the basic basket of goods. They add that, as a result of this, and due to the deficiencies of the CLAP food distribution, 60 per cent of the population have had to reduce the quantity of their meals, 24 per cent are in a situation of moderate food insecurity and 7.9 per cent are in a situation of serious food insecurity. The CTV, the FAPUV and the CTASI affirm that the situation of children is even more alarming, stating that, according to certain figures provided by Caritas in October 2020, a total of 73 per cent of children under five years of age were suffering from malnutrition.

Regarding access to health, the CTV, the FAPUV and the CTASI indicate that, according to the 2021 Global Health Security Index, Venezuela occupies the worst position in Latin America for health capacity and is ranked among the ten worst countries in the world. The CTV, the FAPUV, the CTASI and the UNETE all denounce the scarcity and high cost of medicines and the precarious conditions of work of health workers, especially in respect of safety and health, which were clearly shown and greatly worsened during the COVID-19 pandemic. The UNETE further denounces cases of persecutions, disappearances and assassinations of health workers.

The Committee also notes that the CTV, the FAPUV and the CTASI indicate that, as of 24 August 2021, the minimum wage was situated between US$0.5 and 0.6 per day, far below the minimum income considered as extreme poverty (US$1.90 per day). The worker organizations stress, referring to data from the National Survey of Living Conditions (ENCOVI) as a basis, that extreme poverty in Venezuela increased from 67.7 per cent to 76.6 per cent between 2019 and 2021. They point out that the situation was worsened by the COVID-19 pandemic. Furthermore, the UNETE denounces the wage cuts and less favourable work and contractual benefits for workers in the public administration. The CTV, the FAPUV and the CTASI also point to difficulties faced by regime opponents in gaining access to employment, as well as dismissals and other anti-trade union practices, including criminal prosecutions against trade union leaders in the public sector.

Finally, the Committee notes that the CTV, the FAPUV, the CTASI and the UNETE stress that the political, economic and social condition of the country has led to the exile of more than 6 million citizens, fleeing extreme poverty. They underline that this is the greatest human exodus in Latin America and the second greatest in the world. In this regard, the CTV, the FAPUV and the CTASI indicate that the International Organisation for Migration (IOM) and the United Nations Agency for Refugees (UNHCR) estimated that, as of June 2020, there were 5,082,170 Venezuelan migrants, refugees and asylum seekers. The UNETE denounces the disintegration of many families as a consequence of this situation. The Committee refers to its comments regarding the application of the Employment Policy Convention, 1964 (No. 122), the Paid Educational Leave Convention, 1974 (No. 140), and the Human Resources Development Convention, 1975 (No. 142), in respect of the present Convention, and urges the Government to provide detailed and updated information in its next report on the application of the provisions of the Convention in practice, in particular with regard to the impact of the measures taken to improve the quality of life of the whole population. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate the manner in which such measures are guaranteed to take account of essential family needs, such as food and its nutritional value, housing, clothing and medical care, and access to medicines and education.

Part III. Migrant workers. The Committee notes that, in its concluding observations of 4 October 2022, the Committee on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families (CMW) expressed concern regarding the situation of indigenous peoples living in border districts between Venezuela, Colombia and Brazil, who regularly cross the border for work. The CMW indicated in its observations that such indigenous migrant workers were especially vulnerable and in danger of abuse, forced labour, trafficking in persons and debt slavery. Indigenous migrant workers in the mining and agricultural sectors were particularly at risk. The CMW expressed special concern at the situation of the indigenous Yukpas, Wayuu, Warao, Pemones, Bari and Yanomami peoples (CMW/C/VEN/CO/1, paragraph 48). The Committee urges the Government to send detailed and updated information without delay on the measures adopted or envisaged with a view to guaranteeing the conditions of work of migrant workers obliged to live away from their homes, taking account of their normal family needs (Article 6). In particular, the Committee urgently requests the Government to provide information on the impact of these measures in respect of migrant workers coming from the Yukpas, Wayuu, Warao, Pemones, Bari and Yanomami indigenous peoples.

Part IV. Remuneration of workers. Advances on wages. For 13 years, the Committee has been asking the Government to provide specific examples of court or administrative decisions that address the maximum amount and manner of repayment of advances on wages. The Committee observes that once again the Government has not provided the requested examples and restricts itself to referring once more to section 91 of the Constitution of the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela and to section 103 of the Basic Act concerning labour and men and women workers (LOTTT) which establishes that wages cannot be seized. The Government also reiterates that, under section 154 of the LOTTT, "... the debts that men and women workers agree with their employer shall only be repayable, on a weekly or monthly basis, in amounts that may not exceed one third of the equivalent of a week or month of work, as appropriate". The Government also reiterates that debts are repaid, but not advances on social benefits granted to cover the basic needs of housing, education and health, which can reach up to 75 per cent of their salaries. The Committee therefore expects that, in its next report, the Government will provide specific examples of court or administrative decisions that address the maximum amount and manner of repayment of advances on wages.

Labour Clauses (Public Contracts) Convention, 1949 (No. 94) (ratification: 1969)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Article 2 of the Convention. Insertion of labour clauses in public contracts. The Government reports that a draft Labour Code has been prepared in coordination with the ILO, and that it is in compliance with international labour standards. The Government adds that issues raised in the Committee's previous comments with regard to the insertion of labour clauses in public contracts as prescribed by Article 2 of the Convention will be brought to the attention of the Supreme Commission on Auctions and Bids. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it requires the technical assistance of the ILO in relation to the measures to be taken to ensure that all public contracts contain labour clauses that comply with the provisions of the Convention. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that all public contracts contain labour clauses and hopes that the Government will be soon in a position to report progress in giving full effect to this core requirement of the Convention. The Committee encourages the Government to avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office in this regard.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Previous comment

Article 14(a) of the Convention. Restrictions concerning employment and geographical mobility within the country. The Committee notes that the Government states, once again, that although Decree No. 77-45 of 4 March 1977, regulating the movement of foreign nationals, subjects foreign workers to special authorization to leave their town of residence in Benin, the Decree is in fact no longer applied and that in practice foreign nationals can move freely throughout the national territory. The Committee again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to formally repeal the restriction on the movement of migrant workers provided under Decree No. 77-45 of 4 March 1977, and also to indicate the obstacles to the repeal of the said Decree.

Albania

The Committee notes with deep regret that the Government has failed to submit its first report on the application of the Convention for the fourth consecutive year even if it has benefited from the technical assistance provided by the Office for the elaboration of a gap analysis and through participation in courses on reporting provided by the ILO Training Centre. As the requested report was not received, the Committee examined the application of the Convention on the basis of publicly available information.

Article I of the Convention. General questions on application. Implementing measures. The Committee notes that, while ratification of the Convention gives the force of law to its terms in Albania, relevant regulations still need to be adopted to implement the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to adopt without further delay the necessary measures to give effect to the provisions of the Convention and to provide information on any developments in this regard. It further requests the Government to supply copies in English of the relevant legislation, or a summary of the relevant provisions thereof, as well as full information on the implementation of the Convention, including updated statistics on the number of seafarers who are nationals or residents of Albania or who work on board ships flying the Albanian flag.

The Committee notes with concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee notes with deep regret that the Government has failed to submit its first report on the application of the Convention for the fourth consecutive year. As the requested report was not received, the Committee examined the application of the Convention on the basis of publicly available information.

Article I. General questions on application. Implementing measures. The Committee notes that the provisions of the Convention are mainly implemented by Act No. 30-63 of 4 July 1963 issuing the Merchant Shipping Code, amended by Act No. 63-65 of 30 December 1965; by orders and decrees of the Ministry of Transport, Civil Aviation and Merchant Shipping; and by Regulation No. 08/12-UEAC-088-CM-23 of the Central African Economic and Monetary Community (CEMAC) adopting the Community Merchant Shipping Code of 22 July 2012 (CCMM), which is directly applicable in the Congo and is one of the documents that must be carried on board ships flying the Congolese flag and foreign ships operating in Congolese territorial waters. The Committee also notes that the Labour Code does not exclude seafarers from its scope of application. Having reviewed the available information, the Committee notes the inconsistency between certain national provisions and between these and the CCMM, as well as the absence of available information on the implementation of several provisions of the Convention. The Committee underscores the need to avoid any inconsistency in the applicable provisions. It recalls that, in accordance with Article I of the Convention, each Member which ratifies the Convention undertakes to give full effect to its provisions in order to secure the right of all seafarers to decent employment. The Committee therefore requests the Government to adopt without delay the necessary measures to implement the Convention, taking into account the matters raised in the request addressed directly to the Government. Dominica

Merchant Shipping (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 147) (ratification: 2004)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2023, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

Article 2 of the Convention. Implementing legislation. The Committee notes the Government's indication that a special Tripartite Committee has been appointed to advise the Government on all matters relating to legislation and institutional changes necessary for the ratification of the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006 (MLC, 2006). It also notes that a National Action Plan has been prepared in order to formulate recommendations to the Government on matters of maritime laws and administration. While welcoming the Government's active steps towards the ratification of the MLC, 2006, the Committee is bound to observe that the Government's first report on the application of Convention No. 147 does not contain any information on the laws or regulations and other measures giving effect to the specific requirements of the latter Convention. The Committee therefore requests the Government to indicate in detail how each of the Articles of the Convention is applied in national law and practice, and explain in particular in what manner the provisions of the International Maritime Act, 2002, and of the Dominica Maritime Regulations, 2002, are substantially equivalent to the Conventions mentioned in the Appendix of the Convention relating to safety standards, social security measures and shipboard conditions of employment and shipboard living arrangements, as required under Article 2 of the Convention.

As the requested report has not been received, the Committee examined the application of the Convention on the basis of publicly available information.

Article I. General questions on application. Implementing measures. The Committee notes that the provisions of the Convention are mainly implemented through Regulation No. 08/12-UEAC-088-CM-23 of the Central African Economic and Monetary Community (CEMAC) issuing the Community Merchant Shipping Code of 22 July 2012 (hereinafter, CCMM), which is directly applicable to Gabon and is one of the documents that must be carried on board ships flying the Gabonese flag and foreign ships operating in Gabonese territorial waters. The Committee also notes that section 1 of the Labour Code does not exclude seafarers from its scope of application. The Committee notes the lack of available information on the implementation of several provisions of the Convention. It recalls that, in conformity with Article I of the Convention, each Member which ratifies it undertakes to give complete effect to its provisions in order to secure the right of all seafarers to decent employment. The Committee therefore requests the Government to adopt without delay the necessary measures to implement the Convention, taking into account the matters raised in the request addressed directly to the Government. Seafarers' Identity Documents Convention, 1958 (No. 108) (ratification: 1969)

Previous comment

Article 2 of the Convention. Seafarers' identity documents. In its previous observation, noting the Government's statement that the basic requirements of the Convention were still not implemented in law or practice, the Committee urged the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure compliance with the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that the process for the issuance of seafarers' identity documents (SIDs) resumed in 2016. The Ministry of Blue Economy, Marine Resources, Fisheries and Shipping is currently working on the review of the "Continuous Discharge Book" and is exploring the possibility of incorporating the features laid down in the Convention in the new format of the "Continuous Discharge Book". The Committee recalls that it has been expressing concerns for a number of years regarding the discontinuation of the issuance of SIDs, which is a serious failure on the part of the Government in implementing the Convention. The Committee therefore urges once again the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that its obligations under the Convention are fully respected and to provide a specimen (not a copy) of the seafarers' identity document once it has been issued.

Work in Fishing Convention, 2007 (No. 188) (ratification: 2014)

The Committee notes with deep regret that the Government has failed to submit its first report on the application of the Convention for the fifth consecutive year. As the requested report was not received, the Committee examined the application of the Convention on the basis of publicly available information.

General questions on application. Implementing measures. The Committee notes that the issues covered by the Convention are mainly addressed by Act No. 30-63 of 4 July 1963 issuing the Merchant Shipping Code, amended by Act No. 63-65 of 30 December 1965, and by orders and decrees of the Ministry of Transport, Civil Aviation and Merchant Shipping. It observes that the Merchant Shipping Code has not been revised in order to take into account the requirements of the Convention. The Committee also notes that the Labour Code does not exclude fishers from its scope of application, and that Regulation No. 08/12 UEAC-088-CM-23 of the Central African Economic and Monetary Community (CEMAC) adopting the Community Merchant Shipping Code of 22 July 2012 (CCMM), which is directly applicable in the Congo, also applies to fishing navigation. Having reviewed the available information, the Committee notes certain contradictions between national provisions and between these and the CCMM, as well as the absence of available information on the implementation of numerous provisions of the Convention. Noting that the Constitution of the Congo enshrines the supremacy of ratified international Conventions over national legislation, the Committee underscores, however, the need to avoid any contradiction in the applicable provisions, and recalls that the Convention includes requirements for which Member States have to take the necessary measures to ensure the conformity of national law and practice. The Committee therefore requests the Government to adopt without delay the necessary measures to implement the Convention, taking into account the matters raised in the request addressed directly to the Government. The Committee also requests the Government to provide detailed information on consultations held with the representative organizations of fishing vessel owners and fishers concerned, as prescribed by the Convention. It further requests the Government to provide a copy of any legislative texts or other regulatory instruments once adopted, as well as full information on the implementation of the Convention, including updated statistics on the number of fishers who are nationals or residents of the Congo or who work on fishing vessels that fly the Congolese flag. The Committee reminds the Government of the possibility to avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office in this regard.

Medical Examination (Fishermen) Convention, 1959 (No. 113) (ratification: 1960)

Fishermen's Articles of Agreement Convention, 1959 (No. 114) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes that the Government's reports have not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee notes the Government's reports on the application of Conventions Nos 112, 113, and 114 on the fishing sector. In order to provide a comprehensive view of the issues relating to the application of the ratified Conventions on fishing, the Committee considers it appropriate to examine them together.

The Committee requested the Government to clarify whether the Liberian Maritime Law, RLM 107 and the Liberian Maritime Regulations, RLM-108 were applicable to fishers. The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not provided the clarification requested in this regard. Therefore, recalling that for numerous years the Government has been requested to provide information on the applicability of existing legislation to fishers, the Committee once again requests the Government to indicate the measures adopted to give full effect to the provisions of the Conventions, taking into account the points raised in previous observations.

Impact of the COVID-19 pandemic. The Committee notes with deep concern the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic on the protection of fishers' rights as laid out in the Conventions. In this regard, the Committee refers to the resolution adopted by the Governing Body in its 340th Session (GB.340/Resolution) concerning maritime labour issues and COVID-19 disease, which calls on Member States to take measures to address the adverse impacts of the pandemic on fishers' rights, and requests the Government to provide information in its next report on any temporary measures adopted in this regard, their duration and their impact on fishers' rights.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Fishermen's Articles of Agreement Convention, 1959 (No. 114) (ratification: 1963)

Previous comment on Convention No. 112

Previous comment on Convention No. 114

In order to give an overview of the issues relating to the application of the Conventions on fishing, the Committee deems it appropriate to examine them in a single comment, as set out below.

Minimum Age (Fishermen) Convention, 1959 (No. 112)

Article 2 of the Convention. Minimum age for admission to work on fishing vessels. The Committee noted that section 413(1) of Act No. 2013-029, issuing the Merchant Shipping Code, prohibits the employment, engagement or work on board a vessel of any person under the age of 16 years. Section 413(2) provides that the maritime authority may authorize persons aged 15 years to work on fishing vessels when they are engaged in vocational training in fishing or performing light work. Section 413(4) provides that the maritime authority may authorize exceptions to section 413(2), without specifying the minimum permissible age for this exception, where the effective training of fishers in the context of established programmes and schedules would be impaired. The Committee had recalled that Article 2(3) of the Convention authorizes exceptions to the minimum age of 15 years, while setting a permissible limit at 14 years for children employed on board fishing vessels and requested the Government to provide clarifications on the minimum age authorized by section 413(4) of the Merchant Shipping Code. The Committee notes the Government's reiteration in its report that, while the exception established to the above section does not specify the minimum age authorized, this age is in fact set at 14 years. It adds that this issue will be taken into account in the implementing regulations. Noting that the legislation currently in force does not set an age limit of 14 years for authorized exceptions, the Committee asks the Government to take the necessary measures without further delay to bring its legislation into full conformity with Article 2 of the Convention.

Fishermen's Articles of Agreement Convention, 1959 (No. 114)

Article 6(3). Particulars to be contained in the agreement. In its previous comment, the Committee requested the Government to indicate the measures adopted to give full effect to Article 6 of the Convention, namely regarding the inclusion of the following particulars in the fisher's articles of agreement: (a) the surname and other names of the fisher, the date of his birth or his age, and his birthplace; (b) the place at which and date on which the agreement was completed; (c) the name of the fishing vessel or vessels on board which the fisher undertakes to serve; (d) the voyage or voyages to be undertaken, if this can be determined at the time of making the agreement; and (e) the amount of his wages, or the amount of his share and the method of calculating such share. The Committee notes that the new Merchant Marine Code does not set out a list of particulars to be contained in the agreement. In its response, the Government indicates that there have been no changes to the legislation since the adoption of Act No. 2013-029 of 15 October 2013 issuing the Merchant Marine Code. The Committee requests the Government to take, without further delay, the necessary measures to bring its legislation fully into conformity with this provision of the Convention.

Trinidad and Tobago

Fishermen's Competency Certificates Convention, 1966 (No. 125) (ratification: 1972)

Previous comment

Implementing legislation on fishers' competency certificates. Noting the absence of laws and regulations giving effect to the requirements of the Convention, the Committee urged the Government to adopt the necessary measures without delay to regulate fishers' competency certificates. The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that it seeks to address such issues in the new draft Shipping Bill, which was completed in 2020 and which is presently before a Joint Select Committee of Parliament. The Bill specifically provides at Clause 135 (as presently numbered) for the issuance of Certificates of Competency to all seafarers on all Trinidad and Tobago ships, inclusive of fishing vessels. The Clause further provides for the manner of application, the evidence of experience and training requirements needed for applicants, and the conditions and endorsements issuable by the Maritime Administration upon issue. The Government adds that with the passage of the Bill, this enabling clause shall form the basis upon which regulations implementing the provisions of the Convention can be drafted and formally promulgated. Finally, the Government indicates that upon recent examination of the Bill, it was noted that while provision is made generally for a "master", that is "a person in command or charge of a ship", there is no specific reference to a "skipper", being the term used in the Convention as "a person in charge of a fishing vessel". In this regard, a recommendation shall be made to the Joint Select Committee of Parliament that the definition of "master" be expanded to include the skipper of a fishing vessel. The Committee notes this information and expects that all necessary measures will be adopted without any further delay to give full effect to the provisions of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the relevant provisions once adopted.

Article 2 of the Convention. Coordinated and systematic action. Implementation of the Chittagong Hill Tracts Peace Accord, 1997. The Committee previously noted the Government's commitment to fully implement the 1997 Chittagong Hill Tracts Peace Accord. It notes that the Government indicates in its report that a total of 48 out of the 72 clauses of the Peace Accord have been implemented, while 15 have been partially implemented and nine are still being implemented. In this respect, the Government points out that there are still some critical issues, such as the settlement of land disputes, the holding of elections of the Hill District Councils and the Chittagong Hill Tracts Regional Council, and the harmonization of the Chittagong Hill Tracts Regulation, 1900 and related laws with the 1989 Hill District Council Acts. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that, pursuant to section D paragraph 8 of the Peace Accord, the cancellations of land allocation for rubber and other plantations to non-tribal and non-local persons have been implemented, and the lease of conditional allotments for rubber plantations has been cancelled for those who violated the conditions. The Committee requests the Government to continue taking the necessary measures to fully implement the 1997 Chittagong Hill Tracts Peace Accord and to continue to provide information in this respect, including on the sections of the agreement pending implementation and the difficulties encountered in this respect.

Article 3. Protection of indigenous persons. The Committee notes that in its 2019 concluding observations, the United Nations Committee against Torture (CAT) expressed its concern at reports of intimidation, harassment, and physical violence, including sexual violence, committed against members of indigenous communities, including by or with the cooperation of State officials. The CAT also noted the reported rape and sexual assault of two teenage women by members of the army in the Chittagong Hill Tracts, and the disappearance of an indigenous rights activist in that region (CAT/C/BGD/CO/1, paragraph 23). The Committee further notes that in her statement of 17 August 2022 on her official visit to Bangladesh, the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights referred to continued allegations of human rights violations in the Chittagong Hill Tracts linked with land disputes and the need for demilitarization.

The Committee notes this information with deep concern and recalls the importance of ensuring an environment conducive to the full exercise of the rights of indigenous and tribal populations. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to protect the physical integrity of persons belonging to indigenous communities, including of those living in the Chittagong Hill Tracts, and to address the root causes of violence in the areas they inhabit. It also requests the Government to conduct, as a matter of urgency, thorough investigations of reported cases of intimidation, violence, including sexual violence, and disappearance of persons belonging to indigenous communities and to ensure that perpetrators are identified, prosecuted and punished. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information in this respect.

Articles 11 to 14. Land rights. The Committee previously noted that, pursuant to the Chittagong Hill Tracts Peace Accord, amendments to the 2001 Chittagong Hill Tracts Land Dispute Resolution Commission Act were under consideration. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Chittagong Hill Tracts Land Dispute Resolution Commission (Amendment) Act was enacted by the Parliament in 2016 to ensure and protect the land rights of indigenous groups, including of the permanent residents of the Chittagong Hill Tracts region. It notes that, according to the Government's Eighth Five Year Plan July 2020–June 2025, an appropriate land policy will be formulated to deal with land disputes involving ethnic groups and that measures will be taken to establish a separate land commission for ethnic minorities in the plains.

The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the effective recognition and protection of the rights of indigenous communities over the land they have traditionally occupied, both in the Chittagong Hill Tracts and the plains. Recalling that the Chittagong Hill Tracts Land Dispute Resolution Commission was established in 2001 for the speedy settlement of land related disputes in the Chittagong Hill Tracts region and the formulation of rules to that effect, the Committee requests the Government to ensure that the Commission has the necessary resources and capacities to fulfil its mandate. The Committee hopes that the amendments to the Chittagong Hill Tracts Land Dispute Resolution Commission Act will contribute to the resolution of existing land-related conflicts in the Chittagong Hill Tracts and requests the Government to provide concrete information in this regard. Finally, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress made towards the adoption of a land policy and the establishment of a land commission for indigenous communities in the plains, as envisaged by the Eighth Five Year Plan.

Prospects for the ratification of the Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention, 1989 (No.169). The Committee notes that the Eighth Five-year Plan July 2020–June 2025 contemplates as an area of future action the ratification of the Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention, 1989 (No. 169). The Committee recalls in this regard that, at its 328th Session in November 2016, the Governing Body requested the Office to commence follow-up with the Member States bound by Convention No. 107, encouraging them to ratify Convention No. 169, as the most up-to-date instrument in this subject area. In this regard, the Committee observes that, in the context of the implementation of the ILO Strategy for indigenous peoples' rights for inclusive and sustainable development, the Office can provide the appropriate support to countries that so wish, including by conducting preliminary assessments and building capacities to establish a legal, strategic and institutional framework to facilitate the implementation of Convention No. 169. Therefore, the Committee encourages the Government to continue considering the possibility of ratifying of the Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention, 1989 (No. 169), which is the most up-to-date instrument in this subject area. In this respect, it reminds the Government of the possibility of availing itself of ILO technical assistance.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Brazil

Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention, 1989 (No. 169) (ratification: 2002)

The Committee notes the observations of the Single Confederation of Workers (CUT), received on 2 September 2022, which contain new information concerning issues already raised by the Committee in its previous comments. The Committee requests the Government to provide its response to these observations. Furthermore, the Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), received on 2 September 2019, which contain general comments on the application of the Convention; the joint observations of the IOE and the National Confederation of Industry (CNI), received on 31 August 2018; the observations of the National Confederation for Typical State Careers (CONACATE), which include general comments on the application of the Convention received on 28 August 2017, and the observations of the General Confederation of Workers of Peru (CGTP), received on 23 March 2017, which include a report by COICA (a Peruvian indigenous peoples' organization) on the application of the Convention in various countries.

Representation made under article 24 of the ILO Constitution. Right of Quilombola communities to the lands they traditionally occupy. Alcântara space launch centre. For many years, the Committee has been examining the question of the impact of the establishment of the Alcântara space centre (CEA) and the Alcântara launch centre (CLA) on the rights of the Quilombola communities of Alcântara. The Committee notes that the Governing Body at its 337th Session (October–November 2019) decided that the representation made under article 24 of the ILO Constitution by the Union of Rural Workers of Alcântara (STTR) and the Union of Family Agriculture Workers of Alcântara (SINTRAF), alleging non-observance by Brazil of the Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention, 1989 (No. 169), was receivable. The Committee observes that the allegations in the representation refer to the consequences of the extension of the area covered by the Alcântara space launch centre on the rights of the Quilombola communities and the lands traditionally occupied by them. In accordance with its usual practice, the Committee has decided to defer the examination of this issue until the Governing Body adopts its report on the representation.

Article 3 of the Convention. Human rights. The Committee observes that certain United Nations bodies and the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) have expressed concern in recent years at the situation of conflict surrounding territorial claims and at threats and attacks on the rights and integrity of the indigenous peoples of Brazil. The Committee notes the press release of 8 June 2017 of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (title: “Indigenous and environmental rights under attack in Brazil, UN and Inter-American experts warn”) in which three UN Special Rapporteurs and a IACHR Rapporteur stated: “In the last 15 years, Brazil has seen the highest number of killings of environmental and land defenders of any country. [...] Indigenous peoples are especially at risk”. The Committee notes that the IACHR, in its preliminary observations of 12 November 2018 concerning its visit to Brazil, emphasized that harassment, threats and murders characterized land disputes and forced displacements. The IACHR noted with concern that the impunity surrounding these acts of rural violence was contributing towards their perpetuation and increase. Furthermore, at the time of its travel to Mato Grosso state, the IACHR observed the grave humanitarian situation faced by the Guarani and Kaiowá peoples, largely due to violations of their land rights. The IACHR visited the Dorados-Amambaieguá indigenous lands, and received information on the victims of the “Caaraó massacre”, during which one person was killed and another six members of the community were injured, as well as reports of frequent armed attacks by militias. The Committee also notes that the IACHR granted precautionary measures on 29 September 2019 in favour of members of the Guayraroká community of the Guarani Kaiowá indigenous people, since they had prima facie evidence that families of the community are in a serious and urgent situation because their rights to life and physical integrity are at serious risk. The IACHR takes into consideration reports concerning the high level of conflict between members of the community and landowners and concerning death threats (Resolution 47/19, Precautionary Measure (PM) 458/19). The Committee notes this information with concern. The Committee urges the Government to take all the necessary measures to protect the life, physical and psychological integrity, and all the rights guaranteed by the Convention to indigenous and tribal peoples. The Committee considers that indigenous and tribal peoples can only assert their rights, particularly with regard to possession and ownership of the lands they traditionally occupy, if adequate measures are adopted to guarantee a climate free of violence, pressure, fear and threats of any kind.

Articles 6, 7, 15 and 16. Consultations. In its previous comments, the Committee referred to the process for regulation of the indigenous and Quilombola peoples’ right to consultation which had been under way since 2012. In this regard, the Government indicated that the process of negotiation with the peoples concerned had encountered certain difficulties and that the Secretariat-General of the Government was endeavouring to restore the dialogue. The Government was considering the possibility of proposing a potential consultation mechanism on the basis of a practical case. The Committee also noted that the CNI and the IOE had emphasized that the absence of regulation on the consultations required by the Convention was generating legal uncertainty for enterprises. In its report, the Government indicates that in recent years a number of indigenous peoples have taken initiatives in this area, indicating to the State the manner in which they wish to be consulted. In this context, they have drawn up their own protocols for prior consultation in which they formalize the diversity of procedures for building dialogue enabling effective participation in decision-making processes that can affect their lives, their rights or their lands. The Government refers in particular to the support given by the National Foundation for Indigenous Affairs (FUNAI) for drafting protocols for consultations involving the Xingu indigenous peoples in 2016, the Krenak indigenous people in 2018 and the Tupiniqum people in 2018, and to discussions under way in the Roraima Indigenous Council (CIR). In this regard, the Committee observes that, according to information on the website of the Public Prosecutor’s Office, other communities have adopted protocols of this type. Moreover, regarding policies, programmes, actions and projects relating to social assistance for indigenous peoples, the Government indicates that FUNAI is intensifying efforts to sign agreements with provider institutions in order to ensure respect for the particular social and cultural characteristics of these peoples and to respect their right to free and informed prior consultation where appropriate. The Government also points out that there is growing demand for infrastructure from indigenous communities (for electric power, water storage and distribution or road construction). In this regard, FUNAI ensures that all actions, activities or projects respect the right to free and informed prior consultation, so that relations between the Brazilian State and the indigenous communities are not vertical. The Government indicates that FUNAI, through its decentralized units, supplies technical, logistical and at times financial support to partner bodies and municipalities under whose jurisdiction indigenous lands are located in order to organize the necessary meetings. The Committee welcomes the drawing up of consultation protocols by certain communities and the role played by FUNAI in this respect. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information on the status of these protocols and to indicate how it is ensured in practice that the protocols are applied in a systematic and coordinated manner through the country whenever consideration is being given to legislative or administrative measures which may affect indigenous peoples directly. The Committee also encourages the Government to continue its efforts with a view to the adoption of a regulatory framework on consultations which will enable the indigenous and Quilombola peoples to have a suitable mechanism guaranteeing them the right to be consulted and to participate effectively whenever consideration is being given to legislative or administrative measures which may affect indigenous peoples directly, and which will be conducive to greater legal certainty for all stakeholders. The Committee recalls the need to consult the indigenous and Quilombola peoples as part of this process and to enable them to participate fully through their representative institutions so as to be able to express their views and influence the final outcome of the process. It requests the Government to provide information on the consultation processes undertaken, including on the basis of the consultation protocols developed by the various indigenous communities and the results thereof.

Article 14. Lands. The Committee recalls that the two bodies responsible for the identification and demarcation of lands and the issuing of land titles are FUNAI (for lands traditionally occupied by indigenous peoples) and the National Institute for Settlement and Agrarian Reform (INCRA) (for lands traditionally occupied by the Quilombola peoples). The procedures are regulated by Decree No. 1775/96 and Decree No. 4887/03, respectively. The Government describes the various stages of the procedure, including: the request to open an administrative procedure for regularization; the preparation of a zone study (containing anthropological, historical, cartographic, land ownership and environmental elements); the declaration of limits; the opposition phase; the physical demarcation; the publication of the recognition order establishing the limits of the territory; and the registration and concession of the titles of collective ownership to the community by decree. The Committee notes the statistical information sent by the Government on land demarcation procedures in the states of Mato Grosso and Rio Grande do Sul. It observes that in Rio Grande do Sul, of a total of 48 procedures, 20 have resulted in regularization and 28 are in progress (at the study, declaration or demarcation stage). Regarding Mato Grosso, of a total of 50 procedures, 24 have resulted in regularization and 26 are in progress. The Committee also notes that, according to information on the FUNAI website, 440 lands have been regularized in the country as a whole. Moreover, 43 lands have had their limits identified, 75 lands have had their limits declared and nine lands have had their limits certified. Lastly, for 116 lands, the procedure is at the study stage. The Committee notes that CONACATE refers in its observations to Constitutional Amendment Proposal No. 215/2000, under examination by the National Congress, the aim of which is to confer exclusive authority on the National Congress to approve the demarcation of lands traditionally occupied by indigenous peoples and also to ratify demarcations which have already been certified. CONACATE indicates that the final decision on any new demarcation of these lands would no longer be under the authority of the competent ministry but under the authority of the National Congress, where agri-industry is heavily represented. The Committee also observes that, according to the information available on the website of the Federal Supreme Court (STF), in September 2019 FUNAI filed an extraordinary appeal (1.017.365/SC) with the Supreme Court on the issue of the “time frame”. The “time frame” approach followed by certain jurisdictions means that only lands actually occupied on 5 October 1988, the date of promulgation of the Constitution, should be recognized as lands traditionally occupied by indigenous peoples. Since the STF recognized the general scope of the constitutional issue under examination, its final decision will have binding force in all instances of the judiciary. Moreover, the Committee notes that, according to information on the Congress website, two interim measures were adopted in 2019 aimed at transferring the authority to identify, delimit, demarcate and register indigenous lands from FUNAI to the Ministry of Agriculture, Livestock and Supplies (MPO 870/2019 and MP 886/2019). The first measure was rejected by the National Congress and the second measure was deemed unconstitutional by the Supreme Court. The Committee observes that the IACHR, in its preliminary observations of 12 November 2018 relating to its visit to Brazil, stated that it had received various testimonies concerning the difficulties and long delays which indigenous communities face regarding access to land ownership. The result of these difficulties was that public lands intended for these communities were occupied by landowners or private mining enterprises, and this gave rise to conflicts involving expulsions, displacements, invasions and other forms of violence. The IACHR also expressed concern at the weakening in recent years of institutions such as FUNAI. The Committee recalls that Article 14 of the Convention provides that the rights of ownership and possession of the peoples concerned over the lands which they traditionally occupy shall be recognized. In addition, measures shall be taken in appropriate cases to safeguard the right of the peoples concerned to use lands not exclusively occupied by them, but to which they have traditionally had access for their subsistence and traditional activities. In this regard, the Committee emphasized in its General observation of 2018 that recognition of traditional occupation as the source of ownership and possession rights is the cornerstone on which the land rights system established by the Convention is based. The Committee trusts that the Government will continue taking all necessary measures to ensure the full application of the Convention with regard to the ownership and possession rights of indigenous and tribal peoples over all the lands which they traditionally occupy. It requests the Government to take the necessary measures to follow up in the very near future on the procedures pending before FUNAI concerning the delimitation, demarcation and registration of indigenous lands and before INCRA concerning lands traditionally occupied by Quilombola communities. The Committee in particular requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken regarding the situation of the Guarani and Kaiowá peoples. The Committee further requests the Government to provide information on the human and material resources allocated to both FUNAI and INCRA to fulfil their mandate at every stage of the procedure – studies, delimitation, demarcation and registration of lands.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Paraguay

Indigenous and Tribal Peoples Convention, 1989 (No. 169) (ratification: 1993)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Central Confederation of Workers–Authentic (CUT-A), received on 30 August 2021.

Articles 2 and 33 of the Convention. Coordinated and systematic action. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's reference in its report to the adoption of the National Plan for Indigenous Peoples 2020–30 (PNPI) by Decree No. 5897 of 25 August 2021. The Committee welcomes the fact that the formulation of the Plan was the result of a participatory process to which over a thousand men and women leaders and focal points from indigenous organizations contributed via 18 regional workshops in all departments of the country. The PNPI comprises four strategic components aimed at: (i) strengthening forms of indigenous identity and world views; (ii) guaranteeing rights; (iii) ensuring access to economic, social, cultural and environmental rights; and (iv) catering for groups requiring special attention. The Committee duly notes, with regard to the participation of indigenous peoples, that the PNPI envisages: strengthening the Paraguayan Indigenous Institute (INDI); institutionalizing and coordinating mechanisms for the effective participation of indigenous peoples, agreed upon with them, at the levels of national and local government; and establishing an entity for the participation of indigenous peoples at the political level of decision-making with regard to implementation of the Plan. Moreover, a body will be created to ensure inter-institutional coordination at the highest political level, headed by the INDI, in which budgets and priorities will be agreed upon for the progressive implementation of the plan. The PNPI also envisages the setting up of a system to monitor and evaluate its implementation with a matrix of indicators and stakeholder institutions, including a community monitoring body. The Committee trusts that the adoption of the National Plan for Indigenous Peoples 2020–30 (PNPI) will make it possible to strengthen coordinated and systematic action to implement fully the rights enshrined in the Convention, and requests the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure the effective implementation of the Plan in all its strategic areas, ensuring the due budget assignment for that purpose. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the establishment and functioning of the entities for the participation of indigenous peoples envisaged by the Plan and on the results of the evaluation of the implementation of the Plan.

Articles 6 and 15 of the Convention. Consultation. The Committee notes with interest the adoption of the Protocol governing the process of prior informed consent and consultation with the indigenous peoples of Paraguay (Decree No. 1039 of 28 December 2018). The Protocol provides that the coordination of consultation processes will come under the responsibility of the INDI. It stipulates that the indigenous peoples and the proponents of the project for consultation must reach an agreement on reasonable periods and deadlines for the different stages of the consultation process, ensuring that the indigenous peoples have sufficient time to understand the information received and acquire any additional information or clarification. The information supplied to the community must include: the nature, size, setting and duration of the project; the location of the areas and resources which will be affected; a preliminary study of the possible positive and negative impacts of the project; procedures to alleviate possible damage; and all foreseeable implications, including the benefits for the community. The INDI is responsible for adopting regulations for the implementation of the Protocol. The Committee notes the Government's indication that some 120 consultation sessions have been held in various indigenous communities, most of them relating to housing construction projects. The Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to ensure the implementation of the consultation processes with the indigenous peoples with regard to all legislative or administrative measures which may affect them directly. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken, firstly, to allocate the necessary resources to the Paraguayan Indigenous Institute (INDI) to coordinate the implementation of the Protocol on consultation and, secondly, to instruct the indigenous peoples on the content of the Protocol and its regulations in order to ensure their effective participation in the consultation processes. Lastly, the Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the consultations held in the framework of the Protocol on consultation, indicating the number of instances in which agreements have been reached.

Article 7(2). Improvement of living conditions. The Committee notes that the CUT-A indicates in its observations that there are deep inequalities separating the indigenous population and the rest of the population, since 75 per cent of the indigenous population lives in poverty and 60 per cent in extreme poverty, which is above the national average. In this regard, the Government indicates that the Tekopora Programme of the Ministry of Social Development, aimed at the protection and promotion of vulnerable families living in poverty, has benefited 29,517 indigenous families totalling 91,007 persons. The resources provided not only make it possible to cover basic needs but also to invest through cooperative schemes in consumer stores that benefit the whole community. Programmes have also been implemented for the provision of sanitation and drinking water services for the Chaco region, with the aim of supplying 87 indigenous communities in the region. The Committee requests the Government to continue taking measures, in collaboration with the indigenous peoples, to reduce the inequalities and the rates of poverty and extreme poverty faced by the indigenous communities, including through national and departmental development plans, and to provide information on the results achieved further to the adoption of these measures.

Article 14. Lands. In its previous comments, the Committee emphasized the need to continue making progress on the regularization of lands that indigenous peoples have traditionally occupied and on the titles granted to them. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government on progress made in the processes of expropriation and transfer of lands to the following indigenous communities: Sawhoyamaxa (14,404 hectares), Xákmok Kásek (7,701 hectares) and Yakye Axa (11,312 hectares), in compliance with the judgments handed down by the Inter-American Court of Human Rights. The Committee also notes the declaration of expropriation of 219 hectares in the district of Carlos Antonio López, department of Itapúa, to the INDI, for subsequent assignment to the Y'aká Marangatu indigenous community.

The Committee further notes the Government's statement that there are many disputes regarding lands because of a clash between private third-party ownership and indigenous collective ownership. In this regard, it notes that the INDI emphasizes that an impact on the rights of third parties is not sufficient grounds for denying the rights of indigenous peoples to their ancestral lands, given that these rights cover a wider concept relating to the collective right to survival. The INDI adds that if land rights are viewed from the perspective of productivity and the agricultural system, this takes insufficient account of the particular features of indigenous communities. The CUT-A, for its part, refers in its observations to land disputes arising from occupations of indigenous lands by landless peasant farmers (campesinos) and to attempted forced evictions and harassment of indigenous communities, including with the intervention of armed non-government agents, as was the case with the Veraró community (department of Canindeyú), the Guyra Payu and Huguá Po'i communities (department of Caaguazú), and the Jacuí Guasú community (department of Itapúa). It underlines the lack of a public policy for tackling this problem. In this regard, the Committee observes that the United Nations Human Rights Committee, in its concluding observations of 2019, expressed concern at the slow progress made in registering and returning land and the consequent lack of comprehensive access for indigenous communities to their lands and natural resources (CCPR/C/PRY/CO/4, paragraph 44).

While the Committee understands the complexities related to the recognition of lands that indigenous peoples have traditionally occupied and the grant of title to them, it requests the Government to intensify its efforts to move forward in the appropriate processes in this regard and to provide information on progress made. In view of the existence of legal disputes between indigenous peoples and third parties regarding the ownership of lands, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary steps to resolve the disputes and to reach agreements with the parties involved. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary steps without delay to investigate the facts relating to the occupation of lands by landless peasant farmers (campesinos) and also relating to forced evictions and harassment of indigenous communities, and to provide information in this respect.

Article 20. Recruitment and conditions of employment. For a number of years, the Committee has been urging the Government to strengthen the State's presence in the Chaco region in order to put an end to economic exploitation, in particular debt bondage involving indigenous workers. The Committee notes the Government's reference to the Paraguay Okakuaa project aimed at enhancing compliance with the labour legislation and improving decent working conditions, with the emphasis on preventing and combating forced labour. In this context, awareness-raising activities regarding labour rights have been carried out, with a particular focus on indigenous populations in the department of Boquerón. Talks have also been held with local actors and indigenous leaders to discuss concepts, regulations, indicators and vulnerabilities relating to forced labour.

The Committee notes that the CUT-A refers to the working situation of indigenous workers in the Chaco region, emphasizing that pay negotiations are conducted verbally and hence the workers have no means of demanding fulfilment of the agreed conditions. On livestock farms, indigenous workers are unpaid and only receive food and permission to live on the farm, in precarious conditions and without social protection. The CUT-A also indicates that the Ministry of Labour, Employment and Social Security (Ministry of Labour) does not have the necessary resources to carry out periodic controls of the situation of these workers through intervention by labour inspectors.

While recognizing the action taken by the Government to combat exploitation and forced labour of indigenous workers in the Chaco region, the Committee requests the Government to intensify its efforts to ensure that the offices of the Ministry of Labour in the Chaco region, including the labour inspectorate, have the necessary resources to monitor the observance of the labour rights of these workers, particularly those located on remote farms, to respond to complaints and to penalize violations. In addition, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on progress made in this respect. The Committee also refers to its comments on the application of the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29).

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Previous comment

Part IV of the Convention. Wages. Articles 24–35. The Committee notes that the Government refers to the adoption of Resolution No. 29 of 25 November 2020, establishing the national minimum monthly wage at 2,100 pesos (CUP) (approximately US$87.55) and approving the wage scales and rates applicable to all workers. The Government indicates that representatives of the workers and employers participated in all the processes for the adoption of measures. However, the Committee notes that the Government does not provide specific examples of the manner in which representatives of employers' and workers' organizations were consulted in the context of determining the minimum wage for plantation workers, as required by Article 24 of the Convention. The Government adds that, according to the National Statistics and Information Office, in 2020 the average monthly wage in agriculture, livestock farming and forestry was CUP1,043 (approximately US$43.49). However, the Committee notes that the Government does not provide any specific information on the wages received by plantation workers, or on the manner in which it is ensured that they receive at least the established national minimum wage. Nor does the Government provide information on the number and results of inspections carried out regarding the payment of wages on plantations. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide specific examples of the manner in which representatives of the workers' and employers' organizations in the plantations sector were consulted during the process of determining the minimum wage, in accordance with Article 24 of the Convention. The Committee also once again requests the Government to provide detailed, up-to-date information on the manner in which it is ensured that workers in the plantations sector receive at least the established national minimum wage, and also statistical information on the number and results of inspections conducted on plantations in relation to this matter.

Part V. Annual holidays with pay. Articles 36–42. For nearly 20 years the Committee has been asking the Government to give effect to Article 41 of the Convention. The Committee recalls that, in its 2018 comment, it expressed the hope that the new Labour Code would take due account of its previous comments on the need to amend section 98 of the Labour Code, which provided for cash compensation to be paid in lieu of holidays under certain conditions. The Committee noted that section 98 of the Labour Code was repealed by Act No. 116 of 20 December 2013 adopting the new Labour Code. However, the Committee noted that section 107 of the 2013 Labour Code authorizes the employer to require the presence of the worker under exceptional circumstances, and allows the employer to postpone or reduce the worker's holidays and pay the worker for the forgone portion of the accumulated holidays. In this regard, the Committee has been asking the Government since 2018 to indicate the manner in which it is ensured that section 107 of the Labour Code gives full effect to Article 41 of the Convention. However, the Committee notes with regret that the Government does not provide any new information on this point and that it merely reiterates that holidays can only be postponed under exceptional circumstances and that measures are adopted to protect this right. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to give full effect to Article 41 of the Convention, which provides that any agreement to relinquish the right to an annual holiday with pay, or to forgo such a holiday, shall be void. Noting that section 107 of the 2013 Labour Code contains the same formulation on holidays with pay as that contained in section 98 of the former Labour Code, a section that the Committee already referred to as not being in conformity with Article 41 of the Convention, the Committee refers to its 2013 comments on the Holidays with Pay Convention, 1936 (No. 52), in which it asked the Government to amend section 98 of the Labour Code or to specify that this section cannot be applied to the minimum holidays provided for in section 95 of the Labour Code.

Parts IX and X. Right to organize and collective bargaining. Freedom of association. Articles 54–70. The Committee notes the statistical information provided by the Government, indicating that there are a total of 350,760 workers in agriculture, of whom 229,000 are state workers, 15,107 are non-state workers and 36,000 are retirees, and that 99.4 per cent of these workers are unionized. The Government also indicates that there are 8,020 base-level organizations and 43 trade union bureaux and that a total of 1,223 collective agreements have been signed. However, the Committee notes that the statistical information provided by the Government refers to the agricultural sector but does not refer specifically to workers on plantations. Moreover, the Government does not provide any specific information on the measures taken or envisaged to ensure in practice that workers on plantations enjoy appropriate protection against any act of discrimination aimed at undermining freedom of association in relation to their employment. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to provide statistical information on the number of collective agreements signed specifically with respect to plantations and to indicate the number of workers covered. The Committee also once again requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to ensure in practice that workers on plantations enjoy adequate protection against any act of discrimination aimed at undermining freedom of association in relation to their employment.

Part XI. Labour inspection. Articles 71–84. In its previous comments, the Committee asked the Government to indicate the manner in which the labour inspectorate monitors and ensures that the activities of the vocational training and occupational guidance process on plantations comply with Article 6 of the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138). However, the Committee notes that the Government does not provide any information on this matter. The Committee also asked the Government to send detailed information on the numbers of secondary-school students working on plantations, disaggregated by age, type and conditions of work, and on how they are compensated, and also on the manner in which it is ensured that these students and prisoners who work on the plantations have the freedom to choose whether or not to work. The Committee notes that the Government provides a partial reply in this regard, indicating that the Ministry of Education establishes working procedures for each school year, regulates vocational and work training for school students, on the basis of the principle of combining theory with practice by linking study and work, on a voluntary and unpaid basis, respecting the special guarantees and protection provided for in the legislation. As regards work done by prisoners, the Government indicates that such work is voluntary. In reply to the Committee's previous comment, the Government states that in 2020 the National Labour Inspection Office carried out inspections in 4,246 entities, covering 927,921 workers in the state sector, including in agriculture. The Government adds that these inspections mainly checked compliance with measures for the prevention and control of COVID-19. The Government also indicates that the National Labour Inspection Office has not detected any cases of forced labour or of child labour and that the Public Assistance Office at the Ministry of Labour and Social Security has not received any complaints in this regard. However, the Committee notes that the Government does not provide any specific information on workers on plantations. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to provide detailed information on the supervision and enforcement measures relating to the conditions of work of plantation workers, particularly the inspections carried out on plantations, violations of the labour legislation reported, and the penalties imposed. Furthermore, the Committee once again requests the Government to indicate the manner in which the labour inspectorate conducts inspections and ensures that the activities of the vocational training and occupational guidance process for students on plantations comply with Article 6 of the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138). The Committee also requests the Government to indicate which criteria, including age and sex, are used to select students who work on plantations, and how it is ensured that work on plantations is relevant to them in the context of the work-study link referred to above. Lastly, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the manner in which it is ensured that secondary-school students and prisoners who work on plantations have the freedom to decide whether or not to work.

Part IV. Application in practice. The Committee notes that no information has been supplied by the Government on the application of the Convention in practice. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to provide detailed, up-to-date information on the application of the Convention in practice, including: (i) recent studies on the socio-economic conditions of workers on plantations; (ii) statistical information, disaggregated by sex and age, on the number of plantations and workers to whom the Convention applies; (iii) copies of collective agreements applicable in the sector; and (iv) the number of workers' and employers' organizations established in the plantations sector, and any other information which enables the Committee to assess the situation of workers on plantations in relation to the provisions of the Convention.

Panama

Domestic Workers Convention, 2011 (No. 189) (ratification: 2015)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the National Confederation of United Independent Unions (CONUSI), received on 30 August 2021. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

Article 18. Application of the Convention. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the preparation of a preliminary draft Bill No. 012 (Bill No. 438) of 19 July 2016, which amends the provisions of the Labour Code and Family Code establishing working conditions for persons engaged in domestic work and requested the Government to provide information on the status of the Bill. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Bill was referred back from the second reading in the National Assembly to a further first reading. In its comments CONUSI observes that no progress had been made in the status of the Bill since 2017 and maintains that it includes provisions that establish working conditions for domestic workers that are less favourable than those provided for in the legal system for other categories of workers in areas such as: wages, working time (more than eight hours per day), right to education and compensation for unjustified termination of contract. In the context where it is likely that draft Bill No. 012 (Bill No. 438) of 19 July 2016 will be approved in the near future, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures, in consultation with the social partners, including the organizations representative of domestic workers as well as organizations representative of employers of domestic workers, to ensure full conformity of its labour legislation with the requirements of the Convention (Article 18), and keep the Office informed of any developments in this respect.

Articles 6 and 9. Fair terms of employment and decent working and living conditions. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, in most cases, employers reach agreement with domestic workers about whether they are required to reside in the household. It adds that domestic workers' rest breaks and holiday periods are also respected. The Government also indicates that all workers have the right to keep their travel and identity documents. However, in its comments CONUSI indicates that there is a lack of information regarding the situation of domestic workers from which it can be ascertained whether or not domestic workers enjoy such rights in practice. In relation to the measures taken to ensure that domestic workers living in the household where they are employed enjoy decent living conditions, the Government refers once again to section 231(9) of the Labour Code, which requires that the meals provided to domestic workers must be healthy, plentiful and nutritious, and the living area comfortable and clean. The Committee requests the Government to provide updated and detailed information on how it is ensured in practice that all domestic workers: (a) are free to reach agreement with their employer or potential employer on whether to reside in the household; (b) are not obliged to remain in the household or with members of the household during periods of daily and weekly rest or annual leave; and (c) are entitled to keep in their possession their travel and identity documents. The Committee also once again requests the Government to provide information on the measures envisaged or adopted to ensure, in practice, that domestic workers who reside in the household they work for, benefit from decent living conditions that respect their privacy.

Article 10(1). Equality of treatment between domestic workers and workers generally in relation to hours of work. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that section 231(2) of the Labour Code provides that “domestic workers shall not be subject to a schedule of hours of work but shall benefit from a minimum absolute rest period between 9 p.m. and 6 a.m. ...”. It also noted that, in its ruling of 10 August 1994, the Supreme Court declared that section 231(2) of the Labour Code does not establish a 15-hour day for domestic workers but seeks to ensure that they benefit from a “continuous and uninterrupted period of rest during which they are not under the requirement to perform any work.” The Committee notes the Government’s indication that in practice most domestic workers are entitled to keep a set schedule, including periods of rest. The Committee nevertheless notes that both the Government and CONUSI in its observations recognize the need to amend this regulation to ensure equal working conditions between domestic workers and workers in general. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures without delay to amend section 231(2) of the Labour Code with a view to ensuring equality of treatment between domestic workers and workers in general in relation to normal hours of work, overtime compensation and periods of daily rest. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on progress achieved in this respect.

Article 10(3). Periods during which domestic workers are not free to dispose of their time as they please. The Committee notes that the Government has not provided information on the implementation in practice of this Article of the Convention. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that periods during which domestic workers are not free to dispose of their time as they please and remain at the disposal of the household in order to respond to possible calls are regarded and paid as hours of work.

Article 11. Minimum wage. Non-discrimination based on sex. In its previous comments, taking into account that domestic workers receive the lowest minimum wage due to the fact that a monthly rate is set, the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to establish a minimum hourly wage for domestic workers in the same way as for other workers. The Government reiterates that, in accordance with the provisions of the legal system, all workers are entitled to a minimum wage. The Government indicates that the tripartite National Minimum Wage Committee makes recommendations to the Government regarding minimum wage rates based on studies and research. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government on the development of minimum wage rates for domestic workers between 2000 and 2021. The Committee notes that, over a 21-year period, minimum wage rates for domestic workers have increased from 105 to 300 balboas per month in the first region and in the second region they have increased from 95 to 275 balboas per month. CONUSI reports that the minimum wage established for domestic workers is the lowest of all legally established minimum wages and is lower than the monthly cost of the family basket of essential foodstuffs. The Committee notes, however, that the Government does not provide any information on the adoption of measures to establish a minimum hourly wage for domestic workers, as for other workers. The Committee recalls that this situation may give rise to instances of wage discrimination as, in accordance with section 231(2) of the Labour Code, domestic workers may work up to 15 hours per day, given that the legal system does not establish a maximum of eight working hours per day in the same way as it has for other workers. The establishment of a minimum monthly wage for domestic work is detrimental to this group of workers in these circumstances, as they tend to work many more hours per month than other workers. With regard to equal pay, the Committee refers to its 2019 observation on the application of the Equal Remuneration Convention, 1951 \(No. 100\), in which it noted the Government's request for assistance from the Office in August 2017, in order to progress with bringing its legislation into line with the principle of Convention No. 100 and trusted that it would be provided without delay. The Committee also notes that CONUSI emphasizes the need to compile information on wages received by men and women domestic workers to identify gender-based wage discrimination in the domestic work sector. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to establish a minimum hourly wage for domestic workers in the same way as for other workers. It also requests the Government to take the necessary measures, in accordance with national practice and conditions, to ensure that the minimum wages rates established for domestic workers are fair and enable them to enjoy a decent standard of living.

Direct requests

In addition, requests regarding certain matters are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 110 (Panama, Sri Lanka); Convention No. 149 (Congo, Ghana, Guyana, Seychelles, Slovenia, Tajikistan); Convention No. 172 (Guyana, Iraq, Lebanon, Mexico); Convention No. 177 (Albania, Tajikistan); Convention No. 189 (Guinea, Guyana, Ireland, Italy, Jamaica, Panama, Portugal).

► II. Observations concerning the submission to the competent authorities of the Conventions and Recommendations adopted by the International Labour Conference (article 19 of the Constitution)

Albania

Failure to submit. The Committee notes with interest that the Government ratified the Violence and Harassment Convention, 2019 (No. 190) on 6 May 2022. However, the Committee once again notes that the Government has not replied to its previous observations. It recalls once again that the constitutional obligation of submission is of the highest importance and is a fundamental element of the standards system of the ILO. Referring to its previous observations, the Committee reiterates its request that the Government provide information on the submission to the Albanian Parliament of 25 instruments: the Protocol of 1995 to the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947, adopted by the Conference at its 82nd Session, the Promotion of Cooperatives Recommendation, 2002 (No. 193), the List of Occupational Diseases Recommendation, 2002 (No. 194), adopted by the Conference at its 90th Session, as well as the instruments adopted at the 78th, 84th, 86th, 89th, 92nd, 95th (Recommendation No. 198), 96th, 99th, 100th, 101st, 103rd, 104th, 106th and 108th Sessions (the Violence and Harassment Recommendation, 2019 (No. 206)).

The Committee recalls that the Government may request the technical assistance of the Office, if it so wishes, to assist it in achieving compliance with its obligations under article 19 of the Constitution with respect to the submission to the competent authorities of the instruments adopted by the Conference.

Angola

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes with concern that the Government has once again not provided the information requested in its previous observations. It recalls that the constitutional obligation of submission is of the highest importance and is a fundamental element of the standards system of the ILO. The Committee therefore once again reiterates its request that the Government provide the information required under article 19 of the ILO Constitution on the 19 instruments pending submission to the National Assembly. These are: the Protection of Workers' Claims (Employer's Insolvency) Recommendation, 1992 (No. 180), adopted by the Conference at its 79th Session; the Protocol of 1995 to the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947, adopted by the Conference at its 82nd Session; and the instruments adopted at the 86th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 99th, 100th, 101st, 103rd, 104th, 106th and 108th Sessions of the Conference (2003–19).

The Committee recalls that the Government may request the technical assistance of the Office, if it so wishes, to assist it in achieving compliance with its obligations under article 19 of the Constitution with respect to the submission to the competent authorities of the instruments adopted by the Conference.

Antigua and Barbuda

Failure to submit. The Committee once again notes that the Government has not provided a reply to its 2018 direct request. It therefore recalls the information provided by the Government in April 2014 that the instruments adopted by the Conference from its 83rd to its 101st Sessions (1996–2012) were resubmitted by the Minister of Labour to the Cabinet of Antigua and Barbuda on 11 March 2014. It recalls that the constitutional obligation of submission is of the highest importance and is a fundamental element of the standards system of the ILO. In this context, the Committee reiterates its request that the Government specify the dates on which the 14 instruments adopted by the Conference from its 83rd to its 101st Sessions were submitted to the Parliament of Antigua and Barbuda. The Committee also reiterates its request that the Government provide information on the submission to Parliament of the Forced Labour (Supplementary Measures) Recommendation, 2014 (No. 203), adopted by the Conference at its 103rd Session, the Transition from the Informal to the Formal Economy Recommendation, 2015 (No. 204), adopted by the Conference at its 104th Session, the Employment and Decent Work for Peace and Resilience Recommendation, 2017 (No. 205), adopted by the Conference at its 106th Session, and the Violence and Harassment Convention (No. 190) and Recommendation (No. 206), 2019, adopted by the Conference at its 108th Session.

Bahamas

Serious failure to submit. The Committee once again notes with concern that the Government has again not provided information in response to its previous observation. It once again recalls that the constitutional obligation of submission is of the highest importance and is a fundamental element of the standards system of the ILO. The Committee expresses the firm hope, as did the Conference Committee in June 2019, June 2021 and June 2022, that the Government will comply with its obligation to submit Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols to the competent authority (the Parliament). The Committee therefore once again firmly urges the Government to provide information on the submission to Parliament of the 26 instruments adopted by the Conference at 15 sessions held between 1997 and 2019 (85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 92nd, 95th, 96th, 99th, 100th, 101st, 103rd, 104th, 106th and 108th Sessions).

The Committee recalls that the Government may request the technical assistance of the Office, if it so wishes, to assist it in achieving compliance with its obligations under article 19 of the Constitution with respect to the submission to the competent authorities of the instruments adopted by the Conference.

Bahrain

Failure to submit. The Committee recalls that, for a number of years, it has been requesting the Government to submit the instruments adopted by the International Labour Conference to the National Assembly in compliance with its obligation of submission pursuant to article 19 of the ILO Constitution. In this respect, it notes the information provided by the Government in its communication of 30 August 2022, in which it reiterates that: (i) it has complied with its constitutional obligations by submitting the instruments adopted by the International Labour Conference to its Council of Ministers, as the competent authority; and (ii) indicated that a new mechanism for submission of the instruments adopted by the Conference would require the revision of the Constitution of Bahrain and of a number of laws which regulate this aspect and which specify the mandate and powers of the Council of Ministers and the National Assembly.

Against this backdrop, the Committee recalls that when a State decides to become a Member of the Organization it accepts to fulfil the obligations established in the Constitution, such as the obligation to submit to the competent authorities the instruments adopted at the Conference. It emphasizes, however, that the obligation of ILO Member States to submit the instruments adopted by the Conference to the competent authorities does not imply any obligation to propose the ratification or application of the instruments in question, or to take any other specific action. Pursuant to article 19 of the ILO Constitution, Member States have complete freedom as to the nature of the proposals to be made, if any, when submitting the instruments. Submission does not imply any obligation to propose the ratification of a Convention or Protocol, nor does it imply the application of one or more of the principles set out in an unratified Convention or a Recommendation. In this respect, the Committee once again draws the attention of the Government to the Memorandum concerning the obligation to submit Conventions and Recommendations to the competent authorities, adopted by the Governing Body in 2005, particularly Part I on the aims and objectives of submission.

The Committee understands that, in Bahrain, the Council of Ministers is the authority competent to ratify a Convention or Protocol, as well as to decide on any other action which it may deem appropriate in respect of the instruments adopted by the Conference (2005 Memorandum, Part I(b)). The Committee nevertheless recalls that, for the purposes of article 19 of the ILO Constitution, discussion in a deliberative assembly – or at a minimum transmission to a deliberative assembly of information concerning the instruments adopted by the International Labour Conference – is an essential component of the constitutional obligation to submit, as indicated in the 2005 Memorandum (2005 Memorandum, Part I(c) and Part II(c)). This obligation is applicable even in cases where legislative power is vested in the executive by virtue of the Constitution of the Member State. The obligation to submit is twofold: (1) to encourage ratification or application of instruments adopted by the Conference through submission to the competent authority empowered to consider ratification; and (2) to bring the instruments adopted by the Conference to the knowledge of the public through their submission to a parliamentary or deliberative body. Given the importance of the latter objective, the Committee has noted that, even in the absence of a parliamentary body, informing a consultative body makes it possible to carry out a full examination of the instruments, ensuring that they are widely disseminated among the public, which is one of the purposes of the obligation of submission (2005 Memorandum, Part II(d)).

The Committee therefore expresses the hope that the Government will take urgent measures to further examine this matter in order to ensure full compliance with this twofold obligation to submit, established in article 19 of the ILO Constitution, and that it will soon be in a position to report not only on the submission to the Council of Ministers of the 25 instruments adopted by the Conference at 14 sessions held between 2000 and 2019 (88th Session, 89th Session, 90th Session, 91st Session, 92nd Session, 94th Session, 95th Session, 96th Session, 99th Session, 100th Session, 101st Session, 103rd Session, 104th Session and 108th Session), but also on the submission of these instruments to the Consultative Council.

Belize

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes once again with deep concern that the Government has provided no reply to its previous observations. It recalls once again that the constitutional obligation of submission is of the highest importance and is a fundamental element of the standards system of the ILO. The Committee expresses the firm hope, as did the Conference Committee in June 2017, June 2018, June 2019, June 2021 and June 2022, that the Government will comply with its obligation to submit Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols to the competent authority (the National Assembly). The Committee once again urges the Government to provide information on the submission to the National Assembly of the 43 pending instruments adopted by the Conference at 22 sessions held between 1990 and 2019. It once again reminds the Government of the availability of ILO technical assistance in meeting its submission obligations.

Plurinational State of Bolivia

Serious failure to submit. The Committee once again notes with concern that the Government has not provided a reply to its previous comments. It once again recalls that the constitutional obligation of submission is of the highest importance and is a fundamental element of the standards system of the ILO. The Committee notes that information has not been provided on the submission to the Plurinational Legislative Assembly of 31 instruments adopted by the Conference at 20 sessions between 1993 and 2019. The Committee firmly urges the Government to provide information on the submission to the Plurinational Legislative Assembly of the 31 instruments adopted by the Conference since 1993 for which submission is still pending. It once again reminds the Government that it may avail itself of ILO technical assistance if it so wishes.

Brunei Darussalam

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes once again with deep concern that the Government has not replied to its previous comments. It recalls once more that the constitutional obligation of submission is of the highest importance and is a fundamental element of the standards system of the ILO. The Committee therefore once again firmly urges the Government to provide information on the submission to the competent national authorities, within the meaning of article 19(5) and (6) of the ILO Constitution, of the 12 instruments adopted by the Conference at its 96th, 99th, 100th, 101st, 103rd, 104th, 106th and 108th Sessions (2007–19). The Committee once again recalls that the Government may request the technical assistance of the Office, if it so wishes, to assist it in achieving compliance with its obligations under article 19 of the Constitution with respect to the submission to the competent authorities of the instruments adopted by the Conference.

Central African Republic

Submission. The Committee notes with interest the ratification of the Violence and Harassment Convention, 2019 (No. 190) on 9 June 2022. It notes, however, that the Government has yet again not replied to its previous comments. It recalls once more that the constitutional obligation of submission is of the highest importance and is a fundamental element of the standards system of the ILO. The Committee reiterates its request that the Government provide information on the submission to the National Assembly of the eight instruments adopted by the Conference at its 99th, 100th, 101st, 103rd, 104th and 106th Sessions (2010–18). It also requests that the Government provide information on the submission of the Violence and Harassment Recommendation, 2019 (No. 206), adopted by the Conference at its 108th Session.

Chad

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes with concern that the Government has once again failed to reply to its previous comments. It recalls once more that the constitutional obligation of submission is of the highest importance and is a fundamental element of the standards system of the ILO. The Committee expresses the firm hope, as did the Conference Committee in June 2022, that the Government will comply with its obligation to submit Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols to the competent authority (the Parliament).

Therefore, the Committee once more requests the Government to provide information on the submission to Parliament of the ten instruments adopted by the Conference at its 99th, 100th, 101st, 103rd, 104th, 106th and 108th Sessions (2010–19).

Chile

Submission. The Committee notes that the Government has not provided a reply to its previous comments. The Committee therefore reiterates its request that the Government provide information on the submission to the National Congress, indicating the date, of the remaining 25 instruments adopted at 16 sessions of the Conference between 1996 and 2017 (83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 95th (the Employment Relationship Recommendation, 2006 (No. 198)), 96th, 99th, 101st, 103rd, 104th and 106th Sessions).

The Committee recalls that the Government may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office, if it so wishes, to assist it in achieving compliance with its obligations under article 19 of the Constitution with respect to the submission to the competent authorities of the instruments adopted by the Conference.

Comoros

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes once again with deep concern that the Government has not provided the information requested in its previous observation. The Committee recalls that the constitutional obligation of submission is of the highest importance and is a fundamental element of the standards system of the ILO. The Committee therefore once more expresses the firm hope, as did the Conference Committee in June 2016, June 2017, June 2018, June 2019, June 2021 and June 2022, that the Government will comply with its obligation to submit Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols to the competent authority. It therefore once again firmly urges the Government to provide information on the submission to the Assembly of the Union of Comoros of the 46 instruments adopted by the Conference at the 23 sessions held between 1992 and 2019.

The Committee recalls that the Government may request the technical assistance of the Office, if it so wishes, to assist it in achieving compliance with its obligations under article 19 of the Constitution with respect to the submission to the competent authorities of the instruments adopted by the Conference.

Congo

Serious failure to submit. The Committee once again notes with deep concern that the Government has not replied to its previous observation. The Committee once more recalls that the constitutional obligation of submission is of the highest importance and is a fundamental element of the standards system of the ILO. The Committee therefore once again expresses the firm hope, as did the Conference in June 2019, June 2021 and June 2022, that the Government of Congo will comply with its obligations to submit Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols to the competent authorities in the future. The Committee once again reiterates its request that the Government complete the submission procedure in relation to 67 Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols, adopted by the Conference during 32 sessions from 1970 to 2019, which have not yet been submitted to the National Assembly. It reminds the Government of the availability of ILO technical assistance to meet its constitutional submission obligations.

Croatia

Submission. The Committee welcomes the information provided by the Government regarding the submission of the Employment and Decent Work for Peace and Resilience Recommendation, 2017 (No. 205), adopted by the Conference at its 106th Session, to the Croatian Parliament on 17 March 2022. The Committee also firmly urges the Government to provide information on the submission to the Croatian Parliament of the remaining 21 instruments adopted by the Conference at 12 sessions held between 1998 and 2016 (86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 92nd, 95th, 96th, 99th, 100th, 101st, 103rd and 104th Sessions).

Democratic Republic of the Congo

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes with deep regret that the Government has yet again not replied to its previous observation. It recalls once more that the constitutional obligation of submission is of the highest importance and is a fundamental element of the standards system of the ILO. The Committee therefore once again reiterates its request that the Government provide information on the ten instruments pending submission to Parliament, which were adopted during the past seven Sessions of the Conference (2010–19).

Dominica

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes once again with deep concern that the Government has not provided a reply to its previous comments. It once more recalls that the constitutional obligation of submission is of the highest importance and is a fundamental element of the standards system of the ILO. The Committee once again expresses the firm hope, as did the Conference Committee in June 2016, June 2017, June 2018, June 2019, June 2021, and June 2022, that the Government will comply with its obligation to submit Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols to the competent authority. The Committee therefore once again firmly urges the Government to provide information on the submission to the House of Assembly of the 43 instruments adopted by the Conference during 22 sessions held between 1993 and 2019 (80th, 81st, 82nd, 83rd, 84th, 85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th, 99th, 100th, 101st, 103rd, 104th, 106th and 108th Sessions). It once again recalls that the Government may request the technical assistance of the Office, if it so wishes, to assist it in achieving compliance with its obligations under article 19 of the Constitution with respect to the submission to the competent authorities of the instruments adopted by the Conference.

El Salvador

Submission. The Committee welcomes the Government's communication of 25 May 2022. It notes with interest the ratification on 7 June 2022 of the Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952 (No. 102), the Working Environment (Air Pollution, Noise and Vibration) Convention, 1977 (No. 148), the Collective Bargaining Convention, 1981 (No. 154), the Maternity Protection Convention, 2000 (No. 183), and the Violence and Harassment Convention, 2019 (No. 190). The Committee nevertheless notes that 57 instruments remain pending submission to the Legislative Assembly. It therefore firmly urges the Government to submit to the Legislative Assembly the 57 instruments adopted at the 25 sessions of the Conference held between October 1976 and June 2019. Moreover, it once again reiterates its request that the Government provide information on the submission of the remaining outstanding instruments adopted by the Conference at its 63rd (Convention No. 148 and Recommendations Nos 156 and 157), 67th (Convention No. 154 and Recommendation No. 163), 69th (Recommendation No. 167) and 90th (Recommendations Nos 193 and 194) Sessions.

The Committee recalls that the Government may request the technical assistance of the Office, if it so wishes, to assist it in achieving compliance with its obligations under article 19 of the Constitution with respect to the submission to the competent authorities of the instruments adopted by the Conference.

Equatorial Guinea

Serious failure to submit. The Committee once again notes with deep concern that the Government has provided no response to its previous comments. It recalls once more that the constitutional obligation of submission is of the highest importance and is a fundamental element of the standards system of the ILO. The Committee expresses the firm hope, as did the Conference Committee in June 2016, June 2017, June 2018, June 2019, June 2021 and June 2022, that the Government will comply with its obligation to submit Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols to the competent authority. Accordingly, the Committee once again firmly urges the Government to provide information on the submission to Parliament of the 37 instruments adopted by the Conference between 1993 and 2019. It reminds the Government of the availability of ILO technical assistance to meet its constitutional obligation of submission.

Eswatini

The Committee notes with satisfaction the information provided by the Government regarding the submission on 25 May 2022 to the House of Assembly of the ten instruments adopted by the Conference at its 99th, 100th, 101st, 103rd, 104th, 106th and 108th Sessions (2010–19). The Committee commends the efforts made by the Government in meeting its constitutional obligation of submission.

Gabon

Serious failure to submit. The Committee once again notes with deep concern that the Government has provided no reply to its previous comments. It recalls once more that the constitutional obligation of submission is of the highest importance and is a fundamental element of the standards system of the ILO. The Committee firmly expects that the Government will comply with its obligation to submit Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols to the competent authority. Serious failure to submit. The Committee once again notes with deep regret that the Government has not responded to its previous comments. It recalls once more that the constitutional obligation of submission is of the highest importance and is a fundamental element of the standards system of the ILO. The Committee accordingly once again reiterates its request that the Government provide information on the submission to the National Assembly of the ten instruments adopted by the Conference at its 99th, 100th, 101st, 103rd, 104th, 106th and 108th Sessions (2010–19).

The Committee recalls that the Government may request the technical assistance of the Office, if it so wishes, to assist it in achieving compliance with its obligations under article 19 of the Constitution with respect to the submission to the competent authorities of the instruments adopted by the Conference.

Iraq

Failure to submit. The Committee notes with concern that the Government has once again provided no response to its previous comments. It recalls that the constitutional obligation of submission is of the highest importance and is a fundamental element of the standards system of the ILO. It therefore once again recalls the detailed information provided by the Government in November 2017, including the dates of submission to the Council of Representatives (Majlis Al-Nuwaab) of each of the instruments adopted by the Conference at its 88th, 90th, 92nd, 95th, 96th, 99th, 100th and 101st Sessions (2000–12). The Committee further recalls the Government's indication that Recommendations submitted to the Council of Representatives were not examined by the Council, but were transmitted to the Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs which, according to the Government's indication, is the competent authority with respect to Recommendations. The Committee further recalls the information provided by the Government in March 2017, indicating that the Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930, was submitted to the competent authority. It noted in this regard that no information was provided on the date of submission, or on whether the instrument in question was in fact submitted to the Council of Representatives (Majlis Al-Nuwaab).

Against this backdrop, the Committee recalls that when a State decides to become a Member of the Organization it accepts to fulfil the obligations established in the Constitution, such as the obligation to submit to the competent authorities the instruments adopted at the Conference. It emphasizes, however, that the obligation of ILO Member States to submit the instruments adopted by the Conference to the competent authorities does not imply any obligation to propose the ratification or application of the instruments in question, or to take any other specific action. Pursuant to article 19 of the ILO Constitution, Member States have complete freedom as to the nature of the proposals to be made, if any, when submitting the instruments. Submission does not imply any obligation to propose the ratification of a Convention or Protocol, nor does it imply the application of one or more of the principles set out in an unratified Convention or a Recommendation. In this respect, the Committee once again draws the attention of the Government to the 2005 Memorandum concerning the obligation to submit Conventions and Recommendations to the competent authorities, adopted by the Governing Body in 2005, particularly Part I on the aims and objectives of submission.

The Committee understands that, in Iraq, the Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs is considered to be the competent authority in relation to the submission of Recommendations. The Committee nevertheless recalls that, for the purposes of article 19 of the ILO Constitution, discussion in a deliberative assembly – or at a minimum provision to a deliberative assembly of information concerning all of the instruments adopted by the International Labour Conference, regardless of whether these are Conventions, Protocols or Recommendations – is an essential component of the constitutional obligation to submit, as indicated in the 2005 Memorandum (2005 Memorandum, Part I(c) and Part II(c)). This obligation is applicable even in cases where legislative power is vested in the executive, as in this case the Ministry of Labour and Social Affairs, by virtue of the Constitution of the Member State. The obligation to submit is twofold: (1) to encourage ratification or application of instruments adopted by the Conference through submission to the competent authority empowered to consider ratification; and (2) to bring the instruments adopted by the Conference to the knowledge of the public through their submission to a parliamentary or deliberative body. Given the importance of the latter objective, the Committee has noted that, even in the absence of a parliamentary body, informing a consultative body makes it possible to carry out a full examination of the instruments, ensuring that they are widely disseminated among the public, which is one of the purposes of the obligation of submission (2005 Memorandum, Part II(d)).

The Committee therefore expresses the hope that the Government will take urgent measures to further examine this matter in order to ensure full compliance with this twofold obligation to submit, established in article 19 of the ILO Constitution, and that it will soon be in a position to provide more specific information on the submission to the Council of Representatives of the remaining 12 instruments adopted by the Conference from 2000 to 2015. The Committee also reiterates its request for the Government to provide information on the submission to the Council of Representatives of the Employment and Decent Work for Peace and Resilience Recommendation, 2017 (No. 205), adopted by the Conference at its 106th Session, and the Violence and Harassment Convention (No. 190) and Recommendation (No. 206), 2019, adopted by the Conference at its 108th Session (June 2019). It reminds the Government of the availability of ILO technical assistance to meet its constitutional obligation of submission.

Kazakhstan

Failure to submit. The Committee notes with interest the ratification of the Part-Time Work Convention, 1994 (No. 175) on 25 May 2022. The Committee notes, however, that the Government has yet again provided no response to its previous comments. Therefore, it recalls once more that the constitutional obligation of submission is of the highest importance and is a fundamental element of the standards system of the ILO. The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to provide information on the date of submission of the Transition from the Informal to the Formal Economy Recommendation, 2015 (No. 204) to Parliament. Moreover, the Committee once again reiterates its request that the Government to provide information on the submission to Parliament of the remaining 38 instruments adopted by the Conference between 1993 and 2019, including with respect to the date of submission of each instrument. It reminds the Government of the availability of ILO technical assistance to meet its constitutional obligation of submission.

Kyrgyzstan

Failure to submit. The Committee notes with concern that the Government has once again failed to reply to its previous comments. The Committee therefore refers yet again to the comments it has been formulating since 1994, and recalls that, under article 19 of the ILO Constitution, every Member undertakes to bring the instruments adopted by the International Labour Conference before the authority or authorities within whose competence the matter lies for the enactment of legislation or other action. It recalls once more that the constitutional obligation of submission is of the highest importance and is a fundamental element of the standards system of the ILO. The Committee once again firmly urges the Government to provide information on the submission to the competent national authority of the 43 instruments adopted by the Conference at 22 sessions held from 1992 to 2019. The Committee reminds the Government of the availability of ILO technical assistance to assist it in overcoming this serious delay.

Lebanon

Serious failure to submit. The Committee once again notes with regret that the Government has provided no response to its previous comments. It recalls yet again that the constitutional obligation of submission is of the highest importance and is a fundamental element of the standards system of the ILO. The Committee recalls once more the information provided by the Government in February 2016, indicating that the Ministry of Labour had submitted the Transition from the Informal to the Formal Economy Recommendation, 2015 (No. 204), to the Council of Ministers for consideration, and that the Council of Ministers had decided to establish a special commission to examine the Recommendation. The Committee yet again refers to its previous comments and urges the Government indicate the date on which the instruments adopted by the Conference at its 99th, 100th, 101st, 103rd, 104th and 106th Sessions (2010–17) were submitted to the National Assembly (Majlis Al Nuwwab), and to provide information on the submission of the Violence and Harassment Convention (No. 190) and Recommendation (No. 206), 2019, adopted by the Conference at its 108th Session (June 2019).

The Committee recalls that the Government may request the technical assistance of the Office, if it so wishes, to assist it in achieving compliance with its obligations under article 19 of the Constitution with respect to the submission to the competent authorities of the instruments adopted by the Conference.

Malawi

Failure to submit. The Committee once again notes with regret that the Government has provided no reply to its previous comments. It once more recalls the information provided by the Government concerning the submission to the President on 12 December 2018 of the HIV and AIDS Recommendation, 2010 (No. 200), adopted by the Conference at its 99th Session, the Domestic Workers Convention, 2011 (No. 189), adopted by the Conference at its 100th Session, the Forced Labour (Supplementary Measures) Recommendation, 2014 (No. 203), adopted by the Conference at its 103rd Session, and the Transition from the Informal to the Formal Economy Recommendation, 2015 (No. 204), adopted by the Conference at its 104th Session. In addition, the Government indicated that the Employment and Decent Work for Peace and Resilience Recommendation, 2017 (No. 205), was submitted to the competent authority. The Committee once again recalls that the constitutional obligation of submission is of the highest importance and is a fundamental element of the standards system of the ILO. While noting the Government's indication that the President is a member of the Parliament, the Committee wishes to reiterate that the obligation of submission cannot be considered to have been fulfilled until the ILO instruments adopted have reached and been submitted to the legislative body. The Committee therefore once again requests that the Government provide information on the submission to Parliament, and the dates of submission, of the nine instruments adopted by the Conference at its 99th, 100th, 101st, 103rd, 104th, 106th and 108th Sessions (2010–19).

Malaysia

Failure to submit. The Committee welcomes the ratification by Malaysia of the 1948 Protocol on Forced Labour, 1930, on 21 March 2022. Saint Kitts and Nevis Serious failure to submit to the National Assembly. The Committee welcomes the information provided by the Government with respect to the tripartite consultations held in relation to the Violence and Harassment Convention (No. 190) and Recommendation (No. 206), 2019, and the subsequent referral of the instruments to the Council of Ministers. It nevertheless reiterates that, to fully comply with the constitutional obligation of submission set out in article 19(5)(b) and (6)(b) of the ILO Constitution, the instruments should be submitted to the authorities “within whose competence the matter lies, for the enactment of legislation”, which should normally be the legislature (in the case of Saint Kitts and Nevis, the National Assembly). The Committee expresses the firm hope, as did the Conference Committee in June 2017, June 2018, June 2019, June 2021 and June 2022, that the Government will comply with its obligation to submit Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols to the competent authority. The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to provide information on the submission to the National Assembly of the 27 instruments adopted by the Conference at 16 sessions held between 1996 and 2017 (83rd, 85th, 86th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 95th, 96th, 99th, 100th, 101st, 103rd, 104th and 106th Sessions). It further requests the Government to provide information regarding the submission to the National Assembly of the two instruments adopted by the Conference at its 108th Session in June 2019: the Violence and Harassment Convention, 2019 (No. 190) and the Violence and Harassment Recommendation, 2019 (No. 206).

The Committee recalls that the Government may request the technical assistance of the Office, if it so wishes, to assist it in achieving compliance with its obligations under article 19 of the Constitution with respect to the submission to the competent authorities of the instruments adopted by the Conference.

Serious failure to submit. The Committee again notes with deep concern that the Government has yet again failed to reply to its previous comments. It recalls once more that the constitutional obligation of submission is of the highest importance and is a fundamental element of the standards system of the ILO. The Committee once again expresses the firm hope, as did the Conference Committee in June 2017, June 2018, June 2019, June 2021 and June 2022, that the Government will comply with its obligation to submit Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols to the competent authority (the House of Assembly). It firmly urges the Government to provide information on the submission to the House of Assembly of the 31 instruments (Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols) adopted by the Conference at 17 sessions held from 1995 to 2019 (82nd, 83rd, 85th, 88th, 89th, 90th, 91st, 92nd, 95th, 96th, 99th, 100th, 101st, 103rd, 104th, 106th and 108th Sessions).

The Committee once again recalls that the Government may request the technical assistance of the Office, if it so wishes, to assist it in achieving compliance with its obligations under article 19 of the Constitution with respect to the submission to the competent authorities of the instruments adopted by the Conference.

Seychelles

Serious failure to submit. The Committee once again notes with deep regret that the Government has provided no response to its previous comments. It therefore recalls once more that the constitutional obligation of submission is of the highest importance and is a fundamental element of the standards system of the ILO. The Committee once again expresses the firm hope, as did the Conference Committee in June 2016, June 2017, June 2018, June 2019, June 2021 and June 2022, that the Government will comply with its obligation to submit Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols to the competent authority (the National Assembly). It firmly urges the Government to provide the requested information on the submission to the National Assembly of the 22 instruments adopted by the Conference at 13 sessions held from 2001 to 2019.

The Committee once again recalls that the Government may request the technical assistance of the Office, if it so wishes, to assist it in achieving compliance with its obligations under article 19 of the Constitution with respect to the submission to the competent authorities of the instruments adopted by the Conference.

Sierra Leone

Failure to submit. The Committee once again notes with deep concern that the Government has failed to reply to its previous comments. It recalls once more that the constitutional obligation of submission is of the highest importance and is a fundamental element of the standards system of the ILO. The Committee therefore once again firmly urges the Government to provide information on the submission to Parliament of the instruments adopted by the Conference in October 1976 (Convention No. 146 and Recommendation No. 154, adopted at its 62nd Session), and all instruments adopted between 1977 and 2019 that have not been submitted. The Government is firmly urged to take steps without delay to submit all 93 pending instruments to Parliament.

The Committee once again recalls that the Government may request the technical assistance of the Office, if it so wishes, to assist it in achieving compliance with its obligations under article 19 of the Constitution with respect to the submission to the competent authorities of the instruments adopted by the Conference.

The Committee also reiterates its request that the Government provide information with respect to the tripartite consultations held prior to the ratification on 25 August 2021 by Sierra Leone of eight instruments, as required by the Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144).

Solomon Islands

Serious failure to submit. The Committee once again notes with deep concern that the Government has provided no response to its previous comments. It therefore recalls yet again that the constitutional obligation of submission is of the highest importance and is a fundamental element of the standards system of the ILO. The Committee once again expresses the firm hope, as did the Conference Committee in June 2016, June 2017, June 2018, June 2019, June 2021 and June 2022, that the Government will comply with its obligation to submit Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols to the competent authority (the National Parliament). The Committee firmly urges the Government to take steps without delay to submit to the National Congress the 65 pending instruments adopted by the Conference between 1984 and 2019 to comply with its constitutional obligations under article 19 of the ILO Constitution and provide the required information to the International Labour Office.

The Committee once again recalls that the Government may request the technical assistance of the Office, if it so wishes, to assist it in achieving compliance with its obligations under article 19 of the Constitution with respect to the submission to the competent authorities of the instruments adopted by the Conference.

Somalia

Submission. The Committee notes with regret that the Government has once again not provided a reply to its 2018 observations. It recalls once more that the constitutional obligation of submission is of the highest importance and is a fundamental element of the standards system of the ILO. The Committee once again firmly urges the Government to take steps without delay to submit to the competent national authority the 51 instruments adopted by the Conference between 1989 and 2019 which are still pending submission and to provide the information required under article 19 of the ILO Constitution to the International Labour Office.

The Committee once again recalls that the Government may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office, if it so wishes, to assist it in achieving compliance with its obligations under article 19 of the Constitution with respect to the submission to the competent authorities of the instruments adopted by the Conference.

Syrian Arab Republic

Serious failure to submit. The Committee once again notes with deep regret that the Government has failed to reply to its previous comments. It once again recalls the Government's indications in September 2015 that the Consultative Council for Consultation and Social Dialogue held discussions related to the submission of the instruments adopted by the Conference to the competent authorities. The Committee further notes that 41 instruments adopted by the Conference are still pending submission to the People's Council. In this context, the Committee recalls once more that the constitutional obligation of submission is of the highest importance and is a fundamental element of the standards system of the ILO. The Committee therefore once again expresses the firm hope, as did the Conference Committee in June 2018, June 2019, June 2021 and June 2022, that the Government will provide information on the submission to the People's Council of the 41 instruments adopted by the Conference at its 66th and 69th Sessions (Recommendations Nos 167 and 168) and at its 70th, 77th, 78th, 79th, 80th, 81st, 82nd, 83rd, 85th, 86th, 90th (Recommendations Nos 193 and 194), 91st, 92nd, 95th, 96th, 99th, 100th, 101st, 103rd, 104th, 106th and 108th Sessions. The Committee once again firmly urges the Government to take steps to submit the pending instruments without delay.

The Committee once again recalls that the Government may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office, if it so wishes, to assist it in achieving compliance with its obligations under article 19 of the Constitution with respect to the submission to the competent authorities of the instruments adopted by the Conference.

Timor-Leste

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes with deep regret that the Government has not replied to its previous comments. It recalls that the constitutional obligation of submission is of the highest importance and is a fundamental element of the standards system of the ILO. It therefore once again reiterates its request that the Government provide information on the submission to the National Parliament of the ten instruments adopted by the Conference at its 99th, 100th, 101st, 103rd, 104th and 106th and 108th Sessions (2010–19).

The Committee recalls once more that the Government may request the technical assistance of the Office, if it so wishes, to assist it in achieving compliance with its obligations under article 19 of the Constitution with respect to the submission to the competent authorities of the instruments adopted by the Conference.

Tuvalu

Serious failure to submit. The Committee once again notes with deep concern that the Government has provided no response to its previous comments. It recalls that Tuvalu became a Member of the Organization on 27 May 2008. In accordance with article 19(5)(a) and (6)(a) of the ILO Constitution, the Office communicated to the Government the text of the Convention, Recommendations and the Protocol adopted by the Conference at its 99th, 100th, 101st, 103rd, 104th, 106th and 108th Sessions (2010–19). The Committee recalls that the constitutional obligation of submission is of the highest importance and is a fundamental element of the standards system of the ILO. The Committee firmly trusts that the Government will take steps to submit without delay the ten instruments adopted by the Conference between 2010 and 2019 and provide the information required under article 19 of the ILO Constitution to the Office.

In this context, the Committee once again recalls that the Government may request the technical assistance of the Office, if it so wishes, to assist it in achieving compliance with its obligations under article 19 of the ILO Constitution relating to the submission of the instruments adopted by the Conference to the competent authorities.

United Arab Emirates

Failure to submit. The Committee notes with regret that the Government has once again failed to respond to its previous comments. It recalls that the constitutional obligation of submission is of the highest importance and is a fundamental element of the standards system of the ILO.

The Committee recalls that when a State decides to become a Member of the Organization it accepts to fulfil the obligations established in the Constitution, such as the obligation to submit to the competent authorities the instruments adopted at the Conference. It emphasizes, however, that the obligation of ILO Member States to submit the instruments adopted by the Conference to the competent authorities does not imply any obligation to propose the ratification or application of the instruments in question, or to take any other specific action. Pursuant to article 19 of the ILO Constitution, Member States have complete freedom as to the nature of the proposals to be made, if any, when submitting the instruments. Submission does not imply any obligation to propose the ratification of a Convention or Protocol, nor does it imply the application of one or more of the principles set out in an unratified Convention or a Recommendation. In this respect, the Committee once again draws the attention of the Government to the 2005 Memorandum concerning the obligation to submit Conventions and Recommendations to the competent authorities, adopted by the Governing Body in 2005, particularly Part I on the aims and objectives of submission.

The Committee understands that, in the United Arab Emirates, instruments adopted by the Conference are submitted to the Council of Ministers as the authority competent to ratify a Convention or Protocol, as well as to decide on any other action which it may deem appropriate in respect of the instruments adopted by the Conference (2005 Memorandum, Part I(b)). The Committee nevertheless recalls that, for the purposes of article 19 of the ILO Constitution, discussion in a deliberative assembly – or at a minimum, transmission to a deliberative assembly of information concerning the instruments adopted by the International Labour Conference – is an essential component of the constitutional obligation to submit, as indicated in the 2005 Memorandum (2005 Memorandum, Part I(c) and Part II(c)). This obligation is applicable even in cases where legislative power is vested in the executive by virtue of the Constitution of the Member State. The objective of submission is twofold: (1) to encourage ratification or application of instruments adopted by the Conference through submission to the competent authority empowered to consider ratification; and (2) to bring the instruments adopted by the Conference to the knowledge of the public through their submission to a parliamentary or deliberative body. Given the importance of the latter objective, the Committee has noted that, even in the absence of a parliamentary body, informing a consultative body makes it possible to carry out a full examination of the instruments, ensuring that they are widely disseminated among the public, which is one of the purposes of the obligation of submission (2005 Memorandum, Part II(d)).

The Committee therefore expresses the hope that the Government will take urgent measures to further examine this matter in order to ensure full compliance with this twofold obligation to submit, established in article 19 of the ILO Constitution, and that it will soon be in a position to provide information on the submission to the Federal National Council (Majlis Watani Ittihadi) of the 11 instruments adopted by the Conference at its 94th, 99th, 100th, 101st, 103rd, 104th and 106th Sessions (2006, 2010–17). It also requests the Government to provide information on the submission to the competent national authorities of the Violence and Harassment Convention (No. 190) and the Violence and Harassment Recommendation (No. 206), 2019, adopted by the Conference at its 108th Session.

Vanuatu

Serious failure to submit. The Committee once again notes with deep concern that the Government has provided no reply to its previous comments. It recalls once more that the constitutional obligation of submission is of the highest importance and is a fundamental element of the standards system of the ILO. The Committee once again expresses the firm hope, as did the Conference Committee in June 2016, June 2017, June 2018, June 2019, June 2021 and June 2022, that the Government will comply with its obligation to submit Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols to the competent authority (the Parliament of Vanuatu). The Committee firmly urges the Government to provide information on the submission to the Parliament of Vanuatu of the 18 instruments adopted by the Conference at 12 sessions held between 2003 and 2019 (91st, 92nd, 94th, 95th, 96th, 99th, 100th, 101st, 103rd, 104th, 106th and 108th Sessions).

The Committee once again recalls that the Government may request the technical assistance of the Office, if it so wishes, to assist it in achieving compliance with its obligations under article 19 of the Constitution with respect to the submission to the competent authorities of the instruments adopted by the Conference.

Yemen

Serious failure to submit. The Committee notes with deep regret that the Government has yet again provided no response to its previous comments. It therefore once again recalls the information provided to the Conference by the Government in June 2018, indicating that it was not able to submit instruments adopted by the Conference to the House of Representatives due to the ongoing conflict in Yemen. While noting the complex situation in the country, particularly the ongoing conflict, the Committee trusts that, when national circumstances permit, the Government will be in a position to provide information on the submission to the House of Representatives of the 21 instruments adopted by the Conference at its 88th (Maternity Protection Recommendation, 2000 (No. 191)), 89th (Safety and Health in Agriculture Recommendation, 2001 (No. 192), 90th, 92nd (Human Resources Development Recommendation, 2004 (No. 195), 94th, 95th (Promotional Framework for Occupational Safety and Health Recommendation, 2006 (No. 197) and the Employment Relationship Recommendation, 2006 (No. 198), 96th, 99th, 100th, 101st, 103rd, 104th, 106th and 108th Sessions (2000–19).

The Committee recalls that the Government may request the technical assistance of the Office, if it so wishes, to assist it in achieving compliance with its obligations under article 19 of the Constitution with respect to the submission to the competent authorities of the instruments adopted by the Conference.

Zambia

Serious failure to submit. Date of submission. The Committee notes with concern that the Government has yet again provided no reply to its previous comments. It recalls once more that the constitutional obligation of submission is of the highest importance and is a fundamental element of the standards system of the ILO. The Committee again recalls the information provided by the Government in September 2010, indicating that 12 instruments adopted by the Conference from 1996 to 2007 had been submitted to the National Assembly, but without specifying the date of submission of these instruments. The Committee therefore reiterates its request once more that the Government indicate the dates on which the above-mentioned instruments were submitted to the National Assembly. It also urges the Government to provide information on any action taken by the National Assembly in relation to the submissions, as well as with respect to the prior tripartite consultations that took place with the social partners. Moreover, the Committee again requests the Government to provide information on the submission to the National Assembly of the ten instruments adopted by the Conference at its 99th, 100th, 101st, 103rd, 104th, 106th and 108th Sessions (2010–19).

The Committee recalls that the Government may request the technical assistance of the Office, if it so wishes, to assist it in achieving compliance with its obligations under article 19 of the Constitution with respect to the submission to the competent authorities of the instruments adopted by the Conference.

Appendix I. Reports requested on ratified Conventions registered as at 10 December 2022 (articles 22 and 35 of the Constitution)

Article 22 of the Constitution of the International Labour Organization provides that “each of the Members agrees to make an annual report to the International Labour Office on the measures which it has taken to give effect to the provisions of the Conventions to which it is a party. These reports shall be made in such form and shall contain such particulars as the Governing Body may request”. Article 23 of the Constitution provides that the Director-General shall lay before the next meeting of the Conference a summary of the reports communicated to him by Members in pursuance of article 22, and that each Member shall communicate copies of these reports to the representative organizations of employers and workers.

At its 204th Session (November 1977), the Governing Body approved the following arrangements for the presentation by the Director-General to the Conference of summaries of reports submitted by governments under articles 22 and 35 of the Constitution:

- (a) the practice of tabular classification of reports, without summary of their contents, which has been followed for several years in respect of reports subsequent to first reports after ratification, should be applied to all reports, including first reports;
- (b) the Director-General should make available, for consultation at the Conference, the original texts of all reports received on ratified Conventions; in addition, photocopies of the reports should be supplied on request to members of delegations.

At its 267th Session (November 1996), the Governing Body approved new measures for rationalization and simplification.

Reports received under articles 22 and 35 of the Constitution appear in simplified form in a table annexed to the report of the Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations; first reports are indicated in parentheses.

Requests for consultation or copies of reports may be addressed to the secretariat of the Committee on the Application of Standards.

Appendix IV. Summary of information supplied by governments with regard to the obligation to submit the instruments adopted by the International Labour Conference to the competent authorities

Article 19 of the Constitution of the International Labour Organization prescribes, in paragraphs 5, 6 and 7 that Members shall bring the Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols adopted by the International Labour Conference before the competent authorities within a specific time period. Under the same provisions, the governments of Member States shall inform the Director-General of the International Labour Office of the measures taken to submit the instruments to the competent authorities, and also communicate particulars of the authority or authorities.

In accordance with article 23 of the Constitution, a summary of the information communicated by Member States in accordance with article 19 is submitted to the Conference.

At its 276th Session (November 1996), the Governing Body approved new measures to rationalize and simplify proceedings. As a result, the summarized information is presented in an appendix to the report of the Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations.

The following summary contains the most recent information on the submission to the competent authorities of the Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930, and the Forced Labour (Supplementary Measures) Recommendation, 2014 (No. 203), adopted at the 103rd Session of the Conference (June 2014), the Transition from the Informal to the Formal Economy Recommendation, 2015 (No. 204), adopted at the 104th Session of the Conference (June 2015), the Employment and Decent Work for Peace and Resilience Recommendation, 2017 (No. 205), adopted by the Conference at its 106th Session (June 2017), and the Violence and Harassment at Work Convention (No. 190), and Recommendation (No. 206), 2019, adopted at the 108th Session of the Conference.

The summarized information includes communications that were forwarded to the Director-General of the International Labour Office after the closure of the 109th Session of the Conference (June 2021) and which could not therefore be laid before the Conference at that session.

Benin. The Government submitted the Violence and Harassment Convention, 2019 (No. 190) and the Violence and Harassment Recommendation, (No. 206), 2019 to the National Congress on 7 December 2020.

Bulgaria. The Government submitted the Transition from the Informal to the Formal Economy Recommendation, 2015 (No. 204), to the National Congress on 4 April 2016.

Burkina Faso. The Government submitted the Violence and Harassment Convention, 2019 (No. 190), the Forced Labour (Supplementary Measures) Recommendation, 2014 (No. 203), the Employment and Decent Work for Peace and Resilience Recommendation, 2017 (No. 205), and the Violence and Harassment Recommendation, 2019 (No. 206) to the National Assembly on 7 July 2022.

Cambodia. The Government submitted the Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930, the Violence and Harassment Convention, 2019 (No. 190), the Employment and Decent Work for Peace and Resilience Recommendation, 2017 (No. 205), and the Violence and Harassment Recommendation, 2019 (No. 206) to the Parliament on 4 October 2021.

China. The Government submitted the Violence and Harassment Convention, 2019 (No. 190) and the Violence and Harassment Recommendation, (No. 206), 2019 to the State Council on 19 January 2021.

Croatia. The Government submitted the Employment and Decent Work for Peace and Resilience Recommendation, 2017 (No. 205), to the Parliament on 17 March 2022.

Egypt. The Government submitted the Violence and Harassment Convention, 2019 (No. 190) and the Violence and Harassment Recommendation, (No. 206), 2019 to the House of Representatives (Maglis El Nouwab) on 28 June 2022.

Eswatini. The Government submitted the 2014 Protocol to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930, the Violence and Harassment Convention, 2019 (No. 190), the Forced Labour (Supplementary Measures) Recommendation, 2014 (No. 203), the Transition from the Informal to the Formal Economy Recommendation, 2015 (No. 204), the Employment and Decent Work for Peace and Resilience Recommendation, 2017 (No. 205), and the Violence and Harassment Recommendation, 2019 (No. 206) to the Parliament (to the Senate on 23 May 2022 and to the House of Assembly on 25 May 2022).

Ireland. The Government submitted the Violence and Harassment Convention, 2019 (No. 190) and the Violence and Harassment Recommendation, (No. 206), 2019 to the Parliament (the Dáil Éireann) on 20 July 2022.

Lesotho. The Government submitted the Violence and Harassment Convention, 2019 (No. 190), the Forced Labour (Supplementary Measures) Recommendation, 2014 (No. 203), the Employment and Decent Work for Peace and Resilience Recommendation, 2017 (No. 205), and the Violence and Harassment Recommendation, 2019 (No. 206) to the Parliament (to the Senate on 30 May 2022 and to the National Assembly on 31 May 2022).

Qatar. The Government submitted the Violence and Harassment Convention, 2019 (No. 190) and the Violence and Harassment Recommendation, (No. 206), 2019 to the Council of Ministers on 22 January 2020 and to the Consultative Council (Majlis Al-Shoura) on 16 February 2020.

Senegal. The Government submitted the Violence and Harassment Convention, 2019 (No. 190) and the Violence and Harassment Recommendation, (No. 206), 2019 to the Parliament on 22 June 2021.

Sri Lanka. The Government submitted the Violence and Harassment Convention, 2019 (No. 190) and the Violence and Harassment Recommendation, (No. 206), 2019 to the Parliament on 4 May 2021.

Appendix V. Information supplied by governments with regard to the obligation to submit Conventions and Recommendations to the competent authorities (31st to 110th Sessions of the International Labour Conference, 1948–2022)

Note. The number of the Convention or Recommendation is given in parentheses, preceded by the letter "C" or "R" as the case may be, when only some of the texts adopted at any one session have been submitted. The Protocols are indicated by the letter "P" followed by the number of the corresponding Convention. When the ratification of a Convention was registered, that Convention and the corresponding Recommendation are considered as submitted.

Account has been taken of the date of admission or readmission of Member States to the ILO for determining the sessions of the Conference whose texts are taken into consideration.

The Conference did not adopt any Conventions or Recommendations at its 57th Session (June 1972), 73rd Session (June 1987), 93rd Session (June 2005), 97th Session (June 2008), 98th Session (June 2009), 102nd Session (June 2013), 105th Session (June 2016), 107th Session (June 2018) and 109th Session (June 2021).
