The publication of information concerning action taken in respect of international labour Conventions and Recommendations does not imply any expression of view by the International Labour Office on the legal status of the State having communicated such information (including the communication of a ratification or declaration), or on its authority over the areas or territories in respect of which such information is communicated; in certain cases this may present problems on which the ILO is not competent to express an opinion.

The Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations is an independent body composed of legal experts charged with examining the application of ILO Conventions and Recommendations by ILO Member States. The annual report of the Committee of Experts covers numerous matters related to the application of ILO standards. The structure of the report, as modified in 2003, is divided into the following parts:

- (a) The Reader's note provides indications on the Committee of Experts and the Committee on the Application of Standards of the International Labour Conference (their mandate, functioning and the institutional context in which they operate) (Part A, pages 35–39).
- (b) Part I: the General Report describes the manner in which the Committee of Experts undertakes its work and the extent to which Member States have fulfilled their constitutional obligations in relation to international labour standards, and it draws the attention to issues of general interest arising out of the Committee's work (Part A, pages 41–91).
- (c) Part II: Observations concerning particular countries cover the sending of reports, the application of ratified Conventions (see section I), and the obligation to submit instruments to the competent authorities (see section II) (Part A, pages 93–981).
- (d) Part III: General Survey, in which the Committee of Experts examines the state of the legislation and practice regarding a specific area covered by a given number of Conventions and Recommendations. This examination covers all Member States regardless of whether or not they have ratified the given Conventions. The General Survey is published as a separate volume (Report III(Part B)) and this year it concerns the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111), the Workers with Family Responsibilities Convention, 1981 (No. 156), the Maternity Protection Convention, 2000 (No. 183), the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Recommendation, 1958 (No. 111), the Workers with Family Responsibilities Recommendation, 1981 (No. 165) and the Maternity Protection Recommendation, 2000 (No. 191) (Part B).

The report of the Committee of Experts is also available at: www.ilo.org/normes.

Overview of the ILO supervisory mechanisms

Since its creation in 1919, the mandate of the International Labour Organization (ILO) has included adopting international labour standards, promoting their ratification and application in its Member States, and the supervision of their application as a fundamental means of achieving its objectives. In order to monitor the progress of Member States in the application of international labour standards, the ILO has developed supervisory mechanisms which are unique at the international level.¹

Under article 19 of the ILO Constitution, a number of obligations arise for Member States upon the adoption of international labour standards, including the requirement to submit newly adopted standards to national competent authorities and the obligation to report periodically on the measures taken to give effect to the provisions of unratified Conventions and Recommendations.

A number of supervisory mechanisms exist whereby the Organization examines the standards-related obligations of Member States deriving from ratified Conventions. This supervision occurs both in the context of a regular procedure through periodic reports (article 22 of the ILO Constitution),² as well as through special procedures based on representations or complaints to the Governing Body made by ILO constituents (articles 24 and 26 of the Constitution, respectively). Moreover, since 1950, a special procedure has existed whereby complaints relating to freedom of association are referred to the Committee on Freedom of Association (CFA) of the Governing Body. The CFA may also examine complaints relating to Member States that have not ratified the relevant freedom of association Conventions.

Role of employers' and workers' organizations

As a natural consequence of its tripartite structure, the ILO was the first international organization to associate the social partners directly in its activities. The participation of employers' and workers' organizations in the supervisory mechanisms is recognized in the Constitution under article 23, paragraph 2, which provides that reports and information submitted by governments in accordance with articles 19 and 22 must be communicated to the representative organizations.

In practice, representative employers' and workers' organizations may submit to their governments' observations on the reports concerning the application of international labour standards. They may, for instance, draw attention to a discrepancy in law or practice regarding the application of a ratified Convention. Furthermore, any employers' or workers' organization may submit observations on the application of international labour standards directly to the Office. The Office will then forward these to the government concerned, which will have an opportunity to respond before the observations are examined by the Committee of Experts except in exceptional circumstances.³

² Reports are requested every three years for the fundamental and governance Conventions, and every six years for other Conventions. At its 334th Session the Governing Body decided to expand the reporting cycle for the latter category of Conventions from five to six years (GB.334/INS/5). Reports are due for groups of Conventions according to subject matter. Following the amendment of the 1998 Declaration, the Governing Body decided to apply a three-year cycle for the fundamental Conventions on occupational safety and health as from 2024 (GB.346/INS/3/3).

³ General Report, paras 127–136.

Origins of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards and the Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations

During the early years of the ILO, both the adoption of international labour standards and the regular supervisory work were undertaken within the framework of the plenary sitting of the annual International Labour Conference. However, the considerable increase in the number of ratifications of Conventions rapidly led to a similarly significant increase in the number of annual reports submitted. It soon became clear that the plenary sitting of the Conference would not be able to examine all of these reports at the same time as adopting standards and discussing other important matters. In response to this situation, the Conference in 1926 adopted a resolution⁴ establishing on an annual basis a Conference Committee (subsequently named the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards) and requesting the Governing Body to appoint a technical committee (subsequently named the Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations) which would be responsible for drawing up a report for the Conference. These two committees have become the two pillars of the ILO regular supervisory system.

Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations

Composition

The Committee of Experts is composed of 20 members, who are outstanding legal experts at the national and international levels. The members of the Committee are appointed by the Governing Body upon the recommendation of its Officers based on proposals by the Director-General. Appointments are made in a personal capacity from among impartial persons of competence and independent standing drawn from all regions of the world, in order to enable the Committee to have at its disposal first-hand experience of different legal, economic and social systems. The appointments are made for renewable periods of three years. In 2002, the Committee decided that there would be a limit of 15 years' service for all members, representing a maximum of four renewals after the first three year appointment. At its 79th Session (November–December 2008), the Committee decided that its Chairperson would be elected for a period of three years, which would be renewable once for a further three years. At the start of each session, the Committee would also elect a Reporter.

Work of the Committee

The Committee of Experts meets annually in November–December. In accordance with the mandate given by the Governing Body,⁵ the Committee is called upon to examine the following:

- the periodic reports under article 22 of the Constitution on the measures taken by Member States to give effect to the provisions of the Conventions to which they are parties;
- the information and reports concerning Conventions and Recommendations communicated by Member States in accordance with article 19 of the Constitution;

⁴ Record of Proceedings of the Eighth Session of the International Labour Conference, 1926, Vol. 1, Appendix VII.

⁵ Terms of reference of the Committee of Experts, Minutes of the 103rd Session of the Governing Body (1947), Appendix XII, para. 37.

- information and reports on the measures taken by Member States in accordance with article 35 of the Constitution.⁶

The task of the Committee of Experts is to indicate the extent to which each Member State's legislation and practice are in conformity with ratified Conventions and the extent to which Member States have fulfilled their obligations under the ILO Constitution in relation to standards. In carrying out this task, the Committee adheres to its principles of independence, objectivity and impartiality.⁷ The comments of the Committee of Experts on the fulfilment by Member States of their standards-related obligations take the form of either observations or direct requests. Observations are generally used in more serious or long-standing cases of failure to fulfil obligations. They are reproduced in the annual report of the Committee of Experts, which is then submitted to the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June every year. Direct requests are not published in the report of the Committee of Experts, but are communicated directly to the government concerned and are available online.⁸ In addition, the Committee of Experts examines, in the context of the General Survey, the state of the legislation and practice concerning a specific area covered by a given number of Conventions and Recommendations chosen by the Governing Body.⁹ The General Survey is based on the reports submitted in accordance with articles 19 and 22 of the Constitution, and it covers all Member States regardless of whether or not they have ratified the concerned Conventions.

Report of the Committee of Experts

As a result of its work, the Committee produces an annual report. The report consists of two volumes.

The first volume (Report III (Part A))¹⁰ is divided into two parts:

- Part I: the General Report describes, on the one hand, the progress of the work of the Committee of Experts and specific matters relating to it that have been addressed by the Committee and, on the other hand, the extent to which Member States have fulfilled their constitutional obligations in relation to international labour standards.
- Part II: Observations concerning particular countries on the fulfilment of obligations in respect of the submission of reports, the application of ratified Conventions grouped by subject matter and the obligation to submit instruments to the competent authorities.

The second volume contains the General Survey (Report III(Part B)).

⁸ General Report, para. 106. Observations and direct requests are accessible through the NORMLEX database available at: www.ilo.org/normes.

Committee on the Application of Standards of the International Labour Conference

Composition

The Conference Committee on the Application of Standards is one of the two standing committees of the Conference. It is tripartite and therefore comprises representatives of governments, employers and workers. At each session, the Committee elects its Officers, which include a Chairperson (Government member), two Vice-Chairpersons (Employer member and Worker member) and a Reporter (Government member).

Work of the Committee

The Conference Committee on the Application of Standards meets annually at the Conference usually in June. Pursuant to article 10 of the Standing Orders of the Conference, the Committee shall consider:

- measures taken to give effect to ratified Conventions (article 22 of the Constitution);
- reports communicated in accordance with article 19 of the Constitution (General Surveys);
- measures taken in accordance with article 35 of the Constitution (non-metropolitan territories).

The Committee is required to present its report to the plenary sitting of the Conference.

Following the independent technical examination carried out by the Committee of Experts, the proceedings of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards provide an opportunity for the representatives of governments, employers and workers to examine together the manner in which States are fulfilling their standards-related obligations. Governments are able to elaborate on information previously supplied to the Committee of Experts, indicate any further measures taken or proposed since the last session of the Committee of Experts, draw attention to difficulties encountered in the fulfilment of obligations and seek guidance as to how to overcome such difficulties.

The Conference Committee on the Application of Standards discusses the report of the Committee of Experts, and the documents submitted by governments. The work of the Conference Committee starts with a general discussion based essentially on the General Report of the Committee of Experts. The Conference Committee then discusses the General Survey. It also examines cases of serious failure to fulfil reporting and other standards-related obligations. Finally, the Conference Committee examines a number of individual cases concerning the application of ratified Conventions which have been the subject of observations by the Committee of Experts. At the end of the discussion of each individual case, the Conference Committee adopts conclusions on the case in question.

In its report ¹¹ submitted to the plenary sitting of the Conference for adoption, the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards may invite the Member State whose case has been discussed to accept a technical assistance mission by the International Labour Office to increase its capacity to fulfil its obligations, or may propose other types of missions. The Conference Committee may also request a government to submit additional information or address specific concerns in its next report to the Committee of Experts. The Conference Committee also draws the attention of the Conference to certain cases, such as cases of progress and cases of serious failure to comply with ratified Conventions.

¹¹ The report is published in the Record of Proceedings of the Conference. Since 2007, it has also been issued in a separate publication. See, for the last report, Conference Committee on the Application of Standards: Extracts from the Record of Proceedings, International Labour Conference, 110th Session, Geneva, 2022.

The Committee of Experts and the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards

In numerous reports, the Committee of Experts has emphasized the importance of the spirit of mutual respect, cooperation and responsibility that has always existed in relations between the Committee of Experts and the Conference Committee. It has accordingly become the practice for the Chairperson of the Committee of Experts to attend the general discussion of the Conference Committee and the discussion on the General Survey as an observer, with the opportunity to address the Conference Committee at the opening of the general discussion and to make remarks at the end of the discussion on the General Survey. Similarly, the Employer and Worker Vice-Chairpersons of the Conference Committee are invited to meet the Committee of Experts during its sessions and discuss issues of common interest within the framework of a special session held for that purpose.

4. Professor Herrera Vergara holds a Master's Degree in Labour Law and Social Security from the University Colegio Mayor de Nuestra Señora del Rosario in Bogota and a Diploma in Community Health and Social Security from the Centre for Cooperative and Labour Studies for Latin America in Jerusalem (Colombia). He has written on labour law reform. Professor Herrera Vergara was Vice-President of the Iberoamerican Academy for Labour Law and Social Security from 2019 to 2022. From 1994 to 2002, he served as judge on the Colombian Supreme Court including as President (1996) and President of the Labour Chamber (1999 and 2002). He served as Conjuez of the Constitutional Court from 2014 to 2019 and of the Supreme Court from 2003 to 2022.
5. Judge Kanyip is President of the National Industrial Court of Nigeria (NICN), which he joined as Member in 2000 and thereafter as Judge in 2006. He referred to international best practices in labour as well as to ILO Conventions in a number of judgments. He holds an LLB Degree in Law, a Masters (LLM) Degree in Commercial Law with a thesis in company taxation, and a PhD in law with specialization in consumer protection law. Fellow of a number of institutes, including the Nigerian Institute of Legal Studies and the Chartered Institute of Taxation of Nigeria, Judge Kanyip has taught law of contract, commercial law, law of tort, tax law and consumer protection in Ahmadu Bello University, Zaria and Benue State University, Makurdi, all in Nigeria. He was a Senior Researcher Fellow at the Nigerian Institute of Advanced Legal Studies (NIALS) in Lagos and rose to the position of Associate Research Professor of Law before joining the NICN in 2000. His research and publication straddled the areas of consumer protection, commercial law, tax law and labour law. In 2006 and 2010, he participated in the processes that led to the promulgation of the National Industrial Court Act 2006 and the Third Alteration to the 1999 Constitution of Nigeria as well as in the comprehensive reform of labour laws still ongoing and in the context of which he worked with the ILO. In 2017, he undertook the Study on Harmonization of Labour Laws in the Economic Community of West African States (ECOWAS) and served as a member of the Committee of Experts that reviewed the Draft Report.

6. Dato Ambiga Sreenevasan holds an Honorary Doctorate from the University of Exeter (2011) having graduated with a Bachelor of Laws in 1979. She was President of the Malaysian Bar Council from 2007 to 2009 and Chairperson of the Bar Council's Committee on Rights between 2010 and 2012. She was also President of the National Human Rights Society from 2014 to 2018. She is currently a member of the International Commission of Jurists and an alternate member of its Executive Committee. A well-known human rights advocate, Dato Sreenevasan has received several international awards for her work, including: the Chevalier de la Légion d'honneur; the 4th Commonwealth Rule of Law Award; the United Nations Malaysia award for contribution to the Sustainable Development Goals relating to human rights and governance; and the International Women of Courage Award, for her work on women's rights and religious freedom. Dato Sreenevasan practises as senior counsel in a wide array of civil, commercial and corporate litigation matters and was recognized in 2019 as a leading expert on dispute resolution in the Legal 500 Asia-Pacific guide.
7. As a result of the three appointments, the Committee functioned with a close to full composition of 19 members. One member, Ms Machulskaya, informed the Committee that she could not participate in this year's session for personal reasons.
8. This year, Ms Graciela Dixon Caton continued her mandate as Chairperson and Mr Shinichi Ago was elected as Reporter.
9. The Committee noted that this was the last year on the Committee for one of its outstanding members, Mr Ranjeva, who had completed 15 years of service. It also noted that two members, Ms Owens and Ms Monaghan, had decided to leave the Committee for personal reasons after having served for 12 and 9 years respectively. The Committee expressed its great appreciation for the outstanding manner in which Ms Monaghan, Ms Owens and Mr Ranjeva carried out their mandate during their long years of service on the Committee and particularly commends them for their technical excellence, legal expertise, independence and moral standing. The Committee also expressed its deepest appreciation to Professor Owens for the excellent way in which she fulfilled her functions as Reporter for six years (2014, 2015, 2016, 2017, 2020 and 2021).

B. Working methods

10. In order to guide the Committee's reflection on continuous improvement of its work, a Subcommittee on Working Methods was set up in 2001 with the mandate to examine the working methods of the Committee and any related subjects, in order to make appropriate recommendations to the Committee so that it can perform its functions in the best and most efficient manner possible and, in so doing, assist Member States in meeting their obligations in relation to international labour standards and enhance the functioning of the supervisory system. This year, under the Chairpersonship of Mr Bernd Waas, the Subcommittee on Working Methods met for the 22nd time.
11. The Subcommittee continued its discussion on a possible further modernization of its working methods. It discussed the distinction between observations and direct requests and decided as a result, that where observations are accompanied by direct requests, the text of the latter could be streamlined. It also decided to extend the practice of urgent appeals to reports which have not been submitted for three years or more even if no comment is pending. The list of these urgent appeals appears in this year's General Report in the table accompanying paragraph 91. Finally, the Subcommittee was briefed by the Office on certain initiatives and pilot projects under consideration in a context of further modernization of the ILO's normative action, including its supervisory mechanism. The Subcommittee noted that the Governing Body is to discuss related matters at its 349th Session (November 2023) and looks forward to the outcome of this discussion.

Information and collaboration sessions

Information session with Government representatives

12. At its previous 92nd Session, the Committee gave positive consideration to the request put forward by Government members of the Conference Committee to consider the possibility of a meeting between the Committee of Experts and Government representatives. Accordingly, an information session was organized at its 93rd Session to which all Member States were invited. A fruitful exchange took place based on questions raised by Government representatives on the following subjects:
- how to give more visibility to cases of progress;
 - how to improve synergies with reports provided to other UN entities notably in the framework of the human rights mechanisms so as to streamline the reporting burden on governments and related reporting difficulties;
 - how to streamline article 22 reports on similar Conventions to avoid duplication;
 - the criteria for determining which organizations may be considered as employers' or workers' organizations when they submit comments under article 23, paragraph 2, of the ILO Constitution for examination by the Committee;
 - any improvements in working methods in addition to the extension of the Committee's annual session by two weeks as of this year;
 - follow-up given by the Committee of Experts to cases referred to it by the Committee on Freedom of Association.

Collaboration with the United Nations

13. In last year's General Report, the Committee invited the UN treaty bodies to a joint reflection over ways to strengthen synergies and complementarities drawing on each body's respective and distinct mandates in a context of a repositioned UN development system and the UN Secretary-General's initiative known as the Call to Action for Human Rights. The Committee is pleased to note that this call was positively received and led to the organization of an exchange with the Chairpersons or Vice-Chairpersons of seven human rights treaty bodies, namely, the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, the Committee on the Rights of the Child, the Committee on Migrant Workers and Members of their Families, the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination Against Women, the Committee Against Torture, the Committee on Enforced Disappearances, and the Subcommittee on Prevention of Torture. The discussion centred on the current challenges faced in a world confronted with multiple interlocking crises and the opportunities for action provided by the UN Secretary-General's Call to Action for Human Rights and the repositioned UN Development System. Many participants expressed a desire to develop a closer dialogue and periodical exchanges with a view to creating synergies through joint statements and exchange of analysis in the future. They also agreed on a joint statement to mark the third anniversary of the UN Secretary General's Call to Action for Human Rights. The joint statement will be published as an Addendum to the Committee's report upon its release on 24 February 2023.

Relations with the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards

14. A spirit of mutual respect, cooperation and responsibility has consistently prevailed over the years in the Committee's relations with the Committee on the Application of Standards of the International Labour Conference. In this context, the Chairperson of the Committee has been invited to participate in the general discussion of the Conference Committee at the 110th Session of the International Labour Conference which took place in a hybrid modality in May-June 2022 in the context of the continuing COVID-19 pandemic and parallel interlocking crises. In addition, the Chairperson of the Committee on Freedom of Association was invited once again to address the Conference Committee in order to present the Committee's Annual Report.
15. The Chairperson of the Committee of Experts invited the Employer Vice-Chairperson (Ms Sonia Regenbogen) and the Worker Vice-Chairperson (Mr Marc Leemans) to participate in a special sitting of the Committee at its present session. They both accepted this invitation. An interactive and thorough exchange of views took place on matters of common interest.
16. The Chairperson invited the two Vice-Chairpersons to have a common reflection on how to work in mutually reinforcing ways towards securing compliance with the conclusions adopted by the Conference Committee on the cases considered each year. The special sitting with the Vice-Chairpersons could serve as a forum for an exchange on this crucial aspect of making the supervisory system more effective.
17. The Employer Vice-Chairperson emphasized that the special sitting with the two Vice-Chairpersons was an established practice of critical importance for cooperation between the two Committees and for standards supervision with greater and lasting positive impact. She considered that additional opportunities should be found for deeper exchanges on specific matters and would welcome an exchange on the importance of effective and authoritative supervision. She added that the employers fully supported the goal of effective supervision for broad and effective implementation of international labour standards and looked forward to discussing ways to work constructively with the Committee of Experts in this framework.
18. The Employer Vice-Chairperson added that there was a global tripartite consensus that the Centenary Declaration should be the key framework leading to sustainable recovery from the COVID-19 pandemic by responding to the changing patterns of the world of work, protecting workers and taking into account the needs of sustainable enterprises. In a context where the new Director-General accorded high priority to modernizing the supervisory system, it was essential that all parties fully understood the needs of the tripartite constituents in their national contexts and provided them with practical and effective guidance for the implementation of international labour standards in law and in practice at the national level. The key to broad and effective implementation was to promote social dialogue and tripartism at both national and global levels.
19. Noting the low reporting levels and high number of comments, she called for practical ways to be found in order to be more impactful at the national level, produce more constructive results, modernize the supervisory system and ensure more effective supervision, emphasizing the importance of open dialogue and close cooperation of all actors involved. In her view, the Committee of Experts must ensure that its assessments are up to date, sensitive to the views of the tripartite constituents and receptive to the statements made in the Conference Committee, observations by employers' and workers' organizations under article 23(2) of the ILO Constitution and Governing Body discussions.

20. She emphasized that the Committee of Experts should take special care not to create new obligations which were not reflected in the text of Conventions. She referred to the right to strike as a clear example of how the diversity of industrial relations had led to a variety of rules and practices at the national level that were very difficult to standardize internationally. In her view, the Committee of Experts had nevertheless made detailed rules on this itself, thus disregarding ILO competences and procedures for standard-setting. She indicated her view that seeking to address the authority of these detailed rules by initiating the article 37 procedure would be tantamount to an indictment of the ILO and its supervisory system. In her view, the ILO standards system should take up this challenge itself. The Conference Committee had managed to find a modus vivendi on the right to strike and it was time for the tripartite constituents to reflect seriously on their standard-setting competence on this issue and to find a solution balancing the different interests in a tripartite process. The Office should actively facilitate an understanding on a lasting way forward on this critical issue based on dialogue.
21. She added that the Committee of Experts should also avoid limiting the flexibility provided in the text of conventions and referred to observations previously made by the Employers group on the promotion of the right to collective bargaining on the basis of article 4 of Convention No. 98. She called on the Committee of Experts to fully respect the flexibility afforded by article 4 of Convention No. 98 and the free and voluntary nature of collective bargaining in order to allow Member States to find ways of implementing the Convention in line with national circumstances and needs.
22. The Employer Vice-Chairperson also called on the Committee of Experts to focus on the application of standards for the vast percentage of the workforce in the informal economy and to take account of the needs of sustainable enterprises in its assessments especially in the context of COVID-19 recovery. She reiterated a few suggestions to improve the substance and format of the Committee's report by: (i) closely adhering to the provisions of the relevant Conventions when making comments; (ii) avoiding making requests based on Recommendations which provided only non-binding guidance; (iii) clarify the distinction between observations and direct requests, given that the latter were not subject to discussion in the CAS, or alternatively eliminate direct requests and consider other ways of requesting information from Governments; (iv) clarify the criteria for double-footnoted cases; (v) provide explanations on the selection of cases brought to the attention of the Conference Committee (double footnotes); and (vi) consider a regional balance when identifying such cases. With regard to the format of the Committee's report, she mentioned that there was room for improvement in the presentation, length and content of comments and proposed to make government reports and article 23 comments accessible online. Also, cases of progress should become more visible.
23. She concluded by emphasizing that where the two bodies reached consensual recommendations, they became mutually reinforcing leading to faster, better, and more sustainable compliance at country level. The two bodies should strive to continue in this direction towards an effective and authoritative supervisory system. She would welcome the opportunity to have a more in-depth exchange on specific subject matters as appropriate in the future.
24. The Worker Vice-Chairperson (Mr Leemans) welcomed the invitation to launch a common reflection on how to strengthen the follow-up to the conclusions of the Conference Committee. He recalled that the Committee of Experts was at the heart of the supervisory system and everyone should respect its independence, impartiality and professionalism which constituted the cornerstone of the Committee's authority and credibility. He emphasized that the Conference Committee had no mandate to control the Committee's work. Independence also meant that the Committee of Experts had full autonomy in the choice of its working methods, as the predictability of these methods lied at the basis of its moral authority and persuasiveness.

25. In his view, clarifications could always be asked in the framework of dialogue and mutual learning, without presenting demands or exerting any pressure, with a view to building a common understanding of how supervision of application and progress made, or lack thereof, could lead to the selection of, for example, a direct request instead of an observation, or one case over another for a double footnote, acknowledging that this was not an exact science.
26. The Worker Vice-Chairperson emphasized that the fact that divergent views were being expressed within the Conference Committee on some questions did not mean that there was a difference of views between the Conference Committee as a whole and the Committee of Experts. In fact, there was none. The question of interpretation of Convention No. 87 on the right to strike might be resolved through the process envisaged in article 37 of the ILO Constitution. He noted that the Employer Vice-Chairperson had brought forward in the meantime additional concerns with regard to the interpretation of Convention No. 98 both in the Conference Committee and at the present meeting. He recalled that the Committee of Experts had been exercising its mandate for more than 90 years guiding Member States and ensuring legal certainty, with a clear and specific vision on its role and function within the international supervisory system. It would be unacceptable to impose on the Committee of Experts the views of a single group on the interpretation of international labour standards.
27. With regard to the recurrent references by the Employer Vice-Chairperson to sustainable enterprises he saw two major obstacles to meeting the employer request. First, the mandate of the Committee of Experts was to supervise the application of instruments to which Member States had acceded. These instruments concerned the rights of workers, not the sustainability of enterprises. Second, there was no generally accepted definition of sustainable enterprises. While it would be useful to have a discussion on this topic at the International Labour Conference, exchanges with the Committee of Experts were not the appropriate place for doing so.
28. The Worker Vice-Chairperson welcomed the initiatives and dialogue of the Committee of Experts with the UN Human Rights Treaty Bodies which was important in order to position the ILO's mandate next to that of other entities within the UN system. He also asked for ways to make General Surveys more visible inside and outside the ILO including through presentations and dissemination of information. With regard to gender equality which was the subject of this year's General Survey, he emphasized the importance of the gender dimension at the workplace for reaching more inclusive societies.
29. He also welcomed the effective and authoritative supervision and the guidance given by the Committee of Experts on the role of international labour standards in the context of overcoming the COVID-19 crisis in the framework of the Global Call to Action including with regard to maritime labour. The crisis had a disproportionate impact on the application of international labour standards and necessitated constant supervision.
30. The Committee of Experts welcomed the comments made by the two Vice-Chairpersons recognizing the independent and complementary roles of the two Committees and the importance of building on convergence through continued interaction. With regard to its working methods, the Committee assured the Vice-Chairpersons that it was listening to the voices of the tripartite constituents and was fully prepared to play an active role in the continuous modernization of the supervisory system. The concerns expressed with regard to certain distinctions between observations and direct requests were taken very seriously. Without embracing change for the sake of change, the Committee was ready to build inroads based on the criteria of continuous reliability, predictability and transparency. While focused on improving and deepening a constructive dialogue with Governments and the social partners, the Committee was also interested in improving outreach vis-à-vis the wider public.

31. The Committee also referred to its relationship with the UN Human Rights Treaty Bodies, based on the fact labour standards served as precursors of human rights instruments since the ILO's creation more than 100 years ago, setting the rules for economic development so that it could go hand in hand with social justice and global peace. When human rights were proclaimed in the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and entrenched the UN Charter in 1945, international labour standards became an integral part of this framework and a new era opened up. The Committee of Experts functioned in ways which found their echo in the work of the Human Rights Treaty Bodies with the same ultimate purpose to promote respect for international obligations. There was much complementarity in this work and a consequent need for consistency within each entity's respective mandates. There were also hopes that enhanced synergies would open up space for higher levels of consistency. The Committee of Experts had invited the Chairpersons of the Human Rights Treaty Bodies to an exchange which was very productive and opened the way for closer collaborations, ultimately enhancing the impact of the ILO supervisory mechanism.
32. The Committee also referred to improvements introduced in this year's General Survey entitled *Achieving Gender Equality at Work*² which addressed different aspects of the same policy question, i.e., how to promote equality of opportunity and treatment between women and men at work and the realization of the fundamental principle of gender equality. The Committee referred in particular to the use of hyperlinks, improved visibility of conclusions and the possibility to address all Member States through the General Survey. The Committee expressed the hope that this year's General Survey would draw attention to the fundamental importance of gender equality and would meet the constituents' expectations.

C. Mandate

33. The Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations is an independent body established by the International Labour Conference and its members are appointed by the ILO Governing Body. It is composed of legal experts charged with examining the application of ILO Conventions and Recommendations by ILO Member States. The Committee of Experts undertakes an impartial and technical analysis of how the Conventions are applied in law and practice by Member States, while cognizant of different national realities and legal systems. In doing so, it must determine the legal scope, content and meaning of the provisions of the Conventions. Its opinions and recommendations are non-binding, being intended to guide the actions of national authorities. They derive their persuasive value from the legitimacy and rationality of the Committee's work based on its impartiality, experience and expertise. The Committee's technical role and moral authority is well recognized, particularly as it has been engaged in its supervisory task for more than 90 years, by virtue of its composition, independence and its working methods built on continuing dialogue with governments taking into account information provided by employers' and workers' organizations. This has been reflected in the incorporation of the Committee's opinions and recommendations in national legislation, international instruments and court decisions.

D. Application of international labour standards and the quest for social justice in the context of protracted and interlocking crises

From the COVID-19 pandemic to protracted and interlocking crises

34. While the COVID-19 pandemic and the consequent jobs crisis are still sorely felt, climate change, armed conflict, inflation, energy and food shortages have generated ripples of crises over the past year. These protracted and interlocking crises aggravate the pre-existing high levels of inequality among and within countries, putting to the test the 2030 Agenda and the credibility of the international community's pledge to deliver inclusive and sustainable growth, full, productive and freely chosen employment and decent work for all, leaving no one behind.³ Protracted and interlocking crises affect not only economic recovery but also social cohesion, peace, stability and life on the planet.

The quest for social justice

35. The Committee welcomes the ILO Director-General's initiative to launch a Global Coalition for Social Justice based on the universal values entrenched in human rights and international labour standards and promoted through inclusive social dialogue with an inequality-reducing agenda at its core. It notes that this initiative meets the United Nations (UN) Secretary-General's "Our Common Agenda", which identifies today's growing world divide along political, economic, social and environmental lines as the chief cause of the erosion of the values of solidarity and mutual trust and calls for the renewal of the social contract between governments and their people and within societies.
36. The Committee recalls the ILO Constitution which provides that "Universal and lasting peace can be established only if it is based upon social justice". It recalls that social justice, in turn, can only be maintained by observing labour rights and realizing human rights more broadly, with a view to tackling today's multiple and interlocking crises in a human-centred, inclusive and sustained manner, leaving no one behind.⁴
37. The Committee is aware that all too often, persons in vulnerable situations are those most impacted by crises, conflicts and disasters, in particular, children and youth, women, older persons, migrant workers, those working in the informal economy, indigenous peoples, persons with disabilities and those vulnerable to intersectional discrimination. It is in difficult times that the most vulnerable need their rights to be safeguarded and their voices to be heard. The Committee emphasizes that a new social contract is urgently needed in times of protracted and interlocking crises, drawing upon the common values expressed in the ILO fundamental and governance Conventions as well as the technical standards which serve to set a level playing field in a global economy under strain.

⁴ Employment and Decent Work for Peace and Resilience Recommendation, 2017 (No. 205).

Impact of interlocking crises on the application of international labour standards

38. In its 2020 statement on the application of international labour standards in times of crisis, the Committee had underscored the limits to executive power which should apply in times of crisis.⁵ The Committee notes with growing concern increasing disparities between ILO Member States in respect of civil liberties, fundamental rights and the rule of law.
39. The Committee takes due note of the Governing Body's Resolution adopted at its 344th Session⁶ in which it urged the Russian Federation to meet all the obligations following from its ratification of ILO Conventions, including: the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006, as amended (MLC, 2006), in particular in relation to the repatriation of seafarers and access to medical care; the Radiation Protection Convention, 1960 (No. 115), in relation to the exposure of workers to ionizing radiations in the course of their work; and the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) and its accompanying Protocol of 2014. It also notes that the Governing Body encouraged the ILO Director-General to continue to monitor and take appropriate steps to safeguard the labour rights of workers and support the sustainability of enterprises in Ukraine, including in areas that are temporarily controlled by the Russian Federation, and including in nuclear power plants.⁷ The Committee undertakes to follow up on this Resolution within the framework of its mandate. It recalls that the obligations arising from freely ratified standards must be observed on all sides and at all times and expresses the hope that conditions to do so in the spirit of cooperation envisaged by all standards will very soon be restored.

Freedom of association and collective bargaining

40. Freedom of association and collective bargaining, as enabling rights for the exercise of fundamental rights at work leading to a fairer distribution of wealth, face significant challenges across the world, at the same time as the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) and the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) remain less ratified than the six other Conventions proclaimed as fundamental in 1998.
41. The Committee takes due note of the double special paragraph for continued failure to implement Convention No. 87 inserted in the report of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards with regard to Belarus,⁸ drawing the International Labour Conference's attention to the seriousness of the violations and calling upon the Governing Body to examine measures under article 33 of the ILO Constitution for failure to implement the recommendations of a Commission of Inquiry. The Committee notes that the Governing Body⁹ will examine in March 2023 (347th Session) measures under article 33 of the ILO Constitution to secure compliance by the Government of Belarus with the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry in the light, inter alia, of the Committee's examination of this matter at its current session. It also notes that the 111th Session of the International Labour Conference (2023) will further examine this matter.¹⁰

42. Furthermore, the Committee takes due note of the Governing Body's decision at its 344th and 345th Sessions (March and June 2022) to establish a Commission of Inquiry and appoint Commissioners under article 26 of the ILO Constitution with regard to the application of Conventions Nos 29 and 87 in Myanmar. The Committee stands ready to follow up on the Commission of Inquiry's report and recommendations as appropriate.
43. More generally, when it comes to freedom of association and civil liberties in times of crisis, the Committee recalls its long-standing statement according to which crisis situations cannot be used to justify restrictions on the civil liberties that are essential to the proper exercise of trade union rights, except in circumstances of extreme gravity and on condition that any measures affecting their application are limited in scope and duration to what is strictly necessary to deal with the situation in question.¹¹ The Committee has consistently recalled, in the context of an economic crisis, the importance, as also highlighted by the CFA, of maintaining permanent and intensive dialogue with the most representative workers' and employers' organizations in particular in the process of adopting legislation, which may have an effect on workers' rights, including those intended to alleviate a serious crisis situation.¹²
44. The Committee takes note that, as indicated in the 2022 Social Dialogue Flagship Report,¹³ collective bargaining has played an important role during the COVID-19 pandemic in securing decent work, guaranteeing equality of opportunity and treatment, reducing wage inequality and stabilizing labour relations. The 2022–23 Global Wage Report confirms that collective bargaining can help to achieve adequate wage adjustments during a crisis.¹⁴
45. The Committee emphasizes the key role of collective bargaining as a unique empowerment tool to ensure that the social partners actively participate in shaping inclusive and tailor-made solutions to the problems faced in times of crises. It notes, in this regard, the very uneven levels of collective bargaining coverage across countries highlighted in the 2022 Social Dialogue Flagship Report and underlines the importance of creating the conditions for a broader access to this fundamental right across ILO Member States.

Occupational safety and health

46. The Committee welcomes the historical decision by the 110th Session of the International Labour Conference (2022) to bring a safe and healthy working environment within the framework of fundamental principles and right at work by amending the 1998 Declaration on Fundamental Principles and Rights at Work and proclaiming two additional fundamental Conventions, namely, the Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 1981 (No. 155) and the Promotional Framework for Occupational Safety and Health Convention, 2006 (No. 187). In the aftermath of the COVID-19 pandemic and on the eve of the adoption by the UN General Assembly of a resolution recognizing a clean, healthy and sustainable environment as a universal human right, the recent amendment to the 1998 Declaration confirms that the ILO has the normative compass to guide its constituents in navigating the defining challenges of our time. The inclusion of a safe and healthy work environment in the fundamental principles and rights at work framework confirms once again that labour rights are human rights.

47. The Committee notes three new ratifications of these fundamental Conventions in 2022, as well as the significant number of countries that have expressed interest in ratifying these standards in the near future. It welcomes notable progress with respect to the implementation of both Convention No. 155 and No. 187, including the adoption of national occupational safety and health (OSH) policies in consultation with the social partners, the implementation of national OSH programmes resulting in a decrease in occupational accidents, and notable steps to reinforce OSH legislation. This has been accompanied by important legislative developments to implement the technical OSH Conventions related to asbestos, major hazard installations and radiation.
48. Despite these positive developments, challenges in the implementation of these fundamental Conventions remain, exacerbated by protracted crises, with certain countries reporting a growing number of occupational accidents and diseases, inactivity of national tripartite OSH consultative bodies, as well as allegations related to retaliation against workers for exercising their fundamental rights by reporting OSH issues.

Child labour and forced labour

49. The Committee is concerned to note the reversal in the fight against child labour due to the consequences of the protracted crises and myriad shocks – both natural and human-made – to which vulnerable populations, especially children, have been subjected in recent years. It welcomes the Durban Call to Action adopted at the 5th Global Conference on the Elimination of Child Labour which took place for the first time in Africa in May 2022 and joins the call for a rapid acceleration of progress on ending child labour.
50. Similarly, the Committee is alarmed by the latest Global Estimates of Modern Slavery¹⁵ released in September 2022, according to which 28 million people were in forced labour in 2021 and another 22 million women and girls trapped in forced marriage. According to data released for the first time in the Global Estimates, state-imposed forced labour accounts for 14 per cent of forced labour estimates. The report shows a disconcerting increase in the last five years as in 2021, 10 million more people were estimated to be in modern slavery compared to 2016, and this, despite the high ratification rate of the fundamental Conventions on forced labour and child labour.

Equality and non-discrimination

51. The Committee is concerned that gender inequalities remain persistent and pervasive, as manifested in the gender pay gap and the prevalence of both vertical and horizontal occupational segregation. As highlighted in this year's General Survey on achieving gender equality at work, full equality between women and men at work cannot be achieved in a broader context of inequality. Gender equality is a fundamental component of decent work and social justice, anchored in both a rights-based and an economic efficiency approach to sustainable and inclusive development. As illustrated in the General Survey, the COVID-19 crisis exacerbated pre-existing gender inequalities and reversed previous gains, as many girls and women were forced to leave education, training and the labour market in order to shoulder most of the burden of unpaid care and domestic work. Women continue to be disproportionately represented in the hardest hit service sectors including the informal paid care economy and domestic work. While these developments impede the application of several standards including the Equal Remuneration

Convention, 1951 (No. 100) and the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111), they also have negative consequences for economic recovery.

52. Inequalities are more pronounced when multiple grounds of discrimination intersect. Women migrant domestic workers as well as indigenous women, women members of minorities and women with disabilities are particularly hard hit for example. More generally, the prolonged and interlocking crises have had a disproportionate effect on those who are vulnerable to discrimination on multiple or intersecting grounds covered by Convention No. 111, including race, colour, sex, religion, political opinion, national extraction or social origin and other ILO instruments, including Convention No. 159 and the HIV and AIDS Recommendation, 2010 (No. 200), as well as related human rights treaties.¹⁶
53. The Committee reiterates from its latest report (2022) its concern that “20 years after the World Conference against Racism, Racial Discrimination, Xenophobia and Related Intolerance, people of African descent, minority communities, indigenous peoples, migrants, refugees, and displaced persons continue to confront stigmatization, discrimination and violence. Reversing their vulnerability and marginalization, exacerbated where different grounds of discrimination intersect, requires specific emphasis on repealing all discriminatory laws, including laws giving rise to discrimination in employment and occupation, as proposed in the UNSG Call to Action for Human Rights and the Common Agenda.”¹⁷
54. The COVID-19 pandemic also led to a worrisome increase in violence and harassment, including on the basis of gender. The Committee welcomes in this regard that the examination of first reports on the application of the Violence and Harassment Convention, 2019 (No. 190) commenced at its current session following the entry into force of this important Convention.

Employment policies

55. The COVID-19 pandemic and ensuing jobs crisis had a devastating effect on economies and employment around the world, albeit with notable variations across regions, countries and economic sectors. Moreover, the crisis affected women and men differently, as a result of their different positions in the labour market and the distribution of family responsibilities. Persons belonging to disadvantaged groups who were already vulnerable to socio-economic shocks were hit the hardest, due to a number of factors. First, these workers are more likely to be concentrated in poorly remunerated jobs in the economic sectors most affected by the pandemic, such as in the care economy and the service sector more broadly. Second, they are more likely to be in informal and precarious employment, often working under part-time, temporary or casual arrangements, making them extremely vulnerable to job loss.
56. The COVID-19 crisis was particularly devastating for 2 billion workers in the informal economy who represent more than 60 per cent of the global workforce and are twice as likely to be living in poverty than formally employed workers. Given their precarious status, such workers often lack access to employment-related benefits, such as health and unemployment insurance, disability benefits and social security. Workers in the informal economy face the most serious decent work deficits, including higher exposure to OSH risks, as well as obstacles to freedom of association and the effective recognition of the right to collective bargaining.¹⁸
57. The Committee recalls that the development and implementation of a new generation of comprehensive, gender-responsive, inclusive and evidence-informed employment policies and programmes that take into account the principles of international labour standards can help to ensure a sustainable job-rich recovery from crisis.¹⁹ Creating or restoring an enabling environment for sustainable enterprises, in particular for micro-, small and medium-sized enterprises, is also a crucial factor to stimulate employment, income generation, entrepreneurship and socio-economic recovery.

58. The Committee would like to emphasize that all workers, irrespective of employment status or sector of economic activity, fall within the scope of international labour standards except where they are explicitly excluded.
59. In this regard, the Committee welcomes the Governing Body decision to finalize an ILO strategy on decent work in supply chains for consideration at its March 2023 session and its call for a stronger link and exchange of information between the work of the supervisory mechanisms and the technical assistance and research work of the Office in order to truly benefit from the unique features of the ILO, including international labour standards and the Tripartite Declaration of Principles concerning Multinational Enterprises and Social Policy, in the context of its action in the domain of supply chains.²⁰

Social protection

60. Over the past few years, the fundamental role of social protection has been reaffirmed as the centrepiece of strategies to mitigate the impact of crises and facilitate just transitions, including to an environmentally sustainable economy, with a view to ensuring that all members of society have access to income protection and healthcare when in need, in particular the most vulnerable. According to the social protection monitor, the recent crises have resulted in a significant expansion of social protection measures, at least among countries that had fiscal space to introduce them, which the Committee has noted positively in individual comments. The Committee is concerned, however, that the most recent cost-of-living crisis might mark a reversal in this trend as it is likely to affect the fiscal space within which support is provided, at a time when support is needed the most. Moreover, the Committee is concerned that, in the context of interlocking crises, food, fuel and medication shortages prevent access to essential goods and services and to essential healthcare.
61. Against this background, the Committee welcomes the launch of the ILO campaign for the ratification of the Social Security (Minimum Standards) Convention, 1952 (No. 102) and of other up-to-date social security Conventions, which seeks to further the implementation of these standards which are central to the pursuit of universal social protection globally.
62. The Committee also notes that this year's General Survey entitled Achieving Gender Equality at Work also looks into the various social protection measures that the ILO standards under review call for in order to achieve true and meaningful equality between men and women in the workplace, especially the measures adopted by Member States to secure the protection of workers with family responsibilities and in case of maternity.
63. The Committee welcomes the Governing Body's decision²¹ to have a General Survey in 2024 on selected social security instruments focusing on employment injury benefits, including with respect to workers in agriculture. It also welcomes the Governing Body's parallel invitation to seek information from Member States on the application, in law and practice, of Conventions Nos 102 (Part VI) and 121 in respect of employment injury benefits to agricultural workers and intends to consider this question in the framework of its 2025 General Survey. Finally, given the undeniable links between the social protection of workers in agriculture and the triple planetary crisis generated by climate change, biodiversity loss and pollution, the Committee takes note of the upcoming general discussion on a just transition to a zero-carbon economy at the 111th Session of the International Labour Conference (2023) and looks forward to its outcome.

64. In this context, the Committee takes note of the UN Secretary-General's initiative to entrust to the ILO the leadership of a Global Accelerator for Jobs and Social Protection for Just Transition in 2021 – an initiative that could become one of the central programmatic avenues for the promotion of universal social protection under a Global Coalition for Social Justice.

Working conditions

65. Concerning working-time issues, the Committee is concerned that the issues identified in its 2018 General Survey on working time instruments persist and have worsened over the last five years under the influence of protracted and interlocking crises. It notes that, in some countries, flexible working-time arrangements were introduced in the midst of the pandemic without providing for clear statutory weekly and daily limits to total working hours, nor specifying the circumstances for resorting to overtime. Such flexible working-time arrangements include averaging systems with reference periods as long as one year and very high maximum daily hours of work. These arrangements potentially lead to long working hours, which are detrimental to mental and physical health as well as work-life balance. The Committee is concerned that lack of compensatory time off in case of work during weekly rest is also common in a number of countries. Moreover, practices have been reported such as non-payment for overtime and long periods of mandatory annual leave during the COVID-19 pandemic which were subsequently discounted from the following year's annual holidays with paid entitlements.
66. The Committee notes that the 2022–23 Global Wage Report estimates at six weeks of wages the average losses suffered by wage employees due to the COVID-19 crisis. It also identifies a growing gap between wages and productivity emerging since the early 1980s, as average wage growth has lagged behind average labour productivity growth in several large, developed economies. In 52 high-income countries for which data are available, real wage growth has been lower than productivity growth since 2000, and reached its widest point in 2022, in the midst of protracted and interlocking crises, with productivity growth 12.6 percentage points above wage growth. Rising inflation and cost of living have resulted in real wage growth dipping into negative figures in many countries, hitting low-income groups particularly hard. The report warns that in the absence of adequate policy responses, the near future could see a sharp erosion of the real incomes of workers and their families and an increase in inequality, threatening the economic recovery and possibly fuelling further social unrest. In this context, the Committee underlines the importance of setting robust minimum wage setting frameworks allowing for effective consultations with the social partners as provided in the Minimum Wage Fixing Convention, 1970 (No. 131) and ensuring that wages are paid in time and in full in order to sustain incomes in times of crises, in line with the Protection of Wages Convention, 1949 (No. 95).

Labour administration

67. The importance of labour administrations in ensuring an effective governance on labour matters became particularly evident during the COVID-19 pandemic. Labour administrations play a central role in addressing inequalities in the world of work and in creating the enabling legal and policy framework to achieve social justice through decent work.

- 68. In this regard, the Committee welcomes the Governing's Body decision,²² in November 2021, to have a General Survey on the Labour Administration Convention (No. 150) and Recommendation (No. 158), 1978, and invites governments, employers' and workers' organizations to provide information for the preparation of the General Survey. The General Survey will be an opportunity to provide a comprehensive overview of the impact of the COVID-19 crisis on national systems of labour administration across the world and illustrate the central role they have played in managing the immediate response to the crisis and in planning and implementing the longer-term recovery, in consultation with the social partners. The Committee also notes that the General Survey on labour administration will constitute a concrete follow-up to the Global Call to Action for a Human-centred Recovery from the COVID-19 crisis and an opportunity to take stock of and help to strengthen the capacity of public administrations and employers' and workers' organizations to participate in social dialogue as the means to develop and implement regional, national, sectoral and local recovery strategies, policies and programmes.

Labour inspection

- 69. As a core function of labour administration, labour inspection systems play an important role in the implementation of national labour policies, and in the provision of information and advice to employers and workers on applicable labour legislation, as well as in securing its enforcement. The COVID-19 pandemic raised awareness on the importance of compliance with labour laws, including OSH standards, for achieving decent work. However, policies to reduce public spending have in many cases affected the resources allocated to labour inspectorates. This year the Committee notes that, in a number of countries, there has been a decrease in the number of labour inspectors and in the material means allocated to labour inspectorates. In some countries, restrictions on public spending affected the conditions of service of labour inspectors, leading to temporary appointments of inspectors or delaying the adoption of regulations ensuring their stability of employment.
- 70. In addition, the Committee notes that while restrictions to on-site visits introduced during the pandemic have mostly been lifted, in certain cases, they resulted in a backlog of complaints and delays in their examination. On the other hand, the increased use of information technology tools due to restrictions on the ability to be physically present in workplaces, allowed for significant improvements with respect to the capacity of inspectorates to collect, analyse and publish data.
- 71. The Committee also notes the challenges faced by labour inspectors in ensuring the enforcement of legal provisions in a changing world of work. Rising job insecurity, increased stress at work, greater risk of harassment and violence at work, growth in the informal economy and changes to migration patterns are some of the issues that labour inspectors are confronted with in performing their duties.
- 72. The Committee reaffirms that labour inspection is a vital public function at the core of promoting and enforcing decent working conditions and respect for fundamental principles and rights at work, thereby contributing significantly to social cohesion. Labour inspectorates are instrumental in ensuring the respect of the rule of law and equal access to justice for all.

Seafarers and fishers

73. The Committee has noted with deep concern the challenges and the impact that measures adopted by governments around the world to contain the spread of the COVID-19 pandemic has had on the protection of seafarers' and fishers' rights as enshrined in the Maritime Labour Convention, 2006, as amended (MLC, 2006) and the Work in Fishing Convention, 2007 (No. 188). As several of such restrictions continue to jeopardize seafarers' rights to shore leave and access to medical care, the Committee has continued to request ratifying countries to ensure that any remaining restrictions are lifted in order to guarantee full compliance with the MLC, 2006. In this regard, the Committee has indicated that it is precisely at times of crisis that the protective coverage of the MLC, 2006, assumes its full significance and needs to be most scrupulously applied. This is even more so as the Convention contains only minimum standards for the protection of seafarers' rights.
74. In this regard, the Committee acknowledges all the efforts of the Office to support the maritime industry during the pandemic, as recognized and reflected in the conclusions of the independent high-level evaluation of the ILO's response to the pandemic.²³ The evaluation highlights that the ILO's interventions to reinforce international labour standards, in collaboration with the tripartite partners and UN agencies, had a significant impact on immediate and longer-term protection of seafarers. The report recalls that the seafarers' situation was the focus of a general observation of the Committee in its December 2020 session which expressed in strong terms that Member States have breached their obligations in denying seafarers their rights to access medical attention and disembarkation rights. This general observation was welcomed by the industry and widely quoted in the press. The Committee notes that interviewed stakeholders of the Special Tripartite Committee of the MLC, 2006 (STC) were unanimously impressed with how quickly and flexibly the ILO responded to the sudden needs, through the adaptation of the supervisory mechanisms of international labour standards, convening consultative processes, and direct international facilitation efforts at the request of the social partners.
75. The current situation in Ukraine since 24 February 2022 has created new dire circumstances for seafarers. The Committee notes that 10 months after of the beginning of the crisis, 65 ships flying the flags of more than 20 countries with around 315 seafarers on board are still stranded in Ukrainian ports, unable to depart safely. Seafarers working on board ships under the Black Sea Grain Initiative are risking their lives by sailing in mined waters thereby contributing to stave off famine and stabilize food prices. The Committee acknowledges their courage and underlines the fundamental importance of preserving seafarers' rights as enshrined in the MLC, 2006.

Looking ahead: A hopeful message

76. The launching of a Global Coalition for Social Justice constitutes a message of hope for the women and men facing stark realities in times of crisis. Placing emphasis on those at risk of being left behind, the Committee will continue to monitor developments in the application of international labour standards in order to prevent and mitigate regression in the full respect of labour rights in this context. The guidance provided through the ILO supervisory machinery, which impartially monitors the fulfilment of international commitments, ensuring accountability and assessing progress with the benefit of social partner input, is crucial for all countries faced with or anticipating crises in their diverse and interlocking forms.

²³ ILO, High-level independent evaluation of ILO's COVID-19 response (2020–22), Geneva, 2022, table 8, pp. 107 and 108 (in English only).

77. The most vulnerable include not only population groups within countries, but also the least developed countries (LDCs) among others. The Committee welcomes the ILO strategy to engage in stronger multilateral coordination and cooperation, including with international financial institutions and other relevant organizations, through the Global Coalition for Social Justice. It appeals to international solidarity with a view to placing trade relations, investment incentives and development partnerships, solidly founded on respect for labour rights as human rights, at the heart of policies promoting recovery and shared prosperity, notably when it comes to LDCs. It recalls that, as emphasized in the Committee's 2020 report, in the context of the COVID-19 pandemic, "every effort should be made to prevent a downward spiral in labour conditions and pursue a virtuous cycle of recovery and development with the support of the Office and development partners fully respecting rights at work."²⁴
78. The Committee trusts that the quest for a new social contract through a Global Coalition for Social Justice will rely on international labour standards and their supervision as a compass out of protracted and interlocking crises and towards sustainable development in an open global economy. It expresses the firm hope that the Coalition will mobilize a wide range of partnerships leading to concrete progress in the effective exercise of labour rights at country level. The Committee trusts that it will be able to observe such progress in the near future through its regular supervision of the application of international labour standards.

²⁴ Report III (Part A), ILC, 109th Session, 2021, General Report, para. 49.

► II. Compliance with standards-related obligations

A. Reports on ratified Conventions (articles 22 and 35 of the Constitution)

79. The Committee's principal task consists of the examination of the reports supplied by governments on Conventions that have been ratified by Member States (article 22 of the Constitution) and that have been declared applicable to non-metropolitan territories (article 35 of the Constitution).

Reporting arrangements

80. In accordance with the decision taken by the Governing Body at its 258th Session (November 1993), the reports due on ratified Conventions should be sent to the Office between 1 June and 1 September of each year.
81. The Committee recalls that detailed reports should be sent in the case of first reports (a first report is due after ratification) or when specifically requested by the Committee of Experts or the Conference Committee. In all other cases, simplified reports are requested on a regular basis.²⁵
82. The Committee also recalls that, at its 306th Session (November 2009), the Governing Body decided to increase from two to three years the regular reporting cycle for the fundamental and governance Conventions. At its 334th Session (October–November 2018) the Governing Body decided to increase the reporting cycle from five to six years for all other Conventions. In certain cases, reports may be requested outside of the regular reporting cycle.²⁶

Compliance with reporting obligations

83. This year a total of 2,103 reports (1,915 reports under article 22 of the Constitution and 188 reports under article 35 of the Constitution) were requested from governments on the application of Conventions ratified by Member States, compared to 2,008 reports last year. At the end of the present session of the Committee, 1,490 reports were received by the Office, corresponding to

²⁶ There are several ways in which a report can be requested outside of the regular reporting cycle: (i) the Committee can place a special request in a footnote at the end of a comment for a report to be sent earlier than the year it is due according to the reporting cycle (see General Report, para. 112); (ii) an "automatic" request is sent when the government has failed to send a report in the framework of the regular reporting cycle or the report sent did not contain an answer to the Committee's comments. If a government has failed to send a report for a number of years, the case is singled out in Part II (section I) of this report and examined every year by the Conference Committee during its discussion on serious failures to fulfil reporting obligations; (iii) the Conference Committee can ask a government to submit a report to the Committee of Experts outside of the reporting cycle following the examination of an individual case and when it discusses the cases of serious failure to report; (iv) the Governing Body may ask a government to send a report to the Committee of Experts outside of the reporting cycle based on the recommendations of tripartite committees established to examine representations under article 24 of the ILO Constitution or the recommendations of Commissions of Inquiry established to examine complaints under article 26 of the ILO Constitution.

70.9 per cent of the reports requested.²⁷ Last year, the Office received a total of 1,357 reports, representing 67.6 per cent of reports requested. The Committee notes in particular that 45 of the 67 first reports due on the application of ratified Conventions were received by the time the Committee's session ended (last year, 65 of the 111 first reports due had been received).

84. The Committee observes that the levels of reports received after the due date of 1 September remained the same as last year. In particular, 862 reports were received by the due date of 1 September this year, representing 41.0 per cent of reports requested, compared with 841 reports received at the previous session, representing 41.9 per cent of reports requested. Out of 2,103 reports due this year, 1,241 (59.0 per cent) were received after the deadline. The Committee wishes to recall that late submission of reports disturbs the sound operation of the supervisory mechanism as the examination of a number of reports received after the deadline might be deferred due to their late arrival. The examination of some of these reports in subsequent Committee sessions prevents the experts from fully focusing on the specific thematic areas due for discussion each year and also prevents governments and the social partners from obtaining timely feedback on their reports.
85. The Committee would like to express its appreciation to the Member States which made special efforts to ensure compliance with their reporting obligations. It asks all Member States to make every effort to send the reports due under articles 19, 22 and 35 of the ILO Constitution, to do so within the deadlines and to submit complete answers to the Committee's requests so as to allow for a thorough examination by the Committee.
86. The Committee recalls that ILO technical assistance is available to help Member States comply with their constitutional obligations and asks the Office to provide every support in this regard. It urges those Member States who have received Office assistance to make special efforts to ensure timely submission of their reports.
87. When examining the failure by Member States to respect their reporting obligations, the Committee adopts "general" comments (contained at the beginning of Part II (section I) of this report). It makes general observations when none of the reports due have been sent for two or more years; or when a first report has not been sent for two or more years. It makes a general direct request when, in the current year, a country has not sent the reports due, or the majority of reports due; or it has not sent a first report due.
88. Furthermore, as of 2017 the Committee gradually introduced a practice of urgent appeals according to which it may examine how a Convention is implemented in a ratifying country on the basis of information at its disposal if the Government has failed to submit a first report after ratification. As of 2018, the practice of urgent appeals was extended to all reports for which comments were pending for more than three years. In 2020, the Committee issued for the first time urgent appeals in repetitions of previous comments with an introductory text²⁸ informing the government that if no report is supplied in time for examination by the Committee at its next session, then the Committee may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of information at its disposal.

²⁸ The introductory text ("chapeau") now reads: The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It expects that the next report will contain full information on the matters raised in its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2023, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

89. This year, the Committee examined the following cases in the absence of a government report following an urgent appeal.

90. Based on the information provided in the "general" comments (Part II, section I of the report), none of the reports due have been sent for the past two or more years from the following 16 countries: Afghanistan, Antigua and Barbuda, Chad, Comoros, Dominica, Gabon, Haiti, Lebanon, Saint Lucia, Slovenia, Somalia, Syrian Arab Republic, Timor-Leste, Tuvalu, Vanuatu and Yemen. The Committee urges the Governments concerned to make every effort to supply the reports requested on ratified Conventions.
91. Moreover, the Committee launches an urgent appeal to the Member States that have failed to submit a report for more than three years, drawing their attention to the fact that if the reports due are not received in time for examination by the Committee at its next session, it may proceed to examine the application of the Conventions concerned on the basis of public information at its disposal. This year, the Committee launches an urgent appeal in its repetitions of previous comments to which a reply has not been received, requesting the following countries to submit a report with replies to the Committee's comments at its next session:

94. The Committee urges the governments concerned to make a special effort to supply the first reports due. The Committee, like the Conference Committee, emphasizes the particular importance of first reports, which provide the basis on which the Committee makes its initial assessment of the application of the specific Conventions concerned. The Committee is aware that, where no reports have been sent for some time, it is likely that administrative or other problems are at the origin of the difficulties encountered by governments in fulfilling their constitutional obligations. The COVID-19 pandemic and parallel interlocking crises have been additional factors aggravating such difficulties.
95. The Committee would like to express its appreciation to the governments which submitted three first reports this year following an urgent appeal.²⁹ It recalls the importance for governments to request assistance from the Office, and for such assistance to be provided rapidly, for the preparation of first reports.
96. The Committee is pleased to note that this year, all countries provided information concerning communication of reports to workers' and employers' organizations in all or the majority of their reports, thereby enabling representative organizations of employers and workers to participate fully in the supervision of the application of international labour standards in accordance with the tripartite nature of the ILO.

Replies to the comments of the Committee

97. Governments are requested to reply in their reports to the observations and direct requests made by the Committee.
98. This year, no information has been received as regards all or most of the observations and direct requests of the Committee to which a reply was requested for the following countries: Afghanistan, Albania, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Barbados, Burundi, Central African Republic, Chad, Comoros, Congo, Croatia, Dominica, El Salvador, Equatorial Guinea, Gabon, Grenada, Guyana, Haiti, Iraq, Kenya, Lao Peoples' Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Liberia, Libya, Malta, Mongolia, Montenegro, Netherlands (Aruba), North Macedonia, Papua New ²⁹ Guinea (Convention No. 167), Sao Tome and Principe (Convention No. 183) and Tunisia (MLC, 2006).

Guinea, Romania, Saint Lucia, Samoa, Sao Tome and Principe, Singapore, Slovenia, Somalia, South Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, Timor-Leste, Tuvalu, Uganda, Ukraine, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland (Falkland Islands (Malvinas), Guernsey and Jersey), Vanuatu and Yemen.

99. The Committee notes with concern that the number of comments to which replies have not been received remains significantly high. The Committee underlines that the value attached by ILO constituents to the dialogue with the supervisory bodies on the application of ratified Conventions is considerably diminished by the failure of governments to fulfil their obligations in this respect. The Committee urges the countries concerned to provide all the information requested and recalls that they may avail themselves of the technical assistance of the Office in this regard.

Follow-up to cases of serious failure by Member States to fulfil reporting obligations mentioned in the report of the Committee on the Application of Standards

100. As the functioning of the supervisory system is based primarily on the information provided by governments in their reports, both the Committee and the Conference Committee considered that failure by Member States to fulfil their obligations in this respect has to be given the same level of attention as non-compliance relating to the application of ratified Conventions. The two Committees have therefore decided to strengthen, with the assistance of the Office, the follow-up given to these cases of failure.
101. The Committee welcomes the fruitful collaboration that it maintains with the Conference Committee on this matter of mutual interest which is essential to the proper discharge of their respective tasks. It asks the Office to maintain the sustained technical assistance that it has been providing to Member States in this respect.

B. Examination by the Committee of Experts of reports on ratified Conventions

102. In examining the reports received on ratified Conventions and Conventions declared applicable to non-metropolitan territories, in accordance with its practice, the Committee assigned to each of its members the initial responsibility for a group of Conventions. The members submit their preliminary conclusions on the instruments for which they are responsible to the Committee in plenary sitting for discussion and approval. Decisions on comments are adopted by consensus.
103. The Committee wishes to inform Member States that it examined all reports that were brought to its attention.

Observations and direct requests

104. First of all, the Committee considers that it is worthy of note that in 268 cases it has found, following examination of the corresponding reports, that no further comment was called for regarding the manner in which a ratified Convention had been implemented.
105. In other cases, however, the Committee has found it necessary to draw the attention of the governments concerned to the need to take further action to give effect to certain provisions of Conventions or to supply additional information on given points. As in previous years, its comments have been drawn up in the form of either "observations", which are reproduced in the report of the Committee, or “direct requests”, which are not published in the Committee’s report, but are communicated directly to the governments concerned and are available online.³⁰

- 106. Observations are generally used in more serious or long-standing cases of failure to fulfil obligations. They point to important discrepancies between the obligations under a Convention and the related law and/or practice of Member States. They may address the absence of measures to give effect to a Convention or to take appropriate action following the Committee’s requests. They may also highlight progress, as appropriate. Direct requests allow the Committee to be engaged in a continuing dialogue with governments often when the questions raised are primarily of a technical nature. They can also be used for the clarification of certain points when the information available does not enable a full appreciation of the extent to which the obligations are fulfilled. Direct requests are also used to examine the first reports supplied by governments on the application of Conventions.
- 107. This year, the Committee made 656 observations and 1,263 direct requests. The Committee’s observations appear in Part II of this report, together with, for each subject, a list of direct requests. An index of all observations and direct requests, classified by country, is provided in Appendix VII to the report.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards

- 108. The Committee examines the follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards as this information forms an integral part of the Committee’s dialogue with the governments concerned. This year, the Committee has examined the follow-up to the conclusions adopted by the Committee on the Application of Standards during the last session of the International Labour Conference (110th Session, May–June 2022) in the following cases:

Follow-up of representations under article 24 of the Constitution and complaints under article 26 of the Constitution

- 109. In accordance with the established practice, the Committee also examines the measures taken by governments pursuant to the recommendations of tripartite committees (set up to examine representations under article 24 of the Constitution) and commissions of inquiry (set up to examine complaints under article 26 of the Constitution). The corresponding information forms an integral part of the Committee's dialogue with the governments concerned. The Committee considers it useful to indicate more clearly the cases in which it follows up on the effect given to the recommendations made under these constitutional supervisory procedures, as indicated in the following tables.

Special notes

- 112. As in the past, the Committee has indicated by special notes (traditionally known as "footnotes") at the end of its comments the cases in which, because of the nature of the problems encountered in the application of the Conventions concerned, it has deemed it appropriate to ask the government to supply a report earlier than would otherwise have been the case and, in some instances, to supply full particulars to the Conference at its next session in June 2023.
- 113. In order to identify cases for which it inserts special notes, the Committee uses the basic criteria described below, while taking into account the following general considerations. First, the criteria are indicative. In exercising its discretion in the application of the criteria, the Committee may also have regard to the specific circumstances of the country and the length of the reporting cycle. Second, the criteria are applicable to cases in which an earlier report is requested, often referred to as a "single footnote", as well as to cases in which the government is requested to provide detailed information to the Conference, often referred to as a "double footnote". The difference between these two categories is one of degree. Third, a serious case otherwise justifying a special note to provide full particulars to the Conference (double footnote) might only be given a special note to provide an early report (single footnote) when there has been a recent discussion of the case in the Conference Committee. Finally, the Committee wishes to point out that it exercises restraint in its recourse to "double footnotes" in deference to the Conference Committee's decisions as to the cases it wishes to discuss.
- 114. The criteria to which the Committee has regard are the following:
- the seriousness of the problem; in this respect, the Committee emphasizes that an important consideration is the necessity to view the problem in the context of a particular Convention and to take into account matters involving fundamental rights, workers' health, safety and well-being, as well as any adverse impact, including at the international level, on workers and other categories of protected persons;

- the persistence of the problem;
- the urgency of the situation; the evaluation of such urgency is necessarily case specific, according to standard human rights criteria, such as life-threatening situations or problems where irreversible harm is foreseeable; and
- the quality and scope of the government's response in its reports or the absence of response to the issues raised by the Committee, including cases of clear and repeated refusal on the part of a State to comply with its obligations.

115. In addition, the Committee wishes to emphasize that its decision not to double footnote a case which it has previously drawn to the attention of the Conference Committee in no way implies that it has considered progress to have been made therein.

116. At its 76th Session (November–December 2005), the Committee decided that the identification of cases in respect of which a government is requested to provide detailed information to the Conference would be a two-stage process: first, the expert initially responsible for a particular group of Conventions recommends to the Committee the insertion of special notes; second, in light of all the recommendations made, the Committee will, after discussion, take a final, collegial decision once it has reviewed the application of all the Conventions.

117. This year, the Committee has requested governments to supply full particulars to the Conference at its next session in 2023 in the following cases:

Cases of progress

- 119. Following its examination of the reports supplied by governments, and in accordance with its standard practice, the Committee refers in its comments to cases in which it expresses its satisfaction or interest at the progress achieved in the application of the respective Conventions. The Committee wishes to emphasize that progress by Member States is a valuable aspect of its review under the supervisory system and is cognisant of the need to continue to address these matters in its Subcommittee on working methods.
- 120. At its 80th and 82nd Sessions (2009 and 2011), the Committee made the following clarifications on the general approach developed over the years for the identification of cases of progress:
- (1) The expression by the Committee of interest or satisfaction does not mean that it considers that the country in question is in general conformity with the Convention, and in the same comment the Committee may express its satisfaction or interest at a specific issue while also expressing regret concerning other important matters which, in its view, have not been addressed in a satisfactory manner.

- (2) The Committee wishes to emphasize that an indication of progress is limited to a specific issue related to the application of the Convention and the nature of the measures adopted by the government concerned.
- (3) The Committee exercises its discretion in noting progress, taking into account the particular nature of the Convention and the specific circumstances of the country.
- (4) The expression of progress can refer to different kinds of measures relating to national legislation, policy or practice.
- (5) If the satisfaction relates to the adoption of legislation, the Committee may also consider appropriate follow-up measures for its practical application.
- (6) In identifying cases of progress, the Committee takes into account both the information provided by governments in their reports and the comments of employers' and workers' organizations.

121. Since first identifying cases of satisfaction in its report in 1964,³¹ the Committee has continued to follow the same general criteria. The Committee expresses satisfaction in cases in which, following comments it has made on a specific issue, governments have taken measures through either the adoption of new legislation, an amendment to the existing legislation or a significant change in the national policy or practice, thus achieving fuller compliance with their obligations under the respective Conventions. In expressing its satisfaction, the Committee indicates to governments and the social partners that it considers the specific matter resolved. The reason for identifying cases of satisfaction is twofold:

- to place on record the Committee's appreciation of the positive action taken by governments in response to its comments; and
- to provide an example to other governments and social partners which have to address similar issues.

122. Details concerning these cases of progress are found in Part II of this report and cover 34 instances in which measures of this kind have been taken in 26 countries. The full list is as follows:

- 123. Thus the total number of cases in which the Committee has been led to express its satisfaction at the progress achieved following its comments has risen to 3,195 since the Committee began listing them in its report.
- 124. Within cases of progress, the distinction between cases of satisfaction and cases of interest was formalized in 1979.³² In general, cases of interest cover measures that are sufficiently advanced to justify the expectation that further progress would be achieved in the future and regarding which the Committee would want to continue its dialogue with the government and the social partners. The Committee's practice has developed to such an extent that cases in which it expresses interest may encompass a variety of measures. The paramount consideration is that the measures contribute to the overall achievement of the objectives of a particular Convention. This may include:
- draft legislation that is before parliament, or other proposed legislative changes forwarded or available to the Committee;
 - consultations within the government and with the social partners;
 - new policies;

³² Report of the Committee of Experts submitted to the 65th Session (1979) of the International Labour Conference, para. 122.

- the development and implementation of activities within the framework of a technical cooperation project or following technical assistance or advice from the Office;
- judicial decisions, according to the level of the court, the subject matter and the force of such decisions in a particular legal system, would normally be considered as cases of interest unless there is a compelling reason to note a particular judicial decision as a case of satisfaction; or
- the Committee may also note as cases of interest the progress made by a state, province or territory in the framework of a federal system.

125. Details concerning the cases in question are found either in Part II of this report or in the requests addressed directly to the governments concerned, and include 229 instances in which measures of this kind have been adopted in 103 countries. The full list is as follows:

Practical application

126. As part of its assessment of the application of Conventions in practice, the Committee notes the information contained in governments' reports, such as information relating to judicial decisions, statistics and labour inspection. The supply of this information is requested in almost all report forms, as well as under the specific terms of some Conventions. In the context of the COVID-19 pandemic and the interlocking crises that followed, such information is indispensable to complete the examination of national legislation and to help the Committee identify the issues arising from real problems of application in practice. The Committee wishes to emphasize to governments the importance of submitting such information and also encourages employers' and workers' organizations to submit clear and up-to-date information on the application of Conventions in practice.

Observations made by employers' and workers' organizations

127. At each session, the Committee recalls that the contribution by employers' and workers' organizations is essential for the Committee's evaluation of the application of Conventions in national law and in practice. Member States have an obligation under article 23, paragraph 2, of the Constitution to communicate to the representative employers' and workers' organizations copies of the reports supplied under articles 19 and 22 of the Constitution. Compliance with this constitutional obligation is intended to enable organizations of employers and workers to participate fully in the supervision of the application of international labour standards. In some cases, governments transmit the observations made by employers' and workers' organizations with their reports, sometimes adding their own comments. However, in the majority of cases, observations from employers' and workers' organizations are sent directly to the Office which, in accordance with the established practice, transmits them to the governments concerned for comment, so as to ensure respect for due process. For reasons of transparency, the record of all observations received from employers' and workers' organizations on the application of ratified Conventions since the last session of the Committee is included as Appendix III to its report. Where the Committee finds that the observations are not within the scope of the Convention or do not contain information that would add value to its examination of the application of the Convention, it will not refer to them in its comments. Otherwise, the observations received from employers' and workers' organizations may be considered in an observation or in a direct request, as appropriate.

In a reporting year

- 128. At its 86th Session (2015), the Committee made the following clarifications on the general approach developed over the years for the treatment of observations from employers' and workers' organizations. The Committee recalled that, in a reporting year, when observations from employers' and workers' organizations are not provided with the government's report, they should be received by the Office by 1 September at the latest, so as to allow the government concerned to have a reasonable time to respond, thereby enabling the Committee to examine, as appropriate, the issues raised at its session the same year. When observations are received after 1 September, they would not be examined in substance in the absence of a reply from the government, except in exceptional cases. Over the years, the Committee has identified exceptional cases as those where the allegations are sufficiently substantiated and there is an urgent need to address the situation, whether because they refer to matters of life and death or to fundamental human rights or because any delay may cause irreparable harm. In addition, observations referring to legislative proposals or draft laws may also be examined by the Committee in the absence of a reply from the government, where this may be of assistance for the country at the drafting stage.

Outside of a reporting year

- 129. At its 88th Session (2017), following its consideration of the Governing Body's review of the reporting cycle for technical Conventions from five to six years, the Committee indicated its willingness to consider the manner in which it might broaden the very strict criteria for breaking its cycle of review when receiving comments from workers' or employers' organizations on a specific country under article 23, paragraph 2, of the ILO Constitution and decided that inspiration in this regard could be drawn from those criteria used for "footnoting" cases and set out in paragraph 73 of that year's General Report.
- 130. In light of the November 2018 Governing Body decision (GB.334/INS/5) expanding the reporting cycle for technical Conventions from five to six years and expressing its understanding that the Committee would further review, clarify and, where appropriate, broaden the criteria for breaking the reporting cycle with respect to technical Conventions, the Committee proceeded with the review of the criteria mentioned above at its 89th Session (2018).
- 131. The Committee recalls that, in a non-reporting year, when employers' and workers' organizations send observations which simply repeat comments made in previous years, or refer to matters already raised by the Committee, such comments will be examined in the year when the government's report is due, in accordance with the regular reporting cycle. In this case, a report will not be requested from the government outside of that cycle.
- 132. Where the observations on a technical Convention meet the criteria set out in paragraph below, the Committee will request the office to issue a notification to governments that the article 23 observations received will be examined at its subsequent session with or without a response from the government. This would ensure that governments have sufficient notice while ensuring that the examination of matters of importance are not further delayed.

- 133. The Committee would thus review the application of a technical Convention outside of a reporting year following observations submitted by employers' and workers' organizations having due regard to the following elements:
- the seriousness of the problem and its adverse impact on the application of the Convention;
 - the persistence of the problem; and
 - the relevance and scope of the government's response in its reports or the absence of response to the issues raised by the Committee, including cases of clear and repeated refusal on the part of a State to comply with its obligations.
- 134. With respect to any Convention (fundamental, governance or technical), recalling its well-established practice, the Committee will examine employers' and workers' observations in a non-reporting year in the year received in the exceptional cases set out in paragraph above, even in the absence of a reply from the government concerned.
- 135. The Committee emphasized that the procedure set out in the paragraphs above aims at giving effect to decisions taken by the Governing Body which have extended the reporting cycle and called for safeguards in that context, to ensure that effective supervision of the application of ratified Conventions is maintained. One of these safeguards consists in giving due recognition to the possibility afforded to employers' and workers' organizations to draw the attention of the Committee to matters of particular concern arising from the application of ratified Conventions, even in a year when no report is due. The approach above also pays particular attention to the importance of providing due notice to governments, except in exceptional circumstances, and in all cases the Committee will indicate its reasons for breaking the cycle.
- 136. The Committee notes that since its last session, it has received 1,156 observations (compared to 757 last year), 212 of which (compared to 230 last year) were communicated by employers' organizations and 944 (compared to 527 last year) by workers' organizations. The great majority of the observations received (955 compared to 695 last year) related to the application of ratified Conventions; ³³ 416 of these observations (compared to 243 last year) concerned the application of fundamental Conventions, 140 (compared to 75 last year) related to governance Conventions and 399 (compared to 377 last year) concerned the application of other Conventions. Moreover, 201 observations were received in relation to the 2022 General Survey on achieving gender equality at work. The Committee notes that 565 of the observations received this year on the application of ratified Conventions were transmitted directly to the Office. In 390 cases, the governments transmitted the observations made by employers' and workers' organizations with their reports. The Committee notes that in general the employers' and workers' organizations concerned endeavoured to gather and present information on the application of ratified Conventions in specific countries, both in law and in practice. The Committee recalls that observations of a general nature relating to certain Conventions are more appropriately addressed within the framework of the Committee's consideration of General Surveys or within other forums of the ILO.

Cases in which the need for technical assistance has been highlighted

- 137. The combination of the work of the supervisory bodies and the practical guidance given to Member States through development cooperation and technical assistance has always been one of the key dimensions of the ILO supervisory system. The Committee notes that the progressive lifting of travel restrictions after the COVID-19 pandemic enabled the Office to follow up on a number of cases requiring technical assistance to be delivered at country level. The Committee follows up on a number of these cases in the present report, especially where they relate to the follow-up to conclusions adopted by the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards.³⁴ Moreover, assistance was provided by the International Training Centre of the ILO (Turin Centre) and international labour standards specialists based in the field to more than 70 countries for the preparation of article 22 reports on ratified Conventions, including the MLC, 2006.

- 138. The Committee notes that the ILO backstops the Trade for Decent Work (T4DW) project which currently covers 13 countries in three regions on jointly identified priority areas, including commitments in the supply chain and just transition. The support provided to these countries aims, inter alia, at strengthening reporting capacity and addressing identified compliance gaps. In addition, and always in the framework of T4DW, the Office supports constituent requests for strengthening national statistic offices as a key action to establishing a baseline for decent work.
- 139. The Committee welcomes the new regional focus of the International Labour Standards Academy which this year focused on Asia and the Pacific, delivering training on international labour standards to the ILO constituents, judges, law professors and other legal professionals across the region. The Committee notes the International Labour Standards Academy's important contribution to building the reporting capacities of governments, employers' and workers' organizations including in countries facing serious weaknesses in this field. The Committee also notes that in addition to the International Labour Standards Academy, the Turin Centre delivered:
- online courses to constituents on reporting in English and French as well as tailor-made training on reporting;
 - international labour standards training to judges in the Americas region;
 - a series of capacity-building events with a focus on promoting the ratification and legal implementation of the MLC, 2006, as well as reporting thereon;
 - finally, the Committee welcomes the tripartite digital activity carried out at the global level by the Office and the Turin Centre in order to facilitate the submission of reports under article 19 of the ILO Constitution and comments by workers' and employers' organizations for the preparation of the 2024 General Survey on labour administration.
- 140. In addition to cases of serious failure by Member States to fulfil certain specific obligations related to reporting, the cases for which, in the Committee's view, technical assistance from the Office would be particularly useful in helping Member States to address gaps in law and in practice in the implementation of ratified Conventions, particularly in the context of the COVID-19 pandemic, are highlighted in the following table and details can be found in Part II of this report.

C. Reports under article 19 of the Constitution

- 141. The Committee recalls that the Governing Body decided that the subjects of General Surveys should be aligned with those of the annual recurrent discussions in the Conference under the follow-up to the ILO Declaration on Social Justice for a Fair Globalization, 2008. This year, governments were requested to supply reports under article 19 of the Constitution for the General Survey on the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Convention, 1958 (No. 111), the Workers with Family Responsibilities Convention, 1981 (No. 156), the Maternity Protection Convention, 2000 (No. 183), the Discrimination (Employment and Occupation) Recommendation, 1958 (No. 111), the Workers with Family Responsibilities Recommendation, 1981 (No. 165) and the Maternity Protection Recommendation, 2000 (No. 191).³⁵ The General Survey entitled Achieving Gender Equality at Work has been prepared on the basis of a preliminary examination by a working party comprising six members of the Committee in accordance with the practice followed in previous years.
- 142. The Committee notes with regret that, for the past five years, none of the reports on unratified Conventions and on Recommendations requested under article 19 of the Constitution have been received from the following 20 countries: Albania, Barbados, Belize, Brunei Darussalam, Chad, Congo, Djibouti, Dominica, Haiti, Lesotho, Liberia, Marshall Islands, Papua New Guinea, Saint Lucia, Sao Tome and Principe, Sierra Leone, Timor-Leste, Tuvalu, Uganda and Yemen.
- 143. The Committee once again urges governments to provide the reports requested so that its General Surveys can be as comprehensive as possible and provide a complete picture of developments relevant to the impact of COVID-19 in areas that are particularly affected by the pandemic and parallel interlocking crises.

D. Submission of instruments adopted by the Conference to the competent authorities (article 19, paragraphs 5, 6 and 7 of the Constitution)

- 144. In accordance with its terms of reference, the Committee this year examined the following information supplied by governments of Member States pursuant to article 19 of the Constitution of the Organization:
- (a) information on measures taken to submit to the competent authorities the instruments adopted by the Conference from June 1970 (54th Session) to June 2019 (108th Session) (Conventions Nos 131 to 190, Recommendations Nos 135 to 206 and Protocols); and
 - (b) replies to the observations and direct requests made by the Committee at its 92nd Session (November–December 2021).

³⁵ Report III (Part B), ILC, 111th Session, Geneva, 2023.

- 145. Appendix IV of Part II of the report contains a summary of the most recent information received indicating the competent national authorities to which the Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930, and the Forced Labour (Supplementary Measures) Recommendation, 2014 (No. 203), adopted by the Conference at its 103rd Session, the Transition from the Informal to the Formal Economy Recommendation, 2015 (No. 204), adopted by the Conference at its 104th Session, the Employment and Decent Work for Peace and Resilience Recommendation, 2017 (No. 205), adopted by the Conference at its 106th Session, as well as the Violence and Harassment Convention (No. 190), and the Violence and Harassment Recommendation, 2019 (No. 206), adopted at the 108th Session of the Conference, were submitted and the date of submission. In addition, Appendix IV summarizes the information supplied by governments in 2022 with respect to the instruments adopted in earlier years and submitted to the competent authorities.
- 146. Additional statistical information is found in Appendices V and VI of Part II of the report. Appendix V, compiled based on information provided by governments, shows where each Member State stands in terms of its constitutional obligation of submission. Appendix VI shows the overall submission status of each instrument adopted since the 54th Session (June 1970) of the Conference. All instruments adopted prior to the 54th Session of the Conference have been submitted. The statistical data in Appendices V and VI are regularly updated by the competent units of the Office and can be accessed in NORMLEX.

103rd Session

- 147. At its 103rd Session in June 2014, the Conference adopted the Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930, and the Forced Labour (Supplementary Measures) Recommendation, 2014 (No. 203). The Committee notes that 121 governments have provided information on the submission of the Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930, whereas 106 governments have provided information on the submission of Recommendation No. 203 to their competent national authorities. It also notes with interest that the Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930, which entered into force on 9 November 2016, has been ratified by 59 Member States: Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Australia, Austria, Bangladesh, Belgium, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Canada, Chile, Comoros, Costa Rica, Cyprus, Czechia, Côte d'Ivoire, Denmark, Djibouti, Estonia, Finland, France, Germany, Iceland, Ireland, Israel, Jamaica, Kyrgyzstan, Latvia, Lesotho, Lithuania, Luxembourg, Madagascar, Malawi, Malaysia, Mali, Malta, Mauritania, Mozambique, Namibia, Netherlands, New Zealand, Niger, Norway, Panama, Peru, Poland, Portugal, Russian Federation, Saudi Arabia, Sierra Leone, Spain, Sri Lanka, Sudan, Suriname, Sweden, Switzerland, Tajikistan, Thailand, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, Uzbekistan and Zimbabwe. The Committee encourages all governments to continue their efforts to submit the instruments adopted by the Conference at its 103rd Session to their legislatures and to report on any action taken with regard to these instruments.

104th Session

- 148. At its 104th Session in June 2015, the Conference adopted the Transition from the Informal to the Formal Economy Recommendation, 2015 (No. 204). The 12-month period for submission of Recommendation No. 204 to the competent authorities ended on 12 June 2016, and the 18-month period (in exceptional circumstances) ended on 12 December 2016. The Committee notes that 102 governments have provided information on the submission to the competent authorities of Recommendation No. 204. It refers in this regard to Appendix IV of Part II of the report, which contains a summary of information supplied by governments on submission, including with respect to Recommendation No. 204. The Committee encourages all governments to continue their efforts to submit Recommendation No. 204 to their legislatures and to report on any action taken with regard to this instrument.

105th and 106th Sessions

- 149. The Committee recalls that no instrument was adopted at the 105th Session of the Conference (May–June 2016). At its 106th Session in June 2017, the Conference adopted the Employment and Decent Work for Peace and Resilience Recommendation, 2017 (No. 205). The 12-month period for submission of Recommendation No. 205 to the competent authorities ended on 16 June 2018, and the 18-month period (in exceptional circumstances) ended on 16 December 2018. The Committee notes that 88 governments have provided information on the submission of Recommendation No. 205 to the competent national authorities. The Committee welcomes the information provided to date and encourages all governments to submit Recommendation No. 205 to their legislatures and to report on any action taken with regard to this instrument.

107th and 108th Sessions

- 150. The Committee recalls that no instrument was adopted at the 107th Session of the Conference (May–June 2018). At its 108th Session in June 2019, the Conference adopted the Violence and Harassment Convention, 2019 (No. 190) and the Violence and Harassment Recommendation, 2019 (No. 206). The 12-month period for submission of Convention No. 190 and Recommendation No. 206 to the competent authorities ended on 21 June 2020, and the 18-month period (in exceptional circumstances) ended on 21 December 2020. The Committee notes that 77 governments have provided information on the submission of Convention No. 190, whereas 66 governments have provided information on the submission of Recommendation No. 206 to their competent national authorities. It also notes with interest that Convention No. 190, which entered into force on 25 June 2021, has been ratified by 22 Member States: Albania, Antigua and Barbuda, Argentina, Barbados, Central African Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Fiji, Greece, Italy, Mauritius, Mexico, Namibia, Nigeria, Panama, Peru, San Marino, Somalia, South Africa, Spain, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland and Uruguay. The Committee welcomes the information provided to date and encourages all governments to submit Convention No. 190 and Recommendation No. 206 to their legislatures and to report on any action taken with regard to this instrument.

Cases of progress

- 151. The Committee notes with interest the information provided by the Governments of the following countries: Burkina Faso, Eswatini and Lesotho. It welcomes the efforts made by these Governments in overcoming significant delays in submission and taking important steps toward fulfilling their constitutional obligations to submit to their legislatures the instruments adopted by the Conference over a number of years.

Special problems

- 152. To facilitate the work of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards, this report only mentions those governments that have not submitted the instruments adopted by the Conference to their competent authorities for at least seven sessions. These special problems are referred to as cases of “serious failure to submit”. This time frame begins at the 99th Session (2010) and concludes at the 108th Session (2019), bearing in mind that the Conference did not adopt any Conventions or Recommendations during its 97th (2008), 98th (2009), 102nd (2013) and 107th (2018) Sessions. Thus, this time frame was deemed long enough to warrant inviting the governments concerned to a special sitting of the Conference Committee so that they could account for delays in submission. In addition, the Committee is also providing information in its observations concerning cases of “failure to submit”, in relation to governments that have not submitted to the competent authorities the instruments adopted at the last six sessions of the Conference.

153. The Committee notes that, at the closure of its 93rd Session on 10 December 2022, the following 42 Member States (39 in 2018, 36 in 2019, 48 in 2020 and 45 in 2021) were in the category of “serious failure to submit”: Albania, Angola, Bahamas, Belize, the Plurinational State of Bolivia, Brunei Darussalam, Chad, Comoros, Congo, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Dominica, Equatorial Guinea, Fiji, Gabon, Gambia, Grenada, Guinea, Guinea-Bissau, Haiti, Hungary, Kazakhstan, Kyrgyzstan, Lebanon, Liberia, Libya, Malaysia, Maldives, Marshall Islands, Papua New Guinea, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Saint Lucia, Saint Vincent and the Grenadines, Seychelles, Solomon Islands, Syrian Arab Republic, Timor-Leste, Tuvalu, United Arab Emirates, Vanuatu, Yemen and Zambia.
154. The Committee is aware of the exceptional circumstances that have affected some of these countries for years, as a result of which some of them have been deprived of the institutions needed to fulfil their obligation to submit instruments. At the 110th Session of the Conference (June 2022), some Government delegations supplied information explaining why their countries had been unable to meet the constitutional obligation to submit Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols to their national legislatures. Further to the concerns raised by the Committee of Experts, the Conference Committee also expressed deep concern at the failure to respect this obligation. It pointed out that compliance with this constitutional obligation, which means submitting the instruments adopted by the Conference to national legislatures, is of the utmost importance in ensuring the effectiveness of the Organization’s standards-related activities.
155. The above-mentioned countries have been identified in observations published in this report, and the Conventions, Recommendations and Protocols that have not been submitted are indicated in the statistical appendices. The Committee considers it worthwhile to alert the governments concerned so as to enable them immediately, and as a matter of urgency, to take appropriate steps to bring themselves up to date and into compliance with this obligation. The Committee recalls that governments may benefit from the measures the Office is prepared to take, upon their request, to assist them in taking the steps required for the rapid submission to their legislature of the pending instruments.

Comments of the Committee and replies from governments

156. As in its previous reports, the Committee makes individual observations in section II of Part II of this report on the points that should be brought to the special attention of governments. In general, observations are made in cases where there has been no information for five or more sessions of the Conference. Furthermore, requests for additional information on other points have been addressed directly to a number of countries (see the list of direct requests at the end of section II).
157. As the Committee has already pointed out, it is important that governments send the information and documents required by the questionnaire appended to the Memorandum adopted by the Governing Body in March 2005. The Committee must receive for examination a summary or a copy of the documents submitting the instruments to the legislative bodies, an indication of the date of submission, and be informed of the proposals made as to the action to be taken on the instruments submitted. The obligation of submission is discharged only once the instruments adopted by the Conference have been submitted to the legislature and a decision has been taken on them. The Office must be informed of this decision, as well as of the submission of instruments to the legislature.

- 158. The obligation of submission to the competent national authorities under article 19 of the ILO Constitution is one of the fundamental obligations of Member States. Unlike other multilateral treaties, where States are not required to undertake any specific action, including ratification, even if they have participated in the adoption of the instruments, the ILO Conventions have gone a step closer to international legislation, in the sense that the Constitution has made it an obligation for all Member States to give serious consideration to their implementation, including ratification, although ratification by itself is in the prerogative of a sovereign State and not required under this constitutional obligation on submission. The Committee, therefore, reiterates the importance of the reporting obligation of Member States with respect to submission to the competent national authorities under article 19 of the Constitution, differentiating itself from other ordinary treaties and making ILO Conventions stand out in the universal framework of the protection of social rights.
- 159. The Committee hopes to continue to note cases of progress in this matter in its next report. It again reminds governments that they may seek technical assistance from the ILO, particularly through the standards specialists in the field.

* * *

- 160. Lastly, the Committee would like to express its profound appreciation for the invaluable assistance rendered to it by the officials of the Office, whose expertise, competence and devotion to duty make it possible for the Committee to accomplish its complex task.

Algeria

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1962)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the information communicated by the Government in response to the 2020 observations of the General and Autonomous Confederation of Workers in Algeria (CGATA) and of the National Autonomous Union of Public Administration Personnel (SNAPAP), supported by the International Union of Food, Agricultural, Hotel, Restaurant, Catering, Tobacco and Allied Workers' Associations (IUF) and Public Services International (PSI). The Committee notes that the Government provides no response regarding the closure of the CGATA headquarters in Algiers and refutes the allegations of persecution of around a hundred trade unionists. The government states that: (i) Mr Maaza Belkacem and Ms Lalia Djaddour were convicted for reasons unconnected to the exercise of their trade union rights; and (ii) no legal action was engaged against Mr Kaddour Chouicha, Coordinator of the Higher Education Teachers' Union (SESS). With regard to the observations of September 2020, from the Trade Union Confederation of Productive Workers (COSYFOP), supported by the international trade union organizations (UITA, ISP and IndustriALL Global Union), the Committee notes that the Government restricts itself to contesting the legality of the COSYFOP general assembly, on the grounds that Mr Mellal Raouf did not have the authority to convene it, and does not respond to the allegations of judicial harassment against the other COSYFOP leaders, or with regard to the closure of the headquarters of the union. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the overall situation of the COSYFOP leaders mentioned by COSYFOP in its communication of 30 September 2020. Recalling the right of organizations to be able to dispose of all their fixed and moveable assets unhindered, and that they should enjoy inviolability of their premises, as corollaries of the exercise of their trade union rights, the Committee urges the Government to indicate the reasons for the closure of the COSYFOP headquarters and that of the CGATA.

The Committee also notes the observations of the CGATA, dated 24 March 2021, according to which the Joint Council of the Civil Service and the National Arbitration Commission are not composed of real SNAPAP representatives, but of persons coming from a "clone" organization, established with the support of the Government. In this regard, the Committee notes the Government's reply, dated 27 April 2021, which essentially denies the alleged facts. The Government states that the trade union organizations freely appointed their representatives within these instances and recalls that if the SNAPAP has had an internal leadership dispute in its past, there is today only one, single SNAPAP, represented by its Secretary-General, Mr Felfoul Belkacem, and that this is confirmed by various SNAPAP congresses, the latest of which dates to January 2016. The Committee also notes the observations of the CGATA, dated 2 May 2021, denouncing the continued persecution of Mr Kaddour Chouicha, Coordinator of the SESS, persecution which is also directed against members of his family. Finally, the Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 1 September 2022, which concern legal issues already examined by the Committee and which point to continuing, serious violations of the Convention in practice. In particular, the ITUC denounces: (i) the arrest by the gendarmerie on 19 February 2022 of Mr Faleh Hammoudi, member of the SNAPAP office and President of the Algerian League for the Defence of Human Rights (LADDH), and his sentencing under urgent proceedings by the court of the first instance in Tlemcen to three years' imprisonment and a fine; and (ii) the arrest and arbitrary detention of Mr Mourad Ghedia, Chairperson of the SNAPAP/CGATA in April 2021. The ITUC states that following a major international campaign, Mr Ghedia was released after two months and ten days of detention. The Committee notes that, in its response of 27 October 2022 to the above-mentioned allegations, the Government states that Mr Faleh Hammoudi was judged by a sovereign court and that “in light of the evidence examined in this case [Mr Hammoudi] can neither conceal nor deny his membership of a terrorist group the actions of which are directed at undermining the democratic character of Algerian society by illegal means.” The Government adds that it is up to Mr Hammoudi to appeal the decision. With regard to Mr Mourad Ghedia, the Government declares that it will provide its comments once it has received the information from the administration concerned. In view of the gravity of the facts alleged, the Committee wishes to recall that the right of trade unions to freely carry out their activities is an essential element of trade union rights and that measures taken against trade union leaders or trade unionists to restrict this freedom implies a serious risk of interference in trade union activities and, where the restrictions are based on trade union grounds, they constitute a violation of freedom of association. Under these circumstances, it is for the Government to guarantee at all times that defenders of trade union rights may be able to carry out their activities without fear of retaliation and without restriction. The Committee urges the Government to provide its comments in response to the above observations and to communicate all information related to the above-mentioned legal procedures.

Legislative issues

The Committee notes the adoption of Act No. 22-06 of 25 April 2022, amending and supplementing Act No. 90-14 of 2 June 1990 on the exercise of the right to organize.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right to establish trade union organizations. The Committee notes with satisfaction that Act No. 22-06 of 25 April 2022 removes the nationality requirement provided under section 6 of Act No. 90-14, now allowing non-national employers and workers to form trade union organizations and, subject to three years’ residence and according to modalities established in the statutes, to become members of the executive board of a trade union (section 13 bis of Act No. 90-14). However, with reference to the observations from the ITUC, the Committee notes that the penalties for participating in an organization subject to dissolution have been increased (sections 60 and 61 of Act No. 90-14), which amounts to a risk of obstruction to the exercise of freedom of association, especially where the conditions for dissolution of the trade union are contested (see below, the situation of the Autonomous National Union of Electricity and Gas Workers (SNATEG)), given the recurrent complaints of “cloning” organizations and the allegations of closure of trade union headquarters mentioned above.

Article 5. Right to establish federations and confederations. The Committee notes with satisfaction that the new section 4 of Act No. 90-14 now allows trade union organizations to constitute federations, unions and confederations “whatever the occupation, branch and sector to which they belong”.

Article 3. Restrictions on access to trade union office. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to initiate without delay consultations with the social partners on measures to be taken to amend the requirements resulting from the application of section 2 of Act No. 90-14, so that trade union office in an enterprise or establishment is no longer restricted to persons employed by the enterprise or establishment in question, or to remove the requirement to belong to the occupation or to be an employee for at least a reasonable proportion of trade union officers. The Committee notes with regret that section 2 of Act No. 90-14 remains unchanged. The Committee recalls that it considers the requirement to belong to an enterprise or establishment in order to exercise trade union functions may infringe trade unions’ freedom to formulate their rules and to freely elect their representatives. It removes from unions the possibility to elect qualified persons (such as full-time trade union officials or retirees), and deprives them of the experience of certain leaders when there are insufficient numbers of qualified persons in their own ranks. Consequently, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the legislation complies fully with the Convention, in conformity with the principles recalled above.

Registration of trade union organizations

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the number of trade unions has increased from 117 in 2019 to 160 in 2022 and its assertion that this bears witness to the Government's wish to deal with the pending registration files, and associating stakeholders in the regularization process. In this regard, the Committee notes the Government's indication that it used every available means of reaching out to the organizations awaiting registration, but to no avail. The Committee notes that the Government repeats the following information: (i) the CGATA file does not conform to the conditions set out in Act No. 90-14, in that it is not composed of any legally established union, as required by the law, which requires any confederation to be established by a group of legally registered or established unions; (ii) the file for the establishment of the Algerian Union of Employees of the Public Administration (SAFAP) is pending due to a dispute between the founding members, to be settled out of court or by decision; (iii) regarding the registration of the Confederation of Algerian Trade Unions (CSA), the Government is waiting for the members concerned to attend the competent service of the Ministry of Labour, to update their file in line with the amendments introduced following the adoption of the Act of 25 April 2022. The Committee notes the follow-up information provided by the Government and requests it to continue to provide updated information on the handling of files for the registration of trade unions.

Regarding the situation of the SNATEG, the observations of which reveal numerous obstacles to the freedom to organize its activities, the Committee recalls that the Committee on Freedom of Association, during its last examination of the case (392nd report, October 2020, case No. 3210), formulated recommendations to the Government, including: (i) to conduct an independent investigation to determine the circumstances that led to the administrative decision to dissolve the SNATEG; and (ii) to review the decision to dissolve the SNATEG without delay. The Committee notes with regret that the Government limits itself to repeating that it has provided all information relative to the voluntary dissolution of the SNATEG, including the minutes of the bailiff who noted the voluntary dissolution. The Government underscores that it cannot overrule the will of the members of the trade union to dissolve their trade union. The Committee is concerned at the absence of progress in this matter, and once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to give effect to the recommendations of the Committee on Freedom of Association.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Labour Relations (Public Service) Convention, 1978 (No. 151) (ratification: 2002)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2023, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

Articles 4 and 5 of the Convention. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to take the necessary measures to grant civil servants and their organizations sufficient legal protection against anti-union discrimination and interference, and had requested the Government to provide information on cases concerning anti-union discrimination. The Committee notes the information contained in the Government's report that there are no cases to report with regard to anti-union discrimination and that the Antigua and Barbuda Constitution grants inalienable rights to citizens. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to grant civil servants and their organizations sufficient legal protection against anti-union discrimination and interference and requests the Government to provide information of any cases concerning anti-union discrimination (especially with respect to the procedures and sanctions imposed).

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 2001)

Previous comments: observation and direct request

The Committee recalls that for a number of years it has been requesting the Government to amend the Industrial Relations Act (IRA), and other texts, so as to bring the national legislation into conformity with the Convention. In particular, the Committee referred to the need to amend the following provisions:

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers and employers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish and join organizations without previous authorization.

- Section 3 of the IRA and sections 39 and 40 of the Correctional Officers (Code of Conduct) Rules, 2014, so as to ensure that prison staff enjoy all rights and guarantees under the Convention; and
- section 8(1)(a) and the First Schedule of the IRA, so as to ensure that, beyond the verification of formalities, the Registrar has no discretionary powers to refuse the registration of trade unions and employers' organizations.

Article 3. Right of workers' organizations to draw up their constitutions and rules and to elect their representatives in full freedom and to freely organize their activities and to formulate their programmes.

- Section 20(2) of the IRA, so as to ensure that trade unions can conduct ballots for election or removal of trade union officers and for amendment of the constitution of trade unions without interference from the authorities;
- section 20 (3) of the IRA, so as to ensure that trade unions can conduct strike ballot without supervision by the authorities;
- sections 73, 76(1) and 77 (1) of the IRA providing for compulsory arbitration to bring an end to a collective labour dispute and a strike, so as to not excessively restrict the right of organizations to formulate their programmes and organize their activities;
- sections 74(3), 75(3), 76(2)(b) and 77(2) of the IRA, so as to ensure that no penal sanctions may be imposed for having carried out a peaceful strike; and
- section 75, so as to allow organizations responsible for defending socio-economic and occupational interests to use strike action or protest action to support their position in the search for solutions to problems posed by major social and economic policy trends which have a direct impact on their members.

Article 5. Right to affiliate to an international federation or confederation.

- Section 39 of the IRA, so as to ensure the right of workers' and employers' organizations to affiliate with international organizations of workers and employers.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the National Tripartite Council is continuing to review the IRA and that no amendments have yet been made to any of the above-mentioned sections, or to article 31 of the Constitution (which, among others, defines prison services as “disciplined force” along with the police and military). The Government indicates that priority has been given to sections 20(2), 74(3), 75(3), 76(2)(b) and 77(2) of the IRA in the reviewing exercise and that it is examining the possibility of repealing section 39 of the IRA. The Committee welcomes the Government’s indication that it will request ILO technical assistance to finalize any relevant pieces of legislation. The Committee urges the Government to take all necessary measures, in consultation with the social partners, to amend its legislation in the near future, so as to ensure its full conformity with the Convention without further delay, and requests the Government to provide information on all developments in this respect.

Bangladesh

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1972)

Previous comment

The Committee takes note of the Government’s report of 9 September 2022 on progress made on the implementation of the road map of actions to address all outstanding issues in the complaint pending under article 26 of the ILO Constitution concerning this Convention, among others, as well as the decision adopted by the Governing Body at its 346th Session (November 2022) requesting the Government to report on further progress made to its 347th Session (March 2023) and to defer the decision on further action to that session.

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) and of the Trade Union Committee of International Labour Standards (TU-ILS) (a committee of the workers’ representatives from the National Coordination Committee for Workers’ Education (NCCWE) and IndustriALL Bangladesh Council (IBC)), both received on 1 September 2022, referring to matters addressed in this comment and alleging new cases of violence and repression by police, as well as continued retaliation against workers in connection with trade union activities and surveillance of trade unionists by the authorities.

Civil liberties. The Committee has been expressing deep concern at the allegations of violence and intimidation of workers for a number of years and has urged the Government to provide information on any such specific allegations remaining and to take all necessary measures to prevent such incidents in the future and ensure that, if they occur, they are properly investigated.

The Committee notes the Government’s reference to cases filed against trade unionists that remain sub-judice and the regular monitoring by the Ministry of Labour and Employment. As regards the specific allegations concerning the Jute Mills in Chittagong, the Committee notes the Government’s indication that there was no incident of clash between the Jute Mill workers and Industrial police, nor were there any incidents of July 2020 where the Mills were closed by the authority. As regards the allegation of injuries to ten garment workers during a protest over non-payment of wages in Gazipur in September 2018, the Government states that the allegation does not provide any clear information regarding a specific incident, with no reference to date or factory, and in any event denies that any workers were injured during protests over non-payment of wages in Gazipur in this period. As regards the allegations of increased pressure and state surveillance of garment federations by a newly-formed unit in the Department of National Security, resulting in at least 175 trade union leaders and active members being blacklisted and 26 of them facing criminal and civil charges, the Government indicates that the Bangladesh Labour Act (BLA) leaves no scope for blacklisting trade union leaders or workers and requests particularly information on the allegations of blacklisting in order to consider any action that might be taken if a violation is found.

The Government further provides information on the training and sensitization programs that have been organized for the personnel of disputes by the Industrial Police, referring specifically to orientation courses on labour rights, labour laws, human rights and workers' federation activities. The Industrial Police has trained 1,389 of its personnel so far concerning prevention of violence, unfair labour practices and anti-union acts as part of its broader training programmes. In collaboration with the ILO, the Department of Labour (DOL) has planned a training for 90 Industrial Police personnel ranked from Superintendents of Police to Sub-Inspectors of Police in August 2022 and a training of trainers on preventing unfair labour practice, violence and harassment in September 2022. Bangladesh Police also provides regular training on these issues to its personnel across the board, while further upgrading of training curricula for Industrial Police, with added features concerning labour rights and trade union activities, is being discussed with Industrial Police and the ILO. Ministry of Labour and Employment (MOLE), Ministry of Home Affairs and Ministry of Law, Justice and Parliamentary Affairs continue to provide instructions to their subsidiary agencies regarding handling of cases, including those involving alleged acts of violence and harassment against workers. The judiciary, prosecutorial services and law enforcement agencies receive regular training on these issues as part of their mandate. Further customized training may be provided based on specific needs and with ILO's technical support. Additionally, from July 2020 to June 2022, DOL has trained about 20,000 workers, management staff, and government officials through its 4 Industrial Relations Institutes (IRIs) and 32 Labour Welfare Centres (LWCs), with nearly 45 per cent female participants. The training topics include violence, harassment, unfair labour practices and anti-union discrimination in the workplace. DOL has also taken the initiative to provide training to the security staff, managers/employers of factories, providing basic information concerning complaint management and investigations, while the Industrial Police continues to engage with employers and factory management to sensitize their respective security personnel about prevention of violence and supporting investigations in case of alleged violence and harassment. A database on training, linked to the DOL website, is being supported by the ICT service vendor and will incorporate relevant information of the trainees (segregated by name, designation, factory/ trade union, age, sex, etc.) collected from the IRIs and LWCs. Further discussions are required to explore the possibility of including information on Industrial Police training in the proposed online database. Finally, the Government indicates that both DOL and the Department of Inspection for Factories and Establishments (DIFE) are entrusted with monitoring the case proceedings and management, including for those concerning alleged acts of violence and harassment against workers. The Government adds that it continues to consider the setting up of a dedicated Cell within an appropriate Ministry/agency to ensure and monitor proper investigation of such alleged cases as part of yet another confidence-building measure.

While taking due note of the various initiatives referred to by the Government, the Committee notes with concern the ITUC allegations in its latest communication that the climate for the exercise of trade union rights and the protection of workers is getting worse. According to the ITUC, strikes are met with extreme brutality by the police, who use batons, gunshots, tear gas and sound grenades against workers, killing at least five workers and injuring dozens more in 2021 after police opened fire on a crowd of workers demanding unpaid wages and a pay rise in Chittagong. The ITUC further refers to: (i) attacks by the industrial police in Gazipur on protesting garment workers on 15 February 2022; (ii) police inflicted injuries on workers protesting sexual harassment on 1 February 2022 in the Tongi Industrial Area; (iii) the injury on 13 June 2021, following a police crackdown, of garment workers demanding their wages after the closure of a factory in the Dhaka export processing zone (DEPZ); (iv) 12 workers severely injured when police used disproportionate force to suppress protests against unpaid wages and allowances in Dhaka on 25 July 2020. According to the ITUC, these events show a pattern of police attacks against protesting workers and if unpunished will result in impunity by the police and security forces who insert themselves into the industrial relations of the country. The Committee further observes the comments of the TU-ILS that while most complaints related to the 2016 and 2018 minimum wage unrest have been settled, several cases remain pending. The TU-ILS provides a detailed list of remaining cases with relevant case numbers, adding that in some factories, personal information and photos of the workers concerned is shared claiming that they are involved in a criminal offence while the case is still pending. The TU-ILS further alleges that the industrial police are trying to take on the role of conciliator or arbitrator of labour disputes, sometimes intimidating workers to resign. Some factories have provided accommodation for the industrial police and trade union offices are under police surveillance and lists are being made of workers attending trade union meetings. As regards the establishment of 29 committees of officials from the DOL and the DIFE, which the Government previously indicated had the aim of ensuring peaceful and congenial working conditions in ready-made garment (RMG) factories, the TU-ILS alleges that, while these committees are tripartite, they are highly political and administratively controlled, mostly influenced by the police, with labour representation selectively chosen. The TU-ILS asks for detailed information on the committees, their activities and disputes resolved. As for training and awareness-raising activities for the police, the TU-ILS contends that there has been only a limited number of trainings with little result. In the view of TU-ILS, dispute resolution mechanisms are what is needed.

The Committee notes with concern the very detailed information provided by the ITUC and the TU-ILS concerning numerous allegations of new cases of violence against trade unionists carried out by the industrial police. While the Committee takes due note of the information provided by the Government concerning the previous allegations, it observes that the industrial relations climate appears to remain one of little trust with confrontation a regular attribute. The Committee must therefore once again recall that a truly free and independent trade union movement can only develop in a climate free from violence, pressure and threats of any kind against the leaders and members of such organizations. The Committee requests the Government to review all the allegations of violence, harassment and intimidation with the TU-ILS with a view to carrying out the necessary investigations to determine those responsible, punishing the guilty parties and preventing the repetition of any such acts. The Committee requests the Government to keep it informed of all steps taken in this regard.

Furthermore, while noting the information provided by the Government concerning the training of the industrial police, the Committee notes with concern the numerous allegations concerning the expansion of the role of industrial police at the factory level in such a way as to intimidate and impede workers in the exercise of their freedom of association guaranteed by the Convention. The Committee therefore encourages the Government to continue to provide all necessary training and awareness-raising to the police and other State agents to sensitize them about human and trade union rights and urges the Government to review their role, with the workers' and employers' organizations concerned, so as to ensure that issues purely concerning labour relations are relegated to the unique authority of the relevant Ministry.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right to organize. Registration of trade unions. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it has been implementing a number of initiatives to make the registration process simple, objective, rapid and transparent. The Government refers in particular to: (i) training of DOL officials on the Standard Operating Procedures (SOPs) in November 2021 with the collaboration of the ILO; (ii) 10 DOL officials have joined a three month training programme on Labour Relations and Social Dialogue conducted by the International Training Centre of the ILO in association with the Institute of Social Welfare and Research of the University of Dhaka; (iii) a pre-application service desk was established in every office of the Registrar of Trade Union (RTU) under DOL in January 2021 to ensure smooth registration through quality applications by scrutinizing trade union registration application documents; (iv) despite the adverse effect of COVID-19, 290 trade unions were registered in 2020 and 376 in 2021, while the success rate has increased from 88.69 per cent to 92.38 per cent during the same period; (v) digitization of the trade union registration process under DOL was completed on 27 October 2021 and was made active for users on 1 April 2022. The online registration system will be regularly reviewed and updated based on stakeholder feedback. The Committee further notes the statistics provided on registration disaggregated by year and status and the Government's indication that the Publicly Accessible Online Database was activated on 30 September 2021 on the DOL website (www.dol.gov.bd) with the assistance of the Social Dialogue and Industrial Relations Project of ILO. It provides information on 11 areas, namely status of trade union application, registration, rejection, and filing; the number of national and sector wide trade union federations, participation committees, collective bargaining agreements; and information on unfair labour practices/ anti-union discrimination as well as conciliation of labour disputes. The Government states that the database, which was presented to a tripartite consultative workshop on 7 August 2022, should enhance the transparency of the trade union registration process, and will continue to be updated with relevant information.

The Committee notes however the TU-ILS allegations that: (i) while the law enables three unions per workplace, the DOL will only register one union; (ii) after a registration application is filed, the confidential information of the workers concerned is leaked to the employers through DOL requests to the employer for different documents. The workers then become vulnerable to intimidation and harassment; (iii) there are various requirements not contained in the law that hinder registration (i.e., representation of DOL in the general meeting to sign minutes; requirement that 20 per cent of the workers attend the general meeting for the union; requirement of permission from the local police for in-house or public meetings; delays in registration of five-months and beyond; requirement to submit both offline and online); (iv) the application portal is not well maintained and usage is not simple. The ITUC for its part regrets the lack of involvement of the Bangladeshi unions in the design of the registration process. The Committee notes with concern the allegations of interference by the Government in the steps taken by workers to form organizations of their own choosing and recalls that workers' organizations must be able to draw up their constitutions and rules in full freedom without government interference. The Committee further notes the numerous concerns raised by the TU-ILS as regards hurdles to registration that are not set out in the law, and observes from the statistics provided by the Government that the number of valid applications out of the total applications (as opposed to the percentage of unions registered which is only based on valid applications) continues to remain quite low (2021: 281 out of 394; January through July 2022: 57 out of 128). The Committee requests the Government to indicate the types of issues found when determining invalid applications and it encourages the Government to continue to engage with the workers' organizations concerned as regards the functioning of the digitized registration process for their feedback on any obstacles encountered and consideration of measures to redress them. The Committee also encourages the Government to continue to provide comprehensive training to divisional and regional officers who, following the decentralization of the registration process, are responsible for registration of trade unions, so as to ensure that they have sufficient knowledge and capacity to handle applications for registration rapidly and efficiently, while taking steps to ensure confidentiality of workers and their identity.

Minimum membership requirements. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the 2018 amendment to the BLA, reducing the minimum membership requirement to form a trade union and maintain its registration from 30 per cent to 20 per cent of the total number of workers employed in the establishment in which a union is formed, is being applied since its entry into force on 14 November 2018. According to the Government, while taking into account the impact of the COVID-19 pandemic, the reduction to the minimum membership requirement has resulted in an increase in the number of registration applications. (2018: 394; 2019: 943; 2020: 413; 2021: 394). The Committee recalls its previous comment that the 20 per cent threshold is still likely to be excessive, especially in large enterprises, where it constitutes a hurdle to form a union, and takes note of the indication by the TU-ILS that it has proposed the repeal of section 190(f) which allows for cancellation of a trade union if its membership falls below the minimum membership requirement, and section 179(5) which limits the number of trade unions in an establishment or group of establishments to a maximum of three. The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report on the progress made with the timely implementation of the road map that amendment proposals from the tripartite constituents have been compiled by the Tripartite Labour Law Review Committee for discussion on the compiled recommendations to be forwarded to the tripartite working group (TWG) and that the MOLE is engaged with the ILO to align the BLA with relevant international labour standards. The Committee expects that the Government will make progress in the near future in its tripartite review of sections 179(5) and 190(f) of the BLA with a view to reducing the minimum membership requirements to a reasonable level, at least for large enterprises, and ending the possible cancellation of trade unions that fall below minimum membership requirements, as well as addressing the limits on the number of trade unions in an establishment.

With regard to the application of the BLA to workers in the agricultural sector through Bangladesh Labour Rule 167(4), the Committee notes the Government's indication that there has been consultation on the issue with relevant stakeholders including social partners and that the Bangladesh Labour Rules Amendment Committee has proposed a reduction for small family farms and observes from an official English version of the rule that the minimum number has been reduced to 300. Observing that the requirement of even 300 workers to form a union in a group of establishments in one district might still be excessive, especially for workers on small family farms, the Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the practical application of this requirement, including the number of unions of agricultural workers registered and the number of workers represented and establishments covered by each of these unions, and trusts that further measures will be considered to ensure that agricultural workers can exercise their right to organize without hindrance.

Articles 2 and 3. Right to organize, elect officers and carry out activities freely. Bangladesh Labour Act. The Committee notes the Government's general indication that all amendments made in 2018 to the BLA are in force and applied from the date of enactment. A National Tripartite Consultative Council (NTCC) formed to deal with national level labour issues meets at regular intervals. The Committee regrets however that the Government has not provided any further information in relation to the numerous sections for which the Committee has requested amendment, repeal or further information. The Committee recalls that its previous comments concerned the following provisions: (i) scope of the law – restrictions on numerous sectors and workers remain, including, among others, Government workers, university teachers and domestic workers (sections 1(4), 2(49) and (65) and 175); (ii) one remaining restriction on organizing in civil aviation (section 184(1) – the provision should clarify that trade unions in civil aviation can be formed irrespective of whether they wish to affiliate with international federations or not); (iii) restrictions on organizing in groups of establishments (sections 179(5) and 183(1)); (iv) restrictions on trade union membership (sections 2(65), 175, 193 and 300); (v) interference in trade union activity, including cancellation of registration for reasons that do not justify the severity of the act (sections 192, 196(2)(b) read in conjunction with 190(1)(c), (e) and (g), 229, 291(2)–(3) and 299); (vi) interference in trade union elections (section 180(1)(a) read in conjunction with section 196(2)(d), and sections 180(b) and 317(4)(d)); (vii) interference in the right to draw up constitutions freely by providing overly detailed instructions (sections 179(1) and 188 (in addition, there seems to be a discrepancy in that section 188 gives the DOL the power to register and, under certain circumstances, refuse to register any amendments to the constitution of a trade union and its Executive Council whereas Rule 174 of the Bangladesh Labour Rules (BLR) only refers to notification of such changes to the DOL who will issue a new certificate)); (viii) excessive restrictions on the right to strike (sections 211(3)–(4) and (8) and 227(c)) accompanied by severe penalties (sections 196(2)(e), 291(2)–(3) and 294–296); and (ix) excessive preferential rights for collective bargaining agents (sections 202(24)(b), (c) and (e) and 204 (while noting the minor amendments to sections 202 and 204, the Committee notes that these amendments do not address its concerns in that they limit the scope of action of trade unions other than the collective bargaining agents). Furthermore, the Committee is still awaiting information on whether workers in small farms consisting of less than five workers can, in law and practice, group together with other workers to form a trade union or affiliate to existing workers' organizations (section 1(4)(n) and (p) of the BLA).

The Committee further observes with concern the observations from the TU-ILS that the worker nomination to the TCC charged with reviewing the legislation was made by the Government and not by the workers organizations independently and further that the recommendations agreed by the tripartite representatives for amendment to the BLR were not endorsed, stalling the process for some time. Similarly, not all proposals agreed by tripartite representatives in 2018 for the amendment of the BLA were reflected in the final Act. Finally, the TU-ILS indicates that TCC meetings do not take place regularly and alleges that it meets merely to validate government needs. The Committee renews its request that the Government amend, repeal, or provide explanations as applicable regarding the provisions of the BLA identified above. In that connection, and noting the information provided by the Government concerning the ongoing review process to be carried out by the NTCC, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the worker representation reflects the independent choice of the Bangladesh trade union movement and requests the Government to schedule regular meetings to expedite the work of the NTCC so that it may review the above provisions of the BLA and bring them fully into line with the Convention.

Bangladesh Labour Rules. The Committee notes from the Government's progress report to the Governing Body within the framework of the section 26 complaint that the amended BLR were published through gazette notification on 1 September 2022. While the Government has not yet provided an official English version of the Rules, the Committee welcomes the amendment that appears to have been made to Rule 183 clarifying that it is not necessary to form a participation committee in companies where a union is present. It further observes that Rule 204 appears to have been amended to allow all workers to participate in a secret ballot. The Committee further notes that Rule 188, which provides for employer participation in the formation of election committees that conduct the election of worker representatives to participation committees in the absence of a union, has been amended to limit the employer representation to one, giving greater weight to the workers' representation. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the application of Rule 188, as well as on the results of the Government's efforts previously reported to pilot election of worker representatives to participation committees without any representation of employers. The Committee however notes with regret that the following rules which the Committee had previously requested the Government to address appear not to have been amended in the manner requested: (i) Rule 2(g) and (j) contains a broad definition of administrative and supervisory officers who are excluded from the definition of workers under the BLA and thus from the right to organize; (ii) Rule 85, Schedule IV, sub-rule 1(h) prohibits members of the Safety Committee from initiating or participating in an industrial dispute; (iii) Rule 169(4) limits eligibility to a trade union executive committee to permanent workers, which may adversely affect the right of workers' organizations to elect their officers freely; (iv) Rule 190 prohibits certain categories of workers from voting for worker representatives to participation committees; (v) Rule 202 contains broad restrictions on actions taken by trade unions and participation committees; (vi) Rule 350 provides for excessively broad powers of inspection by the Director of Labour; and (vii) the BLR lacks provisions providing appropriate procedures and remedies for unfair labour practice complaints. The Committee deeply regrets that the Government appears not to have taken advantage of the recent revision process to address the above-mentioned concerns and urges it to ensure an expedited review of these remaining issues so that the Bangladesh Labour Rules may be brought fully into conformity with the provisions of the Convention. The Committee further requests the Government to transmit the English version of the Rules.

Right to organize in Export Processing Zones (EPZs). The Committee recalls its previous comments concerning the need to further amend the Export Processing Zone Labour Act (ELA) of February 2019 to bring it into conformity with the Convention and to issue the rules under the Act to fully ensure freedom of association and, in particular, the right to organize. The Committee takes due note of the Government's reiteration of the favourable treatment to workers in EPZs through separate laws, rules and regulations and the important improvements made with the adoption of the ELA. The Government adds that a Tripartite Standing Committee was formed in November 2021 to work on the draft Rules for the ELA and consensus was reached on most of them. The proposed draft EPZ Labour rules, contains 15 chapters, 319 rules, 4 schedules and 106 forms, including: prevention of discrimination and conducting investigation against anti WWA activities; provisions on forming a federation; Procedure of formation of employers' association; modalities of DIFE inspection in EPZ; and prevention of misconduct to female workers covering prevention of activities against gender-based violence and harassment etc. The vetting of the proposed draft rules has been completed and the gazette notification of EPZ Labour Rules will be published very soon. The Committee notes that the EPZ Labour Rules were published on 4 October 2022. The Committee regrets however that the Government has not provided information as requested on the application in practice of the 2019 amendments, and has only indicated that an impact analysis will cover the period July 2023 to June 2025. The Committee therefore has no information available to it, in particular on the practical implications of these amendments on the number of applications for WWAs and WWA federations submitted and registered. In addition, the Committee observes that Chapter nine of EPZ Labour Rules on Workers' Welfare Association and Industrial Relations contains a number of rules setting out the role of the EPZ Executive Chairperson or Executive Director in the creation of WWAs, WWA Federations, EPZ employer associations, etc, which include a large degree of discretionary authority and opportunities to interfere in elections (i.e., Rules 172(4) (WWA), 183(1) (election management committee), 202(5) (WWA Federation), 211(5) (employers' association)) with recourse only available to the EPZ Labour Courts. The Committee once again requests the Government to continue to review the measures concerning the establishment of WWAs and WWA federations, in consultation with the social partners concerned, to endeavour to further reduce, to a reasonable level, the minimum membership requirements to form a WWA, especially in large establishments, as well as for federations, and to allow WWAs and federations to associate with other entities in the same Zone and outside the Zone in which they were established, including with non-EPZ workers' organizations at different levels. The Committee further requests the Government to provide detailed information on the number of applications received for the formation of WWAs, WWA Federations and employers' associations and the number registered.

While noting from the Government's report to the Governing Body on the progress made in implementing the road map developed within the framework of the article 26 complaint that the Bangladesh Export Processing Zone Authority (BEPZA) is closely engaged with the ILO for improvement of labour standards in EPZs and has held meetings in August and September 2022 regarding amendment of the EPZ Labour Act, 2019, the Committee must reiterate its deep regret that most of the changes to the Act that it had requested have still not been addressed. As a result, many of the issues already raised in relation to the 2019 ELA continue under the unchanged EPZ Labour Rules. The Committee must therefore, once again emphasize the need to further review the ELA to ensure its conformity with the Convention regarding the following matters: (i) scope of the law – specific categories of workers continue to be excluded from the law (workers in supervisory and managerial positions – sections 2(48)) or from Chapter IX dealing with WWAs (members of the watch and ward or security staff, drivers, confidential assistants, cipher assistants, casual workers, workers employed by kitchen or food preparation contractors and workers employed in clerical posts (section 93), as well as workers in managerial positions (section 115(2)); (ii) the imposition of association monopoly at enterprise and industrial unit levels (sections 94(6), 97(5) paragraph 2, 100 and 101); (iii) detailed requirements as to the content of a WWA's constitution which go beyond formal and may thus hinder the free establishment of WWAs and constitute interference in the right to draw up constitutions freely (section 96(2)(e) and (o)); (iv) limited definition of the functions of WWA members despite the deletion of the word "mainly" from section 102(3); (v) prohibition to hold an election to the Executive Council during a period of six months (reduced from one year), if a previous election was ineffective because less than half of the permanent workers of the enterprise cast a vote (section 103(2)–(3)); (vi) prohibition to function without registration and to collect funds for an unregistered association (section 111); (vii) interference in internal affairs by prohibiting expulsion of certain workers from a WWA (section 147); (viii) broad powers and interference of the Zone Authority in internal WWA affairs by the requirement of approval for funds from an outside source (section 96(3)), approval of any amendment in a WWA constitution and Executive Council (section 99), power to arrange elections to the Executive Council of WWAs (section 103(1)) and its approval (section 104), power to rule on the legitimacy of a transfer or termination of a WWA representative (section 121), power to determine the legitimacy of any WWA and its capacity to act as a collective bargaining agent (section 180(c)) and the monitoring of any WWA elections (section 191); (ix) interference by the authorities in internal affairs by allowing supervision of the elections to the WWA Executive Council by the Executive Director (Labour Relations) and the Inspector-General (sections 167(2)(b) and 169(2)(e)); (x) restrictions imposed on the ability to vote and on the eligibility of workers to the Executive Council (sections 103(2) and (4) and 107); (xi) legislative determination of the tenure of the Executive Council (section 105); (xii) broad definition of unfair labour practices, which also include persuasion of a worker to join a WWA during working hours or commencement of an illegal strike, and imposition of penal sanctions for their violation (sections 116(2)(a) and (f), 151(2)–(3) and 155–156); (xiii) power of the Conciliator appointed by the Zone Authority to determine the validity of a strike notice, without which a lawful strike cannot take place (section 128(2) read in conjunction with section 145(a)); (xiv) possibility to prohibit strike or lockout after 30 days or at any time if the Executive Chairman is satisfied that the continuance of the strike or lockout causes serious harm to productivity in the Zone or is prejudicial to public interest or national economy (section 131(3)–(4)); (xv) possibility of unilateral referral of a dispute to the EPZ Labour Court which could result in compulsory arbitration (sections 131(3)–(5) and 132, read in conjunction with section 144(1)); (xvi) prohibition of strike or lockout for three years in a newly established enterprise and imposition of obligatory arbitration (section 131(9)); (xvii) possibility of hiring temporary workers during a legal strike in cases where the Executive Chairman of the Zone Authority is satisfied that complete cessation of work is likely to risk causing serious damage to the machinery or installation of the industry (section 115(1)(g)); (xviii) excessive penalties, including imprisonment, for illegal strikes (sections 155 and 156); (xix) prohibition to engage in activities which are not described in the constitution as objectives of the association (section 178(1)); (xx) prohibition to maintain any linkage with any political party or organization affiliated to a political party or non-governmental organization, as well as possible cancellation of such association and prohibition to form a WWA within one year after such cancellation (section 178(2)–(3)); (xxi) cancellation of a WWA registration on grounds which do not appear to justify the severity of the sanction (sections 109(b)–(h), 178(3)); (xxii) restriction of WWA activities to the territorial limits of the enterprise thus banning any engagement with actors outside the enterprise, including for training or communication (section 102(2)) and, subject to the right to form federations under section 113, prohibition to associate or affiliate with another WWA in the same Zone, another Zone or beyond the Zone, including non-EPZ workers' organizations at all levels (section 102(4)); (xxiii) interference in internal affairs of a WWA federation – legislative determination of the duration of a federation (four years) and determination of the procedure of election and other matters by the Zone Authority (section 113); (xxiv) power of the Government to exempt any owner, group of owners, enterprise or group of enterprises, worker or group of workers from any provision of the Act, subjecting the rule of law to discretionary power (section 184); (xxv) excessive requirements to form an association of employers (section 114(1)); (xxvi) prohibition of an employer association to associate or affiliate in any manner with another association beyond the Zone (section 114(2)); (xxvii) excessive powers of interference in employers' associations' affairs (section 114(3)); and (xxviii) the possibility for the Zone Authority, with the approval of the Government, to establish regulations (section 204) which could further restrain the right of workers and their organizations to carry out legitimate trade union activities without interference. While taking due note that the Government intends to use the period from 2023 to 2025 to review the impact of the ELA, the Committee is deeply concerned that an exceptionally large number of provisions still need to be repealed or substantially amended to ensure its conformity with the Convention. The Committee urges the Government to expedite the review of the ELA, in consultation with the social partners, so as to address the issues highlighted above and provide EPZ workers with all the rights guaranteed in the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to report in detail on the steps taken in this regard.

As regards section 168 of the BLA that allows the Chief Inspector and other inspectors appointed under the BLA to undertake inspections of EPZs, the Committee notes the Government's indication that pursuant to the preamble and section 3(A), 4(d), 7 (k) and 5A (2) of the BEPZA Act, BEPZA is the only appropriate authority of the Government for development, operation, management and control of EPZs and for matters connected therewith. The Government indicates that BEPZA as the central and competent authority of the Government is successfully performing its duties and responsibilities of administration and inspection in EPZs for the last four decades without any complaint from workers or investors' as well as any international platform. The Government points out nevertheless that following the ILO's request, the DIFE inspection was incorporated into the BLA and the modalities have been included in the draft EPZ Labour Rules. On 16 May 2022, a review discussion meeting was held between BEPZA and DIFE, presided over by the Minister of Law, Justice and Parliamentary Affairs, regarding a transparent and accountable mechanism of inspection. As of June 2022, DIFE has already inspected 23 factories in EPZs and found overall compliance to be satisfactory. The Committee recalls, however, that DIFE inspectors need the approval of the Executive Chairman to inspect EPZ establishments, while the Chairman retains ultimate supervision of labour standards in EPZs (sections 168(1) and 180(g)). The Committee has considered that such a requirement may hinder the independent nature and proper functioning of labour inspection. The Committee further observes that the EPZ Labour Rules issued on 4 October contain Chapter 13 concerning Administration and Inspection, including a framework for the inspection of DIFE, while Rule 290 provides that the DIFE shall submit the inspection report to the Additional Inspector General of the zones who shall direct the concerned establishment to implement the recommendations which he deems feasible. Referring to its more detailed comments on this point made under the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81), the Committee encourages the Government to continue to review the inspection framework set out in the Rules so as to ensure the necessary independence of the DIFE and to continue to provide practical information on the functioning of the DIFE in the zones, the recommendations made and those implemented, as well as statistics on the inspections conducted by the zones Labour Inspectorate. The Committee once again requests the Government to continue to take steps to ensure that unrestricted access for and jurisdiction over labour inspection activities in EPZs is provided to DIFE inspectors.

Finally, the Committee notes the Government's indication that a Tripartite Implementation and Monitoring Committee (TIMC) has been formed by circular of 11 August 2021 and includes the following responsibilities: (1) to monitor the progress of implementation of the time-bound actions contained in the road map; and (2) to provide overall directions for the implementation of the road map. Noting the Government's indication that the technical assistance of both the ILO and development partners is crucial to ensure the successful implementation of the road map over a period of time, the Committee expresses the firm expectation that concrete steps will be taken to ensure timely implementation of the objectives of the road map taking into account all the above comments.

Previous comment

The Committee takes note of the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 15 March 2022 and 1 September 2022, referring to matters addressed in this comment. The Committee also takes note of the comments of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) received on 25 August 2022, which reiterate the comments made in the discussion that took place in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (hereinafter the Conference Committee) in June 2022 on the application of the Convention by Belarus.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 110th Session, May–June 2022)

Follow-up to the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry appointed under article 26 of the Constitution of the ILO

The Committee notes the discussion that took place in the Conference Committee in June 2022 concerning the application of the Convention. The Conference Committee deplored and deeply regretted the allegations of extreme violence to repress peaceful protests and assembly, and the detention, imprisonment and violent treatment of workers while in custody. The Conference Committee further deplored the escalating measures deployed to repress trade union activities, as well as the systemic destruction of independent trade unions. The Conference Committee expressed its deep concern that, 18 years after the Commission of Inquiry's report, the Government had failed to take measures to address most of the Commission's recommendations. The Conference Committee recalled the recommendations of the 2004 Commission of Inquiry noting the failure to make progress on its implementation and the need for their full and effective implementation, without further delay. The Conference Committee urged the Government to: (i) restore without delay full respect for workers' rights in respect of freedom of association; (ii) refrain from the arrest, detention, violent treatment, intimidation or harassment, including judicial harassment, of trade union leaders and members conducting lawful trade union activities; (iii) investigate without delay alleged instances of intimidation or physical violence through an independent judicial inquiry; (iv) immediately release all trade union leaders and members arrested for participating in peaceful assemblies or arrested for exercising their civil liberties pursuant to their legitimate trade union activities and drop all related charges, including for the following persons: Aliaksandr Yarashuk – a member of the Governing Body of the ILO; Siarhei Antusevich, Vice-President of the Belarus Congress of Democratic Trade Unions (BKDP); Gennadiy Fedynich, leader of the Belarusian Union of Radio and Electronics Workers (REP); Mikalai Sharakh, President of the Belarusian Free Trade Union (SPB); Aliaksandr Bukhvostov, President of the Free Trade Union of Metal Workers (SPM); and Zinaida Mikhniuk, Vice-Chairperson of the Belarusian Union of Radio and Electronics Workers (REP); (v) give access, as a matter of urgency, to visitors, including officials of the ILO, to ascertain the conditions of arrest and detention and the welfare of the above-mentioned persons; and (vi) take immediate action to implement fully the 2004 report of the Commission of Inquiry and the conclusions of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards, including the conclusions adopted by the Committee in 2021. The Committee decided to include its conclusions in a special paragraph of the report and to mention this case as a case of continued failure to implement the Convention.

The Conference Committee also referred this matter to the Governing Body to follow up at its June 2022 session and to consider, at that time, any further measures, including those foreseen in the ILO Constitution, to secure compliance with the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry. The Committee takes note of the decision of the Governing Body concerning the consideration of any further measures, including those foreseen in the ILO Constitution, to secure compliance by the Government of Belarus with the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry (GB.346/INS/13(Rev.1)). The Committee notes that the Governing Body at its 346th Session in November 2022: (a) deplored that no progress had been made by the Government of Belarus in implementing the recommendations of the 2004 Commission of Inquiry; (b) urged the Government to ensure full respect for freedom of association and, in particular, revoke all legislative and other measures directly or indirectly having the effect of outlawing independent trade unions or employers' organizations; (c) urged the Government to immediately release all trade union leaders and members arrested for participating in peaceful assemblies or arrested for exercising their civil liberties pursuant to their legitimate trade union activities and drop all related charges; (d) urged the Government to allow the ILO, as a matter of urgency, to ascertain the conditions of arrest and detention and the welfare of the above-mentioned trade unionists; (e) noted that the Committee of Experts on the Application of Conventions and Recommendations will be reviewing the application of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) in Belarus at its November–December 2022 meeting; (f) urged the Government to submit all information regarding the measures taken to implement all outstanding recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry and in respect of the more recent developments forming part of the complaint to the Committee on Freedom of Association for its examination at its March 2023 meeting; (g) requested the Director-General to submit to the Governing Body at its 347th Session (March 2023) a document detailing options for measures under article 33 of the ILO Constitution as well as other measures to secure compliance by the Government of Belarus with the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry taking account of the views expressed; and (h) decided to place on the agenda of the 111th Session (2023) of the International Labour Conference an item concerning measures under article 33 of the ILO Constitution to secure compliance by the Government of Belarus with the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry.

The Committee notes the above information with grave concern as it points to a total lack of progress in implementing the recommendations of the 2004 Commission of Inquiry and in addressing the outstanding recommendations of the ILO supervisory bodies. In this respect, the Committee recalls that in its previous comments it had expressed deep concerns regarding the situation of civil liberties in Belarus and the application of the Convention in law and in practice and had urged the Government to take a number of measures to address them. At the outset, the Committee notes with deep regret that in its report, the Government merely reiterates the information it had previously provided and considers that the Committee misunderstands and misinterprets the situation on the ground.

Civil liberties and trade union rights. The Committee recalls that in its previous comment it had noted the continued deterioration of the situation of human rights in the country following the presidential election in August 2020 and in this respect had urged the Government to: (i) investigate without delay all alleged instances of intimidation or physical violence through an independent judicial inquiry and to provide detailed information on the outcome; (ii) take measures for the release of all trade unionists who remain in detention and to drop all charges related to participation in peaceful protest action; (iii) take all the necessary measures, including legislative, if necessary, to ensure the right to a fair trial and an impartial and independent judiciary and justice administration; (iv) ensure impartial and independent judiciary and justice administration in general in order to guarantee that investigations into these grave allegations are truly independent, neutral, objective and impartial; and (v) supply copies of the relevant court decisions upholding detention and imprisonment of workers and trade unionists. The Committee notes with deep regret that the Government reiterates that: (i) the citizens referred to in the complaints made by trade union organizations as having allegedly suffered for their participation in peaceful protests and strikes were charged with disciplinary, administrative and, in certain cases, criminal offences for having committed specific illegal actions. The bringing of these citizens to justice has nothing to do with persecution for the exercise of their civil or trade union rights and freedoms; (ii) article 60 of the Constitution guarantees the protection of the rights and freedoms of all by a competent, independent and impartial judiciary. Any interference with the courts' administration of justice is prohibited and punishable by law. All trials are public. The adversarial principle and equality of parties in proceedings apply and the parties have the right to appeal; (iii) domestic law does not provide for supplying copies of court verdicts to persons with no connection to the trial. The ILO supervisory bodies can obtain the requested copies from the persons authorized to have access to verdicts.

The Committee notes that the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights indicated in her 2022 Report on the situation of human rights in Belarus in the run-up to the 2020 presidential election and in its aftermath that in response to the protests between 9 and 14 August 2020 "individuals were targeted following a consistent pattern of unnecessary or disproportionate use of force, arrests, detention (including incommunicado detention), and torture or ill-treatment, including rape and sexual and gender-based violence, and the systematic denial of the rights to due process and to a fair trial. The failure to effectively investigate human rights violations, including allegations of torture or other ill-treatment, is a contravention of the State's obligations under international human rights law. Furthermore, OHCHR found that, besides the lack of investigation, there was an active policy to shield perpetrators and prevent accountability, reflected in the degree of reprisals, intimidation of victims and witnesses, and attacks on lawyers and human rights defenders".

The Committee recalls that the International Labour Conference 1970 resolution concerning trade union rights and their relation to civil liberties, emphasizes that the rights conferred upon workers' and employers' organizations must be based on respect for civil liberties, as their absence removes all meaning from the concept of trade union rights. The Committee considers that the failure of the Government to reply to very serious allegations of violation of civil liberties or to address the repeated specific requests of the ILO supervisory bodies, including those made by this Committee, reinforces the reality of wilful Government noncompliance with its obligations under the Convention.

The Committee notes with deep concern that while the Government fails to reply to its previous comments, new allegations of arbitrary arrest, detention, prosecution and criminal sanctions against trade union leaders and members, as well as searches conducted in their homes have been submitted by the ITUC. In this regard, the Committee notes that the ITUC denounces, as did several speakers at the Conference Committee in June 2022, the imprisonment of the following 17 unionists, all leaders and members of the BKDP and its affiliates: Aliaksandr Yarashuk; Siarhei Antusevich; Hennadzy Fiadynich; Vatslau Areshka; Mikhail Hromau; Iryna But-Husaim; Miraslau Sabchuk; Yanina Malash; Vitali Chychmarou; Vasil Berasneu; Zinaida Mikhniuk; Aliaksandr Mishuk; Ihar Povarau; Yauhen Hovar; Artsiom Zhernak; Mikalaj Sharakh; and Andrei Khanevich. The Committee deplores the Government's unwillingness to immediately release trade union leaders and members as urged by the Conference Committee above. Accordingly, this Committee urges the Government to immediately release all trade union leaders and members arrested for participating in peaceful assemblies or for exercising their civil liberties pursuant to their legitimate trade union activities, and to drop all related charges. The Committee also urges the Government to provide detailed information concerning the situation of these trade unionists, including charges brought against them, and give access, as a matter of urgency, to visitors, including officials of the ILO, to ascertain the conditions of arrest and detention and the welfare of the above-mentioned persons. If in the meantime, any of the above trade unionists have been brought to court, the Committee urges the Government to provide information on the outcome of any proceedings undertaken against them and to communicate copies of any court decisions issued in their cases.

Application of the Convention. The Committee recalls that the outstanding issues of the application of the Convention relate to the following concerns: (1) right to establish workers' organizations, which includes the issue of legal address and the right, in practice, to form trade unions outside the Federation of Trade Unions of Belarus (FPB); (2) the right of workers' organizations to receive and use foreign gratuitous aid (funding obtained from abroad); (3) the right, in law and in practice, to demonstrate and hold mass events; (4) the right to strike; (5) consultation with organizations of workers and employers; and (6) labour disputes resolution system. The Committee observes with deep regret the absence of information on the concrete measures taken by the Government to give effect to the Committee's previous requests aimed at addressing these concerns; instead, the Government merely reiterates the information it has previously provided.

The Committee also notes with the utmost concern the following new information provided by the Government, which attests to further deterioration in the status of freedom of association in the country. The Government indicates that following the presidential election in August 2020, the activities of certain trade unions became highly unconstructive and politicized. Instead of performing their tasks of protecting citizens' labour and socio-economic rights and interests, taking action to warn workers against participation in illegal protest actions of a political nature at their enterprises and informing their members of the illegal nature of such actions, which in a number of cases posed a serious threat to public order and the safety of the population, representatives of the BKDP and leaders and members of its affiliated trade unions participated in destructive acts and unauthorized mass activities aimed at achieving regime change by unconstitutional means. These trade unions, according to the Government, indulged in behaviour which contradicted the Constitution and other pieces of national legislation and which focused not on their statutory tasks and objectives but on active participation in illegal activities and their popularization. In order to prevent further violations of the legislation, applications were made to the Prosecutor General and the Supreme Court to halt the activities of the BKDP and its member trade unions. At the petition of the Prosecutor General, the Supreme Court issued rulings to discontinue the activities of the Free Trade Union of Belarus (SPB), the Free Trade Union of Metalworkers (SPM), the Belarusian Independent Union of Mining, Chemical, Oil Industry, Energy, Transport, Construction and other Workers (BNP affiliate), the Radio Electronics Workers (REP) Union and the BKDP. Pursuant to the deliberations of the Court, it was established that instead of defending the labour and socio-economic rights of workers, the leaders and a number of members of these trade unions participated actively in destructive activities and mass events which violated public order, and also distributed information material with extremist content. The Supreme Court in its verdicts found violations of the Constitution, the Trade Unions Act and other national laws and regulations on matters concerning the receipt and use of foreign gratuitous aid. The Committee deplores that following these court decisions, the BKDP and its affiliate organizations at all levels have now ceased to operate in the country.

The Committee recalls that the Commission of Inquiry had requested the Government to amend Presidential Decree No. 24 (2003) on Receiving and Using Foreign Gratuitous Aid. The Committee for a number of years has been asking the Government to abolish the sanctions imposed on trade unions (liquidation of an organization) for a single violation of the Decree and to widen the scope of activities for which foreign financial assistance can be used so as to include events organized by trade unions. The Committee recalls that Decree No. 24 had been superseded by Presidential Decree No. 5 (2015) and then by Decree No. 3 of 25 May 2020, under which the foreign gratuitous aid could still not be used to organize or hold assemblies, rallies, street marches, demonstrations, pickets or strikes, or to produce or distribute campaign materials, hold seminars or carry out other forms of activities aimed at “political and mass propaganda work among the population”, and that a single violation of the Regulation still bore the sanction of possible liquidation of the organization. The Committee observed that the broad expression “political and mass propaganda work among the population” when applied to trade unions may hinder the exercise of their rights as it is normal and inevitable for trade unions to take a stand on questions having political aspects that affect their socio-economic interests, as well as on purely economic or social questions.

The Committee further recalls that the Commission of Inquiry had requested the Government to amend the Law on Mass Activities, under which, a trade union that violates the procedure for organizing and holding mass events may, in the case of serious damage or substantial harm to the rights and legal interests of other citizens and organizations, be liquidated for a single violation. Following its 2021 amendment, the Law makes an organization responsible if its leaders and members of their governing bodies make public calls for organizing a mass event before permission to organize the event is granted.

Finally, the Committee recalls that it had noted with regret the Regulation on the procedure requiring payment for services provided by the internal affairs authorities in respect of protection of public order, which outlines the fees that must be paid by the organizer of a mass event in relation to maintenance of public services and the expenses of the specialized bodies (medical care and cleaning services) following such an event.

Reading these provisions alongside those forbidding the use of foreign gratuitous aid for the conduct of mass events, the Committee had considered that the capacity for carrying out mass actions would appear to be extremely limited if not non-existent in practice. The Committee therefore urged the Government to amend Decree No. 3 of 25 May 2020 on the registration and use of foreign gratuitous aid, the Law on Mass Activities and the accompanying Regulation, and recalled that the amendments should be directed at abolishing the sanctions imposed on trade unions or trade unionists for a single violation of the respective legislation; at setting out clear grounds for the denial of requests to hold trade union mass events, bearing in mind that any such restriction should be in conformity with freedom of association principles; and at widening the scope of activities for which foreign financial assistance can be used.

In addition, the Committee had noted that the Criminal Code was amended in 2021 so as to introduce the following restrictions and associated penalties: repeated violations of the procedure for organizing and holding of mass events, including public calls therefor, are punishable by arrest, or restraint of liberty or imprisonment of up to three years (section 342-2); insult of a government official is punishable by a fine and/or restriction of liberty or imprisonment for up to three years (section 369); the penalty for “discrediting the Republic of Belarus” was increased from two to four years imprisonment with a fine (section 369-1); section 369-3 of the Criminal Code has been retitled from “violation of procedure for organizing and holding of mass events” to “public calls for the organization or conduct of an illegal meeting, rally, street procession, demonstration or picketing, or the involvement of persons in such mass events”, which became an offence punishable by up to five years of imprisonment. The Committee recalls the BKDP allegation that criminal liability can be established simply for organizing peaceful assemblies and that any criticism and slogans are seen by the authorities as insults within the meaning of section 369 of the Criminal Code and that BKDP’s leaders were under the threat of being prosecuted under section 369-1 of the Criminal Code for calling for a boycott of Belarusian goods and application of sanctions. The Committee expresses its deep concern that trade unionists’ speaking at the International Labour Conference, engaging with the ILO, and in case of Mr Yarashuk, being a member of the ILO Governing Body, could well have been interpreted by the authorities as “discrediting the Republic of Belarus”, punishable by four years of imprisonment.

The Committee notes the Government’s renewed reiteration that there is no link between the established procedure for obtaining funding from abroad (foreign gratuitous aid) and Articles 5 and 6 of the Convention. The Government once again points out that allowing external forces (in this case the trade unions of other countries and international trade union associations) to sponsor the holding of mass events in Belarus can present an opportunity to destabilize the socio-political and socio-economic situation, which in turn has an extremely negative effect on public life and citizens’ wellbeing. Thus, the existing ban on receiving and using foreign gratuitous aid for the purposes of conducting political and mass propaganda work among the population is bound up with the interests of national security, and the need to exclude any possible destructive influence and pressure from external forces. The Government further reiterates that the exercise of the right of peaceful assembly is not subject to any restrictions, except those that are imposed in conformity with the law and are necessary in a democratic society in the interests of national security or public safety, public order, the protection of public health or morals, the protection of the rights and freedoms of others. In holding mass events, trade unions are obliged to observe public order and must not permit actions which may cause an event to lose its peaceful character and inflict serious harm on citizens, society or the State. In the Government’s view, the legal penalty prescribed for organizers of mass events which cause substantial damage or harm to the interests of citizens and organizations, and also to the interests of State and society, does not constitute, and should not be interpreted as, a constraining factor on the exercise of rights to freedom of peaceful assembly by citizens and trade unions. In light of the above, the Government considers that any relaxation of responsibility for violation of the procedure for holding mass events or any lifting of restrictions on the use of foreign financial aid for the holding of political and mass propaganda work could only lead to circumstances likely to strengthen the external destructive influence on the situation in the country, which does not serve the interests of the country.

The Committee notes with deep regret that the Government has no intention of amending the legislation as requested by the Commission of Inquiry, whose recommendations the Government accepted as per article 29(2) of the ILO Constitution nearly 20 years ago. The Committee therefore reiterates its previous request to amend without further delay Decree No. 3, the Law on Mass Activities and the accompanying Regulation. The Committee further requests the Government to repeal the above-mentioned provisions of the Criminal Code in order to bring them into compliance with the Government's international obligations regarding freedom of association. The Committee expects the Government to provide information on all steps taken in this regard.

The Committee recalls that it had been requesting the Government for a number of years to amend sections 388(1), (3) and (4), 390, 392 and 393 of the Labour Code restricting the right to strike; as well as its section 42 (7), which expressly allows an employer to dismiss/terminate a labour contract with a worker who is absent from work in connection with serving an administrative penalty in the form of an administrative arrest; who forces other workers to participate in a strike or calls on other workers to stop performing work duties without sound reason; and who participates in an illegal strike or other forms of withholding labour without sound reasons. The Committee recalls the BKDP allegations that numerous trade unionists who participated in mass events and strikes organized following the August 2020 Presidential election were found guilty of administrative breaches and received corresponding penalty in the form of administrative arrest, and consequently dismissed. The Committee regrets that the Government merely reiterates its previous view that the national legislation is in conformity with the international labour instruments; that in Belarus, according to section 388 of the Labour Code, a strike constitutes a temporary and voluntary refusal by workers to perform their employment duties (fully or in part) for the purpose of settling a collective labour dispute; and that strikes of political nature are forbidden. The Committee recalls since the maintaining of the employment relationship is a normal consequence of recognition of the right to strike, its lawful exercise should not result in striking workers being dismissed or discriminated against (2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 161). The Committee is therefore bound to urge the Government to take measures to revise the above-mentioned legislative provisions, which negatively affect the right of workers' organizations to organize their activities in full freedom, and to provide information on all measures taken or envisaged to that end.

The Committee deplores the effect of the dissolution of the BKDP on the work of the National Council on Labour and Social Issues (NCLSI) and of the tripartite Council for the Improvement of Legislation in the Social and Labour Sphere (the tripartite Council). With the dissolution of the BKDP, the only representation of workers' voice in these structures is now the FPB. The Committee had previously noted the publicly expressed support for that organization from State authorities at the highest level. The Conference Committee conclusions at its June 2021 session, reproduced in full in 2022, refer to support for the FPB from the President of the country, and urge the Government in the strongest terms to refrain from showing favouritism towards any particular trade union. The Committee recalls in this respect – as it has before – the importance of ensuring an atmosphere in which trade union organizations, whether within or outside the traditional structure, are able to flourish in the country. In these circumstances, the Committee questions the continuing legitimacy of the NCLSI and the tripartite Council.

The Committee emphasizes that pursuant to Article 11 of the Convention, each ILO Member for which the Convention is in force shall take all necessary and appropriate measures to ensure that workers and employers may exercise freely the right to organize. The Committee considers that the development of free and independent organizations and their involvement in social dialogue is indispensable to enable a government to confront its social and economic problems and resolve them in the best interests of the workers and the nation. The Committee urges the Government to take steps to review the situation of the dissolved trade unions in this light so as to ensure that they may again function.

The Committee recalls that in its 2004 report, the Commission of Inquiry considered that its recommendations should be implemented without further delay and that the majority of its recommendations should be completed at the latest by 1 June 2005. The Committee deplores that 18 years later, the recent developments indicate continuing steps backward as all space for the safe existence of an independent trade union movement in Belarus has virtually disappeared. The Committee urges the Government to abandon its policy of destroying the independent trade union movement and silencing the free voices of workers. The Committee urges the Government to engage with the ILO with a view to fully implement all outstanding recommendations of the ILO supervisory bodies without further delay.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1983)

Previous comment

Article 3 of the Convention. Compulsory arbitration. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to amend the Settlement of Disputes in Essential Services Act 1939 (SDESA), which empowers the authorities to refer a collective dispute to compulsory arbitration to prohibit a strike or to terminate a strike in the banking sector, civil aviation, port authority, postal services, social security scheme and the petroleum sector, i.e. services that are not essential in the strict sense of the term. The Committee notes with regret the Government's indication that the SDESA has not been amended. The Committee therefore reiterates its long-standing request and urges the Government to provide information on the steps taken, in consultation with the social partners, to amend the Schedule to the SDESA in order to ensure that compulsory arbitration or a prohibition on strikes is permitted only in services that are essential in the strict sense of the term – that is those the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1983)

Previous comment

Articles 1 and 3 of the Convention. Protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. In its previous comments, the Committee recalled allegations by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) of anti-union discrimination in the banana plantation sector and in export processing zones and requested the Government to ensure that the competent authorities take fully into account in their control and prevention activities the issue of anti-union discrimination, and that the workers in the country are fully informed of their rights regarding this issue. The Committee notes that the Government states that no acts of anti-union discrimination were denounced to the authorities in the above-mentioned sectors during the reporting period (July 2017 to June 2021). The Committee also notes the Government's indication that its Labour Department has been closely monitoring these sectors by conducting inspections of workplaces to ensure that workers are adequately protected, including against acts of anti-union discrimination in respect of their employment. While it welcomes the information provided regarding the conduct of labour inspections, the Committee requests the Government to take all the necessary measures to ensure that Belizean workers are fully informed of their rights with respect to anti-union discrimination. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard and to continue reporting on any statistics concerning the anti-union discrimination acts reported to the authorities.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. In its previous comments under the Collective Bargaining Convention, 1981 (No. 154), the Committee raised the need to amend section 25 of the Trade Unions and Employers' Organizations (Registration, Recognition and Status) Act (TUEOA), which provides that the tripartite body entrusted with the certification of the representative trade unions may, before granting any certification to a trade union, include additional employees to the bargaining unit, or exclude some employees therefrom in order to render the unit more appropriate. The Committee notes that the Government states that section 25 of the TUEOA was not amended but that discussions continue at the Labour Advisory Board and the Tripartite Body regarding the TUEOA, which is likely to be amalgamated with the Trade Unions Act. Taking note of the above, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that objective and pre-established criteria for the certification of the representative trade unions are provided under the new legislation. The Committee requests the Government to provide information of any progress made in this regard and to provide a copy of the text once adopted.

The Committee previously requested the Government to continue promoting social dialogue in order to bring section 27(2) of the TUEOA, which stipulates that a trade union may be certified as the bargaining agent if it is supported by at least 51 per cent of employees, into conformity with the Convention. The Committee notes that the Government states that no agreement was reached on any legislative changes in this regard, but that discussions continue at the Tripartite Body and the Labour Advisory Board regarding a proposed new Trade Union and Employers' Organizations Act which would amalgamate the Trade Unions Act and the TUEOA. The Committee recalls that the requirement of too high a percentage for representativity to be authorized to engage in collective bargaining may hamper the promotion and development of free and voluntary collective bargaining within the meaning of the Convention (2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 233). Noting the Government's indication that ten collective agreements covering a total of 1,592 workers were concluded between 2007 and 2021, the Committee considers that the very low coverage of collective agreements in the country could appear to be related to the restrictive requirements to engage in collective bargaining contained in the legislation. In this regard, the Committee also recalls that under a system of the designation of an exclusive bargaining agent, if no union represents the required percentage of workers to be declared the exclusive bargaining agent, collective bargaining rights should be granted to all the unions in the unit, at least on behalf of their own members (2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 234). The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures, within the framework of the discussions concerning the proposed new Trade Union and Employers' Organizations Act, to bring its legislation into line with the Convention with respect to the representativity of bargaining agents. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard and reminds it of the possibility to avail itself of ILO technical assistance.

Promotion of collective bargaining in practice. As already mentioned above, the Committee notes that the Government reports that the ten collective agreements reached between 2007 and 2021 were concluded in the energy, public services, port, communications, banking, food and municipal sectors, and that five of these agreements, including one which was renewed, were still in force at the end of the reporting period. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the number of collective agreements signed and in force in the country, the sectors concerned and the number of workers covered by these agreements, and to report on any measures taken to promote the full development and utilization of collective bargaining under the Convention.

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the National Confederation of Workers in Teaching Establishments (CONTEE), the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) and the Single Confederation of Workers (CUT), received respectively on 28 March, 1 and 2 September 2022, and which concern matters examined by the Committee in the present comment.

The Committee also notes the joint observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) and of the National Confederation of Industry (CNI) received on 30 August 2022 and which also concern matters examined by the Committee in the present comment.

The Committee recalls that in its previous comment, it requested the Government to respond to the observations submitted in 2021 by the ITUC, the CUT and the CONTEE which contain, in particular, allegations relating to: (i) the assassination of three trade union leaders in 2020 and several cases of death threats; and (ii) increased violations of collective bargaining rights in the context of the economic crisis resulting from the COVID-19 pandemic.

In this regard, the Committee notes the Government's comments in response to the various observations submitted. Concerning the Government's response to the 2021 allegations by the CUT on the adoption of emergency measures in the context of the COVID-19 pandemic which may have violated the right to collective bargaining, through the introduction of Provisional Measure 1045/2021 (PM 1045/2021), the Committee notes the Government's indication that PM 1045/2021 is no longer in force. However, the Committee also notes from the 2022 observations made by the CUT that certain measures and provisions contained in PM 1045/2021 that were criticized in the Committee's previous comment have been reintroduced in positive law through Acts Nos 14.437/2022 and 14.370/2022. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

Application of the Convention and respect for civil liberties. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the ITUC's allegations relating to the assassination of three trade union leaders and trade unionists in 2020, as well as several cases of death threats against other trade union leaders and had requested the Government to provide its comments in this regard. The Committee notes with regret that the Government confines itself to indicating in a general manner that Brazilian legal system is equipped with the necessary mechanisms to prosecute and sanction possible perpetrators of acts of anti-union violence, without giving any information on the different acts to which the ITUC refers. In this regard, the Committee notes with deep concern the following allegations made by the ITUC: (i) the assassination on 28 February 2020 of Mr Paulo Silva Filho, member of the Federation of Rural Workers and Family Farmers of the State of Pará (FETAGRI-PA); (ii) the assassination on 23 July 2020 of Mr José Diaz Hamilton de Moura, President of the Union of Drivers and Goods Transport Workers, Transport Logistics and Specialized Enterprises of Belo Horizonte and the region (SIMECLODIF); (iii) the assassination on 6 November 2020 of Mr João Inácio da Silva, President of the Workers' Cooperative of Montes Belos; (iv) the death threats received in 2020, and related to their trade union activities, by Mrs Tamyres Filgueira, coordinator of the Union of Technical and Administrative Workers of the UFRGS, UFCSPA and IFRS (ASSUFRGS); Mr Aldo Lima, President of the Union of Heavy Goods Drivers of Recife and by the union leaders of the Union of Oil Workers of São José dos Campos and its region. Recalling that the rights contained in the Convention, in particular those relating to free and voluntary collective bargaining, can only be exercised in a climate free from violence and threats, The Committee urges the Government to ensure that the necessary measures are taken to: (i) identify and punish the perpetrators and instigators of the alleged crimes; and (ii) ensure effective protection for the trade union leaders whose bodily integrity is under threat. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this regard without delay.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. Application of the provisions of Act No. 13.467 regarding collective bargaining in the context of the COVID-19 pandemic. The Committee recalls that in its previous comments it had asked the Government to make, in consultation with the representative social partners, a certain number of amendments to the provisions of Act No. 13.467 of 2017 related to collective bargaining, in particular concerning the possibility to derogate through collective bargaining a substantial number of protective provisions of the labour legislation, and those provisions allowing, for certain categories of workers, the setting aside, through individual labour contracts, of the protective clauses of collective agreements. In their 2021 observations, the ITUC, the CUT and the CONTEE expressed concern at the implementation of these provisions in the context of the economic crisis provoked by the COVID-19 pandemic, which could, in their view, result in workers being obliged to accept a steep deterioration in their conditions of work and employment. The Committee notes the Government's indications, which coincide with those of the CNI and the IOE to the effect that: (i) since the 2017 reform, the number of collective agreements concluded has remained relatively stable, going from 47,572 in 2017 to 42,303 in 2019 (-11 per cent), falling to 36,011 in 2020, as a result of the COVID-19 pandemic, and going back up to 41,951 agreements concluded in 2021; (ii) the 21 per cent fall in unionization underlined by the ITUC cannot be imputed to the 2017 reform, but is part of a long-term phenomenon also visible in numerous other countries; (iii) the primacy of collective bargaining over labour legislation (except for constitutionally protected rights) – recognized as constitutional by the Supreme Federal Court by a judgment of June 2022 – allowed the social partners to decide together on the best approaches to the crisis, according to their specific situations, and to guarantee the legal security of the agreements concluded; and (iv) the economic and social effects of the crisis were greatly reduced by the special protection measures taken by the Government.

The Committee duly notes the elements provided by the Government at the same time noting that the 2022 observations of the ITUC, CUT and the CONTEE maintain similar allegations to those of previous years. While reiterating its previous comments relating to the need to revise the different aspects of Act No. 13.467 cited above, in order to ensure their compliance with Article 4 of the Convention, the Committee requests the Government to continue to communicate statistics on the number of collective agreements concluded, specifying their level (enterprise or sector), the sectors concerned, and the number of workers covered. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the frequency of agreements that contain clauses derogating from the legislation, giving details of the nature and scope of such clauses.

Finally, the Committee notes the elements provided by the Government regarding the other points examined by the Committee in its previous comments and concerning the application of Articles 1 and 4 of the Convention. The Committee notes that the positions taken, and the information provided are essentially the same as those provided by the Government in its previous reports. The Committee, while reiterating its previous comments, will examine these matters in the framework of the regular reporting cycle and requests the Government to provide all relevant information in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2023, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 1 September 2019, which allege violations of the trade union rights in law and in practice, as well as the Government's response thereto, dated 11 October 2019. The Committee notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), received on 1 September 2016, which are of a general nature. It also notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 1 September 2016, relating to: (i) the legal procedures governing the right to strike; (ii) cases of serious violations of trade union and fundamental rights; and (iii) the determination of essential services. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this regard.

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. Labour Code. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to take measures to amend section 294(3) of the Labour Code, under the terms of which minors under 16 years of age may join a union, unless their father, mother or guardian objects, with a view to recognizing the trade union rights of minors who have reached the statutory minimum age to enter the labour market in accordance with the Labour Code (14 years), either as workers or apprentices, without the intervention of their parents or guardians. The Committee also drew the Government's attention to the need to take the necessary measures to amend section 307 of the Labour Code, to ensure that monitoring by the public authorities of trade union finances does not go beyond the obligation of organizations to submit periodic reports. The Committee noted the Government's indication that this provision has never been applied and that it was removed in the draft revision of the Labour Code. The Committee notes the Government's statement that the concerns of the Committee have been taken into account in the revision of the Act issuing the Labour Code, even though the latter has not yet been promulgated. The Committee trusts that the Labour Code will be promulgated in the near future and that it will give full effect to the provisions of the Convention on the points recalled above. It requests the Government to provide a copy of the text as adopted.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Comoros

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1978)

The Committee notes with concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee notes the observations of the Workers' Confederation of Comoros (CTC), received on 1 August 2017, relating to matters examined by the Committee in the present observation, and it requests the Government to provide its comments in this regard. The Committee notes that, in response to the observations of the CTC in 2013, the Government indicates that the trade union leaders who had been dismissed have been reinstated. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments on the other matters raised by the CTC, and particularly the allegations of employer pressure against trade union leaders of the CTC, the Union of Health and Education Workers and a new trade union in a communications enterprise to persuade them to end their trade union activities.

Articles 4 and 6 of the Convention. Promotion of collective bargaining in the private and public sectors (employees of public enterprises and public servants not engaged in the administration of the State). In its previous comments, the Committee once again regretted the absence of progress in relation to collective bargaining which, according to the CTC, was not structured and had no framework at any level, and particularly that joint bodies in the public service had still not been established. The Committee notes that the CTC in its 2017 observations makes particular reference to decrees and implementing orders covering the Higher Council of the Public Service, the Joint Commission and the Medical Commission established to provide a framework for bargaining, but which have still not been signed following their preparation in 2015, thereby opening the way for regulations and measures which are not in conformity with the law to the prejudice of employees of the public service. While taking note of the request made by the Government in its report for technical assistance, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to promote collective bargaining in both the private and the public sectors (employees of public enterprises and public servants not engaged in the administration of the State). The Committee requests the Government to provide information on this subject.

The Committee notes the adoption of the Act of 28 June 2012 repealing, amending and supplementing certain provisions of Act No. 84-108/PR issuing the Labour Code.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Djibouti

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1978)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the Government's communication, dated 17 November 2019, in response to the allegations made in 2019 by the Labour Union of Djibouti (UDT) and the General Union of Djibouti Workers (UGTD), and by Education International (EI), concerning ongoing violations of freedom of association in Djibouti. The Committee notes, however, that the Government has not provided the information requested on the reasons why Mr Mohamed Abdou was prohibited from leaving the country and prevented from participating in the 103rd Session of the International Labour Conference (May-June 2014). Noting that the recent observations of the UDT and the UGTD no longer refer to this matter, the Committee trusts that Mr Abdou is no longer subject to such prohibitions.

Trade union situation in Djibouti. The Committee recalls that allegations of violations of freedom of association in the country are repeatedly brought before the ILO supervisory bodies and that mention is often made of the phenomenon of "clone unions" (duplication of trade union organizations, established with the Government's support). The Committee notes that the Government merely reiterates that this phenomenon of "cloning" trade union organizations does not exist in Djibouti and that the representation of the UDT and the UGTD continues to be usurped by Mr Mohamed Abdou and Mr Diraneh Hared, authors of the observations addressed to the Committee. In this respect, the Committee notes the findings of the Credentials Committee of the 110th Session of the Conference (June 2022) on a new objection concerning the appointment of the Workers' delegation. The Committee notes with deep concern the Credentials Committee's indication that confusion continues to reign over the trade union landscape in Djibouti. The Credentials Committee particularly regrets that the Government has not addressed the allegations repeated every year by the objecting organizations concerning the "cloning" of the UDT and UGTD and usurpation of their names, "other than by stating flatly that the authors of the objection had no legitimate union mandate, without any explanation as to how, in particular, Mr Mohamed Abdou might have lost the leadership of the UDT, which he undoubtedly held in the past". Noting the information from the Credentials Committee that the Government has stated that it accepts the terms for technical assistance from the Office to proceed with an evaluation of the situation of the trade union movement in the country, the Committee firmly urges the Government to take concrete measures to this effect in the near future, with a view to ensuring the development of free and independent trade unions in accordance with the Convention.

Article 3 of the Convention. Right of workers' organizations to organize their administration and activities in full freedom. The Committee once again notes with regret that the Government has not provided the information expected concerning the need to amend:

- section 5 of the Act on Associations, which requires organizations to obtain authorization prior to their establishment as trade unions; and
- section 23 of Decree No. 83-099/PR/FP of 10 September 1983, which confers upon the President of the Republic broad powers to requisition public servants.

The Committee trusts that the Government will take all measures necessary to amend the above provisions and will report on specific progress in its next report.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Article 1 of the Convention. Protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. The Committee notes the Government's communication, in response to the allegations made in 2019 by the Labour Union of Djibouti (UDT) and the General Union of Djibouti Workers (UGTD), and by Education International (EI), concerning the persistence of anti-union discrimination in the education and rail transport sectors. The Committee notes in particular the Government's indication that decisions must be taken to discontinue criminal proceedings against the teachers who had been arrested in 2019 in the context of the case of the Baccalaureate exams, and that most of the railway workers concerned following the 2019 social conflict have been reintegrated into their posts. With regard to the transfers described as "punitive", concerning the leaders of the teachers' trade unions, the Government denies the allegations, however. Noting that the information brought to its knowledge does not provide a definitive reply to all the allegations presented by EI, UDT and UGTD, and recalling the obligation, under the terms of the Convention, to ensure that workers are adequately protected against anti-union discrimination, the Committee requests the Government to take the measures required to ensure full respect of Article 1 of the Convention in the above-mentioned activity sectors.

Article 4. Right of collective bargaining in practice. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its report concerning the draft inter-occupational collective agreement, which was examined and approved unanimously in September 2020, by the members of the National Council for Labour, Employment and Social Security (CONTESS). The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard, and on the total number of collective agreements signed and in force in the country, the sectors concerned and the number of workers covered by these agreements.

Dominica

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1983)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2023, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report, due since 2013, has not been received. In light of its urgent appeal launched to the Government in 2020, the Committee proceeds with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of whatever information is at its disposal. The Committee recalls that it has been raising issues concerning the observance of the Convention in relation to certain sections of the Industrial Relations Act (Act No. 18 of 1986) concerning compulsory arbitration and which unduly restrict the right of workers' organizations to organize their activities in full freedom and to formulate their programmes. The Government has been requested to make the following amendments to the Act: (i) exclude the banana, citrus and coconut industries as well as the port authority, from the schedule of essential services annexed to the Act, which makes it possible to stop a strike in these sectors by compulsory arbitration, and (ii) amend sections 59(1)(b) and 61(1)(c) of the Act, which empower the Minister to refer disputes to compulsory arbitration if they concerned serious issues in his or her opinion. Not having received any additional observations from the social partners, nor having at its disposal any indication of progress on these pending matters, the Committee refers to its previous observation adopted in 2011 and urges the Government to provide a full reply thereto. To this end, the Committee recalls that the Government may avail itself of the ILO's technical assistance.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Discussion at the International Labour Conference, May–June 2022

The Committee notes the observations of the Trade Union Association of Agricultural, Banana and Rural Workers (ASTAC), received on 30 August 2022, which refer to issues that the Committee will examine in this comment. The Committee also notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 1 September 2022, which refer to issues examined in this comment and allege the murder on 24 January 2022 of Mr Sandro Arteaga Quiroz, secretary of the Union of Workers of the Manabi Provincial Government, who had allegedly received death threats hours before his murder. The ITUC also alleges clashes between police and protesters in the context of a nationwide strike in October 2021 that culminated in the arrest of 37 protesters. The Committee recalls that the authorities should not resort to arrest and detention measures in cases of organization or participation in a peaceful strike. The Committee deplores the murder of Mr Arteaga Quiroz. Recalling that freedom of association can only be exercised in conditions in which fundamental human rights, in particular those relating to life and personal safety, are fully respected and guaranteed, the Committee strongly urges the Government to take without delay all necessary measures to determine responsibility and punish those guilty of this crime.

The Committee also notes the joint observations of the Ecuadorian Confederation of Free Trade Unions (CEOSL), the Federation of Petroleum Workers of Ecuador (FETRAPEC), the National Federation of Education Workers (UNE) and Public Services International (PSI) in Ecuador, received on 1 September 2022, which in addition to dealing in detail with issues that the Committee addresses in this comment, allege unjustified delays in the registration of union organizations and new union officers, as well as the refusal to register union organizations for reasons not provided for in the Constitution or in the law. They also point out that the Government is seeking to table in the National Assembly a Bill on a Basic Employment Act, still in draft form, which contravenes the Committee's comments. The Committee requests the Government to send its comments on all the above-mentioned observations. It also requests the Government to send a copy of the Bill and to keep it informed of any further developments.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 110th Session, May–June 2022)

The Committee notes that in the discussion that took place in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (hereinafter referred to as the Conference Committee) in June 2022 on the implementation of the Convention by Ecuador, the Conference Committee noted with regret that no action had been taken to follow up on the technical assistance provided by the Office in December 2019 and also noted the long-standing issues regarding compliance with the Convention. The Conference Committee urged the Government to take action to foster an environment conducive to the full enjoyment of the right of workers and employers to freedom of association. The Conference Committee noted that both the Government and the social partners raised the importance of labour law reform and expressed the hope that the Government would seize this opportunity to bring its legislation and practice fully into line with the Convention in consultation with the social partners. The Conference Committee urged the Government to take effective and time-bound measures, in consultation with the social partners, to:

- ensure full respect for the right of workers, including public servants, to establish organizations of their own choosing, for the collective defence of their interests, including protection against administrative dissolution or suspension;
- amend legislation to ensure that the consequences of any delays in convening trade union elections are set out in the by-laws of the organizations themselves;
- resolve the registration of the National Federation of Education Workers (UNE);
- give effect to the road map presented in December 2019 by the ILO technical assistance mission; and
- initiate a process of consultation with the social partners to reform the current legislative framework in order to enhance coherence and bring all the relevant legislation into compliance with the Convention.

The Conference Committee invited the Government to avail itself of technical assistance from the Office and requested that the Government accept a direct contacts mission and submit a report to the Committee of Experts by 1 September 2022 communicating information on the application of the Convention in law and practice, in consultation with the social partners.

Application of the Convention in the private sector

Article 2 of the Convention. Excessive number of workers (30) required for the establishment of workers' associations, enterprise committees or assemblies for the organization of enterprise committees. Possibility of creating trade union organizations by branch of activity. For several years the Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to the need to revise sections 443, 449, 452 and 459 of the Labour Code in such a way as to reduce the minimum number of members required to establish workers' associations and enterprise committees and enable the establishment of primary-level unions comprising workers from several enterprises. The Committee notes that in its report the Government does not refer to the revision of the articles relating to the number of workers required to form workers' associations and enterprise committees. The Committee notes that CEOSL, FETRAPEC, the UNE and PSI stress that the number of no less than 30 workers for the establishment of trade union organizations is disproportionate and unreasonable in view of the Ecuadorian business structure, stating that persons working in 88.1 per cent of the business sector are not able to form trade union organizations. With regard to the creation of organizations that bring together workers from several enterprises, in its previous comment, the Committee had welcomed the 2021 ruling by the Provincial Court of Justice of Pinchincha ordering the Ministry of Labour to register ASTAC as a branch union, despite the fact that it was made up of workers from several enterprises and also ordering the Ministry to regulate the registration of unions by branch of activity. The Committee notes that the Government, ASTAC and the ITUC report that although ASTAC was granted legal personality on 11 January 2022, in compliance with the ruling, the Ministry and the State Attorney General's Office filed an extraordinary protection order against the ruling for lack of adequate grounds and legal certainty and non-compliance with due process. The Committee notes that the extraordinary protection order, which has the support of business associations, is pending a decision by the Constitutional Court. It also notes that ASTAC states that the Government has not fully complied with the ruling since, although it has applied it with respect to ASTAC, it has refused to regulate the establishment of branch unions, stating that the ruling is not applicable erga omnes or inter communis (applicable to other parties). The Commission notes with interest the registration of ASTAC as a branch union. Recalling that, under the terms of Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention, workers must be able, if they so wish, to establish primary-level organizations at a level higher than the enterprise, the Committee firmly hopes that the above-mentioned ruling will contribute to enabling the creation of trade union organizations by branch of activity, and also hopes that the Committee's assessment of this important development in the application of the Convention will be brought to the attention of the Constitutional Court of Justice. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary steps, in consultation with the social partners, to revise the sections of the laws referred to above in the manner indicated and to keep it informed of developments in this respect. The Committee also requests the Government to report on the proceedings before the Constitutional Court regarding the extraordinary protection order.

Article 3. Compulsory time limits for convening trade union elections. The Committee has been asking the Government to amend section 10(c) of the Regulations on Labour Organizations No. 0130 of 2013, which provides that trade union executive committees shall lose their powers and competencies if they do not convene elections within 90 days of the expiry of their term of office, as set out in their respective union constitutions, to ensure that the consequences of any delay in holding elections shall be determined by the union constitutions themselves, subject to the observance of democratic rules. The Committee notes that the Government reports that a draft reform of the Regulations on Labour Organizations is currently being reviewed particularly with regard to section 10(c). Recalling that under Article 3 of the Convention, trade union elections are an internal matter for organizations, and observing that the consequences under the Regulations if the deadlines are not respected—the loss of powers and competencies for trade union committees—risk paralyzing the capacity for trade union action, the Committee firmly hopes that the draft reform will take into consideration its comments, and that the section in question will be modified along the lines indicated. The Committee requests the Government to report on any developments in this regard.

Requirement of Ecuadorian nationality to be eligible for trade union office. The Committee recalls that, while in 2015 it had noted that section 49 of the Labour Justice Act had amended section 459(4) of the Labour Code and removed the requirement of Ecuadorian nationality to be eligible to be an officer of an enterprise committee, in its most recent comment it observed that section 49 was declared unconstitutional by a ruling of 2018 because it violated the principle of trade union independence by providing that the legislation determined how the executive bodies of the enterprise committees were constituted and who had the right to vote in their elections. The Committee notes with regret that as a result of the declaration of unconstitutionality, section 459(4) has reverted to its original wording and requires Ecuadorian nationality to be eligible to be an officer of an enterprise committee. The Committee notes the Government's indication that Ecuadorian nationality is required to be an officer of an enterprise committee, but not to be a leader or member of other forms of association. The Committee notes that enterprise committees are one of the forms that trade unions can take within an enterprise. The Committee emphasizes that under Article 3 of the Convention all workers' and employers' organizations shall have the right to elect their representatives in full freedom and that national legislation should allow foreign workers to take up trade union office, if permitted under the organization's constitution and rules, at least after a reasonable period of residence in the host country. The Committee therefore urges the Government to amend section 459(4) of the Labour Code and to keep it informed of any developments in this regard.

Elections as officers of enterprise committees of workers who are not trade union members. The Committee had previously indicated to the Government the need to amend section 459(3) of the Labour Code, which provided that the role of officer of an enterprise committee may be filled by any worker, whether or not a union member, who stands for office. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the above-mentioned Constitutional Court ruling of 2018 also had an impact on the wording of section 459(3), and that it reverted to its original wording which does not provide for the possibility for non-unionized workers to participate in enterprise committee elections. Taking due note of this information, the Committee requests the Government to hold consultations with the social partners in relation to the need to review section 459(3) of the Labour Code to bring it into full compliance with the principle of trade union autonomy.

Application of the Convention in the public sector

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish and to join organizations of their own choosing. The Committee previously noted that although section 11 of the Basic Act reforming the legislation governing the public sector (Basic Reform Act), adopted in 2017, establishes the right to organize for public servants, certain categories of public employees were excluded from that right, especially those under contract for occasional services, those subject to free appointment and removal from office, and those on statutory, fixed-term contracts. Recalling that under Articles 2 and 9 of the Convention, with the sole possible exception of members of the police and of the armed forces, all workers, including permanent or temporary public servants and those under fixed-term or occasional services contracts, have the right to establish and to join organizations of their own choosing, the Committee asked the Government to take the measures required to bring the legislation into line with the Convention. The Committee notes that, with regard to public servants under fixed-term or occasional services contracts, the Government merely reiterates that the public institutions of the State are working to ensure that public servants have their respective definitive appointments, provided that their activities are not temporary. The Committee notes with regret that no progress has been made in taking its comments into account in relation to the need to bring the legislation into line with the Convention in such a way that all workers, with the sole possible exception of the members of the police and of the armed forces, have the right to establish and to join organizations of their own choosing. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to bring the legislation into line with the Convention.

Right of workers to establish organizations of their own choosing without previous authorization. Organizations of public servants other than the committees of public servants. The Committee observed that, according to the provisions of the Basic Reform Act, the committees of public servants, which must comprise 50 per cent plus one of the staff of a public institution, are responsible for defending the rights of public servants and are the only bodies that can call a strike. Underlining the fact that all organizations of public servants must be able to enjoy the various guarantees established in the Convention, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on organizations of public servants other than the committees of public servants and to indicate in detail what means they have for defending the occupational interest of their members. The Committee notes the Government's indication that public servants, when forming their organizations, have the right to draft their statutes in which they may establish any means to defend their interests, emphasizing that public servants' organizations are legal entities under private law, and therefore may establish any regulation that is not prohibited by law. The Committee notes that it is precisely the Basic Reform Act that indicates that the committees of public servants are responsible for defending the rights of public servants and are the only bodies that can call a strike. It is on this basis that the Committee requested the Government to provide information on organizations of public servants other than the committees of public servants and to indicate what means they have for defending the occupational interest of their members. The Committee regrets that it has not received this information and reiterates its request to the Government to provide information in this respect. Recalling that under Article 2 of the Convention, trade union pluralism must be possible in all cases, and that no organization of public servants should be deprived of the essential means for defending the occupational interests of its members, organizing its administration and activities, and formulating its programmes, the Committee once against requests the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that the legislation does not restrict recognition of the right to organize to the committees of public servants as the sole form of organization.

Article 3. Right of workers' organizations and associations of public servants to organize their activities and to formulate their programmes. The Committee previously drew the Government's attention to the need to amend section 346 of the Basic Comprehensive Penal Code, which provides for a term of imprisonment of one to three years for stopping or obstructing the normal provision of a public service, so as to prevent the imposition of criminal penalties on workers engaged in a peaceful strike. The Committee notes that according to the Government, no progress has been made in this regard. The Committee regrets that no action has been taken in this respect and notes that, according to CEOSL, FETRAPEC, the UNE and PSI, the provision in question is being used to criminalize social protest. The Committee strongly urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that section 346 of the Basic Comprehensive Penal Code is amended in the manner indicated and, until such measures are taken, to ensure that this provision is not used to criminalize social protest.

Article 4. Dissolution of associations of public servants by the administrative authorities. The Committee previously asked the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that Decree No. 193 of 2017, which retains engagement in party-political activities as grounds for dissolution and provides for administrative dissolution, does not apply to associations of public servants whose purpose is to defend the economic and social interests of their members. The Committee notes the Government's indication that labour and social organizations are governed by civil law and that it falls to their members to exercise the rights and obligations recognized by their statutes. The Committee notes that, according to CEOSL, FETRAPEC, the UNE and PSI, the provision of Decree No. 193 that maintained as grounds for dissolution the development of party-political activities was declared unconstitutional by a judgment issued on 27 January 2022 in which the Constitutional Court held that it was not admissible that an open and indeterminate provision could limit the right of social organizations to participate in matters of public interest and to oversee the actions of the public authorities. The Committee notes that these organizations further state that: (i) Decree No. 193 regulates only social organizations and not trade union organizations; (ii) the Labour Code and the Basic Reform Act establish that public servants' organizations can only be dissolved by judicial decision; and (iii) without prejudice to the foregoing, the Government applies the grounds for forced dissolution of social organizations to trade union organizations. Recalling that Article 4 of the Convention prohibits the suspension or administrative dissolution of the associations of public servants, the Committee urges the Government to ensure that the rules of Decree No. 193 are not applied to associations of public servants that have the purpose of defending the economic and social interests of their members.

Administrative dissolution of the National Federation of Education Workers (UNE). In its last comment, having noted the registration of social organizations related to the UNE, (which was dissolved by an administrative act issued by the Under-Secretariat of Education in 2016), the Committee asked the Government to: (i) indicate whether the registration of the UNE-E with the Under-Secretariat of Education of Quito meant that the UNE had been able to resume its activities of defending the occupational interests of its members; (ii) take all necessary measures to ensure the registration of the UNE as a trade union organization with the Ministry of Labour, if the UNE so wished; and (iii) ensure the full return of the property seized as well as the removal of any other consequences resulting from the administrative dissolution of the UNE. The Committee notes that, after summarizing the events that have taken place in recent years, the Government indicates that the UNE filed several legal actions against the dissolution resolution and that, to date, although all the actions filed by the UNE have been rejected, the Constitutional Court's ruling on an extraordinary protection order is still pending, and that, with the Constitutional Court's decision, the national judicial instances will have been exhausted. The Committee notes that, according to the CEOSL, FETRAPEC, the UNE and PSI, the Government has not complied with the Committee's request in its previous comments. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the ruling handed down by the Constitutional Court on the pending extraordinary protection order and to provide the information requested by the Committee in its previous comment.

Technical assistance. Both the Committee and the Conference Committee have noted with regret that the Government has not given follow-up to the technical assistance provided by the Office in December 2019 regarding measures to address the comments of the supervisory bodies. The Committee notes that the Government shows interest in receiving technical assistance to restart tripartite social dialogue and establish a new road map in that regard. The Committee expresses the firm hope that, with the technical assistance in which the Government has shown interest, social dialogue will be restarted and progress will be made in taking concrete, effective and time-bound measures, in consultation with the social partners, to bring the legislation into conformity with the Convention. Like the Conference Committee, this Committee hopes that the Government will accept a direct contacts mission and also hopes that the implementation of the measures referred to in this comment will contribute to guaranteeing greater respect for the rights enshrined in the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1959)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Trade Union Association of Agricultural, Banana and Rural Workers (ASTAC), received on 30 August 2022, which relate to matters examined by the Committee in the present comment. The Committee also notes the joint observations of the Ecuadorian Confederation of Free Trade Unions (CEOSL), the Federation of Petroleum Workers of Ecuador (FETRAPEC), the National Federation of Education Workers (UNE) and Public Services International (PSI) in Ecuador, received on 1 September 2022, which also relate to matters examined by the Committee in the present comment. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in relation to all the observations referred to above.

Direct contacts mission requested by the Committee on the Application of Standards in the context of the application of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87). The Committee notes that the application of Convention No. 87 by Ecuador was examined by the Committee on the Application of Standards (CAS) at the 110th Session of the International Labour Conference in June 2022. The Committee observes that the discussions and conclusions of the CAS address matters that have a direct impact on the capacity of workers to negotiate collectively their terms and conditions of work, and therefore on the application of the present Convention. The Committee observes in this context that the CAS requested the Government in particular to: ensure full respect for the right of workers, including public servants, to establish organizations of their own choosing, for the collective defence of their interests; give effect to the road map presented in December 2019 by the ILO technical assistance mission; avail itself of technical assistance from the Office; and accept a direct contacts mission.

Technical assistance. The Committee also recalls that in its previous comment it regretted to note that the Government had not taken action to follow up the technical assistance provided by the Office in December 2019 concerning measures to respond to the comments of the ILO supervisory bodies. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates its interest in receiving technical assistance to reactivate tripartite social dialogue and develop a new road map for this purpose. The Committee expresses the firm hope that, as a result of the dynamic generated by the direct contacts mission requested by the CAS in relation to Convention No. 87 and with the support of the further technical assistance that the Government is interested in receiving, the Government will take specific, effective and time-bound measures, in consultation with the social partners, to bring the legislation into conformity with the Convention in relation to the matters indicated below.

Application of the Convention in the private sector

Article 1 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. For more than a decade, the Committee has been referring to the need to include provisions in the legislation that guarantee protection against acts of anti-union discrimination at the time of access to employment. The Committee notes in this regard that the Government has confined itself to reiterating that labour regulations give an adequate level of protection and that it is not necessary to adopt further provisions in this respect. The Committee once again reminds the Government that Article 1 of the Convention prohibits anti-union discrimination at the time of the recruitment of individual workers, so that access to employment is not made subject to the condition that workers shall not join a union or shall relinquish union membership, as well as practices such as 'blacklisting' union members to prevent them from being hired. The Committee notes that, according to the indications of the CEOSL, FETRAPEC, UNE and PSI, dismissed union leaders cannot find work and that this difficulty is experienced by any workers, whether or not they are union members, who have taken legal action against their employer, as labour claims are published on the website of the judiciary so that any employer can check whether applicants have made legal claims against previous employers before recruiting them. In light of the above, the Committee once again emphasizes the need for provisions expressly prohibiting acts of anti-union discrimination at the time of access to employment to be included in the legislation and requests the Government to provide information on any measures adopted in this respect.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. The Committee recalls that, in accordance with section 221 of the Labour Code, collective labour contracts must be concluded with the enterprise committee or, if one does not exist, with the organization with the largest number of worker members, on condition that it represents over 50 per cent of the workers in the enterprise. The Committee previously urged the Government to adopt the necessary measures to amend section 221 so that, if there is no organization that represents over 50 per cent of the workers, minority trade unions can, either separately or jointly, negotiate at least on behalf of their own members. The Committee observes that the Government has confined itself to reiterating that this requirement for the negotiation of a collective contract is closely related to such principles as democracy, participation and transparency, as the benefits obtained in the collective contract apply to all workers in the enterprise or institution. The Committee once again emphasizes that, while it is acceptable for the union which represents the majority or a high percentage of workers in a bargaining unit to enjoy preferential or exclusive bargaining rights, in cases where no union meets these conditions, or does not enjoy such exclusive rights, minority trade unions should at least be able to conclude a collective or direct agreement on behalf of their own members (2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 226). The Committee recalls that, even though the requirement of representativeness for signing collective agreements is fully compatible with the Convention, the level of representativeness set should not be such as to hinder the promotion and implementation of free and voluntary collective bargaining, as referred to in Article 4 of the Convention. In this regard, the Committee recalls that in previous comments it noted the low rate of coverage of collective bargaining in the private sector. The Committee observes that, according to the information provided by the Government, between May 2021 and June 2022, a total of 37 collective contracts were concluded in the private sector. The Committee observes that the CEOSL, FETRAPEC, UNE and PSI indicate that the Government has not specified whether the figures refer to first collective contracts or revised versions of contracts that have already been concluded. Emphasizing the link between the low coverage of collective agreements in the country and the restrictive requirements set out in law for participation in collective bargaining, the Committee once again urges the Government, after consulting the social partners, to take the necessary measures to amend section 221 of the Labour Code as indicated above. It requests the Government to continue providing information on the number of collective agreements concluded and in force in the country, with an indication of the sectors covered (including the agricultural and banana sector), the number of workers covered and whether they are new or revised collective agreements.

Collective bargaining in sectors composed mainly of small enterprises. The Committee recalls that, in its comments on the application of Convention No. 87, it has been calling for many years for the modification of the following aspects of the legislation, which significantly restricts the capacity of workers to organize in unions: (i) the requirement of a minimum of 30 workers to establish unions and enterprise committees; and (ii) the prohibition on establishing first-level unions composed of workers from different enterprises. The Committee notes with concern that these restrictions on the right to organize, combined with the absence of a legal framework for collective bargaining at the sectoral level, as denounced by the ASTAC, appear to exclude any possibility for workers in small enterprises to exercise their right to collective bargaining. In light of the above, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures adopted to promote collective bargaining in sectors composed mainly of small enterprises.

Application of the Convention in the public sector

Articles 1, 2 and 6 of the Convention. Protection of workers in the public sector who are not engaged in the administration of the State against acts of anti-union discrimination and interference. The Committee previously observed that the Basic Act reforming the legislation governing the public sector (the Basic Reform Act) contained provisions which explicitly protected executive members of public servants' committees, and it requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the legislation applicable to the public sector includes provisions that explicitly protect the leaders of all organizations of public employees against acts of anti-union discrimination and interference, as well as provisions establishing dissuasive penalties in the event of such acts. The Committee observes the Government's reiterated indication that protection against acts of discrimination and the right to establish unions is envisaged in both the Political Constitution and section 187 of the Labour Code, and the Basic Public Service Act (LOSEP), which prohibits any act of discrimination against public servants. The Government considers that the legislative labour principles in force offer an adequate level of protection for public servants. In the same way as the Committee on Freedom of Association, when it examined Case No. 3347, the Committee once again emphasizes the importance of the legislation providing the same type of protection against possible acts of anti-union discrimination and interference for all leaders of all public servants' organizations. The Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the legislation applicable to the public sector contains provisions that explicitly protect the leaders of all organizations of public servants against acts of anti-union discrimination and interference, and also provisions that establish dissuasive penalties against committing such acts. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any measures adopted or envisaged in this regard. The Committee also previously noted a ruling issued in 2020 declaring unconstitutional the compulsory redundancy purchase mechanism under which the public administration, in exchange for the payment of compensation, could unilaterally terminate the employment of public servants without the need to indicate the grounds for such termination. The Committee observed that, although the ruling removed the word "compulsory" and the prohibition for persons who have been dismissed to return to work in the public sector, PSI-Ecuador alleged that the Government had not complied with the ruling in respect of the removal of the prohibition to return to work in the public sector. The Committee requested the Government to provide its comments on the matter. The Committee notes that the Government confines itself to recalling the content of the ruling, but does not refer to compliance with the ruling. The Committee also observes that the CEOSL, FETRAPEC, UNE and PSI have sent a list of leaders of associations of public servants who have been dismissed using this mechanism. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide its comments on compliance with the ruling.

Articles 4 and 6. Collective bargaining for public sector workers who are not engaged in the administration of the State. The Committee observed previously that the Basic Reform Act and Ministerial Order No. MDT-2018-0010 did not recognize the right to collective bargaining of public servants and that only public sector workers governed by the Labour Code could engage in collective bargaining. The Committee also noted that the 2015 amendments to the Constitution excluding the entire public sector from the scope of collective bargaining had been annulled by the Constitutional Court in 2018 and that Ministerial Order No. 373 had been issued in 2019 to give effect to the ruling. The Committee requested the Government to ensure the full implementation of the Order and urged it to intensify its efforts to reopen an in-depth debate with the trade unions concerned with a view to establishing adequate collective bargaining machinery for all categories of employees in the public sector covered by the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's reiterated indication that, although there are no regulations on collective bargaining machinery for public servants, as this right is only conferred on workers in the sector who are covered by the Labour Code, it undertakes to promote tripartite dialogue and encourage constant discussion on matters of labour law. The Committee notes that, according to the Government, during the period between May 2021 and June 2022, a total of 78 collective agreements were concluded in the public sector. The Committee also notes the indication by the CEOSL, FETRAPEC, UNE and PSI that the Constitutional Court has not yet ruled on the appeals to find unconstitutional the Humanitarian Support Act which, as indicated by PSI-Ecuador, imposes restrictions on collective bargaining by public sector workers governed by the Labour Code. The organizations add that, although on 16 June 2022, the National Assembly approved a Bill repealing the Humanitarian Support Act almost in its entirety, the executive power vetoed the Bill on 20 July 2022. They further indicate that the Government is seeking to introduce in the National Assembly a Bill entitled the 'Basic Employment Act', which is reported to contain a provision for the elimination of collective bargaining in the public sector. The Committee notes these various elements and observes with concern that the legislation still does not recognize the right to collective bargaining of public servants, despite the fact that many of them (public sector teachers, employees in the public health system, employees in public enterprises, municipal services and decentralized bodies, etc.) are not engaged in the administration of the State and must therefore benefit from the guarantees provided by this Convention. Observing that the Government has not provided information on specific initiatives for the re-establishment of the rights referred to above and recalling once again that in many countries there are mechanisms that permit the harmonious coexistence of the public sector's mission to serve the public interest and the responsible exercise of collective bargaining, the Committee urges the Government, in consultation with representative organizations of workers, to take the necessary measures to establish adequate collective bargaining machinery for all the categories of public sector employees covered by the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to report any developments in this respect.

Equatorial Guinea

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 2001)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2023, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report, due since 2007, has not been received. In light of its urgent appeal launched to the Government in 2020, the Committee proceeds with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of whatever information is at its disposal. The Committee recalls that it has been raising issues concerning the observance of the Convention in an observation. It has formulated longstanding recommendations to bring the Labour legislation into conformity with the Convention concerning limitations that unduly restrict the right of workers to organize and to formulate their programmes, including the right to establish enterprise trade unions, the right to strike and the determination of essential services, as well as the refusal to recognize in practice a number of workers' organizations by rejecting their registration requests. Not having at its disposal any indication of progress on these pending matters, despite the technical assistance that the Office provided to the country on several occasions, the Committee refers to its previous observation adopted in 2020 and urges the Government to provide a full reply thereto.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 2001)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2023, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report, due since 2007, has not been received. In the light of its urgent appeal to the Government in 2020, the Committee is proceeding with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal. The Committee recalls that it previously raised questions about compliance with the Convention in an observation. Having noted the allegations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) concerning the refusal of the authorities to recognize a number of trade unions, the Committee recalled that the existence of trade unions established freely by workers is a prerequisite for the application of the Convention. The Committee also made recommendations to bring the labour legislation into conformity with the Convention, in particular with regard to the right to organize and to collective bargaining of workers in the public administration, and requested the Government to provide detailed information on the application of the Convention to public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. In the absence of any indication of progress on these pending issues, despite the technical assistance the Office has provided to the country on several occasions, the Committee refers to its previous observation adopted in 2020 and urges the Government to reply in full to these comments.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Eritrea

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 2000)

Previous comment

Articles 1, 2, 4 and 6 of the Convention. Legislative issues. In its previous comments the Committee noted the following shortcomings in the currently applicable legislation:

- (i) With regard to the protection against anti-union discrimination and acts of interference, the law does not provide for remedies in case of anti-union discrimination at recruitment and during employment, neither does it provide for reinstatement of union members other than leaders dismissed for union membership or activities. Legal compensation and sanctions against anti-union discrimination and acts of interference are inadequate.
- (ii) With regard to the scope of application of the Convention, the law does not explicitly provide domestic workers with the rights guaranteed in the Convention. Furthermore, all civil servants, including those not engaged in the administration of the State, are excluded from the scope of the Labour Proclamation and no other special law provides them with the rights guaranteed in the Convention.

With regard to protection against anti-union discrimination and acts of interference, the Committee notes that the Government reiterates its previous indication that section 691 of the Transitional Penal Code sanctions anti-union discrimination. The Committee had noted in this regard that section 691 contains a general definition of petty offences and does not particularly concern anti-union discrimination or acts of interference, which are not qualified as petty offences in any specific legal provision. With regard to domestic workers, the Committee notes that the Government reiterates that they are not out of the scope of the Labour Proclamation; that the guarantees enshrined in the Convention can be afforded to them through directives and regulations; and that the Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare has engaged in drafting the relevant regulation. With regard to civil servants not engaged in the administration of the State, the Committee notes the Government's indication that professional associations have been established and registered under articles 404 and 406 of the Transitional Civil Code, whose members are mostly civil servants. The Government cites as examples Teachers' Association, Medical Doctors' Association, Nurses' Association, Electrical Contractors' Association and Engineers' Association. The Committee notes in this regard that in accordance with the Transitional Civil Code, civil law associations do not have the same rights as labour law associations in terms of representation of the occupational interests of their members in relation to the employer and the authorities and are not entitled to participate in the process of collective bargaining. Furthermore, civil law associations are not covered by labour law guarantees such as prohibition of anti-union discrimination and non-interference. The Committee notes that despite its longstanding requests for legislative reform, the Government indicates once again that the ministerial regulation concerning domestic workers, as well as the civil service code are still in the drafting process, and it does not refer to any measure envisaged to strengthen protection against anti-union discrimination and acts of interference. In view of the above considerations, the Committee notes with concern that no progress is made with regard to these longstanding legislative issues. Therefore, it once again urges the Government to take all the necessary measures to enact new legislation or revise the existing law in order to (i) provide adequate protection against anti-union discrimination and acts of interference; and (ii) ensure that domestic workers and civil servants who are not engaged in the administration of the State enjoy the right to organize and collectively bargain. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the developments in this regard.

Articles 4, 5 and 6. Promotion of collective bargaining. Compulsory national service. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that Eritrean nationals performing work within the national compulsory service are not covered by the Labour Proclamation provisions related to collective bargaining and that large numbers of Eritrean nationals were denied the right to collective bargaining for indefinite periods of their active lives while they were performing civilian activities as part of their indefinite compulsory national service. The Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that Eritrean nationals are not denied the right to bargain collectively beyond the scope of the exceptions set out in Articles 5 and 6 of the Convention and to provide information on the developments in this respect.

Promotion of collective bargaining in practice. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government on the number of registered collective agreements, according to which there are 100 collective agreements registered that cover 17,677 workers, including 10,552 men and 7,123 women. It notes that according to this information only for a small portion of the workforce in Eritrea the terms and conditions of employment are regulated by collective agreements. The Committee requests the Government to: (i) take action to promote free and voluntary collective bargaining and to inform on the initiatives taken in this respect; and (ii) provide updated information on the number of collective agreements concluded and in force disaggregated by the sectors concerned, the names of employers' and workers' organizations party to those agreements and the number of workers covered.

Gabon

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes with concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

In its previous comments, further to the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) relating to restrictions on the right to strike in the public sector on the repeatedly invoked grounds of ensuring public safety, the Committee asked the Government to provide information on the number of strikes called in the public sector as a whole, the individual sectors concerned and the number of strikes prohibited on the grounds of a possible disruption of public order. The Committee notes the Government's indication that trade unions within a number of government departments, including customs, taxation, higher education, national education, health and social affairs, have availed themselves of their right to strike. Moreover, the Government indicates that the National Congress of Education Sector Unions (CONASYSED) held its latest strike at the Martine Oulabou Public School without being removed from the premises and without the right to strike being prohibited. While taking note of the information provided by the Government on examples of strikes called in the public sector, the Committee requests once again that the Government provide detailed information on the number of strikes that have been called in the public sector, and the number of strikes prohibited on the grounds of a possible disruption of public order.

Moreover, further to the observations previously received from Education International (EI), denouncing the adoption of various regulations which are making the exercise of union activities in the education sector increasingly difficult, the Committee asked the Government to indicate the measures taken in the education sector to ensure that trade unions have access to educational establishments so that they can perform their representative functions and defend their members' interests. The Committee notes with regret that there has been no reply from the Government on this matter. The Committee reiterates its request and expects that the Government will take all necessary steps to provide the requested information.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Gambia

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 2000)

Previous comments: observation and direct request

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 1 September 2022, which refer to matters under examination by the Committee.

Trade union rights and civil liberties. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted the 2017 ITUC observations alleging the arbitrary arrests of several leaders of the Gambian National Transport Control Association (GNTCA); the death, while in detention, of Mr Sheriff Diba, one of the arrested leaders; and the imposition of a ban on the activities of the GNTCA. The Committee had requested the Government to ensure that the GNTCA was informed about the necessary procedures to obtain a review of its case, which had been discontinued before the High Court of The Gambia, and expressed its firm hope that the death of Mr Diba and the alleged arbitrary arrests would be duly investigated without delay by the Truth, Reconciliation and Reparation Commission (TRRC), an independent institution mandated to investigate human rights violations committed by the former regime. The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that in 2020, a task force led by the Office of the Inspector General of the Police, which included representatives of the Ministry of Justice, the National Intelligence Agency and the Gambia Armed Forces, as well as former members of the GNTCA, convened several meetings on the above-mentioned issues. The Committee further notes that the GNTCA was advised to constitute a trade union instead of an association, which led to the formation of the General Transport Union, and was also advised to approach the Victim Centres of the National Human Rights Commission. In addition, the Committee also notes the Government's indication that due to the time constraints and the volume of alleged human rights violations that the TRRC was tasked to examine, the TRRC did not investigate the death of Mr Diba, and that all pending human rights violations will be investigated and prosecuted by a Special Prosecutor's Office that will be established within the Ministry of Justice. The Committee expects that the Government will take all necessary measures to ensure that the death of Mr Diba and the alleged arbitrary arrests of the leaders of the GNTCA are promptly investigated by the Special Prosecutor's Office. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all developments in this regard.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers without distinction whatsoever, to establish and join organizations of their own choosing without previous authorization. The Committee had previously noted that sections 3(2)(a), (c) and (d) of the Labour Act of 2007 exclude civil servants, prison officers and domestic workers, respectively, from its scope, and recalled the need to ensure that these three groups enjoy the right to establish and join organizations of their own choosing. The Committee notes the Government's indication that these categories of workers are not excluded from the scope of the Trade Union Bill and will therefore be allowed to form and join trade unions after its coming into force. The Committee observes that the right to join and participate in the forming of trade unions is provided to every employee under section 4(1) of the Trade Union Bill. Further observing that section 2 of the Trade Union Bill defines "employee" as "a person employed for wages or a salary", which does not encompass self-employed workers and workers without employment contracts, the Committee recalls that Article 2 of the Convention applies not only to employees but more broadly to all workers without any distinction whatsoever. The Committee also notes the ITUC indication that no progress has been made with respect to the Trade Union Bill since the Gambian Trade Union Bureau submitted its comments and recommendations on the Bill in 2017. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary steps, in consultation with the social partners, to review the Trade Union Bill so as to ensure that once adopted, all workers, including civil servants, prison officers, domestic workers, as well as self-employed workers and workers without employment contracts, enjoy the right to establish and join organizations of their own choosing, in accordance with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this respect.

Minimum membership requirement. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to lower the minimum membership requirement for the registration of a trade union currently set by section 96(4)(a) the Labour Act at 50 workers. The Committee welcomes the Government's indication that the issue of registration of trade unions will now be dealt with under the Trade Union Bill and that the minimum membership requirement will be set at seven members under section 8(2) of its draft Trade Union Regulations. The Government indicates that the Labour Bill no longer includes provisions regulating this issue. The Committee expects that the Labour Bill, the Trade Union Bill and the draft Trade Union Regulations will be adopted without further delay so as to ensure that the minimum membership requirement for the registration of trade unions is reduced to a level which does not hinder the establishment of organizations.

The Committee hopes that the Labour Bill, the Trade Union Bill and the draft Trade Union Regulations will be reviewed and finalized as soon as possible in consultation with the social partners and with the technical assistance of the Office, requested by the Government, to ensure that full effect is given to the provisions of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all developments in this regard and to transmit copies of the laws and regulations once adopted.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 2000)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 1 September 2022 referring to matters under examination by the Committee.

The Committee also notes that the Government indicates that the Labour Bill and the Trade Union Bill are currently being reviewed and provides copies of the two bills.

Scope of the Convention. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on the adoption of the Trade Union Bill and expressed the firm expectation that the rights afforded by the Convention would be ensured for prison officers, domestic workers and civil servants not engaged in the administration of the State, whom section 3(2) of the Labour Act excludes from its scope. The Committee takes due note of the Government's indication that these categories of workers are not excluded from the scope of the Trade Union Bill, as they are not enumerated among the persons excluded by section 3 of the Bill.

The Committee observes however that section 2 of the Bill defines "trade union" as "an organized group of employees", and "employee" as "a person employed for wages or a salary", a definition that may not encompass self-employed workers and workers without employment contracts. In this regard, the Committee recalls that the Convention does not apply only to employees but more broadly to all workers, and that only the armed forces, the police and public servants engaged in the administration of the State may be excluded from the guarantees of the Convention. The Committee also notes that, according to the observations submitted by the ITUC, there has been no progress regarding the adoption of the Trade Union Bill since the Gambian Trade Union Bureau submitted its comments and recommendations on the Bill in 2017. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures, in full consultation with the social partners, to ensure that the Trade Union Bill is revised and adopted shortly, with a view to guaranteeing that all workers, including prison officers, domestic workers, civil servants not engaged in the administration of the State, as well as self-employed workers and workers without employment contracts, enjoy the rights and guarantees set out in the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress achieved in this regard.

Article 4. Recognition of organizations for the purposes of collective bargaining. In its previous comments, recalling that the organization of a ballot for determining representativeness should be carried out by the authorities or an independent party upon a request presented by a union, the Committee requested the Government to bring section 131 of the Labour Act, which provides that an employer may organize a secret ballot to establish a sole bargaining agent, into conformity with the Convention. The Committee notes with regret that the Government states that section 169 of the Labour Bill also allows the employer to organize such a secret ballot. The Committee requests the Government to amend the Labour Bill so as to ensure that the determination of the representative status of trade unions for purposes of collective bargaining is conducted in accordance with a procedure that offers every guarantee of impartiality, by an independent body that enjoys the confidence of the parties.

Threshold of representativity. In its previous comment, the Committee recalled that if no union in a specific negotiating unit meets the required threshold to be recognized as a sole bargaining agent, minority trade unions should be able to negotiate, jointly or separately, at least on behalf of their own members, and requested the Government to bring its legislation into conformity with the Convention. The Committee notes that the Government states that in the Trade Union Bill, a trade union will be recognized for purposes of collective bargaining if it represents a simple majority of the unionizable employees (section 34). Observing that the Bill does not contain any provisions regulating cases in which no union reaches that threshold, the Committee recalls once again that systems where a representative union that fails to secure the absolute majority may be denied the possibility of bargaining, may raise problems of compatibility with the Convention. Noting additionally that the Government only informs of two concluded collective agreements, the Committee considers that the apparently very small number of existing collective agreement in the country could appear to be related to the restrictive requirements to engage in collective bargaining which are contained in the current legislation. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the meaning of the term “simple majority” in section 34 of the Trade Union Bill, and to amend the legislation in order to ensure that if no union reaches the required threshold to be recognized as a bargaining agent, the existing unions are given the possibility to negotiate, jointly or separately, at least on behalf of their own members.

Promotion of collective bargaining in practice. The Committee had previously noted the information provided by the Government on two company-level collective agreements concluded in the private sector in 2014 and 2017. The Committee notes that the Government limits itself to referring again to these two agreements and stating that it will take steps to sensitize trade unions to maximise the use and benefits of collective bargaining. The Committee reiterates its request that the Government provide information on the concrete measures taken to promote collective bargaining in all sectors covered by the Convention, as well as on the number of collective agreements concluded and in force, the sectors concerned and the number of workers covered by these agreements. The Committee further requests the Government to provide information on the actions taken to promote collective bargaining in the different sectors of the economy.

Request for technical assistance. The Committee notes the Government's request for technical assistance from the Office to ensure that the Labour Bill and the Trade Union Bill include the ILO's recommendations and are aligned with the Convention. The Committee trusts that the technical assistance requested by the Government will be provided as soon as possible with a view to ensuring that, after a consultation with the social partners, the above-mentioned bills will give full effect to the provisions of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any evolution in this regard, as well as copies of the laws once adopted.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Greece

Collective Bargaining Convention, 1981 (No. 154) (ratification: 1996)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Greek General Confederation of Labour (GSEE), received on 1 September 2017, 1 November 2018 and 30 August 2019, as well as the Government replies thereto.

Articles 1(3) and 5 of the Convention. Promotion of collective bargaining in the public service. In its previous comment, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on the steps taken to promote collective bargaining for all groups of workers including the public service, extended to all matters related to working conditions and terms of employment and to indicate any reviews undertaken on the impact of the unilateral changes brought about to employment conditions over recent years. With respect to the private sector, the Committee refers to its previous comments under the Right to Organize and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98). Concerning pay-setting arrangements in the public sector, the Government indicates: (i) as of 1 January 2016, the provisions of law 4354/2015 apply. Accordingly, collective labour agreements mainly concern the granting of non-wage benefits; (ii) any collective agreement providing for granting of non-wage benefits by the general government bodies that imply expenditure exceeding €5,000 per year is co-signed by the Minister of Finance; (iii) a study on the number of workers concerned, the cost incurred and the way of covering it is attached to each collective agreement concerning the granting of non-wage benefits, as an annex and integral part thereof; and (iv) according to the opinion no. 174/2017 of the Legal Council of the State, wage regulations included in a CBA between the administration of a state private law legal entity and its workers' trade union shall not apply if they deviate from the provisions of the Law 4354/2015. The Government indicates that no legislative changes were made concerning collective bargaining in public sector during the period between 1 June 2014 and 31 May 2021. Concerning the practice of collective bargaining in the public sector the Government indicates: (i) during the reference period collective bargaining in the public sector only concerned the employees of entities of first and second level local self-government organizations. Two CBAs were concluded in 2017 and 2018 pursuant to which an additional annual leave and reduced working hours were granted to the staff of first level organizations and one CBA was concluded in 2018 (and amended in 2019) which for the first time regulated the employment terms and conditions of the staff of the regions. The issue of trade union leave was also codified in the framework of two CBAs concluded in 2017 and 2018; (ii) trade unions representing the private law personnel of first and second level local self-government organizations concluded three CBAs with the administration in 2018. The Committee recalls that while the special characteristics of the public service may justify a certain degree of flexibility in the modalities of collective bargaining, the broad material scope of the Convention that covers terms and conditions of employment, also applies to public employees and their organizations who should therefore be, in particular able to negotiate their wages collectively. The Committee firmly hopes that the Government will continue its efforts to promote collective bargaining for all groups of workers, including the public service, and to progressively extend the matters covered by collective bargaining. It requests the Government to provide information on all the measures taken in this respect.

Guatemala

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1952)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the joint observations of the Guatemalan Autonomous Popular Trade Union Movement and the Global Unions of Guatemala, and the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 31 August and 1 September 2022 respectively, relating to matters examined in the present comment. The Committee also notes the Government's replies to these observations.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 110th Session, May–June 2022)

The Committee notes the discussion which took place in June 2022 in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (Conference Committee) concerning the application of the Convention by Guatemala. The Committee observes that the Conference Committee, after deploring and deeply regretting the persistent acts of general violence and the violence against trade union leaders and members, including murders and physical aggression, and the culture of impunity that prevails in the country, called on the Government to take steps to: (i) investigate without delay all acts and threats of violence against trade union leaders and members with a view to identifying and understanding the root causes of violence, taking into account their trade union activities as a motive, determining responsibilities and punishing the perpetrators; (ii) provide rapid and effective protection to all trade union leaders and members who are under threat by increasing the budget for such programmes and ensure that protected individuals do not personally have to bear any costs arising from those schemes; (iii) eliminate the various legislative obstacles to the free establishment of trade union organizations and, in consultation with the social partners, resolve the handling of registration applications; (iv) ensure that judicial decisions of reinstatement in employment following anti-union dismissals are enforced without delay; (v) increase the visibility of the awareness-raising campaign on freedom of association in the media and ensure that there is no stigmatization of trade unions, their leaders and collective agreements; (vi) bring national legislation into conformity with the Convention, in consultation with the social partners; and (vii) redouble efforts to fully implement the road map adopted on 17 October 2013, in consultation with the social partners.

Lastly, the Committee invited the Government to avail itself of technical assistance from the Office to give full effect to these conclusions and asked it to submit a report on the application of the Convention to the Committee of Experts by 1 September 2022.

Follow-up by the Governing Body of the progress achieved in the implementation of the technical cooperation programme “Strengthening of the National Tripartite Committee on Labour Relations and Freedom of Association in Guatemala for the effective application of international labour standards”

The Committee recalls that, pursuant to its decision of November 2018 (decision GB.334/INS/9) to close the procedure concerning the complaint alleging non-observance of the Convention by Guatemala made under article 26 of the ILO Constitution, the Governing Body asked the Office in November 2020 to report annually on the ILO technical cooperation programme “Strengthening of the National Tripartite Committee on Labour Relations and Freedom of Association in Guatemala for the effective application of international labour standards” for its three-year duration (decision GB.340/INS/10).

During its October-November 2022 meeting, the Governing Body noted the joint mission of the ILO, the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) and the ITUC, undertaken in September 2022 to follow up on the technical cooperation provided by the ILO in relation to the implementation of the road map approved in 2013 by the Government, in order to discuss the matters raised in the complaint made under article 26 of the ILO Constitution. The Committee notes that the mission and the members of the National Tripartite Committee on Labour Relations and Freedom of Association (CNTRLLS) jointly identified a series of priority actions to give new impetus to the implementation of the road map.

Trade union rights and civil liberties. The Committee notes with regret that since 2005 it has been examining allegations of serious acts of violence against trade union leaders and members, including numerous murders, and the situation of impunity in this respect. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government on the status of investigations and judicial proceedings relating to the murder of 97 members of the trade union movement, indicating that: (i) 29 verdicts have so far been handed down, comprising 22 convictions (in relation to 19 murders, with three cases resulting in two convictions each), six acquittals, and one security and correctional measure; (ii) seven cases have been assigned dates for public hearings and trials; (iii) in one new case, the final report was presented to the judicial authority by the Public Prosecutor’s Office; (iv) in three cases, trial proceedings are being opened; (v) criminal proceedings were dropped in seven cases in which the accused persons had died; and (vi) the other cases are still at the investigation stage. The Committee also notes the Government’s indication that: (i) given that several new cases now have dates for public hearings and trials, five new judgments are expected by the end of the first half of 2023; (ii) six cases involving the deaths of trade union leaders and members which occurred in 2020 have seen significant progress in terms of investigations and proceedings; and (iii) the Public Prosecutor’s Office has launched investigations into two cases of death threats against trade union leaders.

The Committee further notes the information provided by the Government on the security measures adopted for members of the trade union movement in situations of risk, namely: (i) personal security measures are in place for two union leaders; and (ii) of the 46 requests for protection for trade union members received by the Ministry of the Interior from 1 January to 27 July 2022, one has given rise to personal security measures, 39 have generated perimeter security measures, and six are in the analysis phase. The Government also refers to Ministerial Decision No. 288-2022 issued by the Interior Ministry, which reinstates the unit for the analysis of attacks against trade union leaders and members, a forum in which the Interior Ministry and the unions can exchange information on at-risk members of the trade union movement.

The Committee further notes the Government's reference to a substantial increase in the budgets allocated to: (i) the Office of the Special Prosecutor for Crimes against Judicial Officials and Trade Unionists, which increased from US$543,960 to US$1,288,252 in 2022; and (ii) the Personal Protection and Security Division at the Interior Ministry, which increased from US$876,616 in 2020 to US$1,239,120 in 2022. Lastly, the Government reports on the eight meetings held in 2022 by the CNTRLLS Subcommittee on the Implementation of the Road Map concerning the subject of anti-union violence.

The Committee also notes with deep concern the observations of the national and international trade union organizations denouncing: (i) the murder on 8 August 2022 of Hugo Eduardo Gamero Gonzalez, Disputes Secretary of the Santo Tomás de Castilla National Port Enterprise Workers' Union (SINEPORC); (ii) the perpetration of numerous other acts of anti-union violence such as death threats; (iii) the persistence of the situation of impunity; and (iv) the inadequate protection measures provided by the public authorities.

While noting the Government's replies regarding the investigations into these acts, the Committee once again recalls that trade union rights can only be exercised in a climate that is free from violence, pressure or threats of any kind against trade unionists, and that it is for governments to ensure that this principle is respected.

In light of the foregoing, while duly noting the continuing actions by the Government, the results reported and the difficulty involved in clearing up long-standing murder cases, the Committee once again expresses its deep concern at the allegations of a new case of murder and other acts of anti-union violence committed in 2022 and the persistence of a high degree of impunity. Indeed, the Committee notes with regret that the vast majority of the many murders of trade unionists recorded have still not resulted in convictions and that limited information on identification and punishment of the instigators of these crimes has been provided by the Government. While duly noting the significant increase in the budget allocated to the Office of the Special Prosecutor for Crimes against Judicial Officials and Trade Unionists reported by the Government, the Committee once again urges the Government to continue taking and intensifying as a matter of urgency all necessary measures to: (i) investigate all acts of violence against trade union leaders and members, with the aim of determining responsibility and punishing both the perpetrators and instigators of these acts, taking the victims' trade union activities fully into consideration in the investigations; and (ii) provide prompt and effective protection for all trade union leaders and members in situations of risk so as to prevent any further acts of anti-union violence. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing all relevant information in this respect.

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. The Committee recalls that for many years it has been requesting the Government to take measures to:

- amend section 215(c) of the Labour Code, which requires a membership of "50 per cent plus one" of the workers in the sector to establish a sectoral trade union;
- amend sections 220 and 223 of the Labour Code, which establish the requirement to be of Guatemalan origin and to work in the relevant enterprise or economic activity to be eligible for election as a trade union leader;
- amend section 241 of the Labour Code, under the terms of which strikes have to be called by a majority of the workers and not by a majority of those casting votes;

- amend section 4(d), (e) and (g) of Decree No. 71-86, as amended by Legislative Decree No. 35-96 of 27 March 1996, which provides for the possibility of imposing compulsory arbitration in non-essential services and establishes other obstacles to the right to strike;
- amend sections 390(2) and 430 of the Penal Code and Decree No. 71-86, which establish labour, civil and criminal penalties in the event of a strike by public officials or workers in certain enterprises; and
- ensure that the various categories of public sector workers (hired under item 029 and other items of the budget) enjoy the guarantees afforded by the Convention.

The Committee recalls that in its previous comments it noted: (i) the tripartite agreement concluded in March 2018 on the amendments sought in four of the six points indicated above (relating to the requirements for election as a trade union leader, compulsory arbitration in non-essential services and other obstacles to the right to strike, penalties applicable in the event of a strike established by various legislative provisions, and the application of the guarantees of the Convention to various categories of public sector workers); and the immediate submission of this agreement to the National Congress; (ii) the tripartite agreement concluded in August 2018 on the principles that should guide reforms on the requirements for the establishment and operation of sectoral unions and on the conditions for strike ballots.

In its comments further to the closure by the Governing Body of the complaint made under article 26 of the ILO Constitution, the Committee expressed deep concern at the lack of progress on legislative reforms, noting with regret, firstly, that the content of the tripartite agreement of March 2018 had still not been incorporated in the legislation and, secondly, that no progress had been made on work to revise the legislation relating to aspects covered by the agreement on principles of August 2018. With regard to this last point, the Committee had previously noted with concern the indications by the trade unions that the combination of (i) the fact that it is impossible to create sectoral unions as a result of the requirements of section 215(c), and (ii) the fact that it is impossible in small enterprises, which account for almost all companies in Guatemala, to assemble the 20 workers required by section 216 of the Labour Code for the establishment of a union, meant that the vast majority of workers in the country did not have access to the right to join a union.

The Committee notes the Government's reference to two tripartite meetings held in 2021 and one held in July 2022 to incorporate the agreements reached in March 2018 into a Bill without there having been the necessary input from the workers to move ahead with the tripartite discussion process. The Committee also notes that the national trade union federations claim that it is impossible to move forward on the legislative reforms requested by the Committee owing to the unwillingness of the Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare (Ministry of Labour) to impinge on the different political groups represented in the National Congress, and because of this the tripartite consensus achieved has lost its way in the legislative body.

The Committee also notes the following points that emerge from the discussion in the Governing Body in November 2022 that: (i) on 21 September 2022, in the presence of the ILO-IOE-ITUC joint mission, the Subcommittee on Legislation with the extended bureau of the CNTRLLS endorsed the texts approved in March 2018 and agreed that the executive authority would submit a Bill to Congress in the very near future; (ii) by a letter of 27 October 2022, the President of the Republic brought a Bill before the National Congress containing the texts which had received tripartite approval in March 2018 and September 2022; and (iii) the priority actions identified by the mission in conjunction with the CNTRLLS provide for: lobbying by the national tripartite constituents with a view to the adoption of the aforementioned Bill; bipartite and tripartite discussions facilitated by the Office to have a consensual text for proposed reforms on sectoral trade unions and the conditions for strike ballots ready for the Governing Body session of November 2023. Encouraged by the specific actions agreed upon during the ILO-IOE-ITUC joint mission, the Committee firmly hopes that the Government will very soon be in a position to report both the adoption of the Bill brought before the National Congress on 27 October 2022 and tangible progress in the revision of the legislation relating to sectoral trade unions and the conditions for strike ballots.

Application of the Convention in practice

Registration of trade unions. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) in the whole of 2021, the Ministry of Labour registered 57 trade unions, out of 58 applications received; (ii) from 1 January to 15 August 2022, a total of 17 trade unions were registered, out of 18 applications received; and (iii) steps have been taken to contract a notifying officer to accelerate registration formalities, and assistance has been sought from the Ministry of Labour of Argentina to share good practices in this respect. The Committee also notes the observations of the trade union federations, which claim that: (i) arbitrary practices and the imposition of inappropriate formalities by the Ministry of Labour persist; (ii) the Ministry of Labour reportedly gives 48 hours to employers to bring legal action against any publication of the registration of a trade union in the Official Journal. The Committee notes the Government's indication regarding this latter point that, under the case law of the Constitutional Court, the Ministry of Labour has the obligation to examine claims presented to it, including those relating to the registration of unions. Lastly, the Committee notes that the priority actions identified by the ILO-IOE-ITUC joint mission include the implementation, with support from the Office, of software for the registration of trade unions. In light of the foregoing, the Committee requests the Government to continue providing statistical information on registration applications and actual trade union registrations. It further requests the Government to specify whether the legislation requires the labour administration to inform the employer when it receives a request for registration by a trade union and to indicate the number of challenges against registration brought by employers, the duration of their examination and the decisions taken for their resolution.

Awareness-raising campaign on freedom of association and collective bargaining. The Committee notes the Government's reference to the meeting of the Subcommittee on the Implementation of the Road Map held on 2 August 2022 at which: (i) the Subcommittee gave its approval to the communication models submitted by the ILO; and (ii) the Ministry of Labour indicated that it had set aside funds to display posters in the municipalities most affected by disputes in the country. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that the national trade union federations, for their part, criticize the lack of any progress in this respect. Lastly, the Committee notes that, in the context of the priority actions identified by the ILO-IOE-ITUC joint mission and the CNTRLLS, the following possibilities were raised: (i) that the Government might launch a similar initiative on freedom of association to the one recently implemented by the Ministry of Labour with a campaign on the prevention of child labour; (ii) that the Coordinating Committee for Agricultural, Commercial, Industrial and Financial Associations, in connection with the human rights policy developed by the employers, might devise and disseminate awareness-raising and information materials among its members on the employers' role regarding the exercise of freedom of association; and (iii) that the campaign might include promoting good practices with respect to collective labour relations (for example, through an annual award from the CNTRLLS). In light of the foregoing, the Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will be in a position in the very near future to report specific progress on the implementation of the awareness-raising campaign.

While expressing its concern at the persistence in law and practice of serious violations of the Convention, the Committee welcomes the fresh impetus given to the implementation of the road map through priority actions identified by the ILO-IOE-ITUC joint mission and by the members of the CNTRLLS. The Committee emphasizes that it is vitally important that the expectations generated by the identification of such actions translate into tangible progress in the application of the Convention within the specified time frames. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the various points highlighted in the present comment.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

[The Government is asked to reply in full to the present comments in 2023.]

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1959)

Previous comment

Article 3 of the Convention. Right of organizations to organize their activities and to formulate their programmes. In its previous comment, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on the work of the National Social Dialogue Council (CNDS) in resolving disagreements concerning the determination of minimum wages. The Committee also requested the Government to indicate the minimum services determined in the transport and communications services. The Committee notes the adoption of the new Decree of 31 May 2022 on the organization and functioning of the CNDS. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that it is in the process of adopting the measures necessary to render the CNDS operational and that the social partners have been requested to designate their members to allow the body to be up and running as soon as possible. According to the Government, as it is not yet operational, the CNDS has not intervened in resolving the disagreements concerning the determination of minimum wages. The Committee also notes that, according to the Government, following a number of collective disputes, minimum services have been determined at the level of certain institutions and that minimum services exist in the communication and transport sectors. In light of the above, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the work of the CNDS, once operational, in the resolution of disagreements concerning the determination of minimum services. The Committee also once again requests the Government to provide information on the minimum services determined in the communication, transport and other sectors.

In its previous comment, the Committee welcomed the establishment of the commission to review the Labour Code and hoped that sections 431.5 and 434.4 of the Labour Code, on minimum service in case of strikes and compulsory arbitration respectively, would be amended in conformity with the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the amendment process of the Labour Code is under way, in consultation with the social partners, and that the next step is to establish a commission which will be responsible for bringing together the different observations made regarding the inadequacies, shortcomings, legal gaps and desired rectifications in certain articles of the Labour Code. On completion of that task, a "sharing" workshop will be organized, at the latest in the month of November 2022. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that it has requested ILO technical assistance in this regard. The Committee requests the Government to report on all progress made in this respect and encourages the Government to continue to avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office in this connection.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1979)

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 1 September 2022, which contain allegations of police repression during peaceful demonstrations and strikes, as well as obstacles to the registration of trade unions. The Committee also notes the observations of the Confederation of Public and Private Sector Workers (CTSP) and the Confederation of Haitian Workers (CTH), received on 2 November 2022, which refer to the extremely serious and violent crisis in the country, with the repercussions this has on the exercise of trade union rights, which are already particularly compromised. The Committee takes note of the extent of the crisis affecting the country at all levels and hopes that the Government will be able to comment on the issues raised in the near future.

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report, due since 2014, has not been received. In light of its urgent appeal launched to the Government in 2020, the Committee proceeds with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of whatever information is at its disposal. While being aware of the difficulties affecting the country, the Committee cannot but recall that it has been raising issues concerning the observance of the Convention in an observation and a direct request, including longstanding recommendations to bring the labour legislation into conformity with the Convention regarding provisions that unduly restrict: (i) the right of workers to establish and join organizations of their own choosing (minors, foreign workers, domestic workers); and (ii) the right of workers' organizations to organize their activities in full freedom and to formulate their programmes. Not having received any additional observations from the social partners, nor having at its disposal any indication of progress on these pending matters, the Committee refers to its previous observation and direct request adopted in 2020 and urges the Government to provide a full reply thereto. To this end, the Committee expects that any request for technical assistance that the Government may address to the Office will be acted upon as soon as possible.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 1 September 2022, which contain new allegations of serious violations of freedom of association in the textile sector, such as anti-union dismissals. The Committee also notes the observations of the Confederation of Public and Private Sector Workers (CTSP) and the Confederation of Haitian Workers (CTH), received on 2 November 2022, which, in the context of the extremely serious and violent crisis in the country, denounce the blatant limitations on the right to organize and bargain collectively in practice. The Committee notes the extent of the crisis affecting the country at all levels and hopes that the Government will be able to comment on the issues raised in the near future.

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report, which has been expected since 2014, has not been received. In light of the urgent appeal made to the Government in 2020, the Committee is proceeding with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of information at its disposal. While being aware of the difficulties faced by the country, the Committee recalls that it raised questions concerning the application of the Convention in an observation, which particularly concerned the need to strengthen protection against anti-union discrimination as well as the penalties provided in this regard. It recalls also that its comments concern allegations of serious violations of freedom of association in practice, especially in several enterprises in textile export processing zones, and the lack of social bargaining in the country. In the absence of additional observations from the social partners and having no indication at its disposal of progress made on these pending issues, the Committee refers to its previous observation of 2020 and urges the Government to provide a complete response in 2022 to the questions raised. For that purpose, the Committee expects that any request for technical assistance, in relation with Conventions ratified by the country, that the Government may wish to address to the Office will be taken up as soon as possible.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Hungary

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1957)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the workers' group of the National ILO Council at its meeting of 27 October 2021, included in the Government's report, which relate to the issues examined by the Committee below, and the Government's comments thereon.

Freedom of expression. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted with concern that sections 8 and 9 of the Labour Code (2012) prohibited workers from engaging in any conduct, including the exercise of their right to express an opinion – whether during or outside working time – that may jeopardize the employer's reputation or legitimate economic and organizational interests, and explicitly provided for the possibility to restrict workers' personal rights in this regard. The Committee considered that the above provisions impeded the freedom of expression of workers and the exercise of the mandate of trade unions and their leaders to defend the occupational interests of their members and expected that its comments would be fully taken into account in the framework of the ongoing review of the Labour Code. The Committee notes the Government's indication that in 2019, section 9 of the Labour Code was amended to implement the European Union reform on data protection. Pursuant to the amended text, "the employee's personality rights [including freedom of expression] may be limited only where the limitation is strictly necessary for a reason directly associated with the intended purpose of the employment relationship and is proportionate in order to achieve that objective. The employee shall be informed in advance in writing of the manner, conditions and expected duration of the restriction of the personality right, as well as of the circumstances justifying its necessity and proportionality". The Government points out that the amendment establishes stricter conditions for the restriction of the employees' rights, including freedom of expression set forth in Article IX (1) of the Fundamental Law. The Committee notes that the workers' group of the National ILO Council considers the amendment to section 9 (2) of the Labour Code to be only a partly sufficient response to the observation made by the Committee. The Committee also notes that the workers' group is of the view that section 8 (3) of the Labour Code refers to reputation and other legitimate interests of an employer as interests to be respected and not to be seriously violated in expressing opinion. The Committee notes the workers' group of the National ILO Council's proposal to hold consultations on necessary and proportionate limits to the constitutional right of employee's freedom of expression with involvement of experts and social partners. The Committee regrets that the Government merely indicates that the court being the competent body to interpret the conditions regulated by section 8 (1)-(3) of the Labour Code, the aggrieved party can bring appropriate claims in cases of violation of freedom of expression. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take all necessary measures, including legislative, in consultation with the social partners, to guarantee that sections 8 and 9 of the Labour Code do not impede the freedom of expression of workers and the exercise of the mandate of trade unions and their leaders to defend the occupational interests of their members. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all progress achieved in this respect.

Article 2 of the Convention. Registration of trade unions. The Committee had previously requested the Government to provide its comments on the observations of the ITUC and the workers' group of the National ILO Council concerning allegations on the stringent requirements in relation to union headquarters, the refusal of registration due to minor flaws, the imposition of the obligation of including the company's name in the official name of associations, and the difficulties created or encountered by trade unions because of the obligation to bring their by-laws in line with the Civil Code. The Committee notes with regret that the Government did not provide comments in this respect. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates the information it had previously provided on the existing legal framework for registration, and adds that from 1 June 2017 to 31 May 2021, 1,149 trade unions were registered and eight applications were rejected (three without a call for rectification due to an incomplete application, and five after the issuance of a request for rectification because the applicant did not properly comply with the court's order within the deadline). The Committee also notes the workers' group of the National ILO Council's observation that the implementation of Article 2 of the Convention continues to be complicated by unnecessary requirements and that trade unions may only commence operations from the effective date of the court's decision on registration. The Committee further notes that, while the Government indicates that the courts no longer require the fulfilment of all minor requirements for court registration, the workers' group of the National ILO Council points out that the relevant Act has not been amended accordingly. In light of the above, the Committee is obliged to request once again the Government to provide its comments on the observations of the ITUC and the workers' group of the National ILO Council. The Committee recalls that, although the formalities of registration allow for official recognition of workers' or employers' organizations, these formalities should not become an obstacle to the exercise of legitimate trade union activities, nor should they allow for undue discretionary power to deny or delay the establishment of such organizations. Accordingly, the Committee once again requests the Government to: (i) engage without delay in consultations with the most representative employers' and workers' organizations to assess the need to further simplify the registration requirements, including those relating to union headquarters; and (ii) take the necessary measures to effectively address the alleged obstacles to registration in practice, so as not to impede the right of workers to establish organizations of their own choosing. The Committee also requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of registered organizations and the number of organizations denied or delayed registration during the reporting period, and to provide additional details on the grounds for refusal of registration so to enable the Committee to better assess the conformity of these grounds with the Convention.

Article 3. Right of workers' organizations to organize their administration. The Committee had previously requested the Government to provide its comments on the ITUC allegations that trade union activity was severely restricted by the power of national prosecutors to control trade union activities, for instance by reviewing general and ad hoc decisions of unions, conducting inspections directly or through other state bodies, and enjoying free and unlimited access to trade union offices. The ITUC further alleged that, in the exercise of these broad capacities, prosecutors questioned several times the lawfulness of trade union operations, requested numerous documents (registration forms, membership records with original membership application forms, minutes of meetings, resolutions, etc.) and, if not satisfied with the unions' financial reporting, ordered additional reports, thereby overstepping the powers provided by the law. The Committee notes with regret that the Government did not provide its comments on these serious allegations from the ITUC. Recalling that acts described by the ITUC would be incompatible with the right of workers' organizations to organize their administration enshrined in Article 3 of the Convention, the Committee again requests that the Government respond to the ITUC allegations.

Right of workers' organizations to organize their activities. The Committee had previously highlighted the need to amend the relevant laws (including the Strike Act, the Passenger Transport Services Act and the Postal Services Act), in order to ensure that the workers' organizations concerned may participate in the definition of a minimum service and that, where no agreement is possible, the matter is referred to a joint or independent body. The Committee notes the Government's indication that having dealt with difficulties caused by the COVID-19 pandemic, it plans to put on the agenda a comprehensive amendment of the Strike Act. The Committee urges the Government to take all necessary measures to amend without further delay the Strike Act, as well as the Passenger Transport Services Act and the Postal Services Act as per the Committee's previous comments, and to provide information on all developments in this respect.

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 1 September 2022 concerning matters examined by the Committee in the present comment. It further notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) received on 25 August 2022 concerning the discussions that took place at the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards with respect to the application of the Convention.

The Committee also notes: (i) the observations of the workers' group of the National ILO Council (NILOC) in relation to the Report sent by the Government in view of the discussion before the Committee on the Application of Standards; (ii) the summaries provided by the Government of the position expressed by the workers' group of the NILOC concerning the report submitted by the Government to the Committee.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 110th Session, May–June 2022)

The Committee notes the discussions held at the Conference Committee in June 2022 on the application of the Convention by Hungary. The Committee notes that the Conference Committee, noting with concern the significant compliance gaps in law and practice regarding the protection against anti-union discrimination, the scope of collective bargaining permitted under the law and interference in free and voluntary collective bargaining with respect to the Convention, requested the Government to: (i) review relevant labour legislation to ensure that the representativity threshold is not set in a manner that prevents workers from exercising their right to collective bargaining; (ii) ensure that union officials, union members and elected representatives enjoy effective protection, in law and practice, against any act prejudicial to them, including dismissal, based on their status or activities; (iii) ensure no undue interference in the establishment, functioning and administration of trade unions; and (iv) provide information on the average duration of both judicial proceedings and proceedings before the Equal Treatment Authority (ETA) related to anti-union discrimination.

The Committee further notes that the Conference Committee requested the Government to: (i) avail itself, without delay, of ILO technical assistance, to ensure compliance with the provisions of the Convention in law and practice; and (ii) submit a report to the Committee by 1 September 2022 on the application of the Convention.

The Committee notes that in July 2022, the Government requested the technical assistance of the Office with respect to the Convention and that a first meeting took place in August 2022 in order to exchange on the modalities of such assistance.

Article 1 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. The Committee recalls that it had requested the Government to ensure that trade union officials and members enjoy effective protection against anti-union discrimination and to provide information on the average duration of the related judicial and administrative proceedings. Concerning the specific protection of trade union officials, the Committee notes with satisfaction the Government's indication that, as a result of Act CLIX of 2017 the definition of employee representatives in the Labour Code now covers trade union officials, enabling them to request their reinstatement in case of unlawful dismissal.

As for trade union members other than officials, the Committee noted in its previous comment the legal provisions of the Labour Code that provide, through judicial procedure, for compensation (not exceeding the worker's 12-month absentee pay) in case of dismissal and reinstatement in case of violation of the principle of equal treatment (section 82 and 83(1)(a) of the Labour Code). The Committee further notes the Government's indication that the trade union member may demand compensation under section 166(1) of the Labour Code if the employer caused damage to the employee in connection with the employment relationship. As for the procedure under the Equal Treatment Act in response to the Committee's previous comment, the Government indicates that the legal consequences set out in the Equal Treatment Act do not extend to reinstatement and the ETA may not provide for compensation. The ETA, however, may impose a fine of HUF50,000 to HUF6 million and order the publication of its anonymised final decision.

Concerning the Committee's request to provide information on the average duration of both judicial proceedings and proceedings before the ETA, the Committee notes that the Government only provided data for the average processing time before the ETA (66 days excluding the duration of suspension). The Committee also notes that out of the 17 cases submitted before the ETA since June 2017, 10 cases resulted with the rejection of the request and 7 with the termination of the proceedings. The Committee notes that while the reported data allows for a better understanding on the number of submissions, it does not provide sufficient information to determine the grounds on which the cases were rejected by the ETA.

The Committee takes note of the observations of the workers' group of the NILOC that the legislation lacks dissuasive sanctions and that the data provided on the cases examined by the ETA illustrate both the low number of proceedings and that in the majority of cases the ETA rejects the applications submitted by employees and trade unions. Regarding the above, the Committee wishes to recall that the existence of legal provisions prohibiting acts of anti-union discrimination is not enough if they are not accompanied by effective and rapid procedures to ensure their application in practice and if the sanctions provided for are not effective and sufficiently dissuasive. In view of the above, the Committee requests the Government to: (i) provide comprehensive information on the average duration of both judicial proceedings and proceedings before the ETA, together with details on remedies provided, the number of claims rejected and the grounds for any such rejections; (ii) provide information on the legal provisions under which anti-union discriminatory acts, other than dismissal, can be remedied and the way they are applied; and (iii) carry out, in consultation with the social partners, a comprehensive examination of the effectiveness of the existing protection mechanisms against anti-union discrimination. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this regard.

Article 2. Adequate protection against acts of interference. In its previous comment the Committee requested the Government to take steps to adopt specific legislative provisions prohibiting such acts of interference on the part of the employer and making express provision for rapid appeal procedures, coupled with effective and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that in addition to the provisions of the Labour Code, the autonomy of trade unions is regulated by Act CLXXV of 2011 on the right of association and the Civil Code. The Committee notes the detailed description from the Government of the various provisions of the above laws and the indication that since Act LV of 2000 on the promulgation of the Convention forms part of the Hungarian legal system, consequently Article 2 of the Convention should also be deemed applicable. The Committee observes however that neither Act LV of 2000 which contains the official Hungarian translation of the Convention nor the other legislative instruments mentioned by the Government include provisions that specifically prohibit and sanction the acts of interference covered by Article 2 of the Convention. The Committee is therefore bound to reiterate its previous comment and request the Government to take steps to adopt specific legislative provisions prohibiting such acts of interference on the part of the employer and making express provision for rapid appeal procedures, coupled with effective and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. Representativeness requirements. The Committee notes the Government's explanation that the uniform 10 per cent threshold for conclusion of collective agreements set by legislation was established with the goal to enhance collective negotiations and to simplify the previous conditions set regarding the ability to conclude collective agreements. The Government adds that deviation from the 10 per cent threshold would: (i) enable trade unions with fragmented support under the 10 per cent threshold to exercise the right to jointly conduct collective bargaining and conclude collective agreement; and (ii) could set aside a trade union or a confederation that alone reaches the 10 per cent threshold. The Committee notes the observations received from the workers' group of the NILOC that the law restricts the 'coalition' of trade unions for collective bargaining in cases when no trade union reaches the 10 per cent threshold. The Committee requests the Government, after consultation with the representative social partners, to examine the possibility of allowing for the coalition of trade unions at the workplace in cases where no trade union reaches the required representativity individually.

Negotiation with work councils. The Committee notes the observations of the workers' group of the NILOC concerning the possibility for works councils to enter into agreement with the employer in relation to working conditions (except on remuneration). The Committee notes that according to the wording of section 268(1) of the Labour Code: "Such agreements may be concluded on the condition that the employer is not covered by a collective agreement it has concluded, or there is no trade union with entitlement to conclude a collective agreement". The Committee notes that under this provision, an employer is entitled to conclude a collective agreement with a works council even if there is a trade union organization in the company, as long as the latter does not reach the representativeness threshold set by the legislation to be able to bargain collectively. The Committee recalls that Article 4 of the Convention refers to collective bargaining between employers or employers' organizations on the one hand and workers' organizations on the other hand, and that it considers that, in order to ensure an effective promotion of the negotiating capacities of workers' organizations, negotiations with non-union actors should only be possible in the absence of trade unions at the respective level. The Committee therefore requests the Government, after consulting the representative social partners, to review section 268(1) of the Labour Code accordingly.

Material scope of collective bargaining in publicly-owned entities. In its previous comments, under the Collective Bargaining Convention, 1981 (No. 154), the Committee requested the Government to indicate which subject matters were excluded from the scope of collective bargaining in publicly-owned entities. The Committee understands that this question concern mainly public sector workers not engaged in the administration of the State that are therefore fully covered by the Convention.

The Committee notes the Government's response that sections 204–208 of the Labour Code set out the rules on employment at publicly-owned entities. These rules are mandatory and cannot be derogated neither by an individual nor by a collective agreement (section 213(f) of the Labour Code). These rules encompass: the notice period and severance payment, exceptions to working time (i.e. break from work, except for stand-by work; travel time), full daily working time shorter than general full daily working time may not be prescribed in a publicly-owned entity, except to prevent a hazard or danger to health (section 205(3) of the Labour Code). Finally, derogation from provisions of Chapters XIX-XXI of the Labour Code regulating labour relations is not permitted (section 206 of the Labour Code). Chapters XIX-XXI concern the regulation related to the establishment, functioning and dissolution of works councils and trade unions, including rules related to time allowances provided for trade union officials. The Government indicates that such rules were required by the special "legal status" and economic role of the employer in publicly-owned entities to ensure efficient management and prevention of abuse of State assets, enhanced enforcement of public interest, performance of public functions, publicity related to community objectives and to improve public opinion of companies.

The Committee recalls that workers of state-owned commercial or industrial enterprises are fully covered by the Convention. While the special characteristics of the public service, may allow for some flexibility, legislative measures taken unilaterally by the authorities to restrict the scope of negotiable issues are often incompatible with the Convention, and tripartite discussions are a particularly appropriate method of resolving these difficulties. While taking note of the justification provided for by the Government, the Committee is of the view that the matters excluded from collective bargaining at publicly-owned entities under articles 205-206 go beyond the restrictions that are compatible with the Convention. The Committee therefore requests the Government to initiate discussions with the social partners in order to revise the referred restrictions of the material scope of collective bargaining in publicly-owned entities.

Collective bargaining in practice. The Committee notes the data provided by the Government on the number of collective agreements for the period of 2012–19. While noting the observation of the workers' group of the NILOC that it is unclear from the data what the number of agreements refers to, the Committee observes that the data shows that in the private sector, in spite of a small increase in the number of collective agreements (from 942 in 2012 to 1011 in 2019), the number of workers covered decreased over the same period of time (from 442,723 to 397,650). In the public sector, both the number of agreements and the number of workers covered decreased at a higher rate (from 1,735 to 820 and from 261,401 to 193,695). In terms of data available for collective agreements covering more than one employer or institution, the data indicates a slightly upward trend in the private sector (from 81 to 84 and 204,585 to 229,477) though the data on collective agreements covering more than one institution in the public sector only refers to the agreement concluded between the State Health Care Centre in 2018, covering 56,612 employees. The Committee also notes that according to the data available at ILOSTAT, the collective bargaining coverage rate in Hungary in 2019 stood at 17.8 per cent. With respect to sectoral level collective bargaining, the Committee notes that there are currently three extended sectoral collective agreements in the construction, tourism and hospitality, and electricity industry. The Committee takes note of the information provided by the workers' group of the NILOC according to which there was a significant decline in the operation of Sectoral Dialogue Committees, partially due to the decrease in governmental support to their operation. The workers' group also indicates that recent amendments to provisions on extension of collective agreements further complicated and increased the bureaucracy of the option of extension. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comment on the workers' observation concerning the extension mechanism and to supply information on the rules relevant to sectoral collective bargaining, including with respect to the extension of collective agreements.

The Committee finally requests the Government to continue providing information on the number of collective agreements signed, the sectors concerned and the share of the workforce covered by collective agreements and to also provide the same statistics, where available, for works agreements.

The Committee hopes that the technical assistance requested from the Office will contribute to the full application of the Convention both in law and in practice.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1998)

Previous comment

The Committee takes note of the observations of the Confederation of Indonesian Trade Unions (KSPI), the Indonesia Trade Union Prosperity (KSBSI), and the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 31 August, 2 and 6 September 2021, respectively, referring to the issues raised by the Committee below. The Committee also notes the ITUC allegation that Law No. 11 of 2020 or the Omnibus Law on Job Creation restricts the right to strike as it grants police officers significant discretion to imprison or fine union members for participating in or inviting others to participate in lawful strike action. The Committee understands that the Omnibus Law is undergoing a revision. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments on the ITUC allegations and to provide information on the revision of the law and its regulations.

Trade union rights and civil liberties. The Committee had previously requested the Government to engage in tripartite discussions to ensure the effective implementation of a code of conduct for workers' demonstrations and industrial actions. While noting the Government's indication that tripartite discussions on the procedures for handling lawful demonstrations and industrial actions were held, the Committee notes with concern the ITUC allegation of violence and arrests by the police in relation to a strike action by more than a million workers against the Omnibus Law. The ITUC denounces the use of water cannons and tear gas resulting in the injury of 32 members of the Federation of Indonesia Metalworkers in Bekasi; and the arrests of 183 workers in Southern Sumatra, 200 workers in Jakarta and a further ten workers for striking outside working hours. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the strike action was anarchic and disrupted public peace and order. The Government adds that it had the right to act decisively against unlawful strikes carried out in violation of national law which established the Tripartite forum as the lawful forum for the discussion of labour policy issues. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the outcome of the tripartite discussions and on progress made toward any agreed measures to ensure the effective implementation of a code of conduct for workers' demonstrations and industrial actions. Recalling that in cases of strikes, the authorities should only resort to the use of force in exceptional circumstances and in situations of gravity where there is a serious threat of public disorder, and that such use of force must be proportionate to the circumstances, the Committee urges the Government to indicate all steps taken or envisaged to ensure the application of that principle.

The Committee had previously expected the Government to clarify that sections 160 and 335 of the Penal Code, respectively on "instigation" and "unpleasant acts" against employers, did not apply to abstract trade union activities. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Penal Code applies to all citizens without making any distinction between trade union and other activities. The Government adds that the Code is undergoing an amendment, taking into account the existing regulations. The Committee requests the Government to ensure that the amended Penal Code excludes lawful trade union activities from the scope of sections 160 and 335 of the Code. The Committee further requests the Government to provide information on all developments in this regard.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right to organize of civil servants. The Committee had previously expressed trust that the Government would adopt the implementing regulations to give effect to the right of civil servants to form and join organizations of their own choosing. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Trade Union Act applies to private sector workers while civil servants are covered by Law No. 5 of 2014 concerning Civil Servants. Moreover, the Constitution (Article 28 E) grants civil servants, in their capacity as citizens, the right to join any professional organization of their choosing. The Committee further notes that the Government refers to an obligation imposed on civil servants, depending on their status, to join respective professional organization of Functional Positions (JF) or KORPRI, a professional forum of which civil servants became members automatically upon their admission to service. The Committee observes that these organizations do not appear to be organizations in the sense provided for by the Convention or equivalent to organizations of workers of the private sector. The Committee once again requests the Government to take necessary measures to ensure the right of civil servants to form and join organizations of their own choosing, as is their right under the Convention, and to provide information on all steps taken to that end.

Article 3. Right of workers' organizations to organize their activities. The Committee had previously requested the Government to provide information on the number of interest disputes referred to conciliation and mediations, and those referred to the industrial court without the consent of the parties. The Committee takes due note of the Government's indication that there were 92 such cases reported between January and July 2021, with none being referred to the industrial court.

The Committee had previously invited the Government to discuss, within the framework of the National Tripartite Council, the effect of Presidential Decree No.63/2004 on the security of national vital objects (NVOs) and of the Ministry of Industry (MOI) Decree No. 466/2014, which enables companies or industrial areas to request assistance from the police and the military upon a disruption or threat to NVOs in their territory. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the MOI determines NVOs, and the Presidential Decree extends the application of security measures against threats to NVOs to the public, including trade unions. The Government informs that the Constitution (Article 28E) and the Trade Union Act guarantee the right to associate, negotiate, and carry out trade union activities in companies that are part of NVOs. The Government informs that it will submit a proposal to discuss the impact of laws and regulations related to NVOs in the National Tripartite Cooperation Institution. Recalling it had previously noted claims by the KSPI and KSBSI that these Decrees are used to suppress the exercise of freedom of association, including provision of examples thereof, the Committee regrets that the application of the above-mentioned Decrees has not been yet discussed with the social partners. The Committee urges the Government to take all necessary steps to ensure that such a discussion takes place without further delay.

Article 4. Dissolution and suspension of organizations by the administrative authority. The Committee had previously requested the Government to indicate whether section 42 of the Trade Union Act could be used in conjunction with sections 21 and 31 to dissolve trade unions. The Committee takes due note of the Government's indication that sections 42, 21 and 31 of the Act cannot be invoked in conjunction to dissolve trade unions.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1957)

Previous comment

The Committee takes note of the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), the Indonesia Trade Union Prosperity (KSBSI) and the Confederation of Indonesian Trade Unions (KSPI) received on 6 September 2021, 1 September 2021, and 31 August 2021 respectively, and the Government's replies thereon.

The Committee notes that several of these observations refer to the impact on the application of the convention of Law No. 11 of 2020 on Job Creation (the so-called "Omnibus Law"). The Committee notes in this regard: (i) the concern expressed by the KSPI that the law exposes certain categories of workers to greater risk of anti-union discrimination; and (ii) the concerns expressed by the ITUC that the "Omnibus law" would restrict the scope of collective bargaining agreements (CBAs), in particular for workers in micro and small enterprises (MSEs). The Committee notes in this respect the Government's indication that the law is in line with Article 4 of the Convention, since the wages in MSEs are determined based on the agreement between the employer and workers, and the regulation of wages in this sector is intended to protect workers' wages considering the potentially low capacity of employers in the sector to remunerate. Noting that the law is undergoing revision as a result of a decision of the Constitutional Court (25 November 2021), the Committee requests the Government to examine the concerns expressed by the trade unions before the National Tripartite Council with a view to ensuring the full conformity of the revised law with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the ongoing revision process and to provide a copy and a translation of the law once adopted.

Article 1 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. The Committee previously requested the Government to provide statistics on the anti-union discrimination complaints received and sought information on whether these complaints were brought before the courts and on any remedies or sanctions imposed. The Committee observes that the Government limits itself to informing that there were six recorded cases of anti-union discrimination between 2019 and 2020 and that it seeks clarifications from the relevant parties of such cases. The Committee notes the indication of the KSBSI denouncing instances of anti-union discrimination and interference in multiple enterprises. The Committee requests the Government to respond to these allegations and to provide statistics on the number of complaints of anti-union discrimination and interference filed, the number of complaints brought before the courts, as well as any remedies and sanctions imposed and the average duration of proceedings under each category.

Article 2. Adequate protection against acts of interference. The Committee previously requested the Government to inform on the developments in reviewing section 122 of the Manpower Act, which allows the presence of employers in a voting procedure of trade unions, to ensure that interference by employers during the procedure is prohibited. The Committee notes with concern that the Government is satisfied with the provision and does not deem it necessary to amend it. The Government informs that the provision is intended to ensure that workers are not pressured during a vote because they are not members of a trade union. The government adds that the provision is useful in enterprises where the majority of the workforce are not union members and that it has not received complaints of interference by employers during voting. Highlighting the need to ensure adequate protection against acts of interference in practice, the Committee expects the Government to amend section 122 of the Manpower Act, so as to prohibit the presence of the employer during voting procedures. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this respect.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. The Committee previously requested the Government to review sections 5, 14 and 24 of Law No. 2 of 2004 or the Industrial Relations Dispute Settlement Act (IRDS Act), to ensure that compulsory arbitration during collective bargaining can only be invoked under exceptional circumstances. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it does not consider the review of the above-mentioned articles a matter of urgency since there was only one instance of a conflict of interest arising with regards to compulsory arbitration. The Committee recalls that compulsory arbitration is only acceptable (i) in essential services in the strict sense of the term; (ii) in the case of disputes in the public service involving public servants engaged in the administration of the State; (iii) when, after protracted and fruitless negotiations, it becomes obvious that the deadlock will not be broken without some initiative by the authorities; or (iv) in the event of an acute crisis (2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 247). It therefore urges the Government to take measures to amend sections 5, 14 and 24 of the IRDS Act, to ensure that the principle of free and voluntary collective bargaining is fully respected.

Recognition of organizations for the purposes of collective bargaining. The Committee previously requested the Government to provide statistics on the number of CBAs concluded at enterprise level and the coverage of workers by such agreements. The Government indicates that as of August 2021, there were 16,194 CBAs concluded across 34 provinces in the country and adds that statistical data collected annually, between 2016 (13,371 agreements) and 2021, has indicated an increase (21.1 per cent) in the number of collective agreements concluded. The Government informs that CBAs concluded post negotiations between the management and trade unions are registered. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing statistics on the number of CBAs specifying the sectors of activity concerned and the number of workers covered.

Collective bargaining at the sectoral level. The Committee previously requested the Government to provide information on the developments concerning the pilot exercise to promote collective bargaining in Bekasi, and its impact on collective bargaining at the sectoral and regional levels. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Directorate General of Industrial Relations and Social Security conducted several capacity building activities labelled "Training of Trainers for skills in negotiating CBAs," targeting unions and employers, aiming to improve negotiation skills and to promote an increase in the number of CBAs. The Government states that the trainers included members of the tripartite groups from across Indonesia and that the trainings have resulted in a 21.1 per cent increase in the number of CBAs concluded between 2016 and 2021. The Government indicates that the regulations enacted would be difficult to apply or implement at the sectoral level since sectoral CBAs only pertain to general matters while specifics are governed by enterprise level CBAs. Therefore, the Government informs that its focus is to promote the creation of CBAs at the enterprise levels in order to prevent disputes in the future. The Committee considers that in practice, the issue is essentially a matter for the parties, who are in the best position to decide the most appropriate bargaining level including, if they so wish, by adopting a mixed system of framework agreements supplemented by local or enterprise level agreements (2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 222). Recalling that collective bargaining should be possible at all levels, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary steps to also promote collective bargaining at the sectoral and regional levels and to provide information in this regard.

Export processing zones (EPZs). The Committee previously requested the Government to examine within the framework of the National Tripartite Council the concerns raised by ITUC, KSBSI and KSPI regarding the alleged denial of the rights under the Convention to workers in EPZs. The Committee notes the Government's indication that there are no specific zones designated as EPZs but instead several zones, labelled differently, that produce export products. The Government states that during the tripartite consultations, it requested and is currently waiting for the information from trade unions regarding the complaints of anti-union discrimination and interference. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that the rights under the Convention are guaranteed for workers in all the zones, equivalent to EPZs, where export products are produced and to continue to inform it of the progress in the above-mentioned tripartite consultations. The Committee further requests the Government to provide information on the number of collective agreements in force in the referred zones, with an indication of the number of workers covered. In this regard, the Committee also requests the Government to provide information, including statistical data, on any trends observed in the coverage of the collective agreements concluded in the referred zones.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1962)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 1 September 2022 concerning matters examined by the Committee in the present comment. It further notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) received on 1 September 2022 concerning the discussions that took place at the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards with respect to the application of the Convention.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 110th Session, May–June 2022)

The Committee notes the discussion which took place in June 2022 in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (the Conference Committee) concerning the application of the Convention by Iraq. The Committee observes that the Conference Committee, after noting with concern that there were significant compliance issues regarding the Convention in law and practice with respect to the protection against anti-union discrimination, the lack of trade union pluralism and the promotion of collective bargaining without interference, urged the Government to: (i) provide information on measures taken or envisaged to encourage and promote voluntary collective bargaining, the number of collective agreements concluded and in force in the country, as well as the sectors concerned and the number of workers covered by these agreements; (ii) prohibit acts of undue interference in the establishment, functioning and administration of trade unions and make provision for appeal procedures, coupled with effective and dissuasive sanctions; (iii) undertake legal and practical measures to ensure protection against anti-union discrimination, including through effective and expeditious access to courts, adequate compensation and the imposition of sufficiently dissuasive sanctions; and (iv) take all appropriate legal and practical measures to ensure that trade union rights can be exercised in normal conditions with respect for basic human rights and in a climate free of violence, pressure, fear and threats of any kind.

The Conference Committee also invited the Government to accept an ILO direct contacts mission and to submit a report to the Committee of Experts by 1 September 2022.

The Committee notes that since the discussions in the Conference Committee the Government requested ILO technical assistance with regard to the reform of the Trade Union Law and with respect to awareness-raising activities among different Government agencies and the Parliament. The Committee notes that the Office submitted the requested technical comments concerning the draft trade union law. The Committee welcomes the indications received from the Government that it stands ready to invite a direct contacts mission to visit Iraq. The Committee understands that the mission has not taken place yet due to the political situation, but that the current tentative agreement with the Office is for the direct contacts mission to visit Iraq during the first quarter of 2023.

Civil liberties. The Committee notes the conclusions of the Conference Committee concerning the need for the Government to take all appropriate legal and practical measures to ensure that trade union rights can be exercised in normal conditions with respect for basic human rights and in a climate free of violence, pressure, fear and threats of any kind. Noting the information provided by the ITUC in this respect, the Committee recalls that the ILO supervisory bodies have unceasingly stressed the interdependence between civil liberties and trade union rights, emphasizing that a truly free and independent trade union movement can only develop in a climate free from violence, pressure and threats of any kind against the leaders and members of such organizations (2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 59–60). The Committee calls upon the Government to take all measures necessary to ensure that trade unions, their leaders, and their members can exercise their rights under the Convention, including collective bargaining, with full respect for their civil liberties.

Trade union monopoly. The Committee previously recalled the need to remove any obstacles to trade union pluralism and had noted with interest the Government's indication that Government Decision No. 8750 of 2005 had been repealed. It had also requested the Government to take the necessary measures to repeal the Trade Union Organization Act No. 52 of 1987. In this respect, the Committee notes the observations from ITUC stressing the negative impact on freedom of association created by section 21 of the referred Trade Unions Act, which provides that the General Federation of Trade Unions is the supreme body for the trade unions. The Committee notes the Government's indication that a process has been initiated to amend this Act and that it submitted a request to the ILO for the provision of comments on the new draft Act. The Committee notes that the draft Act stipulates that "[t]he State shall guarantee the right to form and join trade union organizations by the workers, the employees, and the self-employed in all sectors, without any kind of discrimination" and welcomes the fact that this provision appears to be aimed at addressing the concerns raised repeatedly concerning legislative constraints on trade union plurality. Recalling that the capacity for workers to choose the union representing them is an important element of the principle of free and voluntary collective bargaining, the Committee hopes that any remaining obstacle to the possibility of trade union pluralism will soon be removed from the legislation.

The Committee further notes that article 1(12) of the new draft Trade Union Act defines the most representative trade union organization as "the organization with the most membership" while article 50 stipulates that “the most representative organizations of workers and employees are determined according to rules developed through the tripartite dialogue between the government, workers’ organizations and employer’s organizations”. With regard to the criteria to be applied to determine the representative status of organizations for the purposes of bargaining, the Committee emphasizes the importance of ensuring, in case controversy should arise, that these criteria are objective, preestablished and precise so as to avoid any opportunity for partiality or abuse (2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 228). Observing that article 1(12) solely refers to a numerical criterion, the Committee also recalls that practice shows that criteria used to determine the representativeness of organizations can be broadly divided into quantitative criteria (membership, geographical/sectoral coverage, economic importance of sector or territory) and qualitative criteria (financial/organizational independence, respect for democratic principles, legal status, and influence). For consultations at national level concerning broad social and economic policy issues and in situations of economic and political transition, it may be more important to ensure that all relevant organizations are represented and not just those organizations with the most members, so as to ensure fully informed decision-making and wide support for the process and its outcomes. On the other hand, quantitative criteria may play a more important role when determining which union can engage in enterprise-level bargaining. The Committee invites the Government to take into account the elements mentioned above when engaging with the social partners with a view to establishing the criteria for representativeness of trade unions and employers’ organizations. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this respect.

Scope of the Convention. Public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. The Committee previously requested the Government to ensure that the rights in the Convention were applicable to all public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. It noted that section 3 of the Labour Code stipulates that its provisions do not apply to “public officials appointed in accordance with the Civil Service Law or a special legal text” and “members of the armed forces, the police and the internal security forces”. The Committee also notes the allegations from ITUC that section 10 of the Revolutionary Council Resolution No. 115 of 1987 also prohibits the establishment of public sector unions. The Committee recalls, once again, that the Convention covers all workers and employers, and their respective organizations, in both the private and the public sectors, regardless of whether the service is essential, and that the only exceptions authorized concern the armed forces and the police, as well as public servants engaged in the administration of the State. It also recalls that under Articles 4 and 6 of the Convention, persons who are employed in the public sector but by their functions are not directly engaged in the administration of the State (employees in public enterprises, municipal employees and those in decentralized entities, public sector teachers, transport sector personnel, etc.) should benefit from the guarantees provided for in the Convention. The Committee notes that, while the new draft Act on Trade Unions appears to extend the right to organize to all sectors, its article 3(2)(1), excludes from the scope of application of the draft law the “unions and associations established in accordance with specific legislation”. The Committee therefore requests the Government to ensure that all public servants not engaged in the administration of the State benefit from the rights enshrined in the Convention and to specify through which pieces of legislation such rights are recognized. It also requests the Government to clarify whether Revolutionary Council Resolution No. 115 of 1987 is still in force, and, if so, ensure its contents are in line with the requirements of the Convention.

Article 1 of the Convention. Protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. Sufficiently dissuasive sanctions. The Committee previously noted that section 11(2) of the Labour Code stipulates that whoever violates the sections relating to discrimination shall be punished by imprisonment for a period not exceeding six months and a fine not exceeding one million dinars (approximately US$685) or by any of the two sanctions. It considered that the amount of the fine referred to above may not be adequate to deter and prevent the repetition of acts of anti-union discrimination, in particular in large enterprises. The Committee notes that Article 10 of the new draft Trade Union Act prohibits any form of discrimination against any worker or employee for his/her participation in any union activity and that articles 45–47 protect trade union members, the workers' representatives and their organizations against any violation of the provisions of the law. The Committee welcomes the fact that these draft provisions also introduce substantially more significant penalties for violations of the Act, as compared to those in the Labour Code, including penalties ranging from 5 to 10 million Iraqi dinars (approximately US$3,450 to 6,900), a requirement of reinstatement, and possible imprisonment for not less than one month and not more than six months for certain types of violations. At the same time, the Committee notes that the referred draft provisions only refer to anti-union dismissals and do not mention other acts of anti-union discrimination, including those carried out at the time of hiring and in the course of employment. In light of the ITUC allegations of the continued and widespread occurrence of acts of anti-union discrimination, the Committee also recalls, that sanctions, even when sufficiently high, will not act as a deterrent if not consistently applied by the relevant administrative or judicial authorities. The Committee requests the Government to adjust the relevant provisions of the new draft Trade Union Act to include a clear prohibition of all types of discriminatory measures on the ground of union membership or union activities both at the time of hiring and during employment, including exclusions from the hiring process or promotion, termination of employment, transfers, downgrading and other acts that are prejudicial to the worker. It also requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that (i) the sanctions actually imposed in cases of anti-union discrimination are sufficiently dissuasive; and (ii) relevant law enforcement and judicial authorities are aware of the persistent problems concerning acts of anti-union discrimination in Iraq and understand their role in ensuring enforcement of the relevant legal provisions. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the sanctions imposed in practice.

Anti-union dismissal. The Committee previously noted that section 145 of the Labour Code provides that when the penalty of dismissal has been imposed on a worker, such decision may be challenged within 30 days before the Labour Court. It also noted, however, that the Labour Code does not specify which sanctions are applicable in the event of anti-union dismissal. In this respect, the Committee welcomes the inclusion of sub-section (3) of article 45 in the new draft Trade Union Act, which contains a right of reinstatement for workers who have been dismissed due to their engagement in lawful trade union activities. The Committee requests the Government to ensure that the remedy of reinstatement proposed in the new draft Trade Union Act concerning dismissal as an act of anti-union discrimination will be accompanied by a retroactive compensation that will both act as a dissuasive sanction and ensure appropriate redress.

Rapid appeal procedures. The Committee previously noted that workers may resort to the Labour Court to file a complaint when exposed to any form of discrimination in employment and occupation. In this respect, the Committee notes that sub-section (3) of article 45 in the new draft Trade Union Act includes a time frame of 15 days for reinstatement from the date of the dismissal. While highlighting the importance of establishing swift procedures to resolve anti-union dismissal cases in an effective manner, the Committee invites the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the remedies proposed in the new draft Trade Union Act concerning anti-union dismissal can be effectively applied in practice.

Article 2. Protection against acts of interference. The Committee noted previously that the Labour Code does not contain any provisions which explicitly prohibit acts of interference. In this respect, it welcomes the inclusion of article 44 in the new draft Trade Union Act, which specifically prohibits acts of interference. As noted above concerning sanctions for acts of anti-union discrimination, the Committee considers that sanctions for acts of interference should be effective and sufficiently dissuasive. The Committee requests the Government to ensure that the remedies proposed in the new draft Trade Union Act concerning acts of interference can be effectively and rapidly applied in practice and are sufficiently dissuasive to prevent and sanction acts of interference.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining in law and practice. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government concerning the legislative framework in the Labour Code governing collective bargaining. It also notes, however, the Government's indication that no collective bargaining agreements have yet been concluded in the country. The Committee considers that the absence of collective bargaining agreements in Iraq suggests that serious impediments exist, either in law or practice, for the free and voluntary exercise of the right to collective bargaining. In this respect, highlighting the obligation to promote free and voluntary collective bargaining established by Article 4 of the Convention, the Committee recalls that collective bargaining should not be hampered by the inadequacy or inappropriateness of such rules. It also draws the attention of the Government to the means to facilitate and promote collective bargaining contained in the Collective bargaining Recommendation, 1981, (No. 163) aimed at achieving the general principles set out in Article 4 of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to ensure that its legal framework allows for the free and voluntary exercise of the right to collective bargaining and to take the necessary measures to promote collective bargaining.

Legislative consistency. The Committee has referred several times to provisions in the new draft Trade Unions Act in the present comment, as well as to provisions of the Labour Code which provide lower levels of protection than the draft Trade Union Act. The Committee requests the Government to ensure that any new legislative measures taken in conformity with the requirements of the Convention repeal and replace older legislative and regulatory provisions less favourable to the assertion and promotion of the right to collective bargaining.

The Committee welcomes the Government's request of ILO technical assistance as well as the steps it has taken to bring its legislation into conformity with the Convention. It hopes that the direct contacts mission will be able to take note of tangible progress, both in law and in practice, in the application of the convention. It requests the Government to continue providing information on any progress achieved in the implementation of the different points addressed in the present comment.

Jamaica

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1962)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Jamaica Confederation of Trade Unions (JCTU) and the Jamaica Employers Federation (JEF) transmitted with the Government's report. The Committee also notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 1 September 2022 alleging obstacles to the exercise of trade union rights in the business process outsourcing sector operating in special economic zones (SEZs). The ITUC alleges, in particular, that no trade union representation has been allowed in the more than 70 companies employing 40,000 workers in the sector.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers to establish and join organizations. The Committee had previously requested the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 6(4) of the Trade Union Act (TUA) with a view to ensuring that penalties are not imposed on workers for their membership and participation in activities of an unregistered trade union. The Committee notes the Government's indication that steps are being taken to repeal section 6(4) of the TUA, and notes the JEF's observation strongly supporting the repeal. The Committee also notes the JCTU's observations supporting the possibility of workers to establish and join organizations outside of trade unions, but such organizations should not assume the rights of registered trade unions under the TUA. The Committee regrets the lack of progress and urges the Government to take the necessary measures without further delay, in consultation with the social partners, to amend its legislation. The Committee requests the Government to inform it of developments in this regard.

Article 3. Interference in the financial administration of a trade union. The Committee had previously requested the Government to take the necessary measures to restrict the Registrar's discretionary rights to carry out inspections and request information with regard to trade union finances at any time as provided in section 16(2) of the TUA. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the matter has not yet been reviewed. The Committee further notes the JCTU's observations to the effect that the control exercised by public authorities should not be outside of the reasonable requirements of submitting periodic reports set out in section 16(1) of the TUA. The Committee also notes the JEF's observations regarding the need to reform section 16(2) of the TUA. Noting with regret that the Government has not undertaken any steps in this regard, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures, in consultation with the social partners, to amend section 16(2) of the TUA so as to ensure that the control exercised by the public authorities over trade union finances does not exceed the obligation to submit periodic reports. The Committee requests the Government to inform it of developments in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1962)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Jamaica Confederation of Trade Unions (JCTU) and the Jamaica Employers Federation (JEF) transmitted with the Government's report, which deal with issues examined by the Committee in this observation.

The Committee notes the Government's response regarding the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 1 September 2015, which denounced fixed and unreasonable procedural requirements for, and limitations on, collective bargaining. In this respect, the Committee notes the Government's indication that it: (i) is examining the issues raised and will discuss them with the social partners at the Labour Advisory Council (LAC); and (ii) will provide an update to the Committee on the progress of the discussions. While welcoming the discussions planned with the social partners at the LAC, and taking into consideration that these issues have already been raised by the ITUC on different occasions and that some of them have been examined by the Committee, the Committee requests the Government to provide comprehensive information regarding the outcomes of the discussions and any actions taken in this regard.

Article 4 of the Convention. Promotion of collective bargaining. Recognition of organizations for the purposes of collective bargaining. As expressed in its previous comment, the Committee has for many years, requested the Government to amend section 5(5) of the Labour Relations and Industrial Disputes Act (LRIDA) of 1975 and section 3(1)(d) of its regulations with a view to ensuring that the thresholds required for entering into collective bargaining do not constitute an obstacle to the promotion of free and voluntary collective bargaining. The Committee notes the Government's indication that legislation has not been amended to address the Committee's observations but that the legislation will be reviewed in the 2022–23 fiscal year. The Committee also takes note of the statistics provided by the Government as of August 2021, indicating that 14 collective bargaining agreements are in force and cover a total number of 1,335 workers in the sectors of aviation, banking, catering, energy, food and beverage, financial services, and manufacturing. The Committee considers that the very low coverage of collective agreements in the country could appear to be related to the restrictive requirements to engage in collective bargaining contained in section 5(5) of the LRIDA and section 3(1)(d) of its regulations. Recalling that this issue has been raised since 1990, the Committee deeply regrets the lack of progress and urges the Government to take the necessary measures in the very near future to amend its legislation in order to: (i) ensure that if no union reaches the required threshold to be recognized as a bargaining agent, unions are given the possibility to negotiate, jointly or separately, at least on behalf of their own members; (ii) recognize the right of any organization which in a previous ballot failed to secure a sufficiently large number of votes to request a new election after a stipulated period; and (iii) recognize the right of any new organization other than the previously certified organization to demand a new ballot after a reasonable period has elapsed. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the developments in this regard.

Promotion of collective bargaining in the public sector. The Committee takes note of the observations of the JCTU regarding the adoption of negotiation protocols that have modified the modalities of collective bargaining in Government Ministries, Agencies, Departments and Parastatals. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information on the implications of the new negotiation protocols in the promotion of collective bargaining in the public sector, including the number of collective agreements concluded in this sector and the number of workers covered.

Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee encourages the Government to continue to provide detailed information on the number of collective agreements concluded and in force, the sectors concerned and the number of workers covered by these agreements. Observing that collective bargaining can also take place through Joint Industrial Councils, which can set wages and working conditions applicable to entire industries, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the agreements in force at the multi-employer and sectoral level. The Committee finally requests the Government to report on the measures taken, in accordance with Article 4 of the Convention, to promote collective bargaining at all levels.

The Committee reminds the Government of the possibility to avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office.

Jordan

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1968)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 1 September 2022 concerning matters examined in the present comment, including allegations concerning the persistence of anti-union measures against the Jordanian Teachers Association (JTA). The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

The Committee also notes that the Committee on Freedom of Association drew its attention to the legislative aspects of Case No. 3337 that relate to the Convention (Report No. 397, March 2022, paragraph 478). These matters are discussed below.

Articles 1 to 6 of the Convention. Scope of application of the Convention. Foreign workers. In its previous comments, the Committee had observed that the legal incapacity of foreign workers to establish or hold office in trade unions may constitute an obstacle to the autonomous exercise of their rights recognized by the Convention and had urged the Government to take the necessary measures, including legislative measures, to facilitate the full exercise by foreign workers of the rights recognized by the Convention. The Committee notes that the Government indicates in this regard that: (i) the Labour Code restricts the right to establish trade unions to Jordanians and according to the decision No. 1 of 2020 of the Constitutional Court, the Constitution prevails over international treaties and conventions; (ii) in 2021, 44 collective agreements, and in 2022, 33 collective agreements were concluded that cover, respectively 115,332 and 183,033 Jordanian and non-Jordanian workers. Regarding the hierarchy between the Convention and the Jordanian Labour Code, the Committee notes that the text of the above-mentioned decision of the Constitutional Court emphasizes that domestic law shall not contradict international conventions ratified by the Kingdom, a position which is in line with the fundamental principles of international law. The Committee further notes that pursuant to section 98(f) of the Labour Code, foreign workers do not have the right to establish trade unions; pursuant to article 45 of the unified constitution of the recognized sectoral trade unions of 2020 they cannot be elected to the administrative board and; pursuant to section 7(a) of the Jordanian Teachers' Association Act No. 14 of 2011 (hereafter the JTA Act) they cannot join the JTA, while according to the information communicated by the Government, in 2021 the number of foreign workers in the education sector amounted to 929 persons. Regarding the right of foreign workers to collective bargaining in practice, the Committee notes that, according to the information communicated by the Government, in 2021 foreign workers with a work permit constituted 19.5 per cent of the total workforce. It also notes the Government's indications as to the aggregate number of workers, including foreign workers, covered by CBAs concluded in 2021 and 2022. It notes in this regard that according to the World Bank report Jobs Diagnostic Jordan (2020), non-Jordanians account for almost 36 per cent of total employment. The Jordanian labour market is highly segmented along the lines of nationality, with non-Jordanians disproportionately concentrated in informal and unskilled sectors. In 2016 almost all domestic workers, 70 per cent of agricultural workers and 60 per cent of construction workers were non-Jordanian. According to the 2022 Annual Report of Better Work Jordan (hereafter BWJ Report), foreign workers also make up 75 per cent of workforce in the garment industry. The Committee notes that in practice, with the exception of the garment sector, no significant collective bargaining has taken place in any of the above-mentioned sectors where foreign workers are highly represented. Domestic work and agriculture were not included in the list of sectors covered by the 17 recognized sectoral unions until July 2022 and according to the Jordanian Federation of Independent Trade Unions, in 2008 the Government refused to recognize an independent union of agricultural workers (Committee on Freedom of Association, Case No. 3337, Report No. 393, March 2021, paragraph 518). Regarding the construction sector, the Committee notes that according to the lists of collective agreements since 2015 published on the website of the Ministry of Labour (hereafter MOL), no large-scale collective bargaining has taken place in the sector in the 2015-2022 period, and the few collective agreements that were concluded covered only specific firms with a few hundred workers covered. Regarding the garment sector, the Committee notes that according to BWJ Report, the garment sector 2019 CBA featured the most inclusive process of any CBA to-date, as worker representatives from multiple different nationalities were consulted and key issues facing workers were addressed during negotiations. Nevertheless, this process has delivered a two-tier regulation of employment conditions in which less favourable terms apply to foreign workers. For instance, the minimum wage applicable to foreign workers is lower; furthermore, the unified contract for Jordanians provides for paid maternity leave and restricts the maximum daily overtime work, while the agreement covering foreign workers does not contain such provisions. In view of the foregoing, the Committee is bound to note that in practice, only in one of the sectors where foreign workers make up most of the workforce, their conditions of work are regulated by collective agreements. Therefore, the Committee notes with concern that the legal restrictions to the freedom of association of foreign workers, in addition to the dominant union monopoly, have strongly contributed to a situation where, in many sectors, they have no access to collective bargaining, while in some others, their bargaining power is being significantly constrained in practice. The Committee notes that, in view of the foreign workers' large share in the workforce, this issue significantly affects the exercise of freedom of association and the right to collective bargaining in the whole Jordanian economy. In view of the above, the Committee urges the Government to: (i) repeal sections 98(f)1 of the Labour Code and 7(a) of the JTA Act; and (ii) pending legislative reform, take all the necessary measures to promote collective bargaining in the sectors where foreign workers make up most of the workforce and encourage the existing unions to adopt an inclusive approach in which foreign workers' representatives participate in the process of collective bargaining and their demands and concerns are effectively taken into account. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the legislative and promotional measures taken in this respect, as well as information on changes in the scope and terms of agreements as they relate to foreign workers.

Agricultural and domestic workers. The Government indicates that the Regulation on agricultural workers was adopted by the House of Representatives on 14 March 2021, following a process that involved consultation with representatives of workers and employers and civil society organizations. The Committee notes that the Regulation contains rules on various aspects of agricultural work and applies to all workers including non-Jordanians. It notes with interest that section 16 of the Regulation refers to the Labour Code all aspects of labour relations that are not covered by the regulation, including the right of agricultural workers to freedom of association and collective bargaining. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that Decision No. 2022/45 of the Minister of Labour dated 18 July 2022, amending the Decision concerning the categories of industries and economic activities in which workers are allowed to establish unions, included agricultural workers in the professions that can join the union of food industries, which is henceforth called the General Union of Water, Agriculture and Food Industries Workers.

Regarding domestic workers, the Government confirms that section 3(b) of the Labour Code excludes them from the scope of the Code, and that their rights and obligations are set out in Regulation No. 90 of 2009, amended by Regulation No. 64 of 2020. However, the Committee notes with concern the Government's indication that as the Regulation does not contain a clause referring to the provisions of the Labour Code on matters not covered by it, domestic workers remain excluded from the provisions concerning freedom of association and collective bargaining. Nevertheless, the Government indicates that the above-mentioned Decision No. 2022/45 of the MOL has added domestic workers to the professional categories covered by the Union of General Services and Free Professions, which enables them to join this union. The Government adds that there are no statistical data available as to the number of domestic workers who joined this union. It finally indicates that the owners of agencies for the recruitment and employment of non-Jordanian domestic workers have established an association. The Committee notes that the ITUC confirms in its observations the inclusion of agricultural and domestic workers in the food and services sectors by ministerial decision. The Committee notes that the Ministerial decision No. 2022/45 has enabled agricultural and domestic workers to join the designated sectoral trade unions, which only allows these workers to exercise their right to organize and collectively bargain in the very restrictive framework of the existing system of trade union monopoly, from which they were previously excluded. In view of the above, and while taking due note of the first step taken through the Ministerial decision No. 2022/45, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to: (i) revise the Labour code or the Regulation on domestic work with a view to expressly recognising the right of domestic workers to organize and bargain collectively; (ii) encourage and promote collective bargaining in agriculture and domestic work sectors, and; (iii) provide information on any collective agreements concluded in these two sectors, and the number of workers covered by them. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken.

Workers aged between 16 and 18 years. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that minors between 16 and 18 years of age have access to employment but are prohibited from joining trade unions and had requested the Government to revise the law so that these persons can enjoy their rights under the Convention. The Government indicates in this regard that the purpose of subjecting the right to establish and join unions to the attainment of age of 18, is to protect the workers' will and that amending section 98(f) would go against Jordanian civil law provisions concerning the age of majority and the capacity to exercise civil rights. The Government further indicates that the MOL has consulted the Jordanian Chamber of Commerce on this matter, which has expressed its agreement with the current age limit. The Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to amend sections 98(e)2 and 98(f) of the Labour Code, so as to ensure that minors who have reached the legal age for admission to employment, whether as workers or trainees, are fully protected in the exercise of their rights under the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged in this respect.

Education sector workers. In its previous comment, the Committee had urged the Government to guarantee the right to organize and bargain collectively in the education sector; to ensure full respect of the independence of workers' organizations in the sector; and to provide information on the outcome of court proceedings involving the JTA and on any collective agreement or accord in the education sector, including with the JTA. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that the JTA was established through the enactment of a special law, the JTA Act and that it is not subject to the provisions of the Labour Code, and the MOL plays no part in the disputes related to it. The Committee also notes that the JTA Act does not contain any provision concerning collective bargaining or resolution of collective labour disputes. It further notes that the Government indicates that the General Union of Workers in Private Education (hereafter GUWPE) last concluded a collective agreement with the Organization of private school owners in 2019; but it does not refer to any collective agreement concluded by the JTA. However, the Committee notes that GUWPE covers only the private education sector, while the membership of JTA includes mainly public sector teachers. In view of the foregoing, and the absence of a regulatory framework for collective bargaining covering the JTA, the Committee is bound to note that despite the existence of a union they can join, public sector teachers, and those private sector teachers who choose affiliation to JTA, do not appear to enjoy the right to collective bargaining in law or in practice.

Regarding the proceedings involving the JTA, the Committee notes the observation of the ITUC reporting that the Amman Court of Appeal reversed the administrative decision to dissolve JTA, nevertheless, the organization was still impeded from operating and representing teachers in the country, as none of its board members were able to resume their trade union activities. It also notes the Government's indication that the JTA executive board was once dissolved by a judicial decision and currently, a case is pending before the Court of Cassation. The Government also refers to a pending penal case concerning JTA, involving charges of incitement to hatred, disturbing the order at an educational institution, and instigating an unlawful assembly. However, the Government does not indicate who is prosecuted in this case and which concrete acts led to the charges. It also notes the ITUC's observation, reporting that on 5 October 2021, the Jordanian security forces arrested and detained fourteen leading members of the JTA, who were peacefully demonstrating on the World Teachers' Day, denouncing the crackdown on trade union rights. In this regard, the committee emphasizes that arrest, detention and criminal prosecution of trade union members and leaders for trade union activities is a denial of freedom of association and consequently, of the right to collective bargaining; and that the State must guarantee a climate free from violence, pressure, and threats of any kind against the leaders and members of trade union organizations. It emphasizes that it is incumbent on the competent authorities to ensure that the measures taken against trade union members and officials were not occasioned by their trade union activity. In view of the above considerations and recalling that the Convention covers all teachers in both private and public sectors, the Committee urges the Government to take all the necessary measures, including legislative measures, to ensure that the right to collective bargaining of the JTA and all workers in the public and private education sector is explicitly recognized in law and effectively respected in practice. The Committee further requests the Government to provide information on the identity and trade union office of the prosecuted JTA members and the concrete acts that have entailed the charges against them, with a view to ensuring that their prosecution is not occasioned by their trade union activities. It also requests the Government to provide information on the outcome of all court proceedings involving the JTA.

Workers not included in the 17 sectors recognized by the Government. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that the number of sectors in which trade unions can be established is set at 17 and had urged the Government to ensure that no category of workers other than the exceptions in the Convention can be excluded from the exercise of the right to organize and bargain collectively. The Government indicates that the Ministry of Labour initiated the process of amendment of the previous Decision on classification of industries and economic activities in which establishment of unions is authorized following a decision of the Labour Relations Tripartite Committee defined in section 43 of the Labour Code, and the Minister issued decision 2022/45 dated 18 July 2022 pursuant to the recommendation of the Registrar of trade unions. The Committee notes the copy of the Ministerial Decision No. 2022/45 which contains the complete updated list of the industries and economic activities included under each of the 17 sectors of activity assigned to the recognized sectoral unions. The Committee also notes the statistics provided on the number of Jordanian and non-Jordanian workers disaggregated by economic sector, which do not however correspond to the classification of sectors in Decision 2022/45. The Committee notes that the most remarkable change brought by the new classification is the addition of agriculture and domestic work under food industries and services sectors/unions. With the information at its disposal, the Committee is not in the position to evaluate to what extent Decision 2022/45 covers the whole Jordanian economy or which sectors and economic activities may be left out. However, it notes that the principle embodied in section 98(d) of the Jordanian Labour Code, which provides for the existence of a closed list of industries and economic activities in which trade unions can be established, is incompatible with the principles set out in the Convention concerning the workers covered. It notes that until July 2022, the classification had excluded such large sectors as agriculture and domestic work, and that in view of the evolving nature of the economy and the continuous coming into existence of new activities, a closed list will inevitably have the effect of excluding entire categories of workers from the right to establish and join organizations and, therefore, from exercising the right to collective bargaining. Recalling that the Convention covers all workers, with the only possible exceptions of the armed forces, the police and the public servants engaged in the administration of the state, the Committee urges the Government to repeal section 98(d) of the Labour Code and to take the necessary measures to ensure that workers in all sectors of the economy can exercise their right to organize and freely bargain collectively through the organization of their choosing. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this respect.

Article 2. Adequate protection against acts of interference. In its previous comment, the Committee had requested the Government to provide information on any progress on the adoption of the amendment to section 139 of the Labour Code and the penalties for interference by employers provided in the amended law. The Government indicates that the bill amending the Labour Code is presently before the House of Representatives and that in the amended section 139, the highest fines imposed on employers in case of breach of labour law have increased from JD100 to JD1,000, which amounts to US$1,400. Recalling that the sanctions against acts of interference must be effective and sufficiently deterrent, the Committee notes that a fine of maximum JD1,000, which can neither be adjusted with inflation nor adapted on the basis of the size of the enterprise may not be sufficiently deterrent in the long term and in cases in which the interfering employer disposes of considerable financial resources. The Committee therefore requests the Government to revise the draft submitted to the parliament with a view to effectively strengthen the penalties for interference, so as to ensure that they are sufficiently dissuasive. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this respect.

Articles 4 and 6. Right to collective bargaining. Trade union monopoly. In its previous comment, the Committee had recalled that the imposition of a trade union monopoly is incompatible with the principle of free and voluntary negotiation and had urged the Government to ensure that more than one trade union can be established in a sector and to permit the effective exercise of the free and voluntary negotiation. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the situation of trade union monopoly and the refusal to register independent trade unions is based on sections 98(d) and 102(c) of the Labour Code as well as on the Decision on classification of industries and economic activities in which establishment of unions is authorized. The Government further indicates that, the refusal of the Registrar of Trade Unions and Employers' Associations to register any new trade union with the same aims and purposes as an existing trade union is to avoid rendering the sector vulnerable to fragmentation and conflict of interest. In the view of the Government, Jordanian law does not go against freedom to establish trade unions but regulates it in a way that is compatible with the provisions of the Jordanian Constitution and the United Nations Covenants on civil and political rights and economic, social and cultural rights. The Committee recalls in this regard that its function is to examine whether the requirements of Convention No. 98, ratified by the Kingdom of Jordan, are met in law and in practice; and in carrying out this work, it is guided by the standards laid down in the Convention alone. The Committee notes that according to the observations of the ITUC, no new trade union has been established since 1976. Furthermore, decision 2022/45 does not allow the establishment of any new union, but only recomposes the sectors covered by pre-established unions, by adding to them several previously excluded activities (notably, agriculture and domestic work) or by shifting an activity from the competence of one sectoral union to another.

In view of the above, recalling that the right of workers to free and voluntary collective bargaining should include the right to be represented in collective bargaining by the organization of their choice, the Committee urges the Government to take all the necessary measures to remove obstacles to trade union pluralism in law and in practice, including by repealing section 98(d) of the Labour Code and the Decision on the classification of industries and economic activities where trade unions may be established (Ministerial Decision No. 2022/45) so as to ensure that all workers can fully exercise their right to free and voluntary collective bargaining.

Collective bargaining in the public sector. In its previous comment, the Committee had trusted that the Government measures would contribute positively to the adoption of legislation or regulations explicitly recognizing the right to collective bargaining in the public sector. In this regard, the Committee notes the ITUC observation that the law still prohibits public sector workers from exercising the right to collective bargaining. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect. The Committee notes on the other hand the Government's indication that the Labour Code (section 3) excludes public employees from its scope. Nevertheless, the Government emphasizes that all Jordanian workers, whether they work in public or private sector, have a constitutional right to organize within legal limits. The Government has also transmitted a ruling of the Constitutional Court (interpretative opinion No. 6 of 2013), stating that public sector employees including civil servants have the right to establish unions within the framework of the law, to be set by the constitutionally competent authorities, namely the Council of Ministers and the King. The Committee notes that the Constitutional Court has referred to ILO Conventions Nos 87, 98 and 151 as the international legal foundations of the right to organize in public sector and has stated that on the basis of these instruments, the establishment of an "organization of public employees" that would benefit from all the necessary facilities can be envisaged whose purpose would be to define and defend the interests of the workers in the sector. The Committee had noted in its previous comment that the Civil Service Regulation No. 9 of 2020 does not contain a framework for collective bargaining, and the Government does not indicate any legislative novelty in this regard. In view of the above, the Committee notes that in Jordan, the exercise of the right to collective bargaining in the public sector is still not possible in the absence of a legal framework that would expressly recognize this right and regulate its exercise. Considering that according to the information submitted by the Government, in 2021, public sector employees constituted 38.8 per cent of employed Jordanian nationals, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures, for example, by revising the Civil Service Regulation No. 9 of 2020, or by extending the scope of the Labour Code, to ensure that all public sector workers not engaged in the administration of the State have an effective framework in which they may engage in collective negotiations over their working and employment conditions through the trade union of their choice. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the steps taken in this regard. It further requests the Government to provide information on any existing public service trade unions besides the JTA and the regulatory texts governing their establishment and functioning.

Workers' Representatives Convention, 1971 (No. 135) (ratification: 1979)

Previous comment

Article 2 of the Convention. Facilities for workers' representatives in the undertaking. In its previous comment, the Committee had noted that pursuant to section 107 of the Labour Code, the Tripartite Committee for Labour Affairs (TCLA) is the competent body for setting down the necessary conditions enabling trade union representatives to carry out their duties and had requested the Government to provide information on the content and outcome of the consultations held by the TCLA on this matter. The Government indicates in this regard that the Ministry of Labour nominated a committee made of representatives of the General Federation of Trade Unions, and the Jordanian Chambers of Industry and Commerce with the task of defining the principles and criteria governing the granting of time off for union activities. On 9 April 2017, this committee issued a set of recommendations to be submitted to the TCLA for decision on this matter. The TCLA has held regular meetings since then, however, the proposed principles and criteria have not yet been submitted to it for consideration and approval. The Committee notes with concern that the government does not report any progress in the application of Article 2 of the Convention in law and in practice. It once again recalls in this regard that the Workers' Representatives Recommendation, 1971 (No. 143), lists examples of facilities to be afforded to workers' representatives, which include time off from work to attend trade union meetings, congresses, etc.; access to all workplaces in the undertaking, where necessary; access to the management of the undertaking, as may be necessary; distribution to workers of publications and other written documents of the union; access to such material facilities and information as may be necessary to carry out their duties. The Committee firmly hopes that the proposed principles and criteria on granting time off for union activities will be submitted to the TCLA soon and requests the Government to take all the necessary measures to ensure that an adequate regulatory framework, guaranteeing that workers' representatives are granted all the facilities enabling them to carry out their functions promptly and efficiently is submitted to tripartite consultation and approval. It requests the Government to continue providing information on any developments in this regard.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 2000)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), of the Sectoral Trade Union of Workers in the Fuel and Energy Complex (Sectoral Trade Union of TEK Workers), and of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received respectively on 25 August, 30 August and 1 September 2022, referring to the issues raised by the Committee below.

The Committee notes the report of the Direct Contacts Mission (DCM) which visited the country in May 2022 following a request to that effect made by the Committee on the Application of Standards (the Conference Committee) at its 109th Session (June 2021).

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 110th Session, May–June 2022)

The Committee notes the discussion that took place in the Conference Committee in June 2022 concerning the application of the Convention. The Committee observes that the Conference Committee urged the Government, in consultation with the social partners, to: (i) ensure that the allegations of violence against trade union members are thoroughly investigated, notably in the case of Mr Senyavsky; (ii) allow an independent investigation of the Zhanaozen events of 2011; (iii) stop practices of judicial harassment of trade union leaders and members conducting lawful trade union activities and drop all unjustified charges, including the ban preventing trade unionists from holding any position in a public or non-governmental organization; (iv) resolve the issue of registration of KSPRK and the Industrial Union of Employees of the Fuel and Energy Sector, so as to allow them to enjoy the full autonomy and independence of a free and independent workers' organization, to fulfil their mandate and to represent their constituents without further delay; (v) engage with the free and independent employers' and workers' organizations to review issues concerning their registration in law and practice with a view to overcoming existing obstacles; (vi) review the composition of the permanent working group that assesses areas of concern involving the registration of trade unions, so as to ensure the full involvement of independent workers' and employers' organizations in this working group; (vii) refrain from showing preference towards a particular trade union and stop the interference in the establishment and functioning of trade union organizations; (viii) remove any existing obstacles in law and practice to the operation of free and independent employers' organizations in the country; (ix) remove any existing obstacles in law and practice to the operation of free and independent employers' and workers' organizations in the country, in particular repeal provisions in the Law on the National Chamber of Entrepreneurs (NCE) on accreditation of employers' organizations with the NCE; (x) ensure that workers' and employers' organizations are not prevented from receiving financial or other assistance by international workers' and employers' organizations, and extend the list in Ordinance No. 177 of 9 April 2018 to cover international workers' and employers' organizations, such as the ITUC and IOE; and (xi) fully implement the 2018 road map. The Conference Committee requested the Government to develop, in consultation with the social partners, a time-bound action plan in order to implement all these conclusions. In order to elaborate, implement and evaluate this action plan, it urged the Government to avail itself of technical assistance from the Office on an ongoing basis in this regard.

The Committee welcomes the Plan of Action elaborated with the participation of the social partners pursuant to the request made by the Conference Committee. The Committee expects that all measures to give effect to the recommendations of the ILO supervisory bodies, as outlined below, will be taken within the indicated time frames.

The Committee recalls that, while Mr Baltabay and Ms Kharkova, former trade union leaders, have served their respective sentences (after they have been found guilty of the alleged misappropriation of funds), they remained prevented from holding a trade union office. The Committee notes the Government's indication that this restriction expires, with regard to Ms Kharkova, in November 2022, and in case of Mr Baltabay, in 2026. The Committee further notes that the DCM had discussed with the Human Right Commissioner the possibility that courts might impose an additional punishment in the form of a ban on holding a public office (including trade union leadership posts) or a prohibition to engage in "public activities" provided for by the Criminal Code. The Commissioner considered that this would appear to be in violation of basic civil liberties and human rights. The Prosecutor General's Office (PGO) explained to the DCM that the relevant sections of the Criminal Code leave it to the appreciation of the courts as to whether such an additional penalty should be imposed, the time period and conditions. The legislation did not outline any precise criteria in this respect. The PGO pointed out that the Ministry of Labour and Social Protection of the Population (MLSPP) could submit to it a legislative initiative aimed at amending the relevant sections of the Criminal Code. The Committee notes that according to the above-mentioned Plan of Action, the responsible State bodies are to submit to the PGO working group their suggestions for the amendment of the criminal legislation before the end of 2022. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all developments in this regard.

The Committee recalls that it had previously noted that no progress has been made in investigating the assault on Mr Senyavsky, a former trade union leader, and urged the Government to investigate the matter without delay and to bring the perpetrators to justice. The Government reiterates that while the investigation has been suspended for lack of evidence, if new circumstances come to light, Mr Senyavsky will be informed. The Committee further notes that the Plan of Action provides for steps to be taken with a view to finding the perpetrators before the end of 2022. The Committee urges the Government to intensify its efforts in investigating the incident with a view to bringing to justice those responsible for the assault, and to report on all developments in this regard.

The Committee notes the ITUC allegation that judicial harassment of trade union leaders continues in the country; the ITUC refers in this respect to the arrest and administrative detention in October and December 2021 of two trade union leaders, Mr Zhenis Orynaliev and Ms Saule Seidakhmetova, in connection with their participation in a strike action. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments thereon.

The Committee notes the Government's detailed reply to the Conference Committee's request to allow an independent investigation of the Zhanaozen events of 2011. The Committee understands from the information contained in the Government's report that the circumstances of those 2011 events, which the Government refers to as riots, have been investigated and that various outside observers agreed on the transparency of both pre-trial procedures and trial processes. The Government indicates that criminal proceedings against 11 defendants who had called for mass unrest were discontinued at the preliminary investigation stage due to an amnesty, and that among those organizers of riots brought to trial, 13 received prison sentences, 16 received suspended sentences, three were acquitted and five were released following amnesty. The Government further indicates that following inquiries into 16 complaints of unlawful methods of investigation, a decision was taken not to initiate any criminal proceedings. The Committee observes with concern that the Government does not reply to the statements made by several speakers during the discussions at the Conference Committee alleging the deaths of 17 strikers and injuries to more than 100 others following the extremely violent repression of strike action in Zhanaozen. The speakers, as well as the ITUC in its latest observations, alleged that the violence ended a seven-month long peaceful strike involving more than 3,000 workers demanding a wage increase. The Committee points out that it is against this background that the Conference Committee urged the Government to allow an independent investigation to take place. This Committee considers that the maintenance of a climate of impunity for the perpetrators of such violence is extremely harmful and constitutes a major obstacle to the free exercise of freedom of association in the country. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take all necessary steps, in consultation with the social partners, to establish an independent investigation into the 2011 events in Zhanaozen, with a view to elucidating all facts and determining responsibilities so that healing and reconciliation can begin to take place. The Committee requests the Government to inform it of all measures taken in this regard.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right to establish organizations without previous authorization. The Committee had previously requested the Government to take all necessary steps to resolve the issue of registration of the Congress of Free Trade Unions (KSPRK) and of the affiliate organizations of the Sectoral Trade Union of TEK Workers, so as to allow them to enjoy the full autonomy and independence of a free and independent workers' organization, to fulfil their mandate and to represent their constituents without further delay. The Committee further requested the Government to continue engaging with the social partners to review the difficulties identified by trade unions seeking registration with a view to finding appropriate measures, including legislative, to give full effect to Article 2 of the Convention and to ensure the right of workers to establish organizations without previous authorization. The Committee notes the Government's indication that to date (and since November 2019), no application for state registration has been submitted by the KSPRK. In this respect, the Committee notes from the DCM report that, with the exception of the Sectoral Trade Union of TEK Workers, there is no other union that the KSPRK could immediately affiliate to be granted registration at the republican level. In this connection, the Committee notes the Government's indication that applications for the registration of the affiliates of the Sectoral Trade Union of TEK Workers in Atyrau and Almaty were turned down on five and two occasions, respectively, and that the shortcomings have been explained to the unions concerned. The Government indicates that once these are addressed, the unions can re-apply for registration.

The Committee notes that the DCM raised the issue of registration of trade unions in the oil sector in all its meetings with State bodies. While the Commissioner for Human Rights alluded to the fact that the oil sector was of national security importance, other responsible Ministries, as well as the Deputy Prime Minister, indicated that the only reason for the denial of registration was failure to respect legislative requirements set out for the registration of trade unions, despite the explanations provided during a workshop organized in March 2021 to assist the union in understanding the procedures. The DCM noted, however, that the requests for registration of these trade unions were systematically refused on the basis of technicalities, which could have been easily remedied on the spot at the registration office instead of a refusal followed by another one-month long application process, and further noted that with each refusal the registering authority referred to a wholly new inconsistency with the legislation, i.e. one to which it did not refer to in its previous motivated refusal. The impossibility to register the two trade union structures precludes the Sectoral Trade Union of TEK Workers from confirming its status. The Committee notes the Government's indication that under the Plan of Action, the composition of the working group set up to consider problems encountered in the registration procedure will be reviewed. Expressing deep concern at this course of events, the Committee urges the Government to take additional steps to resolve the issue of registration of the affiliates of the Sectoral Trade Union of TEK Workers so as to allow them to enjoy the full autonomy and independence of a free and independent workers' organization, to fulfil their mandate and to represent their constituents without further delay. The Committee requests the Government to inform it of all developments in this regard.

Further in this connection, the Committee notes from the DCM report that with the recent decision to establish additional regions in the country, a requirement to have affiliated organizations and/or structures in over 50 per cent of the regions/cities of regional importance/capital, as currently provided for the establishment of a sectoral trade union, appeared to be too high and needed to be reduced, in particular, when a sector or industry covers only a few regions, such as oil sector, for example. The Committee notes that according to the Sectoral Trade Union of TEK Workers, in the new circumstances, it will be more difficult, if not impossible, for it to confirm its sectoral status. The Committee notes that the national Commissioner for Human Rights considered that the Law on Trade Unions should be amended in this regard so as to represent the reality of certain sectors. The Committee requests the Government to amend the Law on Trade Unions accordingly so as to ensure that the establishment of sectoral trade unions is not impeded. The Committee requests the Government to inform it of all measures taken in this respect.

The Committee further notes from the DCM report a proposal to amend the national legislation in order to simplify registration by replacing it with a notification procedure for trade unions wishing to acquire a legal personality or allowing trade unions to function without registering and thus without obtaining legal personality. The draft amendments were to be developed by the end of 2022 for adoption in the first quarter of 2023. Welcoming this information, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on developments in this regard, including a copy of the amendments once adopted.

Following up on conclusions of the 2021 Committee on the Application of Standards, this Committee had previously encouraged the Government to continue reviewing the application of the Law on the National Chamber of Entrepreneurs (NCE) in practice to ensure that its provisions on accreditation of employers' organizations with the NCE did not hinder the exercise of the right of employers' organizations to organize their administration and activities and to formulate their programmes. The Committee notes from the DCM report that the role of employers' organizations was not always understood by all State actors and needed to be clarified with a view to ensuring that participation in social dialogue, and in particular in collective bargaining, was a prerogative of employers' organizations. The DCM further noted that the accreditation system was voluntary; that the Confederation of Employers was not accredited with the NCE; and that the former did not consider that the accreditation or the lack thereof restricted its rights. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the idea of a separate law on employers' organizations is being considered as a means of improving social partnership and dialogue and enforcing employers' organizations' rights under the Convention. The Committee welcomes this information and requests the Government to report on all developments in this regard.

Article 3. Right of organizations to organize their activities and to formulate their programmes. The Committee recalls that it had previously requested the Government to amend section 402 of the Criminal Code (2016), according to which an incitement to continue a strike declared illegal by the court was punishable by arrest for the duration of up to 50 days and in certain cases (substantial damage to rights and interest of citizens, mass riots, etc.) up to two years of imprisonment. In the absence of any further specific information in this regard, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on all steps taken or envisaged in order to review section 402 of the Criminal Code so as to ensure that simply calling for a strike action, even one declared illegal by the courts, does not result in detention or imprisonment.

Article 5. Right of organizations to receive financial assistance from international organizations of workers and employers. The Committee had previously noted the Government's reference to its Ordinance No. 177 of 9 April 2018 "On the adoption of a list of international and state organizations, foreign and Kazakhstani non-governmental organizations and funds which can provide grants", which determined 98 international organizations allowed to provide grants to physical and legal persons in Kazakhstan. The Committee trusted that the list contained in the Ordinance would be amended to include international workers' and employers' organizations. The Committee notes that as per the Plan of Action, this issue is to be examined before the end of 2022. The Committee expects that necessary measures will be taken without delay to ensure that workers' and employers' organizations are not prevented from receiving financial or other assistance from international workers' and employers' organizations. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all developments in this regard.

Lebanon

The Committee notes with concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee notes the observations of the General Confederation of Lebanese Workers (CGTL), communicated with the Government's report. The Committee observes that the Government has not replied to the observations made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in 2010, alleging that the law imposes a high threshold on representative organizations for engaging in collective bargaining, as well as imposing the requirement of obtaining the agreement of two-thirds of the union membership at a general meeting to validate a collective agreement. The Committee once again requests the Government to send its comments concerning the observations made in 2010 by the ITUC.

With regard to the observations submitted by Education International (EI) in 2015 and 2016 concerning the situation of public and private educational staff and the wage freeze since 1996, the Committee notes that: (i) through the adoption of Decree No. 63 in 2008, teachers in the public and private sectors have had a wage increase; (ii) in 2013, following a wage increase in the private sector, public sector employees, including teachers, were granted an advance on their salary; and (iii) Act No. 26, published in the Official Gazette of 21 August 2017, also provides for a wage increase for teachers in the public and private sectors. The Committee requests the Government to indicate whether these wage increases are the result of collective bargaining.

Scope of application of the Convention. Domestic workers. In its previous comments, the Committee observed that the Government had not replied to the observations made by the ITUC concerning the exclusion of domestic workers from the Labour Code. The Committee observes that “domestic workers who work for private households” are excluded from the scope of application of the Labour Code of 1946 (section 7(1)), and that the contractual relationships between domestic workers and the individuals who employ them to perform domestic work in their households are governed by the Act on obligations and contracts. Moreover, the Committee notes that, in its concluding observations of 2018, the United Nations Human Rights Committee expressed concern that migrant domestic workers are excluded from protection under domestic labour law and are subjected to abuse and exploitation under the sponsorship (kafala) system. It also expressed concern about the lack of effective remedies against such abuses and the existence of anti-union reprisals (CCPR/C/LBN/CO/3). The Committee requests the Government to provide clarification in this respect, by indicating the manner in which domestic workers and migrant domestic workers can enjoy the protection of the Convention, including the right to engage in collective bargaining through the organization of their own choosing, and to indicate whether consideration is being given to amending the above-mentioned provision of the Labour Code. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate how these rights are exercised in practice, by indicating the names of any organizations that represent domestic workers and migrant domestic workers and the number of collective agreements covering them.

Legislative amendments

Articles 4 and 6 of the Convention. Promotion of collective bargaining. The Committee recalls that, in the comments that it has been repeating for many years, it has been emphasizing the need to revise a number of provisions of the Labour Code in force and to reword certain provisions on collective bargaining in the draft Labour Code communicated by the Government in 2004.

Excessive restrictions on the right to collective bargaining. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that section 3 of Decree No. 17386/64 required trade unions to obtain the support of at least 60 per cent of the Lebanese employees concerned in order for a collective agreement negotiation to be considered valid, and considered this threshold to be excessive. The Committee also noted that section 180 of the draft Labour Code provided for the reduction of the threshold to 50 per cent and reminded the Government that such a solution could nevertheless pose problems of compatibility with the Convention, as it would prevent a representative union without an absolute majority from being able to engage in bargaining. It therefore asked the Government to ensure that if no union represents the required percentage of workers to be declared the exclusive bargaining agent, collective bargaining rights are granted to all the unions in the unit, at least on behalf of their own members.

Right to collective bargaining in the public sector and the public service. In its previous comments, the Committee asked the Government to amend its legislation so that public sector workers not engaged in the administration of the State, governed by Decree No. 5883 of 1994, are able to enjoy the right to collective bargaining. In this regard, the Committee noted that section 131 of the draft Labour Code established that workers in the public administration, municipalities and public enterprises responsible for administering public services on behalf of the State or on their own account would have to right to engage in collective bargaining.

Compulsory arbitration. For many years, the Committee has been asking the Government to take measures so that recourse to arbitration in the three public sector enterprises governed by Decree No. 2952 of 20 October 1965 is only at the request of both parties. The Committee also requested the amendment of section 224 of the draft Labour Code, which provides that, should mediation fail, any dispute in the case of the three public sector enterprises governed by Decree No. 2952 will be settled by an arbitration board. The Committee notes with regret the Government’s indication that Decree No. 2952 has been replaced by Decree

No. 13896 of 3 January 2005, and that now all investment enterprises in the private and public sectors which are responsible for managing public services on behalf of the State or on their own account must resort to compulsory arbitration should negotiations fail. The Committee recalls that compulsory arbitration is generally not compatible with the promotion of free and voluntary collective bargaining required by Article 4 of the Convention and therefore that compulsory arbitration in the context of collective bargaining is only acceptable in relation to public servants engaged in the administration of the State (Article 6 of the Convention), essential services in the strict sense of the term (services the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population) and in the event of an acute national crisis. Noting with regret that the Government has been merely indicating, for over a decade, that the draft Labour Code is under examination and that due account will be taken of the Committee's comments, and that the Labour Code in force continues to contain provisions that are not compatible with the Convention, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary legislative measures to amend the Labour Code in force so as to guarantee the collective bargaining rights of workers, including domestic workers. The Committee reminds the Government that it may avail itself of technical assistance from the Office in this regard.

Collective bargaining in practice. The Committee requests the Government to provide statistics on the number of collective agreements concluded and in force and to indicate the sectors and number of workers covered.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Liberia

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1962)

Previous comment

The Committee takes note of the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 1 September 2022, referring to issues addressed by the Committee below. It also takes note of the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) received on 25 August 2022, which reiterate the comments made in the discussion that took place in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (hereinafter the Conference Committee) in June 2022 on the application of the Convention by Liberia.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 110th Session, May–June 2022)

The Committee notes the discussion that took place in the Conference Committee in June 2022 concerning the application of the Convention. The Committee notes that the Conference Committee urged the Government to: (i) ensure that all workers are able to exercise their labour rights under the Convention in an environment of respect for civil liberties, including freedom of association, freedom of expression, peaceful assembly and protest without interference and fear for their personal safety and bodily integrity; (ii) ensure that trade union leaders and members are not jailed for engaging in trade union activities and that threats against trade union leaders for their activities are fully investigated and the perpetrators duly punished; (iii) enact measures, including dissuasive sanctions, to ensure that trade unions can only be dissolved by a judicial authority, only as a last resort for serious violations of law; (iv) resolve the registration of the National Health Workers' Union of Liberia (NAHWUL) as a trade union organization without further delay and provide additional information on any pending allegations; (v) review the Decent Work Act and any other related legislation to ensure that all workers, including foreign workers, are able to exercise the right to form or join a trade union of their choice; and (vi) ensure that public sector workers enjoy the protection of the freedom of association rights under the Convention. The Conference Committee invited the Government to avail itself of technical assistance from the Office.

The Committee had previously requested the Government to provide its comments on the observations made by the African Regional Organization of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC – Africa) denouncing the dissolution of a trade union by a state-owned company; the use of police force to break up peaceful strikes; and the arrest of union leaders and wrongful dismissal of workers for their participation in strike actions. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it cannot validate those observations, as the Ministry of Labour has not received a complaint from any individual or institution. The Government indicates it will provide its comments once institutional or individual complaints reach the Ministry. The Committee recalls that it is the responsibility of the Government to ensure the application of the Convention which it has ratified and in this respect, emphasizes the importance for the Government to investigate the allegations of violations of trade unions rights, including those brought by international organizations of workers to the Committee, with the view to providing the Committee with a full and accurate reply. The Committee urges the Government to conduct an independent investigation into the ITUC allegations without further delay and to provide information on the outcome.

The Committee had also previously requested the Government to provide information on the allegations raised by the NAHWUL concerning the Government's failure to grant it legal recognition, as well as infringements of the right to strike. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it is currently working with the relevant stakeholders to harmonize the Decent Work Act and the Civil Servant Standing orders to ensure full legal recognition of the NAHWUL. The Government indicates it does not have any additional information to provide with regard to the other allegations raised by the NAHWUL. The Committee notes that according to the ITUC's most recent observations, while the Government has given functional acceptance to the NAHWUL, it continues to deny legal recognition. The Committee further notes the ITUC allegation of the Government's increasing intolerance of workers exercising their civil liberties and rights under the Convention. The ITUC reports, in particular, that the General Secretary of the NAHWUL alleged state surveillance of his activities and threats against his life. The Committee urges the Government to take all necessary measures to grant the NAHWUL full legal recognition through the harmonization of the Decent Work Act and Civil Servant Standing orders and requests the Government to provide information on all developments in this respect. The Committee further requests the Government to provide its comments on the allegations of the ITUC pertaining to the exercise of civil liberties and labour rights. In this respect, with reference to the conclusions of the Conference Committee, this Committee urges the Government to provide information on all measures taken in consultation with the social partners to ensure that: (i) all workers are able to exercise their labour rights under the Convention in an environment of respect for civil liberties, including freedom of association, freedom of expression, peaceful assembly and protest without interference and fear for their personal safety and bodily integrity; and (ii) trade union leaders and members are not jailed for engaging in trade union activities and that threats against trade union leaders for their activities are fully investigated and the perpetrators duly punished.

Scope of application. In its previous comment, the Committee had requested the Government to provide specific information on developments regarding the creation of a framework for the harmonization of the Decent Work Act and the Civil Service Standing orders, and to detail what legal provisions ensure that public sector workers enjoy the rights set out in the Convention. The Committee notes the ITUC's allegations that a recent court ruling has decided that associations of public servants are not subject to the Decent Work Act. The Committee requests the Government to provide further information on all developments with regard to the creation of a framework to harmonize the Decent Work Act and the Civil Service Standing orders, and to ensure that public sector workers enjoy the rights set out in the Convention.

The Committee had previously noted that section 1.5(c)(i) and (ii) of the Decent Work Act excludes from its scope of application, officers, members of the crew and any other persons employed or in training on vessels. The Committee had therefore requested the Government to indicate how the rights enshrined in the Convention are ensured to maritime workers, including trainees, and to indicate any laws or regulations adopted or envisaged covering this category of workers. The Committee notes with deep regret the lack of information in this respect. The Committee reiterates its request and expects that the Government's next report will contain information in this regard.

Article 1 of the Convention. Right of workers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish organizations. The Committee had previously requested the Government to take any necessary measures, including through the amendment of section 45.6 of the Decent Work Act, to ensure that the right to establish organizations to defend their occupational interests is fully recognized to foreign workers both in law and in practice. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Ministry of Labour has opened discussion with the existing foreign workers' bodies to distinguish or form a separate body for employers and employees so that their respective organizations can have the sole rights to defend their occupational interests. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all developments and outcomes of the engagement with foreign workers bodies' and the Ministry of Labour.

Article 3. Determination of essential services. The Committee had previously requested the Government to continue to provide information on any developments with regard to the designation of essential services by the National Tripartite Council and how such designation operates in practice, as well as to clarify whether the President is also bound by the definition of the notion of essential services set out in section 41.4(a) of the Decent Work Act (services the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or any part of the population of Liberia), and to provide information on any presidential decisions concerning the designation of essential services and how such designation operates in practice. Noting with regret that no information has been provided by the Government in this respect, the Committee reiterates its previous request.

Madagascar

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1960)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the General Confederation of Workers' Unions of Madagascar (FISEMA), received on 1 September 2022, which refer to the issues examined in the present comment.

The Committee also notes the observations of the Randrana Sendikaly Alliance, received on 19 October 2022, alleging the arrest and sentencing to a 12-month prison term and a fine of 400,000 ariarys (about US$92) of Mr Zotiakobanjina Fanja Marcel Sento, a leader of the trade union Trade unionism and life of societies (SVS Etoile), for having posted on Facebook the results of meetings held with the management of an enterprise in the textile sector in the performance of his trade union duties. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments on these serious allegations.

The Committee notes that the Government has not responded to the 2021 observations of the Autonomous Trade Union of Labour Inspectors (SAIT) alleging the violation of the right of trade unions to organize their activities in line with Article 3 of the Convention. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide its comments in this regard.

In its previous comments, the Committee noted the observations of the Christian Confederation of Malagasy Trade Unions (SEKRIMA) containing allegations of restrictions on the right to organize, and especially the right of trade unions to organize their management and training activities, and also on the difficulties encountered in establishing trade unions. The Committee notes that the Government, in response to these allegations, indicates that freedom of association is protected under section 136 et seq. of the Labour Code and that Decree No. 2011-490 and its implementing order No. 28968-2011 provide for the promotion of trade union rights in the country. Recalling the Government's responsibility to ensure that the rights provided for in the Convention are respected both in law and in practice, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to ensure the implementation of the above-mentioned provisions in practice.

Restrictions on trade union activities in the maritime sector. The Committee previously urged the Government to ensure that the independent inquiry being conducted into anti-union acts in the maritime sector was concluded as soon as possible. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Ministry of Transport and Meteorology is organizing a meeting with the General Maritime Union of Madagascar (SYGMMA) with a view to ending the conflict between the union and an enterprise in the maritime sector. Noting the Government's brief reference to the above-mentioned inquiry, the Committee requests the Government to clarify whether the meeting with SYGMMA has been concluded and, if so, to provide detailed information on its outcome. The Committee also requests the Government to provide detailed information on the outcome of any meeting organized by the Ministry of Transport and Meteorology concerning allegations of anti-union acts in the maritime sector.

Article 2 of the Convention. Workers governed by the Maritime Code. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that a new Maritime Code was to be adopted and requested the Government to ensure that the Code provided for the right of seafarers to establish and join trade unions. The Committee notes the Government's indications that the fundamental rights and freedoms of seafarers were taken into account in the preparation of the draft Maritime Code, which is currently in the process of adoption. The Committee expects that the new Maritime Code will be adopted soon and will contain specific provisions providing for the right of seafarers to form and join trade unions. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard and to transmit a copy of the Maritime Code once adopted.

Article 3. Representativeness of workers' and employers' organizations. The Committee previously noted the adoption of Decree No. 2011-490 on workers' organizations and representativeness, which provides for the holding of elections for staff delegates at the enterprise level, and requested the Government to provide information on any progress made in such elections and their impact on the determination of the employers' and workers' organizations that participate in dialogue at the national level. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it is left to the workers and employers to organize the elections for staff representatives and to forward the results to the Ministry of Labour and Social Legislation, the role of which is limited to issuing a decree confirming that representativeness has been established. In this regard, the Government indicates that the Order No. 34-2015, issued on 19 February 2015, is in a state of tacit renewal since certain factors prevent the organization of new elections. The Committee also notes that FISEMA, in its observations, alleges that in 2019, when appointing workers' representatives to the boards of directors and management committees of the National Social Insurance Fund (CNAPS), the Antananarivo Inter-Enterprise Health Organization (OSTIE) and the Inter-Enterprise Medical Association of Antananarivo (AMIT), the Ministry of Labour and Social Legislation unilaterally changed the names of the representatives who were to sit on the boards and committees. FISEMA says it has filed a complaint with the Council of State, which issued three rulings in its favour in 2021 and 2022. The Committee requests the Government to provide specific information on the factors that have prevented the holding of elections for staff representatives since 2015. Furthermore, recalling the importance of avoiding interference by public authorities in the determination of the representativeness of professional organizations, the Committee requests the Government to provide its comments on the serious allegations of FISEMA.

Right of workers' organizations to organize their activities and formulate their programmes. Compulsory arbitration. The Committee previously requested the Government to amend sections 220 and 225 of the Labour Code, which provide that if mediation fails, the collective dispute is referred by the Ministry of Labour and Social Legislation to a process of arbitration and that the arbitral award ends the dispute and the strike, as well as section 228 of the Labour Code which provides for the possibility of requisitioning striking employees in the event of disruption of public order. The Committee notes with regret that the Government merely indicates that prolonged disputes and strikes cause difficulties for society, workers and the economy, and provides information about the composition and functioning of its arbitration board. The Committee recalls that compulsory arbitration in the context of a collective labour dispute and the requisition of workers in the case of a strike are only acceptable when the strike in question may be restricted, or even prohibited, namely in the case of public servants exercising authority in the name of the State, in essential services in the strict sense of the term, or in situations of acute national crisis (2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 151 and 153). Recalling that the above-mentioned issues have been the subject of its comments for several years, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to amend sections 220, 225 and 228 of the Labour Code in the near future. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard, and reminds it that it may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office, if it so wishes.

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Randrana Sendikaly Alliance, received on 19 October 2022, which are addressed in the framework of the application of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87).

The Committee also notes that the Government has not responded to the 2021 observations of the Autonomous Trade Union of Labour Inspectors (SAIT) alleging anti-union discrimination measures against its members. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government's response to the 2015 and 2017 observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) and the Christian Confederation of Malagasy Trade Unions (SEKRIMA) alleging acts of anti-union discrimination in various sectors and, emphasizing the persistence of the alleged situation, the Committee requested the Government to continue to provide information in this regard. Noting with regret that the Government has not provided the requested information, the Committee reiterates its request that the Government ensure that all the events reported are the subject of investigation by the public authorities and, if acts of anti-union discrimination have been committed, they will give rise to full compensation for the damage suffered and to the imposition of penalties that constitute an effective deterrent.

Article 1 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. The Committee previously requested the Government to provide information on the number of cases of anti-union discrimination examined by the labour inspection services and labour courts, and on the corresponding penalties actually applied by these institutions. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the labour inspection services categorize cases of anti-union discrimination as labour relations infringements and it does not know the exact number of anti-union discrimination cases examined by the regional labour services and the labour courts. Recalling the fundamental importance of ensuring effective protection against anti-union discrimination, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to gather the requested information on the number of cases of anti-union discrimination examined by the labour inspection services and the labour courts, as well as the penalties imposed in those cases.

Articles 1, 2, 4 and 6. Public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. In its previous comments, the Committee had underlined the need to adopt formal provisions clearly recognizing the protection of all public servants and public sector employees not engaged in the administration of the State against acts of anti-union discrimination and interference and their right to bargain collectively their conditions of employment. The Committee notes the Government's indications that it is currently working on the draft General Statute on Public Servants and the draft General Statute on contractual public employees, which generally provide for equal treatment of civil servants and contractual public employees. The Committee expects that the above-mentioned draft legislation will be adopted in the near future and will contain provisions providing for protection against anti-union discrimination and interference and the right to collective bargaining for all civil servants and public sector employees not engaged in the administration of the State, in accordance with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this respect, and recalls that it may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office, if it so desires.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. Collective bargaining in sectors subject to privatization. The Committee had previously noted the information provided by the Government on the situation of collective agreements in the energy sector, particularly that of the Malagasy Electricity and Water Company (JIRAMA), the revision of which is reportedly in progress, and the observations of SEKRIMA alleging that privatizations have resulted in the collective agreements in force being discarded. The Committee had therefore requested the Government to take the necessary steps to promote the full use of collective bargaining mechanisms in privatized sectors. The Committee notes that the Government merely indicates that the revision of the JIRAMA collective agreement can be transferred to the competent court. The Committee reiterates its request that the Government take all the necessary steps to promote the full use by the parties concerned of collective bargaining mechanisms in privatized sectors, including the energy sector, and requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

Collective bargaining for seafarers. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that the Labour Code excluded maritime workers from its scope of application and had expressed the expectation that the Government would be able to report shortly the adoption of the new Maritime Code that was due in May 2018; and that the Code would recognize for these workers the rights enshrined in the Convention. The Committee notes that the Government merely indicates that it has drawn up the draft Maritime Code. The Committee also notes that, according to the Government's report on the Collective Bargaining Convention, 1981 (No. 154), a draft new Labour Code is currently pending adoption. Recalling that the Government has been referring to the draft Maritime Code since 2008, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure, in the context of the reforms underway, that national legislation contains provisions giving full effect to the Convention in respect of maritime workers. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this respect, as well as a copy of the draft Maritime Code and the draft new Labour Code.

Promotion of collective bargaining in practice. The Committee previously requested the Government to provide information on collective bargaining in practice. Noting that the Government has not provided the requested information, the Committee once again asks the Government to provide information in the measures taken to promote collective bargaining and to indicate the number of collective agreements concluded in the country, the sectors concerned and the number of workers covered by these agreements.

In view of the ratification by Madagascar of Convention No. 154 in 2019, the Committee expects that the Government will take concrete measures to promote collective bargaining as requested in the different sections of this comment.

Malaysia

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98)

(ratification: 1961)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the National Union Bank Employees (NUBE) received on 1 September 2022 alleging the violation of trade union rights through the implementation of unilateral restructuring schemes, collective bargaining in bad faith, harassment of trade union members and denial of facilities by an enterprise in the banking sector, among other allegations. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

The Committee also notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 1 September 2022 concerning the issues examined by the Committee, and the Government's replies thereon.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 110th Session, May–June 2022)

The Committee notes the discussion which took place in June 2022 in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (the Conference Committee) concerning the application of the Convention by Malaysia. The Committee notes that the Conference Committee noted with interest the amendments to the Industrial Relations Act 1967 (IRA) and the Employment Act 1955 (Employment Act), in 2021 and 2022 respectively and the prevailing concern regarding ongoing challenges in relation to the exercise of the collective bargaining rights, trade union discrimination and interference. The Committee observes that the Conference Committee requested the Government to: (i) amend without delay national legislation, specifically the Employment Act, the Trade Unions Act 1959 (TUA), and the IRA, in consultation with the social partners, to bring these laws into conformity with the Convention; (ii) ensure that the procedure for trade union recognition is simplified and that effective protection against undue interference is adopted; (iii) ensure that migrant workers can fully participate in collective bargaining, including by enabling them to run for trade union office; (iv) enable collective bargaining machinery in the public sector to ensure that public sector workers may enjoy their right to collective bargaining; (v) ensure, in law and practice, adequate protection against anti-union discrimination, including through effective and expeditious access to courts, adequate compensation and the imposition of sufficiently dissuasive sanctions. The Conference Committee also requested the Government to: (i) submit a report to the Committee of Experts by 1 September 2022 with information on the application of the Convention in law and practice, in consultation with the social partners; and (ii) continue to avail itself of the technical assistance of the ILO.

Ongoing legislative reform. The Committee notes the Government's statement that the Employment Act was amended in 2022, and that the TUA, under the process to be amended at the Parliament, has been discussed with the social partners in 12 sessions held in August 2022. The Committee welcomes the Government's indication that it will continue working closely with the Office through the Labour Law and Industrial Relations Reform project, and the social partners, including the Malaysian Trades Union Congress (MTUC) and the Malaysian Employers Federation (MEF), to ensure adequate protection against anti-union discrimination. The Committee notes that the Government avails itself of the technical assistance of the ILO to facilitate the review of the Trade Union Act and to contribute to achieving its full conformity with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard.

Article 1 of the Convention. Adequate protection against anti-union discrimination. Effective remedies and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions. The Committee notes the Government's confirmation that section 8 of the IRA provides for procedures for non-criminal acts, while section 59 is related to semi-criminal cases. The Committee notes the Government's indication that remedies for anti-union discrimination under sections 8 and 20 of the IRA are awarded by the Industrial Court based on the facts and merits of each case, and acting on the basis of equity, good faith and the substantial merits of the case. The Committee notes the Government's indication that victims of anti-union discrimination may file complaints to the Director-General of Industrial Relations to start an inquiry, conciliate or investigate the complaints. The Committee observes that it is in the discretion of the Director-General to refer or not the complaint to the Industrial Court, without the worker having the right to access the courts directly, and there is no information regarding on what basis the decision to dismiss a complaint without referring it would be made. The Committee notes that at the discussion held at the Conference Committee, the Government indicated that the reforms to the IRA aim to enhance the existing dispute resolution system, as well as to enable any disputes arising to be resolved effectively, and expedite the procedures involved. However, the Committee notes the Government's indication regarding the duration and number of procedures on cases on anti-union discrimination that: (i) from January 2021 until April 2022, 35 cases were filed (section 8 of the IRA), and 31 have been resolved by the Industrial Relations Department with an average duration of the proceedings from three to six months; and (ii) cases referred by the Director-General of Industrial relations to the Industrial Court should be resolved within 12 months. The Committee notes with concern the ITUC's observations according to which the remedies applied in cases of anti-union discrimination are inadequate because they usually consist of compensation in lieu of reinstatement and processes can last over two years. The Committee notes with regret that the Government does not provide information on the actual number of cases and duration of the proceedings before the Industrial Court nor on the sanctions applied and measures of compensation awarded for anti-union discrimination acts. The Committee observes that the Committee on Freedom of Association also examined the issue of effective protection against acts of anti-union discrimination in its Case No. 3409 and referred the legislative aspect of this case to it (399th Report, June 2022, paragraphs 227 and 229). Recalling that effective protection against acts of anti-union discrimination requires rapid and impartial procedures and remedies, as well as sufficiently dissuasive sanctions, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that workers who are victims of anti-union discrimination have the right to directly lodge a complaint before the courts and that such proceedings are rapid and effective and to ensure an effective protection through reinstatement, adequate compensation, and the imposition of sufficiently dissuasive sanctions. The Committee also recalls its recommendation to consider the reversal of the burden of proof once a prima facie case is made. The Committee further requests the Government to provide detailed information on: (i) the number of complaints filed, the duration of the proceedings, the remedies, and the sanctions and measures of compensation effectively imposed for acts of anti-union discrimination in accordance with the IRA; and (ii) the criteria followed by the Director-General of Industrial Relations to determine the actions to take in the treatment of anti-union discrimination cases, including to refer or not the matter to the courts.

Articles 2 and 4. Trade union recognition for purposes of collective bargaining. Criteria and procedure for recognition. The Committee had observed that in case of an employer's refusal to grant recognition to a union: (i) the Director-General shall ascertain the scope of membership of the trade union on the date of the claim, whether it is in accordance with the union's constitution; and (ii) by way of secret ballot, the Director-General, shall ascertain the percentage of workers, in respect of whom recognition is being sought, who indicate support for the trade union making the claim. The Committee had requested the Government to provide detailed information on the steps taken to ensure safeguards against employer interference during the recognition process. The Committee notes with regret that no detailed information has been provided by the Government in this regard. It notes, however, the Government's indication at the Conference Committee that to safeguard against employers' interference, sections 4, 5 and 8 of the IRA, are applied. The Committee observes that the IRA entered into partial effect on January 2021 and understands from the Government's statement that several provisions including section 12A (exclusive bargaining agent) of the IRA will only enter into force upon amendment of the TUA. The Committee notes the initial Government's statement that the actual impact of the amendments on the secret balloting process for trade union recognition, has not been visible due to COVID-19 restrictions. The Committee further notes the Government's reply to the ITUC observations regarding the simplification of processes for trade union recognition, indicating that: (i) Malaysia entered the endemic phase of COVID-19 on 1 April 2022, and since then the secret ballot process has been conducted as per the amendment to the IRA; (ii) as of October 2022, 78 secret ballot processes have been conducted (78 employers and 26,521 employees involved); and, (iii) from 1 January to 31 October 2022, 261 cases have been reported regarding recognition with an average duration from one to six months for resolution (for voluntary recognition processes duration of resolution is about one month. For other cases legal intervention extends the duration of the process). The Committee notes however that the information provided does not specify the number of recognitions that were granted to trade unions. Taking due note of the Government's indication regarding the implementation of the recognition procedures, envisaged by the amended provisions in the IRA, and recalling that these processes should provide safeguards to prevent acts of employer interference, the Committee requests the Government to continue to provide detailed information on the application in practice of these measures, including the number of processes for trade union recognition, the duration of these processes, and the outcomes (number of recognitions granted). The Committee further requests the Government to provide detailed information on the steps taken to ensure that safeguards against employer interference are applied in the process of application of sections 4, 5 and 8 of the IRA, including the specific measures in practice and sanctions applied when these cases occur.

Exclusive bargaining agent. The Committee notes that: (i) where more than one trade union has been accorded recognition, the exclusive bargaining agent will be determined among themselves; (ii) if there is no agreement by the workers or group of workers, the exclusive bargaining agent, the employer or trade union of employers or any trade union concerned, may make an application in writing so that the exclusive bargaining agent is ascertained by the Director-General of Industrial Relations by way of a secret ballot through the highest number of votes (section 12A of the IRA); and (iii) section 12A of the IRA is yet to be enforced and is subject to the amendment of the TUA, which is still pending. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates that a simple majority is a minimum requirement that shall be maintained, which has been also agreed by the social partners. The Committee had observed however that the IRA does not make reference to the simple majority threshold indicated by the Government for the determination of the exclusive bargaining agent. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the provisions related to the recognition of the exclusive bargaining agent will enter into force without delay (section 12A of the Industrial Relations Act), following the entering into force of the Trade Union Act that is still undergoing the process of amendment. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all the developments in this regard.

Rights of minority unions. The Committee notes with regret that the Government does not provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to ensure that, in situations, where no union is declared the exclusive bargaining agent, collective bargaining can still be exercised by the existing unions. The Committee is therefore bound to request once again the Government to specify the measures taken or envisaged, in light of the reforms of the Industrial Relations Act and the forthcoming amendments to the Trade Union Act, to ensure that, in situations where no union is declared the exclusive bargaining agent, all unions in the unit are able to negotiate, jointly or separately, at least on behalf of their own members.

Duration of recognition proceedings. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the average duration of the recognition process is of four to nine months, and that the decision on recognition from the Director-General of Industrial Relations may be appealed for judicial review. In this respect, the Committee recalls that the average duration of the recognition procedure, must be "reasonable", and that an average duration of nine months is excessively long (2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 232). The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the duration of the recognition process is reasonable, and to provide information on the measures adopted in this respect.

Migrant workers. The Committee welcomes the Government's indication at the Conference Committee that: (i) foreign workers are eligible to become members of a trade union and are eligible to hold office upon approval of the Minister if it is in the interest of such union; (ii) the IRA does not impose restrictions on migrant workers to engage in collective bargaining; and (iii) as of 2022 a total of 27,964 foreign workers are members of 16 registered trade unions (increasing from 2,874 workers in 2019). The Committee takes note, however, of the Government's reply to the ITUC's observations that the referred Minister's approval only acts as a security measure to make sure the election is transparent and fair. The Committee observes that this condition may hinder the right of trade unions to freely choose their representatives for collective bargaining purposes. It notes that the Committee on Freedom of Association also examined this issue and invited the Government to provide information on any legislative development in this regard to the Committee of Experts (Case No. 2637, 397th Report, March 2022, paragraph 32). The Committee therefore requests the Government to take, in consultation with the social partners, the necessary legislative measures to ensure that foreign workers are able to run for trade union office without prior authorization. The Committee further requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the full utilization of collective bargaining by migrant workers and to provide information in this respect.

Scope of collective bargaining. The Committee notes the Government's indication reiterating that: (i) section 13(3) (restrictions on "internal management prerogatives"– promotions, transfers, appointment of workers in case of vacancies, termination of services due to redundancy, dismissal, reinstatement and assignment or allocation of work) shall be retained to maintain industrial harmony and speed up the collective bargaining process; (ii) the provision is not compulsory as if both parties agree, they may negotiate on those subject matters; and (iii) trade unions can raise questions of a general character relating to transfers, termination of services due to redundancy, dismissal, reinstatement and assignment or allocation of work. The Committee notes with concern the ITUC's observations indicating that while workers are allowed to raise general questions, the provisions also allow employers to dismiss those questions. The Committee observes that it remains unclear how questions of a general character relating to matters that are within the scope of legislative restrictions on collective bargaining can be raised in practice. The Committee further observes that the Committee on Freedom of Association also examined the issue of raising general questions and the scope of collective bargaining and referred the legislative aspect of the case to this Committee (Case No. 3401, 397th Report, March 2022, paragraphs 499 and 502). The Committee therefore requests the Government, once again, to indicate the practical implications of the amendment of section 13(3) of the Industrial Relations Act on the scope of collective bargaining, in particular to clarify the meaning of the new wording – questions of a general character and the way in which these questions are raised and dealt with in practice. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of collective agreements that include "internal management prerogatives" as negotiated subjects. The Committee reiterates its invitation to the Government to consider lifting the broad legislative restrictions on the scope of collective bargaining, so as to promote the right to bargain freely between the parties, without any intervention by the Government.

Compulsory arbitration. The Committee had noted with interest that the amendments to the IRA restrict compulsory arbitration to instances generally compatible with the Convention. However, it had also noted that the reference in section 26(2) to “any Government service” and “the service of any statutory authority”, as well as the reference to a number of Government services in point 8 of the First Schedule, may go beyond what can be considered as public servants engaged in the administration of the State. Furthermore, point 10 of the First Schedule, qualifies as essential services businesses and industries connected with the defence and security of the country, while they should be afforded the full guarantees of the Convention. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the IRA amendments will be enforced after the TUA’s amendment is completed. The Committee trusts that the amendments will enter into force without delay, once the legislative process for the Trade Union Act amendments, noted above, is completed. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the amendments and measures taken or envisaged, in consultation with the social partners, to: (i) further delimit the categories of Government services in section 26(2) and point 8 of the First Schedule, so as to ensure that compulsory arbitration may only be imposed on those public servants engaged in the administration of the State; and (ii) remove businesses and industries mentioned in point 10 of the First Schedule from its scope of application.

Restrictions on collective bargaining in the public sector. The Committee has for many years requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure for public servants not engaged in the administration of the State the right to bargain collectively over wages and remuneration and other working conditions and emphasized that simple consultations with unions of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State did not meet the requirements of Article 4 of the Convention. The Committee notes the ITUC’s observations indicating that public servants are only consulted and not integrated in processes of collective bargaining. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that: (i) to ensure the welfare of public servants and collective bargaining there is engagement between employers and employees in the public sector; (ii) the Public Service Department has provided a platform through the National Joint Council (NJC) (which is inclusive of all public servants) and the Departmental Joint Council (DJC) to ensure that the welfare of public servants is heard; (iii) the NJC, as a form of joint consultation, is required to convene once a year to discuss proposals and matters on remuneration and service principles, innovation and productivity initiatives, and other amendments proposed to existing policies; and (iv) the DJC meets three times a year, and provides a means for public servants to communicate with management and express their opinions and views. The Committee observes that: (i) the Government submits the Service Circular No. 6/2020 and Service Circular No. 7/2020 (in Malay), related to the functioning of the National Joint Council and the Departmental Joint Council; (ii) the Councils appear to have a consultative status as opposed to being used as a platform for collective negotiation on issues relating to terms and conditions of employment of public servants. The Committee notes with regret that the Government does not provide information on collective bargaining and agreements concluded in the public sector. The Committee, therefore, requests the Government to: (i) provide further information regarding how the different Councils ensure the right to collective bargaining, and not only consultation rights, in conformity with Article 4 of the Convention; and (ii) provide information on collective bargaining undertaken in the public sector, including the number of agreements concluded and the number of workers covered by those agreements.

Collective bargaining in practice. The Committee had requested the Government to provide statistical information in relation to collective bargaining in the country. The Committee observes with regret that the Government refers to statistical information that is not provided. The Committee also notes that the Government made reference, at the Conference Committee, to progressive efforts to enhance the procedure and process on the right to strike and collective bargaining with the social partners. The Committee observes that no specific measures are further indicated by the Government. The Committee also notes the concerns expressed by the ITUC as to the low percentage of workers covered by collective agreements (1 to 2 per cent) and the declining level of trade union density (6 per cent). The Committee notes with concern the very low coverage of collective bargaining, indicated by the ITUC, and observes that according to public statistics available in ILOSTAT as of 2018, the collective bargaining coverage rate in Malaysia was of 0.4 per cent. The Committee considers that this very low coverage could be related to the restrictive requirements in law and practice to engage in collective bargaining discussed above. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary action to remove all the legal and practical obstacles to collective bargaining addressed in this comment and to take concrete measures to promote the full development and utilization of collective bargaining. The Committee further requests the Government to provide updated statistical information on the number of collective agreements concluded and in force, the sectors concerned, and the number of workers covered by these agreements, as well as on any additional measures undertaken under the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Myanmar

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1955)

The Committee notes the decision adopted by the Governing Body at its 344th Session in March 2022, to establish a Commission of Inquiry in respect of the non-observance of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) and the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) in Myanmar. In these circumstances, and in accordance with the usual practice of suspending the operation of the other supervisory mechanisms during the mandate of the Commission of Inquiry, the Committee will resume its examination of the application of the Convention by Myanmar once the Commission of Inquiry has completed its mandate.

Previous comment

Article 2 of the Convention. Right to organize of prison staff. The Committee recalls that it had previously noted that section 2(2)(d) of the Labour Act excluded members of the Namibian prison service from the Labour Act's provisions unless the Prisons Service Act provided otherwise. The Committee had further noted that the Prisons Service Act did not provide for the extension of the new Labour Act's guarantees to the Namibian prison service; nor did it contain any provisions establishing their freedom of association rights. The Committee requested the Government to provide information on the legislative amendments adopted to ensure that prison staff have the right to establish and join organizations for furthering and defending their interests. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the final report of the Tripartite Task Force proposes the deletion of section 2(2)(d) of the Labour Act and that the final report would be submitted to the minister before December 2021. The Committee requests the Government to take all necessary steps to expedite the process for adoption of legislative amendments to ensure that the prison services enjoy the guarantees under the Convention without further delay. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on any progress in this regard.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1995)

Previous comment

The Committee takes note of the Government's reply to the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 1 September 2017, alleging violations of the Convention in specific enterprises and public institutions.

Articles 1 and 4 of the Convention. Adequate protection against anti-union discrimination and promotion of collective bargaining in export processing zones (EPZs). The Committee previously requested the Government to indicate the concrete measures taken to prohibit anti-union discrimination and promote collective bargaining in EPZs and to provide statistics in this respect. The Committee notes that the Government limits itself to indicating that no complaints alleging anti-union discrimination in EPZs were referred to the Office of the Labour Commissioner (administrative authority). Recalling that the Convention fully applies to EPZs, the Committee requests the Government once again to take specific action to ensure the application of Articles 1 and 4 of the Convention in EPZs and to provide relevant information and statistics on any progress in this regard.

Article 6. Rights of prison staff. The Committee, in its previous observation, expressed its expectation and firm hope that the Government would ensure that prison staff enjoy the rights enshrined in the Convention. The Committee welcomes the Government's indication that the Tripartite Task Force, responsible for the review of the Labour Act, intends, in order to ensure the conformity of the Act with the Convention, to delete section 2(d) that excludes the prison service from its scope of application. The Committee hopes that the proposed amendment will be adopted soon, and that it will ensure the right of prison staff to enjoy the guarantees under the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1996)

Previous comment

Article 1 of the Convention. Adequate protection against anti-union discrimination. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to take the necessary measures to introduce in the legislation an explicit prohibition of all acts of anti-union discrimination and effective and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions in cases of violation of this prohibition. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that workers are protected against anti-union discrimination as per section 6 of the Labour Act, 2017 and section 6 of the Right to Employment Act, 2018, respectively prohibiting discriminatory treatment during employment and in relation to hiring on the grounds of religion, colour, sex, caste, tribe, origin, language or other similar grounds and that the list should be considered as non-exhaustive hence indirectly encompassing also trade union activities as one of the grounds. In addition, as per section 23(A) of the Trade Union Act, 1992, office-bearers of the working committee of trade unions at the enterprise level shall not be transferred or promoted without their consent, except in special situations. While taking due note of the elements provided by the Government, the Committee recalls that the prohibition of discrimination provided for under section 6 of the Labour Act, as well as section 6 of the Right to Employment Act and section 24 of the Constitution of 2015, do not contain an explicit prohibition of discrimination against workers by reason of their trade union membership or participation in trade union activities. In view of the above, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to introduce in the legislation: (i) an explicit prohibition of all prejudicial acts committed against workers by reason of their trade union membership or participation in trade union activities at the time of recruitment, during employment or at the time of dismissal (for example, transfers, demotions, refusal of training, dismissals, etc.); and (ii) effective and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions in cases of violation of this prohibition. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress made thereon. It further requests the Government to provide information on the number of cases of anti-union discrimination dealt with by the competent authorities, the length of the proceedings and their final outcome.

Article 2. Adequate protection against acts of interference. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to continue to provide statistics on the number of complaints on acts of interference examined and the duration of the procedures with a particular emphasis on the sanctions applied. The Committee notes that the Government, after having recalled the provisions of the Labour Act prohibiting acts of interference, indicates that during the reporting period no case of interference has been reported or brought to its attention. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of complaints, with particular emphasis on the sanctions applied in cases of acts of interference.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. Negotiation with trade unions versus negotiation with workers' representatives. In order to fully evaluate the conformity of section 116.1 of the Labour Act with the Convention, the Committee had requested the Government to specify the conditions under which trade unions are authorized to bargain collectively and to provide information on the number of direct agreements concluded with non-unionized workers in comparison with the number of collective agreements signed with trade unions. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that section 116.1 of the Labour Act provides that any enterprise employing ten or more workers shall have a collective bargaining committee and that such a committee is comprised of: (i) a team of representatives appointed for negotiation on behalf of the elected authorized trade union of the enterprise (paragraph a); (ii) where an election for the authorized trade union could not be held or the term of the elected authorized trade union has expired, a team of representatives nominated through a mutual agreement of all the unions in the enterprise (paragraph b); or (iii) where an authorized trade union or a team of representatives could not be formed, a team of representatives supported with the signatures of more than 60 per cent of the workers working in the enterprise (paragraph c). Recalling that negotiation with non-union actors should only be possible in the absence of trade union organizations at the relevant level, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on how paragraphs (a), (b) and (c) of section 116.1 find application in practice. In particular, the Committee requests the Government to clarify which circumstances might impede the election of the authorized trade union and as a result the exercise of its functions to appoint the team of negotiating representatives.

Furthermore, the Committee notes that the Government failed to provide data on collective agreements registered in the Labour Office, for the period 2018–22, with the number of workers covered. The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide information in this respect and to specify the number of direct agreements concluded with non-unionized workers in comparison with the number of collective agreements signed with trade unions, indicating the sectors and the number of workers covered.

Different levels of collective bargaining. In its previous comments the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 123 of the Labour Act, providing a special regulatory regime for collective bargaining in a range of specific sectors. The Committee recalls that section 123 states that “trade union associations which are active in the tea estate, carpet sector, construction business, labour provider, transportation sector or any other group of manufacturers producing similar nature of goods or service providers providing similar nature of service or business” may form a collective bargaining committee and “submit collective bargaining claims, demands to the employers' association of the concerned group of industries". Section 123(3) additionally states that "In the case of the enterprise to which the collective agreement referred to in this section is applicable, no collective claims, Demands and agreement may be submitted and made pursuant to this Chapter". The Committee notes that no information has been provided by the Government in this respect. The Committee wishes to remind that collective bargaining should be promoted at all levels, including both at company and sectoral levels, and that, at the same time, according to the principle of free and voluntary collective bargaining, the determination of the bargaining level is essentially a matter to be left to the discretion of the parties and, consequently, the level of negotiation should not be imposed by law. While welcoming the fact that the different provisions of the Labour Act envisage both collective bargaining at the enterprise and sectoral levels, the Committee invites the Government to provide information on how section 123(3) would allow for sectoral collective bargaining to be compatible with collective bargaining at any level whatsoever, including that of the establishment, the undertaking, the branch of activity, the industry or the regional or national levels. Furthermore, as no other reference to sectoral collective bargaining is found in the Labour Act other than the one made in section 123(1), the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the rationale behind the selection of sectors enlisted in section 123 as well as on the number of sectoral collective bargaining agreements concluded in the series of targeted sectors and in sectors others than those mentioned therein, so to assess the breadth of sectoral collective bargaining in the country.

Compulsory arbitration. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to bring the provisions under section 119 of the Labour Act relating to compulsory arbitration into full conformity with the Convention, recalling that compulsory arbitration to end a collective labour dispute is acceptable only: (i) in the public service involving public servants engaged in the administration of the State (Article 6 of the Convention); (ii) in essential services in the strict sense of the term, namely those services whose interruption would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population; or (iii) in case of acute national crisis. Noting that the Government did not provide any information in this respect, the Committee once again requests that the Government take the necessary measures to ensure that, in accordance with the Convention, compulsory arbitration can only take place in the situations mentioned above. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress in this respect.

Composition of arbitration bodies. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to provide detailed information with respect to the composition of the arbitration panel (under section 119(3) of the Labour Act) and tribunal (section 120) and specifically to indicate the procedure undertaken to select the worker and employer representatives to ensure the full independence of these arbitration bodies. It also requested the Government to clarify the difference between the arbitration panel and the arbitration tribunal. The Committee notes that, in its report, the Government uses interchangeably the names of the two arbitration bodies and does not provide further information regarding the procedure undertaken to ensure their full independence. The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide information clarifying how the arbitration panel and tribunal differ from one another and how the procedure for selection of the members of the arbitration tribunal will be determined so as to ensure its full independence.

The Committee reminds the Government that it may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office with respect to all issues raised in the present observation.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87)

Previous comment

The Committee takes note of the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 1 September 2022, which refer to matters under examination by the Committee and allege that the widespread use of temporary contracts by employers constitutes a significant limitation to the right to organize, as contract workers are not allowed to participate in referendums for the creation of trade unions. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments thereon.

The Committee further notes the observations of the Sint Maarten Employers Council (ECSM), received on 6 September 2022 and referring to matters addressed below.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 110th Session, May–June 2022)

The Committee notes the discussion that took place in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2022 concerning the application of the Convention. The Committee observes that the Conference Committee urged the Government, in consultation with the social partners, to: (i) refrain from any undue interference in the exercise of freedom of association of employers and workers, including any interference through the promotion of organizations that are not freely established or chosen by workers and employers, such as the Soualiga Employer Association (SEA); (ii) consult worker and employer organizations with a view to identifying their representatives in the Socio Economic Council (SER); (iii) provide information on the outcome of the appeal challenging the appointments of the Employers' representatives to the SER; and (iv) bring national legislation into line with the Convention to ensure that all workers, including public sector workers, are able to fully exercise the rights and guarantees under the Convention. The Conference Committee also invited the Government to avail itself of technical assistance from the Office to bring the national law and practice into conformity with the Convention. Finally, the Conference Committee requested the Government to submit a report to the Committee of Experts by 1 September 2022 providing information on the application of the Convention in law and practice, in consultation with the social partners.

Article 3 of the Convention. Right of organizations to elect their representatives in full freedom. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to review the establishment of the SEA, which had been facilitated by a governmental agency, as well as its operation and its participation in the SER, and redress any interference from the public authorities in this regard. The Committee notes that the Government indicates, with respect to the appeal referred to in the Conference Committee conclusions, that the Court of Appeals issued a judgement dated 29 June 2022, in which it determined that the right to freedom of association of the ECSM had not been violated, and that both the ECSM and the SEA had been independently designated as representative employers' organizations, as the involvement of the Minister of General Affairs and the Chamber of Commerce and Industry (COCI) in the establishment of the SEA did not disqualify the latter as a representative organization. The Committee notes with regret that the Government states that as a result of this judgment, it intends to proceed with the establishment of the SEA as an umbrella employers' organization and the appointments of the employers' representatives to the SER will therefore remain effective until 30 April 2023. The Government also indicates, however, that it would be open to receiving technical assistance from the Office in this regard. The Committee once again recalls that, under the Convention, public authorities should refrain from any undue interference in the exercise of the rights of employers and their organizations to determine the conditions for electing their representatives and to establish higher level organizations. It further recalls that the Conference Committee urged the Government to refrain from any undue interference in the exercise of freedom of association of employers and workers, including any interference through the promotion of organizations such as the SEA, which is not considered to be an independent employer organization, as it was established by the COCI, an organization with compulsory membership. In this regard, the Committee also recalls that the Conference Committee urged the Government to consult worker and employer organizations with a view to identifying their representatives in the SER. The Committee further notes with deep regret the information from the ECSM that the Government, contrary to the CAS conclusions, apparently has recognized one seat on the SER to the SEA while the other two seats are suspended and that the SER has apparently not been convened since the CAS, nor has the ECSM been consulted on matters affecting its interest, including the preparation of the Government's report. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures, in consultation with the social partners, to ensure that workers' and employers' representatives to the SER are only appointed by organizations which are freely established or chosen by workers and employers and to engage with the ECSM on matters affecting its interests. Observing that there appears to be some confusion around the basic precepts of freedom of association relative to this matter, the Committee reminds the Government that it may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office in this regard.

Right of workers' organizations to organize their administration and activities. The Committee had previously requested the Government to confirm whether section 374(a), (b) and (c) of the old Penal Code of the Netherlands Antilles, which prohibited public employees, including teachers, from striking under penalty of imprisonment, had been carried over into the new Penal Code, and to specify any other legislative provisions currently governing the right to strike of civil servants. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) the Penal Code was amended in 2015 to revoke certain provisions, including section 374*bis*, ter and quater, which were in violation of the Convention; (ii) the right to strike of civil servants is governed by the Constitution, the Civil Code, the National Ordinance on Collective Agreements, the National Collective Labour Dispute Ordinance and the cohesive Labour Peace Decrees, as well as article 6(4) of the European Social Charter, as the Supreme Court of the Netherlands determined that this provision was applicable in the country; and (iii) the National Ordinance on Substantive Civil Service Law was amended to allow the courts to forbid strikes which threaten public welfare or safety. The Committee further notes that the ITUC, in its observations, states that it is unclear whether section 374(a), (b) and (c) of the old Penal Code of the Netherlands Antilles has been included in the new Penal Code. The Committee requests the Government to specify whether public employees, such as teachers, are forbidden from striking under the new Penal Code, and to provide a copy of the new Penal Code. The Committee also requests the Government to provide detailed information on the types of circumstances in which strikes may be prohibited based on the National Ordinance on Substantive Civil Service Law.

Discussion at the International Labour Conference, May–June 2022

The Committee notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) received on 25 August 2022 reiterating the comments made in the discussion held in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (hereinafter the Conference Committee) in June 2022 on the application of the Convention by Nicaragua. It also takes note of the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 1 September 2022, which concern issues that the Committee addresses in this comment.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 110th Session, May–June 2022)

The Committee notes the discussion that took place in the Conference Committee in which the Conference Committee deplored the persistent climate of intimidation and harassment of independent workers' and employers' organizations, noted with concern the allegations of the arrest and detention of employer leaders and urged the Government, in consultation with the social partners to:

- (i) immediately cease all acts of violence, threats, persecution, stigmatization, intimidation or any other form of aggression against individuals or organizations in connection with both the exercise of legitimate trade union activities and the activities of employers' organizations, and adopt measures to ensure that such acts are not repeated;
- (ii) immediately release any employer or trade union member who may be imprisoned in connection with the exercise of the legitimate activities of their organizations, as is the case of Messrs Michael Healy, Álvaro Vargas Duarte, Jose Adán Aguerri, Luis Rivas and Juan Lorenzo Holmann;
- (iii) promote social dialogue without further delay through the establishment of a tripartite dialogue round table, under the auspices of the ILO, that is presided over by an independent chairperson who has the trust of all sectors, that duly respects the representativeness of employers' and workers' organizations in its composition and that meets periodically; and
- (iv) repeal Law No. 1040 on the regulation of foreign agents, the Special Law on Cybercrimes, and Law No. 1055 on the Defence of the Rights of the People to Independence, Sovereignty and Self-determination for Peace, which limit the exercise of freedom of association and freedom of expression.

The Conference Committee recommended that the Government avail itself of ILO technical assistance to ensure full compliance with its obligations under the Convention in law and in practice and that it accept a direct contacts mission to complete a fact-finding mission with full access related to the situation of violation of trade union rights of workers' organizations and of employers' organizations' rights as soon as possible to allow the ILO to assess the situation. It also requested the Government to submit a report to the Committee of Experts before 1 September 2022, communicating information on the application of the Convention in law and practice, in consultation with the social partners.

The Committee notes that the Government submitted a report before 1 September 2022, indicating that it responds to one of the Conference Committee's recommendations, namely the submission of a report containing information on progress achieved regarding the application of the Convention in law and practice. The Committee deeply regrets that the Government report contains no information on, nor any allusion to, the rest of the recommendations formulated by the Conference Committee. The Committee understands the absence of information in this respect to denote not only an evident failure on the part of the Government to give effect to its recommendations, but also an apparent lack of commitment to ensuring the Government's standards obligations are respected. The Committee therefore urges the Government, in the strongest terms, in consultation with the social partners, to take each and every one of the measures urged by the Conference Committee referenced above which concern serious and urgent matters that call for immediate action. The Committee urges the Government to report on all the measures adopted to ensure compliance with the recommendations of the Conference Committee and on all progress achieved in the application of those measures, above all in respect of the freeing of any employer or member of a trade union who may have been imprisoned in relation to the exercise of the legitimate activities of their organizations, such as is the case of Messrs Michael Healy, Álvaro Vargas Duarte, José Adán Aguerri, Luis Rivas and Juan Lorenzo Hollman.

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that since 2007 it has been working to restore and protect the rights of workers, including freedom of association, through dialogue and consensus among the tripartite actors to achieve stability and harmonious labour relations. The Committee firmly believes in the value of tripartite social dialogue and in the critical role that it can play in achieving significant progress in respect of the requests made by the Committee and the Conference Committee. The Committee recalls that in its comments to the Conference Committee, the IOE stressed the fundamental need to reconstruct a process of confidence and called on the Government to facilitate social dialogue with the presence of the ILO. The Committee therefore urges the Government to establish the tripartite dialogue round table recommended by the Conference Committee without further delay and avail itself of ILO technical assistance to ensure full compliance with its obligations under the Convention. The Committee also considers it vitally important that the Government should accept, at an early date, the direct contacts mission mentioned above. The Committee hopes that the Government will address the recommendations made and requests it to report on any progress made in this respect.

Article 3 of the Convention. Right of workers' organizations to organize their activities in full freedom and to formulate their programmes. The Committee recalls that for over a decade it has been referring to the need to take steps to amend sections 389 and 390 of the Labour Code, which provide that collective disputes shall be referred to compulsory arbitration when 30 days have elapsed since the calling of the strike. The Committee notes in this regard that the Government reiterates that the country has a wide legal framework that covers industrial disputes; that it has been reinforcing resolution of conflicts through social dialogue and that, in accordance with the principle of sovereignty, any decision to amend the said sections must emanate from the Nicaraguan people. While noting what the Government indicates, the Committee recalls once again that the imposition of compulsory arbitration to end a strike, beyond the cases in which a strike may be limited or even prohibited, is contrary to the right of workers' organizations to freely organize their activities and formulate their programmes. In light of the above, the Committee strongly urges the Government to take the necessary measures to amend sections 389 and 390 of the Labour Code in order to ensure that compulsory arbitration is only possible in cases where strikes may be limited or even prohibited, namely in cases of conflict within the civil service relating to officials exercising authority on behalf of the State, in essential services in the strict sense of the term or in the event of an acute national crisis. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard and firmly hopes that, in the context of the technical assistance mentioned above, progress towards compliance with the Convention will be achieved.

Article 11. Protection of the right to organize. In its previous comment, the Committee took note of the Government's various initiatives aimed at promoting the right to organize. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it is continuing to strengthen the right to freedom of association and that, in 2021, 44 new trade union organizations were formed, affiliating 1,158 workers and 997 trade union organizations were updated, bringing together 65,233 workers. The Committee observes that, according to the Government, this statistical information, together with other statistical data on labour issues, is evidence that the country is giving effect to the Convention. While taking due note of this information and these indications, the Committee recalls that the rights conferred upon the employers' and workers' organizations protected by the Convention are void of meaning if there is no respect for fundamental freedoms, the right to protection from arbitrary detention and imprisonment and the right to a fair trial by an independent and impartial tribunal, questions referred to at the beginning of this comment. Recalling also that Article 11 of the Convention refers to the need to take all necessary and appropriate measures to ensure that workers and employers may exercise freely the right to organize, the Committee requests the Government to report on initiatives taken to guarantee the exercise of this right for workers and employers, giving information on their results.

The Committee notes with deep concern the lack of action on the part of the Government to follow up on the conclusions of the Conference Committee, which demonstrates a lack of commitment to ensure respect for its obligations under the Convention. The Committee emphasizes in the strongest possible terms the need to immediately cease all acts of violence, threats, persecution, stigmatization, intimidation or any other form of aggression against individuals or organizations in connection with both the exercise of legitimate trade union activities and the activities of employers' organizations and to immediately release any employer or trade union member who may be imprisoned in connection with the exercise of the legitimate activities of their organizations. It further recalls the utmost need to re-establish genuine and constructive tripartite dialogue without further delay and the CAS request to repeal Law No. 1040 on the regulation of foreign agents, the Special Law on Cybercrimes, and Law No. 1055 on the Defence of the Rights of the People to Independence, Sovereignty and Self-determination for Peace, which limit the exercise of freedom of association and freedom of expression. In light of the above, the Committee considers that this case meets the criteria set out in paragraph 114 of its General Report to be asked to come before the Conference.

North Macedonia

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1991)

The Committee notes with concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee notes the observations of the Confederation of Free Trade Unions of Macedonia (KSS), received on 1 September 2021, which allege restrictions on the right to strike in the education sector, the failure to transfer to trade unions the dues withheld by the employers, as well as pressure on workers to leave their trade unions. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments thereon.

Articles 2 and 9 of the Convention. Scope of application. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that, pursuant to article 37 of the Constitution, the conditions for exercising the right to union organization in "administrative bodies" (in addition to the police and the armed forces) can be limited by law and requested the Government to indicate what are the "administrative bodies" referred to in the Constitution and whether, and the extent to which, the law limits the right to organize of their workers. The Committee notes the Government's indication that "administrative bodies" referred to in article 37 of the Constitution includes ministries, other state administration bodies (as independent state administration bodies or within ministries), and administrative organizations (set up for the performance of particular professional and other works requiring the application of scientific and expert methods). The Committee further notes that the Government emphasizes that freedom of association, apart from the general framework in the Constitution, is regulated by the Labour Law, which does not stipulate any limitation thereof. Recalling that under the Convention only the armed forces and the police may be subject to limitations concerning the enjoyment of the guarantees provided by the Convention, as well as the need to ensure conformity of national constitutional provisions with the Convention, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend article 37 of the Constitution to eliminate the possibility for the law to restrict the conditions for the exercise of the right to trade union organization in administrative bodies.

Article 3. Right of organizations to freely organize their activities and to formulate their programmes. In its previous comments the Committee had noted that, under the Law on Public Enterprises and the Law on Employees in the Public Sector: (i) employees in the public sector are entitled to strike; (ii) employees in the public sector are obliged to provide minimum services taking into account the rights and interests of citizens and legal entities; and (iii) in accordance with the applicable laws and collective agreements, the head of the respective institution determines the performance of the institutional activities of public interest that are to be maintained during a strike, the manner in which the minimum service will be carried out and the number of employees that will provide services during the strike. In this respect, the Committee recalled that the maintenance of minimum services in the event of strikes should only be possible in certain situations, namely: (i) in services the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population (essential services in the strict sense of the term); (ii) other services in which strikes of a certain magnitude and duration could cause an acute crisis threatening the normal conditions of existence of the population; (iii) in public services of fundamental importance; and (iv) to ensure the security of facilities and the maintenance of equipment. The Committee further recalled that minimum services imposed should meet at least two requirements: (i) must genuinely and exclusively be minimum services, that is limited to the operations which are strictly necessary to meet the basic needs of the population or the minimum requirements of the service, while maintaining the effectiveness of the pressure brought to bear; and (ii) since this system restricts one of the essential means of pressure available to workers to defend their interests, their organizations should be able, if they so wish, to participate in defining such a service, along with employers and the public authorities. The Committee welcomes the Government's indication that it will take appropriate measures to ensure compliance with the Convention of the provisions in the Law on Public Enterprises and in the Law on Public Sector Employees. The Committee requests the Government to take, in consultation with representative public employee and public employer organizations, any necessary measures to ensure the determination of minimum services in public enterprises conforms with the situations described above, and to provide further information concerning such determination in practice (in particular as to the types of activities, and percentage of employees in those activities, that have been affected by a determination of minimum services, as well as the possibility for employee organizations to participate in the definition of minimum services).

In its preceding comment the Committee had requested the Government to amend section 38(7) of the Law on Primary Education and section 25(2) of the Law on Secondary Education, which oblige the school directors to provide for the realization of educational activities by replacing the striking employees when the educational activity is interrupted due to a strike. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it started amending the articles concerned to align them with the Convention but observes that, subsequently, a new Law on Primary Education was published on 5 August 2019, including a similar provision to require the replacement of striking workers. Pursuant to section 50(7), of the new Law on Primary Education, in case of a suspension of the educational and pedagogical work due to strike action, the principal of the primary school, upon receiving a previous consent by the Mayor, and by the Minister in the case of state primary schools, shall be obliged to ensure the performance of the educational and pedagogical work by substituting the striking workers for the duration of the strike action. In this regard, the Committee must recall that teachers and the public education services may not be considered an essential service in the strict sense of the term (services the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population) and that provisions allowing for the replacement of striking workers are a serious impediment to the legitimate exercise of the right to strike. Regretting the lack of progress in this respect, the Committee once again requests the Government to amend the Law on Primary Education and the Law on Secondary Education, so as to remove the possibility of replacing striking workers and to enable workers in the primary and secondary education sectors to effectively exercise their right to strike, as well to provide a copy of the amended legal texts once adopted.

Legislative review. With regard to the review process of the Law on Labour Relations, the Committee notes that the Government indicates that social partners were included from the very beginning and that in the course of drafting the new law attention shall be paid to its compliance with ILO Conventions. The Committee expects that, in the context of the review of the Law on Labour Relations, the Government will take the necessary measures to bring its legislation into conformity with the Convention in line with the preceding comments and requests it to provide information on any developments, including a copy of the revised Law on Labour Relations once adopted.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1991)

Previous comment

The Committee notes that the Government does not reply to the 2021 observations of the Confederation of Free Trade Unions of Macedonia (KSS) denouncing: (i) acts of anti-union discrimination, including dismissal, against trade union representatives; (ii) the non-application of collective agreements by the Ministry of Education; and (iii) the inability of the Commission for representativeness to decide on the representativeness of the KSS in the public sector. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide its comments in this regard.

Article 4 of the Convention. Promotion of collective bargaining. The Committee had previously requested the Government to inform on the adoption process of a new Labour Law (Law on Labour Relations) and a special Law on Worker and Employer Organization and Collective Bargaining, which had both given rise to technical comments from the Office. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the process of preparing the new Law on Labour Relations, which has involved the social partners, will be finalised in the near future. The Government informs that it has been decided that the sections relating to the organization of workers and employers as well as collective bargaining will finally be included within the framework of the new Law on Labour Relations. Taking due note of these developments, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that due account is taken of the comments which were previously made by the Office and that the new Law on Labour Relations is adopted shortly. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

Collective bargaining in practice. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government indicating that, in the private sector, a General Collective Agreement was concluded along with nine specific collective agreements, while in the public sector, a General Collective Agreement was concluded in addition to ten specific collective agreements. The Committee further notes that according to the data of the State Statistical Office for the first quarter of 2021, the General Collective Agreement in the private sector covers 449,822 employees, which represents 68.7 per cent of the 654,662 employees in the country, and the General Collective Agreement in the public sector covers 204,840 employees, which constitutes 31.3 per cent of the total number of employees in the country. Noting with interest a sharp rise in the number of workers covered by collective agreements between 2019 and 2021, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the factors that have led to this increase. The Committee also requests it to provide information on the provisions regulating the relationship between general and specific collective agreements in private and public sectors, and to continue providing information on the application of the Convention in practice, including statistical data concerning the number of collective agreements concluded in both public and private sectors and the number of workers covered.

Pakistan

Right of Association (Agriculture) Convention, 1921 (No. 11) (ratification: 1923)

Previous comment

In its previous comment, the Committee had trusted that the Government will ensure that it, as well as all the governments of the provinces, take the necessary measures to ensure that all workers engaged in agriculture, including in small agricultural holdings which do not run an establishment or farmers working on their own or with their family, enjoy the rights afforded by the Convention in law and in practice. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) the share of agriculture in the employed labour force in Pakistan (67.24 million) amounts to 37.4 per cent; (ii) all federal and provincial Industrial Relations Acts are applicable only to formal sector workers; (iii) the Industrial Relations Act 2012 (hereafter IRA 2012) – which covers all persons employed in any establishment or industry in the Islamabad Capital Territory or carrying on business in more than one province – does not cover the agricultural workers in its ambit, however there is no restriction on agricultural workers to form a union; (iv) Sindh Industrial Relations Act, 2013 (hereafter SIRA 2013) provides expressly in its section 1(3) that the scope of the Act extends to all persons employed in any establishment or industry, “including fishing and agriculture”, and Balochistan Industrial Relations Act, 2022 (hereafter BIRA 2022) provides in its section 1(4) that the Act shall apply to all workers and employers at all workplaces working or conducting business within Balochistan; (v) till date, the Government of Sindh has registered four unions of agriculture workers and two associations of landlords of agriculture farms; (vi) workers engaged in agriculture holdings which do not run an establishment or farmers working on their own or with family are out of the ambit of industrial relation laws. However, there is no restriction on agriculture workers to form a union. Further, they are allowed to form a cooperative society for promotion of their economic interests in accordance with cooperative principles, or a society established with the object of facilitating the operations of such a society and; (vii) the provinces are actively amending/promulgating the law relating to the right of association and extending its application to informal sector including the agriculture.

The Committee notes that even though IRA 2012; Punjab Industrial Relations Act, 2010 (hereafter PIRA 2010); and Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Industrial Relations Act, 2010 (hereafter KPIRA 2010) provide in their section 1(3) that they apply to “all persons employed in any establishment or industry” in the covered territory, and even though agriculture does not figure among the activities explicitly excluded from the scope of these Acts, they do not appear to cover agricultural establishments. In this regard, the Committee notes that Punjab Labour Policy 2018 advocates “initiation of dialogue with social partners to extend coverage and scope of the PIRA to the excluded categories of workers i.e., agriculture workers, domestic workers, home based workers and workers of informal sector”. It further notes that although SIRA 2013 and BIRA 2022 cover agricultural establishments, they leave out the informal sector, including small agricultural holdings which do not run an establishment, or farmers working on their own or with their family. In view of the above, the Committee notes with concern that only in two provinces, Sindh and Balochistan, workers in agricultural establishments are covered by the laws setting the framework for the exercise of the right to freedom of association in Pakistan, and therefore, a large share of agricultural workers remains excluded from the scope of these laws, both at the federal and provincial levels. It further notes that in practice, only three unions of agricultural workers in one province have been established. Therefore, the Committee urges the Government to take adequate measures to ensure that federal and provincial Industrial Relations Acts are amended so as to expressly cover all agricultural workers, including those in the informal sector, and to enable them to enjoy the rights conferred by the Convention in law and in practice. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress achieved in this respect.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1951)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the International Transport Workers’ Federation (ITF) received on 2 July 2020 and the Government reply thereto. In its previous comment, the Committee had urged the Government to investigate the 2015, 2017 and 2018 ITUC allegations of violence against workers and their arrest, detention, and prosecution for trade union activities, and to ensure that sanctions are imposed on law enforcement forces. The Government responds that even though most of the sectors concerned are out of the ambit of the Ministry of Overseas Pakistanis & Human Resource Development (hereafter MOP&HRD) as well as Labour Departments of the Provinces, the matter has been referred to the concerned quarter and information will be provided as soon as received by the Ministry. The Committee notes with deep regret that seven years after the communication of the first allegations brought up by the ITUC, which concern very serious violations of the workers' right to life and civil liberties, the Government has once again failed to report any investigation into the violent conduct of the law enforcement forces, the killing of two workers on 2 February 2016 and the alleged kidnapping of four union leaders and members on 3 February 2016 in connection with the Pakistan International Airlines (PIA) labour dispute. Therefore, the Committee once again urges the Government to ensure that investigations are conducted by the public authorities into the 2015, 2017 and 2018 ITUC allegations and that sanctions are imposed against law enforcement forces responsible for use of violence against workers.

The Committee notes the adoption of the Balochistan Industrial Relations Act No. XIX of 2022 (hereafter, BIRA 2022) on 22 June 2022, which addresses several issues raised in its previous comments.

The Committee also notes that the Committee on Freedom of Association referred to it the legislative aspects of Case No. 2096 (Report No. 392, October 2020, paragraph 109). These matters are discussed below.

Articles 2–9 of the Convention. The scope of the Convention. Excluded categories of workers. In its previous comment, the Committee had noted that sections 1(3) of the Industrial Relations Act (IRA) 2012, the Balochistan Industrial Relations Act (BIRA) 2010, the Khyber-Pakhtunkhwa Industrial Relations Act (KPIRA) 2010, the Punjab Industrial Relations Act (PIRA) 2010, and the Sindh Industrial Relations Act (SIRA) 2013 excluded many categories of workers from their scope. The Government reiterates in this regard that: (i) the exceptions provided in the federal and provincial acts are specific in nature and need to be imposed only in the cases where any action may lead to a serious security breach or an irreparable loss to the public at large; and (ii) unregistered unions/associations are formed under KPIRA 2010, and workers in private security firms can form unions. The Committee notes that only in Balochistan has there been a legislative change regarding the excluded categories of workers, where the exceptions retained are the following: (a) section 1(5) of BIRA 2022 allows the Government to impose reasonable restrictions on the exercise of the right to form associations or unions in any public sector organization, in the interest of sovereignty or integrity of Pakistan, for such time as it may deem proper; (b) section 1(6) provides that the act “shall not apply to Police, Levies or any of the Defense Services of Pakistan or any services or installations exclusively connected with or incidental to armed forces of Pakistan and essential services”. The Committee notes with interest that many previously excluded categories in Balochistan are now brought within the scope of the industrial relations legislation. Nevertheless, it notes that the exceptions retained in the new law are still larger than the ones authorized under the Convention:

- (i) regarding section 1(5) of the BIRA 2022, the Committee recalls that the Convention contains no provisions allowing the invocation of a state of emergency to justify exemption from the obligations arising under it or any suspension of their application. Any such exemption cannot be used to justify restrictions on civil liberties that are essential to the proper exercise of trade union rights, except in circumstances of extreme gravity and on condition that any measures affecting the application of the Convention are limited in scope and duration to what is strictly necessary to deal with the situation in question. The Committee notes with concern that the language of section 1(5) referring to the “interest of sovereignty and integrity of Pakistan” evokes concepts broader than a state of emergency and does not clearly indicate any limitation in time, thereby giving a too broad discretion to the government to impose restrictions on the rights guaranteed in the Convention to public sector employees. Considering that BIRA 2022 was adopted after the judgment of the High Court of Balochistan dated 24 June 2019 (C.P Nos 669/2013 & 400/2015), in which the Court ruled that the right to form trade unions is not available to civil servants, the Committee firmly recalls that it has always considered that the right to establish and join organizations should be guaranteed for all public servants and officials, irrespective of whether they are engaged in the state administration at the central, regional or local level, are officials of bodies which provide important public services or are employed in state-owned economic undertakings;

- (ii) concerning the reference to “any services or installations exclusively connected with or incidental to armed forces of Pakistan” in section 1(6), the Committee recalls that the exceptions under Article 9 of the Convention do not include civilian personnel in the armed forces, nor the civilian employees in the industrial establishments of the armed forces; and
- (iii) concerning the reference to “essential services” in section 1(6), the Committee is bound to repeat its previous comments concerning the distinction between the right to establish and join a union, of which only the armed forces and the police can be deprived, and the right to strike, which may be restricted in certain categories of public servants, essential services in the strict sense of the term, and situations of acute national or local crisis. While the exercise of the right to strike of the workers in essential services can be restricted or even prohibited, their exclusion from the right to establish and join unions is an infringement of the Convention.

Regarding trade union rights of the associations of public officials and employees of publicly owned undertakings, the Committee notes the observations of the ITF denouncing the derecognition of Pakistan Airline Pilots’ Association (PALPA), the sole representative organization for pilots in Pakistan, and unions representing other workers in PIA, as well as the termination of all working agreements through a notice of the employer communicated on 30 April 2020. This notice indicated that except for the Collective Bargaining Agent (CBA), no other union, society or association will be recognized as representative of all or any category of employees. In reply, the Government indicates that: (i) PALPA is neither a registered union, nor the recognized CBA under the IRA 2012, it is an association of persons registered under the Societies Registration Act (SRA) 1860; (ii) any agreement with it is a civil contract only, which can be terminated by any party; (iii) the company does not intend to stop trade union and collective bargaining activities in the establishment. The Committee recalls in this regard that as it had noted in its 2016 observation concerning the application of the Convention in Pakistan, the Government had indicated that public officials and employees of publicly owned undertakings which are excluded from the purview of the industrial relations legislation, get coverage under article 17 of the Constitution as enforced by the SRA and had referred to PALPA as an example of such associations. In view of the Government reply to the ITF observations, the Committee is bound to note that the categories of workers excluded from the industrial relations legislation cannot exercise the rights enshrined in the Convention by forming associations under the SRA. In view of the above, while welcoming certain legislative changes in Balochistan, the Committee urges the Government to ensure that the federal and provincial governments take the necessary measures to revise the IRA, the BIRA, the KPIRA, the PIRA and the SIRA so that all categories of workers can enjoy their rights under the Convention, the only admissible exception – which must be construed in a restrictive manner – being the police and the armed forces. It further urges the Government to ensure that the government of Balochistan takes all the necessary measures, including legislative, to guarantee that civil servants are able to form and join organizations of their own choosing freely and to engage in activities for the furtherance and defence of their members’ interest. Pending legislative reform, it also urges the Government to take all the necessary measures to ensure that the associations of currently excluded categories of workers can represent the interests of their members in relation to the employer and the authorities. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this respect.

Managerial employees. The Committee notes that sections 2 of IRA, BIRA, KPIRA, PIRA and SIRA contain an excessively broad definition of the term “employer”, and a correspondingly restrictive definition of the term “worker” or “workman”. The definition of “employer” includes any person responsible for management, supervision, and control of the establishment. In a department of the federal government or the government or local authority, officers and employees who belong to the superior, managerial, secretarial, directorial, supervisory or agency staff shall be deemed to fall within the category of “employers”. Pursuant to IRA, PIRA and SIRA (but not KPIRA and BIRA 2022), in any other establishment, every director, manager, secretary, agent or officer or person concerned with the management is considered an employer. The term worker is defined in contrast as a person not falling within the definition of employer, who is employed – including as a supervisor or apprentice – in an establishment or industry for hire or reward.

The Committee further notes that the effect of these definitions on workers’ organizations and on trade union rights of managerial staff is crystallized in sections 31(2) of the IRA and 17(2) of its provincial variants, which provide that an employer may require that a person, upon appointment or promotion to a managerial position, shall cease to be and disqualified from being a member or official of a trade union of workmen. BIRA 2022 additionally provides that the employer may impose such a requirement, provided that no promotion is effected against the will of the worker or to prejudice his/her right to trade unionism. The Government indicates in this regard that: (i) BIRA 2022 provides that managerial and administrative staff and staff of occupational groups shall have the right to form an association/organization or to join the association/organization of their own choice; (ii) the managerial employees have all those rights of association that employers have under the laws, namely that they can establish and join associations of their choice without previous authorization and establish and join federations and confederations; and (iii) the employees in managerial capacity have the status of employer as they represent employers at all legal fora, hence they cannot be treated at par with the workers. The Committee notes that the legal provisions referred to above deprive large categories of administrative, agency and managerial staff from their trade union rights as employees, because employers’ associations by definition represent employers who are workers’ counterparts and cannot become collective bargaining agents, undertake collective bargaining, raise an industrial dispute, give a strike notice, and have access to conciliation and voluntary arbitration proceedings. They also have a negative impact on workers’ organizations by significantly reducing the number of their potential members. The Committee recalls that it has always considered that: (i) senior managerial staff may be denied the right to join the same organizations as other workers, provided that they have the right to form their own organizations to defend their interests; and (ii) where managerial staff are denied the right to join the same organizations as other workers, the category of executive and managerial staff should not be so broadly defined as to weaken the organizations of other workers by depriving them of a substantial proportion of their actual or potential membership. The Committee welcomes the change introduced by the adoption of section 3(e) of BIRA 2022, that enables managerial employees to establish their own organizations which are distinct from employers’ and workers’ organizations. However, it notes with concern that despite its longstanding requests, this right is not yet guaranteed for them in the federal act and provincial acts other than the BIRA. Regarding the broad terms of the definition of “employer”, the Committee notes that they remain unchanged in the industrial relations legislation. In view of the above, the Committee urges the Government to ensure that the federal and provincial acts are revised with a view to: (i) enabling senior managerial workers to establish and join organizations that can adequately defend their occupational interests; and (ii) guaranteeing that workers’ organizations are not deprived of a substantial proportion of their actual or potential membership as a result of the current legal definitions of “workmen” and “employers”. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard.

Export processing zones (EPZs). For many years, the Committee has been requesting the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that the workers in EPZs can benefit from the rights enshrined in the Convention. The Committee recalls that these workers were excluded from the scope of industrial relations legislation (Industrial Relations Ordinance, 1969) pursuant to clause 7 of S.R.O

1004(1)/82, dated 10 October 1982. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Federal Government partially withdrew S.R.O 1004(1)/82, except clause 7, through a notification dated 5 August 2022. The Government indicates that with this notification, eight labour-related laws which were not applicable to EPZs became applicable; however, the only exemption remains the Industrial Relations Ordinance, 1969. The Government adds that the EPZ (Employment and Service Condition) Rules 2009 have been finalized and workers are accordingly given rights guaranteed under the Convention, including the right to strike. Taking due note of the information submitted by the Government, the Committee also notes that no copy of the 2009 Rules is attached to the Government report. Therefore, it cannot examine the extent to which these rules guarantee the rights enshrined in the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to submit a copy of the final version of EPZ (Employment and Service Condition) Rules 2009. It also requests the Government to provide information on the exercise of trade union rights in the EPZs, including the trade unions registered and the number of unionized workers, as well as any instances in which trade unions have been refused registration and the reasons therefor.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers and employers to establish and join organizations of their own choosing. The Committee had previously noted that pursuant to the IRA and its provincial variants, no worker shall be entitled to be a member of more than one trade union at any one time and had requested the Government to revise the relevant legal provisions. It notes that the Government reiterates its previous indications in this regard: (i) as per section 48 of the Factories Act, adult workers shall not be employed to work in any factory on any day on which they have already been working in any other factory; (ii) the restriction of membership in more than one trade union is very restrictive but vital for healthy trade unionism; in the same establishment it would result in overlapping membership of more than one rival trade union which generally have to contest referendums against each other for determination of CBA; (iii) pursuant to a portion of Form-C of the Khyber Pakhtunkhwa Industrial Relations Rules, 1974, while the same person cannot become a member of more than one union in the same establishment/group of establishments/industry to which the trade union relates, this is possible if the establishments are different.

The Committee recalls in this regard that it is not a requirement of the Convention that workers should have the right to join more than one union relating to the same establishment. However, as mentioned in its previous comments, it considers that workers who are engaged in more than one job – in different establishments – should be allowed, to join the corresponding union of their choice, that is more than one union; and in any event workers should be able, if they so wish, to join trade unions at the national and branch level as well as the enterprise level at the same time. Compliance with this principle will not entail overlapping memberships. The Committee notes with satisfaction, that section 3(a) of BIRA 2022 restricts membership in more than one trade union at any one time at the same workplace only, which brings this act in line with the above principle. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that IRA, KPIRA, PIRA and SIRA are also amended with a view to bringing them into conformity with the above principles. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard.

Article 3. The right of workers' and employers' organizations to organize their administration and activities and to formulate their programmes. Rights of minority unions. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that certain rights, in particular to represent workers in any proceedings and to check-off facilities, were granted only to CBAs, that is to say the most representative trade unions. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the check-off system will help minority unions in keeping proper record of subscription of their members. Concerning the provision of other rights of CBA to minority unions, the Government states that it would take away the difference between CBA and other unions but adds nevertheless that section 24(1) of BIRA 2022 provides that a trade union shall be permitted to act as a CBA on behalf of its members. The Committee further notes that section 27(1) of BIRA provides that if a CBA so requests, the employer shall provide check-off facilities to it; section 36(1) of BIRA concerning individual grievances provides that workers may bring individual grievances to the notice of the employer through their trade union or CBA, but section 36(4) concerning proceedings before the Labour Court refers to the CBA only; and section 37(1) of the BIRA 2022 concerning negotiations relating to collective differences and disputes refers to CBA or trade union where no CBA exists, but section 37(3) concerning notice of strike refers to the CBA only. The Committee notes that it is not clear whether these BIRA provisions referring to CBA, mean the CBA on behalf of the union's own members (section 24(1)), which can be any minority union, or the CBA for the establishment, that is to say the most representative trade union (section 24(2-11)). It requests the Government to clarify this matter. The Committee regrets that despite its repeated requests, the Government does not indicate any progress concerning the rights of minority unions. The Committee is therefore bound to reiterate that the distinction between most representative and minority unions should be limited to the recognition of certain preferential rights (for example, for such purposes as collective bargaining, consultation by the authorities or the designation of delegates to international organizations); however, the distinction should not have the effect of depriving those trade unions that are not recognized as being among the most representative, of the essential means of defending the occupational interests of their members (for instance, making representations on their behalf, including representing them in case of individual grievances), of organizing their administration and activities, and formulating their programmes (including giving notice of and declaring a strike), as provided for in the Convention. In view of the above, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that federal and provincial legislation is amended as soon as possible, with a view to guaranteeing full respect for the above-mentioned principles. It requests the Government to provide information on developments in this regard.

Right of workers' and employers' organizations to draw up their constitutions and freely elect their representatives. Banking sector. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that section 27-B of the Banking Companies Ordinance of 1962 restricted the possibility of becoming an officer of a bank union only to employees of the bank in question under penalty of up to three years' imprisonment, and had urged the Government to amend the legislation. The Committee recalls that this longstanding issue is also the object of Case No. 2096 before the Committee on Freedom of Association, which was first examined in October 2000. The Committee notes with deep regret that the Government does not provide any information concerning developments in this regard. It is therefore bound to reiterate that provisions like section 27-B infringe the right of organizations to draw up their constitutions and to freely elect representatives by preventing qualified persons (such as full-time union officers or pensioners) from being elected and by creating a risk of interference by the employer through the dismissal of trade union officers, which deprives them of their trade union office. Therefore, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the legislation by making it more flexible, either by admitting as candidates persons who have previously been employed in the occupation concerned, or by exempting from the occupational requirements a reasonable proportion of the officers of an organization, along the lines of section 8(d) of the IRA. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard.

Right of organizations to organize their administration and to formulate their programs. The Registrar's powers of investigation, inspection, and inquiry into the affairs of a trade union. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that the legislation conferred extensive powers of inspection, inquiry, and investigation "as he/she deems fit" to the Registrar regarding the internal affairs of unions and requested the Government to make legislative amendments to limit these powers. The Government indicates in this regard that: (i) the Registrar inspects the accounts and records of unions to avoid malpractice and ensure transparency. The purpose of inquiry into the unions' affairs is limited to unveiling certain crucial facts and figures; (ii) in the province of Sindh, in certain cases huge funds of the union were spent lavishly either by the outgoing or incoming executive but were not accounted for. The Registrar's power to check the accounts does not mean interference in the affairs of the union but is to ensure that expenditure was made properly; and (iii) the Government of Khyber Pakhtunkhwa commits that the financial powers of the Registrar under the KPIRA might be minimized. While noting that the Government once again indicates that the purpose of the Registrars' inquiry is limited and their power does not mean interference, the Committee recalls that it considers that the wording of the relevant legislative provisions empowering the Registrar to proceed to inquiry "as he/she deems fit" is excessively broad and not compatible with the principle enshrined in Article 3 of the Convention. The Committee notes with concern that the Government does not indicate any progress and furthermore section 15(e) of BIRA 2022 contains no change in this regard. It therefore once again requests the Government to ensure that the federal and provincial legislation is amended with a view to explicitly limiting the powers of financial supervision of the Registrar to the obligation of submitting annual financial reports and to verification in cases of serious grounds for believing that the actions of an organization are contrary to its rules or the law or in cases of a complaint or call for an investigation of allegations of embezzlement from a significant number of workers (2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 109).

Right of organizations to freely elect their representatives. Disqualification criteria. In its previous comments the Committee had noted that the IRA and its provincial variants establish excessively broad disqualification criteria for being elected or holding union office and had requested the Government to amend the legislation. The Committee recalls that the following grounds for disqualifications are provided in the legislation: (i) conviction and prison sentence for two years or more, or in an offence involving moral turpitude under the Pakistan Penal Code (PPC), unless a period of five years has elapsed after the completion of the sentence (IRA section 18); (ii) conviction for heinous offence under the PPC (section 7 of the BIRA, KPIRA, PIRA and SIRA); (iii) violation of the National Industrial Relations Commission or Labour Court order to stop a strike (section 44(10) of the IRA, 59(7) BIRA, 60(7) KPIRA, 56(7) PIRA, and 57(7) SIRA); (iv) conviction for embezzlement or misappropriation of funds (7 cum 69 PIRA and 7 cum 70 of the SIRA); and (v) conviction for contravention or failure to comply with the provisions of KPIRA (7 cum 74 KPIRA). The Committee notes the following information provided by the Government in this regard: (i) the grounds for disqualification in IRA are reasonable to protect the interest of discipline and good governance at enterprise level. The offences of theft, embezzlement and moral turpitude seriously damage the relationship of trust and mutual respect between employers and workers as well as such person's ability to represent workers; (ii) the grounds for disqualification under PIRA just cover the crucial minimum requirements as they only extend to a certain specified period; (iii) the Governments of Khyber Pakhtunkhwa and Sindh will discuss the matter in the Provincial Tripartite Consultative Committee; and (iv) the Government of Balochistan has proposed to omit disqualification for embezzlement and misappropriation of funds. The Committee welcomes that in BIRA 2022, disqualification for embezzlement and misappropriation of funds is indeed removed; however disqualification for heinous offence and violation of a court order to stop a strike are maintained. Noting with concern that the Government does not report any progress concerning this and other disqualification criteria noted herein, the Committee once again emphasizes that legislation which establishes excessively broad ineligibility criteria such as by means of a long list, including acts which have no real connection with the qualities of integrity required for the exercise of trade union office, is incompatible with the Convention. The Committee considers that not every contravention of industrial relations legislation, nor every violation of a judicial order to stop a strike, nor every conviction for the range of offences alluded to necessarily constitute acts of such a nature as to be prejudicial to the performance of trade union duties. The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to ensure that the federal and provincial legislation is amended so as to make the grounds for disqualification more restrictive and to provide information on developments in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98)

(ratification: 1952)

Previous comment

In its previous comment, in relation to the 2020 observations of the International Transport Workers' Federation, the Committee had requested the Government to ensure that pilots can exercise their right to collective bargaining through organizations that genuinely represent their interests, that the freely concluded collective agreements at the national airline company should be binding on the parties and to promote co-operation and dialogue among social partners in the aviation industry. Noting with regret that the Government does not provide information on any measures taken in this respect the Committee is therefore bound to reiterate its previous requests. The Committee had further requested the Government to respond to the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) allegations concerning acts of anti-union discrimination and acts of interference in trade union internal affairs that dated back to 2012 and 2015. The Government indicates in this regard that it is working to provide the right to establish and join organizations to all workers and employers and no anti-union dismissal or act of interference in union's internal affairs could be done by the employers. It further cites the provisions of the Balochistan Industrial Relations Act (BIRA) 2022 concerning the prohibition of anti-union discrimination and acts of interference by the employer. The Committee takes note of this information.

The Committee also notes that the Committee on Freedom of Association referred to it the legislative aspects of Case No. 2096 that relate to the Convention (Report No. 392, October 2020, paragraph 109). These matters are discussed below.

Articles 1-6 of the Convention. Scope of application of the Convention. The Committee notes that the Industrial Relations Act (IRA) 2012, the Khyber-Pakhtunkhwa Industrial Relations Act (KPIRA) 2010, the Punjab Industrial Relations Act (PIRA) 2010 and the Sindh Industrial Relations Act (SIRA) 2013, exclude numerous categories of workers (enumerated by the Committee in its 2022 comments on the application of Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87)) from their scopes of application. The Government indicates in this regard that it is its obligation to extend the right to freedom of association to all sectors of the economy, formal and informal and further refers to the adoption of BIRA 2022, which scope of application covers "all workers and employers at all workplaces"(section 1(4)), with the exception of "the Police, Levies or any of the Defence Services of Pakistan or any services or installations exclusively connected with or incidental to armed forces of Pakistan and essential services"(section 1(5)). The Committee notes with interest the legislative change in Balochistan, which has the effect of bringing many previously excluded categories of workers within the scope of the BIRA, allowing them to enjoy their rights under the Convention. It notes however, that the BIRA still excludes "any service or installation" connected to the armed forces, as well as "essential services"; and recalls in this regard that civilian personnel in the armed forces as well as workers in essential services should enjoy the rights and guarantees enshrined in the Convention. In view of the foregoing, while welcoming the legislative change in Balochistan, the Committee once again urges the Government to ensure that the federal and provincial governments take the necessary measures to amend the legislation so as to ensure that all workers, with the only possible exception of the police, the armed forces and the public servants engaged in the administration of the State benefit from the rights and guarantees enshrined in the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information with respect to measures taken in this regard.

Export processing zones (EPZs). The Committee recalls that since the adoption by the federal Government of S.R.O 1004(1)/1982 dated 10 October 1982 relating to exemption of EPZs from various labour laws, the EPZs were exempted from the application of industrial relations legislation (clause 7 of the S.R.O, referring to the applicable law at the time, namely the Industrial Relation Ordinance of 1969).

For many years, the Government kept reiterating that it was working on Export Processing Zones (Employment and Service Conditions) Rules, 2009, which would guarantee the right of EPZ workers to organize. The Government indicates in this regard that it has “partially” withdrawn S.R.O 1004(1)/1982 “except clause 7” through a notification dated 5 August 2021 and that now the only exemption to the application of labour laws in the EPZs is the Industrial Relations Ordinance. It adds that the 2009 Rules have been finalized and the workers in EPZs can enjoy the rights guaranteed under the Convention accordingly. The Committee notes however, that the Government does not provide a copy of the final version of 2009 Rules and therefore it is not in the position to evaluate whether and to what extent these Rules guarantee the rights enshrined in the Convention. In view of the foregoing, the Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the final version of the Export Processing Zones (Employment and Service Conditions) Rules, 2009. It firmly hopes that the rights of EPZ workers under the convention, especially their right to collective bargaining, is duly guaranteed in law and in practice and requests the Government to provide information concerning any collective bargaining taking place in the EPZs and any collective agreements concluded there, including the names of the parties and the number of workers covered.

Article 1 of the Convention. Protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. Banking sector. For the past 20 years, the Committee has repeatedly urged the Government to repeal section 27-B of the Banking Companies Ordinance, 1962, which imposes penal sanctions (up to 3 years imprisonment and/or fines) for the exercise of trade union activities during office hours. The Government indicates in this regard that after the promulgation of IRA 2012, almost all trade unions in banking sector are regulated under the federal law because of their trans-provincial character and despite section 27-B, unions in the banks are registered with the National Industrial Relations Commission (NIRC) and are properly working. It provides a list of unions in the banks all over the country. More precisely regarding section 27-B itself, the Government once again indicates that the Ministry is vigorously pursuing the matter with the concerned quarters for its removal. The Committee notes with deep concern that no progress is reported concerning the repealing of section 27-B, which punishes trade unionists for legitimate union activities and so constitutes a serious infringement of Article 1 of the Convention. The Committee therefore urges the Government once again to repeal section 27-B of the Banking Companies Ordinance, 1962, to enable workers in the banking sector to exercise trade union activities in conformity with Article 1 of the Convention.

Article 4 of the Convention. Collective bargaining. The Committee notes that pursuant to section 19 of the IRA and section 24(1) of the KPIRA, PIRA and SIRA, if a trade union is the only one in the establishment or group of establishments (or industry in the KPIRA, PIRA and SIRA) but it does not have at least one third of the employees as its members, no collective bargaining is possible at the given establishment or industry. In its previous comments, it had considered that these rules constitute an obstacle to the promotion of free and voluntary collective bargaining in practice. The Government indicates in this regard that section 24(1) of BIRA 2022 has incorporated the recommendation of the Committee and reads “A trade union shall be permitted to act as a collective bargaining agent on behalf of its members”. It adds that the other laws would be amended accordingly in consultation with the social partners. While noting with interest the change introduced in BIRA, and welcoming the Government's expression of intent to amend other federal and provincial laws likewise, the Committee expresses the firm hope that the legislation will be soon amended, with a view to ensuring that when there is no union representing the required percentage to be designated as the collective bargaining agent, collective bargaining rights are granted to the existing unions, jointly or separately, at least on behalf of their own members.

The Committee notes that the provisions on the determination of collective bargaining units give competence in this regard to the NIRC (section 62 of the IRA), the Labour Appellate Tribunal (section 25 of the KPIRA and PIRA) or the Registrar (section 25 of the BIRA and SIRA) and that previously certified unions can lose their status of collective bargaining agents as a result of a decision in which the parties played no part. The Committee notes with concern that BIRA 2022 reproduces this provision, and regrets that the Government does not report any measures taken to revise the law in this respect. The Committee therefore requests the Government to ensure that the necessary measures are taken by the federal and provincial governments to amend the legislation so that the social partners can participate in the determination or modification of the collective bargaining unit.

In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to ensure that both federal and provincial governments guarantee that the existence of elected workers' representatives directly elected to work councils is not used to undermine the position of the trade unions concerned or their representatives and to submit a copy of the Rules providing the notice and procedure for the election of workers' representatives to work councils. The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not provided any information in this respect. It is therefore bound to reiterate its request.

Collective bargaining in practice. The Committee notes with deep regret, that the Government has not responded to its repeated requests to provide information on the number of collective agreements concluded and in force, the sectors concerned, and the number of workers covered, as well as on any measures taken to promote collective bargaining. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will communicate the requested information in its next report.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1958)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the National Confederation of United Independent Unions (CONUSI) received on 31 August 2022 relating to issues addressed in this comment. The Committee notes that the CONUSI's allegations with regard to compulsory arbitration and the exercise of the right to strike in the air transport sector are being examined by the Committee on Freedom of Association (Case No. 3319). The Committee notes the observations of the National Council of Organized Workers (CONATO), received on 6 September 2022, alleging the intervention of the civil authorities in the decisions of trade union organizations with regard to their administration and obstacles on the part of the Government to the establishment and granting of legal personality to trade union organizations in various sectors. The Committee notes the Government's reply, received on 6 December 2022, to the CONUSI and the CONATO observations and will examine it in the context of the next examination of the application of the Convention.

Tripartite committees. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government with regard to the functioning of the committees which form part of the Panama tripartite agreement of 2012 and benefit from ILO technical support; the Implementation Committee and the Committee for the Rapid Handling of Complaints relating to Freedom of Association and Collective Bargaining. The Committee notes the Government's comments that during the COVID-19 pandemic, such tripartite committees were used to discuss the various measures to be implemented in order to address the social and labour problems arising from the pandemic with the social partners. In this respect, the Government highlights the establishment of the tripartite dialogue forum on the economy and labour development in Panama (Decision No. 150 of 27 April 2020), which was established in May 2020 and functioned for one month with ILO technical support. The Committee notes the Government's indication with regard to the adoption of 23 consensus agreements to preserve jobs, businesses and the economic recovery. On the other hand, the Committee notes that the CONUSI alleges that no effective consensus was reached on the measures adopted at the tripartite dialogue forum of May 2020. The Committee regrets the Government's indication that as of April 2020, the work of the tripartite committees was suspended by the pandemic and that it had not been possible to resume this work despite the attempts of the Ministry of Labour and Labour Development (MINTRADEL), because the required quorum was not reached due to the repeated absence of the CONATO. In this respect, the Committee notes that the CONATO and CONUSI have joint representation on the tripartite committees, as confirmed by the Government Procurator under section 1066 of the Labour Code, and that MINTRADEL will follow the Procurator's guidance. The Committee notes that the CONUSI states that inter-union conflicts have been engendered by the Government's policies, which have favoured trade unions other than CONUSI. The Committee recalls the potential of the two committees to play a fundamental role in achieving the implementation of the Convention. The Committee urges the Government, in consultation with the social partners and with the ongoing technical support of the Office, to take the necessary steps to review the applicable policies relating to representation of the different trade union organizations on the tripartite committees with a view to restarting their work in the near future and, the Committee reiterates its invitation to the various State authorities to take due account of the tripartite committees' decisions. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this respect.

The Committee notes the Government's indication concerning follow-up to the Memorandum of Understanding signed in 2016, relating to the Panama tripartite agreement of 2012, which establishes a timetable of activities including the establishment of a national tripartite body (Higher Labour Council), which should have been established in 2016 but which, with ongoing ILO technical support, is the topic of a bill scheduled for discussion at the July 2022 Session of the National Assembly. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on progress made in the establishment of this tripartite body.

Legislative matters. The Committee recalls that for many years it has been commenting on the following matters which raise problems of conformity with the Convention:

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers and employers without distinction whatsoever to establish and join organizations:

- the requirement that there may not be more than one association in a public institution, and that associations may have provincial or regional chapters, but not more than one chapter per province, under the terms of sections 179 and 182 of the Single Text of Act No. 9, as amended by Act No. 43 of 31 July 2009;
- the requirement of too large a membership (ten) for the establishment of an employers' organization and an even larger membership (40) for the establishment of a workers' organization at the enterprise level, under the terms of section 41 of Act No. 44 of 1995 (amending section 344 of the Labour Code), and the requirement of a high number of members (40) to establish an organization of public servants under section 182 of the Single Text of Act No. 9 (which, as indicated by the Government, has been declared unconstitutional by the Supreme Court, in a ruling of 30 December 2015); and
- the denial to public servants (non-career public servants, as well as those holding appointments governed by the Constitution and those who are elected and serving) of the right to establish unions.

Article 3. Right of organizations to elect their representatives in full freedom:

- the requirement to be of Panamanian nationality in accordance with the Constitution in order to serve on the executive board of a trade union.

Right of organizations to organize their activities and to formulate their programmes in full freedom:

- legislation interfering with the activities of employers' and workers' organizations (sections 452(2), 493(4) and 494 of the Labour Code); the obligation for non-members to pay a solidarity contribution in recognition of the benefits derived from collective bargaining (section 405 of the Labour Code); and the automatic intervention of the police in the event of a strike (section 493(1) of the Labour Code); and
- the prohibition on federations and confederations from calling strikes, the prohibition on strikes against the Government's economic and social policies and on strikes not related to an enterprise collective agreement; the authority of the Regional or General Labour Directorate to refer labour disputes to compulsory arbitration in private transport enterprises (sections 452 and 486 of the Labour Code); and the obligation to provide minimum services with 50 per cent of the staff in the transport sector, as well as the penalty of summary dismissal of public servants for failure to maintain minimum services (sections 155 and 192 of the Single Text of 29 August 2008, as amended by Act No. 43 of 31 July 2009).

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government that it has not been possible to reform the constitutional provision on the requirement to be of Panamanian nationality in order to serve on an executive board due to the political situation in the country and the fact that the Constitution is rigid, although the Government emphasizes its interest in eliminating this constitutional provision. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures envisaged or taken to amend this provision in the Constitution and to ensure that it is in conformity with the Convention.

With regard to the aforementioned provisions relating to the public sector, the Committee notes with concern that, according to the information provided by the Government, it has not been possible to make progress in the National Assembly with regard to the Bill on collective labour relations in the public sector due to the opposition of some organizations, and that a new bill must be drafted and submitted for discussion. The Committee recalls that in its previous comment it had welcomed the Bill with interest and had noted the Government's representation that the Bill was based on tripartite agreement. With regard to the pending legislative matters relating to the private sector, the Committee notes the Government's indication that progress has been limited due to the existing conflict in the Implementation Committee with respect to trade union representation. The Committee also notes the Government's confidence that once the Higher Labour Council has been established and is operational, more favourable conditions in which to make progress with the adoption of the legislation and the necessary reforms will be created such that the pending legislative matters will be resolved. The Committee also notes that the Committee on Freedom of Association expressed confidence that the Government would adopt legislation to regulate the establishment, registration and functioning of public sector trade unions at the earliest opportunity in accordance with the principles of freedom of association and collective bargaining (389th Report, June 2019, Case No. 3317, paragraph 527). The Committee urges the Government, without delay and in consultation with the social partners, to take the necessary steps to bring its legislation on collective labour relations in the public sector, as well as those outstanding legislative matters relating to the private sector into conformity with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress achieved in this respect and reminds the Government that it may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office.

Application of the Convention in practice. Granting of legal personality by the administrative authority. With regard to the normalization of granting legal personality to trade unions, the Committee notes that the Government highlights that during the period from March 2014 to March 2022, MINTRADEL granted legal personality to 16 public servants' unions and 72 trade unions in the private sector. The foregoing stands in contrast with the period from July 2009 to June 2014, during which the legal personality of only 9 private sector trade unions was approved. The Committee notes the Government's indication that from May 2018 to May 2022, 22 applications for legal personality were denied due to the fact that, in general terms, they were not in accordance with the relevant legal provisions, and that three applications remained to be approved. The Government indicates that in 2022, no applications for legal personality in the public sector were denied. The Committee notes that the three applications pending approval were submitted between April, May and June 2021. The Committee recalls that under Article 7 of the Convention, the recognition of legal personality cannot be denied to organizations that comply with the requirements established by the legislation. While taking due note of the overall increase in the number of legal personalities granted, the Committee requests the Government to ensure that the normalization of the process of granting legal personality applies fully to public sector as well as private sector organizations. Observing that the period of time required for decisions on the granting of legal personality is excessive in some cases, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary steps to expedite these procedures and to provide information in this respect.

Compensatory guarantees. The Committee notes the Government's reply to the observations of the CONUSI and the International Transport Workers' Federation (ITF) of 2017 and 2018, with respect to the effectiveness of dispute settlement procedures, particularly as compensatory guarantees, in the Panama Canal. The Government indicates that the CONUSI and the ITF lack representativeness in the Panama Canal labour regime, since they are not trade union organizations or bargaining units recognized by the Labour Relations Board of the Panama Canal Authority, and that the Committee on Freedom of Association (Case No. 3106) examined this matter and closed the case. The Committee notes the CONUSI's indication in its observations that it is a confederation to which several trade unions representing workers in the Panama Canal belong, together with the ITF. The Committee recalls that workers deprived of the right to strike should, in practice, be afforded impartial and rapid compensatory guarantees, such as conciliation and mediation procedures leading, in the event of deadlock in negotiations, to an arbitration mechanism seen to be reliable by the parties concerned. The Committee also recalls that the Committee on Freedom of Association closed Case No. 3106 in 2018, trusting that the Government would continue to follow up the issues raised with the unions concerned to consider any relevant improvements (387th Report, October 2018, Case No. 3106, paragraph 47). Noting that the Government does not provide further details with regard to the effectiveness of the dispute settlement procedures established as compensatory guarantees in the Panama Canal, the Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information in this respect including the number of procedures initiated and resolved and their duration.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1966)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the National Confederation of United Independent Unions (CONUSI) received on 31 August 2022, containing allegations of violations of freedom of association and collective bargaining, including non-compliance with the collective agreement signed by the Ships' Deck Officers and Pilots (UCOC) and the Panama Canal Administration, and anti-union practices, bad faith in collective bargaining, interference and persecution of trade union leaders and trade union members in enterprises in the electricity industry, in the public sector and other sectors, as well as other issues examined in this comment. The Committee also notes the observations of the National Council of Organized Workers (CONATO) received on 6 September 2022 containing allegations of obstacles to freedom of association and collective bargaining, including the prolongation of collective bargaining processes and the adoption of unilateral measures by the Government since the beginning of the COVID-19 pandemic. The Committee takes note of the Government's reply to the observations of the CONUSI and the CONATO, received on 6 December 2022, which it will take into consideration at its next examination of the application of the Convention in Panama.

The Committee notes the Government's comments and the detailed observations of CONUSI with respect to Cases Nos 3317, 3319 and 3377 which are pending before the Committee on Freedom of Association, and Case No. 3328 which was examined and closed by the Committee on Freedom of Association.

Tripartite committees. The Committee notes the Government's information regarding the functioning of the committees which form part of the Panama tripartite agreement of 2012, and which benefit from the technical assistance of the ILO: the Compliance Committee and the Committee for the Rapid Handling of Complaints relating to Freedom of Association and Collective Bargaining (the Complaints Committee). The Committee notes the Government's comments that: (i) due to the COVID-19 pandemic, the committees' functioning has been suspended since March 2020; and (ii) due to the lack of a statutory quorum, it has not been possible to reactivate the functioning of the tripartite committees even though the Ministry of Labour and Labour Development has called meetings. In its examination of the application of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), the Committee noted the reasons cited by the Government for the challenges to reactivating the functioning of the tripartite committees, including a dispute among trade unions. In addition, the Committee notes the observations of CONUSI, which alleges that such disputes have been generated by governmental policies that have been more favourable to other trade union organizations. Recalling the fundamental role that the two committees have played and should be able to continue to play in strengthening collective labour relations and achieving full application of the Convention, the Committee urges the Government to, in consultation with the social partners and with the continued technical support of the Office, take the necessary steps to review the policies applicable to the representation of the various trade union organizations on the tripartite committees with a view to reactivating their functioning in the near future. It also reiterates its invitation to the various state authorities to take duly into account the decisions of the committees in question. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this respect.

Article 1 of the Convention. Adequate protection against anti-union discrimination. The Committee recalls that in its previous comments it noted that a number of trade union leaders in the public sector whose reinstatement had been recommended by the Complaints Committee had yet to be reinstated. The Committee notes the Government's indication that of the 45 cases before the Complaints Committee concerning the reinstatement of trade union leaders: (i) five of them have been closed further to reinstatements and payment for lost wages; and (ii) in the remaining cases, some workers have already been reinstated or reassigned but there have been no payments for lost wages, with the exception of the workers of the Panama Fire Brigade. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) the payment of lost wages is the subject of legal debate within the Government; (ii) various institutions have not provided information or have refused to follow up on the recommendations of the Complaints Committee; (iii) in some cases, the bodies are waiting for information from trade union organizations; and (iv) further progress is expected once the Higher Labour Council is established. In this respect, the Committee notes the Government's information with regard to Convention No. 87 that there are plans for the discussion in the National Assembly of a Bill on the establishment of this Council as of July 2022. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that all the trade union leaders referred to in Agreement No. 4 of the Complaints Committee are reinstated in their jobs as soon as possible and that the reinstatement complies with the terms of the Agreement.

Articles 4 and 6. Right to collective bargaining. Pending legislative issues. The Committee was expecting the adoption, as soon as possible, of the preliminary Bill regulating collective labour relations in the public sector, harmonizing national legislation with the Convention and addressing the following pending legislative issues:

- the payment of wages for strike days attributable to the employer to be a matter for collective bargaining and not imposed by law (section 514 of the Labour Code);
- the requirement for the number of representatives of the parties in negotiation to be between two and five (section 427 of the Labour Code);
- the regulation of mechanisms for the settlement of legal disputes, and the possibility for employers to submit lists of demands and initiate a conciliation procedure; and
- the guarantee of the right to collective bargaining for public employees and public servants who are not engaged in the administration of the State.

The Committee notes with regret the information provided by the Government that it was not possible to advance in the National Assembly with the Bill on collective labour relations in the public sector owing to the political agenda of groups of legislators and the opposition of some trade union organizations, which had already been part of the consensus on the Bill, thereby making it necessary to resubmit a Bill for consideration by the National Assembly. In addition, the Committee welcomes the Government's information relating to the conclusion of the first collective agreement in the public sector (excluding those of the Panama Canal Authority) in June 2019 between the University of Panama and the National Union of Workers of the University of Panama (SINTUP), even though the legislative measures on this matter have not yet been adopted. The Committee notes that the Government trusts that once the Higher Labour Council is established and operational, more favourable conditions will be created to move forward with the adoption of necessary reforms and legislation in order to resolve the pending legislative issues. The Committee urges the Government to, without delay and in consultation with the social partners, take measures to harmonize the legislation with the Convention, including the adoption of legislation on collective labour relations in the public sector and the pending legislative issues relating to the Labour Code. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this respect and reminds it that it may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office.

Application of the Convention in practice. Collective bargaining in the maritime sector. The Committee previously requested the Government to report on the number of collective agreements concluded in the maritime sector. The Committee notes the Government's information that the collective agreements in question fall within the activity of "transport, storage and postage", in line with the corresponding statistical classification. The Committee notes that 280 collective agreements were concluded from March 2018 to 2022, covering a total of 180,532 workers in that period. The Committee notes that of the agreements mentioned, 33 relate to the activity of "transport, storage and postage", but that it is not possible to identify the ones that relate specifically to the maritime sector. In the light of the foregoing, the Committee requests the Government to continue to provide statistical information relating to the number of collective agreements concluded in the country, including the sectors of activity and the number of workers covered, and identifying those that relate specifically to the maritime sector.

Papua New Guinea

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2023, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

Legislative matters. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted the Government's indication that the new Industrial Relations Bill (IRB 2014) was undergoing a vetting process at the Government Executive Committee and the Central Agency and Consultative Council to harmonize it with other relevant legislation and that the revised Bill should be presented to Cabinet before November 2016 or early 2017 and consultations on the matter should be held in the national Tripartite Consultative Council. Noting that the last information sent by the Government through an anticipated report dates back to 5 January 2017 and that its 2018 report was not received, the Committee hopes that the Government will provide in its next report information on the outcome of these consultations and whether the IRB 2014 has been enacted.

Article 1 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. The Committee had previously requested the Government to provide information on the measures taken to ensure effective implementation of the prohibition of anti-union discrimination in practice and to provide statistics on the number of anti-union discrimination complaints brought before the competent authorities, their follow-up, sanctions and remedies imposed. Noting that the Government did not provide specific information in this regard, the Committee reiterates its previous request.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. Power of the Minister to assess collective agreements on the grounds of public interest. The Committee had previously requested the Government to take the necessary measures to bring section 50 of the Industrial Relations Bill (2011) into conformity with the principle that the approval of a collective agreement may only be refused if it has a procedural flaw or does not conform to the minimum standards laid down by general labour legislation. While observing once again that the Government does not provide a copy of the Bill, the Committee takes note of the Government's indication that section 50 of the IRB 2014 has been amended and that under the revised version the Attorney General is not entitled to appeal against the making of an award on the grounds of public interest.

Compulsory arbitration in cases where conciliation between the parties has failed. While recalling that it had noted the conformity of section 78 of the IRB 2014, as described by the Government, with the Convention, the Committee notes that the Government has still not clarified the content of section 79 of the IRB 2014. The Committee trusts once again that the Government, taking into account the Committee's comments, will ensure the full conformity of any revised legislation with the Convention. In this regard, the Committee encourages the Government to avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office, if it so wishes and requests it to provide detailed information on the process of revision of the Industrial Relations Bill.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Paraguay

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1962)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Central Confederation of Workers – Authentic (CUT-A) received on 30 August 2022, which refer to matters examined in the present comment, and which mention that the Government report does not reflect a tripartite approach due to its very late receipt by the CUT-A. The Committee also notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) alleging violations of freedom of association and collective bargaining in various sectors, including the health and public sectors, received on 1 September 2022. The Committee observes that the Government has not responded to the observations of the ITUC from 2010 and 2015, in connection with the arrest of trade unionists, dismissals, anti-trade union transfers and the refusal of the Government to register certain trade union organizations. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in respect of the above-mentioned allegations and observations.

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. Pending legislative issues. The Committee recalls that for many years it has been highlighting the inconsistency of certain provisions of the Labour Code with the Convention, specifically in respect of:

- the requirement of an unduly large number of workers (300) to establish a branch trade union (section 292);
- the prohibition on joining more than one union, whether at the level of the enterprise or industry, occupation or trade, or institution (section 293(c));
- the imposition of unduly demanding conditions of eligibility for office on the executive committee of a trade union (section 293(d) and 298(a));
- the requirement for trade unions to respond to all requests from the labour authorities for consultations or reports (sections 290(f) and 304(c));

- the obligation to provide a minimum service in the event of a strike in public services that are essential to the community without any requirement to consult the employers' and workers' organizations concerned (section 362); and
- the requirement that, for a strike to be called, its sole purpose must be directly and exclusively linked to the workers' occupational interests (sections 358 and 376(a)).

The Committee recalls that in its previous observation, it noted the Government's indication that it had requested ILO technical assistance and was recruiting an expert to formulate a draft bill to bring the Labour Code into line with ratified Conventions relating to freedom of association. The Committee regrets to note the Government's indication that no such bill has yet been drafted. The Committee also notes, from the observations of the CUT-A, that no progress has been made in respect of the measures adopted by the Government regarding pending legislative questions. The Committee urges the Government, in consultation with the social partners, to take the necessary measures to align the Labour Code with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to report on progress made in this respect and recalls that the Government may avail itself of ILO technical assistance.

The Committee recalls that the application of the percentages established in section 292 of the Labour Code could result in a requirement of up to 100 workers to establish a trade union in institutions of up to 500 employees and a requirement of an even higher number of members for public institutions with a large number of workers. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government that there are trade unions in all public institutions, some with one and others with more than ten unions. It also notes the Government's indication that it considers it better to maintain section 292 as it stands, in order to avoid trade union fragmentation. The Committee further notes the observations of the CUT-A, indicating the absence of consultations between the Government and the social partners on this subject. The Committee recalls that mechanisms exist to avoid trade union fragmentation and, at the same time, to safeguard the right of workers to establish organizations of their own choosing. In light of the above, the Committee once again requests the Government to hold consultations with the social partners with a view to ensuring that section 292 of the Labour Code does not, in effect, undermine the right of workers in the public sector to establish organizations of their choosing. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this respect.

The Committee welcomes the Government's indication that a technical legal team has been appointed in the Ministry of Education and Sciences to work on a proposal to amend section 38 of the Teachers' Statute, which establishes that teachers must have been registered for five years in order to qualify for trade union leave, to bring the provision into compliance with Article 3 of the Convention. The Committee expects that these amendments will be completed without delay, in consultation with the social partners. The Committee requests the Government to communicate information on all progress achieved in this respect.

Compulsory arbitration. The Committee recalls that in its previous comments it noted that sections 284 and 320 of the Code of Labour Procedure regarding referral of collective disputes to compulsory arbitration are not applied in practice, since they have been tacitly repealed by section 97 of the Constitution of the Republic of Paraguay, which establishes that arbitration shall be optional. Observing that the Government reports no specific progress on this subject, the Committee once again requests, in the light of the provisions of the Constitution of Paraguay and in order to avoid all possible ambiguity in interpretation, that the Government take the necessary measures to amend or repeal expressly the above-mentioned provisions of the Code of Labour Procedure.

Registration in practice of trade unions and their executive committees. The Committee notes the Government's reply to the CUT-A observations of 2018 to the effect that the executive committee of the ESSAP – SITUE United Workers' Union was registered on 3 August 2020. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government on the number of workers affiliated to trade unions in the 2018-2020 period, in the public sector (110,881) and in the private sector (36,388). The Committee also notes the information disaggregated by sex of members holding positions on the executive committees of trade unions from 2018 to date by sector, public (5,774 men and 2,907 women) and private (5,338 men and 1,060 women). The Committee further notes that the application of the new online registration system for trade unions did not function as foreseen, since the trade unions opted for the in-person system. The Committee notes from the statistical data provided by the Government that from 2018 to 2022, a total of 16 trade unions were provisionally registered and 107 trade unions registered their executive committees. The Committee takes due note of the measures adopted and information provided by the Government.

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Central Confederation of Workers Authentic (CUT-A) received on 30 August 2022, which refer to matters considered in the present comment. The Committee also notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) alleging anti-trade union dismissals, including that of the Chairperson of the National Union of Doctors and in the education sector, as well as other restrictions to freedom of association and collective bargaining in the health and public sector, received on 1 September 2022. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

The Committee also takes note of the information provided by the Government on the adoption of measures to address the COVID-19 pandemic, such as a rapid resolution system for labour disputes, including mediation hearings by telephone and digital means.

Articles 1 to 3 of the Convention. Pending legislative matters. The Committee recalls that, since the adoption of Act No. 213 of 1993 establishing the Labour Code, it has been highlighting the lack of compliance of various provisions of the Labour Code with the Convention. The specific issues are: (i) the absence of legal provisions affording protection to workers who are not trade union leaders against all acts of anti-union discrimination; (ii) the absence of adequate and sufficiently dissuasive penalties for non-observance of the provisions relating to the employment stability of trade union officers and mutual interference between workers' and employers' organizations; and (iii) the delays in the application of justice in relation to acts of anti-union discrimination and interference. The Committee notes with regret the Government's indication that to date no preliminary draft has yet been formulated bringing the Labour Code into conformity with the ratified Conventions on freedom of association. In this regard, the Committee notes the observations of the CUT-A indicating the absence of information regarding measures adopted by the Government to address pending legislative matters. Observing that the Government provides no information on any specific progress regarding measures taken to bring the Labour Code into conformity with the Convention and recalling that it has been requesting legislative reform since 1994, the Committee urges the Government, in consultation with the social partners, to take the necessary measures to ensure full conformity of the legislation and national practice with the requirements of Articles 1 to 3 of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to keep it informed of progress made in this regard and recalls that the Government can avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office in this regard.

Articles 1 and 6. Public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. The Committee recalls that it has been requesting the Government to take the necessary measures to guarantee adequate legislative protection against acts of anti-union discrimination for public servants and public employees covered by the Convention since 2004. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Constitution protects all public servants from trade-union discrimination (sections 88 and 102). Equally, section 49 of Act No. 1626/2000 provides that public servants may file administrative appeals and take legal proceedings in defence of the right, without any discrimination, to equality of opportunity and treatment in their position. The Committee also notes the adoption of Act No. 6715/2021 on administrative procedures, in force since September 2022 which: (i) regulates the procedures for administrative appeals and the procedure for sanctions; (ii) applies to all State bodies and entities with administrative functions; and (iii) includes among its objectives the respect for fundamental rights. The Committee observes that, although the administrative appeals filed by public official in defence of their rights, such as the summary administrative procedures to be followed for the dismissal of a public official protected by trade union employment stability (section 63 of Act No. 1626/2000), guarantee the rights of the public official in conformity with Act No. 6715/2021, the legal system, apart from the Constitution, does not specifically include protection against acts of anti-union discrimination for all workers in the public sector covered by the Convention, and does not provide sufficiently dissuasive penalties should those acts occur.

The Committee also notes the approval, through the adoption of Decision No. 516/2020, of the second Plan for Equality, Inclusion and Elimination of Discrimination, valid until 2024, which establishes mechanisms to address and penalise acts of discrimination occurring under the responsibility of the public institutions. The Committee further notes that the Secretariat of the Public Service (SFP) adopted the Protocol for action against workplace violence with a gender perspective (Decision SFP No. 387/2018 of 8 June 2018), which aims to prevent, provide guidance and resolve cases of workplace violence, including discrimination, in public institutions. The Committee observes that both the Plan and the Protocol define discrimination in a broad manner, without however referring explicitly to trade union affiliation or activities as a prohibited motive of discrimination. The Committee notes that the Protocol establishes different bodies, including a Standing Commission for Investigation (CPI), which is mandated to issue recommendations to the SFP and to take preventive action. The Committee observes that although the CPI may issue recommendations, including in respect of applicable penalties (verbal warnings, mandatory trainings, summary administrative procedures against the person responsible), those penalties are not sufficiently dissuasive, and could in practice fail to provide adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination.

The Committee also recalls that in its previous comment it requested the Government to supply information regarding the complaints of acts of anti-union discrimination made to the Transparency and Anti-Corruption Directorate under the action protocol and assistance guidelines for cases of labour discrimination and harassment in the public service (SFP Decision No. 415/16 of 30 May 2016). The Committee notes the observations of the CUT-A indicating the absence of measures adopted by the Government in respect of the Committee's earlier comments.

In light of the above, the Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the application of the Protocol for action against workplace violence with a gender perspective and the Plan for Equality, Inclusion and the Elimination of Discrimination with regard to the complaints concerning acts of anti-union discrimination against public servants and officials covered by the Convention, including the number of investigations undertaken and the penalties issued, as well as on other measures adopted in this respect. Observing that the Government provides no information in this connection, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide information regarding the complaints concerning acts of anti-union discrimination made to the Transparency and Anti-Corruption Directorate.

Observing with concern that the legislation applicable to public employees still fails to explicitly prohibit the acts of anti-trade union discrimination included in the Convention and that it has not received detailed information on the effectiveness of the multiple existing general mechanisms, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures, in consultation with the social partners, to adopt legislative provisions that expressly prohibit anti-union discrimination in the public sector and establish mechanisms that guarantee all public sector workers covered by the Convention effective protection against acts of anti-union discrimination, including accessible, rapid and impartial proceedings and sufficiently dissuasive remedies, and penalties. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this respect.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining in practice. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the Ministry of Labour, Employment and Social Security (MTESS): (i) in 2021, through the Citizens' Channel (Canal Ciudadano), provided interactive training on collective bargaining; and (ii) launched an electronic procedure to facilitate the approval and registration of collective agreements. The Committee observes that four meetings of the Tripartite Consultative Council (CCT) were held, respectively in 2018, 2019, 2020 and 2021, noting in general terms that the 2018 meeting dealt with social dialogue and freedom of association. The Committee notes the statistics provided regarding the number of collective agreements registered in various sectors: six in 2017; three in 2018; eighteen in 2019; four in 2020; and four in 2022. The Committee invites the Government to continue to provide information on the activities of the CCT, in particular on the measures that are adopted, or are subject to dialogue, to encourage and promote collective bargaining. Observing on the one hand, that the statistics provided by the Government show a limited number of collective agreements negotiated, and on the other hand, that no details are included on how many agreements are in force, or the number of workers covered by agreements, the Committee requests the Government to continue providing information in this respect, specifying the sectors and the number of workers covered by collective agreements. Finally, the Committee requests the Government to continue providing information regarding the measures adopted in conformity with Article 4 of the Convention, to promote collective bargaining at all levels.

Peru

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1960)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), Autonomous Workers' Confederation of Peru (CATP), Coordination of Trade Union Confederations of Peru (which groups together the General Confederation of Workers of Peru, the Single Confederation of Workers of Peru, the CATP and the Confederation of Workers of Peru) received on 1 September 2022, which relate to matters examined by the Committee in the present comment, as well as allegations of anti-union persecution against trade union leaders and members. The Committee further notes the observations of the National Confederation of Private Business Institutions (CONFIEP), received on 1 September 2022 and relating to matters examined by the Committee in the present comment. The Committee notes the Government's response to all the observations received. The Committee notes the Government's response to the observations of the ITUC of 2017 and the CATP of 2018.

Legislative developments. The Committee notes that Presidential Decree No. 014-2022-TR, published on 24 July 2022, amends the Regulations of the Collective Labour Relations Act (LRTC) and observes, among other aspects, that the Decree:

- explicitly recognizes the right of workers to the direct membership of federations and confederations (section 4);
- explicitly recognizes the right to establish unions of "enterprise groups" and "production chains or subcontracting networks" (section 4);
- facilitates the collection of trade union contributions by federations and confederations by only requiring the accreditation of the respective membership, which shall be provided by the higher-level organization receiving the contribution (section 16-A);

- removes section 63 of the Regulations, which established a requirement not set out in the Act for the calling of strikes for the defence of labour rights (the presentation of the judicial ruling that has been accepted or become final);
- establishes the explicit prohibition for employers to replace, directly or indirectly, striking workers, and any act that impedes or obstructs the exercise of the right to strike;
- simplifies the documentary requirements for the administrative procedure of the notification of strikes, replacing the requirement to submit a legalized copy of the proceedings of the assembly in which the strike was decided upon, by the submission of a simple copy; and
- makes explicit reference to the administrative procedure for the notification of strikes, with the indication that it is an administrative procedure subject to prior assessment and is assumed to be approved if no objections are raised.

The Committee observes that the trade union confederations consider that the Decree can contribute to alleviating the serious situation with regard to trade union rights in the country and indicate, among other aspects, that the explicit recognition of the right to establish unions of enterprise groups, production chains and subcontracting networks can be particularly important for outsourced workers. The Committee also notes that the CONFIEP: (i) indicates that the Decree should have been subject to consultation in the National Labour and Employment Promotion Council (CNTPE) in accordance with the Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144); and (ii) considers that the amendment of the LRCT Regulations by the Presidential Decree will affect relations between workers and employers in the private and public sectors and public enterprises since, among other aspects, it broadens the forms of trade union organization, makes the procedures more flexible for the establishment of a trade union organization and provides that employers cannot unilaterally extend the scope of the collective agreement to workers who are not covered by its scope of application, thereby necessarily promoting trade union membership. The Committee notes in this regard the Government's indication that, far from affecting the balance in collective relations between employers and workers, the Presidential Decree has its origins in the identification of the current worrying situation with regard to freedom of association in the country. The Government emphasizes in this respect that in 2021 the unionization rate at the national level was a mere 5 per cent and that over the past decade the number of unionized workers has grown more slowly than the number of non-unionized workers. The Government adds that, although the CNTPE, which is tripartite in composition, agreed in May 2022 to prepare a statement to reaffirm and reinforce social and labour dialogue, in the month of July 2022 the employers' organizations notified the suspension of their participation in the CNTPE, indicating that the approval of the statement on social dialogue referred to above had been impeded by the adoption of Presidential Decree No. 014-2022-TR. Recalling the crucial importance of social dialogue and consultation with organizations of employers and workers for the preparation and development of legislation on collective labour relations, the Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will ensure that such consultations are held. The Committee hopes that the concerns relating to the Presidential Decree will be duly addressed through tripartite social dialogue in the CNTPE and that any issues impeding the functioning of the CNTPE will be rapidly resolved. It requests the Government to keep it informed in this respect. The Committee also expresses the hope that the implementation of the Presidential Decree which, according to the Government, has its origins in concerns at the situation of freedom of association in the country, will contribute to ensuring the full enjoyment and exercise of the rights set out in the Convention and requests the Government to provide information on the impact of the Decree's application.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of all workers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish and join organizations. For several years, the Committee has been indicating to the Government the need to revise Act No. 28518, its Regulations and the General Education Act in order to ensure the explicit recognition of freedom of association in training schemes. The Committee notes the Government's indication that on 13 April 2022, Ministerial Decision No. 092-2022-TR provided for the pre-publication of the preliminary draft of the Labour Code drawn up by the Ministry of Labour and Employment Promotion (MTPE), which defines in section 75 the arrangements for vocational training, such as special types of employment contracts, recognizing the labour element of such contracts. The Government indicates that it received comments and suggestions concerning the preliminary draft text from the public until June 2022, which were shared with the workers' and employers' representatives participating in the CNTPE. The Committee observes the indications by the trade union confederations that: (i) up to now there has been no initiative to amend Act No. 28518; (ii) the generic recognition in the Constitution of trade union rights does not on its own empower persons engaged in training schemes to exercise those rights; and (iii) section 76 of the preliminary draft indicates that vocational training arrangements are not covered by general labour regulations, which means that the preliminary draft text retains the characteristic of the current legislation of failing to offer specific recognition of the trade union rights of persons engaged under vocational training schemes. The Committee hopes that the preliminary draft of the Labour Code will be the subject of extensive tripartite consultation and that, during this process of dialogue, consideration will also be given to the adoption of specific measures to revise the legislation so as to set out the explicit recognition of the right to freedom of association of workers engaged under vocational training schemes. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress achieved in this regard.

In previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to revise the relevant provisions of the legislation to secure the exercise of the right to organize, in law and practice, of judges and prosecutors, and of employees in positions of trust and leadership in the public administration. The Committee requested the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard. The Committee notes with regret the Government's indication that it has noted the request for information which will be provided shortly. The Committee recalls that Article 2 of the Convention guarantees the basic right to establish and join organizations of their own choosing to all workers without distinction whatsoever, including all public servants, irrespective of the nature of their functions, and that the only limitations permitted by the Convention are for members of the armed forces and the police. However, the Committee has indicated that senior public officials may be barred from joining trade unions provided they are entitled to establish their own organizations to defend their interests (2013 General Survey on collective bargaining in the public service, paragraphs 43 et seq., and 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 66). The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to revise the relevant provisions of the legislation in order to secure the right to organize, in law and practice, of judges and prosecutors, and of employees in positions of trust or leadership in the public administration. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard.

Article 3. Right of organizations to organize their activities and formulate their programmes. Holding a strike ballot. In previous comments, the Committee noted that, under section 40 of Act No. 30057, the Civil Service Act, section 62, as amended, of the Regulations of the Consolidated Single Text of the Collective Labour Relations Act (the TUO of the LRCT), provides that the decision to call a strike must be adopted in the manner set out in the statutes, provided that the decision is taken by at least the majority of the voting members present in the assembly, and that this provision is applicable, by extension, to strikes in the public administration. The Committee notes that, although the trade union confederations indicate that Act No. 31188, the State Sector Collective Bargaining Act, published on 2 May 2021, repealed section 40 of the Civil Service Act, the Government indicates that subsection 13(2)(e) of Act No. 31188 provides that workers may call strikes in accordance with the provisions of the TUO of the LRCT.

Determining the unlawfulness of strikes. In its previous comment, the Committee observed that the Civil Service Support Commission was competent to decide whether a strike is inappropriate or unlawful and, as it had yet to be established, the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the competence to determine the lawfulness of strikes, in both the private and public sectors, does not lie with the Government, but rather with an independent body that has the trust of the parties. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, while the body that is competent for determining the appropriate nature of a strike in the private sector is the Administrative Labour Authority, which issues its decision with independence, impartiality and in accordance with the law, the preliminary draft of the Labour Code proposes that, at the request of the employer or employers affected by the measures, the judicial authority shall determine the lawfulness or unlawful nature of a strike. With regard to the public sector, the Government recalls that, in accordance with the Tenth Supplementary Transitional Provision of the Regulations of the Civil Service Act, the Administrative Labour Authority shall assume the functions of the Civil Service Support Commission until the latter is established. The Committee observes that the trade union confederations consider that the fact that the Administrative Labour Authority continues to determine the lawful nature of strikes in both the private and the public sectors (in view of the persistent failure to establish the Civil Service Support Commission with guarantees of its real impartiality) bears witness to the reluctance of the State to bring the legislation into conformity with the provisions of the Convention and they indicate that 100 per cent of strikes in 2020 were found to be unlawful by the Administrative Labour Authority. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the authority to determine the lawful nature of strikes in the private sector does not lie with the labour administration, but rather with an independent body that has the trust of the parties. The Committee hopes that the proposed amendment contained in the preliminary draft of the Labour Code will be the subject of extensive tripartite consultations, and requests the Government to keep it informed of any developments in this regard. Observing with concern the indications of the trade union confederations, the Committee expresses the firm hope that the Civil Service Support Commission will be established without further ado and that it will be a genuinely independent body. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress in this regard.

Definition of minimum services in essential public services. The Committee previously observed that the Consolidated Single Text of the Collective Labour Relations Act provided that the Civil Service Support Commission would be the competent body to determine the minimum services required during strikes affecting essential services, and it trusted that the Civil Service Support Commission would be established in the near future. The Committee notes the Government's indication that section 435 of the preliminary draft of the Labour Code provides that, in the event of disagreement, the matter shall be referred to an independent technical body for the determination of the minimum service and that the decision shall be binding. The Committee notes that, in addition to reiterating that the Civil Service Support Commission has still not been set up, the trade union confederations indicate that section 68 of the Regulations of the Collective Labour Relations Act, as amended by Presidential Decree No. 014-2022-TR, provides that, while the Administrative Labour Authority may avail itself of the support of an independent body to resolve any disagreement concerning minimum services in essential public services, the Administrative Labour Authority shall resolve the matter on the basis of the report of the independent body. While taking due note of the modifications introduced by Presidential Decree No. 014-2022-TR, the Committee recalls that disagreements between the parties on the number and functions of workers should not only be examined, but also resolved by an independent body. The Committee reiterates the need for the Civil Service Support Commission to be established without delay and requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this respect.

Right of trade unions to hold meetings and to access workplaces. The Committee previously requested the Government to revise the final provisions of Presidential Decree No. 017-2007-ED, which defines as serious offences by head teachers and deputy head teachers in schools the acts of providing school premises for trade union meetings and allowing political and/or union advocacy in educational institutions, in order to enable head teachers of schools to determine with the trade unions arrangements for access to workplaces that do not jeopardize their efficient operation. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Ministry of Education is carrying out an assessment of the legislation in relation to this matter as a basis for determining the need to amend or repeal certain provisions of the Regulations of Act No. 28988 declaring regular basic education to be an essential public service, as approved by Presidential Decree No. 17-2007-ED. The Committee takes due note of these indications and requests the Government to provide information on any developments in relation to the revision of the final provisions of the above Presidential Decree so that head teachers in schools can agree with the trade unions concerned on an arrangement for access to workplaces that does not jeopardize their effective operation.

The Committee reminds the Government that it may have recourse to ILO technical assistance in relation to the matters raised in this comment.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1964)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Autonomous Workers' Confederation of Peru (CATP), the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) and the Coordination of Trade Union Confederations of Peru (which groups together the General Confederation of Workers of Peru (CGTP), the Single Confederation of Workers of Peru (CUT-Peru), the CATP and the Confederation of Workers of Peru (CTP)), and the National Confederation of Private Business Institutions (CONFIEP), received on 1 September 2022, which relate to matters examined by the Committee in the present comment. The Committee notes the Government's response to all these observations. It also notes the Government's response to the CATP's observations of 2018.

Legislative developments. The Committee notes that Presidential Decree No. 014-2022-TR, published on 24 July 2022, amended the Regulations of the Collective Labour Relations Act (LRCT) and observes that, among other measures, the Decree:

- indicates that the protection of trade union rights also includes delegates of trade union chapters and the leaders of unions, federations and confederations, or representatives nominated by the latter, and the parties may agree through a collective agreement to extend the protection of trade union rights to other workers or increase their period of protection. Trade union representatives on social dialogue bodies are also covered by the protection of trade union rights (section 12).
- includes section 23-A specifying the scope of the judicial dissolution of a trade union due to the loss of the minimum number of members, with the indication that, for the calculation of the number of members, unionized workers who have been dismissed or whose dismissal has not yet been approved by the courts or who have denounced acts of anti-union discrimination to the labour inspection services are still taken into account.
- indicates that employers are not empowered to extend unilaterally the effects of the collective agreement to workers not covered by its scope of application (section 28).
- provides that, in the event of the dissolution of the trade union, the operative clauses of the collective agreement shall continue to apply (section 30).
- introduces section 33-A into the Regulations of the LRCT, with the indication that in the event of disagreement on the level of collective bargaining, alternative dispute resolution machinery may be used.

- specifies the scope of the right to information of trade unions for collective bargaining, and establishes the minimum level of information that shall be provided and the period within which the employer shall provide it (section 38).
- introduces section 40-A, setting out the minimum content of the requirement to negotiate in good faith provided for in section 54 of the LRCT.
- amends section 59 of the Regulations, to provide that a judicial appeal against an arbitration award does not suspend its application, unless so decided by the courts.
- amends section 61-A of the Regulations on the conditions governing compulsory arbitration.

The Committee notes that the trade union confederations consider that the Decree can contribute to mitigating the serious situation with regard to trade union rights. The Committee notes that the CONFIEP: (i) indicates that the Decree should have been referred for consultation to the National Labour and Employment Promotion Council (CNTPE), in accordance with the Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144); and (ii) considers that the amendments to the Regulations of the LRCT will have an impact on labour relations between workers and employers. The CONFIEP indicates that “the list of information that shall be provided by the employer affects the protection of the personal data of workers; that collective bargaining by branch of activity is being promoted (required): trade unions are exclusively able to seek compulsory arbitration and it is provided that employers may not unilaterally extend the effects of the collective agreement to workers not included within its scope of application, thereby necessarily promoting trade union membership”.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that, far from affecting the balance of industrial relations between employers and workers, the Presidential Decree has its origins in the observation of the worrying current situation of freedom of association in the country. The Government emphasizes that, in 2021, the unionization rate at the national level was a mere 5 per cent and that 4.42 per cent of workers in the formal private sector were covered by collective bargaining that year. The Government adds that in 2021, only 429 lists of claims were put forward, thereby maintaining the tendency for their number to decrease which commenced in the 1990s. The Government indicates that the number of claims that were resolved fell from 1,762 in 1990 to 186 in 2021. The Government further indicates that, although in May 2022 the CNTPE, with its tripartite composition, agreed to formulate a statement reaffirming and calling for the strengthening of social and labour dialogue, in July 2022 the employers’ organizations indicated that they were suspending their participation in the CNTPE claiming that the approval of the statement had been prevented by the adoption of Presidential Decree No. 014-2022-TR. Recalling the crucial importance of social dialogue and consultations with employers’ and workers’ organizations for the preparation and formulation of legislation on collective labour relations, the Committee firmly hopes that the Government will ensure that substantive tripartite consultations are held on legislative initiatives of this type. The Committee also hopes that any concerns relating to the Presidential Decree will be duly examined within the framework of tripartite social dialogue in the CNTPE and that any obstacles preventing the functioning of that body will be resolved rapidly. It requests the Government to provide information in this regard.

Article 1 of the Convention. Adequate protection against anti-union discrimination. The Committee previously observed with concern that, despite the implementation of the Act on Labour Procedure of 2010, the duration of court proceedings relating to infringements of trade union rights had increased considerably, and it requested the Government to take measures to ensure that such proceedings are carried out swiftly and to provide information on their duration, and on the penalties imposed in cases of anti-union discrimination. The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not provided information on the duration of such proceedings and observes the claims by the trade union confederations that: (i) the Act on Labour Procedure is still not given effect throughout the national territory and the duration of labour proceedings continues to be very long, particularly when rulings are appealed, which is a strategy that is often used by employers; and (ii) complaints against trade union representatives are a recurrent anti-union practice which create a climate of intimidation, as there is no appropriate administrative or judicial mechanism that protects members and leaders against anti-union practices.

The Committee notes that, according to the Government's report, during the period between 2017 and 2021, the National Superintendence of Labour Inspection (SUNAFIL) generated 2,886 inspection orders in relation to complaints concerning collective agreements and trade union membership and resolved 2,350 of them, with 964 resulting in a violation report and 1386 in a report. In this regard, the trade union confederations indicate that this information does not reveal the extent to which inspections identified violations of trade union rights in the inspection orders issued, whether they have the result of the effective restoration of trade union rights and whether the penalties were executed. They add that issues relating to trade union rights account for fewer than 2 per cent of all the matters on which inspections are carried out over a year and that in March 2021 the Labour Inspection Court of the SUNAFIL started to be operational, with the function of resolving appeals for the review of punishment procedures and that it is issuing decisions that do not contribute to the protection of trade union rights.

The Committee also observes that Presidential Decree No. 014-2022-TR provides that trade union protection also covers the delegates of trade union chapters and the leaders of unions, federations and confederations, or representatives nominated by them and that the parties may agree through collective agreements to extend the right to trade union protection to other workers or increase the duration of protection and include within such protection trade union representatives on social dialogue bodies. The Presidential Decree also provides that, for the calculation of the minimum number of members, unionized workers whose dismissals have not yet been confirmed by the courts or who have submitted complaints of anti-union acts to the labour inspection services will continue to be taken into account. The Committee notes the Government's indication that this prevents the use of unjustified anti-union dismissals as a strategy for persecuting trade union leaders and dissolving trade unions. The Government adds that a proposed preliminary draft of the Labour Code, prepared at the beginning of 2022 by the Ministry of Labour and Employment Promotion and shared through the CNTPE, adopts the same approach as the Presidential Decree. The Committee takes due note of this information, and particularly the aspects of Presidential Decree No. 014-2022-TR that are intended to reinforce protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the length of labour proceedings relating to infringements of the right to freedom of association and collective bargaining and to take the necessary measures to ensure that they are carried out swiftly. It also requests the Government to provide detailed and updated information on the penalties imposed in cases of anti-union discrimination and any action adopted in this regard. Recalling that the labour inspection services contribute to ensuring the application of the Convention, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures for the concerns set out above to be duly examined through social dialogue in the CNTPE, which should also assess the effectiveness of the system of protection against acts of anti-union discrimination and the impact of the application of Presidential Decree No. 014-2022-TR in this regard. The Committee requests the Government to report on these discussions and their outcome. The Committee also requests the Government to keep providing information about any progress made with regard to the preliminary draft of the Labour Code.

Workers with fixed-term contracts in the private sector. The Committee previously requested the Government to provide information on any measures taken by the labour inspection services to ensure the effective protection of workers with fixed-term contracts against the potential non-renewal of their contracts for anti-union reasons. It also invited the Government to use the tripartite forum of the CNTPE to examine this issue and the possibility of amending the provisions of the Act on the Promotion of Non-Traditional Exports, which allow for the recurrent use of short-term contracts. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the proposed preliminary draft of the Labour Code seeks to harmonize the labour legislation and reduce the use of fixed-term contracts and that it proposes the possibility of concluding contracts of different types with the same worker, provided that in total they do not exceed a maximum period of two years. The Committee observes the indication by the trade union confederations that: (i) the non-renewal of contracts tends to be used as a reprisal for trade union membership and engagement in trade union activities; (ii) in the area covered by the Act on the Promotion of Non-Traditional Exports, contracts can be renewed without any limits; (iii) in 2021, 91.2 per cent of new contracts in the country were for fixed-term jobs; and (iv) the legislation does not provide any type of protection for workers against the failure to renew temporary contracts as a reprisal against union membership and engagement in union activities. The Committee recalls that, when examining cases relating to this issue (in particular Cases Nos 3065, 3066 and 3170), the Committee on Freedom of Association has recalled that fixed-term employment contracts should not be used deliberately for anti-union purposes and that in certain circumstances the employment of workers with the successive renewal of fixed-term contracts for several years can be an obstacle to the exercise of trade union rights.

Taking into account the indications relating to the high percentage of fixed-term contracts and the concerns expressed above, the Committee requests the Government to submit the issue of the protection of workers with fixed-term contracts against anti-union discrimination for thorough tripartite consultation in the CNTPE with a view to the identification of specific measures in this regard. Recalling that in the cases examined by the Committee on Freedom of Association, the Government referred to the possibility of revising the provisions of the Act on the Promotion of Non-Traditional Exports which allow the recurrent use of short-term contracts, the Committee once again invites the Government to include this issue in tripartite consultations and the current process of reforming the labour legislation. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on these discussions and their outcome.

Workers with fixed-term contracts in the public sector. Having noted the allegations of the mass dismissal of workers employed under administrative service contracts, the Committee previously requested the Government to engage in dialogue with public sector trade unions on the subject of the protection of these workers against anti-union discrimination. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government that: (i) Act No. 31131 containing provisions to eradicate discrimination in public sector scheme, published on 9 March 2021, prohibits administrative service contracts and provides that workers covered by such contracts are to be engaged under the system set out in Legislative Decree No. 728 (the Labour Productivity and Competitiveness Act) and Legislative Decree No. 276 (the Basic Act on the administrative career and remuneration in the public sector); (ii) workers recruited as from 10 December 2021 who were covered by administrative service contracts benefit from permanent contracts, on condition that they have participated in a public competition for a permanent position, although personnel may be engaged under administrative service contracts for a fixed period if they are engaged as replacements or in transitional positions; and (iii) there are various unions covering this group of workers and public employees covered by administrative service contracts were represented in the negotiations relating to Act No. 31188. The Committee observes the indication by the trade union confederations that: (i) although Act No. 31131 establishes that administrative service contracts are for an indefinite period, a new form of temporary and irregular contract is being increasingly used known as third party contracts; and (ii) in 2020, over 127,000 persons were engaged through the hiring of services and in the majority of cases these were labour relations covered by apparent third party contracts under which the workers could not exercise their trade union rights as the reprisal would be the non-renewal of their contracts. While welcoming the legislative measures adopted in relation to administrative service contracts, and noting the concerns expressed above, the Committee requests the Government to submit the issue of protection against anti-union discrimination of workers who do not have permanent contracts for thorough consultation with the representative trade unions in the public sector. It requests the Government to report on these discussions and their outcome.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. Workers in training schemes. In its previous comment, the Committee noted that the Government was engaged in the adoption of an Act on specific public sector pre-vocational and vocational practices and that it was revising the content of Act No. 28518 with a view to explicitly recognizing the right to collective bargaining of workers in training schemes. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the preliminary draft text of the Labour Code prepared by the Ministry of Labour and Employment Promotion defines vocational training schemes in section 75 as special types of labour contracts, thereby recognizing them as labour contracts, which presupposes the possibility for workers engaged in vocational training schemes to have the right to establish trade unions and engage in collective bargaining. The Committee observes the indication by the trade union confederations that: (i) up to now, no initiative has been seen to amend Act No. 28518; (ii) the general recognition in the Constitution of trade union rights does not on its own entitle persons covered by training schemes to exercise such rights; and (iii) section 76 of the preliminary draft text referred to above provides that labour training schemes are not subject to general labour regulations, or in other words the preliminary draft maintains the approach adopted in the current legislation of not explicitly recognizing the trade union rights of workers in training schemes. The Committee hopes that the preliminary draft text of the Labour Code will be the subject of thorough tripartite consultation and that, within the context of this dialogue process consideration will also be given to the revision of the legislation to give explicit recognition to the collective rights of workers in training schemes. The Committee requests the Government to report any progress in this regard.

Promotion of collective bargaining at all levels. The Committee recalls that the issue of the right of the parties to determine freely the level of negotiation has been the subject of its attention for many years and has given rise to a series of cases before the Committee on Freedom of Association. The Committee observed previously that, under the terms of section 45 of the LRCT, in the event of disagreement between the parties and where a collective agreement does not exist, the legislation gave precedence to negotiation at the enterprise level, and it requested the Government to engage in consultations with the representative organizations of workers and employers on the amendments necessary to ensure that the level of collective bargaining and the mechanism for the settlement of disputes relating to the level at which collective bargaining must take place are determined freely by the parties concerned. The Committee notes with interest the indication by the Government that Act No. 31110 on the Agricultural Labour System and Incentives for the Agricultural and Irrigation Sector, Agricultural Exports and Agro-Industry, which entered into force on 1 January 2021, removed that last indent of the first paragraph of section 45 of the Regulations of the LRCT, which provided that, in the absence of agreement on the level of negotiation, it would take place at the enterprise level. The Committee observes that the amended version of section 45 provides that, in the event of disagreement concerning the level of negotiation, the matter shall be resolved through the use of alternative dispute resolution machinery. The Committee notes the indication by the trade union confederations that the second subsection of section 45 has not been amended and that it provides that, once the level of negotiation has been determined, it may only be changed with the agreement of the parties, with no alternative machinery being envisaged to resolve any disagreement concerning the modification of the level of negotiation. The trade union confederations understand this as impeding collective bargaining at levels other than the enterprise level. The Committee notes the Government's clarification that the amendment covers both the first and second subsections of section 45, which means that, in the event of disagreement on the level of bargaining, either in relation to new collective bargaining or if there is already an agreement at some level, the disagreement may be resolved through the use of alternative dispute resolution machinery. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the impact of the amendment to section 45 of the Regulations of the LRCT on collective bargaining. The Committee hopes that the Government will ensure that the autonomy of the parties prevails in the determination of the level of bargaining.

The Committee also observes that Act No. 31110 promotes in the agricultural and agricultural export sector the collective right to collective bargaining, particularly at levels higher than the enterprise level, as workers in agriculture and agricultural exports experience difficulties in the effective exercise of this right due to the discontinuous and seasonal nature of their activities (section 8). Recalling the need to guarantee that collective bargaining can be carried out at any level, whether at the level of the enterprise, multiple-enterprises, the sectoral or national level, and noting the statistical data provided by the Government, as referred to above, according to which there is very low coverage of collective bargaining in the country, the Committee notes with interest that legislative measures have also been adopted to promote collective bargaining at levels higher than the enterprise level. The Committee requests the Government to report the specific measures taken to promote collective bargaining at all levels, including higher than the enterprise level, and to provide information on the results.

Recourse to arbitration (arbitraje potestativo) in the event of disagreement on the level of bargaining and in relation to other situations. The Committee observed in previous comments that the LRCT and its Regulations provide for the possibility for any of the parties to collective bargaining to have recourse to arbitration (arbitraje potestativo) in the event that: (i) during a first negotiation, agreement is not reached on its level or content (where at least six direct negotiation or conciliation meetings have been held and three months have elapsed since the beginning of the negotiations); or (ii) where during the course of bargaining acts of bad faith are noted which have the effect of delaying, hindering or preventing the achievement of agreement. The Committee observes that Presidential Decree No. 014-2022-TR introduces certain amendments to the Regulations concerning the possibility of having recourse to arbitration (arbitraje potestativo): (i) it provides that this possibility is only available to workers' representatives; (ii) the conditions for initiating arbitration (arbitraje potestativo) in the first circumstances envisaged by the Regulations (a first negotiation, in which the parties do not reach agreement on the level or content of the negotiations) are not cumulative, but rather alternatives (since at least six direct negotiation or conciliation meetings must have been held, or three months must have elapsed since the beginning of the negotiations); and (iii) in relation to point (i), it is specified that the acts of bad faith in the negotiations which may give access to arbitration (arbitraje potestativo) are those committed by the employer.

The Committee notes the indication by CONFIEP that the Presidential Decree exclusively allows workers' organizations to request compulsory arbitration and omits the principal option of arbitration that is voluntary for the parties. The CONFIEP considers that establishing the compulsory nature of arbitration has the result of collective bargaining processes becoming a formal step, as there is an incentive to go to arbitration (arbitraje potestativo) so that the arbitration board awards better economic benefits to the workers, without giving importance to the fact that in some cases the financial situation of the enterprise would not permit this. The Committee notes the Government's indication in this respect that: (i) section 62 of the LRCT provides that workers may either call a strike or have recourse to arbitration; and (ii) arbitration (arbitraje potestativo) when initiated by the employer runs the potential risk of affecting the right to strike, as there could be situations in which strikes called by workers and arbitration (arbitraje potestativo) initiated by the employer may run in parallel, thereby undermining recourse to strike action.

The Committee recalls that it has considered that compulsory arbitration is only acceptable in certain specific circumstances, namely: (i) in essential services in the strict sense of the term, that is those the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population; (ii) in the case of disputes in the public service involving public servants engaged in the administration of the State; (iii) when, after protracted and fruitless negotiations, it becomes obvious that the deadlock will not be broken without some initiative by the authorities; or (iv) in the event of an acute crisis. The Committee also recalls that, while arbitration imposed by the authorities at the request of one party is generally contrary to the principle of the voluntary negotiation of collective agreements, it can envisage an exception in the case of provisions allowing workers' organizations to initiate such a procedure for the conclusion of a first collective agreement. As experience shows that first collective agreements are often one of the most difficult steps in establishing sound industrial relations, these types of provisions may be considered to constitute machinery and procedures intended to promote collective bargaining (2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 247 and 250). Observing that, in a context of the very low coverage of collective bargaining, Presidential Decree No. 014-2022-TR has made certain of the conditions more flexible for workers to be able to have recourse to arbitration, in the case of a first negotiation or where bad faith has been demonstrated by the employer, the Committee requests the Government to: (i) provide full information on the application of these new provisions so that the Committee can assess their impact on the free and voluntary nature of collective bargaining and its effective promotion; and (ii) engage in thorough dialogue with the representative social partners in the country on the application of these provisions and on any other measures envisaged in this regard.

The Committee notes that section 28 of Presidential Decree No. 014-2022-TR provides that the employer may not unilaterally extend the effects of the collective agreement to workers not covered by its scope of application. The Committee observes that the CONFIEP considers that this section is intended to punish non-unionized workers by promoting the necessity of trade union membership. The Committee notes the Government's indication that this view disregards section 9 of the LRCT, which provides that: "In relation to collective bargaining, the union which has in its membership the absolute majority of workers in the area covered shall represent all of those workers, even if they are not members. Where several unions exist in the same area, unions which jointly have over half the workers as members may jointly represent all the workers. In such cases, the unions shall determine the manner in which they exercise such representation, either pro rata in proportion to the number of members or entrusted to one of the unions. If there is no agreement, each union shall solely represent its own members." The Committee notes these indications. The Committee recalls that systems under which the collective agreements concluded by the representative organization only apply to the signatories and their members (and not to all workers), and the opposite practice under which all the workers in a bargaining unit are covered, are compatible with the principles of the Convention (2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 225). The Committee further observes that the amendment introduced by Presidential Decree No. 014-2022-TR does not appear to preclude the parties from being able to decide themselves on the extension of the effects of the collective agreement to include workers who are not members of the union that negotiated the agreement.

Articles 4 and 6. Promotion of collective bargaining. Public sector workers. The Committee previously indicated to the Government the need to revise the Civil Service Act of 2013 and all relevant legislation, so that public sector employees who are not engaged in the administration of the State can exercise their right to collectively negotiate wages and economic matters. The Committee notes the publication on 2 May 2021 of Act No. 31188 on collective bargaining in the State sector, which establishes rules for the exercise of the right to collective bargaining in the public sector and provides that bargaining may cover all types of working and employment conditions, including remuneration and other conditions of work with an economic impact, as well as any aspect respecting relations between employers and workers, and relations between employers' and workers' organizations. The Committee observes that the Act repeals various provisions of the Civil Service Act, including sections 42, 43 and 44, which completely excluded the determination of wages and economic matters from collective bargaining throughout the public sector. The Committee notes that, according to the information provided by the Government: (i) Presidential Decree No. 008-2022-PCM was published on 20 January 2022 approving guidance for the implementation of the Act; (ii) the Act on the budget for the public sector for the 2022 financial year admits the financial increase agreed collectively; and (iii) the Centralized Collective Agreement 2022-23 was concluded on 30 June 2022, including very important benefits for all State workers (with the exception of public servants on special career paths in health and education, who will engage in decentralized sectoral bargaining). The Committee notes with satisfaction the conclusion of the Centralized Collective Agreement. The Committee notes the indication by the workers' confederations that, although the Act constitutes progress in the recognition and effectiveness of the economic negotiation of all types of terms and conditions of employment for public employees, difficulties have been reported in its application. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the Act and its respective Presidential Decree are implemented in such a manner as to contribute to ensuring the full and complete exercise by trade union organizations of State workers of the rights recognized therein and set out in the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information on the impact of their application. The Committee also refers to its comments in relation to the Labour Relations (Public Service) Convention, 1978 (No. 151).

The Committee firmly hopes that the action taken by the Government to give effect to the Convention will be preceded by thorough consultations with the social partners. The Committee recalls that ILO technical assistance is available to the Government.

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Coordination of Trade Union Federations of Peru (which brings together the General Confederation of Workers of Peru (CGTP), the Single Confederation of Workers of Peru (CUT-Perú), the Autonomous Workers' Confederation of Peru (CATP) and the Confederation of Workers of Peru (CTP)), received on 1 September 2022, which concern issues that the Committee examines in this comment. The Committee notes the Government's reply in this respect.

Article 7 of the Convention. Participation of public employees' organizations in the determination of their terms and conditions of employment. Having noted with concern that the Civil Service Act No. 30057 (LCS) of 2013 contained provisions that excluded any machinery for participation, including collective bargaining, in the determination of matters relating to wages or with financial implications throughout the public sector, the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to bring the legislation into conformity with the Convention, in order to ensure the existence, with regard to officials engaged in the administration of the State, of machinery for participation in the determination of their terms and conditions of employment, including remuneration and other subjects with financial implications. The Committee notes the Government's indication that Act No. 31188 on collective bargaining in the public sector was published on 2 May 2021, which seeks to regulate the exercise of the right to collective bargaining of trade union organizations of state workers, and which includes all public employees engaged in the administration of the State. The Committee notes with satisfaction the adoption of the Act and observes that it:

- establishes rules for the exercise of the right to collective bargaining in the public sector, and indicates that bargaining may comprise all types of work and employment conditions, including remuneration and other work conditions with financial implications, and any aspect relating to relations between employers and workers, and relations between employers' and workers' organizations; and
- repeals various sections of the LCS, including sections 42, 43 and 44, which completely excluded collective bargaining in the determination of matters relating to wages or with financial implications throughout the public sector.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) Supreme Decree No. 008-2022-PCM approving guidelines for the implementation of Act No. 31188, was published on 20 January 2022; (ii) the Act on the public sector budget for the fiscal year 2022 recognizes the financial increase agreed collectively; and (iii) a centralized collective agreement for 2022-23 was signed on 30 June 2022, which established significant agreements in favour of all state workers (with the exception of public servants on special career paths in health and education, who will bargain at the decentralized level within the sectors). The Committee noted with satisfaction the signing of this collective agreement in its comment on the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98).

The Committee notes the indication of the trade union confederations that: (i) while the Act represents progress in the recognition and effectiveness of the financial negotiation of all types of employment conditions for public employees, difficulties relating to its application have been reported; (ii) even though the Act gives broad recognition to the right to collective bargaining, the Supreme Decree contains provisions that may affect collective bargaining, such as the possibility for employers to reject a list of demands if they consider that a trade union is not representative; (iii) public entities face the challenge of adopting effective measures to implement the Act, and, in this regard, the implementation of a national register of trade union membership to verify representativity remains pending; and (iv) the National Civil Service Authority (SERVIR) has issued binding decisions that contain a restrictive interpretation of the Act. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, through its Executive Board, SERVIR aims to create and implement a space for trade union dialogue, to continuously and effectively address the demands of trade union organizations, by directing support and assistance to entities through the provision of creative and flexible solutions that bridge existing gaps and address labour demands, thus guaranteeing the optimization of services and products provided to the public. The Committee strongly encourages the Government to implement, within SERVIR, a space for dialogue in which the aforementioned concerns can be addressed, including the implementation of a reliable mechanism to verify trade union representativeness in collective bargaining. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that both the Act and the Supreme Decree are implemented in a manner that effectively guarantees, for all public employees engaged in the administration of the State who are covered by the Act, the full enjoyment and exercise of the rights recognized in these instruments and enshrined in the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the impact of their application. The Committee also reminds the Government that the technical assistance of the Office is at its disposal.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1953)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 1 September 2022, referring to matters addressed below and alleging continued and serious violations of workers' civil liberties and freedom of association rights. The Committee requests the Government to provide its reply thereto.

Tripartite road map to implement the 2019 Conference Committee conclusions and achieve full compliance with the Convention. High-level tripartite mission. The Committee recalls from its previous comments that in June 2019, the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (Conference Committee) requested a high-level tripartite mission to the country, which, until early 2022, could not take place due to the COVID-19 pandemic. In the meantime, a virtual exchange was organized by the Office between the Government, national social partners and designated representatives from the workers' and employers' groups of the Conference Committee in order to clarify any outstanding confusion in respect of the Conference Committee's conclusions and to assist the Government and the social partners to take effective action for their implementation. In these circumstances, and in light of the conclusions of the virtual exchange transmitted by the ITUC, the Committee called on the Government to elaborate a plan of action, in consultation with the social partners, detailing progressive steps to be taken to implement the conclusions of the 2019 Conference Committee and to achieve full compliance with the Convention.

The Committee notes the Government's indication in this respect that it has consistently conveyed its readiness to accept an in-person high-level tripartite mission to the country and that such a mission was scheduled for May-June 2022 but did not take place due to a change in political administration following the May 2022 presidential elections. The Government, however, confirms its availability to receive a mission in January-February 2023 and informs that, in the meantime, it has scheduled to undertake activities to implement some of the recommendations of the virtual exchange, including capacity-building of regional tripartite monitoring bodies (RTMBs), development of a tripartite road map on the promotion of freedom of association and civil liberties, and review of the Guidelines on the conduct of stakeholders relative to the exercise of workers' rights and activities, all of which will be pursued through the institutionalized tripartite processes. The Government adds that the tripartite road map will take into account the recommendations of the 2021 virtual exchange report, as well as the 2019 Conference Committee conclusions, and will focus on efforts to ensure prompt and effective investigation of allegations of killings and assaults against trade unionists, strengthen tripartite monitoring bodies, further operationalize the Administrative Order No. 35 Inter-Agency Committee (IAC) and ensure effective protection of labour rights in ecozones. Taking due note of the measures and initiatives undertaken, but also noting the concerns raised by the ITUC that no progress has yet been achieved to implement the conclusions of the 2019 Conference Committee, the Committee calls on the Government to rapidly and genuinely engage with the social partners in order to elaborate a constructive tripartite road map detailing progressive steps to be taken to implement the conclusions of the 2019 Conference Committee and to achieve full compliance with the Convention. The Committee looks forward to receiving the road map, as well as the reviewed Guidelines on the conduct of stakeholders, and expects both instruments to significantly contribute to addressing in a meaningful manner the long-standing concerns of serious violations of civil liberties in the exercise of freedom of association rights. The Committee reminds the Government of the possibility to avail itself of ILO technical assistance in this regard. The Committee also expects that the high-level tripartite mission requested by the 2019 Conference Committee will be able to visit the country in the first quarter of 2023, as suggested by the Government, and will be allowed to meet freely with a broad range of interlocuters.

Civil liberties and trade union rights

In its previous comments, the Committee had received repeated allegations of serious violations of basic civil liberties in the exercise of trade union rights submitted by the ITUC in 2019, 2020 and 2021, Education International (EI) in 2019 and jointly by EI, the Alliance of Concerned Teachers (ACT) and the National Alliance of Teachers and Office Workers (SMP-NATOW) in 2020. The Government had previously replied to some of these incidents and the Committee had, on several occasions, requested it to ensure that these allegations are duly investigated, and perpetrators punished to effectively prevent and combat impunity.

The Committee first notes the Government's general update in this regard, informing about legal and administrative remedies and institutions available to persons or groups who allege that their civil liberties have been violated, as well as about other measures undertaken by the Government to address such allegations. The Committee notes, in particular, that the Government points to the active role of the Department of Labour and Employment (DOLE), informing that DOLE focal points in the 16 RTMBs assist aggrieved parties to access legal remedies available in cases of intimidation, harassment and red-tagging, including through securing affidavits and endorsing them to the appropriate office for verification and possible filing to entities with jurisdiction. The DOLE also sends communications to the armed forces, the police and companies, calling on them to ensure protection and promotion of workers' rights to freedom of association, and its regional offices should act as intermediaries between the parties in the monitoring mechanisms, so as to limit any threat or intimidation of the complainants, an initiative accepted by the armed forces. Furthermore, to address the concern that most of the arrests previously denounced by the unions were made by virtue of search warrants from Manila and Quezon City courts, which were implemented in areas outside their regions, the Supreme Court issued an Administrative Matter, expressly limiting the power to issue search warrants within the bounds of one's territorial jurisdiction, which has been met with positive response by labour groups. The Government adds that the previously mentioned Senate Bill No. 2121 (defining and penalizing the crime of red-tagging) was filed in March 2021 but was not enacted and may be refiled in the 19th Congress. The Committee takes due note of the above information and appreciates the described measures and initiatives, which it trusts will, together with the tripartite road map, contribute to ensuring full respect for civil liberties in the exercise of trade union rights. The Committee strongly encourages the Government to continue to take concrete measures in this regard and requests it to provide information on the progress made in the adoption of Senate Bill No. 2121.

The Committee further notes that the Government also provides updates on the concrete investigative and other actions undertaken to address some of the specific allegations previously reported by trade unions. In particular, the Committee notes the Government's detailed information in relation to the allegations of extra-judicial killings of eight trade unionists in the education sector reported by EI, ACT and SMP-NATOW in 2020, indicating that three cases are pending before the courts, in one case the suspect is deceased and four cases are under investigation, the motive for the killings not yet ascertained. The Committee also duly notes the Government's reporting on the status of monitoring or investigations initiated by various domestic mechanisms, including the Commission on Human Rights, the National Bureau of Investigation, a special investigation task group and the Administrative Order No. 35 special investigating teams, into the killings of 13 trade unionists, 17 cases of red-tagging and harassment, and 12 cases of forced disaffiliation alleged by the ITUC in 2021 and observes that for some incidents murder charges were filed against several policemen. The Committee welcomes the detailed observations and the measures taken to investigate these incidents and bring the perpetrators to justice. The Committee observes, however, that out of the 17 instances of arrests of unionists that were denounced by the ITUC, only two were released while the others have criminal cases pending against them. The Committee also observes that the Government does not provide updated information on the status of investigations into the other serious allegations previously reported, in particular many of those alleged by the ITUC and EI in 2019 and 2020 and some of the incidents submitted jointly by EI, ACT and SMP-NATOW in 2020, all of which are detailed in the Committee's previous comments, and concern specific incidents of killings, attempted killings, death threats, profiling, surveillance, violent strike dispersal and military and police raids on union offices. In view of the above and having regard to the seriousness of the denounced incidents, the Committee expects the Government to continue to take measures to ensure that all allegations of killings, red-tagging, harassment and other serious forms of violence against trade unionists previously reported by the ITUC, EI, ACT and SMP-NATOW are properly investigated and lead to concrete results, so as to establish the facts, including any links between the violence and trade union activities, determine culpability, punish the perpetrators and contribute to preventing and combating impunity. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken in this respect and on the progress in investigations.

New allegations of violence and intimidation. The Committee notes that in its latest communication, the ITUC raises concerns about persistent violations against workers and their representatives and points to two illustrative incidents. In particular, the ITUC alleges that in November 2021, persons claiming to be members of the Quezon City Police Department entered the offices of the Center of United and Progressive Workers (SENTRO) and later the Trade Union Confederation of the Philippines (TUCP) without justification, repeatedly inquiring about SENTRO's office, other unions present and their activities, as well as about the Nagkaisa Labour Coalition. In another incident in December 2021, the police brutally repressed a strike in a pasta-making company, using water cannons and truncheons, and 44 workers were arrested and charged with illegal assembly, disobedience and causing “alarm and scandal”; they were later released pending further investigation. According to the ITUC, the climate of pressure, fear and extreme physical violence gravely undermines the ability of workers to exercise the rights protected by the Convention, and the persistence of these violations, as well as the failure of State entities to seriously address the situation, continue to expose workers engaging in trade union activities to imminent danger and irreparable harm and requires immediate intervention. Noting these allegations with concern, the Committee requests the Government to provide its observations thereon and to ensure that the incidents are adequately addressed, including through investigation, that any unionists detained in relation to the legitimate exercise of trade union activities are released and that the criminal system is not used to repress freedom of association rights.

Pending cases of alleged killings of trade union leaders. For several years, the Committee has been requesting the Government to ensure that the investigations into the killings of trade unionists Rolando Pango, Florencio “Bong” Romano and Victoriano Embang are completed to shed full light on the facts and the circumstances in which such actions occurred and, to the extent possible, determine responsibilities, punish the perpetrators and prevent the repetition of similar events. The Committee notes from the Government’s information that the cases continue to be monitored by the regular process of criminal investigation and prosecution but observes that no apparent progress was made in the case of Rolando Pango (a murder case dismissed in 2015 for lack of probable cause) and Victoriano Embang (a murder case filed in 2015 with the two accused remaining at large). In the case of Florencio “Bong” Romano, the Government informs of police interviews and continuing investigation to identify the perpetrator. Observing with regret that despite continued monitoring and investigation reported by the Government, no substantial progress appears to have been achieved in bringing the perpetrators to justice or clarifying the circumstances of these incidents, the Committee urges the Government to step up its efforts in this regard and emphasizes that investigations into killings of trade unionists should yield concrete results, so as to determine reliably the facts, the motives and the persons responsible.

Measures to combat impunity. Monitoring mechanisms. In its previous comment, the Committee expressed trust that the review of the operational guidelines of the monitoring mechanisms would be completed without delay and would contribute to ensuring their full operationalization and requested the Government to continue to take measures to ensure effective and timely monitoring and investigation of all pending labour-related cases. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that both the review of the operational guidelines of the RTMBs and consultations on the possibility of creating mechanisms specifically for the purpose of monitoring freedom of association cases are part of the mid-term goals incorporated in the proposed tripartite road map and are expected to be completed by December 2023. The Government also reports on progress made in the collection of information and investigation in the 43 cases of killings of unionists reported by workers’ representatives at the 2019 Conference Committee, out of which 19 are being investigated, 18 are pending in court, three were dismissed, in one case the suspect died and in two cases the relatives filed affidavits of disinterest. An additional 12 incidents submitted by ACT Teachers Partylist, Nagkaisa Labour Coalition and other labour groups are, according to the Government, also being addressed, with four cases pending in court, six cases under investigation, in one case the suspect died and in one the relatives issued affidavits of disinterest. Taking due note of the above, the Committee strongly encourages the Government to fully engage with the social partners in the review of the operational guidelines of the monitoring mechanisms, including in the framework of the mentioned tripartite road map, and requests that the Government continue to take all necessary measures to further strengthen these mechanisms, including allocating sufficient resources, staff and security to personnel, in order to ensure their full operationalization and to allow for effective and timely monitoring and investigation of all pending labour-related cases of extra-judicial killings and other violations against trade union leaders and members. The Committee also requests the Government to continue to provide updates on the progress made by these mechanisms in ensuring the collection of the necessary information to bring the pending cases of violence against trade unionists to the courts.

Measures to combat impunity. Training and Guidelines on the conduct of stakeholders. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government on several ongoing projects and training activities, including a project for various government agencies and sectoral partners on ensuring safe and decent work by improving the state of freedom of association in ecozones, which aims to strengthen social dialogue and labour relations laws, processes and institutions, as well as to build the capacity of government agencies on international labour standards, including the core Conventions on freedom of association and collective bargaining. The Government further informs that the 2011 and 2012 Guidelines governing the conduct of concerned agencies relative to the exercise of trade union rights and activities are being harmonized into a new set of guidelines, which will govern the conduct of government stakeholders but also workers and employers in the private sector, and will emphasize that all requests for police or military assistance during labour disputes, including in economic zones, should be processed through and coordinated with the DOLE. The Government indicates that these guidelines have been presented to the social partners, and are the subject of ongoing deliberations, and are expected to be finalized by the end of 2022. Welcoming the above initiatives, the Committee encourages the Government to continue to promote comprehensive training activities among government agencies, with a solid focus on international labour standards of freedom of association and collective bargaining, with a view to increasing awareness of the concerned State officials on these matters and improving their capacity to address and investigate alleged violations of human and trade union rights, thus ultimately contributing to combating impunity. The Committee looks forward to receiving the revised Guidelines on the conduct of stakeholders relative to the exercise of trade union rights and trusts that they will constitute a useful tool in preventing and addressing violations of civil liberties in this context. Further noting the Government's willingness to receive ILO technical assistance on a number of specific points, including on identifying gaps in the exercise of freedom of association, the Committee trusts that the Office will be in a position to provide any relevant technical assistance requested by the Government on these issues.

Measures to combat impunity. Pending legislative matters. The Committee previously requested the Government to provide information on any developments in relation to the pending legislative matters referred to it by the Committee on Freedom of Association, in particular: (i) the adoption of a Bill concerning enforced and involuntary disappearances; and (ii) the previously announced review by the Supreme Court and the Commission on Human Rights of the witness protection programme on the writ of amparo adopted in 2007, as well as of the application of the Anti-Torture Act No. 9745 and of Act No. 9851 on crimes against international humanitarian law, genocide and other crimes against humanity. The Committee notes the Government's indication that since House Resolution No. 392 was filed in October 2019 (calling for justice for the victims and urging the House Committee on Human Rights to investigate, in aid of legislation, the state of enforced disappearances in the country), no further action was taken by the Congress. It also informs that House Resolution No. 45 (directing the Committees on Justice and Human Rights to jointly conduct an inquiry into the implementation of the Anti-Enforced or Involuntary Disappearance Act of 2012) was filed in Congress and is pending the first reading. The Committee takes due note of the above and encourages the Government to continue to support legislative efforts that could have a positive impact on the exercise of civil liberties and trade union rights in the country.

Anti-Terrorism Act. In its previous comment, in view of the concerns expressed by the ITUC, the Committee requested the Government to take any necessary measures to ensure that the Anti-Terrorism Act, 2020 does not have the effect of restricting legitimate trade union activities. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Act has been submitted to judicial scrutiny so as to determine whether or not it is inconsistent with the constitution and that in its judgment from December 2021, the Supreme Court declared that the law was not, as a whole, unconstitutional but nullified two of its provisions. In particular, the Committee observes from the text of the judgment that the Supreme Court considered as unconstitutional a part of the proviso in section 4 which allows for an overly vague interpretation of what constitutes terrorism and the second paragraph of section 25, allowing the Anti-Terrorist Council appointed by the President to adopt requests by other jurisdictions or supranational organizations to designate individuals, groups of persons, organizations or associations as terrorist. The Committee understands that following the Supreme Court decision, terrorism as defined in section 4 does not include advocacy, protest, dissent, stoppage of work, industrial or mass action, and other similar exercises of civil and political rights, and welcomes this development. The Government adds that in April 2022, the Supreme Court denied appeals to reverse its decision upholding the constitutionality of the law as a whole but clarifies that the decision does not preclude subsequent challenges on other provisions if an actual case or controversy arises. The Committee trusts that, in line with the above developments, the Government will ensure that the Anti-Terrorism Act or its implementation, do not have the effect of restricting legitimate trade union activities and related civil liberties.

Legislative issues

Labour Code. In its previous comments, the Committee had been noting the numerous amendment bills pending before Congress over many years and in various forms with a view to bringing the national legislation into conformity with the Convention. Noting the Government's indication that no recent amendments have been made on the pending matters, even though a number of measures had been filed with the Senate and the House of Representatives over the years, the Committee reiterates all of its previous comments and requests in this respect, and expects concrete measures to be taken to pursue the revision of the Labour Code without additional delay so as to bring the national legislation into conformity with the Convention.

The Committee further reiterates its comments contained in the 2020 request addressed directly to the Government.

Previous comment

The Committee previously requested the Government to provide detailed information on the allegations raised by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) in its 2018 observations, which concern alleged union busting practices, blacklisting and anti-union dismissals and suspensions in three companies. Regretting the absence of information in this regard, the Committee requests the Government to provide its observations on these allegations and, should this not yet be the case, to take the necessary measures to address them without delay.

Article 4 of the Convention. Categories of workers covered by collective bargaining. In its previous comments relating to the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), the Committee noted the Government's indication that under section 253 of the Labour Code, only employees (workers covered by an employer-employee relationship) may join trade unions for purposes of collective bargaining, whereas ambulant, intermittent, itinerant, self-employed and rural workers, as well as those without any definite employer may only form labour organizations for their mutual aid and protection. The Committee had also previously noted such restrictions on other categories of workers, including workers in managerial positions or with access to confidential information (section 255 of the Labour Code), firefighters, prison guards and certain other public sector workers authorized to carry firearms (Rule II, section 2 of the Amended Rules and Regulations Governing the Exercise of the Right of Government Employees to Organize). The Government provides similar information in its latest report, pointing, in particular, to Department Order No. 40, 2003, as amended, which sets out the distinction between labour organizations established for collective bargaining (trade unions) and labour organizations organized for the mutual aid and protection of its members or for any legitimate purpose other than collective bargaining (workers' associations, including in the informal economy). The Committee understands from the above that certain categories of workers may only form and join associations for purposes other than collective bargaining and are therefore not able to fully benefit from the guarantees of the Convention in terms of collective bargaining. The Committee wishes to recall in this regard that, with the exception of organizations representing categories of workers which may be excluded from the scope of the Convention (the armed forces, the police and public servants engaged in the administration of the State), recognition of the right to collective bargaining is general in scope and all other organizations of workers in the public and private sectors must benefit from it, including prison staff, fire service personnel, self-employed and temporary workers, outsourced or contract workers, non-resident workers, part-time workers, agricultural workers and domestic and migrant workers. In line with the above and with its previous comments under Convention No. 87 and recalling that a number of legislative reforms addressing the right to organize of the above-mentioned categories of workers have been pending in Congress for many years, the Committee firmly expects the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that all workers covered by this Convention, with the only possible exception of the armed forces, the police, and public servants engaged in the administration of the State (Article 6), can effectively benefit from the rights enshrined in the Convention, including the right to collective bargaining. The Committee further invites the Government to initiate a dialogue with the social partners concerned to identify the appropriate adjustments to be made to the collective bargaining mechanisms in order to facilitate their application to the various categories of self-employed and non-standard workers mentioned above.

Content of collective bargaining in the public sector. In its previous comments, the Committee recalled that under section 13 of Executive Order No. 180, only terms and conditions not otherwise fixed by law may be negotiated between public sector employees' organizations and the government authorities and requested the Government to take the necessary legislative or other measures to expand the subjects covered by collective bargaining, so as to ensure that public sector employees not engaged in the administration of the State fully enjoy the right to negotiate their terms and conditions of employment, including wages, benefits and allowances, and working time. The Committee previously observed that two bills aimed at establishing a Civil Service Code were pending in Congress and that, following ratification of the Labour Relations (Public Service) Convention, 1978 (No. 151), the Government would develop a labour relations framework in the public sector that is aligned with that Convention. The Committee notes the Government's observations that the mentioned bills were not yet enacted into law and that three bills with the same subject-matter were filed in the 19th Congress – Senate Bill No. 587 and House Bills Nos 550 and 1513. The Committee understands from the above that no substantial progress appears to have been achieved in expanding the subjects covered by collective bargaining for public sector employees not engaged in the administration of the State and wishes to recall that Article 4 of the Convention calls for measures to be taken to promote machinery for voluntary negotiation on terms and conditions of employment for all workers, including those in the public service, with the exception only of those who are engaged in the administration of the State, and that the negotiable terms and conditions of work include wages, benefits and allowances, and working time. In line with the above and with its comments under Convention No. 151, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures, including in the context of developing a labour relations framework aligned with Convention No. 151, to ensure that all workers covered by this Convention, including public sector employees not engaged in the administration of the State (teachers, health-care workers, etc.), will be able to negotiate their terms and conditions of employment, including with respect to wages, benefits and allowances, and working time. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this respect.

Requirements for negotiation and adoption of collective bargaining agreements in the electricity sector.

In its previous comments, the Committee noted the observations from the Center of United and Progressive Workers (SENTRO) denouncing the Philippine National Electrification Administration (NEA) policies for directing electric cooperatives to have their bargaining agreements ratified by entities other than those provided for in the law. The Committee notes the Government's clarification in this regard that the issues that gave rise to the complaint by SENTRO evolved around the NEA Memorandum No. 2014-003, instituting Multi-Sectoral Electrification Advisory Council (MSEAC) representatives as part of a consultative panel for the review and negotiation of proposed collective bargaining and collective negotiation agreements in each electric cooperative. The Government informs that the Associated Labour Unions-Trade Union Congress of the Philippines (ALU-TUCP) challenged the Memorandum at the Court of Appeals, alleging that it was contrary to the law on collective bargaining. The Appeals Court, however, considered, in its October 2015 ruling, that the Memorandum was not contrary to the law as it aimed at strengthening harmonious relations between employers and member-consumers and at promoting their well-being through increased transparency and a consultative approach. The Court of Appeals also considered that the rules of the Memorandum do not stifle collective bargaining as they only deal with prior or subsequent activities – the matters subject to review and negotiation by the consultative panel only refer to proposed collective bargaining provisions and not those already agreed upon. In addition, this allows the participants to be aware of the broader picture in which negotiations take place. The Committee notes the Government's indication that in July 2017, the Supreme Court denied with finality the petition for review on certiorari filed by the union and that these issues are thus deemed judicially resolved. The Government further informs that, like in other sectors and industries, the entry into force of collective agreements in the electricity sector does not require prior approval of labour administration authorities.

While taking due note of the above, the Committee observes from the text of Memorandum No. 2014-003 that, according to the NEA, some unions did not heed its advice to have more reasonable economic and non-economic demands in negotiations so as to avoid financial difficulties affecting the delivery of electric service, and that there was therefore a need to strengthen harmonious relationships, promote the well-being of employees and the welfare of member-consumers, and to that effect, transparency requiring consultation and involvement of other sectors and stakeholders was necessary. The Memorandum thus requires the participation of MSEAC representatives in a consultative panel for the review and negotiation of proposed provisions of collective bargaining agreements, which are later ratified by a plurality of votes of the General Membership Assembly, after the management has thoroughly analysed whether they offer a balanced welfare for both employees and member-consumers and overall financial standing of the electric corporation.

While it did not receive specific information on the exact composition of the MSEAC and the consultative panel, the Committee understands from the above that Memorandum No. 2014-003 seems to expand the practice of collective bargaining in electric corporations beyond the parties, that is, the relevant trade unions and the electric corporations, as employers, by providing for the express involvement of a multi-sectoral consultative panel for review and negotiation of proposed collective agreements, as well as for the approval of collective agreements by the corporation's general assembly of members. Although it was not provided with information on the exact involvement of the panel in negotiations, the Committee wishes to underline that provisions requiring agreements to be negotiated with the involvement of third parties may raise problems of compatibility with the Convention, as such third-party involvement considerably alters the bipartite nature of the negotiating process and may not be conducive to promoting voluntary collective bargaining within the meaning of Article 4 of the Convention. The Committee recalls in this regard that, the Convention tends essentially to promote bipartite negotiation of terms and conditions of employment, namely between employers and employers' organizations, on the one hand, and workers' organizations, on the other, so that the parties enjoy full autonomy in determining the content of any agreements concluded. Furthermore, such agreements should not be subject to prior approval by entities other than the parties concerned. In line with the above, the Committee requests the Government to provide further information on the composition of the consultative panel and the manner of its involvement in negotiations of collective bargaining agreements in the electricity sector. It further calls on the Government to consider reviewing Memorandum No. 2014-003 and its implementation, together with the social partners, so as to ensure that employees of electric corporations may fully exercise their rights under the Convention. The Committee also requests the Government to report on the number of collective agreements concluded and in force in the electricity sector and the number of workers covered by these agreements, as well as on any other measures taken to encourage and promote voluntary and good-faith collective bargaining in the sector.

Collective bargaining in practice. The Committee notes the Government's observations on the number of collective agreements registered for the past six years and notes that the Government points to a trend in registration of collective agreements that is consistent with the number of agreements that expire over the same period. The Government indicates, in particular, that, in 2020, the number of collective agreements registered that year declined from 263 to 175, covering more than 60,000 workers, which is associated with the restrictions imposed due to the COVID-19 pandemic. However, in 2021, the number of registered collective agreements increased again to 319, covering about 63,000 workers, and during the period from 1 January to May 2022, 162 collective agreements were registered covering around 39,000 workers. In this respect, the Committee also notes with concern that according to ILOSTAT, only 1.4 per cent of employees in the country are covered by collective agreements. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take all the necessary legal and practical measures to promote the full development and utilization of collective bargaining under the Convention, including those mentioned in the present comment, and to provide information in this respect. The Committee furthers requests the Government to continue to report on the number of collective agreements concluded and in force, the sectors concerned and the number of workers covered by these agreements.

Rural Workers' Organisations Convention, 1975 (No. 141) (ratification: 1979)

Previous comment

Articles 3 and 5 of the Convention. Freedom to elect representatives. Obstacles to the functioning of rural workers' organizations. The Committee recalls that in view of the difficulties for rural workers' organizations in assembling their members scattered around the country in a great number of islands, it had expressed the firm hope that section 250(c) (requirement to hold elections of officers in the local or national union directly and by secret ballot) and that the penalty of cancellation of union registration or officer expulsion in violation of this direct voting requirement of the Labor Code would be amended (section 250). The Committee notes that the Government reiterates that Department Order No. 40-F-03 of 2008 is the implementing rules and regulations of Republic Act No. 9481 of 2007, which amended the Labor Code regarding grounds for cancellation of union registration (article 247, previously 239) to limit it to misrepresentation, fraud, and voluntary dissolution by the members. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the penalty related to the cancellation of the trade union registration is deemed repealed and inoperative even without further legislation. The Committee observes that while the Labor Code provides for the application of the favourability principle (section 4), the fact that the Labor Code still contains the provision setting out explicitly, in its section 250, a penalty of cancellation in violation of the direct voting requirement, may lead to issues of ambiguity in interpretation between sections 247 and 250 of the Labor Code. Recalling that the penalty of officer expulsion in violation of section 250(c) of the Labor Code is incompatible with the principles of freedom of association set out in Article 3 of the Convention, the Committee notes with concern that the Government does not provide information regarding any measures taken or envisaged to amend or repeal this provision from section 250 of the Labor Code. Regarding the requirement of direct election, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the right of workers to directly elect their trade union leaders is a rule, but, exceptionally, voting through a representative is also possible if provided for in the trade union's constitution and by-laws. The Committee welcomes the Government's indication that the Department of Labor and Employment is devising a procedure, through tripartite consultations, to use technology to enable online voting and the operationalization of this initiative will be part of the discussions related to the review and update of Department Order No. 40-F-03, which is expected to be completed in the first quarter of 2023. The Committee requests the Government to take all the necessary measures, in consultation with the social partners, to amend section 250 of the Labor Code to ensure its full conformity with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress on this matter and on the envisaged review of the Department Order No. 40-F-03 and, once adopted, to provide a copy of the reviewed regulations.

Labour Relations (Public Service) Convention, 1978 (No. 151) (ratification: 2017)

Previous comment

Article 1 of the Convention. Scope of application. While noting Executive Order No. 180 of 1987 (EO 180) (right of all Government employees to form, join or assist employees' organizations of their own choosing), and article IX(B) section 2(6) of the Constitution and Supreme Court judgements (right of temporary employees to self-organization and protection against arbitrary dismissals), the Committee had observed that there is no domestic law, rule, or policy pertaining to the right to organize of temporary public employees. The Committee notes the Government's indication that House Bills Nos 2621 and 2846, noted in the Committee's previous comment, were not enacted into law. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged, including legislative measures, so that temporary public employees, in line with the provisions set out in the Constitution, enjoy the rights and guarantees of the Convention.

The Committee had observed that under EO 180 and the Amended Rules and Regulations Governing the Exercise of the Right of Government Employees to Organize, 2004 (Implementing Rules and Regulations (IRR) of EO 180), several other categories of workers, whose functions do not justify their exclusion from the application of the Convention, were subject to limitations: firefighters and prison and other personnel who, by the nature of their functions, are authorized to carry firearms, are also excluded from this right (except when there is express written approval from the management). The Committee notes with interest that the Public Sector Labor-Management Council (PSLMC) Resolution No. 4, s. 2021 (October 2021) clarifies section 15 of the EO 180, and provides that: (i) the exclusion from this right to members of the Armed Forces of the Philippines (AFP) and Philippine National Police (PNP) is not applicable to the civilian and non-uniformed employee's association in the AFP and PNP; and (ii) these employees are accorded the right to organize and shall, upon accreditation, collectively negotiate terms and conditions of employment that are not fixed by law. The Committee observes, however, that the Government does not provide information regarding the right to organize and bargain collectively of other categories of workers, such as firefighters and prison guards, and that in previous comments on the application of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), the Committee had noted the Government's indication that these categories of workers may exercise the right to freedom of association but not to the extent of forming, joining or assisting labour organizations for purposes of collective bargaining. The Committee therefore refers to its comments regarding the application of Article 2 of Convention No. 87 and Article 4 of the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98).

Registration requirements for trade unions in the public sector. Legislative issues. In its previous comments under Convention No. 87, the Committee had requested the Government to inform of the progress made in amending the IRR of EO 180 with regard to the registration requirement for trade unions in the public sector. The Committee notes the Government's indication that from 2017 to 2019 the number of newly registered public sector unions increased (100 in 2017 to 133 in 2019), and that, while the increase was disrupted by the COVID-19 pandemic, it expects to continue increasing. The Committee welcomes the Government's indication that: (i) House Bills No. 550 and 1513, both titled an "Act Strengthening the Constitutional Rights of Government Employees to Self-Organization, Collective Bargaining and Negotiation and Peaceful Concerted Activities and Use of Voluntary Modes of Dispute Settlement" were filed before the House of Representatives on 30 June and 7 July 2022, respectively; (ii) Bill No. 587, with the same title as the House Bills, was filed before the Senate on 14 July 2022; and (iii) these Bills seek to operationalize the Convention and will be discussed by the Congress (which formally opened sessions on 25 July 2022). The Committee observes that the Government does not provide details about the current or foreseen impact of these proposals (and others mentioned in past years by the Government such as the review of the Amended IRR) on the registration threshold for public servants' organizations (a 10 per cent signature support requirement, which has been considered overly stringent by the Center for United and Progressive Workers (SENTRO)). In light of the above, the Committee, requests once again the Government to provide further updates on the progress made in the legislative reform concerning the right to organize of public sector employees and to indicate any impact of these reforms on the threshold for registration of public employees' organizations.

Article 6. Facilities to be afforded to public employees' organizations. The Committee had requested the Government to indicate in more detail the nature of facilities that are afforded to the representatives of recognized public workers' organizations to enable them to carry out their functions promptly and efficiently. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) a survey conducted in 2018 showed that 540 out of 1,073 Collective National Agreements (CNAs) include agency fees (75 per cent) and union time-off (64 per cent); (ii) the PSLMC passed Resolution No. 2, s. 2022 providing for the Guidelines on the Use of Time-Off by Public Sector Employees' Organizations (Annex C), ensuring that members are guaranteed their right to attend activities of their organization without loss of pay; (iii) most unions with signed CNAs are able to negotiate for union office and support facilities; and (iv) unions are also represented in procurement committees and promotion and selection boards, subject to applicable regulations. The Committee observes that the Government does not indicate whether the CNAs mentioned in the referred survey and the other information provided regarding facilities apply to the public sector only or gather information from both the public and private sectors. Regarding the above mentioned Bills (Nos 550 and 1513) to implement the Convention, the Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) the Bills were filed by representatives of labour and consultations have only been held with the labour sector; and (ii) the National Tripartite Industrial Peace Council (NTIPC) may be used as a venue for further consultation. The Committee observes that the Government does not provide further information on the content of these Bills with respect to the facilities afforded to the representatives of recognized public workers' organizations. The Committee recalls that the most important facilities are the granting of time off for workers' representatives without loss of pay or benefits, the collection of trade union dues, access to the workplace and prompt access to management. The Committee further recalls that it is desirable for consultations to be held prior to the adoption of legislation on facilities so that the measures adopted are sustainable and not contingent on successive changes of government or administration. The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide information on all the facilities that are envisaged in the above legislation and that have been agreed in public sector CNAs to representatives of public employees' organizations to enable them to carry out their functions promptly and efficiently (including, granting of time off for workers' representatives without loss of pay or benefits, the collection of trade union dues, prompt access to the management and the workplace and availability of premises). The Committee trusts that such legislation will address this issue, following consultations with the representative organizations concerned, and requests the Government to provide a copy of the legislation once adopted.

Article 7. Participation of organizations of public employees in the determination of terms and conditions of employment of their members. The Committee had noted that the requirement of the absolute majority in a bargaining unit to obtain the status of sole and exclusive collective negotiating agent may give rise to problems every time that no union secures the absolute majority support, thus preventing collective bargaining (sections 9–12 of EO 180, Rule I, section 1(a) of IRR on EO 180)). The Committee requested the Government to indicate whether in case no union in a specific bargaining unit meets the majority requirement, the existing unions are able to negotiate, jointly or separately, at least on behalf of their own members. The Committee notes the Government's reply to this request, indicating that only unions with status of sole and exclusive negotiating agent can conclude a CNA with their employer. The Committee observes that the referred majority requirement can significantly limit the access of public employees to collective bargaining. The Committee therefore requests the Government to indicate how the right of public employees to participate through their organizations in the determination of their terms and conditions of employment set by article 7 of the Convention is applied in the public services where no organization reaches the referred threshold.

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government regarding the number of accredited employees' organizations as of June 2022 (1,299) and that 753 concluded and registered a CNA with the Civil Service Commission. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that the number of organizations of public workers that have obtained the status of exclusive negotiating agent has increased from 148 in 2019 to 180 in 2020 and 275 in 2021. Observing that only public employee's organizations with the status of exclusive negotiating agents can conclude a CNA, the Committee requests the Government to provide information clarifying the updated number of CNAs concluded in the public sector.

The Committee had noted that according to the legislation, terms and conditions of employment not fixed by law may be the subject of negotiation (increases in salary, allowances, travel expenses, and other benefits that are specifically provided by law cannot be negotiated). The Committee had noted the Government's information on the existence of different mechanisms – the PSLMC, the NTIPC, the Regional Tripartite Industrial Peace Councils (RTIPCs) and the Industry Tripartite Councils (ITCs), which, according to the Government, ensure that the interests of workers in Government services are fully represented in the decision and policy-making processes. The Committee notes the Government's indication that no new mechanisms have been put in place so that public sector employees' organizations can negotiate or participate in the determination of terms and conditions of their employment. The Committee observes that the Government does not provide information on: (i) how the existing mechanisms allow public servant organizations to negotiate or participate in the determination of terms and conditions of their employment, in line with Article 7 of the Convention, without limitation of subjects; and (ii) the status of the public sector labour relations road map consistent with the principles of the Convention. The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide information on the manner in which the existing mechanisms allow public servant organizations to negotiate or participate in the determination of terms and conditions of their employment, in line with Article 7 of the Convention, without limitation of subjects (including salary, allowances and travel expenses). Recalling its comments on the application of Article 4 of Convention No. 98 with respect to the public servants not engaged in the administration of the State, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress related to the development of a labour relations framework aligned with Convention No. 151.

Article 8. Settlement of disputes. The Committee had noted that the PSLMC, due to its composition of only Government representatives, does not appear to constitute an independent and impartial means of solving disputes arising in connection with the determination of terms and conditions of employment, as provided for in Article 8 of the Convention. The Committee notes, that the Government reiterates that the Civil Service Commission may conciliate or mediate a dispute before is sent to the PSLMC for resolution. The Committee notes, once again, that the Government does not provide information regarding the possibility for representatives of public servants' organizations to vote in the discussions and deliberations of the PSLMC. The Committee notes the Government's indication that there is no other independent and impartial means of solving disputes arising in connection with the determination of terms and conditions of employment, as provided for in Article 8 of the Convention. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that negotiating parties can submit proposals to the Congress and other authorities to improve the terms and conditions of their employment. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take all the necessary measures to ensure that independent and impartial machinery is established so that disputes arising in connection with the determination of terms and conditions of employment in the public service can be referred to such mechanisms, which should benefit from the confidence of the parties. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard.

Tribunal decisions. The Committee takes note of the information provided by the Government regarding five court decisions issued by the Supreme Court of the Philippines, between 1991 and 2021, relating to the application of the Convention, including one related to the power of the Department of Budget and Management to issue rules in relation to compensation as a result of collective negotiations between government employees' organizations and their employers (Dreneu vs. Abad, G.F. No. 204152). The Committee requests the Government to indicate the implications of this decision, regarding terms and condition of employment of public employees, and to continue to provide information on court decisions relating to questions of principle regarding the application of the Convention.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1957)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) and of the Independent and Self-Governing Trade Union (NSZZ) "Solidarność", received on 1 September 2022, as well as the observations of the All-Poland Alliance of Trade Unions (OPZZ), transmitted with the Government's report, referring to the issues examined by the Committee below. The Committee takes note of the Government's reply to the observations received and requests it to provide its comments in relation to the ITUC's alleged violations of unions' rights in organizing strike referendums and social elections.

Articles 2 and 9 of the Convention. Right of workers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish and join trade unions. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted the allegations made by the NSZZ "Solidarność" that the Act on Universal Defence prohibited soldiers of the territorial defence forces, who were at the same time private sector employees, to establish and join trade unions in the private sector. In this respect, the Committee notes the information provided by the Government that the Act in question was repealed and replaced by the Act of 11 March 2022 on the Defence of the Homeland. In particular, the Committee takes due note that pursuant to section 328(5) of the Act, soldiers who are not professional soldiers are prohibited to establish and join trade unions, or take part in the activities of trade unions of which they were members at the time of their appointment to service, and that pursuant to section 328(6), this prohibition does not apply to soldiers of territorial defence serving on a rotational basis, except where trade union activities are related to the performance of their military service.

Article 3. Right of organizations to elect their representatives in full freedom, to organize their activities, and to formulate their programmes. Civil service. The Committee had previously referred to the need to amend section 78(6) of the Act on Civil Service, which prohibits members of the civil service occupying senior positions to exercise trade union functions. In this respect, the Committee notes the Government's expressed intention to address this issue in consultation with the social partners on the occasion of the amendment of the Act. The Committee had also requested the Government to amend section 78(3) of the same Act, which forbids civil servants to participate in strikes or actions of protest interfering with the normal functioning of the office, and trusted that the Government would consider establishing a procedure for determining which public servants enumerated in section 19(3) of the Law on Collective Labour Disputes and in section 2 of the Act on the Civil Service were exercising authority in the name of the State and for whom the right to strike could therefore be restricted. Recalling that it had previously welcomed the Government's indication that a draft law dealing with the right of public employees to strike was submitted to the Council of Ministers, the Committee notes with regret the Government's indication that at present, there are no legislative initiatives to amend section 78(3) of the Act on Civil Service. Recalling that for a number of years it has been commenting on the discrepancies between section 78(3) and (6) of the Act on Civil Service Act and the Convention, the Committee urges the Government to take all necessary steps to expedite the process of amendment of this Act, so as to ensure that civil servants may exercise their trade union functions at all levels and that the right to strike is granted to all public servants, with the possible exception of public servants exercising authority in the name of the State. It requests the Government to provide information on all progress made in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1957)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the National Commission of the Independent and Self-Governing Trade Union "Solidarność" (NSZZ "Solidarność"), received on 1 September 2022, which mostly relate to issues examined by the Committee in the present comment. The Committee also notes the observations of the International Trade Union Federation (ITUC), received on 1 September 2022 alleging violations of workers' rights under the Convention, including anti-union dismissal, unfair treatment of trade unionists, and the prevention of unions from organizing social elections. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this regard.

The Committee further notes that the Government replies to the observations of the ITUC, which were received on 1 September 2018 and referred to a series of anti-union discrimination acts, including the dismissal of more than 20 "Solidarność" representatives. The Committee notes that the Government provides information in this regard, indicating in particular that in several cases the employees were reinstated. The Committee also takes note of the Government's comments in reply to previous observations of NSZZ "Solidarność", the All Poland Alliance of Trade Unions (OPZZ) and the ITUC.

Article 1 of the Convention. Protection against anti-union discrimination. Legal proceedings applicable to reinstatements. The Committee had previously noted that the victims of anti-union dismissals could request reinstatement, but that the court proceedings could take up to two years. It had also noted the Government's intention to consider amending the Code of Civil Procedure (CCP) in this regard. The Committee welcomes the Government's indication that section 477²(2) of the CCP was amended, so that the court, at the employee's request, may decide to impose on the employer the obligation to continue the employment of the employee until the final conclusion of the proceedings. The Government adds that consideration was also given to the NSZZ "Solidarność" proposal to make additional amendments to the CCP, but the Ministry of Justice did not recommend any further amendments in this regard. The Committee notes the allegations of the NSZZ “Solidarność” that additional legislative changes to the procedural regulations contained in the CCP are needed if the persons who, by virtue of section 32 of the Act on Trade Unions, enjoy special protection under the Act on Trade Unions due to their trade union status or activities are to be efficiently protected against anti-union discrimination. In order to evaluate the effectiveness of the protection granted by the referred provisions, the Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the practical application of sections 32 of the Act on Trade Unions and 477² (2) of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Effective sanctions and compensation to prevent anti-union discrimination. The Committee had previously requested the Government to take the necessary measures to raise the level of fines applicable to anti-union discrimination acts as well as to increase the amount of compensation in cases of anti-union dismissal. The Committee notes with regret that the Government merely reiterates the information that currently there are no legislative initiatives in this regard. The Committee urges the Government to take all necessary steps to expedite the process for the revision of the respective provisions, in consultation with social partners, so as to bring the legislation into conformity with the requirements of the Convention by increasing the level of fines applicable to anti-union discrimination acts as well as by increasing the amount of compensation in cases of anti-union dismissal. It requests the Government to provide information on all progress made in this regard.

Number of sanctions imposed. The Committee had previously requested the Government to provide statistics on the number of sanctions imposed under the amended section 35(1) of the Act on Trade Unions, and to provide information on how the burden of proof is managed by the tribunals when applying this section. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government on the number of complaints for discrimination based on trade union membership, as registered with the National Labour Inspectorate from July 2018 to June 2022: 15 in the second half of 2018, 55 in 2019, 40 in 2020, 57 in 2021, and 26 in first half of 2022 up to 20 June. The Committee also notes the statistics based on the number of persons validly sentenced pursuant to article 35(1) of the Act on Trade Unions in 2015-2019, which included two persons sanctioned, one in 2017 and one in 2019. The Committee also notes additional statistics provided by the Government related to a second set of persons sentenced for crimes prosecuted by the prosecutor. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the number of sanctions imposed under the amended section 35(1) of the Act on Trade Unions, and in particular to clarify which type of offences and anti-union acts the second set of statistics refers to. Furthermore, noting that the Government has not provided information on how the burden of proof is managed by the tribunals when applying section 35(1), the Committee once again requests the Government to provide information in this regard.

Compensation available to “persons working for money”. In its previous comments relating to the protection against anti-union discrimination of “persons working for money” that are now covered by the Act on Trade Unions, the Committee had requested the Government, to specify: (i) whether the consequences of an anti-union termination of the contractual relationship of a “person working for money” are limited to or go beyond financial compensation; (ii) on which basis and according to which modalities the compensation amounting to six months' salary for “persons working for money”, who are trade union representatives and who would be subject to anti-union discrimination, is calculated. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that as a result of the amendment to the Act on Trade Unions, the special safeguards provided for in section 32(1) of this Act also apply to workers other than employees, and that in case of a breach by an employer of these safeguards, trade union activists who are not employees are entitled to a pecuniary compensation (due irrespective of the amount of the damage suffered). The Government further indicates that, pursuant to section 32(1)⁴, when determining the amount of the remuneration referred to in section 32(1)³, the average monthly remuneration for the period of six months preceding the date of termination of the legal relationship, giving notice or a unilateral change to such legal relationship is taken into account, and if a worker, other than an employee, has been working for a period of less than six months – the average monthly remuneration for the entire period of their employment. The Government however indicates that a trade union activist who is not an employee is not entitled to claim reinstatement but may be entitled to damages or redress in excess of the compensation amount, provided that a trade union activist proves in court proceedings all conditions legitimizing liability for damages. While welcoming the amendments to the Act on Trade Unions, in particular new sections 32(1)³ and 32(1)⁴, that provide for the special safeguards under section 32(1) of this Act to apply to workers other than employees, the Committee invites the Government to engage in consultations with the social partners so as to consider the possibility that the consequences of an anti-union termination of the contractual relationship of a “person working for money” are not limited to financial compensation. It also requests the Government to provide information with regard to the application of sections 32(1)³ and 32(1)⁴ of the Act on Trade Unions in practice and provide the statistics of the respective cases in this regard.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. The Committee had previously requested the Government to indicate the extent to which conditions of work, including pay, of “persons working for money” can be subject to collective bargaining. It notes with satisfaction the Government’s indication that due to the amendments made to the Act on Trade Unions, all the rules related to working conditions and remuneration of “persons working for money” that are subject to negotiations leading to signing a collective agreement, are the same as the rules previously applied to employees. According to the Government, every aspect of the work and remuneration of a worker may be subject to arrangements when negotiating a collective labour agreement, provided that they do not go below the conditions already established by applicable labour law. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of collective agreements concluded and in force, the sectors concerned and the number of “persons working for money” covered by these agreements, as well as any additional measures undertaken to promote the full development and utilization of collective bargaining under the Convention.

Portugal

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1964)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Confederation of Portuguese Industry (CIP) and of the General Workers’ Union (UGT), transmitted with the Government’s report and referring to matters under examination by the Committee.

The Committee further notes that in its observations on the application of Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), the UGT alleges acts of anti-union discrimination, harassment and intimidation in the industry and service sectors. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments thereon.

Article 4 of the Convention. Promotion of collective bargaining. Extension of collective agreements. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on the application of the new regime for the extension of collective agreements, which was established under the Medium-Term Tripartite Agreement of 2017. The Committee notes that the Government reports that the number of extension ordinances issued significantly increased in the years following the publication of Decision No. 82/2017, decreased in 2020 due to the low number of collective agreements concluded in the context of the COVID-19 pandemic, and slightly increased again in 2021. It notes the Government’s indication that although Portugal’s trade union membership rate is about 16 per cent, the coverage rate of the collective agreements in force is close to 80 per cent as a result of the issuance of extension ordinances. In this regard, the Committee notes that the statistical data provided by the Government show a slight decrease in the coverage rate of collective agreements in recent years, as it went from 78.3 per cent in 2017 to 76.6 per cent in 2020. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the application of the new extension regime, as well as updated statistical data on the overall coverage of collective agreements in the country.

Conditions for the expiry of collective agreements. The Committee had previously noted the observations of the General Confederation of Portuguese Workers – National Trade Unions (CGTP-IN) alleging that sections 501 and 502 of the Labour Code, which provide that clauses preventing the expiry of a collective agreement unless it is replaced shall lapse three years after the end of the agreement, contravene the principle of free and voluntary collective bargaining. It also noted the opposite view expressed by the CIP and encouraged the Government to continue promoting social dialogue to endeavour to come up with solutions accepted by the most representative social partners. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Agreement on Combating Job Insecurity, Reducing Labour Market Segmentation and Promoting More Active Collective Bargaining, which was signed at a meeting of the Standing Committee on Social Dialogue (CPCS) of the Economic and Social Council (CES) on 18 June 2018, included requirements aimed at preventing gaps arising from the expiry of collective agreements, and that sections 500 to 502 of the Labour Code were amended accordingly on 4 September 2019 (Act N0 93/2019). The Committee observes that although certain changes were made to sections 501 and 502, the provision that was denounced by the CGTP-IN and described above remains in force. The Committee also notes that the CIP, in its observations, alleges that Act No. 11/2021 of 9 March 2021 provides for the extension of the time periods for the after-effect of collective bargaining agreements for a period of 24 months (until 10 March 2023). The Committee notes that according to the CIP, the Act encourages inaction and stagnation, and constitutes a barrier to the adoption of new collective agreements. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this regard. Encouraged by the fact that the issue of the after-effect of collective agreements has given rise to active tripartite dialogue leading to the adoption of Act No. 93/2019, the Committee requests the Government to continue this tripartite dialogue with regard to the matters raised by the CGTP-IN and the CIP within the framework of the CPCS.

Compulsory arbitration. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to inform on any new cases involving the application sections 508(1)(c) and 509 of the Labour Code, which allow the Labour Minister to take a reasoned decision to have recourse to compulsory arbitration. It notes that the Government reports that no decision to have recourse to compulsory arbitral under section 508(1)(c) was made during the reporting period. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on any new case involving the application of the above-mentioned provisions.

Representativeness of organizations. The Committee had previously requested the Government to determine and lay down objective, precise and predetermined criteria to evaluate the representativeness and independence of employers' and workers' organizations forming part of the CES and the CPCS, and to amend section 9 of Act No. 108/91, which designates by name the trade union organizations that are to form part of the CES. It had noted the Government's indication that it would consult with the social partners on these matters with a view to identifying basic guidelines jointly for a tripartite agreement. The Committee notes with regret that the Government does not provide any new information in this regard. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures, in consultation with the social partners, to establish objective, precise and predetermined criteria to evaluate the representativeness and independence of employers' and workers' organizations forming part of the CES and the CPCS, and to amend the legislation accordingly. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress achieved in this regard.

Romania

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1957)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee notes the Government's reply to the comments submitted by: (i) the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC); and (ii) the Block of National Trade Unions (BNS); Confederation of Democratic Trade Unions of Romania (CSDR); and the National Trade Union Confederation (CNS "CARTEL ALFA"), referring to matters examined in this observation.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers to establish and join organizations of their own choosing. Threshold requirements. The Committee notes that in its 2018 observations, the ITUC pointed out that section 3(2) of the Social Dialogue Act (SDA) imposes a minimum requirement of 15 founding members of the same company to set up a union. It further notes that according to the ITUC, this constitutes an insurmountable barrier in a country where the majority of employers are small and medium-sized enterprises, given that 92.5 per cent of all enterprises in Romania employ less than 15 workers and therefore this requirement denies over 1 million workers (42 per cent of the employees) the right to unionize. The Committee notes that in its observations, the CNS "CARTEL ALFA", the BNS and the CSDR raised similar concerns regarding the minimum membership requirements. Noting that the Government does not provide observations in this regard, the Committee recalls that, while it has found that the establishment of a minimum membership requirement in itself is not incompatible with the Convention, it has always been of the view that the number should be fixed in a reasonable manner so that the establishment of organizations is not hindered. It also considers that this criterion should be assessed in relation to the level at which the organization is to be established (for example, at the industry or enterprise level) and the size of the enterprise (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 89). The Committee requests the Government, in full consultation with the most representative workers and employers' organizations, to review the minimum membership criteria taking into consideration the high prevalence of small and medium-sized enterprises in the country so as to ensure the right of all workers to form and join the organizations of their own choosing. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on progress made in this respect.

Scope of the Convention. Retired workers. The Committee had recalled that legislation should not prevent dismissed workers and retirees from joining trade unions, if they so wish, particularly when they have participated in the activity represented by the union. The Committee takes due note of the Government's information that the legislation does not prohibit the maintenance of the membership, or election in the union leadership, in case of dismissal or retirement since the trade union organization and its relations with its members are established by the trade union's statutes according to section 32 of Law No. 62/2011.

Non-standard forms of work. The Committee notes that in its 2018 observations, the ITUC points out that pursuant to section 3(1) of the SDA, day labourers, self-employed workers and workers engaged in atypical employment relationships, which constitute an estimated 25.5 per cent of the total employed population in Romania, are excluded from the scope of the SDA and therefore cannot exercise their trade union rights. Recalling that all workers and employers, without distinction whatsoever, shall have the right to establish and, subject only to the rules of the organization concerned, to join organizations of their own choosing without previous authorization, the Committee requests the Government to provide its comments thereon. It further invites the Government, in consultation with the social partners, to consider any necessary measures to ensure that workers engaged in non-standard forms of work can benefit from the trade union rights enshrined in the Convention.

Article 3. Right of workers' organizations to organize their administration, as well as their activities. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to take measures to: (i) delete or amend section 2(2) of the SDA, according to which workers organizations shall not carry out political activities; and (ii) delete or amend section 26(2) of the SDA, in order to avoid excessive control of trade union finances (powers afforded to state administrative bodies to control the economic and financial activity and payment of debts to the state budget). Noting from the Government's report that no progress has been achieved, the Committee requests the Government to take measures to delete or amend the above-mentioned sections of the SDA, so as to bring them into line with the Convention.

With respect to the consultations undertaken at the National Tripartite Council for Social Dialogue with a view to amend the SDA, the Committee is addressing these issues in the context of the observations on Convention No. 98.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 1 September 2022 concerning, on the one hand, the matters examined by the Committee in its previous comments and, on the other, allegations of anti-union dismissals. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this regard.

The Committee notes that, according to publicly available information, on 23 November 2022 the Chamber of Deputies adopted a reform of the Social Dialogue Act (SDA) of 2011, which was transmitted to the President of the Republic for promulgation. The Committee notes in this respect that: (i) it has made comments since 2012 on the need to revise the SDA; (ii) the technical advisory mission carried out in May 2022 following the 2021 conclusions of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (the Conference Committee) was informed of the ongoing reform process and exchanged views on it with the national tripartite constituents; and (iii) at the request of the Government, the draft reform was the subject of technical comments by the Office in October 2022. The Committee welcomes the fact that the Government has availed itself of the technical assistance of the Office in the ongoing legislative reform and requests the Government to provide a copy of the law as soon as it is promulgated. The Committee hopes that its content will take into account the comments it made on the SDA.

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received and is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. Observing that the technical advisory mission covered the various aspects examined by the Committee and the Conference Committee with regard to the application of the Convention, the Committee invites the Government to take into account the points raised by the mission in the preparation of its next report.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 109th Session, June 2021)

The Committee notes the discussion which took place in June 2021 in the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (the Conference Committee) concerning the application of the Convention by Romania. The Committee observes that the Conference Committee, after noting that there were significant compliance issues regarding the Convention in law and practice with respect to the protection against anti-union discrimination and the promotion of collective bargaining, requested the Government to: (i) ensure adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination in law and practice in compliance with the Convention; (ii) collect detailed information on the number of cases of anti-union discrimination and employer interference brought to the various competent authorities; the average duration of the relevant proceedings and their outcome; how the burden of proof is applied in such cases affecting trade union officers as well as the sanctions and remedies applied in such cases; (iii) ensure, in law and practice, that collective bargaining with the representatives of non-unionized workers only takes place where there are no trade unions in place at the respective level; and (iv) amend the law so as to enable collective bargaining for public servants not engaged in the administration of the State in line with the Convention. The Conference Committee also requested the Government to: (i) provide information on all of the above points to the Committee of Experts before its next session in 2021; and (ii) accept an ILO technical advisory mission before the next International Labour Conference.

The Committee observes that in its report the Government essentially reiterates the information already provided to the Conference Committee.

Articles 1, 2 and 3 of the Convention. Effective protection against acts of anti-union discrimination and interference. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to: (i) take measures to amend the legislation in order to guarantee that acts of anti-union discrimination are subject to specific and dissuasive sanctions; (ii) indicate how the burden of proof is placed in cases of allegations of anti-union discrimination affecting trade union officers; (iii) provide detailed statistical information on the number of cases of anti-union discrimination and employer interference brought to the various competent authorities, the average duration of the relevant proceedings and their outcome, as well as the sanctions and remedies applied in such cases; and (iv) ensure that anti-union practices, and in particular preventive measures, would be subject to tripartite discussions. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that, following consultations with the social partners, the Labour Code was amended in 2020 by Law 151/2020 to ensure a proper recognition of harassment, intimidation and victimization of employees and their representatives, including in the exercise of legitimate trade union rights and activities, with dissuasive sanctions applied effectively. It indicates that: (i) section 5, paragraph 2 of the Labour Code, as amended, explicitly prohibits direct or indirect discrimination based on membership or trade union activity; (ii) section 59(a) of the Labour Code was amended to explicitly prohibit dismissal based on trade union affiliation or activity; and (iii) section 260(1)(r) of the Labour Code, as amended, provides that non-compliance with the provisions of section 5, paragraphs (2)–(9), and of section 59(a) is sanctioned with fines between 1,000 LEI and 20,000 LEI (equivalent to US$229 and US$4,575 respectively). Regarding the burden of proof in cases of union discrimination against union leaders, the Government indicates that, as provided for in section 272 of the Labour Code, the burden of proof with regard to labour disputes rests with the employer. The Committee notes that in the ITUC's view, section 260 of the Labour Code does not permit verification of the extent to which the legislation is effective and sufficiently dissuasive. The Committee also takes note of the Government's indication that no fines were applied for violations of the law related to union membership or activity between January 2020 and April 2021. The Committee finally notes that, at the discussion held at the Conference Committee, the Government indicated that the Ministry of Justice manages the courts databases and that data is collected with a particular nomenclature that did not allow the Government to identify the type of statistical information requested by the Committee.

The Committee takes note of the information provided by the Government. As regards sanctions, the Committee recalls the importance of legislation prohibiting acts of anti-union discrimination to be accompanied by dissuasive sanctions and rapid and effective procedures. In this respect, the Committee considers that the amount of the fines established in the Labour Code might not be sufficiently dissuasive, particularly for large enterprises. The Committee also recalls that, with respect to anti-union dismissals the reinstatement with retroactive compensation constitutes, in the absence of preventive measures, the most effective remedy. The Committee finally recalls the importance of statistical information for the Government to fulfil its obligation to prevent, monitor and sanction acts of anti-union discrimination. Based on the above, the Committee requests the Government to: (i) take measures, after consultation with the representative social partners, to strengthen the existing sanctions in cases of anti-union discrimination in order to ensure their effectiveness and dissuasiveness, particularly for large enterprises; (ii) indicate whether reinstatement is an available remedy in cases of dismissal based on trade union affiliation or activity; and (iii) gather and communicate information on the number of cases of anti-union discrimination and employer interference brought to the various competent authorities, the average duration of the relevant proceedings and their outcome, as well as the sanctions and remedies applied in such cases. As mentioned in its previous comments, the Committee further requests the Government to ensure that anti-union practices, and in particular preventive measures in this respect, will be subject to tripartite discussions.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. The Committee notes that Case No. 3323 concerning, inter alia, allegations of shortcomings and gaps in the national legislation with respect to collective bargaining was examined by the Committee on Freedom of Association (CFA) (393rd Report, March 2021). The Committee notes that the CFA referred to it the legislative aspects of the case, related to issues that have been the subject of comments by this Committee since the adoption of the Social Dialogue Act (SDA) in 2011.

Collective bargaining at the company level. In its previous comments, against the background of a sharp decline in collective bargaining coverage in the country following the adoption of the SDA, the Committee noted that a number of aspects of the SDA and its implementation raised issues of compatibility with the Convention. The Committee noted in particular the high representativeness threshold required to negotiate at company level (50 per cent plus one of the workers of the company) and the fact that the SDA allowed elected workers' representatives to bargain collectively for the totality of workers of the company. In its last comment, while noting the Government's indication that, following a 2016 amendment to section 134.2 of the law, negotiation with elected workers' representatives was now only possible in the absence of a trade union, the Committee had noted with concern the statistical data provided by the ITUC according to which 86 per cent of all collective agreements signed were by elected workers' representatives and only 14 per cent by trade unions. On that basis, the Committee had requested the Government to amend the threshold applicable to negotiations at the company level so as to effectively promote collective bargaining, to clarify whether the negotiating powers granted to the elected workers' representatives existed only when there is no trade union and to provide its comments on the statistics provided by the ITUC.

As regards the representativeness thresholds established by the legislation with respect to collective bargaining at the company level, the Committee notes that, in its replies to the CFA, the Government clarified that voluntary bargaining is not conditioned by the representativity of the organizations since minority unions have the right to bargain collectively based on mutual recognition and can conclude collective agreements applicable to members of the signatory parties. The Committee notes the ITUC observations in this respect, according to which, while the Government states that nothing prevents trade unions from negotiating for their members at the company level, given their lack of representativeness, the agreements reached have no erga omnes effect. With regard to the impact of negotiations conducted by elected workers' representatives on the right to collective bargaining recognized by the Convention to trade unions, the Committee notes that the Government refers to a draft revision of the SDA currently being adopted but does not comment on the ITUC's observations that the vast majority of company collective agreements were still signed by elected workers' representatives to the detriment of trade unions. The Committee notes in this respect that, in its 2021 observations, the ITUC adds that: (i) while the Government states that collective bargaining through elected representatives is only possible in companies that do not have a representative union, the fact that the required representativeness threshold is 50 per cent plus one means in practice that in the majority of companies it is the elected representatives who negotiate instead of the unions who do not reach that threshold; (ii) elected representatives have concluded over 92 per cent of collective agreements in the private sector; and (iii) the procedure for electing representatives does not allow trade unions to present lists when they are affiliated to a federation at the branch level.

The Committee recalls that, under the terms of the Convention, collective bargaining with non-union actors should only be possible when there are no trade unions at the respective level. The Committee also recalls that, by virtue of Article 4 of the Convention, the Government has the obligation to effectively promote free and voluntary collective bargaining in a manner appropriate to national conditions. Expressing its concern at the persistent indications of a very low level of bargaining coverage and noting the recommendations of the Committee on Freedom of Association in Case No. 3323, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to promote collective bargaining between workers' and employers' organizations and to ensure that the existence of elected workers' representatives is not used to undermine the position of the workers' organizations concerned. In this regard, the Committee specifically requests the Government to: (i) specify how the mutual recognition between an employer and a minority trade union mentioned by the Government takes place in practice; (ii) provide information on the number of collective agreements concluded at the enterprise level, indicating those concluded by minority trade unions on behalf of their own members; (iii) clarify whether, under section 134(2) of the SDA, the negotiating powers granted to the elected workers' representatives exist only when there is no trade union at the respective level; and (iv) take the necessary measures to ensure that agreements concluded with elected representatives prior to the 2016 amendment to the SDA do not have the effect of continuing to undermine the position of trade unions.

Collective bargaining at the sectoral and national levels. The Committee recalls that in its previous comments, it had taken note of the information from both the Government and the trade unions concerning the drastic decrease in the number of sectoral collective agreements following the changes introduced by the SDA. The Committee had therefore requested the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the representativeness thresholds so as to effectively promote collective bargaining at all levels. The Committee notes the absence of specific information from the Government in this respect. Taking due note of the conclusions and recommendations of the CFA in Case No. 3323, the Committee recalls once again that collective bargaining should be possible at all levels and that the Government has an obligation to ensure effective promotion of collective bargaining in a manner appropriate to national conditions. The Committee therefore reiterates its request to the Government to revise, in consultation with the representative social partners, the relevant thresholds and conditions in order to ensure that collective bargaining is effectively possible at all levels, including the sectoral and national levels. The Committee further requests the Government to provide information on the evolution of the number of collective agreements signed at the different levels above the enterprise level, as well as on the overall coverage of collective bargaining in the country.

Russian Federation

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1956)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Confederation of Labour of the Russian Federation (KTR), communicated with the Government's report and referring to the issues raised by the Committee below, as well as the Government's reply thereon.

The Committee notes that the Committee on Freedom of Association (CFA) drew to its attention the legislative aspects of Case No. 3313 [see 396th Report, October 2021, paragraphs 529–595]. The Committee notes, in particular, the conclusions and recommendations of the CFA with regard to: (1) the right of trade unions to express opinions and (2) the application to trade unions of the legislative provisions regulating non-commercial organizations performing functions of a foreign agent.

Freedom of expression. With regard to a situation where a union's publications criticizing the State's policy were declared as being contrary to the law and the union's statutes, the CFA recalled that the right to express opinions through the press or otherwise is an essential aspect of trade union rights and the full exercise of trade union rights calls for a free flow of information, opinions and ideas within the limits of propriety and non-violence. The CFA further recalled that freedom of expression which should be enjoyed by trade unions and their leaders should also be guaranteed when they wish to criticize the government's economic and social policy. The CFA requested the Government to take all necessary measures to ensure that the right of trade unions to express opinions, including those criticizing the Government's economic and social policies is duly protected in law and in practice. The Committee requests the Government to indicate all steps taken in this respect.

Foreign agents. Furthermore, and with reference to Case No. 3313, this Committee notes that by virtue of the Law on Non-Commercial Organizations, trade unions must register as organizations performing the functions of a "foreign agent" if they receive funding from foreign sources and that such status entails certain additional obligations imposed on a trade union under sections 24 and 32 of the Law. The Committee further notes that section 32 provides for scheduled (once a year) and unscheduled inspections of non-commercial organizations performing the functions of a foreign agent. The Committee notes that the reasons for unscheduled inspections include the receipt of information from the state authorities, local self-government authorities, citizens or organizations on: (i) a violation of law or its own by-laws by a non-commercial organization performing the functions of a foreign agent; (ii) non-registration as a foreign agent; and (iii) participation in events carried out by a foreign or international non-governmental organization whose activities have been declared undesirable on the territory of the Russian Federation. If during an investigation it appears necessary to obtain documents and/or information through inter-agency information exchange, to undertake complex and/or lengthy research or special expert analyses and investigations, the time limit for carrying out the investigation may be extended to 45 working days. The Committee considers that legislation which seriously hampers activities of a trade union or an employers' organization on the grounds that they accept financial assistance from an international organization of workers or employers to which they are affiliated infringes the principles concerning the right to affiliate with international organizations. The Committee also notes that pursuant to section 32 of the Law, an authorized body can prohibit a non-commercial organization performing the functions of a foreign agent from implementing a programme (or part thereof). Failure to execute that decision entails the liquidation of the organization by a court. The Committee notes heavy penalties set out by the Code of Administrative Offences in connection to the failure to register as a non-commercial organization performing the functions of a foreign agent, and also for production or distribution of materials (including through the mass media and/or the Internet), without indicating that these materials were produced, distributed or sent by a non-commercial organization acting as a foreign agent. In light of the above, the Committee, like the CFA, considers that it is difficult to reconcile the additional bureaucratic burdens imposed on trade unions receiving financial assistance from abroad (including from an international trade union to which they are affiliated), as well as various hefty penalties that can be imposed on the organizations, their leaders and members, with the right of trade unions to organize their administration, to freely organize their activities and to formulate their programmes as well as with the right to benefit from international affiliation. The Committee recalls that the control exercised by the public authorities over trade union finances should not normally exceed the obligation to submit periodic reports. The discretionary right of the authorities to carry out inspections and request information at any time entails a serious danger of interference in the internal administration of trade unions. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary steps to find an appropriate solution through social dialogue in order to ensure that the regulations on non-commercial organizations performing the functions of a foreign agent are compatible with the rights of trade unions, and employers' organizations, under the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all measures taken in this respect.

The Committee notes with utmost concern, from the Kremlin website (www.kremlin.ru), the entry into force, on 1 December 2022, of the Law on Control of Activities of Persons Under Foreign Influence. The Committee notes that pursuant to the new legislation, foreign influence is defined as a support (financial and/or other) provided by, among others, international and foreign organizations, and that non-compliance with the requirements of the law, which are now more stringent than those described above, entails a dissolution of the organization in question. The Committee notes that while employers' organizations are explicitly excluded from its scope, trade unions are not. The Committee urges the Government to take all necessary steps to exclude trade unions and their organizations from the scope of application of the new Law and to inform the Committee of all measures taken in this respect.

The Committee notes, from the Official Internet Portal of Legal Information, the entry into force, on 5 December 2022, of the related legislation, the Law on Amendments to Certain Legislative Acts of the Russian Federation, which amends, among several other pieces of legislation, Federal Law No. 54-FZ of 19 June 2004 (as amended on 30 December 2020) on Meetings, Rallies, Demonstrations, Marches and Pickets. The Committee notes with deep concern that the amendment not only restricts areas where a public event can take place to the extent that the organization of demonstrations, marches, pickets might become virtually impossible, but also forbids the organization of such events by foreign agents. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on these developments.

Article 3 of the Convention. Right of workers' organizations to organize their administration and activities. The Committee had previously invited the Government to review, in consultation with the social partners, various categories of the State and municipal civil service with a view to identifying those that may fall outside of the narrowly interpreted category of public servants exercising authority in the name of the State. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates its explanation on the classification of civil service positions in the national legislation set out in section 9 of the Law on State Civil Servants, and indicates that all civil servants covered by that legislation exercise authority in the name of the State. The Committee notes that the KTR reiterates its opinion that far from all civil servants covered by the Law are "officials exercising authority in the name of the State". The Committee questions to what extent "support specialists" (clerical, documentation, IT, accounting, etc. specialists), for example, exercise authority in the name of the State. The Committee recalls that too broad a definition of the concept of civil servant may result in a very wide restriction or even a prohibition of the right to strike for these workers. The Committee welcomes the Government's indication that it is prepared to conduct, where necessary, consultations with social partners regarding possible improvements. The Committee reiterates its request and expects the Government to inform it of the outcome of the review, in consultation with the social partners, of various categories of the State and municipal civil service with a view to identifying those that may fall outside of this narrowly interpreted category and whose right to strike should be guaranteed.

With regard to its previous request to take the necessary measures to amend section 26(2) of the Law on Federal Rail Transport so as to ensure the right to strike of railway workers, the Committee notes the Government's indication that it believes there is no need to amend the legislation on the rail transport, as section 413 of the Labour Code provides that the right to strike may be restricted by federal law. The Government indicates that temporary work stoppages by certain categories of railway workers may pose a threat to the defence of the country and state security, as well as human life and health, and it is therefore reasonable to restrict their right to strike. The Committee reiterates that railway transport does not constitute an essential service in the strict sense of the term where strikes can be prohibited and that instead, a negotiated minimum service could be established in this public service of fundamental importance. The Committee reiterates its previous request and expects the Government to take the necessary measures, in consultation with the social partners, to amend section 26(2) of the Law on Federal Rail Transport so as to bring it into full conformity with the Convention. The Committee again requests the Government to provide information on measures taken or envisaged in this respect.

[The Government is asked to reply in full to the present comments in 2023.]

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1956)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Confederation of Labour of the Russian Federation (KTR) communicated with the Government's report and referring to the issues examined by the Committee below, as well as the Government's reply thereon.

Articles 1, 2 and 3 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination and interference. In its previous comment, the Committee had requested the Government to provide information on the developments regarding the implementation of the proposals by the KTR and the Federation of Independent Trade Unions of Russia (FNPR), pertaining to anti-union discrimination, which the Government and employers' representatives had agreed to examine in the framework of the Russian Tripartite Commission for the Regulation of Social and Labour Relations (RTK). The Committee notes the Government's indication that it believes the cooperation between the relevant federal authorities and the social partners, within the framework of the working group established under the Ministry of Labour to develop proposals to improve the current regulatory legal framework and law enforcement procedure is effective. The COVID-19 pandemic has affected the frequency and format of the working group meetings and the last in-person meeting was held in July 2022. The Government indicates that the issue of discrimination is one of the key subjects of discussion put on the agenda by trade unions. The Committee notes the KTR allegation that the existing mechanisms are inefficient and ineffective in addressing cases of anti-union discrimination. The Committee notes that the Government disagrees with the KTR in this regard. The Committee deeply regrets that over 11 years after the above-mentioned proposals were made, there has been no concrete outcome in their implementation and urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to examine and implement the proposals pertaining to anti-union discrimination without further delay, as well as to inform the Committee of all developments.

Article 4. Parties to collective bargaining. The Committee had requested the Government to amend section 31 of the Labour Code, which provides that when an enterprise trade union represents less than half of the workers in that enterprise, other non-unionized representatives could represent workers' interests, so as to ensure that only in the absence of trade unions at the enterprise, can the authorization to bargain collectively be conferred on other representatives elected by workers. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates its previous explanation of the procedure for the election of a representative body. The Committee further notes that while the Government considers that the legislation in force is balanced and aims at protecting workers' interests and therefore, its amendment would be contrary to workers' interests, it would welcome receiving information on best international practice of trade unions representing the rights and interests of workers. The Committee notes with regret the KTR's allegation that nothing has been done by the Government to address this long-standing request of the ILO supervisory bodies. While welcoming the Government's request for information on best practices, the Committee urges the Government to engage with the social partners in order to review the legislation so as to clearly establish that it is only in the event where there are no trade unions at the workplace that an authorization to bargain collectively could be conferred to other representative bodies. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this respect.

Promotion of collective bargaining in practice. The Committee notes the KTR's allegation that there are no available statistics on the number of collective agreements concluded and workers covered by such agreements, especially at the regional level. The Committee further notes the KTR allegation of insufficient penalties that can be imposed on employers for not respecting collective agreements. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it is preparing a new draft Code of Administrative Offences, which has been discussed twice during the working group of the RTK with the participation of the KTR and that the consultations with the social partners will continue in this regard. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to promote collective bargaining across the different sectors of the economy and the number of collective agreements concluded and in force, the sectors concerned and the number of workers covered by these agreements.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1988)

Previous comment

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. Right of workers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish organizations of their own choosing and right of organizations to organize their activities and to formulate their programmes. Civil servants. The Committee notes with interest the Government's indication that, according to article 49 of Law No. 017/2020 of October 2020 establishing the general statute governing public servants, a public servant may establish or join a trade union of his or her choice in accordance with the relevant legislation. The Committee also notes that according to articles 3 and 4 of the Law, a public institution may request to be governed by a special statute, established by a Prime Minister's Order. While the special statute is limited to certain modalities laid out in article 4, the Committee notes that the competent authorities may allow these modalities to include any other additional element, except for the salary and benefits. The Committee requests the Government to indicate whether special statutes have been established regarding any specific category of public servants and if they contain specific limitations. The Committee further requests the Government to take the necessary measures, in consultation with the social partners, to amend article 4, so as to ensure that the establishment of a special statute does not deprive public servants of their rights under the Convention.

Right to elect representatives freely. Time limits for registration. Judicial record. The Committee notes that according to Ministerial Order No. 02/MIFOTRA/22 of August 2022, the time frame to process the application for the registration of a trade union or an employers' organization has been reduced from 90 days to 60 days. The Committee considers, however, that this still represents a lengthy registration procedure which may constitute a serious obstacle to the establishment of organizations without prior authorization, as set forth under Article 2 of the Convention. The Committee therefore requests the Government to consider revising Ministerial Order No. 02/MIFOTRA/22 of August 2022 regarding registration of trade unions and employers' organizations with a view to further reducing the registration period such that it does not amount to a requirement of "previous authorization," and to provide information on all developments in this regard.

The Committee recalls that it had previously requested the Government to amend section 3(5) of Ministerial Order No. 11 of September 2010, according to which, an occupational organization of employers or workers, in order to be registered, has to be able to prove that its representatives have never been convicted of offences with sentences of imprisonment equal to or over six months. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates that a person who leads others is required to prove his or her integrity and that a person who committed a crime punishable for at least six months is no longer a person with integrity. The Committee recalls once again that the conviction for an act which, by its nature, does not call into question the integrity of the person and implies no real risk for the performance of trade union duties should not constitute grounds for exclusion from trade union office. The Committee therefore requests once again that the Government take the necessary measures, in consultation with the social partners, to amend section 3(5) of Ministerial Order No. 11, in line with the above.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1988)

Previous comment

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Adequate protection against anti-union discrimination and interference. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted with regret that the new Labour Code (Law No. 66/2018 of 30 August 2018) did not contain, beyond the dismissal of trade union representatives, specific provisions prohibiting and punishing acts of anti-union discrimination and interference and was therefore less protective than the repealed legislation. The Committee notes the Government's indication that law No. 68/2018 of August 2018 determining offences and penalties in general provides, in its article 284, that any person vested with public authority or responsible for a public service mission who orders or personally performs an act which violates an individual freedom, except when provided for by the law, commits an offence and is liable to imprisonment for three to five years. The Committee observes that, in addition to being very generic with respect to the type of offences covered, the scope of application of this provision is limited with respect to the authors of the offences as it does not apply to most private employers. In these circumstances, the Committee recalls, that in order to ensure full compliance with the Convention, the legislation must also target private employers and provide explicit protection against all acts of anti-union discrimination and interference. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the legislation in force targets private employers and provides adequate and explicit protection against all acts of anti-union discrimination and interference, including the imposition of effective and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in its next report on any progress made in this regard.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. The Committee takes due note of Ministerial Order No. 001/19.20 of March 2020 relating to Labour Inspection provided by the Government. The Committee notes that if a labour inspector fails to settle a collective labour dispute, the inspector refers the dispute to the Minister of labour who then submits it to the National Labour Council (article 15), which issues special regulations determining the modalities for the establishment of the arbitration committee and its functioning (article 17). The National Labour Council, after receiving the collective labour dispute from the Minister in charge of Labour, sets up an arbitration committee to settle the collective labour dispute (article 18). While recalling that recourse to compulsory arbitration was removed by the new labour Code, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the special regulations determining the modalities for the establishment of the arbitration board and its functioning, in order to ensure that the rules applicable to the settlement of collective disputes, through the National Labour Council, are fully in line with the principle of free and voluntary collective bargaining established by the Convention.

Referring to its previous comments under the Collective Bargaining Convention, 1981 (No. 154), the Committee recalls that, according to article 3 of Law No. 66/2018 of August 2018 regulating Labour, a "collective agreement" means a written agreement relating to employment conditions or any other mutual interests between employees' organizations or employees' representatives where there are no such employees' organizations on the one hand, and one or more employers or employers' organizations, on the other hand. In view of the Committee, such a definition could be too restrictive and exclude certain categories of workers. The Committee notes the Government's statement that, according to article 32 of the Constitution of Rwanda, trade unions and employers' associations have the right to engage in collective bargaining and may enter into general or specific agreements regulating their working relations. The Constitution recognizes these rights to all categories of trade unions and employer's associations and does not make any distinction based on the status of employees. While taking note of this information, the Committee wishes to recall that the recognition of the right to collective bargaining is wide-ranging in scope and should for instance include the self-employed. The Committee further notes that, according to article 2 of Law No. 66/2018, collective bargaining applies to self-employed workers, but only with regard to occupational health and safety. The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide information on how the right to collective bargaining is recognized to all categories of workers, irrespective of their contractual status and irrespective of the subject covered by collective bargaining.

With respect to the extension procedure of collective agreements applicable to at least two thirds (2/3) of the number of employees or employers representing the category of profession (according to article 95 of the new Labour Code), the Committee notes the Government's indication that its applicability depends on the organizations themselves and that, so far, some collective agreements are in place, but not yet extended. The Committee requests the Government to keep providing information on the application in practice of article 95 of the new Labour Code.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Saint Kitts and Nevis

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 2000)

Previous comment

The Committee notes that in its report on Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) the Government indicates that the draft of the new Labour Code is in its second phase but has not yet been adopted, mainly due to the COVID-19 pandemic, and that it expects it to enter into force by the end of 2023.

Legislation. Articles 1, 2 and 4 of the Convention. The Committee recalls that in its previous comment it had requested the Government to take the necessary action to ensure that the legislation: (i) provides adequate protection against all acts of anti-union discrimination at the time of recruitment and throughout the course of employment with the application of dissuasive sanctions; (ii) contains specific provisions explicitly providing for rapid appeal procedures, coupled with effective and dissuasive sanctions against acts of interference; and (iii) explicitly recognizes and regulates the right to bargain collectively. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it has issued a cabinet submission to the Competent authority to address the concerns raised by the Committee. Highlighting the importance of the current drafting of the new Labour Code the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the adoption of a labour legislation that is in full conformity with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any development in this respect and recalls that it may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office.

Promotion of collective bargaining in practice. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that the most recent collective bargaining agreement between a major contributor to the manufacturing industry and the St. Kitts and Nevis Workers Union was concluded as of April 2022 and that between 100 and 150 workers will be concerned by the terms of this agreement. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the number of collective agreements concluded and in force, the sectors concerned, and the number of workers covered by these agreements. The Committee further requests the Government to provide information on the specific measures taken to promote collective bargaining throughout the different sectors of the economy.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1980)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report, due since 2015, has not been received. In light of its urgent appeal launched to the Government in 2020, the Committee proceeds with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of whatever information is at its disposal. The Committee recalls that it has been raising issues concerning the observance of the Convention in an observation and a direct request, with longstanding requests for information on the application of the rights guaranteed by the Convention with respect to fire service personnel, prison staff and public servants. Not having received any additional observations from the social partners, nor having at its disposal any indication of progress on these pending matters, the Committee refers to its previous observation and direct request adopted in 2020 and urges the Government to provide a full reply thereto. To this end, the Committee recalls that the Government may avail itself of the ILO's technical assistance.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. In its previous comment, the Committee referred to the need to amend sections 11(3) and 25 of the Trade Union Act (TUA), so as to eliminate the discretionary authority of the Registrar in respect of the registration of trade unions and to limit the powers of the Registrar to conduct investigations into the accounts of trade unions. The Committee notes the Government's indication that following a series of consultations with the social partners, the revised Labour Relations Bill (LRB) is before the Cabinet. According to the Government, the revised Bill addresses the above-mentioned issues and once enacted, will repeal the TUA. The Committee welcomes draft sections 16 and 19 of the LRB, which would repeal the discretionary authority of the Registrar regarding registration of organizations and limit the power of the Registrar to receiving an organization's annual return. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all developments regarding the adoption of the LRB, which it expects to be in full conformity with the Convention, and to provide a copy of the Act once adopted.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1998)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the Government's indication that following a series of consultations with the social partners, a revised Labour Relations Bill (LRB) is before the Cabinet. According to the Government, the revised Bill, once enacted, will repeal the Trade Unions Act, 1950.

Scope of the Convention. The Government takes note that the LRB excludes from its scope of application workers who do not have an employment contract (section 2(1)). Recalling that, with the only possible exceptions set in Articles 5 and 6 of the Convention (armed forces, police and public servants engaged in the administration of the State), the Convention covers all workers, the Committee requests the Government to amend the bill to ensure that the legislation is applicable to all workers irrespective of their contractual status, including independent and outsourced workers and workers without employment contract.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Protection against acts of anti-union discrimination and interference. In its previous comment, the Committee expressed its hope that the revision of the LRB would lead to the adoption of a legislation providing protection for workers' and employers' organizations against acts of interference by each other, protection against acts of anti-union discrimination, as well as encouraging collective bargaining in the public and private sectors.

The Committee welcomes sections 7 and 8 of the Bill which respectively pertain to the protection against acts of anti-union discrimination and the protection against acts of interference by employers. The Committee notes that both sections mention sanctions in the event of a violation of those protections. Welcoming both sections of the revised LRB, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on whether the anti-union nature of dismissal or any other act by the employer also result in the reinstatement of the worker in the conditions of work or employment applicable prior to the anti-union act.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. The Committee welcomes Parts III and IV of the Bill which highlight the duty of parties to negotiate in good faith, as well as the enforceability of collective agreements. The Committee notes that, pursuant to section 27(1), a trade union claiming to have the majority of union members in good standing (members who have complied with all their obligations with regard to their union) belonging to a bargaining unit may submit an application to the Tripartite Body to obtain certification as the exclusive bargaining agent of the bargaining unit. It further notes the absence of a provision regulating the case that no organization holds the necessary majority to be certified as the exclusive bargaining agent of the bargaining unit. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on collective bargaining rights of minority unions where no union meets the requirements to become the exclusive bargaining agent.

Promotion of collective bargaining in practice. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the actions taken to promote collective bargaining both in the public and private sectors. The Committee further requests the Government to provide information on the number of collective agreements concluded and in force, the sectors concerned, and the number of workers covered by these agreements.

The Committee expects that the LRB will soon be adopted and that the present comments will be taken into account so that it gives full effect to the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

Sao Tome and Principe

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Adequate protection against anti-union discrimination and interference. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures so as to ensure that its legislation imposes sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions against acts of anti-union discrimination and interference. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the new Labour Code adopted in 2019 has not introduced any changes in this respect but that it continues to contain a number of specific provisions that give application to Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. The Committee notes in this respect that the legislation in force: (i) comprehensively prohibits acts of anti-union discrimination and interference; (ii) contains rules for adjusting the burden of proof to facilitate the determination of the existence of anti-union discrimination; (iii) establishes enhanced protection for trade union representatives and candidates for the post of representatives against acts of anti-union discrimination; (iv) provides for the reinstatement of workers in the event of unlawful dismissal; and (v) establishes fines and a sanction of imprisonment in the event of acts of anti-union interference. The Committee takes due note of these elements. It continues however to observe that the provisions of the Labour Code do not provide for specific sanctions for acts of anti-union discrimination affecting workers who are not trade union representatives or candidates for the post of representatives. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the legislation provides for effective and dissuasive sanctions against acts of anti-union discrimination that apply to all workers covered by the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard in its next report.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. Absence of a legal framework for the exercise of the right to collective bargaining and absence of collective bargaining in practice. The Committee previously expressed concern at the absence of collective agreements in the country, highlighting that the absence of a legal framework could hamper the exercise of the right to collective bargaining. The Committee notes that while the Government states that its legislation still does not provide a legal framework for collective bargaining, it acknowledges the need to facilitate the collective bargaining process in the country in order to reverse the current situation and indicates that meetings of the National Council of Social Concertation have taken place. The Committee once again requests the Government to take all the necessary measures, both in law and practice, to encourage and promote the development and utilization of collective bargaining, and requests it to provide information on the concrete steps taken in this regard.

The Committee reiterates that the technical assistance of the Office is available to the Government in relation to the various matters raised in this observation.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Labour Relations (Public Service) Convention, 1978 (No. 151) (ratification: 2005)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report does not provide any response to the questions the Committee has raised in the comments it has been making for many years on the implementation of several essential provisions of the Convention. The Committee is, therefore, bound to reiterate them and urges the Government to take all the measures required on each of the following points.

Article 4 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. The Committee previously noted the Government's indication that there is no legislation establishing penalties for acts of anti-union discrimination. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures for the adoption of legislative provisions imposing sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions for acts of anti-union discrimination.

Article 5. Adequate protection against acts of interference. The Committee previously noted that the legislation does not establish sanctions for acts of interference. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to adopt legal provisions imposing sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions for acts of interference against trade union organizations of public employees.

Article 8. Settlement of collective disputes. The Committee previously noted that section 11 of the Act on Strikes provides for compulsory arbitration, but that the legislation does not establish any mechanism for mediation or conciliation in the event of a dispute between the parties. The Committee noted the Government's indication that matters relating to the mediation of disputes in the public administration fall within the remit of the Directorate of the Public Administration and not the Labour Directorate. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide additional information on the settlement of collective disputes in the public administration, and in particular to indicate whether the Act referred to above applies to employees of the public administration, and to provide detailed information on the mediation mechanisms that are under the responsibility of the Directorate of the Public Administration.

Recalling that it may request the technical assistance of the Office, the Committee trusts that the Government will adopt the necessary measures in the near future.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Collective Bargaining Convention, 1981 (No. 154) (ratification: 2005)

Article 5 of the Convention. Collective bargaining in the public administration. The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that collective bargaining does not apply to the public service. The Committee requests the Government to indicate the obstacles preventing the application of collective bargaining to public servants and to take all measures at its disposal to make possible and promote collective bargaining in the public service with a view to giving effect to Article 5 of the Convention.

Legal framework for the exercise of collective bargaining. The Committee notes that, in the context of the application of the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98), the Government indicates that the Bill establishing the legal framework for collective bargaining has still not been adopted. The Committee requests the Government to inform it of the ongoing legislative process and it firmly hopes that all appropriate measures will be taken for the adoption of the necessary regulation to promote collective bargaining.

Article 6. Mediation. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Labour Directorate of the Ministry of Employment and Social Affairs only acts as a mediator in disputes between employers and workers in the private sector.

Article 7. Consultation and negotiation with employers' and workers' organizations. The Committee reminded the Government in previous comments that, under the terms of the Convention, consultation and negotiation with the most representative organizations of workers and employers has to be promoted during the process of determining the rules for collective bargaining procedures. The Committee once again requests the Government to take measures for this purpose.

Application in practice. The Committee previously noted the Government's indication that there are currently no collective agreements in the country in view of its geographical size. The Committee expresses concern in this regard and once again invites the Government to have recourse to ILO technical assistance to resolve this important problem.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Senegal

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1960)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the National Confederation of Workers of Senegal (CNTS) and the National Federation of Independent Trade Unions of Senegal (UNSAS), received in August 2022, relating to matters already addressed by the Committee.

Bringing the legislation into conformity with the Convention. While taking note of the information concerning the Labour Code reform process and ILO technical assistance in this regard, the Committee once again notes with deep regret that the Government has not reported any progress in bringing the legislation into conformity with the Convention and has only reiterated that the Committee's recommendations will be taken into account in the ongoing reform. Consequently, the Committee is bound to recall most of its recommendations and trusts that the reform under way will, in the near future, give full effect to the provisions of the Convention.

Article 2 of the Convention. Trade union rights of minors. The Committee urges the Government to report on any progress made in amending section 11 of the Labour Code to allow minors to freely join trade unions, once they have reached the minimum age for access to employment, as provided for in the Labour Code.

Articles 2, 5 and 6. Right of workers to establish organizations of their own choosing without previous authorization. The Committee urges the Government to take without delay measures to repeal the legislative provisions that restrict the freedom of workers to establish organizations of their own choosing (provisions of Act No. 76-28 of 6 April 1976, incorporated in section L.8 of the Labour Code), and particularly the provisions concerning the morality and aptitude of trade union leaders or those which grant de facto to the authorities the discretionary power of previous authorization, which is contrary to the Convention.

Article 3. Right of trade union organizations to exercise their activities in full freedom and to formulate their programmes. Requisitioning in the event of a strike. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the implementing Decree of section L.276 of the Labour Code authorizes the requisitioning of workers only to ensure the operation of essential services in the strict sense of the term.

Occupation of workplaces in the event of a strike. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to limit the restrictions provided for in section L.276 of the Labour Code to ensure that they only apply in cases when strikes cease to be peaceful or when respect for the freedom to work of non-strikers and the right of the management to enter the premises of the enterprise are hindered.

Article 4. Dissolution by administrative authority. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the legislation such that the dissolution of seditious organizations, provided for by Act No. 65-40 of 22 May 1965 on associations, may in no event be applied to professional organizations.

Trade union rights of customs workers. Referring to the recommendations of the Committee on Freedom of Association in case No. 3209 (384th Report, March 2018), the Committee once again requests the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to amend section 8 of Act No. 69-64

(the Customs Staff Regulations Act) in order to remove any obstacles to the exercise of trade union rights.

Serbia

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 2000)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Confederation of Autonomous Trade Unions of Serbia (CATUS), transmitted with the Government's report and alleging difficulties in establishing trade union organizations in practice due to complex and lengthy procedures. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this regard.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of employers to establish and join organizations of their own choosing without previous authorization. The Committee recalls that for a number of years it has been commenting upon the need to amend section 216 of the Labour Act, which provides that employers' associations may be established by employers that employ no less than 5 per cent of the total number of employees in a certain branch, group, subgroup, line of business or territory of a certain territorial unit, in order to establish a reasonable minimum membership requirement. In this respect, the Committee had noted the Government's indication that the Committee's comments on section 216 would be taken into consideration in the course of the amendment of the Labour Act. The Committee regrets that the Government merely reiterates the information it had previously provided, specifically that the Ministry of Labour, Employment, Veterans and Social Affairs has the intention of amending the Labour Act in the context of further harmonization of the legislation with the EU acquis and international standards of the ILO. The Committee urges the Government to take all necessary steps to expedite the process for amendment of the Act, in consultation with social partners, so as to lower the requirement relating to the minimum number of employees for the establishment of employers' organizations. It requests the Government to provide information on all progress made in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 2000)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Confederation of Autonomous Trade Unions of Serbia (CATUS) and the Serbian Association of Employers, transmitted with the Government's report, on the application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes that in addition, the CATUS alleges that certain collective agreements, in particular those concluded with the State as an employer, reduce the legal rights of workers. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this regard.

The Committee notes the Government's comments in reply to the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), the Trade Union Confederation "Nezavisnost", and the CATUS, received in 2018 and alleging in particular anti-union discrimination and violations of good faith collective bargaining in practice. The Committee notes the Government replies concerning the applicable legislation, but observes that it does not provide information with regard to the specific allegations raised in the respective observations. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this regard.

Furthermore, the Committee notes with regret that the Government did not provide a reply to previous observations from the following workers' and employers' organizations: (i) CATUS and the Trade Union of Judiciary Employees of Serbia (TJES) (2013); (ii) the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) and the Serbian Association of Employers (SAE) (2013); (iii) the Union of Employers of Serbia (UES) (2012 and 2014); (iv) the ITUC (2015); (v) Nezavisnost (2012); and the Confederation of Free Trade Unions (2012). The Committee urges the Government to provide its comments to the mentioned outstanding social partners' observations and trusts that it will show greater cooperation in the future.

Article 1 of the Convention. Protection against anti-union discrimination in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to provide further details on the anti-union discrimination cases handled by the Commissioner for the Protection of Equality, as well as information on the labour inspection and judicial proceedings related to anti-union discrimination cases, their average duration and outcomes. The Committee notes that the Government indicates the Commissioner's records related to anti-union discrimination cases: (i) from June 2021 to June 2022, trade union membership or activity was invoked as grounds for discrimination in four cases of which one case is still ongoing while the proceedings of the other three cases were suspended in accordance with the conditions set by the law; (ii) since the establishment of the Office of the Commissioner in May 2010, discrimination based on trade union membership or membership of other organizations is the third most frequent allegation of discrimination in employment and occupation, after discrimination based on gender and on marital and family status; (iii) in those cases where anti-union discrimination has been established, the Commissioner has recommended the employer to take all the necessary measures in order to eliminate the consequences of the discriminatory behaviour; and (iv) the Commissioner has also initiated 22 strategic lawsuits on behalf of discriminated persons but none of these cases involved trade union membership as grounds for discrimination. The Government adds that the Commissioner's obligation to keep the records on discrimination cases pursuant to the 2021 amendments to the Law on the Prohibition of Discrimination will also include in the near future the relevant court decisions. The Committee takes note of this detailed information. It observes, however, that, despite the frequency of the allegations of anti-union discrimination reported by the Government, it has not been informed of any cases where specific sanctions have been imposed in this respect. The Committee recalls in this regard the need, in order to ensure an effective protection against anti-union discrimination, to provide for dissuasive sanctions through effective and rapid procedures. In order to be able to evaluate the effectiveness of the different mechanisms available in case of anti-union discrimination, the Committee therefore urges once again the Government to: (i) provide specific information on labour inspection and judicial proceedings related to anti-union discrimination cases, their average duration and outcomes; and (ii) to continue providing information on anti-union discrimination cases handled by the Commissioner including details on the final outcomes of the referred cases.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. Representativeness of workers' and employers' organizations. The Committee had previously requested the Government to indicate whether the amended section 229 of the Labour Act had improved the operation and efficiency of the Representativeness Board when dealing with requests to grant representativeness and whether the Government was developing any further amendments to the Labour Act in this regard. The Committee notes that according to the Government, the criteria for determining the representativeness of trade unions and employers' associations are clearly defined in sections 218–237 of the Labour Act, and the amended section 229 of the Act improves the work of the Board as the decision-making is no longer made by consensus of all Board members but by a majority of votes. The Committee further recalls that the amendments to section 229 provide for the Minister of Labour to decide on a request for representativeness without the Board's approval if the latter fails to submit a proposal to the Minister within 30 days from the date of the request. It recalls in this respect that the determination of the representative status of organizations for the purposes of bargaining should be carried out in accordance with a procedure that offers every guarantee of impartiality, by an independent body that enjoys the confidence of the parties, and without political interference. Reiterating that methods for the determination of the most representative organizations should be based on objective, pre-established and precise criteria, the Committee requests once again the Government to indicate whether the amendments to section 229 of the Labour Act have improved the Representativeness Board's operation and efficiency when dealing with requests to grant representativeness, and to provide in particular specific information about: (i) how section 229, as amended, is applied in practice; (ii) the number of cases and more details on the cases in which the Minister has decided on the requests for representativeness without the Board's approval; (iii) whether any further amendments to the Labour Act are being developed in this regard.

Percentage required for collective bargaining. The Committee had previously referred to the need to amend section 222 of the Labour Act, with a view to lifting the 10 per cent requirement for employers' organizations to be entitled to engage in collective bargaining. The Committee notes with regret that the Government in its report merely recalls the content of section 222 and provides no further information in this regard. Recalling that for a number of years it has been commenting on the discrepancies between section 222 of the Labour Act and the Convention, the Committee urges the Government to take all necessary steps to expedite the process for amendment of this Act, in consultation with social partners, so as to bring the legislation into conformity with the requirements of the Convention by lowering the above-mentioned percentage. It requests the Government to provide information on all progress made in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Workers' Representatives Convention, 1971 (No. 135) (ratification: 2000)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Confederation of Autonomous Trade Unions of Serbia (CATUS), transmitted with the Government's report and alleging inadequate protection of trade union representatives. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this regard.

The Committee notes that the Government did not provide a reply to previous observations from the CATUS of 18 November 2014, alleging violations of the Convention in practice, and the reduced protection of the workers' representatives due to the expiry of the 2008 General Collective Agreement. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide its comments in this regard.

Article 6. Collective agreements giving effect to the Convention. The Committee had previously requested the Government to indicate which legal mechanism was used to repeal the 2008 General Collective Agreement and the reasons for this action. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the General Collective Agreement was concluded by the representative association of employers (the Union of Employers of Serbia) and the representative trade unions, established for the territory of the Republic of Serbia (namely, the CATUS and the Trade Union Confederation "Nezavisnost"), for a period of three years, and that upon the expiration of this term, the agreement has ceased to apply. The Government adds that, pursuant to the Labour Law, the Government is not a participant in concluding a general collective agreement. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the effects of the expiry of the 2008 General Collective Agreement on the implementation of the Convention, including whether the facilities for workers' representatives under this Agreement have been maintained, and if this is not the case, to indicate how appropriate facilities in undertakings are afforded to workers' representatives in order to enable them to carry out their functions promptly and efficiently.

Seychelles

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1978)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Association of Seychelles Employers (ASE) and the Seychelles Chamber of Commerce and Industry (SCCI), communicated with the Government's report, as well as the Government's statement pertaining to the status of the review of the Industrial Relations Act (IRA) set out below.

In its previous comment, the Committee had requested the Government to provide information on the developments regarding the review of the IRA, particularly the amendments of its following provisions:

- section 9(1), so as to repeal the Registrar's discretionary power to refuse registration;
- section 52(1)(a)(iv), so as to reduce the majority required to declare a strike to a simple majority;
- section 52(1)(a)(iii), so as to consider shortening the length of the cooling-off period;
- section 52(4), so as to ensure that the responsibility for declaring a strike illegal does not lie with the government authorities, but with an independent body which has the confidence of the parties involved; and
- section 56(1), which imposes penalties of up to six months of imprisonment for organizing or participating in a strike declared unlawful.

The Committee notes the Government's indications that a report with the recommendations for amendments developed by an ILO consultant in 2021 is currently under review by the Ministry of Employment and Social Affairs. According to the Government, the report contains recommendations: to repeal section 9; to provide that the strike ballot "shall be successful where it obtains the support of a majority of the workers in the bargaining unit concerned by the labour dispute"; to amend section 56(1) so as to limit the penalty to solely a monetary fine, as opposed to a monetary fine combined with imprisonment; and to set up a Commission for Conciliation and Mediation which will have statutory powers to create a deadlock breaking mechanism and prevent strike action. No recommendation has been made regarding the authority to declare a strike unlawful. The Government indicates that it is yet to finalize its position on the proposals. While taking due note of the work carried out with the technical assistance of the ILO, the Committee recalls that it has been requesting the Government to amend the IRA for a number of years. It therefore urges the Government to take all necessary steps to expedite the legislative review, in consultation with the social partners, and to take into account the Committee's previous comments, including its expectation that the amendment of section 52(1)(a)(iv) will continue to ensure that account is taken only of votes cast, as well as its comments on provisions apparently not mentioned in the consultant's report. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the developments in this regard.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that while the 45 days cooling-off period is not preceded by compulsory prior mediation or conciliation procedure and begins at the time of the reporting of the dispute to the Minister, in its view, it is possible to further shorten it to 30 days, in consultation with the social partners. Recalling that the period of advance notice should not be an additional obstacle to bargaining, the Committee requests the Government to provide information of developments in this respect.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1999)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Association of Seychelles Employers (ASE) – Seychelles Chamber of Commerce and Industry (SCCI) communicated with the Government's report.

Articles 2, 4 and 6 of the Convention. Pending legislative matters. The Committee recalls that for many years it has been requesting the Government to take measures to amend several provisions of the Industrial Relations Act (IRA) in order to: (i) provide for an effective protection against acts of interference by employers or their organizations in workers' organizations; and (ii) ensure that recourse to compulsory arbitration in cases where the parties do not reach an agreement through collective bargaining is permissible only in relation to public servants engaged in the administration of the State, essential services in the strict sense of the term and acute national crises. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) an ILO consultant was mandated to undertake the review of the IRA; (ii) as a result, a draft report with recommendations was submitted to the Ministry of Employment and Social Affairs (MESA) and to the ILO in 2021; (iii) the report is currently reviewed by the MESA; and (iv) once the review of the report is completed, the MESA will meet with stakeholders for validation. The Committee hopes that the legislation will soon be amended in order to bring it into full conformity with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this respect.

Promotion of collective bargaining in practice. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on: (i) the measures taken to promote collective bargaining across the different sectors of the economy; and (ii) the number of collective agreements concluded and in force, the sectors concerned, and the number of workers covered by these agreements.

Sierra Leone

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1961)

Previous comment

The Committee observes with regret that the Government's report does not address its previous comment, initially made in 2013, on the allegations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) concerning restrictions to collective bargaining in the mining sector. The Committee is therefore bound to reiterate its previous request for comments in this regard.

The Committee previously expressed its hope that the Government, availing its assistance, would give full effect to the Convention by reviewing the labour legislation in consultations with its social partners. The Committee, in this regard, notes the Government's indication that the review has resulted in the development of a draft Employment Bill, 2022, and that the draft Industrial Relations and Trade Union Bill, 2022 (IR Bill) was elaborated post review of the Regulation of Wages and Industrial Relations Act No.18 of 1971.

Scope of application of the Convention. Fire force and correctional service personnel. The Committee observes that while the draft IR Bill does not explicitly exclude members of the fire force or correctional service personnel, the scope of the Employment Bill covers only civilian workers of either category. The Committee recalls that, with the sole exceptions set out in its articles 5 and 6, the rights and safeguards set out in the Convention apply to all workers, including fire service personnel and prison staff (2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 209). The Committee requests the Government to indicate any other regulation that would grant to the non-civilian members of the fire force and the correctional services the rights recognized by the Employment Bill that give application to the Convention and to ensure that these categories of workers are in a position to fully benefit from all its provisions.

Workers with supervisory responsibilities. The Committee previously requested the Government to take measures to ensure that workers with supervisory responsibilities could bargain collectively. The Committee welcomes the Government's indication that the draft IR Bill includes within its scope, those with supervisory responsibilities (section 2(1)).

Other categories of workers. The Committee observes however that section 2(4) of the draft IR Bill allows the Minister, after consultations with the Joint Consultative Committee (section 13), to exempt any person or class of persons or any trade, industry or undertaking with terms and conditions of employment governed by special arrangements, from the coverage of the legislation. Recalling once again the very broad scope of the Convention, the Committee requests the Government to review section 2(4) of the draft IR Bill so as to ensure that all workers, with the only possible exception of the armed forces, the police and the public servants engaged in the administration are effectively covered by the legislation that gives application to the different provisions of the Convention.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. The Committee previously requested the Government to take the necessary action to adopt specific legislative provisions, including effective and dissuasive sanctions against acts of anti-union discrimination and interference. The Committee welcomes the inclusion of provisions prohibiting and sanctioning acts of anti-union discrimination in the draft Employment Bill. The Committee however requests the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that the future legislation also includes provisions that provide effective protection against acts of interference in accordance with Article 2 of the Convention.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. The Committee observes that section 37 of the draft IR Bill lays down the provision for the issuance of collective bargaining certificates by the Government. The Committee requests the Government to provide details regarding the objective criteria and procedures for the determination of a union's eligibility to hold a collective bargaining certificate under the draft IR Bill.

Collective bargaining in practice. The Committee previously requested the Government for information on the measures taken to promote collective bargaining, with detailed statistics on collective agreements concluded. While noting the Government's indication that the Ministry of Labour and Social Security: (i) issues collective bargaining certificates to registered trade unions; and (ii) publishes collective bargaining agreements reached between employers and workers, the Committee reiterates its request for information on the number of collective agreements in force, the sectors concerned, and the number of workers covered, in addition to any measures undertaken to promote the development of collective bargaining.

The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the adoption of the two bills mentioned above and hopes that the consideration of the present comments will contribute to ensure the full conformity of the legislation with the Convention.

Slovenia

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. Protection against acts of interference. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that national legislation contained specific provisions prohibiting acts of interference by employers or their organizations in the establishment, functioning and administration of workers' organizations, and providing effective and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions against such acts. The Committee notes that, in addition to reiterating that trade union activities are already generally protected by the Constitution of the Republic of Slovenia and that adequate judicial protection and sanctions against anti-union interference are set out in the Employment Relationship Act in sections 217 and 218, the Government indicates that violation of trade union rights is defined as a criminal offence in paragraph two of article 200 of the Criminal Code which stipulates that whoever breaches regulations and general acts by preventing employees or hindering them from exercising free association and carrying out union activities, or obstructs the implementation of union rights, or takes over a trade union shall be punished by a fine or sentenced to imprisonment for not more than one year. The Committee takes due note of the content of article 200 of the Criminal Code and requests the Government to indicate which circumstances fall within the definition of “takes over a trade union” and to provide information of its application in practice.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Solomon Islands

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 2012)

Previous comment

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Legislative matters. In its previous comments, the Committee drew the Government's attention to a series of legal provisions which were not in conformity with the Convention and needed to be amended in order to:

- make the Trade Unions Act (TUA) applicable to all workers irrespective of the nature of their contract, including independent and outsourced workers and workers without an employment contract, as well as to prison staff and fire services (section 2 et seq. of the TUA);
- ensure that the fine imposable upon an employer who discriminates against a worker at the stage of recruitment for reasons of union membership or activities (section 60(3) of the TUA) is sufficiently dissuasive;
- adopt provisions which: (i) provide adequate protection to workers, in particular to trade union officers and representatives, against anti-union discrimination in the course of employment, such as transfer, relocation and withdrawal of benefits; (ii) explicitly prohibit dismissal for reasons of trade union membership or activities; and (iii) set up rapid and impartial procedures as well as sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions against such acts; and
- adopt provisions providing for full and adequate protection of workers' and employers' organizations against any acts of interference against each other, setting up rapid and impartial procedures as well as sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions against such acts.

The Committee notes with regret the Government's lack of reply with respect to the issues highlighted in its previous comments. In the absence of further substantial information, the Committee firmly expects that the Government will take the necessary legislative measures, in consultation with the social partners, to bring the provisions of the TUA into full conformity with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken in this regard.

In its previous comments, the Committee also requested the Government to provide further details on:

- the role of labour inspection and other bodies empowered to examine complaints against anti-union discrimination and against allegations of interference of employers in workers' organizations, especially concerning their accessibility, rapidity and independence;
- the rule granting reversal of burden of proof for cases of anti-union discrimination other than dismissal;
- the sanctions provided for in case of interference by employers in workers' organizations and for anti-union discrimination unrelated to recruitment;
- legislative provisions and all other measures whose objective is to regulate and promote collective voluntary negotiation among the social partners; the possible powers of public authorities in this regard, as well as the number of collective agreements concluded, specifying the sectors and the number of workers covered; and
- legislative provisions and all other measures regulating the procedure for recognition of trade unions in collective bargaining, in particular the criteria for the designation of bargaining agents, threshold of representativity required, type and duration of recognition procedure, rights of minority unions, the possibility of forming groups of trade unions for bargaining purposes, and collective bargaining rights of employers' organizations, including the role, if any, of the Chamber of Commerce.

Regretting the absence of any new information in this regard, the Committee urges the Government to provide information on these matters.

Article 4. Collective bargaining in practice. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Solomon Islands Council of Trade Unions has signed almost 60 collective agreements with 60 employers across the country and that those collective agreements only cover members, which must consist of 50 per cent or more of the total workers. While taking due note of this information, the Committee recalls that a threshold of 50 per cent or more of the total workers to be able to bargain collectively, can be excessive. The Committee refers to its request above with regard to the procedure for recognition of trade unions and requests the Government to take into consideration that, when the threshold is not reached, the existing unions should be given the possibility, jointly or separately, to bargain collectively, at least on behalf of their own members.

The Committee further requests the Government to: (i) provide information on the measures taken to promote collective bargaining across the different sectors of the economy; and (ii) continue providing information on the number of collective agreements concluded and in force, the sectors concerned, and the number of workers covered by these agreements.

Somalia

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 2014)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee takes note of the Government's first report on the application of the Convention. It notes with interest the Government's indication that a draft Labour Code (the content of which is examined in the direct request accompanying this observation), was developed in collaboration with the ILO to revise the 1972 Labour Code, and that all tripartite partners were involved in the process. It further notes that this draft Labour Code and a draft Civil Service Law are currently pending approval by the Parliament. The Committee requests the Government to inform on the adoption process of the draft Labour Code and the draft Civil Service Law and to transmit copies of the laws once adopted.

The Committee also notes the observations of the Federation of Somali Trade Unions (FESTU), received on 1 October 2020, alleging violations of the right to organize, including the right to strike, at an airport management company, as well as pressures and threats by the police against trade union officials. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

South Africa

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1996)

Previous comment

The Committee takes note of the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 1 September 2022, referring to the matters addressed below.

Trade union rights and civil liberties. Allegations of violent repression of strike actions and arrests of striking workers. The Committee had previously requested the Government to reply to the 2015 ITUC observations, pertaining to the arrest of 100 community health striking workers in July 2014 and the killing, in January 2014, of a union steward of the Association of Mineworkers and Construction Union (AMCU) and to communicate the results of the investigation regarding the death of that union steward. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the observation has been communicated to the Independent Police Investigative Directorate (IPID), which has yet to respond to the denunciations. The Government indicates that it will submit the IPID report as soon as it becomes available. Considering the years that have passed since the submission of the ITUC observations, the Committee firmly urges the Government to take all necessary measures with a view to expediting the process of investigation and requests the Government to inform it of the findings.

The Committee notes that in its most recent observations, the ITUC alleges that strike actions in South Africa are often met with intimidation and anti-union dismissals with violence and arrests and refers in this respect to the assassination of a campaigner and organizer for the National Union of Metalworkers of South Africa (NUMSA), in August 2021 whilst NUMSA officials were engaging in conciliation at the Commission for Conciliation, Mediation and Arbitration (CCMA), and the killing of a member of the NUMSA in October 2021, during a protest march for a salary increase in the metal and engineering sector. According to the ITUC, the NUMSA alleges that some of its members have been attacked by the police and private security companies, and in some instances, have even been shot at, causing injuries. The ITUC further alleges that members of the South African Commercial Catering and Allied Workers Union (SACCAWU) were facing increased intimidation by their employer during protests, in particular through the use of legal notices, unpaid leaves to self-isolate for allegedly violating COVID-19 safety rules, and text messages telling workers they had been replaced. The Committee also takes note of the alleged violence, such as threats, the use of rubber bullets and petrol bomb attacks against striking dairy workers, members of the General Industries Workers Union of South Africa (GIWUSA). The Committee also notes the alleged suspension of four members of the National Emancipated and Allied Workers Union of South Africa (NEAWUSA) following a month-long strike. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed comments on these serious allegations of violation of trade union rights and civil liberties.

The Committee notes with regret that the Government did not reply to its previous request to send copies of the Accord on Collective Bargaining and Industrial Action, the Code of Good Practice on Collective Bargaining, Industrial Action and Picketing, and Picketing Regulations, and the Labour Relations Act, as amended, and to provide detailed information on the implementation of the recommendations of the Judicial Commission of Inquiry into the events at Marikana Mine in Rustenburg.

The Committee reiterates its previous request and expects the Government to transmit full particulars with its next report.

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. Rights of vulnerable workers to be effectively represented by their organizations. The Committee regrets that the Government did not provide a copy of the research report on the impact of the amendments of the Labour Relations Act on trade unionization of temporary employees, and also did not provide information on any developments regarding the Government's interventions to address difficulties in the exercise of the right to organize by farmworkers, including on the ITUC's 2015 observations alleging difficulties for farmworkers to engage in legally protected industrial action. The Committee reiterates its previous request and expects the Government to transmit full particulars in this respect with its next report.

[The Government is asked to reply in full to the present comments in 2023].

Spain

Workers' Representatives Convention, 1971 (No. 135) (ratification: 1972)

The Committee notes the observations of the General Union of Workers (UGT), the Spanish Confederation of Employers' Organizations (CEOE) and the Spanish Confederation of Small and Medium-Sized Enterprises (CEPYME), provided by the Government and the Government's comments in this respect.

Article 2 of the Convention. Appropriate facilities. The Committee notes the adoption of Act No. 12/2021 amending the consolidated text of the Workers' Charter to guarantee the labour rights of persons engaged in delivery work through a digital platform (28 September 2021). The Committee notes with interest that the amendment to section 64 of the Charter guarantees the right to information and consultation of workers' representatives, recognizing the right of the enterprise committee to be informed of the rules and specifications on which the algorithms or artificial intelligence systems are based that affect decision-making that could have an impact on working conditions, and accessing and retaining employment, including profiling (new paragraph 4(d)). Inasmuch as it may facilitate the collective representation of workers in the sector, the Committee also welcomes the presumption of the existence of an employment relationship for workers engaged in the delivery or distribution of any kind of product or merchandise, when the enterprise exercises its powers of organization, administration and supervision by means of the algorithmic management of the service or working conditions through a digital platform (section 8(1)).

The Committee also notes the Government's indication regarding the adoption of Act No. 10/2021 on remote work (9 July 2021), which refers to regular work (performed over a period of three months for a minimum of 30 per cent of the working day or a proportional percentage depending on the length of the contract), section 19 of which seeks to guarantee the collective rights of persons who engage in remote work with a view to ensuring collective bargaining. The Committee notes with interest that the Act establishes facilities for workers' representatives, such as access to the communications and email addresses used in the enterprise, a virtual bulletin board and a clear line of communication between workers and their representatives. It also seeks to guarantee that workers can effectively participate in the activities organized or held by their representatives, including by exercising their voting rights in the elections of their legal representatives. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of these two Acts.

Application of the Convention in practice. Court decisions. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government with respect to the various court decisions handed down in relation to the application of the Convention. The Committee notes in particular those that confirm the right to information of trade union delegates and workers' representatives.

Sri Lanka

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1995)

Previous comment

The Committee had previously requested the Government to provide its comments on the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) according to which, several peaceful strikes were violently suppressed by the police and the army in 2016 and 2017, leaving many workers injured, and alleging incidences of intimidation and threats of physical attacks, in particular against workers in Free Trade Zones (FTZs). It had further requested the Government to take measures to ensure that the use of excessive violence in trying to control demonstrations was prohibited, that arrests were made only where serious violence or other criminal acts have been committed, and that the police were called in a strike situation only where there was a genuine and imminent threat to public order. While noting the information describing in detail the legislative framework, which, according to the Government, provides for sufficient protection of fundamental rights, the Committee regrets the lack of comments on the 2016 and 2017 events described by the ITUC and the measures taken to prevent repetition of such acts by the police. The Committee therefore urges the Government to provide comments on the ITUC allegations as well as information on concrete steps taken in consultation with the social partners to ensure that the use of excessive violence in demonstrations is prohibited; that arrests are made only where serious violence or other criminal acts have been committed; and that the police are called in a strike situation only upon a genuine and imminent threat to public order.

The Committee had previously requested the Government to provide information on the progress made in reforming the National Labour Advisory Council (NLAC), in particular with regard to its handling of the issue of application of the Convention to workers in the FTZs. While noting the information provided by the Government on the reform of the NLAC, which would appear to be limited to adding representatives of trade unions, employers' organizations and Government agencies, the Committee regrets that no information has been provided regarding the consideration by the NLAC of the issue of application of the Convention to workers in the FTZs. The Committee therefore urges the Government to indicate all measures taken to extend the protection of the Convention to workers in FTZs.

Article 2 of the Convention. Minimum age for trade union membership. In its previous observation, noting that the minimum age for admission to employment was 14 years and that the minimum age for trade union membership was 16 years (section 31 of the Trade Unions Ordinance), the Committee expressed the hope that the relevant provision would be amended to ensure that the minimum age for employment is the same as that for trade union membership. The Committee welcomes the Government's indication that the minimum age for working was increased from 14 to 16 years in January 2021 and that several legislative acts have been amended to reflect this new situation. The Government indicates that discussions on the amendment of section 31 of the Trade Unions Ordinance have commenced between the Department of Labour and the social partners. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on developments in this respect.

Articles 2 and 5. Right of public servants' organizations to establish and join federations and confederations. The Committee had previously requested the Government to amend section 21 of the Trade Unions Ordinance so as to ensure that trade unions in the public sector may join federations of their own choosing, and that first-level organizations of public employees may cover more than one ministry or department in the public service. The Committee notes with regret that the Government reaffirms its previous position that there is no restriction on trade union membership for public sector workers other than staff officers. The Government explains that the current framework is conditioned by the need to strike a balance between aspirations of the trade union movement and politically motivated actions. The Committee once again emphasizes the need to ensure that organizations of government staff officers may join federations and confederations of their own choosing, including those which also group together organizations of workers from the private sector, and that first-level organizations of public employees may cover more than one ministry or department in the public service. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 21 of the Trade Unions Ordinance without further delay and to inform it of all developments in this regard.

Article 3. Dispute settlement machinery in the public sector. The Committee had previously expressed the hope that an appropriate mechanism for dispute prevention and settlement in the public sector would be developed soon. The Committee regrets that the Government makes no reference to the work on the mechanism for dispute prevention and settlement in the public sector that it previously carried out with the support of the Ministry of Public Administration and technical assistance from the ILO, and simply indicates that many venues exist for public sector workers to settle their disputes and seek remedies. The Committee therefore urges the Government to provide detailed information on the mechanisms for dispute prevention and settlement in the public sector.

Compulsory Arbitration. The Committee had previously requested the Government to take measures to amend section 4 (1) and (2) of the Industrial Disputes Act to ensure that recourse to compulsory arbitration to bring an end to a collective labour dispute and a strike was admissible only when the strike in question may be restricted, or even prohibited. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the right to strike has been denied only upon ensuring fair treatment by way of compulsory arbitration. The Committee once again recalls that recourse to compulsory arbitration to bring an end to a collective labour dispute or a strike is permissible only: (i) if the dispute involves public servants exercising authority in the name of the State; (ii) in conflicts in essential services in the strict sense of the term; or (iii) in situations of acute national or local crisis. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 4(1) and (2) of the Industrial Disputes Act in order to guarantee respect for this principle and to inform it of progress in this regard.

Article 4. Dissolution of Organizations by the Administrative Authority. The Committee had previously requested the Government to ensure that no withdrawal or cancellation of trade union membership by the administrative authority may take effect until a final judicial decision is handed down. The Committee takes due note of the Government's indication that no decision to withdraw or cancel the registration of trade unions could be enforced until a final decision by the judiciary as it would amount to contempt of court by law.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1972)

Previous comment

The Committee notes with regret the absence of reply from the Government regarding the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 1 September 2019, alleging anti-union dismissals in a company during the pendency of arbitration proceedings and denouncing that anti-union discrimination and union-busting remain a major problem in the country. The Committee is therefore bound to reiterate its request and urges the Government to provide its comments to the ITUC observations.

Article 1. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. Effective and expeditious procedures. In its previous comments, Committee urged the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the Industrial Disputes Act to grant trade unions the right to bring anti-union discrimination cases directly before the courts. The Committee takes note of the Government's indication that the courts examined a total of 9 discrimination cases (unfair labour practices) in the last five years that are still pending before them. The Government adds that it adopted an administrative measure, intended to protect workers, to transfer all complaints related to anti-union discrimination to the "Special Investigation Division" of the Department of Labour. The Committee notes with concern that, despite the time that has elapsed, none of the referred cases submitted to the court in the last five years have yet resulted in a decision. The Committee also observes that the Government remains silent on the request to allow trade unions direct recourse to courts in anti-discrimination cases. The Committee therefore urges the Government once again to amend the Industrial Disputes Act to grant Trade Unions the right to bring anti-union discrimination cases directly before courts and to ensure that these cases are subject to swift and responsive judicial proceedings. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this respect.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. Export processing zones (EPZs). The Committee previously requested the Government to provide information on the measures taken to ensure that employees' councils do not undermine trade unions. The Committee also requested the Government to continue to promote collective bargaining in EPZs and provide statistics in this regard, particularly on the clothing and textile sectors. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Industrial Disputes Act allows trade unions, not employees' councils, to collectively bargain and establish collective agreements with the employer. The Government further states that section 10.3.2 of the Sri Lanka Board of Investment (BOI) Manual: (i) grants the BOI the authority to cancel employees' councils that undermine trade unions; and (ii) provides that in organizations with both functioning trade unions and employees' councils, only the former has the right to collective bargaining. The Government adds that: (i) five worker facilitation centres were established and are operational in Katunayake, Biyagama, Koggala and Wathupitiwala Export Processing Zones and in Kandy Industrial Park for trade union officials and members to meet privately and freely; (ii) BOI enterprises operating both within and outside EPZs must observe the principles in the Labour Standards and Employment Relations Manual which enumerates the right to collective bargaining and other facilities offered to trade union representatives of BOI enterprises. The Committee also takes note of the statistics provided by the Government with respect to EPZs, indicating that: (i) there are 14 EPZs in total as of 30 April, 2022 with 275 enterprises employing 147,683 workers; (ii) there are 107 operational employees' councils and 40 trade unions (of which 19 enjoy check-off facilities); (iii) as of 30 April 2022, 5 collective agreements were concluded by trade unions covering 2098 workers (1.4 per cent of the EPZs workers) from 5 enterprises (1.2 per cent of the enterprises); and (iv) the number of employees in the clothing and textile sectors total 88,480 as of 31 March 2022. The Committee takes due note of these elements and, in particular, of the BOI's authority to cancel employees' councils that undermine trade unions and of the creation of five workers' facilitation centres. However, the Committee observes once again that the number of employees' councils in operation in EPZs are significantly higher than the number of trade unions and that there is no substantial increase in the number of collective agreements concluded. With regards to the clothing and textile sectors, the Committee observes that the Government does not specify the number of collective agreements concluded by trade unions; and the workers covered by them. Based on the above, the Committee requests the Government to intensify its efforts to promote collective bargaining in EPZs, including by establishing worker facilitation centres in all EPZs. The Committee further requests the Government to provide information on: (i) instances that section 10.3.2 of the BOI Manual was successfully invoked, with relief consequently granted to the unions concerned; (ii) the number of collective agreements concluded in entities having both employees' councils and trade unions; and (iii) the number of collective agreements concluded in the EPZs, with detailed sector specific information, particularly on the clothing and textile sector, including the number of workers covered by them in each sector in comparison with the total number of workers in the respective sectors.

Representativeness requirements for collective bargaining. For many years, the Committee has requested the Government to take the necessary measures to review section 32(A) (g) of the Industrial Disputes Act so as to ensure that the membership requirement imposed on a union to bargain collectively does not undermine the effective access to this right. The Government reiterates in this regard that there is no bar on trade unions that fail to individually meet the requirement for representativeness prescribed by section 32(A)(g) of the Industrial Disputes Act, which sets the threshold at 40 per cent, to involve in the collective bargaining process by federating with other minority trade unions. While taking due note of this element, the Committee recalls that the threshold for representativeness should be designated to facilitate and promote the development of free and voluntary collective bargaining. In this respect, it considers that the very low number and coverage of collective agreements previously noted in its comments on EPZs could appear to be related to the restrictive representativeness requirement, prescribed by the Industrial Disputes Act, to engage in collective bargaining. The Committee therefore emphasises the need to ensure that the absence of unions that meet the requirements for representativeness to be designated as a bargaining agent, does not impede the right of the existing unions to negotiate, either jointly or at least on behalf of their own members. The Committee requests once again the Government to take the necessary action to review section 32(A)(g) of the Industrial Disputes Act accordingly. The Committee additionally requests information regarding the total number of collective agreements concluded in the country as a whole, the sectors and the number of workers concerned.

Article 6. Right to collective bargaining for public service workers not engaged in the administration of the State. Having observed that section 49 of the Industrial Disputes Act does not apply to State and Government employees and that existing Government structures did not require a collective bargaining system for public sector unions, the Committee previously requested the Government to take measures to guarantee public servants not engaged in the administration of the state the right to collective bargaining. The Committee notes the Government's indication that public servants not involved in the administration of the state are not barred from entering into collective agreements and that there are existing collective agreements in public enterprises which cover such public servants. While taking note of these elements the Committee recalls that the public employees not engaged in the administration of the State and who are therefore covered by the Convention not only includes employees in public enterprises but also other categories such as, for instance, municipal employees and those in decentralized entities, public sector teachers, public hospital workers etc. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures, including of a legislative nature, to recognize for all public servants not engaged in the administration of the state the right to collective bargaining, and to provide information on all progress made in this respect. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the number of collective agreements covering public enterprises.

Request for technical assistance. The Committee welcomes the request for technical assistance by the Government to the Office in relation to following up on the observations and recommendations formulated by the ILO supervisory bodies. While being aware of the recent difficulties faced by the country, the Committee hopes that the technical cooperation will help address all pending comments and contribute to fostering a sound industrial relations system that will in turn contribute to address the mentioned challenges in a peaceful manner.

Sudan

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1957)

Previous comment

The Committee welcomes the ratification by Sudan of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) on 17 March 2021. The Committee notes at the same time with concern the public announcement made on 28 November 2022 by the Head of the Transitional Sovereignty Council concerning: (i) the suspension of the activities of all workers' and employers' organizations; and (ii) the decision to establish a committee headed by the general registrar of work organizations aimed at forming new steering committees for trade unions and employers organizations as well, to prepare for elections and general assemblies. The Committee urges the Government to refrain from any interference with regard to the functioning of the workers' and employers' organizations and to guarantee the necessary civil liberties so that they can freely exercise their activities, including through free and voluntary collective bargaining. The Committee requests the Government to provide full information on the measures taken to ensure full respect for the right to organize and collective bargaining.

Article 4 of the Convention. Compulsory arbitration. In its previous comments, the Committee, noting that a draft Labour Code was in the final stages of revision, requested the Government to ensure that compulsory arbitration, which is currently allowed by section 112 of the Labour Code of 1997, would only be imposed in relation to public servants engaged in the administration of the State (Article 6 of the Convention), essential services in the strict sense of the term and acute national crises. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Labour Code of 1997 was revised and submitted to the Council of Ministers in 2021, and that it is currently being assessed by a consultative committee on labour standards which includes employers and workers. Taking due note of these developments, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures, in consultation with the social partners, to ensure that the revised Labour Code is adopted shortly and only allows the imposition of compulsory arbitration in the above-mentioned cases. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress achieved in this regard.

Collective bargaining in practice. The Committee had previously requested the Government to provide statistical information on collective bargaining in practice. It notes with regret that the Government merely states that it does not have any data. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information, including statistics, on the number of collective agreements concluded in the country since 2017, as well as the sectors concerned and the number of workers covered by these agreements.

Trade union rights in export processing zones (EPZs). In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to provide information on the application of trade union rights in EPZs. Noting that the Government does not transmit the information requested, the Committee reiterates its request that it provide specific information on the application of trade union rights in EPZs, including the number of unions and collective agreements, as well as copies of the pertinent labour inspection reports.

Trade Unions Act. The Committee had previously observed that various provisions of the Trade Unions Act of 2010 are not consistent with the principles of freedom of association (for example, the imposition of trade union monopoly at federation level; the ban on joining more than one trade union organization; the need for approval from the national federation in order for federations or unions to join a local, regional or international federation; and interference in the finances of organizations) and invited the Government to bring the Act into line with such principles. Regretting that the Government does not provide any information in this regard and highlighting the recent ratification of Convention No. 87, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures, in full consultation with the social partners, to bring the Trade Unions Act of 2010 into conformity with the principles of freedom of association so as to promote the full development and utilization of collective bargaining machinery, in accordance with Article 4 of the Convention.

Reiterating its concern about the 28 November 2022 public announcement concerning the freezing of the activities of all workers and employers' organizations, the Committee further urges the Government to ensure that, pending the revision of the Trade Union Act, all the conditions required for the application of the Convention are fully respected in practice.

[The Government is asked to reply in full to the present comments in 2023.]

Sweden

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1949)

Previous comment

Legislative developments. Posting of workers. In its previous comment, the Committee had requested the Government to provide information on the application in practice of the Posting of Workers Act, 2017. The Committee notes detailed information provided by the Government and refers in this respect to its comments on the application of Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98).

Other developments. In its previous comment, the Committee requested the Government to provide details on the proposals made by the inquiry appointed to review the exercise of the right to industrial action as well as on the bill drafted by the social partners to address the issues in relation to the exercise of the right to strike. The Committee takes due note of the Government's indication that following the inquiry, the Ministry of Employment decided to proceed with the proposal submitted by the social partners and submitted a bill entitled "Extended obligation to keep the peace in workplaces where there is a collective agreement and in the event of legal disputes" to the Parliament. The Bill was adopted and the amendments to the Act on Co-Determination in the Workplace, which set forth conditions under which the right to industrial action against an employer bound by a collective agreement could be exercised, entered into force on 1 August 2019. The Committee notes the adoption and entering into force of this new law and requests the Government to provide information on developments under the 2019 amendments, including any situations in which the right to industrial action was exercised and situations in which it was not.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1950)

Previous comment

Article 4 of the Convention. Promotion of collective bargaining. Legislative developments. Posting of workers. In its previous comment, the Committee requested the Government to provide information on the application in practice of the Posting of Workers Act (1999:678), in particular through statistics on collective agreements concluded with foreign employers and on foreign employers that became bound by collective agreements through membership of an employers' organization.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that there are neither public statistics on the number of collective agreements concluded by foreign employers for posted workers nor statistics on the number of foreign employers that became bound by collective agreements through membership of an employers' organization but that, nevertheless, several recent reports show that the recent legislative developments concerning the posted workers have the intended effect in practice, notably in the construction sector. The Committee notes that the Government indicates in particular that: (i) according to a report from the Swedish Institute for European Policy Studies focusing on posting of workers in the construction sector, both Swedish trade unions and employers' organizations stated that posting employers voluntarily sign customary collective agreements, as opposed to posting collective agreements with limited legal effects, and that trade union representatives mentioned they have no difficulties identifying posting employers and to negotiate collective agreements for posted workers; and (ii) the Byggmärnadskommissionen, a commission conducted and funded by parties in the construction sector, analysed the existing legislative framework regarding posting workers and, after having given some consideration to the possibility to enforce a mechanism for the extension of collective agreements in the construction sector, the commission assessed that no amendments were needed to the existing regulatory framework for posted workers.

The Committee further notes that the Posting of Workers Act was amended three times during the reporting period. The Committee notes in particular that section 16, introduced in 2020, allows for trade unions to take industrial action to negotiate collective agreements for posted temporary agency workers. Welcoming the application of the Posting of Workers Act to posted temporary agency workers, the Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the application in practice of this Act in the different sectors of the labour market and to provide any statistics in this regard.

Switzerland

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1999)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Swiss Federation of Trade Unions (USS), received on 31 August 2022, which relate to matters examined in the context of the present comment.

Articles 1 and 3 of the Convention. Adequate protection against anti-union dismissals. The Committee recalls that it has been asking the Government for many years to take steps to strengthen the protection provided at national level against anti-union dismissals. The Committee notes the Government's indications that: (i) in June 2019, Switzerland launched an external, independent mediation process on the question of protection of trade unionists in the event of unfair dismissal, in order to find a compromise solution acceptable to everyone; (ii) the mediator, chosen by the social partners, is an experienced lawyer who is leading the mediation in a completely independent manner; (iii) the Government is providing technical and scientific support to the mediator but is not a party in the mediation process; (iv) the mediation is being financed by the State Secretariat for the Economy (SECO); and (v) the mediation has been delayed because of the situation resulting from the COVID-19 pandemic but is still in progress.

In its previous observation, the Committee noted that the respective positions of the social partners had not changed: on the one hand, the employers' representatives do not wish to adopt more severe penalties for unfair dismissals; on the other hand, the workers' representatives are calling for the solution of reinstatement to be retained or at least for the maximum amount of compensation for anti-union dismissal, established by law as the equivalent of six months' wages, to be increased to 12 months' wages. The Committee notes, according to the information provided by the USS, that a study undertaken by the University of St. Gallen (HSG) shows that compensation in the majority of cases corresponds to three to four months' wages, even for flagrant violations of freedom of association. According to the USS, that amounts to an invitation for employers to engage in unfair dismissals since they have little or nothing to fear in financial terms. The USS adds that a statutory minimum amount should be fixed for compensation, with no ceiling imposed on the latter, so that the level of compensation can be determined by the judge according to the economic power of the employer concerned. The USS also recalls that reintegration remains a crucial issue.

The Committee notes with regret that there has been no significant change in this matter, while recognizing the Government's efforts to continue to promote social dialogue in order to reach a solution. In these circumstances, the Committee is bound to recall that: (i) even though the Convention does not require States to incorporate provisions on reinstatement into their legislation, reinstatement constitutes the most effective remedy against acts of anti-union discrimination; and (ii) when, on the other hand, a country opts for a system of compensation for anti-union dismissal, the compensation should fulfil certain conditions and in particular: (i) be higher than that prescribed for other kinds of dismissal, with a view to the effective dissuasion of this type of dismissal; and (ii) be adapted in accordance with the size of the enterprise concerned (2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 182–185). Noting that the Government's efforts to promote an agreement between the social partners on this question have now extended over many years, the Committee emphasizes that if it is not possible to reach a consensus, the Government should take the decisions that are necessary to ensure observance of the international labour conventions which it has ratified. While hoping that the mediation process under way will enable an agreement to be reached, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure full conformity with the Convention in law and practice as regards protection against anti-union dismissal. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on progress made in this regard.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. The Committee notes the statistics available from the Federal Statistics Office on the collective agreements signed and the number of employees covered (as of 1 July 2021, a total of 44 legally binding national collective agreements covering 1,050,657 workers, as well as 40 extended cantonal collective agreements covering 50,331 workers). The Committee requests the Government to continue providing up-to-date statistical information on the number of collective agreements by sector and the number of workers covered.

Syrian Arab Republic

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes that in its reply to the 2012 observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) alleging the use of police and paramilitary force in dealing with protests, deaths, arrests and imprisonment of political and human rights activists, the Government indicates that: (i) the ILO has no constitutional mandate to interfere in countries' internal political affairs, rather its mandate is to examine allegations of economic nature or dealing with working conditions; (ii) the matter raised by the ITUC is being discussed by the Human Rights Council since 2011; (iii) the Government categorically refutes the use of violence against its citizens; the protests, killings and acts of vandalism were carried out by armed terrorist groups in order to destabilize the country; and (iv) the right to strike is provided for in article 44 of the Constitution (2012), which specifies that citizens have the right to assemble, to peacefully demonstrate and to strike. The Committee recalls that freedom of association is a principle with implications that go well beyond the mere framework of labour law. It further recalls that the ILO supervisory bodies have unceasingly stressed the interdependence between civil liberties and trade union rights, emphasizing that a truly free and independent trade union movement can only develop in a climate free from violence, pressure and threats of any kind against the leaders and members of such organizations (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 59). The Committee expects the Government to ensure respect for this principle.

Article 2 of the Convention. Scope of application. The Committee had previously requested the Government to indicate whether independent workers, civil servants, agricultural workers, domestic workers and similar categories, casual workers and part-time workers whose hours of work do not exceed two hours per day enjoy the rights provided for in the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's indication that by virtue of section 5(b) of the Labour Act No. 17 of 2010, domestic workers and similar categories, workers in charity associations and organizations, casual workers and part-time workers (workers whose hours of work do not exceed two hours per day) shall be subjected to the provisions of their employment contracts, which may not, under any circumstances, prescribe fewer entitlements than those prescribed by the Labour Act, including the provisions of the Law on Trade Union Organizations. The Committee considers, however, that the right to organize of the abovementioned categories of workers excluded from the scope of application of the Labour Act should be explicitly protected in law. Therefore, the Committee requests the Government to take measures, in consultation with social partners, to adopt the necessary legislative provisions so as to ensure that these categories of workers enjoy the rights provided for in the Convention. The Committee further notes that agricultural workers and agriculture work relationships, including collective bargaining, are governed by Agricultural Relations Law No. 56 of 2004, that domestic workers are governed by Law No. 201 of 2010, and that civil servants are governed by Basic Law on State Employees No. 50 of 2004. The Committee requests the Government to indicate specific legislative provisions that regulate particular aspects of freedom of association rights of civil servants, agricultural workers, and domestic as well as independent workers, and to provide a copy thereof.

Trade union monopoly. For several years, the Committee has been referring to the need for the Government to amend or repeal the legislative provisions which establish a trade union monopoly (sections 3, 4, 5 and 7 of Legislative Decree No. 84; sections 4, 6, 8, 13, 14 and 15 of Legislative Decree No. 3, amending Legislative Decree No. 84; section 2 of Legislative Decree No. 250 of 1969; and sections 26–31 of Act No. 21 of 1974). The Committee takes note of the Government's indication that workers have the right to establish independent trade unions if the union is affiliated to the General Federation of Trade Unions in Syria (GFTU). According to the Government, the application of trade union pluralism in several countries weakened trade unions and diminished workers' rights. Observing that all workers' organizations must belong to the GFTU and that any attempt to form a trade union must be subject to the consent of this Federation, the Committee considers that although it is generally to the advantage of workers and employers to avoid a proliferation of competing organizations, the right of workers to be able to establish organizations of their own choosing, as set out in Article 2 of the Convention, implies that trade union diversity must remain possible in all cases. The Committee considers that it is important for workers to be able to change trade unions or to establish a new union for reasons of independence, effectiveness or ideological choice. Consequently, trade union unity imposed directly or indirectly by law is contrary to the Convention (General Survey 2012, op. cit., paragraph 92). The Committee reiterates its previous request and expects that all necessary measures will be taken by the Government, in full consultations with the social partners, so as to bring the national legislation into conformity with Article 2 of the Convention. It requests the Government to inform it of any progress made in this regard.

Article 3. Financial administration of organizations. The Committee recalls that its previous comments related to the need to amend section 18(a) of Legislative Decree No. 84, as amended by section 4(5) of Legislative Decree No. 30 of 1982, so as to lift the power of the Minister to set the conditions and procedures for the investment of trade union funds in financial services and industrial sectors. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, in accordance with the rights afforded to them by the Constitution, the GFTU and other unions are financially independent and have the right to conclude agreements and labour contracts in accordance with section 17 of the Law on Trade Union Organizations and the right to dispose of their funds and income in accordance with their internal regulations and decisions. Noting with regret the absence of any new development in this regard, the Committee expects the Government to undertake, as soon as possible, the revision of section 18(a) of Legislative Decree No. 84, as amended by section 4(5) of Legislative Decree No. 30 of 1982, in full consultations with the social partners. It also requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged in this regard.

Right of organizations to elect their representatives in full freedom. The Committee had previously requested the Government to provide specific information on the measures taken or contemplated to repeal or amend section 1(4) of Act No. 29 of 1986, amending Legislative Decree No. 84 which determines the composition of the GFTU Congress and its presiding officers. The Committee has stated on multiple occasions that it should be up to trade union constitutions and rules to establish the composition and presiding officers of trade union congresses. Noting with regret the absence of any new development in this regard, the Committee expects that the Government will take the necessary measures, as soon as possible, in order to amend or repeal the above-mentioned provision in consultation with the social partners so as to ensure that organizations are able to elect their representatives in full freedom. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged in this respect.

Right of organizations to formulate their programmes and organize their activities. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested that the Government take the necessary measures to amend legislative provisions that restrict the right to strike by imposing heavy sanctions including imprisonment (sections 330, 332, 333 and 334 of Legislative Decree No. 148 of 1949, issuing the Penal Code). The Committee had further observed that no reference was made to the possibility for workers to exercise their right to strike in the chapter on collective labour disputes of the Labour Act. The Committee notes the Government's indication that section 67 of the Labour Act provides protection against dismissals of unionized workers for taking part in trade-union activities. Recalling that in the past, the Government had indicated that the GFTU was working to modify the Labour Act to ensure coherence with articles of the Constitution granting workers the right to strike, the Committee expects that the law will be amended so as to bring it into line with the Convention and requests the Government to provide information in this regard. While noting the Government's indication that the agricultural sector is now governed by Law No. 56 of 2004, the Committee also requests the Government to indicate whether workers of this sector enjoy the right to strike and identify the relevant legislative provisions.

While acknowledging the complexity of the situation prevailing on the ground due to the presence of armed groups and armed conflict in the country, the Committee trusts that the Government will make all efforts to bring its law and practice into conformity with the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1957)

Scope of the Convention. The Committee had previously requested the Government to specify and provide details concerning the legislative provisions affording to the following categories of workers the rights enshrined in the Convention: independent workers, civil servants, domestic servants and similar categories, workers in charity associations and organizations, casual workers and part-time workers whose hours of work do not exceed two hours per day. The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) pursuant to section 5(b) of the Labour Act No. 17 of 2010, domestic workers and similar categories, workers in charity associations and organizations, casual workers and part-time workers shall be subjected to the provisions of their employment contracts, which may not, under any circumstances, prescribe fewer entitlements than those prescribed by the Labour Act, including the provisions of the Law on Trade Union Organizations; and (ii) civil servants are governed by the Basic Law on State Employees No. 50 of 2004. Noting that section 5(b) of the Labour Act excludes several categories of workers from its scope of application and exclusively refers to the content of their individual contracts of employment, the Committee requests the Government to specify the legislative provision recognizing the right to collective bargaining. The Committee further requests the Government to indicate legislative provisions regulating the right of collective bargaining for civil servants not engaged in the administration of the State. It further requests the Government to indicate whether independent workers enjoy the rights afforded by the Convention and to specify the relevant legislative provisions.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of interference. In its previous comments, noting that the Labour Act of 2010 does not expressly prohibit acts of interference on the part of the employers' or workers' organizations in each other's affairs, the Committee had requested the Government to take measures with a view to adopting clear and precise provisions prohibiting acts of interference, accompanied by sufficiently dissuasive sanctions. While observing that the Government does not provide specific information in this regard, the Committee recalls that under the terms of Article 2 of the Convention, workers' and employers' organizations shall enjoy adequate protection against any acts of interference by each other or each other's agents or members in their establishment, functioning or administration. Acts of interference are deemed to include acts which are designed to promote the establishment of workers' organizations under the domination of an employer or an employers' organization, or to support workers' organizations by financial or other means, with the object of placing such organizations under the control of employers and employers' organizations (see 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 194). The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the legislation explicitly prohibits all of the acts covered by Article 2 of the Convention and that it provides for sufficiently dissuasive penalties in this respect.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. The Committee had previously noted that section 187(c) of the Labour Act grants an excessive power to the Ministry to object and refuse to register a collective agreement on any grounds that it deems appropriate during a 30-day period after filing the collective agreement and therefore requested the Government to amend the provision in order to fully guarantee the principle of free and voluntary collective bargaining established in the Convention. Additionally, it pointed out that pursuant to section 214 of the Labour Act, if mediation fails, either party may file a request to initiate dispute settlement through arbitration and accordingly recalled that compulsory arbitration is only acceptable in relation to public servants engaged in the administration in the State, essential services in the strict sense of the term, and acute national crises. The Committee observes that the Government merely states that all laws and subsequent amendments on the Labour Act were adopted in full consultation with social partners, and reiterates that section 187(c) of the Labour Act aims to ensure that collective agreements are in conformity with the abovementioned Act. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that sections 187(c) and 214 of the Labour Act are brought into conformity with the Convention.

Arbitration bodies. The Committee previously requested the Government to take measures to amend section 215 of the Labour Act so as to ensure that the composition of the tribunal is balanced and has the confidence of the parties in the arbitration mechanism. Noting with regret the absence of any new development in this regard, the Committee expects that the Government will undertake, as soon as possible, the amendment of the abovementioned provision.

Application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to indicate the measures taken to promote and encourage the greater development and utilization of procedures of voluntary negotiations between employers or employers' organizations and workers' organizations. While taking note that the Labour Act refers in its section 178 to collective bargaining and social dialogue, the Committee requests the Government to indicate, in practice, the measures taken or envisaged to promote and encourage the greater development and utilization of procedures of voluntary negotiations between employers or employers' organizations and workers' organizations to regulate the terms and conditions working through collective bargaining. It also requests the Government to provide information on the number of existing collective agreements, the sectors concerned and the numbers of workers covered by those.

While acknowledging the complexity of the situation prevailing on the ground due to the presence of armed groups and armed conflict in the country, the Committee trusts that the Government will make all efforts to bring its law and practice into conformity with the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Previous comment

The Committee notes the adoption of Act No. 2120-012 of 18 June 2021 issuing the Labour Code. In this regard, the Committee notes the joint observations of the Synergy of Workers of Togo (STT) and the National Union of Independent Workers of Togo (UNSI), received on 31 October 2022. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers and employers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish organizations. Trade union rights of minors. The Committee notes with satisfaction that the provisions of section 12 of the Labour Code of 2006 have been repealed, thereby removing any obstacle to the exercise of the trade union rights of minors who have access to the labour market.

Length of the registration procedure. However, the Committee notes that, with reference to section 13 of the new Labour Code, the authorities have 90 days to complete the registration of a union. Recalling that a long registration procedure constitutes a serious obstacle to the establishment of organizations without previous authorization, contrary to Article 2 of the Convention, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures, in consultation with the social partners, to amend section 13 of the Labour Code.

Article 3. Right of organizations to draw up their constitutions and rules, to elect their representatives in full freedom, to organize their administration and to formulate their programmes. Limitations on access to trade union office. The Committee notes that, in accordance with section 14(1) of the new Labour Code, the members with responsibility for the administration and direction of an occupational union of workers shall be active in the enterprise or establishment covered or in the branch or sector concerned. In the view of the Committee, such provisions infringe the right of organizations to draw up their constitutions and to elect their representatives in full freedom by preventing qualified persons (such as full-time officers or pensioners) from being elected (2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 102). The Committee requests the Government to make the legislative provisions more flexible, for example, by admitting as candidates persons who have previously been employed in the occupation concerned, or by exempting from the occupational requirement a reasonable proportion of the officers of the organization. The Committee also notes that, in accordance with section 14(3) of the new Labour Code, “persons may not exercise responsibility for the administration or direction of a union who have received a conviction involving loss of civic rights or a conviction to a correctional penalty, with the exception of: (a) convictions for offences involving imprudence, unless they have also taken flight in that context; and (b) convictions for misdemeanours for which the penalty is not subject to proof of bad faith and which only involve liability to a fine, with the exception of misdemeanours qualified as offences by company laws.” The Committee wishes to recall that conviction for an act the nature of which is not such as to call into question the integrity of the person concerned and is not such as to prejudice the performance of trade union duties should not constitute grounds for disqualification from trade union office (2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 106). The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures, in consultation with the social partners, to amend section 14 of the Labour Code in line with the above comments.

The Committee finally notes that, under the terms of section 15 of the new Labour Code, “the bodies responsible for the administration and direction of the union shall be renewed at least once every five years by the general assembly or the congress”. The Committee wishes to recall in this regard that such provisions which regulate in detail the alternation in the leadership of certain workers’ or employers’ organizations are incompatible with the Convention as they amount to interference by the public authorities in trade union affairs. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures, in consultation with the social partners, to repeal section 15 of the Labour Code, in line with the above comment.

Exercise of the right to strike. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to amend section 275 of the Labour Code, which required the parties, during the course of a strike, to continue negotiations under the authority of a person designated by the Minister of Labour. The Committee notes with satisfaction the Government’s indication that section 275 has been revised in order to permit the parties to a dispute to choose the procedure for the settlement of the dispute. Section 329 of the new Labour Code has accordingly removed the requirement to continue negotiations under the authority of a person designated by the Minister of Labour. It provides that “during the course of the strike, the parties shall be under the obligation to continue negotiations – The parties may, by common agreement, have recourse to a mediator.”

However, the Committee observes that provisions such as those of section 322, under the terms of which the right to strike shall be exercised under conditions of duration and according to procedures that are compatible with the intrinsic requirements of the activity of the enterprise or establishment, and section 331(b), which prohibits any strike action from being pursued at the workplace, at its perimeter or within its immediate vicinity, all constitute limitations on the exercise of the right to strike. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend sections 322 and 331 of the Labour Code.

Essential services. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the issue of the determination of essential services in the event of a strike has been regulated by section 327 of the new Labour Code, and particularly subsections 3 and 4: “Services shall be considered essential the partial or total interruption of which is likely to seriously prejudice the peace, security, public order or public finances, or endanger the life or health of the whole or part of the population. Services shall also be essential which relate to security, health, education, justice, prison administration, energy, water, State financial institutions, banks and financial establishments, air and maritime transport, and communications, with the exception of private radio and television stations.”

In this regard, while recalling that States may restrict or prohibit the right to strike of public servants exercising authority in the name of the State, for example in the field of justice or fiscal administration, as referred to by the legislator, the Committee observes that services such as those relating to security, education, banks and financial establishments, as well as air and maritime transport, cannot be considered essential within the strict sense of the term, that is their interruption would not endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population. The Committee nevertheless emphasizes that, in order to prevent irreversible or disproportionate harm to the professional interests of the parties to a dispute, the authorities could establish a system of a negotiated minimum service in the event of a strike in these services. It also recalls that such a service should genuinely and exclusively be a minimum service, that is one which is limited to the operations that are strictly necessary to meet the basic needs of the population or the minimum requirements of the services, while maintaining the effectiveness of the pressure brought to bear. Moreover, as this system restricts one of the essential means of pressure available to workers to defend their interests, their organizations should be able to participate in defining such a service, along with employers and the public authorities (2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 131, and 137). The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 327 of the Labour Code so as to adjust the definition of essential services and provide, where appropriate, for a minimum negotiated service in the event of strikes in such services, in accordance with the principles recalled above.

Application of the Convention in export processing zones. The Committee notes the general information provided by the Government concerning the application of the rights guaranteed by the Convention in export processing zones, as well as the data on the conciliation of individual and collective disputes.

The Committee recalls that the Government may avail itself of technical assistance of the Office in order to ensure the full conformity of the provisions of the new Labour Code with the Convention.

Previous comment

The Committee notes the adoption of Act No. 2120-012 of 18 June 2021 issuing the Labour Code. The Committee also notes the joint observations of the Synergy of Workers of Togo (STT) and the National Federation of Independent Unions of Togo (UNSIT), received on 31 October 2022, in which they allege, in particular, the absence of consultation of trade unions in the process of the formulation and adoption of the Labour Code. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this regard.

Article 4 of the Convention. Compulsory arbitration. With reference to its previous comments on the need to amend section 260 of the Labour Code of 2006, the Committee notes with satisfaction that, under the terms of section 313 of the new Labour Code, only the parties concerned, and no longer the Minister of Labour, may decide in agreement to have recourse to a single arbitrator or an arbitration board in the event of the failure of conciliation.

Promotion of collective bargaining in practice. The Committee notes the information on the collective agreements in force, of which there are 14, with the most recent, which was concluded in December 2020, covering the pharmaceutical sector. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the number of collective agreements concluded and in force in the country, and on the sectors concerned and the number of workers covered.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Articles 2, 3 and 4 of the Convention. Trade Unions Acts (TUA). In its previous comments the Committee had requested the Government to take the necessary measures to amend sections 10 and 18(1)(d) of the TUA, relating to trade union registration and cancellation thereof, as well as sections 16(4) and 33 of the TUA, concerning financial supervision of trade unions and the administration of their funds so as to bring these sections into full conformity with the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, following stakeholder consultations and tripartite meetings held in 2019 and after disruptions in the operations of the Ministry of Labour due to the COVID-19 pandemic, a draft policy paper for the amendment of the TUA was submitted to Cabinet in June 2021. The Government indicates that the International Trade Union Confederation's comments as well as this Committee's comments were utilized to develop the said paper, which aims at giving effect to the Convention. Noting that no developments appear to have taken place since the draft policy paper was submitted to Cabinet in June 2021, the Committee strongly encourages the Government to take the necessary steps so that the TUA is amended without further delay and requests it to provide a copy of the legislation once adopted.

Article 3. Right of organizations to organize their activities freely and to formulate their programmes. Industrial Relations Act (IRA). In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to take the necessary measures to amend sections 59(4)(a), 61(d), 65, 67 and 69 of the IRA concerning the majority required for a strike, recourse to the courts to end a strike, and the prohibition of industrial action so as to bring these sections into full conformity with the Convention. The Committee takes note of the Government's indication that the draft policy paper for the amendment of the IRA submitted to Cabinet in January 2017 was later revised to incorporate the recommendations of the National Tripartite Advisory Council and re-submitted to Cabinet for its consideration in May 2021. Regretting that no developments appear to have taken place since then, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary steps so that the IRA is amended without any further delay and requests it to provide a copy of the legislation once adopted.

Previous comment

The Committee notes the Government's reply to the 2019 observations of the International Trade Union Confederation. The Committee requests the Government to provide statistics on the number and nature of complaints of anti-union discrimination, in particular dismissals, filed to the competent authorities, their follow-up and outcome as well as statistics on applications made to the court for such industrial relations offences.

Workers covered by the Convention. In its previous comments the Committee referred to the need to amend section 2(3) of the Industrial Relations Act (IRA) which excluded certain categories of workers from its scope of application. The Committee notes the Government's indication that a revised draft policy paper for the amendment of the IRA, developed with the social partners and submitted to Cabinet for its consideration in May 2021, recommends extending the scope of workers and include teachers, Central Bank employees and domestic workers, now excluded by virtue of section 2(3) of the IRA. Duly noting these elements, the Committee hopes that the amendment will also include the apprentices and persons in enterprises with policy and other managerial responsibilities, also excluded by virtue of section 2(3) of the IRA. Noting that no developments appear to have taken place since the draft policy paper was submitted to Cabinet in May 2021, the Committee strongly encourages the Government to take the necessary steps so that the IRA is amended without further delay and requests it to provide a copy of it once adopted.

Article 4 of the Convention. Promotion of collective bargaining. For several years the Committee has been referring to the need to amend section 34 of the IRA, which provides that in order to be recognized as a collective bargaining agent, a trade union should represent 50 per cent of the workers in the bargaining unit. The Committee notes the Government's indication that a non-recognized majority union was able to negotiate collectively on behalf of workers with a few companies in the oil and gas sector and that, given the success of the agreements, the union eventually gained recognition. The Government also indicates that the above-mentioned revised draft policy paper for the amendment of the IRA, submitted to Cabinet in May 2021, aims at ensuring that employers and workers can function effectively in the industrial relations system. The Committee observes, however, that the Government does not indicate that the revised draft policy paper for the amendment of the IRA proposes any amendments to section 34. Noting that the review of the IRA is still under way, the Committee expects that the Government will take the necessary measures to ensure that this provision is amended so that, if no union in a specific negotiating unit meets the required threshold of representativeness to be able to negotiate on behalf of all workers, minority trade unions are able to negotiate, jointly or separately, at least on behalf of their own members. The Committee requests the Government to indicate any progress made in this respect.

Articles 4 and 6 of the Convention. Representativeness for the purposes of collective bargaining in the public sector. For several years the Committee has been referring to the need to amend section 24(3) of the Civil Service Act (CSA), which affords a privileged position to already registered associations, without providing objective and pre-established criteria for determining the most representative association in the civil service. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the amendment of the CSA would require significant consultation with relevant stakeholders. Recalling that decisions concerning the most representative organization should be made by virtue of objective and pre-established criteria so as to avoid any opportunities for partiality or abuse, the Committee expresses its firm expectation that the necessary measures will be taken so that section 24(3) of the CSA is modified accordingly. The Committee requests the Government to indicate any developments in this regard.

Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee requests the Government to provide statistics as to the number of collective agreements concluded, specifying the sectors concerned, their level and scope, as well as the number of enterprises and workers covered.

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 1 September 2022, which contain allegations of interference in trade union activities concerning: (i) the annulment by the Tunis Court of First Instance in December 2021 of the decision of the National Council of the General Federation of Tunisian Workers (UGTT) to convene an extraordinary non-elective congress, and (ii) infringements of the right to strike in the public broadcasting sector, with the large-scale deployment of police forces and the conduct of interrogations. The Committee notes the Government's reply, dated 28 October 2022, which states in this respect that the UGTT has appealed against the decision of the court of first instance, and that the police forces were deployed solely to ensure the maintenance of public order. The Committee also notes the Government's reply to the observations made by the ITUC in 2018 concerning allegations of intimidation and threats against the UGTT. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it has not officially received any complaints in this regard from the UGTT, nor have such allegations been raised in meetings with its members, during collective bargaining or in meetings of the National Social Dialogue Council (CNDS). In view of the above, the Committee recalls the obligation under the Convention for States to ensure that trade union leaders and members can conduct their activities without hindrance in a climate free from violence, pressure and threats of any kind. With reference to the annulment of the extraordinary non-elective Congress of the UGTT, the Committee requests the Government to provide the judgment of the Court of Appeal as soon as it is available.

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. Legislative amendments. The Committee notes with deep regret that the Government has not reported any progress in bringing the legislation into conformity with the Convention and that it only repeats the explanations already supplied in response to the Committee's long-standing recommendations. The Committee is bound to recall below its main recommendations and once again urges the Government to take all the necessary measures to give full effect to the provisions of the Convention:

- Right of workers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish and join organizations. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 242 of the Labour Code to ensure that minors who have reached the statutory minimum age for admission to employment (16 years under section 53 of the Labour Code) are able to exercise their trade union rights without authorization from their parent or guardian.
- Right of organizations to elect their representatives in full freedom. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 251 of the Labour Code to allow foreign workers access to the functions of trade union leadership, at least after a reasonable period of residence in the host country.

- Right of workers' organizations to organize their activities and formulate their programmes. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the following sections of the Labour Code concerning restrictions on the exercise of the right to strike: section 376bis (approval of the central workers' confederation before declaring a strike); section 376ter (compulsory indication of the duration of the strike in the strike notification); and sections 387 and 388 (possibility of imposing penalties in the event of an unlawful strike). With regard to section 381ter of the Labour Code (determination of the list of essential services by decree), the Committee once again requests the Government to indicate whether the decree provided for by this section has been adopted.

Right of workers' organizations to organize their activities and formulate their programmes without interference from the public authorities. The Committee notes the adoption of the decree of 26 September 2018 establishing criteria for trade union representativeness at the national level, which include: (i) the number of union members up to the end of 2017; (ii) the date of the last electoral congress of the trade union organization; (iii) the number of sectoral structures of the trade union organization and the nature of its activity; and (iv) the number of local and regional structures of the organization concerned. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, pursuant to this decree, the minister for social affairs has designated the following organizations as the most representative at national level for the appointment of members of the CNDS, namely: the UGTT for workers' organizations; the Tunisian Confederation of Industry, Commerce and Handicrafts (UTICA), for employers' organizations in the non-agricultural sector; and the Tunisian Federation of Agriculture and Fisheries (UTAP), for employers' organizations in the agricultural sector. Observing that trade union representativeness was determined by taking into account the number of members at the end of 2017, the Committee requests the Government to specify in its next report the frequency and mechanism for measuring trade union membership for the purpose of appointing members of the CNDS. In addition, the Committee, like the Committee on Freedom of Association in Case No. 2994 (400th Report, November 2022, paragraph 70) requests the Government to engage in inclusive consultations with all workers' and employers' organizations concerned to ensure that the determination of representative organizations at sectoral and enterprise level are also based on clear, pre-established and objective criteria. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all measures taken in this regard.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1957)

Previous comment

observance of the Convention, the Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of the revised Circular and information on its implementation in practice. The Committee also notes with regret that the Government has still not provided its comments on the 2014 observations of the ITUC regarding the non-observance of collective agreements in two specific cases (remuneration of refuse workers; biscuit-making sector). More than six years after the occurrences, the Government merely indicates that the information requested will be sent once the data has been obtained from the administrative departments concerned. The Committee trusts that the Government will show greater cooperation in the future and will provide information on the remedies found in these two cases.

Article 4 of the Convention. Promotion of collective bargaining. With regard to the question raised in its previous comments concerning the refusal of approval or the cancellation of a collective agreement under sections 38–41 of the Labour Code, the Committee notes the Government's indication that this is an eventuality which is not substantiated in practice. While duly noting this information, the Committee recalls that any provision authorizing in general terms the approval or cancellation of collective agreements by the authorities represent a risk of not being compatible with the Convention. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary steps, in consultation with the social partners, to revise the above-mentioned provisions in order to ensure the full conformity of the national legislation with Article 4 of the Convention.

Right to collective bargaining in practice. The Committee notes the Government's indication that there are 54 sectoral collective agreements in force, covering some 1.5 million workers. The Committee requests the Government to: (i) continue providing information on the number of agreements and accords concluded in the country and the number of workers covered; and (ii) provide information on the steps taken to promote collective bargaining in the various sectors of the economy.

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Confederation of Public Employees' Trade Unions (KESK), received on 31 August 2022; as well as those of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), and the Confederation of Progressive Trade Unions of Türkiye (DİSK) received on 1 September 2022 which concern questions examined in this comment, and the Government's reply thereto. The Committee also notes the observations of Turkish Confederation of Employers' Associations (TISK) communicated with the Government's report.

Civil liberties. In its previous comment, the Committee had requested the Government to provide its detailed comments on the lengthy and serious allegations of violations of civil liberties and trade union rights that date back to 2016. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates its previous general indications citing a number of constitutional and legal provisions guaranteeing freedom of association and, in particular, section 118 of the Penal Code concerning the offence of forcing someone to join or leave a union or to prevent the activities of a union; and indicates that there are both administrative and penal sanctions against those who violate these provisions which aim to protect trade union activities from all kinds of violence, pressure and a threatening environment. The Government also once again refers to the constitutional and statutory framework governing the freedom of assembly in Türkiye, indicating that everyone has the right to hold unarmed and peaceful meetings and demonstrations without prior authorization – however, with prior notification to administrative authorities – and that this right shall be restricted only by law on grounds of national security, public order, prevention of commission of crime, protection of public health and public morals, or the rights and freedoms of others. Act No. 2911 on Meetings and Demonstrations and the relevant

Regulation set the legal framework for exercising this right. In this framework, meetings and demonstrations can be organized in determined places, with notification made to the administrative authorities in order to ensure that the necessary security measures are taken. Security measures are planned and implemented regardless of the affiliation of the organizers, with a view to protecting the life and property of the organizers and other citizens. The Government indicates that all kinds of peaceful meetings and demonstrations take place in a safe and free environment, but when some trade union members transgress the law, destroy public and private property and seek to impose their own rules during the meetings and demonstrations, then security forces are obliged to intervene to preserve public order and safety. The Government adds that for the latest May Day, celebrations were held by all trade unions and confederations all around the country. According to the Government, the rate of intervention in demonstrations and meetings has decreased from 3.2 per cent in 2015 to 0.6 per cent in 2021 and the number of persons subjected to judicial and administrative proceedings in the same period decreased from 11,330 to 2,640 persons. The Government finally adds that since the enactment of Act No. 6356 and the substantial amendment of Act No. 4688, the rate of unionization has steadily increased, reaching 72.36 per cent in the public sector and 14.32 per cent in the private sector. There are currently seven trade unions' confederations and 12 public servants' trade unions' confederations. Taking due note of this information, the Committee notes with deep regret that the Government does not provide any concrete information in response to the many specific and very serious allegations of violations of civil liberties made by the social partners in the past years. The Committee notes that in their latest observations, the KESK, the DİSK and the ITUC denounce more cases of arrest, detention and prosecution of trade unionists including the imprisonment of six KESK members and executives, among them Mr Mehmet Ali Köseoğlu, secretary of Collective Bargaining Agreement and legal affairs of Yapi-Yol-Sen, a KESK affiliate, arrested on 3 June 2022 and still held in pre-trial detention, without being informed of the charges against him or having a trial date; and the arrest in Ankara of eight leaders of the Trade Union of Employees in Public Health and Social Services (SES) on unspecified charges on 25 May 2021. The Committee notes the Government's indication that there is no information in the records of the Ministry of Labour regarding these cases. The Committee recalls that the alleged instances of denial of freedom of assembly and demonstration include: an absolute ban on all forms of public gatherings in the city of Van, declared on 21 November 2016 and regularly extended since by the Governor's office; a Government ban on May Day celebrations in Istanbul Taksim square; the arrest of 212 demonstrators in Istanbul for attempting to hold a May Day protest in defiance of the coronavirus lockdown rules, including members of several DİSK affiliates; intervention of security forces in the awareness raising action of KESK women leaders on the occasion of the International day for the elimination of violence against women on 22 November 2021; a ban on a public gathering of KESK and other union representatives in Antalya, planned to express views on the annual budget that was being discussed in Parliament, on 12 December 2021; use of tear gas and physical force to disperse a gathering of KESK leaders and members to protest low wages in front of the Turkish Statistical Institute on 1 July 2022; intervention with tear gas and violence in the demonstration organized by KESK women representatives to protest against the withdrawal of Türkiye from the Council of Europe's Istanbul convention on violence against women in Ankara on 26 July 2022; and violent police intervention in the sit-in organized inside Farplas Automotive factory on 31 January 2022 to protest against the dismissal of nearly 150 workers. The police went to seek protesting workers on the rooftop of the factory, where it arrested them with violence, using pepper gas, risking their fall from the roof, using foul language against women, dragging them on the ground by the hair and breaking their bones. Reportedly 106 workers and union members and two officers of the DGD-SEN union were arrested by the police and released after giving their statements. The Committee urges the Government to provide detailed comments on these serious allegations of violations of civil liberties.

Follow-up to the recommendations of the tripartite committee (representation made under article 24 of the ILO Constitution)

The Committee notes that in March 2021, the Governing Body approved the report of the tripartite committee set up to examine the representation submitted by the Action Workers' Union Confederation (Aksiyon-Is) under article 24 of the ILO Constitution (GB.341/INS/13/5). The Committee notes that the tripartite committee issued conclusions and made recommendations in relation to: (i) dissolution of trade unions pursuant to the Decree-Law No. 667; (ii) the situation of workers who suffered from reprisals and retaliatory acts for their membership in the dissolved unions; and (iii) the situation of the imprisoned leaders and members of the dissolved unions. The Committee will examine measures taken by the Government in respect of the recommendation of the tripartite committee below.

The Committee recalls that the tripartite committee found that the workers dismissed for membership in dissolved unions were punished for having exercised their right to join organizations of their own choosing guaranteed by Article 2 of the Convention without any possibility of review of their individual situation. The Inquiry Commission, which is mandated to examine the applications of workers dismissed under the state of emergency decrees, did not review the legality of the closure of the relevant trade union or any of the individual's own activities; membership in a closed union was considered sufficient ground to reject an application against dismissal. The tripartite committee found that this amounted to a denial of the right of dismissed workers to an effective remedy. Concerning the allegation of imprisonment of the chairperson of Aksiyon-Is and the Chairpersons of PAK MADEN IS, PAK TEKSIL IS, PAK EGITIM IS, PAK TASIMA IS, PAK SAGLIK IS, and PAK HIZMET IS, as well as many members of administrative committees, the tripartite committee stressed the importance of the right to freedom and security of person and freedom from arbitrary arrest and detention, as well as the right to a fair trial by an independent and impartial tribunal, in accordance with the provisions of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. The tripartite committee urged the Government to ensure that a full, independent and impartial review be made with regard to all those workers who suffered from reprisals and retaliatory acts for their membership in the dissolved unions, in order to determine whether, independently of their membership in such unions, they had carried out any unlawful activity that would justify their dismissal. The tripartite committee also expected that the imprisoned trade unionists receive a swift and impartial trial and requested the Government to submit copies of the relevant judgments to this Committee. The Committee notes the following information provided by the Government on the review mechanism of the Inquiry Commission: (i) the Inquiry Commission on the State of Emergency initiates its investigations on the ground that the member concerned has a membership, affiliation, connection or contact with terrorist organizations, or structures/entities, or groups established by the National Security Council as engaging in activities against the national security of the State; (ii) the investigations on the applicants from the confederations and trade unions which were closed by the decree laws are ongoing; (iii) as an effective remedy, the Commission delivers individualized and reasoned decisions after speedy and extensive examination; it is aimed that all application files whose examination process are ongoing will be concluded during the Commission's mandate period.

The Committee deeply regrets that the Government does not refer to any measures taken to address the concerns and recommendations of the tripartite committee regarding the denial of the rights of members and leaders of dissolved unions to an effective remedy and a fair trial. The Committee further deeply regrets that the Government does not provide any information on the situation of imprisoned union leaders. In view of the foregoing, the Committee urges the Government to take all necessary measures to implement the recommendations of the tripartite committee and to ensure that the right to an effective remedy and to a fair trial of the members and leaders of dissolved unions is duly respected. The Committee requests the Government to provide information thereon.

Article 2 of the Convention. Right of workers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish and join organizations. Senior public employees, magistrates and prison staff. The Committee recalls that for a number of years it has been requesting the Government to amend section 15 of Act No. 4688 which excludes senior public employees, magistrates, and prison staff from the right to organize. The Committee notes that in the Government's view, section 15 was designed in line with legal regulations, judicial decisions, and ILO Conventions. The Committee recalls in this regard that it has always considered that: (i) to bar senior public officials from the right to join trade unions which represent other workers in the public sector is not necessarily incompatible with freedom of association on the condition that they should be entitled to establish their own organizations to defend their interests; and (ii) while the exclusion of the armed forces and the police from the right to organize is not contrary to the Convention, the same cannot be said for prison staff.

Locum workers (teachers, nurses, midwives, etc), public servants working without a contract of employment and pensioners. The Committee had previously requested the Government to provide its comments on the observations of MEMUR-SEN concerning the need to ensure freedom of association for these categories of workers. The Government indicates in this regard that: (i) only public servants as defined in section 3 of Act No. 4688 on Public Servants' Trade Unions and Collective Agreement can join trade unions established within the scope of the Act and locum workers cannot be employed under any cadre or position as specified in section three; and (ii) retired public servants cannot establish or join public servants' unions, as sections 6 and 14 of Act No. 4688 restrict these rights to active public servants. According to the Government, they have, however, formed several associations that can bring the issues concerning them to the attention of the Government. The Committee recalls in this respect that: (i) with regard to the right to establish and join organizations, the Convention does not allow any distinction based on whether the employees are engaged on a permanent or temporary basis, or with regard to their contractual status or the lack thereof; and (ii) legislation should not prevent former workers and retirees from joining trade unions, if they so wish, particularly when they have participated in the activity represented by the union.

The Committee requests the Government to take necessary measures to review the legislation with a view to ensuring that senior public employees, magistrates and prison staff, locum workers, public servants working without a contract of employment and retirees can enjoy and exercise their right to establish and join organizations. The Committee requests the Government to provide information thereon.

Article 3. Right of workers' organizations to organize their activities and formulate their programmes. Suspension and prohibition of strikes. The Committee recalls that section 63(1) of Act No. 6356 provides that a lawful strike or lockout that had been called or commenced may be suspended by the President of the Republic for 60 days by a decree if it is prejudicial to public health or national security and that if an agreement is not reached during the suspension period, the dispute would be submitted to compulsory arbitration. For a number of years, the Committee has been requesting the Government to ensure that section 63 of Act No. 6356 is not applied in a manner so as to infringe on the right of workers' organizations to organize their activities free from government interference. While observing that in a decision dated 22 October 2014, the Constitutional Court ruled that the prohibition of strikes and lockouts in banking services and municipal transport services under section 62(1) was unconstitutional, the Committee noted that pursuant to a Decree with power of law (KHK) No. 678, the Council of Ministers can postpone strikes in local transportation companies and banking institutions for 60 days. The Government indicates in this regard that the decision of the President to postpone a strike is taken within its context and its rationale is clearly stated in the decision, hence this authority is exercised within clearly stated boundaries. Furthermore, pursuant to article 125 of the Constitution, this decision is subject to judicial review as an administrative decision. The Government indicates that 14 strikes have been postponed since 2012 and in the regular reporting period only one postponement decision was accepted, which resulted in the agreement of the parties and the signing of a CBA. The Committee further notes the observation of the DİSK, indicating that between 2015-2019, nine strikes concerning 235 workplaces and 169,705 workers were postponed with a cabinet decree. Recalling that strikes can be suspended only in essential services in the strict sense of the term, for public servants exercising authority in the name of the State or in the event of an acute national crisis, the Committee once again requests the Government to ensure that these principles are taken into consideration in the application of section 63 of Act No. 6356 and KHK No. 678.

The State Supervisory Council. The Committee had previously requested the Government to provide information on any investigations or audits of trade unions undertaken by the Council, pursuant to Decree No. 5 or article 108 of the Constitution, and their results including any sanctions assessed. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Constitutional Court annulled the phrase "may apply a measure or" in section 6(ç) of the Presidential Decree No. 5, which provided that the State Supervisory Council may apply a measure of removal from duty or propose the application of this measure to the competent authorities for officials of all levels and ranks who are deemed inconvenient to remain on duty in terms of the requirements of public service. The Government explains that following that decision, the State Supervisory Council no longer has the authority to dismiss or suspend any trade union official but can only propose the application of these measures to the competent authorities, which, in the case of trade unions, refers to the trade union's own supervisory bodies and disciplinary committees. The Committee takes due note of the Government's indication that the Council has not carried out any investigation or audit against any trade union.

Article 4. Dissolution of trade unions. The Committee notes the conclusions of the tripartite committee referred to above about the situation of trade unions dissolved pursuant to Decree-Law No. 667. The tripartite committee noted that these unions were dissolved by the executive branch of the Government, while under Article 4 of the Convention, any dissolution of workers' or employers' organizations can only be carried out by the judicial authorities, which alone can guarantee the rights of defence. The tripartite committee further noted that while according to the Government, the representatives of these unions had failed to file applications with the Inquiry Commission mandated to examine their cases, the dissolved organizations had a limited capacity to present their claims due to the imprisonment of their leaders and members and seizure of their funds pursuant to the state of emergency Decree-Laws. The tripartite committee noted that as the time for filing an application challenging the closure of the unions has elapsed, it would now appear impossible to bring the dissolution of trade unions before a normal judicial procedure and added that the Government itself does not provide any explanation or details concerning the actions of the trade unions justifying their dissolution other than a declaration set out in Decree-Law No. 667 indicating that they were connected to FETÖ/PDY. The tripartite committee therefore urged the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the dissolution of trade unions pursuant to Decree-Law No. 667 is reviewed through the normal judicial procedures, which should also enable those unions to be able to be fully represented to defend their case. The Committee regrets that the Government merely indicates in this respect that two confederations and ten trade unions dissolved due to their connections to the FETO terrorist organization have applied to the Inquiry Commission and their cases are pending. Recalling that the dissolution and suspension of trade unions constitute extreme forms of interference by the authorities in the activities of organizations, and that Article 4 of the Convention prohibits the imposition of such measures by administrative authority, the Committee urges the Government to take all necessary measures to comply with the recommendation of the tripartite committee and to provide detailed information thereon. The Committee further requests the Government to provide information on the outcome of the cases concerning dissolved unions and confederations that are pending before the Inquiry Commission as well as on the number and outcome of any appeals against the negative decisions of the Inquiry Commission.

[The Government is asked to reply in full to the present comments in 2023.]

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1952)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Confederation of Public Employees' Trade Unions (KESK), received on 31 August 2022; as well as those of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), and the Confederation of Progressive Trade Unions of Türkiye (DİSK) received on 1 September 2022 which concern issues examined in this comment, and the Government's reply thereto. The Committee also notes the observations of Turkish Confederation of Employers' Associations (TISK) communicated with the Government's report.

The Committee further notes that the Committee on Freedom of Association drew its attention to the legislative aspects of Case No. 3410 (Report No. 399, June 2022, paragraph 352). These matters are discussed below.

Articles 1-6 of the Convention. Scope of the Convention. Prison staff. The Committee had noted in its previous comments that the prison staff did not enjoy the right to organize, even though they were covered by the collective agreements concluded in the public service like all other public servants. The Government indicates in this regard that: (i) the relevant provisions of the ratified freedom of association and collective bargaining conventions were taken into account while drafting Act No. 4688; (ii) section 15 excepts those working in strategically important organizations and in positions that use the power of State police and intelligence, including prison staff, from the right to join and form a union and; (iii) this provision has been drafted considering that there will be no compensation for the disruptions in these public services carried out by security, justice and high-level public servants. The Committee notes with concern that despite its longstanding comments under Conventions Nos 87 and 98, the Government does not report any progress concerning the recognition of the right of prison staff to organize. It recalls in this regard that under the terms of Convention No. 98, prison staff have the right of collective bargaining, which includes the right to be represented in negotiations by the organization of their choosing. Noting the Government's indication concerning eventual "disruption" in services carried out by the categories of workers excluded under section 15, the Committee recalls that the right to establish and join organizations and to bargain collectively through the organization of one's choice, should be distinguished from the right to strike. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures, including through revising section 15 of Act No. 4688, to guarantee that the prison staff can be effectively represented by the organizations of their own choosing in collective bargaining. It requests the Government to provide information with respect to any developments in this regard.

Locum workers and public servants working without a written contract. In its previous comment, the Committee had noted that these categories of workers are excluded from the scope of Act No. 4688 and had requested the Government to provide detailed information on their freedom of association and collective bargaining rights. The Government indicates that article 51 of the Constitution recognizes the right to unionize as a constitutional right to workers, employers and public servants. Public servants are defined in section 3(a) of Act No. 4688 and persons working as a fill-in at the public institutions (locum workers) cannot be employed in any cadre or position as specified in section 3(a), and therefore cannot be members of the unions established within the scope of Act No. 4688. Noting the Government's indications, and considering that locum work arrangements concern inter alia workers in public education and health sectors such as teachers, midwives and nurses, the Committee recalls that under Articles 5(1) and 6 of the Convention, only "members of the armed forces and the police" and "public servants engaged in the administration of the State" can be excepted from the guarantees enshrined in the Convention and the contractual status of public sector employees, or the lack thereof, should not affect their enjoyment of their rights under the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures, including legislative measures, to ensure that these categories of workers can exercise their right to organize and collective bargaining, either by allowing them to join organizations formed under Act No. 4688 or by providing a framework within which they can create their own organizations. It further requests the Government to provide information on any measures taken in this respect.

Articles 1, 2 and 3 of the Convention. Massive dismissals in the public sector under the state of emergency decrees. In its previous comments the Committee had noted that following the 2016 coup attempt, a high number of trade union members and officials were suspended and dismissed under the state of emergency and that an Inquiry Commission was established to review applications against the measures taken in that context, whose decisions were appealable before administrative courts. The Committee had requested the Government to provide information on the number of applications received from trade unionists and the number and outcome of appeals against the negative decisions of the Inquiry Commission concerning them and to respond to the allegations concerning cases of dismissal of members of the Education and Science Workers Union of Türkiye (EĞİTİM SEN). The Government indicates in this regard that: (i) the dismissal of public servants, which may include some trade union representatives by the state of emergency decrees is grounded in their membership, affiliation or connection to terrorist organizations; (ii) decisions by the Inquiry Commission can be appealed before nine branches of Ankara administrative courts that are specifically authorized by the Council of Judges and Prosecutors; (iii) as of 27 May 2022, the Commission had received 127,130 applications and issued decisions on 124,235, therefore the number of applications where examination is still pending amounts to 2,985. Within 33 months since the beginning of the Commission's activity, 87 per cent of the applications were examined; (iv) the number of rejected applications amounts to 106,970 and the number of admitted ones to 17,265. Among the admitted applications, 61 concerned the opening of organizations that were shut down including associations; (v) there is no statistical information on the number of trade union representatives affected by the state of emergency decrees or those who have submitted applications to the courts. However, two confederations and ten trade unions dissolved due to their connection to the FETO terrorist organization have applied to the Inquiry Commission and their cases are still pending; (vi) according to the figures contained in the observation of Education International, the admittance rate for reinstatement of EĞİTİM SEN members is much higher than the average rate (38.5 per cent and 11.5 per cent respectively), which shows that there is no discrimination against EĞİTİM SEN members. The Committee further notes KESK's observations in this regard, reporting that: (i) in total, 4,267 KESK members from all public sectors were dismissed under the state of emergency decrees; (ii) more than five years after the dismissals, some of the applications of dismissed KESK members and officials are still pending before the Inquiry Commission. The organization alleges that the delay in examining their applications is deliberate and adds that the complete procedure including appeal may take up to ten years; (iii) KESK members who had signed the petition calling for an end to fighting in East and Southeast Anatolia six months before the attempted coup, and who were later dismissed under state of emergency decrees, won a case before the Constitutional Court on 26 July 2019. The Court underlined that no sanction can be imposed on these academics for having signed the petition, however, the Inquiry Commission did not take this judgment into consideration; (iv) there are no legal grounds for accusing KESK members of connection with terrorist organizations or any other organizations carrying out activities against national security. The dismissals took place arbitrarily and the employees were not informed of accusations and could not defend themselves. They still cannot avail themselves of any transparent mechanism to challenge the so-called evidence against them; and (v) even though the state of emergency is lifted, governors and ministries continued to use the provisional section 35 of the Emergency Decree Law No. 375, dismissing 21 teacher members of EĞİTİM SEN from Diyarbakir on 29 November 2021. The Committee notes with deep regret, that once again, despite the Committee's repeated requests, the Government does not provide information on the number of cases concerning trade unionists before the Inquiry Commission and administrative courts or the outcome of these cases.

In this context, the Committee notes with concern the KESK observations concerning the delay in the examination of applications of unionists by the Inquiry Commission and the problems indicated concerning defence rights, examination of evidence and burden of proof. The Committee recalls in this regard that adequate protection against anti-union discrimination requires procedures that are effective and rapid, ensuring without delay independent, expeditious and in-depth investigations into the allegations. In view of the Government's emphasis on stating that the dismissals and suspensions are based on presumed connection with terrorist organizations, and the KESK's allegation that there is no transparent mechanism through which public officers can challenge the evidence against them, the Committee firmly recalls that in procedures concerning alleged anti-union discrimination, placing on workers the burden of proving that the act in question occurred as a result of anti-union discrimination may constitute an insurmountable obstacle to establishing liability and ensuring an appropriate remedy. In view of the foregoing, the Committee once again expresses its firm hope that the Inquiry Commission and the administrative courts that review its decisions shall carefully and expeditiously examine the grounds for the dismissal of trade union members and officials in the public sector and order reinstatement of the trade unionists dismissed for anti-union grounds. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on how the evidence is examined and the burden of proof applied in cases concerning trade unionists before the Inquiry Commission and administrative courts. It also once again urges the Government to provide detailed and specific information on the number and outcome of applications concerning trade union members and officers before the Inquiry Commission, as well as the number and outcome of appeals against negative decisions on those applications. Finally, the Committee requests the Government to provide its comments with respect to the allegation of continued use of state of emergency powers to dismiss union members.

Article 1. Inadequate protection against anti-union dismissals. Private sector. The Committee notes that Case No. 3410 before the Committee on Freedom of Association (CFA) partly concerns the question of inadequateness of the legal remedies provided to victims of anti-union dismissals in private sector. It notes that the legal provisions in question are section 21(1) of the Labour Act (Act No. 4857) and section 25(5) of the Law on Trade Unions and Collective Labour Agreements (Act No. 6356). The Committee notes that section 21(1) of Act No. 4857 provides:

If the court or the arbitrator concludes that the termination is unjustified ... the employer must re-engage the employee in work within one month. If, upon the application of the employee, the employer does not re-engage him in work, compensation to be not less than the employee's four months' wages and not more than his eight months' wages shall be paid to him by the employer.

Section 25(5) of Act No. 6356 provides:

Where it has been determined that the contract of employment has been terminated for reasons of trade union activities, union compensation shall be ordered independent of the requirement of application of the worker and the employer's granting or refusing him permission to restart work in accordance with article 21 of the Law No. 4857. However, in case the worker is not allowed to start work, the compensation specified in the first paragraph of Article 21 of this Law No. 4857 shall not apply. Non-application to a court pursuant to the aforementioned provisions of the Law No. 4857 shall not be an obstacle for the worker to claim union compensation separately.

The Committee further notes the Government's indication in its reply to the CFA case complainants, confirming that the national legislation does not contain provisions on absolute reinstatement to work, and instead stipulates the right of the employer to choose whether to rehire the employee or to pay an additional compensation; furthermore, according to the Government under civil law no employer should be forced to recruit a worker. The Committee also notes the observations of the DİSK in relation to this matter, indicating that the inability of the courts to order the employer to reinstate dismissed workers makes it easier for some employers to get rid of the union at the workplace by simply dismissing all active union members. The DİSK also refers to the ruling of the European Court of Human Rights in Tek Gıda İş Sendikası v. Türkiye where the court inferred from an employer's refusal to reinstate dismissed employees and the award of insufficient compensation to deter the employer from any future wrongful dismissals, that the national law, as applied by the courts, did not impose sufficiently deterrent penalties on the employer, which, according to the Court had by carrying out large-scale wrongful dismissals, negated the applicant union's right. The Committee further notes the allegations of the ITUC, indicating that trade unionists in Türkiye live under the constant threat of retaliation, any attempt to form unions being deterred by the dismissal of union organizers. Both ITUC and DİSK refer to numerous cases of anti-union dismissals across different sectors in their observations. The Committee recalls that in its previous comments as well, it had noted numerous allegations of anti-union discrimination, especially dismissals, in practice. In view of the recurrent indications as to the frequent occurrence of anti-union dismissals, the Committee is bound to note that the available legal remedies and sanctions against anti-union dismissals do not seem to have a strong deterrent effect. The Committee notes in this regard that pursuant to the current law: (i) judicial authorities can in no circumstances impose an order of reinstatement on the private sector employer; (ii) section 25(4) of Act No. 6356 fixes a minimum amount for "union compensation" in case of acts of anti-union discrimination other than dismissal, which is the worker's annual wage, but in cases of anti-union dismissal, neither a minimum amount nor a cap is fixed in the law. The issue seems to be left to the discretion of the judicial authority; and (iii) the Government does not refer to any other existent penalty or sanction for anti-union dismissals, and section 78 of Act No. 6356 containing its penal provisions is silent about anti-union discrimination. The Committee recalls in this regard, that it has always considered that reinstatement should at least be included among the range of measures that can be ordered by the judicial authorities in the event of anti-union discrimination; and that the effectiveness of legal provisions prohibiting acts of anti-union discrimination depends also on the sanctions provided, which should be effective and sufficiently dissuasive; and that the purpose of compensation must be to compensate fully, both in financial and occupational terms, the prejudice suffered. In view of the foregoing, the Committee urges the Government to take all the necessary measures to revise the legislation, with a view to ensuring the provision of an adequate protection against anti-union dismissals in the private sector. Pending legislative reform, the Committee firmly hopes that the judicial authorities will consider the above principles while they exercise their discretion in the determination of the amount of "union compensation". The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard.

Anti-union discrimination in the public sector. The Committee notes the observations of the KESK, once again denouncing numerous cases of anti-union discrimination against members and officials of its affiliates, including 35 transfers, 6 suspensions and 7 cases of administrative disciplinary measures including blocking promotions and a reprimand. According to the observations, the workers have appealed against several of these measures, where the cases are still pending. The Committee also notes the Government's comments on these allegations, indicating that: (i) public servants have the right to lodge complaints or initiate proceedings against the acts of their superiors or public organizations; (ii) the KESK does not provide any plausible grounds that can establish the existence of anti-union discrimination and; (iii) all the public institutions cited in the KESK 2021 observations informed the Ministry of Labour and Social Security (MOL&SS) that the personnel transfers were necessitated by the requirements of the service. The Government makes the following indications concerning protection against anti-union discrimination in the public sector: (i) section 18 of the Law on Public Servants' Trade Unions and Collective Agreement (Act No. 4688) prohibits anti-union discrimination against public servants including dismissals and transfers; (ii) prime ministry circulars introduce measures to combat mobbing in both public and private workplaces and establish a helpline; (iii) the Ombudsman Institution has the power to investigate anti-union discrimination in the public sector, undertake inspections and draft yearly reports that it can publish and present to the parliament, but has no authority to impose administrative fines. The Committee recalls that it has always emphasized the need to adopt formal provisions clearly recognizing the protection of all public servants and public sector employees not engaged in the administration of the State (including those who are not trade union officers) against acts of anti-union discrimination, and to provide for effective and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions against those responsible for such acts. The Committee notes that apart from reference to section 118 of the penal code, which concerns the offence of coercion in relation to trade union membership and activities, the Government does not indicate sanctions that can eventually be imposed against the perpetrators of anti-union discrimination in the public sector, or to any compensation that may be awarded to the victims. Therefore, the Committee requests the Government to indicate whether the law allows sanctioning those responsible for anti-union discrimination in the public sector and whether compensation can be awarded to victims. If there are no such provisions in law, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures in full consultation with social partners, to ensure that the law is amended with a view to ensuring an adequate protection against anti-union discrimination in the public sector. It requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this respect.

Collection of data on anti-union discrimination in private and public sectors. The Committee recalls that following up on the recommendations of the June 2013 Committee on the Application of Standards of the International Labour Conference, which requested the Government to establish a system for collecting data on anti-union discrimination in both private and public sectors, it has been requesting the Government to provide information on the measures taken to that end. The Committee notes with regret that the Government does not report any progress in this regard. The Committee once again stresses the need to take concrete steps towards establishing the system for collecting such information and expects the Government to provide in its next report information on developments and progress in this respect.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. Cross-sector bargaining. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that while cross-sector bargaining resulting in “public collective labour agreement framework protocols” was possible in the public sector, this was not the case in the private sector. The Committee had requested the Government to consider, in consultation with the social partners, the amendment of section 34 of Act No. 6356 to ensure that it did not restrict the possibility of the parties in the private sector to engage in cross-sector regional or national agreements should they so desire. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates that the existent system is a product of a long and well-established industrial relations system in Türkiye and that it does not prevent parties wishing to enter into agreements at the regional and national level and adds that the MOL&SS is ready to take into consideration the amendment proposals to be made jointly by the social partners regarding section 34 if the social partners reach consensus on such changes. The Committee further notes the observation of the TISK in this regard, indicating that section 34 has long been applied as such and in their discussions prior to the adoption of Act No. 6356, the social partners reached a consensus on preserving the existing system. The Committee requests the Government to consider taking the necessary measures to initiate a new consultation process with the social partners, with a view to amending section 34 of Act No. 6356 in order to ensure that the parties in the private sector wishing to engage in cross-sector regional or national agreements can do so without impairment. It requests the Government to provide information on the steps taken in this regard.

Requirements for becoming a bargaining agent. Private sector. Triple threshold requirement. In its previous comments the Committee had noted that section 41(1) of Act No. 6356 set out the following requirement for becoming a collective bargaining agent: the union should represent at least 1 per cent of the workers engaged in a given branch of activities and more than 50 per cent of workers employed in the workplace and 40 per cent of workers of the enterprise to be covered by the collective agreement. The Committee recalls that this issue was also brought up in the framework of CFA Case No. 3021. The Committee had requested the Government to continue monitoring the impact of the perpetuation of the branch 1 per cent threshold requirement on the trade union movement and the national collective bargaining machinery as a whole and to provide information in this respect. The Government indicates in this regard that as of July 2022, there were 218 trade unions in Türkiye, 60 of which, including five independent unions, passed the 1 per cent threshold required for collective bargaining. There were seven Confederations with 105 affiliate unions, including 55 unions that pass the 1 per cent threshold. Union membership rate in private sector has progressed from 10.56 per cent in January 2015, when the sector threshold was lowered to 1 per cent, to 14.32 per cent in January 2022. The Government adds that the MOL&SS is ready to take into consideration the amendment proposals to be made jointly by the social partners regarding section 41(1) if the social partners reach consensus on such changes. The Committee also notes the TISK observation indicating that granting bargaining rights to unions that are not authorized in the current legislation will disrupt the current labour peace, as trade union rivalry often prevents unions from acting together and this may hamper the conclusion of Collective Bargaining Agreements (CBAs). The Committee further notes that the DISK indicates in this regard that minority unions should have the right to represent at least their members. The Committee notes that according to the information submitted by the Government, only 27.5 per cent of all Turkish unions pass the 1 per cent threshold, the rate being 52.4 per cent among the affiliates of the big confederations, but only 4.4 per cent among independent unions. It further notes that the lowering of the branch threshold in 2015 has had a positive impact on the unionization rate. The Committee trusts that the removal of the branch threshold will have a similarly positive impact on the rate of unionization as well as on the capacity of unions, especially independent unions, to use the collective bargaining machinery. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to initiate the consultation process with the social partners, with a view to amending section 41(1) of Act No. 6356 so as to ensure that more workers' organizations can engage in collective bargaining with the employers. It requests the Government to provide information on the steps taken in this regard.

Determination of the most representative union and rights of minority unions. Regarding the workplace and enterprise representativeness thresholds, the Committee had noted in its previous comments that section 42(3) of Act No. 6356, provides that if it was determined that there exists no trade union which meets the conditions for authorization to bargain collectively, such information is notified to the party which made the application for the determination of competence. It had further noted that section 45(1) stipulates that an agreement concluded without an authorization document is null and void. While noting the “one agreement for one workplace or business” principle adopted by the Turkish legislation, the Committee had recalled that under a system of designation of an exclusive bargaining agent, if no union represents the required percentage of workers to be declared the exclusive bargaining agent, all unions in the unit, jointly or separately, should be able to engage in collective bargaining, at least on behalf of their own members. The Committee highlighted that by allowing for the joint bargaining of minority unions, the law could adopt an approach more favourable to the development of collective bargaining without compromising the “one agreement for one workplace or business” principle. The Committee notes with regret that the Government does not provide information on any developments in this respect. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to amend the legislation, in consultation with the social partners, so as to ensure that if no union represented the required percentage of workers to be declared the exclusive bargaining agent, all unions in the unit, jointly or separately, should be able to engage in collective bargaining, at least on behalf of their own members. It requests the Government to provide information on all measures taken or envisaged in this regard.

Judicial challenges to collective bargaining agent certification. The Committee notes the observations of the DİSK indicating that employers have the right to challenge the union majority certificate issued by the MOL, and pending the judicial proceedings, which might take 6-7 years, the collective bargaining process remains on hold. The DİSK refers to the case of one of its affiliates, Birleşik Metal-İş Union, which was involved in 98 court cases of this type between 2012–20. According to the DİSK, at the end of such proceedings, very often the union has already lost its majority at the workplace. The Committee further notes that according to the DİSK observations, disputes about determination of branch of activity of the workplace may also lead to lengthy court proceedings that impede collective bargaining. Noting the potentially negative impact that the proliferation of lengthy court proceedings can have on the development of collective bargaining, the Committee requests the Government to provide its comments on the issues raised by the DĚSK.

Articles 4 and 6. Collective bargaining rights of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. Material scope of collective bargaining. The Committee had noted in its previous comments that section 28 of Act No. 4688, as amended in 2012, restricted the scope of collective agreements to “social and financial rights” only, thereby excluding issues such as working time, promotion and career as well as disciplinary sanctions and had requested the Government to remove these restrictions on the material scope of bargaining in the public sector. The Committee notes with regret that the Government does not indicate any new developments in this respect. It is therefore bound to once again recall that while the Convention is compatible with systems requiring competent authorities’ approval of certain labour conditions or financial clauses of collective agreements concerning the public sector, public servants who are not engaged in the administration of the State should enjoy the guarantees of the Convention and therefore be able to negotiate collectively their conditions of employment and that measures taken unilaterally by the authorities to restrict the scope of negotiable issues are often incompatible with the Convention. Bearing in mind the compatibility with the Convention of the special bargaining modalities in the public sector as mentioned above, the Committee again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the removal of restrictions on matters subject to collective bargaining so that the material scope of collective bargaining rights of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State is in full conformity with the Convention.

Collective bargaining in the public sector. Participation of most representative branch unions. The Committee recalls that in its previous comment, it had noted that pursuant to section 29 of Act No. 4688, the Public Employers’ Delegation (PED) and Public Servants’ Unions Delegation (PSUD) are parties to the collective agreements concluded in the public service. Even though the most representative unions in the branch are represented in PSUD and take part in bargaining within branch-specific technical committees, their role within PSUD is restricted in that they are not entitled to make proposals for collective agreements, in particular where their demands are qualified as general or related to more than one service branch. The Government indicates in this respect that the collective agreement proposals for each service branch are determined separately by the competent trade unions in each branch and these proposals are then discussed in the technical committees established for each branch of service separately. These committees’ works are conducted independently of each other and the conclusion of an agreement in one branch does not necessarily mean that others are under obligation to conclude one too. The Committee notes that the Government’s indications do not refer to any new developments concerning the role of representative branch unions within the PSUD. It is therefore bound to once again request the Government to ensure that Act No. 4688 and its application in practice enable the most representative unions in each branch to make proposals for collective agreements including on issues that may concern more than one service branch, as regards public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. The Committee requests the Government to indicate all developments in this respect.

Public employee arbitration board. In its previous comment, the Committee had noted that in case of failure of negotiations in the public sector, the chair of PED (the Minister of Labour) on behalf of public administration and the chair of PSUD on behalf of public employees, can apply to the Public Employee Arbitration Board. The Board decisions were final and had the same effect and force as the collective agreement. The Committee had requested the Government to take the necessary measures for restructuring the membership of the Public Employee Arbitration Board or the method of appointment of its members so as to more clearly show its independence and impartiality and to win the confidence of the parties. The Government indicates in this regard, that the chair of the board is designated by the President from among the Presidents, Vice-Presidents or Heads of Departments of the Court of Cassation, the Council of State (Supreme Court for Administrative Courts) and Supreme Court of Public Accounts. According to the Government, these high courts and their judges are not connected hierarchically to the executive power and have judicial independence. Furthermore, other Board members do not represent the relevant confederation or the public employer but decide on behalf of the whole country. The Committee notes however, that the President of the Republic designates not only the chair, but seven out of eleven members of the board. It also notes the observation of the KESK, indicating that this means that most of the board members are designated by the Government. The Committee notes in this respect that as the Government is also the employer in the public sector, it is therefore a party to the negotiations on which the Board will pronounce itself. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to consider reviewing, in consultation with the social partners, the method of appointment of the Board members so as to more clearly show its independence and impartiality and to win the confidence of the parties.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1997)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 1 September 2022, referring to the issues examined by the Committee below and questioning the independence of the trade union movement in the country. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments thereon as well as on the 2018 observations of the International Union of Food, Agricultural, Hotel, Restaurant, Catering, Tobacco and Allied Workers' Associations alleging grave violations of civil liberties and of the Convention in practice.

The Committee notes the Law on Industrialists and Entrepreneurs of 2019 and will examine its conformity with the Convention once its translation becomes available.

Article 3 of the Convention. Right of organizations to organize their administration, without interference by the public authorities. The Committee had previously noted that pursuant to section 27(3) of the Law on Public Associations, insofar as it applies to employers' organizations, public associations must, upon a request from the Ministry of Justice, submit copies of decisions taken by their governing bodies and officers, as well as reports about their operations. A similar provision is contained in section 16(2) of the Law on Trade Unions. The Committee had requested the Government to amend these provisions as they give the authorities powers of control that go beyond those acceptable under the Convention. The Committee regrets that the Government's reply, while extensive, is limited to general statements regarding the prohibition on the authorities to interfere in the activities of public associations and to indicating merely that such interference is permitted only in cases that are specifically prescribed by the respective laws. The Committee once again recalls that the supervision of workers' and employers' organizations should be limited to the obligation of submitting periodic financial reports or, if there are serious grounds for believing that the actions of an organization are contrary to its rules or the law (which should not infringe the principles of freedom of association), such verification should be limited to exceptional cases, for example, in order to investigate a complaint, or if there have been allegations of embezzlement, and should not take the form of permanent control by the authorities. Both the substance and the procedure of such verifications should always be subject to review by the competent judicial authority affording every guarantee of impartiality and objectivity. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take all necessary steps to amend section 16(2) of the Law on Trade Unions and 27(3) of the Law on Public Associations, in so far as it applies to employers' organizations, so as to ensure the application of the principles set forth above. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all progress made in this respect.

Right to strike. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that the provisions of the Labour Code concerning collective labour disputes did not refer to the right to strike; that according to the Government, collective labour disputes were resolved through mediation or in case of a failure, in courts; and that the parties could not refuse to participate in dispute resolution procedures. The Committee considered in this respect that while strike action was not an end in itself, it was an essential means available to workers and their organizations to protect their interests. The Committee further considered that insofar as compulsory arbitration, including through judicial proceedings, prevents strike action, it was contrary to the right of trade unions to organize freely their activities and could only be justified in the public service for public servants exercising authority in the name of the State or in essential services in the strict sense of the term, that is, services the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population. The Committee had requested the Government to take the necessary measures, in consultation with the social partners, in order to ensure the application of this principle in law and in practice. The Committee notes with regret that the Government did not provide any information on this matter. The Committee is therefore bound to reiterate its previous request. The Committee expects the Government to provide information on all steps taken or envisaged in this respect.

Uganda (ratification: 2005)

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 2005)

Previous comment

The Committee had previously noted the Government's commitment to implement as a matter of urgency the Committee's recommendation to discuss with the social partners the application and impact of the Public Order Management Act, according to which, organizers of public meetings who fail to comply with the Act's requirements commit an act of disobedience of statutory duty, punishable with imprisonment under the Penal Code. The Committee notes with regret the Government's indication that there have been no developments in this regard. The Committee reiterates its previous request and urges the Government to provide information in this regard.

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. Legislative matters. The Committee had requested the Government to take measures to amend or repeal the following provisions of the Labour Unions Act of 2006 (LUA):

- Section 18 (process of registration of a labour union shall be completed within 90 days from the date of application). The Committee had requested the Government to take the necessary measures to amend this section to shorten the time frame for registration of a trade union.
- Section 23(1) (interdiction or suspension of union officers by the Registrar). The Committee had requested the Government to take steps to amend section 23(1) of the LUA to ensure that the Registrar may only remove or suspend trade union officers after conclusion of judicial proceedings and only for reasons, such as an internal decision of the trade union, in line with Article 3 of the Convention.
- Section 31(1) (eligibility condition of being employed in the relevant occupation). The Committee recalls that the measures to amend this section may include introducing flexibility either by admitting as candidates for union office persons who have previously been employed in that occupation, or by exempting from that requirement a reasonable proportion of the officers of an organization.

- Section 33 (excessive regulation by the Registrar of an organization's annual general meeting; contravention subject to sanction under section 23(1)).

The Committee takes note of the Government's indication that it is still in the process of amending the Act and that the Bill which provides for amendment of sections 18, 23(1), 31(1) and repeal of section 33 is pending at the top Policy Management level. Recalling that the review process of the LUA has been ongoing for several years, the Committee expects that it will be amended without further delay, in consultation with the social partners. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all developments in this regard, and to provide a copy of the amended LUA when adopted.

The Committee recalls that it had requested the Government to amend section 29(2) of the Labour Disputes (Arbitration and Settlement) Act of 2006 (LDASA) to ensure that the responsibility for declaring a strike illegal does not lie with the Government, but with an independent body that has the confidence of the parties involved. The Committee had also requested the Government to provide information regarding the harmonization of the list of essential services in the LDASA (Schedule 2) with that in the 2008 Public Service Act (Negotiating, Consultative and Disputes Settlement Machinery). The Committee notes with concern the Government's indication that while the LDASA was amended in 2020, section 29(2) and Schedule 2 of the LDASA were not. The Government indicates that it will consider addressing these matters through other policy arrangements. The Committee urges the Government to take all the necessary measures in consultation with the social partners to amend section 29(2) in line with its previous request and to harmonize the list of essential services in Schedule 2 of the LDASA, irrespective of other policy arrangements that may be adopted. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard, including on any other policy arrangements adopted, and to provide a copy of the revised LDASA.

Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes the Government's indication regarding the challenges of applying the Convention in the informal sector of the economy, due to the instability of enterprises in this sector and the small number of workers usually employed by each enterprise, as well as the casual nature of work. The Committee recalls that pursuant to Article 11, each Member State for which this Convention is in force undertakes to take all necessary and appropriate measures to ensure that workers and employers may exercise freely the right to organize. The Committee requests the Government to indicate measures taken or envisaged in consultation with the social partners in this regard and recalls that it may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office.

Previous comment

The Committee had requested the Government to provide detailed comments on the allegations of anti-union discrimination practices, in response to the observations made by the International Trade Union Confederation and the National Organization of Trade Unions of Uganda in 2014 and 2012 respectively. The Committee notes with regret the absence of reply from the Government. It trusts that the Government will show greater cooperation in the future and urges the Government to provide its comments to the referred observations.

Article 4 of the Convention. Promotion of collective bargaining. The Committee had noted the Government's indication that the Labour Unions Act No. 7 of 2006 (LUA) was under review, and had requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the revised legislation recognizes the right of trade union federations and confederations to engage in collective bargaining (section 7 of the LUA). The Committee notes the Government's indication that this process is still ongoing, and the Committee's observation on this matter is one of the areas for amendment. Recalling that the review process of the LUA has been ongoing for some years, the Committee expects that it will be amended without delay, following consultations with the social partners, to ensure its conformity with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard.

Compulsory arbitration. The Committee has, for many years, requested the Government to amend sections 5(1) and (3), and 27 of the Labour Disputes (Arbitration and Settlement) Act of 2006 (LDASA) with a view to ensuring that arbitration may only be imposed in the case of disputes in the public service involving public servants engaged in the administration of the State (Article 6 of the Convention), or in essential services in the strict sense of the term (namely those services whose interruption would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population), or in the case of acute national crisis. The Committee notes with concern the Government's indication that the LDASA was amended in 2020 but that section 5 (1) and (3) and 27 were not amended in the process, despite the Government's previous indication that consultations were held with the social partners to amend these provisions. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it will consider addressing the matter through other policy arrangements. The Committee urges the Government to, in consultation with the social partners, take all the necessary measures to amend sections 5(1) and (3), and 27 of the LDASA, irrespective of other policy arrangements that may be adopted by the Government, to ensure that arbitration in situations other than those mentioned above can take place only at the request of both parties involved in the dispute and that the applicable legislation is fully in line with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard, including any other policy arrangements adopted.

Articles 4 and 6. Promotion of collective bargaining for public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. The Committee had requested the Government to provide information on the outcome of the negotiation between the Council, composed of ten Public Service Labour Unions, which concluded a collective bargaining discussion for salary increase for the period of five years, starting from the financial year of 2018–19. Observing that the Government does not provide information on the outcome of this negotiation, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide it.

Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes the Government's indication with respect to the challenges for implementation and enforcement of the existing legislation on freedom of association in informal enterprises, due to the low number of workers, the casual nature of their work, and the instability of enterprises, which leads to obstacles to unionization. The Committee observes that this situation also results in challenges to collective bargaining. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to promote collective bargaining for workers in the informal sector and recalls that it may avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office. The Committee also requests the Government to provide detailed information on the number of collective agreements concluded and in force, in all sectors of the economy, and the number of workers covered by these agreements.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1956)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 1 September 2022, denouncing the introduction in Parliament of draft Law No. 6420 on the Legal Regime of Property of All-Union Public Associations (Organizations) of the Former USSR (dated December 2021) and Draft Law No. 6421 on Moratorium on Alienation of Property of All-Union Public

Associations (Organizations) of the Former USSR. The ITUC considers the revival of the two draft pieces of legislation in a time of war to be opportunistic and contrary to the Government's international commitments. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the two draft laws were developed to establish the legal basis for determining the ownership of property which, as of 1991, was in the possession or use of all-union public organizations of the former USSR, with a view to returning such property to state ownership. The Committee notes that the Committee on Freedom of Association has been called upon to examine the issue of trade union property on two occasions, in Case No. 2890 and more recently, in Case No. 3341 where it had noted the creation of a working group to discuss possible ways to regulate the issue and invited the Government to engage in consultations with the trade union organizations to find a mutually agreeable solution (see Report No. 392, October 2020, para. 966). Noting the ITUC allegation that the two draft laws were presented unilaterally without meaningful consultations with trade unions, the Committee requests the Government to take necessary measures to review draft Laws Nos 6420 and 6421 in full consultation with the most representative workers' organizations with a view to finding a mutually agreeable solution. The Committee requests the Government to inform it of all developments in this regard.

The Committee also notes the joint observations of the Federation of Trade Unions of Ukraine (FPU) and the Confederation of Free Trade Unions (KVPU), received on 6 October 2022, alleging that Law No. 2136-IX of 15 March 2022 on Organization of Labour Relations Under Martial Law was adopted without prior consultation with the social partners and that it restricts the exercise of the right to organize. While taking account of the exceptional nature of the legislation, the Committee trusts that the Law will be declared null and void once the state of emergency / martial law regime is lifted.

The Committee further notes that according to the FPU and the KVPU, the following draft laws were introduced in Parliament without prior consultation with the social partners: draft Law on Labour; draft Law No. 2332 of 29 October 2019 on Amendments to Certain Legislative Acts Concerning the Procedure for Determining the Representativeness of Trade Union and Employer Organizations in Social Dialogue Bodies; draft Law No. 2682 of 27 December 2019 on Strikes and Lockouts; draft Law No. 2681 of 27 December 2019 on Amendments to Certain Legislative Acts of Ukraine (on Some Matters of the Trade Unions Activity); and draft Law No. 7025 of 4 February 2022 on Self-Regulatory Organizations. According to the FPU and the KVPU, these laws, if adopted, would violate the Convention by (i) restricting the rights of workers to establish organizations of their choosing and without previous authorization, imposing state control over trade unions, and (ii) restricting the right of trade unions to organize their administration and activities and to formulate their programmes in general, and the right to strike in particular. The Committee notes the above allegations with concern and recalls that all States have the obligation to respect fully the commitments undertaken by ratification of ILO Conventions. The Committee notes the Government's indication in reply to the ITUC above-mentioned observations that the Ministry of Economy is ready for a comprehensive dialogue which would facilitate a full understanding of the spirit and provisions of international labour legislation as well as their implementation in Ukraine. The Committee notes the Government's communication received on 8 December 2022 containing comments on the FPU and the KVPU allegations. The Committee will examine the Government's reply at its next session. The Committee urges the Government to engage with the social partners in respect of the draft legislation affecting their interests and rights with a view to bringing the legislation into conformity with the Convention prior to any further consideration by Parliament. The Committee recalls that the Government may avail itself of technical assistance from the Office in this respect.

The Committee notes the extremely difficult situation in the country since 24 February 2022. In the absence of a report from the Government on the application of the Convention, the Committee recalls that it had previously requested the Government:

- to continue taking the necessary steps in order to ensure the right of judges to establish organizations of their own choosing to further and defend the interests of their members and to inform of all progress made in this regard;
- to take the necessary measures to amend section 19 of the Law on the procedure for settlement of collective labour disputes so as to ensure that if the national legislation requires a vote before a strike can be held, account is taken only of the votes cast and the majority is fixed at a reasonable level;
- to clarify which categories of civil servants exercise authority in the name of the State and whether some or all civil servants are prohibited from exercising the right to strike, and to amend section 10(5) of the Law on Civil Service so as to ensure that the right to strike in the public service may be restricted or prohibited only for public servants exercising authority in the name of the State; and
- to provide information on the practical application of section 293 of the Criminal Code, which provides that organized group actions that seriously disturb public order, or significantly disrupt operations of public transport, any enterprise, institution or organization and active participation therein, are punishable by a fine of up to 50 monthly minimum wages or imprisonment for a term of up to six months, in respect of industrial actions.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1949)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations made by the Trades Union Confederation (TUC), received on 31 August 2022, which refer to the issues examined by the Committee below.

The Committee had previously requested the Government to comment on the allegations relating to police surveillance of trade unions and trade unionists submitted by the TUC in 2018. The Committee notes the Government's indications that the exercise of covert investigatory powers under the Investigatory Powers Act, 2016 (IPA) and the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Act, 2000 (RIPA) are subject to numerous stringent safeguards and robust independent oversight, and are carried out only if they are necessary for specific statutory grounds, proportionate to the outcome sought, and the information required cannot be reasonably obtained through less intrusive means. The Government points out that it would therefore never be necessary and proportionate to use investigatory powers merely to interfere with legitimate trade union activity. The Government adds that the RIPA grants victims of improper exercise of covert investigatory powers recourse to the Investigatory Powers Tribunal (IPT) for redress. The Government further informs that there is an Investigatory Powers Commissioner who exercises independent oversight over investigatory powers and has the mandate to audit, inspect and report the use of such powers by the authorities. The Committee notes the Government's indication that an Undercover Policing Inquiry was established in 2015 to inquire into and report on undercover police operations conducted in England and Wales since 1968 and their effects upon individuals in particular and the public in general. A number of trades unions and trades unions members have been granted core participant status in the Inquiry. The Committee expects that the inquiry will be concluded in the very near future and requests the Government to provide information on any conclusions arrived at in relation to the above-mentioned allegations.

Article 3 of the Convention. Right of workers' organizations to organize their activities and formulate their programmes. In its previous comment, the Committee had requested the Government to provide information on the measures taken to facilitate electronic balloting (e-balloting) for industrial action ballots. The Committee notes both the TUC's and the Government's indications that the review of e-balloting conducted in 2017 resulted in certain recommendations, including pilots of e-balloting in non-statutory areas as a first step. According to the Government, round table consultations on the recommendations were held both with experts and with trade unions. The Government indicates that details will be provided after the finalization of its consideration of the recommendations. The Committee trusts that this work will be finalized without further delay and that the Government will provide information thereon in its next report.

The Committee had also requested the Government to review section 3 of the Trade Union Act, 2016 with the social partners to ensure that the requirement of support by 40 per cent of all workers for strike ballot did not apply to the education and transport sectors. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Act, including the ballot thresholds, will be reviewed with the social partners in the future. The TUC indicates that the imposition of the ballot threshold of 40 per cent to the two above-mentioned sectors imposes a requirement of 80 per cent voting support if only 50 per cent of the members vote and poses a significant barrier to union members exercising their right to strike. The Committee urges the Government to review section 3 of the Trade Union Act with the social partners without further delay in order to ensure that the support of 40 per cent of all workers is not required for a strike ballot in the education and transport services.

In its previous comment, the Committee had requested the Government to provide information on the practice of notifying the police of the identity of activists; the details of any complaints regarding the handling of this information or its impact on lawful industrial action; and information on the blacklisting of individuals engaged in lawful picketing. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Trade Union Act, including provisions on picketing requirements, will be reviewed in the future, and the Government will take into consideration the comments of the Committee. The Government indicates that it does not have any information on the blacklisting of individuals engaged in lawful picketing but adds that claims against blacklisting could be pursued before the Employment Tribunal within three months of the commission of the offence, or longer at the discretion of the Tribunal. The Government adds that the usage of personal data is protected by the Data Protection Act, 2018, with breaches of the Act being investigated by the Information Commissioners Office. The Committee takes note of the TUC allegation that additional restrictions are being planned. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the application of this notification in practice, including any complaints made in relation to the handling of this information or its impact on lawful industrial action, and any information on the blacklisting of individuals engaged in lawful picketing. It also requests the Government to provide information on the additional restrictions planned, if any.

The Committee had further requested the Government to review the impact of sections 16–20 of the Trade Union Act with the social partners to ensure that the expansion of the role of the Certification officer does not interfere with the rights of workers' and employers' organizations under Article 3 of the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Certification officer reforms were implemented in April 2022, after engaging with the social partners in June and July 2021, in addition to the 2017 consultations on the levy. The Government indicates that no consultation was needed in relation to the proposed new investigatory powers since these were contained in the Trade Union Act. While noting the Government's indication that the new legislation would bring the powers of the Certification Officer in line with other regulators and provide confidence both to union members and the wider public, the Committee notes the TUC's indication that the changes would render trade unions vulnerable to interference by non-members including hostile employers or campaign groups, particularly during legitimate industrial disputes. The TUC adds that the consultation in 2017 was a general consultation inviting input from the general public and not a specific review with the social partners. The Committee notes the TUC's concerns that the changes obstruct and hinder trade unions in their core functions, since they grant the Certification Officer undue discretion in exercising the powers while the threshold for the exercise of the powers is extremely low and their scope is uncertain. The changes vest in the Certification Officer the power to act upon a third-party complaint, which, according to the TUC, could create a risk of interference in the functioning of trade unions; and to demand documents with sensitive information which are protected by data protection laws. The TUC further indicates that the changes allow unduly high financial penalties to be imposed for statutory breaches, and that there is no ceiling imposed on the newly introduced levy which requires unions to cover the majority of the costs of the Certification Officer. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments on the TUC observations, as well as detailed information on the reform implemented with regard to the Certification Officer's new investigatory powers, financial penalties that may be imposed, the amount of any penalties that have been imposed since April 2022, and the ceiling on the levy introduced.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Jersey

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Article 3 of the Convention. Right of workers' organizations to organize their activities and formulate their programmes. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to provide information on any developments concerning the review of the Employment Relations Law (ERL) and codes of practice, in particular, the provisions regulating the exercise of the right to strike (right to secondary action and social and economic protests – see section 20(3) of the ERL and Code 2; picketing – Code 2; compulsory arbitration – sections 22 and 24 of the ERL and Code 3; essential services – Code 2; and conditions for protected industrial action and the application by the courts of sections 3 and 20(2) of the ERL and Code 3). The Committee notes the Government's indication that the ERL continues to achieve its purpose in supporting a non-adversarial dispute resolution system having been developed following significant public consultation, and as demonstrated by Jersey's very good industrial relations record. The Government indicates that according to the Jersey Advisory and Conciliation Service (JACS), both workers' organizations and employers continue to find that the ERL and the codes of practice provide an effective framework in a format that is accessible and easily understood, the success of which had been demonstrated by parties actively pursuing early mediation to resolve matters and by the absence of industrial actions. The Government further recalls that following a political decision to focus on the preparation of new legislation to protect against discrimination all efforts were concentrated on this issue. This legislation is now in force and was further complemented in 2018. While the Government is satisfied with the progress made in this respect, it regrets that it has not been possible to undertake a review of the ERL during this period.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that a review of the ERL is expected to be undertaken when resources allow for it, subject to the position of the new Minister for Social Security, appointed in June 2018. The Government assures that this legislative review will take into account the Committee's comments. In these circumstances, the Committee reiterates its request and trusts that the Government will soon be able to report progress concerning the review of the ERL and its codes of practice.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98)

Article 1 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that pursuant to sections 77B and 77C of the Employment (Amendment No. 4) (Jersey) Law, 2009, while the Tribunal can issue an order of reinstatement in the post or a similar post, it does not have the power to compensate an employee for financial losses such as arrears of pay for the period between the dismissal and the order for reinstatement. The Committee had invited the Government to pursue dialogue with the social partners in order to ensure that in cases of anti-union dismissals, workers reinstated by order of the judicial authority would be granted full compensation for loss of pay. The Committee notes that the Government states once again that: (i) since the Employment Law came into force in 2005 there have been no Tribunal complaints of anti-union dismissal, therefore no orders for reinstatement resulting from anti-union dismissal have been issued; and (ii) the review of the award-making powers of the Employment and Discrimination Tribunal could be envisaged in the future. The Committee reiterates that in cases of reinstatement following an anti-union dismissal, remedies for loss of wages for the period that elapses between dismissal and the reinstatement, as well as compensation for the prejudice suffered, with a view to ensuring that all of these measures taken together constitute a sufficiently dissuasive sanction, as "adequate protection" under Article 1(1) of the Convention. The Committee recalls that sanctions against acts of anti-union discrimination must be to compensate fully, both in financial and in occupational terms, the prejudice suffered (see 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 193). The Committee therefore requests once again the Government to enter into dialogue with the social partners in order to ensure that in cases of anti-union dismissals, workers reinstated by order of a judicial decision may be granted full compensation for loss of pay. The Committee requests the Government to provide information of any developments in this regard.

Article 2. Adequate protection against acts of interference. In its previous comments, the Committee had noted that there were no specific provisions protecting against acts of interference in the Employment (Jersey) Law (EL) or the Employment Relation Law (ERL), but that it was the Minister's intention via the ERL to prohibit employers from "buying out" employees' rights in respect of union activities by inducing employees not to join a workers' organization, or to relinquish membership of such an organization. While noting the Government's indications on the focus given for now to the preparation of a new legislation to provide protection against several grounds of discrimination, the Committee notes with regret that there have been no further developments to date with respect to the protection against acts of interference. The Committee therefore requests once again the Government to take, after consulting the social partners, the necessary measures to introduce provisions prohibiting acts of interference by employers or their organizations in the establishment, functioning or administration of workers' organizations and vice versa as well as provisions ensuring rapid procedures and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions against such acts. The Committee requests the Government to provide information of any developments in this regard.

Article 4. Promotion of collective bargaining. Legislative matters. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to take the necessary action to amend Code of practice 1 with respect to the recognition of trade unions in order to guarantee the right to collective bargaining when no union represents the majority of employees in a bargaining unit. The Committee notes with regret the Government's indication that, to date, there have been no further developments in this respect. Recalling that the determination of the threshold of representativeness to designate an exclusive agent for the purpose of negotiating collective agreements applicable to all workers in a sector or establishment is compatible with the Convention in so far as the required conditions do not constitute an obstacle to the promotion of free and voluntary collective bargaining in practice, the Committee requests the Government to take, after consulting the social partners, the necessary measures to ensure that if no union reaches the required threshold to be recognized as a bargaining agent, unions should be given the possibility to negotiate, jointly or separately, at least on behalf of their own members. The Committee requests the Government to provide information of any developments in this regard.

Promotion of collective bargaining in practice. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of collective agreements concluded and in force in the country, the sectors concerned and the number of workers covered by these agreements.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

St. Helena

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98)

Previous comment

Article 4 of the Convention. Legislative measures to promote collective bargaining in the private sector. The Committee in its previous comment observed that the Employment Rights Ordinance does not contain specific provisions regulating collective bargaining and requested the Government to adopt legislative measures to promote collective bargaining in the private sector. The Committee observes that though the Government takes note of this, it does not provide information in this regard. The Committee therefore requests the Government once again to take concrete measures to promote collective bargaining in the private sector in accordance with Article 4 of the Convention and to provide information in this respect.

Articles 4 and 6. Collective bargaining in the public sector. The Committee in its previous comment noted the indication of the Government that the right to collective bargaining of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State was recognized through the establishment of the Employee Representative Committee (ERC). It requested the Government to provide information on the ongoing processes and related outcomes in this regard. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the St Helena Public Service (SHPS) Leadership Team meets the St Helena Public Service Employment Rights Committee (SHPSERC) every quarter to discuss issues related to the Terms and Conditions of public servants in a 'Partnership Forum'(PF) and that the SHPSERC successfully negotiated improvements to the Compassionate Leave and Redundancy policies. The Government adds that negotiations are ongoing to improve other policies relating to the terms and conditions of public service employees, including the review of the disciplinary, grievance, capability, and probation policies. The Committee observes that PF Guidelines indicate that the Government has agreed with the SHPERC on the key areas in which it will negotiate, including terms and conditions of employment relating to all employees within grades A to H. The Committee welcomes this information and requests the Government to continue providing details about the processes and outcomes of collective bargaining in the public sector.

Promotion of collective bargaining in practice. The Committee encourages the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken, in accordance with Article 4 of the Convention, to promote collective bargaining in different sectors of the economy. The Committee also requests the Government to provide statistics on the number of collective agreements concluded and in force, the sectors concerned, and the number of workers covered by these agreements.

United Republic of Tanzania

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 2000)

Previous comment

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. Right of workers and employers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish organizations without previous authorization. Right of organizations to organize their activities and to formulate their programmes freely. In its previous comment, the Committee trusted that the Government would bring its legislation into conformity with the Convention and in this respect referred to the following issues:

- the need to amend section 2(1)(iii) of the Employment and Labour Relations Act (No. 6 of 2004) (ELRA) so as to ensure that prison guards enjoy the right to establish and join organizations of their own choosing;
- the need to amend section 2(1)(iv) of the ELRA so as to clearly indicate that only the military members of the national service are excluded from the scope of the Act;
- the need to amend section 76(3)(a) which prohibits picketing in support of a strike or in opposition to a lawful lockout;
- the need to amend section 26(2) of the Public Service (Negotiating Machinery) Act (No. 19 of 2003) to align it with the relevant provisions of the ELRA which also applies to workers in the public service; and
- the need to ensure that any service designated as essential by the Essential Services Committee pursuant to section 77 of the ELRA is based on the strict definition of the term.

The Committee notes the Government's general indication that efforts will be made in consultation with social partners and the technical support of the ILO to study the best possible way to take into consideration the comments of the Committee. Regarding the right of prison guards to establish and join organizations, the Committee notes the Government's indication that following the recent legislative amendments, prison guards are recognized as military officials and are regulated by their own legislation. The Committee considers that the functions exercised by this category of public servants do not justify their exclusion from the rights and guarantees set out in the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the right of prison guards to establish and join organizations along with copies of the above-mentioned amendments. The Committee further expects that the Government will provide full details on measures taken in consultation with the social partners to bring the legislation into conformity with the Convention on the above-mentioned issues.

Regarding the practical application of sections 4 and 85 of the ELRA, which prohibit protest action in case of a dispute in respect of which a legal remedy exists, the Committee notes the Government's indication that there is neither restriction nor interference, and that the object of the procedures is to ensure the prevention of harm to the public under article 30 of the Constitution. The Committee considers that while the solution to legal conflicts arising as a result of a difference in the interpretation of a legal text should be left to the competent courts, it expresses concern that prohibiting all protest actions in respect of disputes for which a legal remedy exists may unduly interfere with the exercise of trade union rights. The Committee requests once again that the Government provide information on the application of the above-mentioned provisions in practice.

Zanzibar

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. The Committee had previously noted that section 2(2) of the Labour Relations Act (No.1 of 2005) (LRA) excluded from its scope judges and all judiciary members; members of special departments; and employees of the House of Representatives and requested the Government to provide relevant pieces of legislation that grant the above-mentioned categories of workers the right to organize. The Committee notes the following pieces of legislation provided by the Government: The Special Departments Service Commission Act, No.6/2007; the Jeshi la Kujenga Uchumi Act, No.6/2003; and the Kikosi Maalum cha Kuzuia Magendo Act, No.1/2003. The Committee observes that the three Acts apply to the members and judges of special departments and to forces that protect the territories of the State, and none of the acts refer to the right to organize. The Committee therefore requests once again that the Government ensures that the above-mentioned categories of workers are granted the right to organize and to provide the relevant pieces of legislation in this regard.

The Committee had previously requested the Government to amend the following provisions of the LRA:

- section 42, so that trade unions have the power to manage their funds without undue restrictions from the legislation;
- section 42(2)(j), to ensure that trade unions do not require the approval of the Registrar on the institution which they may choose to contribute to; and
- section 64(1) and (2), so that the prohibition of the right to strike only extends to public servants exercising authority in the name of the state or to essential services in the strict sense of the term.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that all labour laws are undergoing review. The Committee further takes note of the Government's request for technical and financial support from the Office. The Committee expects the Government to take the necessary measures in the near future to amend the above-mentioned provisions, in consultation with the social partners and with the technical assistance of the ILO. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all developments in this regard.

The Committee had previously requested the Government to indicate whether the time frame for advance notices was the same for strikes and protest actions. The Committee recalls that in its previous comments it considered that the period of advance notice should not be an additional obstacle to bargaining, with workers in practice waiting for its expiry in order to be able to exercise their right to strike. The Committee notes the Government's indication that while the advance notice period for strikes is different from the one for protest action, efforts will be made in consultation with stakeholders to take into account the issues raised by the Committee in this regard. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all developments in this regard.

United Republic of Tanzania

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1962)

Previous comment

Scope of the Convention. The Committee, in its previous comments, requested the Government to include members of the prison service and exclude only members of the military service from the scope the Employment and Labour Relations Act (No. 6 of 2004) (ELRA), by amending sections 2(1)(ii) and 2(1)(iv) respectively. The Committee notes the Government's indication that prison guards have been recognized as military officials following an amendment in the law, and they are regulated by their own legislation. The Committee recalls that civilian personnel in the armed forces enjoy the rights and guarantees set out in the Convention. The Committee considers that the functions exercised by this category of workers do not justify their exclusion from the rights and guarantees set out in the Convention, and it trusts that the Government will take the necessary legislative measures, in consultation with social partners, to bring national legislation in conformity with the Convention.

Article 4 of the Convention. Compulsory arbitration. The Committee notes with regret that the Government does not provide information on the measures taken to ensure that compulsory arbitration in the framework of collective bargaining is acceptable only in relation to public servants engaged in the administration of the state, essential services in the strict sense of the term, and acute national crisis. It reiterates its previous request for information on the progress made in this regard, particularly by amending sections 17 and 18 of the Public Service (Negotiating Machinery) Act.

Collective bargaining in practice. The Committee previously requested the Government to provide information and statistics on the collective agreements signed and in force in the country. The Committee notes the Government's indication that between July 2021 and June 2022, 32 collective agreements were lodged between the Tanzania Union of Industrial and Commercial Workers (TUICO) and various companies in diverse sectors (industrial and commerce (16), transportation (1), beverages (2), education (1), commercial (6), agriculture (3), health (1), mining (1) and textiles (1)). The Government adds that there are 3 collective agreements in Tanzania-Zanzibar, covering 398 workers in two sectors. The Committee requests the Government to: (i) continue providing information in this respect, including statistics on the total number of collective agreements in force in the country, the sectors concerned, and the number of workers covered; and (ii) provide information on the measures taken to promote collective bargaining in the different sectors of the economy.

Zanzibar

Article 4 of the Convention. Legislation on collective bargaining. In its previous comment, the Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to: (i) amend section 57 of the Labour Relations Act, 2005 (LRA) to remove any ambiguity concerning the meaning of the term "majority" and to clarify that the most representative trade union, even when it does not represent more than 50 per cent of the workers, has the exclusive right to bargain with the employer; and (ii) amend section 54(2)(b) of the LRA to guarantee managerial employees their rights under the Convention, and to indicate the categories of employees excluded under section 54(2)(c). The Committee notes the Government's indication that the relevant provisions in the labour laws would be amended, post consultation with social partners and that it has requested the technical assistance of the Office to review and amend all labour laws. The Committee takes due note of this request for technical assistance and trusts that the Government will take the necessary steps to ensure the full compliance of the legislation with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on progress made in this regard.

Uruguay

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1954)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the Government's reply to the joint observations of the International Employers' Organisation, the National Chamber of Commerce and Services of Uruguay and the Chamber of Industries of Uruguay of 2018. The Committee also notes the observations of the Inter-Union Assembly of Workers – Workers' National Convention received on 21 August 2022 mentioning two incidents in which the police used violence against protesters. The Committee notes the Government's indication, in its reply, that protests were allowed within the boundaries of the law, that the police acted to clear the entrance to the port and bus terminal of Montevideo, which were blocked by protesters, that the workers who were detained were released immediately and that the Ministry of the Interior acknowledged that one police officer had acted excessively. The Committee requests the Government to ensure that the intervention of the police in trade union demonstrations is in due proportion to the danger to public order that the authorities are attempting to control.

Article 3 of the Convention. Workplace occupation and the right of management of the enterprise to enter the workplace in the context of a labour dispute. Recalling that the exercise of the right to strike and the occupation of the premises should respect the right to work of non-strikers, and the right of company management to enter its premises, both the Committee and the Committee on Freedom of Association (Case No. 2699) requested the Government to place a bill regulating workplace occupation before Parliament in full conformity with the Convention and to report on tangible developments in this regard. The Committee notes with interest the Government's indication that on 9 July 2020, the Urgent Consideration Law No. 19.889 was promulgated, section 392 of which provides that "the State guarantees the peaceful exercise of the right to strike, the right of non-strikers to access and work in the establishments concerned and the right of the management to enter the premises freely."

Bill on Legal Personality. The Committee notes that, in its report on the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98), the Government indicates that following discussions in a special tripartite committee, it drafted a Bill on the Legal Personality of Industrial Associations, which it introduced to Parliament on 2 August 2021 and which is currently under consideration in the Senate. The Committee refers to the aforementioned Bill in its comment concerning Convention No. 98.

Previous comment

The Committee notes the joint observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), the Chamber of Commerce and Services of Uruguay (CNCS) and the Chamber of Industries of Uruguay (CIU) received on 31 August 2021 and 31 August 2022 dealing with matters addressed by the Committee in this comment and also notes the Government's reply in this respect. The Committee observes that the IOE, CNCS and CIU indicate that in July 2022, the Government introduced a preliminary Bill on Social Security Reform that would allow the establishment of voluntary contributions to the social security system through collective bargaining and observe that such a measure could be approved by the wage councils, which are tripartite bodies. The Committee notes the Government's indication in this regard that the preliminary Bill allows for the possibility of making voluntary social security contributions only through bipartite collective bargaining, without in any way promoting the involvement of the wage councils in the matter.

The Committee also notes the observations of the Inter-Union Assembly of Workers – Workers' National Convention (PIT-CNT) received on 31 August 2022 relating to issues addressed by the Committee in this comment and reporting acts of anti-union discrimination, including the suspension for a period of 14 days of a shop steward for alleged statements in the press which, in the view of the enterprise, damaged its image. The Committee notes the Government's reply to the observations of the PIT-CNT. Observing that, in its reply, the Government does not refer to the alleged suspension of the shop steward, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the outcome of any complaints filed in this respect.

Article 4 of the Convention. Promotion of free and voluntary collective bargaining. For a number of years, the Committee, together with the Committee on Freedom of Association (Case No. 2699) and the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards, has been requesting the Government to revise Act No. 18566 of 2009 (establishing the fundamental rights and principles of the collective bargaining system, hereinafter Act No. 18566) with a view to ensuring the full compliance of the Act with the principles of collective bargaining and the Conventions ratified by Uruguay in this area. In 2015, 2016 and 2017, the Government submitted several proposals for legislative amendments to the social partners without reaching agreement, and in 2019 it introduced a bill to Parliament which partially addressed the Committee's comments and ended up being archived in 2020. The Committee recalls that, while the IOE, CNCS and CIU considered the proposed amendments contained in the Bill to be insufficient, the PIT-CNT was of the understanding that Act No. 18566 did not merit amendment. The Committee recalls that the 2019 Bill proposed to:

- include a final sentence in section 4 of Act No. 18566, requiring trade unions to have legal personality so that they can receive information from companies within the framework of the collective bargaining process, with a view to facilitating the possibility of bringing proceedings for liability in the event of a violation of the duty of confidentiality;
- remove section 10(d) of the Act establishing the competence of the Tripartite Higher Council to define the level of bipartite or tripartite negotiations;
- remove the final part of section 14 of the Act which, in the absence of a trade union represented in the company, confers bargaining power on higher-level trade unions;
- amend section 17(2) of the Act so that, for each agreement, the issue of continuing effect is subject to negotiation; and
- clarify that the decisions of wage councils and collective agreements do not require the authorization, approval or adoption of the executive authorities in order to be recorded and published.

In its latest comments, the Committee noted that these proposed amendments were consistent with the obligation under Article 4 of the Convention to promote free and voluntary collective bargaining and noted with regret that, despite its reiterated comments, the Bill did not propose amendments or clarifications regarding the competence of the wage councils, which are tripartite bodies, in relation to adjustments made to wages that are above the minimum for the occupational category and working conditions (section 12 of Act No. 18566). The Committee recalled that although the establishment of minimum wages may be subject to decisions by tripartite bodies, Article 4 of the Convention seeks to promote bipartite negotiation for the setting of working conditions, whereby all collective agreements establishing conditions of employment shall result from an agreement between employers or employers' organizations and workers' organizations. The Committee recalled that mechanisms can be established that would guarantee both the free and voluntary nature of collective bargaining and the effective promotion thereof, while ensuring that the country's existing collective agreements continue to offer a high level of coverage.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) on 27 October 2020 during a meeting of the Higher Tripartite Council, the executive authorities raised the need to work on the comments of the ILO supervisory bodies in relation to Act No. 18566 and suggested that a special tripartite committee could be set up to assess and consider a new draft amendment to the Act, which was unanimously approved; (ii) between May 2021 and February 2022, various meetings of the special tripartite committee were held and on 3 May 2022, the Government submitted a bill to Parliament, based on the Bill introduced to Parliament in 2019 by the previous Government, which is currently under consideration by the Labour Legislation Commission of the Chamber of Representatives; and (iii) between June and August 2022, representatives of the Ministry of Labour and Social Security and workers' and employers' delegations attended the Labour Legislation Commission to provide their opinion with regard to Bill. The Government indicates that it will continue to work in tripartite bodies to bring about reform of collective bargaining in wage councils that takes into account the comment on section 12 of Act No.18566 and that, in the meantime, practicable measures are under consideration to ensure that the work of all delegates assigned to the wage councils results in agreements or decisions that expressly enable bipartite negotiation in situations where that is justified.

The Committee notes that, in their observations, the IOE, CNCS and the CIU indicate that although the Bill submitted to Parliament on 3 May 2022 contains a number of developments and while they value the legislative initiative, the Bill does not include an important aspect for employers which concerns the government intervention in the negotiation of issues that relate exclusively to the scope of bipartite negotiation. These organizations indicate that they have proposed adjustments to the text and observe that the current text could be substantially modified during the parliamentary debates. The Committee notes that, according to public statements issued by the PIT-CNT and reflected in documents provided by the Government, the PIT-CNT flatly rejects the Bill as a retrograde step for workers' rights that undermines collective bargaining.

The Committee takes due note of the establishment in 2020 of the special tripartite committee to address the comments of the ILO supervisory bodies in relation to Act No. 18566 and of the tripartite dialogue that has taken place within it. The Committee notes that the Bill which the Government submitted to Parliament on 3 May 2022 proposes the same amendments as the Bill introduced to Parliament in 2019. The Committee notes with regret that this Bill does not address an essential element that it has been highlighting for years concerning the amendment of section 12 of the law to ensure the bipartite nature of collective bargaining. Trusting that the partial progress contained in the Bill submitted to Parliament on 3 May 2022 will be incorporated in the current legislation as soon as possible, the Committee strongly encourages the Government to continue working in tripartite bodies and to take the necessary further measures to amend section 12 of Act No. 18566 such that, in accordance with the Convention, the law fully guarantees both the free and voluntary nature of collective bargaining and the continued effective promotion thereof, thereby ensuring that the country's existing collective agreements continue to offer a high level of coverage. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this regard and recalls that it may continue to rely on the technical assistance of the Office.

Bill on Legal Personality. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, following discussions in the special tripartite committee, the Government drafted a Bill on the Legal Personality of Industrial Associations, which it introduced to Parliament on 3 August 2021 and which is currently under consideration in the Senate. The Government indicates that the Bill relates to the proposal to amend section 4 of Act No. 18566 and that employers have expressed the view that, while the legal personality requirement is a desirable amendment, the procedure for obtaining legal personality should be swift and simple. The Committee notes that the Bill provides for the establishment of a register in the Ministry of Labour, that registration, which is optional, would result in the recognition of legal personality and that only trade unions with legal personality could receive information from enterprises in the framework of the collective bargaining process.

The Committee notes the indication of the IOE, CNCS and CIU that while they believed that this could constitute a step forward, they did not consider it necessary to establish a special regime such as the one proposed, since the country already has specific legislation whereby not-for-profit organizations can obtain legal personality, to which no objections have been raised. The Committee notes that the PIT-CNT has expressed the view, in public statements, that the fact that the unions are required to have legal personality in order to access the information necessary for the development of sound bargaining in good faith goes beyond what the ILO supervisory bodies have proposed. The Committee notes that the Bill provides that the information contained in the register shall be publicly accessible and recalls in this respect that the confidentiality of the processing of data on trade union membership in context of the registration procedure must be guaranteed, not only because such data relate to the private life of workers, but also because their disclosure could potentially expose workers to reprisals.

The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that the concerns of workers' and employers' organizations in relation to the Bill are duly addressed in the tripartite social dialogue and the parliamentary discussion. It also requests the Government to ensure that whatever system of legal personality is required of organizations, it does not have the effect of hindering their activities and, consequently, collective bargaining. The Committee further requests the Government to take the necessary steps, in consultation with the social partners, to review the Bill in order to ensure the confidentiality of data relating to trade union membership and expects that if the Bill as submitted to Parliament is adopted, it will be implemented in such a manner as to contribute to maintaining the effective promotion of collective bargaining. The Committee requests the Government to keep it informed of any developments in this respect.

Uzbekistan

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1992)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observation of the Federation of Trade Unions of Uzbekistan (FPU), received on 27 September 2022, referring to the issues examined below. The Committee further notes that the International Union of Food, Agricultural, Hotel, Restaurant, Catering, Tobacco and Allied Workers' Associations (IUF), in its observations on the application of Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) received on 31 August 2022, also refers to matters addressed in the present comment and alleges acts of anti-union interference and discrimination, including dismissals, in the agricultural sector. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments thereon.

Legislative developments. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that the Labour Code has been amended on 28 October 2022, and that the revision will come into force in April 2023. The Committee will examine its conformity with the Convention once a translation is available.

Trade union monopoly. In its previous comments, the Committee expected that the Government would provide information on the measures taken to address the IUF's 2016 allegations that the Government represses independent trade union organizing, controls the FPU and retaliates against activists for monitoring labour relations and practices. The Committee notes that the Government reports that the Law on Trade Unions (LTU), which entered into force on 8 March 2020, provides in section 12 that state bodies and their officials are prohibited from interfering in the activities of trade unions and their associations. It notes, however, that the 2022 observations of the IUF contain similar allegations to those of 2016 concerning repression of independent trade union organizing, control of the FPU and retaliation against activists. The Committee also observes that the Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights of the United Nations, in its concluding observations of 31 March 2022 concerning the application of the UN Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, expressed its concern that trade unions are required to obtain approval from the Ministry of Justice for registration, and recommended the elimination of this requirement and the removal of administrative obstacles to the formation of trade unions. Recalling that the imposition of a trade union monopoly is inconsistent with the principle of free and voluntary collective bargaining, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures, including legislative, to guarantee the possibility of trade union pluralism, and to provide information on any developments in this regard. Moreover, recalling the responsibility of the Government to ensure that the rights provided for in the Convention are respected both in law and in practice, the Committee requests it to indicate the machinery and sanctions applicable in the event of acts of interference by state bodies or officials, and to provide information on the measures taken to ensure the implementation of section 12 of the LTU in practice.

Article 4 of the Convention. Promotion of collective bargaining. The Committee had previously requested the Government to amend sections 21(1), 23(1), 31, 35, 36, 48, 49 and 59 of the Labour Code to ensure that only in the absence of trade unions at the enterprise, the branch or the territory, can the authorization to bargain collectively be conferred on representatives elected by workers. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the revised Labour Code, which was drafted in cooperation with the ILO, provides in section 37 that in the absence of trade unions at the appropriate levels of the social partnership, employees shall have the right to establish other associations to represent and protect their interests. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the type of other associations the revised Labour Code refers to and on the application in practice of the above-mentioned provision.

Collective labour disputes. In its previous comments, the Committee had requested the Government to provide a copy of the recommendations on the organization of activities of commissions on labour disputes which had been adopted in 2015. The Committee notes that the attachment containing the recommendations which is mentioned in the Government's report has not been provided. It also notes that the Government indicates that the revised Labour Code contains a chapter which guarantees the right to collective bargaining. The Committee reiterates its request that the Government provide a copy of the recommendations on the organization of activities of commissions on labour disputes of 2015 and hopes that the revised Labour Code will give full application to the principle of free and voluntary collective bargaining enshrined in article 4 of the Convention.

Collective bargaining in practice. The Committee notes the statistical information provided by the Government, according to which 111,789 legal entities employing 4,547,381 workers concluded collective agreements in 2021. It further notes that the data submitted shows a decrease in the number of collective agreements concluded between 2018 and 2021. The Government explains that this decline is due to structural transformations accompanied by a change in the number of legal entities. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that 105 sectoral agreements were concluded by branch trade unions in 2021, including 66 in the state institutions and public services, energy, oil and gas, and agro-industrial sectors. The Committee requests the Government to report on the measures taken or envisaged to promote collective bargaining, and to continue to provide updated information on the number of collective agreements concluded and in force in the country, as well as the sectors concerned and the number of workers covered by these agreements.

Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1982)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Federation of Chambers and Associations of Commerce and Production of Venezuela (FEDECAMARAS), received on 11 February 2022, and those communicated by the Government in its report. It also notes the observations of the Bolivarian Socialist Confederation of Urban, Rural and Fishery Workers of Venezuela (CBST-CCP), received on 22 April 2022, and those communicated by the Government. The Committee notes the observations of the Independent Trade Union Alliance Confederation of Workers (CTASI), the Confederation of Workers of Venezuela (CTV) and the Federation of University Teachers' Associations of Venezuela (FAPUV), communicated by the Government. The above observations refer to issues examined in this comment. The Committee also notes the observations of National Union of Workers of Venezuela (UNETE), received on 5 September 2022. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in response to the observations of UNETE.

Follow-up to the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry (complaint made under article 26 of the Constitution of the ILO)

The Committee notes the discussions which took place during the 344th, 345th and 346th Sessions of the Governing Body (March, June and October-November 2022) on developments relating to the social dialogue forum (the Forum) to give effect to the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry regarding the Government of the Republic of Venezuela, as well as the decisions adopted by the Governing Body. The Committee notes that, at its 347th Session (March 2023), the Governing Body will once again consider the progress achieved by the Government to ensure compliance with the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry and will proceed with its examination of possible measures to meet this objective.

The Committee notes with interest the information provided by the Government to the Governing Body on the Forum to give effect to the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry, in particular that: (i) on 7 March 2022, the inaugural session of the Forum took place virtually, chaired by the Ministry of People's Power for the Social Process of Labour (MPPPST), with the participation of other officials of the Ministry, and the following employers' and workers' organizations: FEDECAMARAS, CBST-CCP, the Venezuelan Federation of Small, Medium and Artisanal Industries (FEDEINDUSTRIA), CTASI, CTV, UNETE, the General Confederation of Labour (CGT) and the Confederation of Autonomous Trade Unions (CODESA); ILO technical assistance was provided during the session to adopt terms of reference for the Forum, including pending issues to be addressed relating to the Minimum Wage-Fixing Machinery Convention, 1928 (No. 26), Convention No. 87, and the Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144); (ii) between 25 and 28 April 2022, the first in-person meeting of the Forum was held, with the technical assistance of the Office, which resulted in the adoption of an action plan consisting of a schedule of activities relating to the application of the above Conventions; (iii) in the follow-up to the Forum, bilateral meetings were held with the social partners from 11 to 21 July 2022; (iv) from 26 to 29 September 2022, another session of the Forum was held, with the technical assistance of the Office, at which the activities carried out were assessed as part of the implementation of the action plan adopted in April, and it was agreed to update the plan; and (v) it is hoped that there will be another session of the Forum in February 2023.

Civil liberties and trade union rights. Climate free from violence, threats, persecution, stigmatization, intimidation or any other form of aggression, in which the social partners are able to exercise their legitimate activities, including participation in social dialogue with full guarantees. In its previous comment, the Committee reiterated the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry and firmly urged the Government, in dialogue with the organizations concerned through the relevant bipartite or tripartite round tables, to take the necessary measures quickly to ensure implementation of the recommendations in question. The Committee firmly urged the Government to investigate and take appropriate action with respect to the pending allegations of violations of the Convention regarding civil liberties and trade union rights - contained in the Commission of Inquiry's report or subsequently brought before this Committee - in order to ensure a climate free of violence, threats, persecution, stigmatization, intimidation or any other form of aggression in which the social partners can exercise their legitimate activities, including participation in social dialogue with full guarantees. Lastly, the Committee requested the Government to provide detailed information on the follow-up action taken.

With regard to the situation of the trade unionist, Rodney Álvarez, the Committee recalls that it noted with deep concern the serious additional allegations of violation of due process in this case, and urged the Government to implement immediately the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry in this regard. The Committee notes the Government's indication that on 1 June 2022, the 11th Court of First Instance of the criminal judicial circuit of the Caracas metropolitan area issued the final ruling ordering full freedom of Mr Álvarez, upon request of the Office of the Attorney-General (Attorney-General). The Government also reiterates that Mr Álvarez was sentenced for the common crime of homicide and not for the exercise of trade union activities. The Committee notes, from the information sent from the Government to the Governing Body (GB.346/INS/12(Rev.1)), that Mr Álvarez requested to be reinstated in his job and to receive the payment of lost wages and other benefits that he stopped receiving from the time when he was taken into detention. In that connection, in Administrative Ruling No. 001 of 17 October 2022 the Labour Inspectorate of Puerto Ordaz ordered the workplace to pay all sums relating to Mr Álvarez's labour rights. It also dismissed the request to reinstate Mr Álvarez in his job, on the grounds that the case had lapsed, as the time limit established in section 34(c) of the Regulations under the Basic Labour and Workers Act (LOTTT regulations) had expired. The Committee notes the observations of several social partners (CTV, CTASI and FAPUV) indicating that Mr Álvarez has not been reinstated in his job and that after 11 years of imprisonment and the declaration of his innocence, he has not received reparation for the damages caused by his imprisonment. The Committee notes that the Constitution of the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela sets forth that any person may request the State to restore or remedy the legal situation endured by judicial error, unjustified omission or delay (article 49(6)). While noting the resolution of the criminal case, the Committee recalls the right to appropriate sanction and reparation for the violations to civil liberties, and hence requests the Government to take all the necessary measures to ensure fair reparation for the damages caused to Mr Álvarez, including the corresponding financial compensation, taking into account the injuries suffered, and in accordance with the Constitution.

The Committee notes the Government's general indication that the allegations and observations submitted by the social partners have been addressed, assessed and referred to the public authorities concerned, in the framework of the cooperation between them. The Government denies that there is a policy of violence, threats, persecution, stigmatization and intimidation or any other form of aggression against workers' and employers' organizations (and their members) and that this has been discussed in various dialogue forums between the MPPPST and the social partners, which are part of the Government's renewed policy of national dialogue in accordance with the Convention and where all social partners without exclusion are granted guarantees. In addition, the Committee notes the Government's indication to the Governing Body that on 23 August 2022, at a meeting of the National Council for Productive Economy (CNEP), led by the President of the Republic, the associations and chambers of the productive sectors headed by the presidents of FEDECAMARAS and FEDEINDUSTRIA were incorporated into the above Council.

The Committee notes that the action plan adopted at the Forum, and its update, includes the following expected outcomes, as follow-up to the decisions of the Governing Body and the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry:

- (i) the processing of the allegations of stigmatization and discrediting, including the submission to the relevant authorities by the organizations concerned of updated lists containing information identifying cases containing allegations associated with the Government, and the holding of bipartite meetings between the Government and the workers' and employers' organizations to consider and adopt relevant measures, as well as the follow-up to those measures; and
- (ii) the effective handling of allegations of arrests and judicial proceedings or preventive measures substituting deprivation of liberty, allegedly related to the exercise of legitimate trade union activities, including the submission of updated lists (containing information identifying cases) of allegations previously verified by each sector concerned, their respective referral to the Attorney-General or other authorities concerned, and the holding of bipartite meetings to adopt the relevant measures.

With regard to the allegations concerning land by FEDECAMARAS, the Committee recalls that it noted various measures mentioned by the Government, including the establishment of round tables for meetings at the National Land Institute (INTI) to seek solutions to the cases raised by the National Federation of Stockbreeders of Venezuela (FEDENAGA), and the setting up of a technical committee to discuss matters of interest to FEDENAGA and INTI, as well as the establishment of a list to prioritize cases in this regard also indicated by FEDECAMARAS. The Committee notes the Government's indication regarding the setting up of cooperation with the Ministry of People's Power for Agriculture and Lands and the INTI to address the cases brought to light by FEDECAMARAS. The Committee notes the observations of FEDECAMARAS regarding the list of estates prioritized for land recovery measures by INTI, indicating that meetings have been held with INTI but that nothing has been effectively returned to the legitimate owners, with the exception of progress made by INTI in the process to relocate the "invaders" of two of the estates reported in the above list (Estate 75 and Agropecuaria Boralito, S.A.).

The Committee welcomes the Government's indication regarding the planned establishment of two national Offices of the Attorney-General with specialized competence in the defence of labour rights. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this respect.

The Government concludes by reiterating that, contrary to the alleged policy of violence, threats, persecution or other forms of aggression against the social partners, efforts are being made to continue to strengthen spaces for dialogue.

The Committee notes that the CBST-CCP highlights the establishment of dialogue forums between the Government and the social partners, including the Forum and bilateral meetings. The CBST-CCP rejects the observations of the social partners that allege that the State is fomenting a policy of violence, persecution and aggression, and asserts that in reality it has been the guarantor of free trade union activity for all organizations without distinction.

The Committee notes the observations received from the other social partners alleging that the outcome of the dialogue bodies does not make it possible to overcome the previously reported difficulties and delays in the implementation of the action plan to comply with this set of recommendations, as well as additional violations of the Convention, which are listed as follows:

- (i) FEDECAMARAS states that in April 2022, accusations were made against the former president of FEDECAMARAS in a programme broadcast on the State television channel and that as a follow-up, and in line with the action plan, this information was sent to the MPPPST, presenting this complaint to be dealt with in bipartite meetings. It indicates that, on 12 August 2022, a trade union leader was arrested in Bolívar State, the second senior director of the Trade and Industry Chamber of the General Manuel Cedeño Municipality of Bolívar State, and that he was charged for allegedly committing crimes related to the sale of gas. Furthermore, FEDECAMARAS reports that on 29 and 30 August 2022, the deputy of the National Assembly for the State of Yaracuy, Braulio Alvarez, disseminated hateful and intimidating messages against the President of FEDECAMARAS, Carlos Fernández, and of FEDENAGA, Armando Chacín, and other trade union leaders, in the context of the process of returning "invaded" lands. FEDECAMARAS nevertheless recognizes some improvements in the relationship with the Government, emphasizing that meetings were held with respect and cordiality (for example, on 19 July 2022 with the Minister of the MPPPST, on the action plan and other issues, and on 28 July 2022 regarding land cases) and its participation in the CNEP in August 2022. FEDECAMARAS reiterates the need for a formalized and permanent body to seek solutions to the issues related to the complaint and under the coordination of the MPPPST, in coordination with the other public authorities, to identify quick and effective solutions, given that the meetings held do not meet the required formalities, as recalled by this Committee. FEDECAMARAS confirms, with regard to one of the cases of the Commission of Inquiry, that on 24 August 2022, notification was given of the judgment of dismissal of the case against Mr Garmendia (former president of CONINDUSTRIA) and the lifting of the measure prohibiting disposal and encumbrance of the assets owned by this leader. Lastly, the organization reiterates its concern that, to date, the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry have not been accepted by the Government.

- (ii) CTV, CTASI and FAPUV indicate that the outcome of the dialogue bodies does not make it possible to overcome the serious violations of human, labour and trade union rights, and significant delays in the implementation of the action plan. The trade union organizations, while acknowledging the sporadic release of some detainees, once again denounce many arbitrary arrests of trade unionists and trade union leaders, some in connection with the exercise of the right to peaceful protest and freedom of expression. They denounce the criminalization and prosecution of activities in defence of labour rights and human rights. They also denounce the arrest and imprisonment by the General Directorate of Military Counterintelligence (CDGCIM), the Bolivarian National Intelligence Service (SEBIN) and the Bolivarian National Police (PNB), without arrest warrants, of the following trade union leaders between July and August 2022: Emilio Negrín, president of the National Federation of Court Workers; Alcides Bracho, trade union leader of Venezuelan teachers; Gabriel Blanco, CTASI; Reynaldo Cortés, CTV trade union leader; and Douglas González, trade union leader of an aluminium enterprise. In addition, they reiterate their previous observations with respect to the detentions of other trade union leaders and trade unionists. The trade union organizations report acts of intimidation and aggression against trade union leaders, pointing in particular to the case of Pablo Zambrano, executive secretary of the Federation of Health Workers (FETRASALUD), who was interrogated by the Forensic, Penal and Criminal Investigation Unit (CICPC) and who had received threats from various groups when he attempted to submit a complaint to the Attorney-General.

The Committee notes with regret that the Government only provides the following information concerning the previous observations of the social partners: (i) the case of Eduardo Garmendia (which coincides with the indications of FEDECAMARAS in the present comment); and (ii) the case of Eudis Girot, which, as indicated by CTV, CTASI and FAPUV in their observations, concerns a leader of an oil trade union, detained by DGCIM on 18 November 2020 in Puerto La Cruz, accused of terrorism and other charges, and held in “Rodeo III” prison. In this regard, the trade union leader was acquitted of the offences of disclosure of confidential information (section 134 of the Criminal Code) and illegal possession of a firearm (section 111 of the Organic Act for Disarmament and Control of Arms and Ammunition), but was sentenced for the offence of incitement to hatred (section 235 of the Criminal Code) to three years’ imprisonment, and the preventive measure substituting imprisonment was maintained in this regard. In addition, the Government reports that the process is at the stage of reaching the time limits for the submission of appeals and that, if the sentence becomes final, the competent court will impose alternative measures for serving the sentence in accordance with the Organic Code of Criminal Procedure.

While welcoming the meetings and the various social dialogue sessions held (March, in virtual format, and April and September 2022, and in person with ILO technical assistance), and with the participation of the social partners, as well as the commitments made by the Government in the Governing Body to continue with the dialogue regarding the application of the Convention including the development of a schedule (with tripartite and bipartite activities to be carried out between the second fortnight of November 2022 and February 2023), the Committee notes with deep regret the absence of replies and specific information on the acts reported by the social partners in their current and previous observations, as well as the fact that in the dialogue forums (including various tripartite meetings) no tangible solutions have been found and the conditions for dialogue recommended by the Commission of Inquiry have not been respected (no minutes were taken, there was no agenda or schedule, and no independent secretariat and presidency were appointed). The Committee also deplores that various employers’ and workers’ organizations have raised new and serious allegations of violations of civil liberties and trade union rights. In this respect, the Committee notes with deep regret the information provided by the Government to the Governing Body regarding some of the new cases raised in the observations of the trade union organizations, and notes that during the Forum in September, as indicated in the report to the Governing Body, deprivation of liberty was confirmed and charges for the crimes of conspiracy and criminal association were handed down for: Emilio Negrín, President of the Federation of Court Workers and participant in the April 2022 Forum, Gabriel Blanco, director of the National Assembly Workers' Union and CTASI, and Reynaldo Cortés, a CTV representative. The Committee notes that such cases, as well as those of other trade union leaders and members, have also been examined in the communication addressed to the Government by the Special Rapporteur on the rights to freedom of peaceful assembly and of association and the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of human rights and fundamental freedoms while countering terrorism (document AL VEN 4/2022 of 13 September 2022).

In light of the foregoing, the Committee strongly urges the Government to take the necessary measures, in dialogue with the organizations concerned through formal mechanisms and respecting the recommendations made by the Commission of Inquiry, to ensure the implementation of such recommendations and the agreements adopted in the Forum. In this regard, the Committee once again firmly urges the Government to investigate and take appropriate action, as agreed in the action plan, with respect to the pending allegations of violations of the Convention regarding civil liberties and trade union rights – contained in the Commission of Inquiry's report or subsequently brought before this Committee – in order to ensure a climate free of violence, threats, persecution, stigmatization, intimidation or any other form of aggression in which the social partners can exercise their legitimate activities, including participation in social dialogue with full guarantees. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information indicating all specific action carried out, particularly the follow-up action taken.

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. Respect for the autonomy of employers' and workers' organizations, particularly in relation to the Government or political parties, and suppression of all interference and favouritism by the state authorities. In its previous comment, the Committee once again referred to the conclusions of the Commission of Inquiry and reiterated the specific recommendations on the need to ensure respect for the independence of employers' and workers' organization, and the elimination of all interference and favouritism by the government authorities. The Committee urged the Government to refer all the pending allegations to the respective dialogue round tables with the organizations concerned – including the allegations of interference and obstacles regarding electoral procedures, and the use of Workers' Production Boards (WPBs) as mechanisms that restrict the exercise of freedom of association – in order to make tangible progress as quickly as possible.

The Committee notes in the action plan adopted in the Forum and its update, the signatory parties indicated that trade union elections are independent; and, in the context of implementing the effects of the decision, in accordance with what was discussed at the meeting of workers' organizations with the National Electoral Council (CNE) (28 September 2022), it was decided to initiate a work plan with the Electoral Authority to provide guidance and support to the trade union organizations in their electoral processes, where requested. The action plan includes, among the expected outcomes in follow-up to the decisions of the ILO Governing Body and to the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry:

- (i) the effective handling of the allegations concerning registration procedures and trade union election processes, including their publication by the organizations concerned, assessment, determination of relevant measures and information to the relevant organizations by the MPPPST, as well as the continuation of the dialogue on assistance from the CNE to the trade union organizations in their electoral processes, where requested; and
- (ii) the effective handling and follow-up of allegations of interference by WPBs in the independent functioning of employers' and workers' organizations or in relations between them, including the communication to the MPPPST of the allegations by the organizations concerned, enquiries and determination of measures to ensure the absence of interference and the application of appropriate corrective measures by the MPPPST; notification of the organizations concerned; and consultations regarding the adoption of the Regulations to the Constitutional Act on WPBs.

The Committee notes that the Government once again denies the allegations of interference and lack of respect for the independence of employers' and workers' organizations, and those of favouritism of the authorities towards organizations with alleged ties to it, indicating that it has demonstrated its full commitment to freedom of association and its policy of taking all representative organizations into account. In this regard, the Government emphasizes the various sessions of the Forum that were held.

With regard to the establishment of the WPBs, the Committee notes that the Government reiterates its previous indication to the supervisory bodies, including the Commission of Inquiry, emphasizing that far from excluding and affecting freedom of association, the WPBs promote the organization of the working class and foster its participation in the management of productive activity, and in no case replace the trade unions or are contrary to them, as established by section 17 of the WPB Constitutional Act. The Government adds that the MPPPST has not received any formal complaints of specific cases in which the organization of WPBs in any workplaces had interfered with the smooth functioning of the workplace. The Government also indicates, in response to the observations of FEDECAMARAS and certain trade union organizations, that in the action plan adopted within the framework of the Forum, a mechanism was set up for the receipt of complaints or reports on the negative impact of the WPBs on the functioning of a workplace, and that to date no complaints have been submitted by the organizations concerned in this respect.

The Committee also notes the observations of FEDECAMARAS, CTASI, CTV and FAPUV, warning that, instead of following up on the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry, the Government continues to promote the formation and operation of the WPBs, reiterating that they are mechanisms that interfere in the independence of the trade union organizations and in the working life of the workers. FEDECAMARAS notes that: (i) 2,555 WPBs have been set up in enterprises; (ii) the President of the Republic mandated the MPPPST to draft a Regulation for the WPBs; (iii) a certification course in labour management was delivered for WPBs in enterprises to, inter alia, strengthen the process of communicating information to the Office of the Deputy Minister for Education and Work for Freedom; and, (iv) on 30 August 2022, an attempt was made to set up a WPB in a manufacturing company in Lara State, but the Union of Workers of the company (SINTRAPROB) refused and no worker wished to participate. Further, CTASI, CTV and FAPUV report that between 5 and 7 February 2022, the third national meeting of the WPBs was held, indicating their high number and the formation of ten of them in 2022.

With regard to registration procedures and trade union election processes, the Committee notes the Government's indication that in follow-up to the action plan, on 24–25 August 2022, two workshops were held with workers' (CBST-CCP, CTASI and CTV) and employers' (FEDECAMARAS and FEDEINDUSTRIA) organizations, respectively, on the procedures and requirements set out in the legislation with respect to the National Registry of Trade Union Organizations (RNOS). The Government indicated to the Governing Body that on 19 October 2022 a meeting was held with FEDECAMARAS and FEDEINDUSTRIA to make progress in defining requirements and procedures for the national registration of those organizations, forming a round table where the proposals presented by the social partners were discussed. The Committee notes that FEDECAMARAS indicates in its observations that on 6 May 2022, the records for 2018 to 2021 were registered in the subordinate registry of the records of annual meetings. FEDECAMARAS also indicates that on 25 August 2022, a workshop was held with the employer organizations (FEDECAMARAS and FEDEINDUSTRIA) on the RNOS. In this workshop, FEDECAMARAS reiterated the need for confidentiality and the preservation of the commercial value of the membership lists, and its view that the regulations on the matter are not applicable to employers' organizations, and raised the possibility of drafting a regulation to establish a registry for information purposes only, and of examining other experiences in Latin America in this area.

Regarding trade union elections, the Government reiterates its previous indication, namely that the CNE carries out support activities only where requested by the trade union organizations and that organizations can conduct their elections with or without the assistance of the CNE, according to the terms of the union statutes and any amendments thereto. The Government affirms its willingness to continue working on this matter in the various dialogue forums in cases where the practice is not aligned with the legislation in force. The Government indicates that, in March 2022, the MPPPST issued a legal opinion on the observations of different trade union organizations with respect to the conduct of the CNE and on whether there was an obligation to come before such an institution to carry out the elections of the trade union executive bodies. The CTASI, in its observations, provides the above legal opinion, which indicates that “...in order to guarantee the legitimacy of the trade union organizations, which, through their independence, shall determine the assistance of the CNE or conduct the elections by their own means, provided that they comply with the democratic guarantees required [sic] for the development of a trade union electoral process”.

In this regard, the Committee notes that, on the one hand, the observations of the CBST-CCP highlight the procedures established to streamline the process, both by the MPPPST and the CNE, and state that they have conducted independent trade union elections, adding that 297 trade unions have requested technical advice and support of the CNE for their electoral processes. On the other hand, the CTASI, CTV and FAPUV emphasize in their observations that there have been no changes in law or practice in government policy relating to the registration of trade union organizations and electoral delays. These organizations report that the participation of the CNE in trade union elections is not optional, as seen in the case of the suspension of the elections of the Bar Association of the state of Carabobo, ordered by the Supreme Court of Justice as that the elections were called without the participation of the CNE (May 2022).

In light of the foregoing, in relation to these two areas of recommendations concerning the independence of the employers’ and workers’ organizations, the Committee notes with deep regret that the Government does not provide information on tangible progress in response to the specific allegations raised in the previous observations of several social partners, and that the social partners continue to denounce, in the most recent observations of FEDECAMARAS, CTASI, CTV and FAPUV relating to the conduct of the WPBs, the persistence of interference and obstacles in the electoral and union registration processes. The Committee also notes that in the updated action plan it was agreed that consultations would be held on the adoption of the regulations to the Constitutional Act on the WPBs, with the first meeting scheduled for the end of October 2022, and that the dialogue would continue on the assistance of the CNE to trade union organizations in their electoral processes, beginning on 28 September 2022, and follow-up meetings would be held.

In this light, the Committee once again refers to the conclusions of the Commission of Inquiry and reiterates its specific recommendations concerning the need to ensure respect for the independence of employers’ and workers’ organizations, and to eliminate all interference and favouritism on the part of the government authorities. The Committee urges the Government to take all necessary measures, as promptly as possible, in the framework of the dialogue with the organizations concerned and the agreements adopted in the updated action plan in the Forum, to address all the pending allegations – including the allegations of interference and obstacles regarding electoral procedures and also the use of WPBs as mechanisms that restrict the exercise of freedom of association – in order to make tangible progress in the near future. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the specific activities carried out and the outcome reached in this respect.

Lastly, the CTASI, CTV and FAPUV allege, in their observations, the formation on 7 May 2021 of the Presidential Council of the Government of the People’s Power of the Working Class, exclusively established by and consisting of Government supporters. The trade union organizations allege that in this Council discussions were held on issues related to the protection of social benefits, pensions and social welfare, and the presentation of collective bargaining models adapted to the economic war, among other issues. The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

Financial management, internal administration and inviolability of trade union premises. The Committee notes the observations of the CTASI, CTV and FAPUV that the State retains and does not transfer trade union contributions despite the repeated request to the Government from various trade union organizations to return them. The organizations point out that this situation has been occurring since September 2021, when the payslips of public sector bodies began to be managed through the electronic platform known as the “sistema patria”. In addition, the trade union organizations allege anti-union acts against premises and property of the National Single Trade Union (SUNEP-INPARQUES). The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect.

Articles 2 and 3. Legislative issues. The Committee recalls that it has been asking the Government for several years to take the necessary steps, in consultation with the most representative workers’ and employers’ organizations, to revise various provisions of the Basic Labour Act (LOTTT), in particular sections 367, 368, 387, 388, 395, 402, 403, 410, 484 and 494. In its previous comment, the Committee also urged the Government, in the context of the dialogue round tables, to submit to tripartite consultation without further delay the revision of the laws and standards, such as the LOTTT, which raise problems of compatibility with the Convention in the light of the conclusions of the Commission of Inquiry (such as those regarding trade union registration, “electoral abeyance” or the WPBs) and the comments of the other ILO supervisory bodies. The Committee also asked the Government, in view of the social partners’ allegations, to include in the above-mentioned tripartite dialogue the discussion of the impact on the exercise of freedom of association of the Constitutional Act against hatred and promoting peaceful co-existence and tolerance, and also of any measures needed to ensure that the application of this Act cannot restrict or suppress the exercise of freedom of association. The Committee also recalls that the Commission of Inquiry recommended the submission to tripartite consultation of the revision of the laws and standards that give effect to the Convention, such as the LOTTT, which raise problems of compatibility with the Convention in the light of the conclusions of the Commission of Inquiry and the comments of the ILO supervisory bodies.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that the Constitutional Act against hatred and promoting peaceful co-existence and tolerance contributes to and creates the conditions for promoting and guaranteeing the recognition of diversity, tolerance and respect, as well as preventing and eradicating all forms of hate, harassment, discrimination and violence. The Government states that the Act does not undermine the exercise of freedom of association, but rather contributes to it. The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government has not responded to the observations of the CTV, CTASI and FAPUV warning of the use of the Constitutional Act against hatred and promoting peaceful co-existence and tolerance, and also of accusations of terrorism, as a pretext for criminalizing trade union activity, carrying out arbitrary detentions of trade union leaders and sentencing them to imprisonment for exercising their freedom of expression. The Committee regrets that the Government does not provide information regarding the submission to tripartite consultation of the Act’s impact on the exercise of freedom of association.

The Committee reiterates the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry relating to legislative issues and urges the Government, in the context of institutionalized social dialogue, to submit to tripartite consultation without further delay the revision of the laws and standards, such as the LOTTT, which raise problems of compatibility with the Convention in light of the conclusions of the Commission of Inquiry (such as those regarding trade union registration, “electoral abeyance” or the WPBs) and the comments of the other ILO supervisory bodies. The Committee once again requests the Government, in view of the social partners’ allegations, to include in the above-mentioned tripartite dialogue the discussion of the impact on the exercise of freedom of association of the Constitutional Act against hatred and promoting peaceful co-existence and tolerance, and of any measures needed to ensure that the application of this Act cannot restrict or suppress the exercise of freedom of association. The Committee requests the Government to inform it of any developments in this respect.

The Committee welcomes the information provided by the Government to the Governing Body reiterating its commitment to engage in consultations with the social partners on bills, or their respective reforms, initiated by the National Assembly relating to international labour standards. In this respect, the Government indicates that on 11 October 2022 public consultations were held with the social partners on the Domestic Workers Act in which FEDECAMARAS, FEDEINDUSTRIA, the CBST-CCT, CTASI, CTV and CGT participated. The Government indicates that the same process will be followed for the Act on Workers with Disabilities.

The Committee notes with deep concern, however, that: (i) the Government does not provide specific replies to the multiple serious allegations made in the Committee's previous comment; (ii) as highlighted by the observations of a number of social partners, the dialogue held so far still does not meet the necessary conditions to be effective, nor has it yielded concrete solutions to the pending issues, and thus, regrettably, no significant further progress can be observed in the application of the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry; and (iii) allegations of serious violations of the Convention continue to be made, referring to the persistence of systemic patterns or problems to which attention was drawn by the Commission of Inquiry.

The Committee notes that the Government once again refers to its request for ILO assistance in order to determine the representativeness of employers' and workers' organizations, considering that this will be fundamental for determining representativeness according to objective verifiable criteria which fully respect freedom of association. The Government indicates that, during the above-mentioned workshops on the RNOS, the social partners were reminded of the importance of such a register in determining the representativeness of social organizations. In this respect, the Committee reiterates that since the recommendations are interrelated and need to be considered together, they should be implemented in a holistic manner and in a climate in which the social partners can exercise their legitimate activities, including participation in social dialogue with full guarantees, and with full respect for the independence of employers' and workers' organizations. The Committee once again recommends that ILO technical assistance should be defined on a tripartite basis in the context of institutionalized dialogue and in light of these considerations.

The Committee firmly urges the Government to take the necessary steps, with ILO technical assistance, through institutionalized dialogue and in the manner indicated in the Commission of Inquiry's report, to ensure that the recommendations are fully implemented, so that tangible improvements can be noted in the near future, including those agreed upon by the parties in the updated action plan adopted by the Forum. The Committee also reiterates that it is vital that the issues raised above receive the full and ongoing attention of the ILO and its supervisory system so that firm and effective measures are adopted to ensure full observance of the Convention in law and practice.

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Independent Trade Union Alliance Confederation of Workers (CTASI), the Confederation of Workers of Venezuela (CTV), and the Federation of University Teachers' Associations of Venezuela (FAPUV), sent by the Government. The Committee also notes the observations of the United Federation of Workers of Venezuela (CUTV), received on 1 September 2022, and the observations of the Federation of Higher Education Workers of Venezuela (FETRAESUV), FAPUV, the National Federation of Administrative Professionals and Technicians of the Universities of Venezuela (FENASIPRUV), the National Federation of Labour Unions of Higher Education of Venezuela

(FENASOESV), and the Unions of Non-federated University Workers, received on 7 and 19 July 2021. The Committee notes the observations of FAPUV, received on 8 February 2019 and the Bolivarian Socialist Confederation of Men and Women Workers in Urban and Rural Areas and Fishing of Venezuela (CBST-CCP), received on 5 December 2018. The Committee also noted in its previous comment the observations of CTASI, received on 29 August 2018, together with those of the Confederation of Autonomous Trade Unions (CODESA), the CTV, the General Confederation of Labour (CGT) and the National Union of Workers of Venezuela (UNETE), received on 26 September 2018. The observations refer to issues examined in this comment.

The Committee also notes the observations of UNETE, received on 5 September 2022, alleging obstacles in law and practice to the exercise of free and voluntary collective bargaining, including the elimination of and failure to pay benefits agreed in collective agreements through measures adopted unilaterally by the Government, mainly affecting the public sector (education). The Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in respect of the observations of UNETE.

The Committee recalls having suspended the examination of the application of Convention No. 98 until the Commission of Inquiry, established to examine the complaint submitted in 2016 under article 26 of the ILO Constitution, and alleging non-observance by the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela of the Minimum Wage-Fixing Machinery Convention, 1928 (No. 26), the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), and the Tripartite Consultation (International Labour Standards) Convention, 1976 (No. 144), had completed its mission. The suspension of the above examination is also in light of the substantial links between the issues that the Committee has been examining under Convention No. 98 and the application of Convention No. 87 by the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela.

The Committee recalls that, under its examination of the application of Convention No. 87, it noted with interest the information provided by the Government to the Governing Body concerning the holding of a social dialogue forum and the adoption of an action plan between the Government and various social actors to give effect to the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry.

Articles 1 and 2 of the Convention. Protection against acts of anti-union discrimination and interference. The Committee previously noted with concern the allegations made by various trade union organizations concerning many union leaders or members who have been dismissed or are being dismissed in various sectors, and relating to other damaging measures, and requested the Government to: (i) send information in this respect; and (ii) initiate a tripartite dialogue with the most representative workers' and employers' organizations concerning the practical effectiveness of the legal protection against acts of anti-union discrimination and to supply information on its outcome. The Committee notes the Government's information indicating that justified dismissal may be authorized through administrative procedures and that there is broad protection against acts of discrimination and interference. The Government indicates that from 2019 to 2022, 38 actions alleging anti-union practices were brought before the competent authorities. The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not provided specific information in response to the observations presented by the trade union organizations. The Committee urges the Government to provide information on the cases presented, including detailed information on the number of investigations conducted, their duration, the penalties and reparation measures applied. The Committee also urges the Government to take the necessary measures to engage in a tripartite dialogue, including in the social dialogue forum and other forums, on the effectiveness in practice of the legal protection against acts of anti-union discrimination and to supply specific information on the results.

Article 4. Free and voluntary negotiation. The Committee recalls that for many years it has been requesting the Government to: (i) amend the requirement for the presence of a labour official during collective bargaining, under section 449 of the Basic Act on labour and men and women workers (LOTTT) in order to ensure conformity with the Convention; and (ii) submit to tripartite dialogue the issue of the application in practice of sections 450 and 451 of the LOTT (regarding, respectively, the requirement that the labour inspector shall verify conformity of the collective agreement with the applicable public order regulations, with a view to granting approval of the agreement; and the possibility for the labour inspector to make observations to the parties, which must be complied with in the following 15 days). In this respect, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the officials who are present at the negotiations act only as mediators, and that in some cases collective negotiations have taken place without the presence of a labour official and that the agreements are subsequently submitted to the labour inspectorate for verification and approval – which is not carried out at the discretion of the Ministry of People's Power for the Social Process of Labour (MPPST). The Committee recalls that the above provisions can amount to interference in the negotiations between the parties and is contrary to the principles of free and voluntary negotiation and the autonomy of the parties. Therefore, the Committee recalls, with regard to sections 450 and 451, that they would only be compatible with the Convention on condition that refusal of approval is restricted to cases in which the collective agreement contains flaws regarding its form or does not comply with the minimum standards laid down by the labour legislation. The Committee requests the Government to provide information regarding the number of agreements that have been refused and the reasons given by the authorities. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures, in consultation with the social partners, to make the corresponding amendments to section 449 of the LOTT to bring it into full conformity with the Convention. The Committee also once again requests the Government to conduct a tripartite dialogue on the question of the application in practice of sections 450 and 451 of the LOTT with a view to finding solutions to the issues raised. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this respect.

Compulsory arbitration. The Committee noted that the legislation provides for official arbitration in section 465 of the LOTT, with regard to bargaining by branch of activity where conciliation is not possible, unless the participating trade union organizations state their intention to exercise the right to strike. In addition, the arbitration board for the settlement of the dispute shall be composed of one representative each of the employer, the workers and the Government (section 493), which, according to the Government, ensures the full confidence of the parties. In this respect, the Committee requested the Government, in consultation with the most representative workers' and employers' organizations, to take the necessary steps to draw up an official text to abolish arbitration on the initiative of the authorities – except in relation to public servants engaged in the administration of the State (Article 6 of the Convention), essential services in the strict sense of the term and acute national crises – and to ensure that the composition of the arbitration board enjoys the confidence of the parties. The Committee notes with concern that the Government only refers to information previously sent and has not provided information relating to the measures taken to abolish compulsory arbitration in the legislation. The Committee urges the Government to adopt the necessary measures, in consultation with the social partners, to eliminate the use of compulsory arbitration, except in the cases laid out and permitted by the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any developments in this respect.

Collective bargaining in good faith. Public sector. Public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. The Committee notes the observations of the CTASI, CTV, FAPUV, FENASIPRUV, FETRAESUV and FENASOESV which denounce that the public administration refuses to negotiate with all the trade union organizations (including in the education and health sectors), favouring only those organizations allied with the Government. The trade union organizations indicate that, in the education sector, the Government did not allow the participation of FAPUV, FENASIPRUV, FETRAESUV and FENASOESV, which represent more than 90 per cent of the university workers, in the negotiation of the fourth collective agreement (IV CCU), favouring only the participation of the Federation of University Workers of Venezuela (FTUV). They also allege that wages were not subject to negotiation, as the Government has been imposing wages since 2018, through memorandum No. 2792 on guidelines to be implemented in collective labour negotiations (11 October 2018). In this regard, they indicate that pursuant to the memorandum, the commission for the monitoring and follow-up of collective bargaining agreements was established, aimed at evaluating, monitoring and supporting the negotiation processes of collective labour agreements, as well as the implementation of those that have been signed, and at protecting and guaranteeing the payment and streamlining of labour benefits in both the public and private sectors. The memorandum sets out minimum wage as the wage scale baseline and lays down the requirement to review any previous collective bargaining agreements in which a wage higher than the minimum has been agreed as a baseline. The CTASI, CTV, FAPUV and CUTV also allege that as of March 2022, when a document was issued by the National Budget Office (ONAPRE) (Directive: process of adjustment of the remuneration system of the public administration, collective bargaining agreements, special tables and strategic enterprises, of 22 March 2022), several public protests have been held, as the above measure unilaterally eliminates the progressive labour rights of public administration workers, altering the wage scales and the formula for the calculation of socioeconomic benefits. The trade union organizations indicate that they have filed judicial appeals requesting the repeal or nullification of this measure, but that their actions were dismissed without a substantive examination. The Committee notes the trade union organizations' indication that they were notified of this measure through social networks and that, although it has not been recognized by the courts, the document is used by the employing public authorities to refuse to pay the wages previously agreed in collective agreements. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in this respect in its report on the application of Convention No. 87, indicating that the MPPPST has taken various measures: (i) the development of a Memorandum of Internal Guidelines (7 June 2021) for the approval of the national labour policy on the discussion and signing of the collective labour agreements, in a context of freedom of association, and with no further restrictions than those established in the national legal system; and (ii) the issuance of the legal opinion of the MPPPST at the request of the CTASI regarding internal memorandum No. 2792. The Committee notes that the Government has not provided copies of the above-mentioned documents. Noting that the allegations made by the trade union organizations refer to serious violations of the principle of collective bargaining in good faith - through the non-recognition of the organizations for the purposes of collective bargaining, unilateral amendments and non-compliance with negotiated commitments, the Committee requests the Government to provide its comments in this respect and to provide copies of the above-mentioned documents.

Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes that the trade union organizations refer to obstacles to collective bargaining deriving from the registration procedures and trade union electoral processes that were examined in depth in the framework of the examination by the Commission of Inquiry. In this respect, the Committee refers to its comments on the application of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87). The Committee notes the Government's indication of the general manner in which collective agreements were negotiated in the private and public sector, and provides ten examples. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of collective agreements, signed and in force, negotiated by level and sector, specifying the number of workers covered by collective bargaining.

Regarding previous allegations by various trade union organizations on non-compliance with collective agreements in force, excessive delays attributable to the authorities in collective bargaining processes, and cases of negotiations with minority or government-backed unions, the Committee notes the Government's indication that it has been constantly reviewing the contractual benefits of public administration workers, approving increases in wage scales, and has signed certificates of agreements with workers' and employers' representatives, guaranteeing compliance with the agreements concluded. The Committee also notes the Government's information with respect to the holding of the social dialogue forum. The Committee requests the Government to provide its detailed comments relating to the above allegations of the workers' organizations and to indicate the specific measures taken to address those allegations in the context of social dialogue.

Yemen

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1976)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee had previously requested the Government to provide comments on the 2012 observations made by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) alleging that striking teachers were dismissed, striking sanitation workers were injured, and that the offices of the Yemeni Journalists' Syndicate were attacked. Noting with regret that the Government provides no reply to these observations, the Committee reiterates its previous request.

The Law on Trade Unions (2002)

Articles 2 and 5 of the Convention The Committee had previously requested the Government to indicate whether employees of high-level public authorities and Cabinets of Ministers, excluded by virtue of its section 4 from the Law on Trade Unions (LTU) enjoy the right to establish and join trade unions. While taking due note of the Government's indication that since 2011 union committees have been established in all ministerial offices, the Committee requests the Government to clarify if senior public officials also have the right to establish and join their own organizations.

The Committee had also requested the Government to take the necessary measures to amend sections 2, 20 and 21 of the LTU so as to repeal specific reference to the General Federation of Trade Unions of Yemen (GFTUY) and thereby to allow workers and their organizations to establish and join the federation of their own choosing. The Committee notes the Government's reiteration that it imposes no restrictions on trade union activity and that there are many unions representing workers' interests that do not operate within the framework of the GFTUY (for example, Trade Union of Doctors, Trade Union of Pharmacists, Trade Union of Engineers, and Lawyers' Trade Union). Noting that the specific reference to the GFTUY remains in the legislation, and that it could result in making it impossible to establish a second federation to represent workers' interests, the Committee once again requests that the Government take necessary measures to amend the LTU so as to delete this specific reference.

Article 3. The Committee had previously requested the Government to clarify whether section 40(b) of the LTU required an authorization from the higher level trade union for a strike to be organized, and if this was the case, to take the necessary measures to amend the legislation to bring it into conformity with the Convention. In this regard, the Committee notes the Government's indication that by virtue of section 40(b) of the LTU there is a requirement to coordinate with the higher union body to organize a partial or general strike and that the Committee's previous comment on this legislative issue is being considered for the amendment of the Act. The Committee trusts that the Government will take the necessary measures to amend the LTU so as to ensure the right of workers' organizations to organize their activities and formulate their programmes. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any development in this regard.

The draft Labour Code. The Committee recalls that in its previous comments it had expressed the hope that the draft Labour Code would be adopted in the near future and that the Government would take into account the Committee's comments to further amend or revise some of the provisions in the draft. The Committee notes the Government's indication that due to the armed conflict affecting the country since 2011 it has been unable to complete the amendments of the labour legislation. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that the draft Labour Code is not applicable to domestic workers, members of the judiciary, and diplomatic and consular staff, but that their rights are guaranteed by law. Recalling that the only authorized exceptions from the scope of application of the Convention are members of the police and the armed forces, the Committee requests the Government to indicate all legislative provisions that afford domestic workers, members of the judiciary, and diplomatic and consular staff, the right to establish and join workers' organizations of their own choosing and without previous authorization.

The Committee further notes the Government's indication that the draft Labour Code contains no provisions denying the right of workers' organizations to affiliate with international labour organizations. The Committee recalls that it had also requested the Government to:-revise section 173(2) of the draft Labour Code so as to ensure that minors between the ages of 16 and 18 years may join trade unions without parental authorization;-provide a list of essential services referred to in section 219(3) of the draft Code, which empowers the Minister to submit disputes to compulsory arbitration, which will be issued by the Council of Ministers once the Labour Code is promulgated;-amend section 211 of the draft Labour Code which provides that strike notice must include an indication of the duration of a strike to ensure that a trade union can call a strike for an indeterminate period of time.

While acknowledging the complexity of the situation prevailing on the ground due to the presence of armed groups and armed conflict in the country, the Committee trusts that the current legislative reform will bring the national legislation into full conformity with the Convention and requests the Government to indicate any developments in this regard.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1969)

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. Protection against anti-union interference. The Committee recalls that, for a number of years, it has been requesting the Government to ensure that effective and sufficiently dissuasive sanctions that guarantee the protection of workers' organizations against acts of interference by employers or their organizations in trade union activities are expressly provided for in the national legislation. The Committee notes that the Government indicates once again that protection against interference for trade union activities is provided under the Labour Code and that it will seek to provide further legal protection when amending the Act on Trade Unions (ATU) in accordance with the Convention. The Committee once again requests the Government to indicate the progress made in this respect, and to provide copies of the amended legislative texts aimed at ensuring full respect for the rights enshrined in the Convention, as soon as they have been adopted.

Article 4. Refusal to register a collective agreement on the basis of consideration of "economic interests of the country". The Committee recalls that it had previously requested the Government to take the necessary measures to amend sections 32(6) and 34(2) of the Labour Code so as to ensure that refusal to register a collective agreement is only possible due to a procedural flaw or because it does not conform to the minimum standards laid down by the labour legislation, and not on the basis of consideration of "the economic interests of the country". While the Committee had previously noted that the Government had adopted the Committee's proposal with regard to the amendment of the abovementioned section of the Labour Code, the Committee notes the Government's new indication that it will study the Committee's views in this respect. The Committee requests once again the Government to take the necessary measures to bring sections 32(6) and 34(2) of the Labour Code into conformity with the Convention.

Articles 4 and 6. Right to collective bargaining of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State. The Committee once again requests the Government to indicate the legal provisions which guarantee the right to collective bargaining of public servants not engaged in the administration of the State.

While acknowledging the complexity of the situation prevailing on the ground due to the presence of armed groups and armed conflict in the country, the Committee trusts that the Government will make all efforts to bring its law and practice into conformity with the Convention.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 1996)

Previous comment

Articles 2 and 3 of the Convention. Revision of the Industrial and Labour Relations Act. In its previous comment, the Committee had expressed regret that the last review of the Industrial and Labour Relations Act (ILRA) (Act No. 19 of 22 December 2017) failed to address the substantive issues raised by the Committee with regard to sections 2(e), 5(b), 7(3), 9(3), 18(1)(b), 21(5) and (6), 43(1)(a), 78(4), and 107, which pertain to the right of workers, without distinction whatsoever, to establish and join organizations, the right of organizations of workers and employers to elect their representatives, and the right of workers' organizations to freely organize their activities and to formulate their programmes. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the ILRA assists in maintaining industrial harmony and stability of the labour market and that social partners are not dismayed by the provisions identified as problematic by the Committee. The Committee notes with deep concern that no consideration is being given to amending the ILRA by the Government. Recalling that it is the responsibility of the Government to ensure the application of the international labour Convention concerning freedom of association which has been freely ratified, the Committee urges the Government to take all necessary measures to amend the above-mentioned provisions and to inform it of all steps taken in this respect.

The Committee had previously requested the Government to provide information with regard to the closing of the procedure for the recognition of the Zambia Union of Financial Institutions and Allied Workers (ZUFIAW) by the Zambia Revenue Authority (ZRA) and to indicate whether workers of the ZRA can establish or join unions of their own choosing without prior authorization. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the ZRA is not a financial institution nor is it an allied financial institution. Thus, in line with section 5(b) of the ILRA, which limits trade union membership to workers in the same occupation or branch of activity, workers of the ZRA are not eligible to join the ZUFIAW. While noting the Government's indication that out of 2243 ZRA employees, 1953 are members of the Zambia Revenue Authority Worker Union, the Committee recalls that conditions such as those set by section 5(b) of the ILRA may be applied only to first-level organizations, a category to which ZUFIAW does not belong. The Committee therefore emphasizes the need to amend the ILRA without further delay so as to ensure the right of workers to establish and join organizations of their own choosing in law and in practice.

[The Government is asked to reply in full to the present comments in 2023.]

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1996)

Previous comment

Legislative developments. The Committee notes that the Government: (i) acknowledges that the last review of the Industrial Labour Relations Act (ILRA) that took place in 2017 did not address the substantive issues raised by the Committee in its previous comments; and (ii) informs of the decision of the Tripartite Consultative Labour Council (TCLC) to proceed with a comprehensive review of the Act, so as to bring it in conformity with the Convention.

Article 1 of the Convention. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to take measures to shorten the maximum period (one year) within which a court should consider the disputes between an employer and an employee, as well as the matters affecting trade unions and collective bargaining rights and issue its ruling (section 85(3)(b)(ii) of the ILRA). The Committee notes the Government's indication that when a matter is not concluded within a year, the presiding judge loses jurisdiction to handle the matter and the latter must be reallocated to another judge who then hears it de novo, passing the ruling much later than the intended one-year mark. In those circumstances, the Government believes that amending section 85(3)(b)(ii) to shorten the maximum period would further disadvantage the complainant. The Committee takes note that the Committee on Legal Affairs, Human Rights and Governance has made recommendations to alleviate this issue, notably through a proviso stating that a matter should be disposed of within twelve months, following the expiration of the statutory period of one year. The Committee also notes that further methods to address the congestion and delays in the justice system concerning labour matters are being considered by the Government, such as the employment of more judges, the increased number of courtrooms, and broader scope of jurisdiction from subordinate courts. The Committee takes due note of the statement of the Government concerning section 85(3)(b)(ii) of the ILRA and the actions envisaged to address the congestion of the labour justice system. The Committee requests the Government to take all the necessary measures, including of a legislative nature in the context of the review of the ILRA, to ensure that anti-union discrimination cases are dealt with through effective and expeditious legal proceedings. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this respect and recalls that it can avail itself of the technical assistance of the Office.

Article 4. Free and voluntary collective bargaining. Compulsory arbitration. The Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to amend section 78(1)(a) and (c) and section 78(4) of the ILRA, which allow, in certain cases, either party to refer the dispute to a court or arbitration. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it has not encountered any challenges in the administration of collective dispute resolution arising from provision 78 of the ILRA, as it sits currently but that in light of the decision of the TCLC to amend the Act, the proposed amendment of section 78 of the Act may be a matter for consideration. The Committee recalls that, in accordance with the principle of voluntary negotiation of collective agreements, arbitration imposed by legislation, or at the request of just one party is only acceptable in certain specific circumstances: namely: (i) in essential services in the strict sense of the term, that is those the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population; (ii) in the case of disputes in the public service involving public servants engaged in the administration of the State; (iii) when, after protracted and fruitless negotiations, it becomes obvious that the deadlock will not be broken without some initiative by the authorities; or (iv) in the event of an acute crisis (2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 247).

The Committee trusts that as a result of the comprehensive review of the ILRA, the above provisions will be amended so as to ensure that arbitration in situations other than those mentioned above can take place only at the request of both parties involved in the dispute. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this respect.

Article 4. Collective bargaining in practice. The Committee notes that the Government informs that there are 197 collective agreements in force in the country which cover 490,159 workers. The Committee invites the Government to inform on the measures taken to promote collective bargaining and to continue providing information on the collective agreements concluded and in force, the sectors concerned, and the number of workers covered.

Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) (ratification: 2003)

Previous comment

Follow-up to the recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry appointed under article 26 of the Constitution of the ILO

The Committee notes the observations submitted by the Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions (ZCTU) and by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), both received on 1 September 2022, which refer to the issues addressed by the Committee below.

The Committee notes the report of the Direct Contacts Mission (DCM), which visited the country in April 2022 following a request by the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards at its 108th Session (June 2019).

Civil liberties and trade union rights. In its previous comment, the Committee had requested the Government to provide information on all progress made with regard to the case against the ZCTU President and General Secretary arrested in 2019; the case of Secretary for Gender of the Amalgamated Rural Teachers Union (ARTUZ), alleged to have been arrested and tortured; alleged acts of violence against ARTUZ leaders following protests in 2020; as well as the repression against workers' protests in the health sector and several other instances of violation of civil liberties in the country that took place in 2020. The Committee had further requested the Government to provide information on the conviction and sentencing of a primary school teacher for public violence after being arrested while protesting against poor salaries. The Committee notes the Government's indication, also communicated to the DCM, that the case of the ZCTU Secretary General and the former President is closed and that the National Prosecuting Authority (NPA) has no intention of pursuing the matter further. The Committee notes from the report of the DCM that when a case is withdrawn before plea, as was the case with the two trade union leaders arrested in 2019, while such case is not prosecuted, it is technically not closed and can become an aggravating circumstance if there are further arrests. The DCM considered that the existing legal loophole in the procedure for dealing with cases withdrawn before plea should be closed and that to that end, the Government should engage with all relevant authorities and stakeholders. The Committee requests the Government to inform it of all measures taken or envisaged in this regard. The Committee further notes the Government's indication that it still awaits to receive from the trade unions concerned information regarding allegations pertaining to the case of the ARTUZ Secretary of Gender and the incidents of violence and arrests alleged to have taken place in 2020, in order to enable the investigation and follow-up with the Prosecutor General and the Zimbabwe Republic Police (ZRP). The Committee urges the Government to engage with the unions concerned without further delay with a view to investigating the alleged violations of civil liberties and trade union rights. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this respect.

The Committee had previously urged the Government to take all necessary steps to ensure that the compensation for damages suffered during the disturbances of August 2018 is paid without further delay and also requested the Government to inform it of all progress made in this regard. The Committee notes that, according to the Government, the former legal advisor of the ZCTU has filed a compensation application at the Magistrate's Court, as well as an application for variation of the compensation amount, which the court accepted. The Committee recalls the Government's previous indication that the consultations on compensation modalities were ongoing. The Committee notes with concern the ZCTU statement to the DCM that no consultation had taken place. The Committee regrets that over four years after the events, the issue of compensation has not been resolved, despite the recommendations made to that effect by a commission of inquiry established to investigate the disturbances. The Committee therefore urges the Government to engage with those who suffered during the disturbances, including the ZCTU former legal advisor, with a view to paying compensation as per the recommendations of the national commission of inquiry. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the modalities and amount paid to the affected trade unionists.

The Committee notes with deep concern the ZTUC and the ITUC allegations that in January 2022, members of the ARTUZ were attacked and arrested while being engaged in a protest action outside the National Social Security Office building where the National Joint Negotiating Council (NJNC) meeting was taking place between the Government and trade unions. According to the ZCTU, as the teachers gathered at the venue, 16 leaders of the ARTUZ were arrested, including the ARTUZ President, only to be released on bail six days later. The Committee further notes the ITUC allegation that the Secretary-General of the ARTUZ was arrested in July 2022 by the ZRP. According to the ITUC, he is facing charges of the murder of a colleague in 2016, despite the fact that a court investigation into the death of that colleague concluded there was no criminal act involved. The ITUC indicates that the arrest of the Secretary-General of the ARTUZ occurred a week after the release on bail of the ARTUZ President who is also facing similar criminal charges. The Committee requests the Government provide without delay its detailed comments on all these serious allegations of violation of trade union rights and civil liberties.

Maintenance of Peace and Order Act (MOPA). In its previous comment, the Committee had requested the Government to provide information on all developments made with regard to the tripartite consultative workshop to unpack the MOPA, as well as on the outcome of the workshop between trade unions and law enforcement bodies, including a thorough examination of the allegations by the ZCTU and the ITUC of violations of civil liberties. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the objectives of the workshop, which was held in September 2022, were to develop an understanding of the MOPA, both in law and in practice, between various State actors and the social partners and to develop a mutually agreed strategy to minimize clashes between law enforcement agencies and trade unions. The workshop also aimed to facilitate an appreciation and in-depth knowledge of international labour standards. The workshop afforded an opportunity for the NPA to present an overview of the national prosecution system, with reference to some trade union cases. The Government indicates that the key recommendations resulting from the workshop pertain to the need for continued regular engagement between the law enforcements agents and the social partners. Also part of the recommendations were continued capacity building of law enforcement agents and social partners on international labour standards, continued collaboration, and joint tripartite inspections, particularly where there are alleged violations of workers' rights at workplaces. The Committee regrets that no information has been provided by the Government on the review of the implementation of the two instruments developed for use by the law enforcement bodies (the handbook on international labour standards and the code of conduct). The Committee therefore encourages the Government to continue engaging with the social partners and the relevant state authorities with a view to monitor the application of the MOPA in practice, the use by the law enforcement bodies of the two above-mentioned instruments and, with reference to the above, the allegations made by the ZCTU regarding the violation of civil liberties.

Labour law reform and harmonization. The Committee recalls that for a number of years it has been requesting the Government to bring the Labour Act, Public Service Act and Health Services Act into conformity with the Convention in full consultation with the social partners.

Labour Act. The Committee had previously requested the Government to provide information on all progress made with regard to the legislative developments of the Labour Act, Public Service Act and Health Services Act, and the involvement of the social partners in the process in and outside the Tripartite Negotiating Forum (TNF). The Committee notes the Government's indication that a tripartite consultative workshop has been held by the Parliamentary Portfolio Committee for Labour and Social Welfare (PPCL) in May 2022 on the Labour Amendment Bill. The objective of the workshop was to afford the social partners an opportunity to present their views and comments to Parliament ahead of the discussion of the Bill. As recommended by the DCM, the Government also submitted the Bill to the ILO and has received comments and observations thereon. The Government further indicates that the Bill has gone through the second reading in Parliament and is now awaiting debate in the House of Assembly. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Ministry of Public Service, Labour and Social Welfare (the Ministry) is engaging with the Attorney General with a view to considering possible amendments to the Bill so as to take into account ILO comments and the PPCL report, which may lead to a notice for amendment on the Bill during the parliamentary discussions. The Government hopes the Bill will be adopted during the current session of Parliament. The Committee firmly expects that the Amendment Bill will be brought into conformity with the Convention and adopted without further delay and requests the Government to provide a copy of the amended Labour Act.

Public Service Act. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the drafting of the Public Service Amendment Bill was concluded by the Attorney General's Office. The Bill has been submitted to the Cabinet Committee on Legislation (CCL) for consideration to take place by the end of October 2022. The Committee notes from the DCM report that while the Public Services Amendment Bill satisfied the Public Service Commission as it took into account the ILO supervisory bodies comments, it has not been discussed in the TNF. The Committee expects that the Public Service Act will be amended without further delay so as to bring it into conformity with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all progress made in this regard and to provide a copy thereof once the Amendment Bill is adopted.

Health Service Amendment Act. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Parliamentary Portfolio Committee on Health has concluded public hearings and consultations on the Act. The Committee notes, however, that the DCM observed the lack of consultations on the Act. The Committee also notes that the ZCTU considers that the Bill, as currently drafted, violates freedom of associations rights. The Committee therefore urges the Government to engage with the social partners, under the auspices of the TNF, to seek their views and proposals on the draft legislation which affects their rights and interests with a view to ensuring that the Bill is in full conformity with the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to inform it of all measures taken to this end.

The Committee welcomes the Zimbabwe Tripartite Partners' Action Plan to address some of the issues raised in the preliminary findings of the DCM. The Committee encourages the Government to continue engaging with its social partners and the Office to ensure its implementation. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all developments in this respect.

Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98) (ratification: 1998)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations submitted by the Zimbabwe Congress of Trade Unions (ZCTU) and by the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), both received on 1 September 2022, which refer to issues addressed by the Committee in the comment below.

Collective bargaining and the COVID-19 pandemic. The Committee previously requested the Government to provide its comments on the allegations of the ZCTU and the ITUC pertaining to: (i) the serious decrease of collective bargaining during the COVID-19; (ii) the lack of discussion before the Tripartite Negotiating Forum (TNF) of issues relating to the protective measures against COVID-19; and (iii) the rendering of the Bipartite Negotiating Panel for the health sector useless by the Government.

The Committee notes the Government's indications that, whilst the COVID-19 pandemic impacted the labour market, there were minimal effects on the collective bargaining processes. In sectors affected by lock-down measures, innovations such as virtual and digital platforms were embraced with a view to ensuring continued negotiations and collective bargaining. The Government indicates that 56, 64 and 72 collective bargaining agreements have been registered in 2019, 2021 and 2022, respectively. The Government further indicates that, along with social partners under the auspices of the TNF, it agreed to a national minimum wage in 2020 to prop up negotiations across various sectors in light of challenges brought by COVID-19. The TNF held discussions on the management of the pandemic and containment measures, resulting in proposals that were adopted by the Government. The Government points out that collective bargaining in the health sector was never suspended, as there have been eight reviews on the conditions of service of the health sector during the pandemic period which saw frontline and essential workers getting improvements in their sector specific allowances. Consequently, the Government indicates that the Bipartite Negotiating Panel in the health sector was functional during the COVID-19 pandemic.

Follow-up to the 2009 recommendations of the Commission of Inquiry appointed under article 26 of the Constitution of the ILO

Legislative developments

The Committee had previously noted with concern that, despite its numerous requests, some of which predate the 2009 Commission of Inquiry, there was no concrete progress in amending both the Labour Act and the Public Service Act so as to bring them into conformity with the Convention. The Committee expected that the labour and public service legislation would be brought into conformity with the Convention without further delay in full consultation with the social partners and requested the Government to provide information on all progress made in this regard.

Labour Act. In its previous comment, the Committee had noted the Government's indication that the outcome of the tripartite consultations on the draft of the Labour Amendment Bill had been consolidated and integrated into the Bill. The Committee notes that the Bill is now before the Parliament. The Committee notes with concern that according to the most recent ZCTU's observations, several sections of the Labour Amendment Bill go against the agreed Principles and the legislative changes previously requested by the supervisory bodies of the ILO. In this respect, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the Bill might further be amended during the parliamentary discussions so as to take into account technical comments of the ILO. The Government expects the Bill to be adopted in the near future. The Committee expects that the Labour Amendment Bill will be brought into full conformity with the Convention without further delay. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all progress made in this respect.

Public Service Act and the Health Services Act. The Committee notes the Government's indication that a consultative workshop to discuss the Public Service Amendment Bill was held in March 2022 where all stakeholders, including the social partners and the TNF, were invited to partake in. The Bill went through peer review a month later and its drafting was concluded by the Attorney General's Office before being submitted to the Public Service Commission and the Ministry. The Bill has been submitted to the Cabinet Committee on Legislation, which, the Government expects, will consider the Bill before the end of October 2022. Regarding the Health Service Act, the Government indicates the first reading of the Health Service Amendment Bill was carried out in June 2022 and the Parliamentary Portfolio Committee on Health has concluded public hearings and consultations. The Committee expects that the health and public service legislation will be adopted without further delay and requests the Government to provide information on all progress made in this respect.

Article 4 of the Convention. Promotion of collective bargaining. The Committee had previously requested the Government to provide information on the application of the Convention in practice in the special economic zones and to indicate the number of collective agreements in force for such zones. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Labour Act is the principal act that governs the employment issues, including collective bargaining in the special economic zones. Therefore, no separate collective agreements were concluded or gazetted under the Zimbabwe Investment Development Agency Act, as all collective bargaining agreements are still guided by the Labour Act. Establishments in special economic zones are covered by their respective collective bargaining agreement relating to the classification of their undertakings. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of collective agreements concluded and in force, the sectors concerned, and the number of workers covered by these agreements.

Application of the Convention in practice

Article 1. Adequate protection against acts of anti-union discrimination. The Committee notes with concern the ZCTU's numerous allegations of acts of anti-union discrimination. The ZCTU refers, in particular, to the following alleged instances: (i) the President of the Zimbabwe Petroleum and Allied Workers Union (ZIPAWU) was suspended from employment after addressing a press conference in his capacity as a trade union president condemning corruption in the company; (ii) four trade union leaders were dismissed as they were preparing to participate, on behalf of the National Railways Union, in a conciliation meeting over the 2022 wage dispute in March 2022; (iii) an enterprise whose employers are protected under the Look East Agreement unlawfully dismissed an employee, disregarded a ruling by the National Employment Council for Textile Industry and ignored appeals by the trade union; and (iv) anti-union discrimination in the mining sector, where some companies have not complied to the conditions and terms prevailing in the collective bargaining agreements. With reference to its previous request to continue engaging with the social partners on all issues of application of the Convention in practice and to ensure that all allegations of violation are promptly investigated, the Committee requests the Government to provide its comments on these serious allegations of anti-union discrimination and to continue to provide information on all measures taken in consultation with the social partners to prevent cases of anti-union discrimination in practice.

The Committee had previously requested the Government to provide information on any developments regarding an electronic case management system, which would assist in tracking labour dispute cases, particularly those relating to anti-union discrimination. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the procurement process of the hardware equipment is underway, and the Harare Institute of Technology innovation hub, which has been engaged by the Ministry of Public Service Labour and Social Welfare, is in the process of finalizing the development of the system. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any further developments in this respect.

Forced labour

Argentina

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1950)

Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (ratification: 2016)

Previous comment

The Committee welcomes the ratification by Argentina of the Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930. It requests the Government to provide detailed information on its application, in accordance with the report form adopted by the Governing Body.

The Committee notes the observations of the Confederation of Workers of Argentina (CTA Autonomous) of 31 August 2021, and the General Confederation of Labour of the Argentine Republic (CGT RA) of 1 September 2021.

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. 1. Trafficking in persons. Institutional framework. The Committee notes from the final evaluation report of the Biennial National Plan to Combat the Trafficking and Exploitation of Persons for 2018–20, attached to the Government's report, that, out of a total of 111 actions foreseen under the action plan, 80 per cent have been carried out. The Government indicates that, while the main objectives established under the action plan have been achieved, the context arising from the COVID-19 pandemic had a significant impact on the implementation of certain activities. The Committee notes the numerous awareness-raising and training actions carried out on trafficking and labour exploitation, particularly through information campaigns, the distribution of leaflets, and in-person and online training activities. The Committee also notes the adoption of the National Plan to Combat the Trafficking and Exploitation of Persons for 2020–22, drafted by the executive committee of the Federal Council to Combat the Trafficking and Exploitation of Persons and to Protect and Assist Victims, with the contribution of 44 agencies acting at the national, provincial and municipal level, and in collaboration with the ILO and several stakeholders from civil society. The National Plan contains 100 actions focusing on four main areas, namely: prevention; assistance to victims; prosecution; and coordination and strengthening of the institutional framework. The Committee also notes that 25 institutional round tables for preventing and combating trafficking in persons were established, with the specific aim of contributing to the continuous training of public servants on trafficking in persons, widely disseminating the number of the free helpline to report situations involving trafficking, developing diagnostic tools to better prevent trafficking, and coordinating efforts in that area. The Commission notes, in this regard, that the CGT RA and the CTA Autonomous underscore the importance of this inter-institutional work, which, from their point of view, must be continued and deepened, in order to effectively end trafficking and labour exploitation.

The Committee welcomes the continued strengthening of the institutional framework to combat trafficking in persons, and requests the Government to continue to take the necessary measures to effectively implement the four main lines of action under the National Plan to Combat the Trafficking and Exploitation of Persons for 2020–22. The Committee requests it to provide information on the diagnostic tools developed and the evaluation reports drafted in this regard, and on the impact of the measures taken and the difficulties encountered, as well as the activities carried out under the framework of the Federal Council to combat the trafficking and exploitation of persons and to protect and assist victims, and the interinstitutional round tables for preventing and combating the trafficking of persons established at the provincial level.

Action by the labour inspectorate. The Committee notes the Government's indication that a special procedure has been established to review the indicators of labour exploitation that may be identified by labour inspectors during their activities, in accordance with Ministry of Labour Resolution No. 230/18 of 12 June 2018. Furthermore, in 2020, a practical guide was specially designed for inspectors to help them better understand the issues and mechanisms that allow for situations involving trafficking and labour exploitation to be identified and reported. This guide, a copy of which is contained in an annex to the Government's report, identifies three main indicators of labour exploitation: (1) the duration of the working day; (2) the remuneration received; and (3) the work environment and working conditions, and explains how to fill in the report on labour exploitation indicators (Acta IEL). Where applicable, labour inspectors are required to report to the free helpline of the Ministry of Justice and Human Rights in order for the situation observed to be addressed as a matter of priority and, if necessary, request intervention by the security forces and judicial authorities. The Committee notes that several in-person and online activities have been organized to train labour inspectors on the use of these new tools. It notes that the labour inspectorate conducted 191,903 inspections in 2018, and 146,926 inspections in 2019, despite a reduction in staff numbers (342 inspectors in 2018 compared with 321 in 2019). The Committee also notes the detailed information provided by the Government on the work methods of the Special Unit for the Inspection of Irregular Work (UEFTI). The UEFTI carried out several monitoring exercises, including in collaboration with trade union organizations, which combined several sources of information such as: (1) the number of workers declared on the public registry of employers (REPSAL); (2) the number of workers officially covered by collective agreements concluded with enterprises in the agricultural sector (collective co-responsibility agreements (convenios de corresponsabilidad gremial)); (3) the regular production of an enterprise for a given period; and (4) the number of workers normally required to manage this workload. These inspection activities are mainly carried out in the agricultural sector and have also involved the use of video surveillance tools, such as drones and manual video devices, which are specially adapted for use in remote regions.

The Committee notes with interest the activities and new tools developed by the inspection services to identify situations involving labour exploitation. The Committee encourages the Government to pursue this course of action and to continue to take measures to strengthen the capacity for action and resources of the labour inspection services throughout the country, and in particular in the sectors in which the incidence of forced labour is well known, in order to identify situations involving labour exploitation, and particularly trafficking in persons for the purpose of labour exploitation, and to gather evidence, punish violations, and collaborate with other bodies responsible for enforcing the law.

Repression and imposition of penalties. The Committee notes the detailed information provided by the Government on the awareness-raising and training actions undertaken by the General Prosecution Service and by its special unit, PROTEX, with regard to repressing trafficking in persons. The Committee notes in particular that, in 2018 and 2019, several actions were aimed at ensuring training for judges and officials in the judicial field, as well as members of the security forces. The Committee also notes that PROTEX participated in different exchanges of best practices with Brazil in the context of a South-South cooperation programme among Brazil and Argentina, and other countries (Bolivia, Colombia, Ecuador, Peru and Venezuela), implemented by the ILO. The Committee notes that, according to PROTEX's 2020 report, the free helpline received 3,525 complaints in 2018 and 2019, of which 472 concerned cases of labour exploitation, and 82 per cent were submitted to the judicial authorities. Since 2012, a total of 20,719 complaints were received via the helpline. Furthermore, according to the statistical information provided by the Government, between 2018 and 2019, 125 legal proceedings were instituted in cases of trafficking (35 cases of trafficking for the purpose of labour exploitation and 83 for the purpose of sexual exploitation). For the same period, 85 convictions were handed down, of which 23 were in cases of labour exploitation and 59 were in cases of sexual exploitation. The Committee urges the Government to pursue its efforts to ensure that all identified cases of trafficking be subject to in-depth investigations with a view to prosecution, and to allow for the imposition of dissuasive penalties for persons engaged in trafficking. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the activities carried out by PROTEX, including on its collaboration with other bodies responsible for enforcing the law, and on the number of investigations and prosecutions carried out in cases of trafficking for the purpose of labour or sexual exploitation, and on the number of convictions handed down and penalties imposed.

Combating complicity and corruption in the police forces. The Committee notes that, according to the information communicated by PROTEX with the Government's report, thanks to the reports received anonymously through the free helpline, 117 cases of complicity of law enforcement officials were identified in 2018 in cases of trafficking or labour exploitation, and 110 cases in 2019. However, due to the anonymity of the complainants and the sometimes-vague allegations in the majority of the complaints made, PROTEX indicates that it was only able to conduct investigations in 10 per cent of cases. One conviction for complicity was handed down against an official in 2019, and none in 2018. The Committee observes with concern the lack of more specific information from the Government with regard to the possible measures envisaged to put an end in practice to cases of corruption and complicity by law enforcement officials in cases of trafficking in persons, although only one conviction for complicity was handed down against an official, and the General Prosecution Service reported difficulties in this area. The Committee urges the Government to continue to take proactive measures to ensure that investigations are duly conducted in cases of corruption and the complicity of law enforcement officials, and that appropriate and dissuasive penalties are imposed. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information on the measures implemented for this purpose and their impact, and updated information on the number of cases registered and prosecuted, as well as the penalties imposed.

Protection and assistance to victims. The Committee notes that, according to the statistical information provided by the Government, between 2008 and 2022, assistance was provided for 18,220 victims of trafficking in persons (6,460 victims since 2018), of which 57 per cent were victims of labour exploitation, under the National Programme of Assistance and Support for Victims of Trafficking in Persons (Rescate). The Committee also notes the Government's indication that, in the context of the implementation of the action plan to combat the trafficking and exploitation of persons for 2020–22, in addition to the psychological, medical and legal assistance already provided for victims of trafficking, a framework agreement was signed in August 2021, with a view to facilitating their access to housing (agreement signed between the Ministry of Territorial Development and Habitat and the executive committee to combat the trafficking and exploitation of persons and assistance to victims). Concerning the strengthening of resources dedicated to the assistance of victims of trafficking, the Committee welcomes the adoption of Act No. 27.508 of 23 July 2019 establishing direct assistance funds for trafficking victims, regulated by Decree No. 844/2019 of 6 December 2019, and financed through the confiscation and seizure of property derived from the offence of trafficking, in order to ensure adequate redress for victims of trafficking. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the implementation of procedures aimed at allocating the amounts from the fines imposed and property seized, following the identification of offences in the area of trafficking in persons, to programmes and funds for the provision of assistance to victims, and to indicate the manner in which these resources are used. It also requests the Government to provide information on the assistance provided in this context and the number of victims of trafficking who have received this assistance.

2. Labour exploitation in the garment sector and in agriculture. The Committee notes that, in their respective observations, the CTA Autonomous and the CGT RA indicate that trafficking and labour exploitation of persons in the garment sector persist, particularly in sweatshops in the city of Buenos Aires. These organizations indicate that the victims are mainly migrant workers, in particular from Bolivia, and that, despite the lack of official statistical data, it is estimated that around 70 per cent of the products manufactured in the garment sector are of irregular origin. The CTA Autonomous and the CGT RA add that these workers often have their passport confiscated, have to work long hours while confined together in a small room, often without ventilation, and receive low pay. In this regard, the Committee notes that, according to the report published in 2020 by the PROTEX, out of the 38 complaints of trafficking for the purpose of labour exploitation received in the first six months of 2020, five concerned cases of exploitation in sweatshops in the southern province of the city of Buenos Aires.

Regarding the agricultural sector, the CTA Autonomous and the CGT RA refer to the significant number of victims of trafficking and labour exploitation in the agricultural sector identified in recent years, following several interventions carried out by the labour inspectorate, particularly in the provinces of Rio Negro, La Rioja, Corrientes, Santa Fe and Santiago del Estero. The CTA Autonomous indicates that these agricultural workers were often paid less than the minimum wage, worked long hours and lived and worked in dangerous, precarious and degrading conditions, slept in tents without access to drinking water. According to the CTA Autonomous, collaboration between trade union organizations and various competent State bodies made it possible to identify several cases of trafficking and labour exploitation in the agricultural sector, which quickly led to prosecutions before PROTEX and to the activation of victim protection and assistance mechanisms.

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that a cooperation agreement was signed on 26 March 2019 between the Ministry of Labour and the National Register of Agricultural Workers and Employers (RENATRE), with a view to implementing joint inspection activities to identify undeclared work. It also refers to the work carried out to identify and disseminate the indicators of labour exploitation and child labour in the agricultural sector. The Committee notes that, according to PROTEX's 2020 report, in the first six months of 2020, 47 per cent of the complaints received concerning cases of labour exploitation in the agricultural sector, of which seven cases required urgent intervention by security forces. Furthermore, between July 2020 and July 2021, the labour inspectorate services identified 26 cases of trafficking for the purpose of labour exploitation in the agricultural sector concerning 222 workers, following joint actions carried out with RENATRE and other trade union organizations.

The Committee notes with concern from the above information that there is still recourse to forced labour in the garment sector and in agriculture.

Referring to its comments above on strengthening the general institutional framework to combat trafficking in persons, the Committee requests the Government to step up the efforts to combat all forms of labour exploitation, including the trafficking of persons for the purpose of labour exploitation, in the garment sector and in agriculture, and to continue to provide information on the targeted measures taken in this regard, particularly in collaboration with workers' and employers' organizations.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Australia

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1932)

Previous comment

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 2(2)(c) of the Convention. Privatization of prisons and prison labour. For a number of years, the Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to the fact that the privatization of prison labour goes beyond the conditions provided for under Article 2(2)(c) of the Convention for exempting compulsory prison labour from the scope of the Convention. However, where the necessary safeguards exist to ensure that the prisoners concerned offer themselves voluntarily, by giving their free, formal and informed consent and without being subjected to pressure or the menace of any penalty, as required by Article 2(1) of the Convention, work of prisoners for private companies does not come under the scope of the Convention, since no compulsion is involved. The Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the free, formal and informed consent of prisoners is legally required for work in privately operated prisons, as well as for all work of prisoners for private enterprises.

1. Prison labour in privately operated prisons. The Committee previously noted that there were no privately operated prisons under the Northern Territory and Australian Capital Territory jurisdictions. The Committee also noted that, in New South Wales, the employment of convicts in correctional centres was voluntary.

As regards Queensland, the Committee observed that prisoners are obliged to perform work under section 66 of the Corrective Services Act 2006, which provides that the chief executive may, by written order, transfer a prisoner from a corrective services facility to a work camp, and the prisoner must perform community service as directed by the chief executive. It also noted that the work performed by prisoners is not limited to community services performed within the framework of work camps, but also includes employment in commercial industries operating on a commercial fee-for-service basis and in service industries to maintain the self-sufficiency of the correctional system and other unpaid work. The Committee notes the Government's statement, in its report, that transfer of prisoners to a work camp is a management decision made about the best placement of a prisoner according to the Queensland Corrective Services' (QCS) Custodial Operations Practice Directives (COPDs). Such community services include maintenance of public spaces and infrastructures (painting, mowing, gardening and cleaning) as well as building and restoring structures in public spaces, such as picnic tables. In 2019-20, 193,128 hours of community service were completed by prisoners. According to the Government, the financial value of the work performed in the community by prisoners is representative of making offenders accountable and providing reparation to the community as part of their rehabilitation. As regards participation of prisoners in commercial industries operating on a commercial fee-for-service basis and in service industries to maintain the self-sufficiency of the correctional system, the Government states that convicted prisoners are expected to work as it provides them with the opportunity to acquire vocational skills and contributes to their ability to gain and retain employment upon release. Unacceptable behaviour or work performance may incur the penalty of being placed in lower level employment positions and receiving a lower level incentive payment rate. The Government adds that the COPD on prisoner employment outlines the Queensland Corrective Services' objective of having convicted prisoners employed wherever possible, and prison industries providing prisoners with meaningful activity through employment on a commercial, fee-for-service basis or prisoner services or community service. According to above-mentioned COPD, Chief Superintendent of a corrective services facility must provide for employment of prisoners by assigning them to available positions using an interdisciplinary approach that considers a prisoner's behaviour. The Committee notes, from the Report on Government Services 2022 of Australia, that, in 2020-21 in Queensland, 26.3 per cent of the eligible prisoners were employed in commercial industries, while 38.9 per cent of them were employed in service industries (Chapter 8, table 8 A.12). It further notes the Government's statement that, since 1 July 2021, all Queensland prisons are under public administration and prisoners will no longer be under private administration in that State.

As regards South Australia, the Committee recalls that, pursuant to section 29(1) of the Correctional Services Act 1982, prison labour is compulsory both inside and outside correctional institutions. The Government indicated, however, that prisoners at Mt Gambier Prison (South Australia's only privately operated prison) apply in writing to undertake work programmes, and that prisoners in the Adelaide Pre-Release Centre voluntarily apply for outside employment with private enterprises. The Committee notes the adoption of the Correctional Services (Accountability and Other Measures) Amendment Act 2021, which amended section 29(1) of the Correctional Services Act 1982, but observes that prison labour is still compulsory while remand prisoners are no longer explicitly excluded from this obligation. Furthermore, it notes the Government's indication that the Adelaide Remand Centre has been privatized and is now privately operated.

As regards Victoria, the Committee previously noted the Government's indication that prisoners working for both publicly and privately operated prisons have the same rights and entitlements, and that in both cases convicts must consent to undertake work. The Committee notes the Government's statement that all convicted prisoners are given the opportunity to work in prison industries in order to develop their employment skills. The Government adds that, in privately operated prisons, prisoners are not compelled to work. Vacant positions in prison industries are advertised to prisoners and they have the opportunity to apply for these positions. Prisoners are remunerated for their work in prison industries. If a prisoner refuses to work in prison industries, they are classified as unemployed and do not receive any remuneration but receive essential items and are encouraged to participate in other structured day activities such as training, education or programmes.

As regards Western Australia, the Committee previously noted that prison labour is compulsory under section 95(4) of the Prisons Act 1981 and section 43 of the Prison Regulations 1982. The Government indicated that such provisions had not been enforced as, in practice, prisoners are not forced to participate in work programmes, even in privately operated prisons. The Committee noted that, while section 6.5.3 of Prisons Procedure 302 on work camps provides that prisoners may apply for work camp placement, its section 7.1 provides that the designated superintendent shall ensure that those prisoners who may be suitable for work camp placement who have not initiated an application are appropriately assessed for inclusion. The Committee notes the Government's indication that there are currently five prisoner work camps and that the superintendents are aware of eligible prisoners and proactively canvas all prisoners to gather interest for work camp placement. The Department of Justice encourages prisoners to consider work camp placements, however, they have to individually consent to the placement and are appraised of and agree to the conditions of the placement.

In light of the above considerations, the Committee recalls that the Convention addresses not only situations where prisoners are "employed" by the private company or placed in a position of providing services to the private company, but also situations where prisoners are hired to or placed at the disposal of private undertakings but remain under the authority and control of the prison administration. It again draws the Government's attention to the fact that the work of prisoners in private prisons or for private companies is only compatible with the Convention where it does not involve compulsory labour. To this end, the formal, freely given and informed consent of the persons concerned is required, in addition to further guarantees and safeguards covering the essential elements of a labour relationship, such as wages, occupational safety and health and social security. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the necessary measures will be taken in Queensland, South Australia, Victoria and Western Australia, both in law and practice, in order to ensure that formal, freely given and informed consent of convicts is required, as well as conditions approximating those of a free labour relationship for work in privately operated prisons and for all work of prisoners for private enterprises, both inside and outside prison premises. It requests in particular the Government to:

- (i) provide information on the legislative provisions that regulate the procedures and working conditions of prisoners employed in other prison industries in Queensland, including both commercial industries and services industries;
- (ii) amend section 29(1) of the Correctional Services Act 1982 of South Australia, in order to align it with the indicated practice, and specify whether remand prisoners are now compelled to work;
- (iii) provide information on the legislative provisions in the State of Victoria which provide that prisoners in privately operated prisons are not compelled to work, while indicating how, in practice, it is ensured that the prisoners concerned offer themselves voluntarily, by giving their free and informed consent (as well as examples of the forms through which prisoners may apply for vacant positions in prison industries and any other relevant document signed); and

(iv) amend section 95(4) of the Prisons Act and section 43 of the Prison Regulations of Western Australia, in order to align the legislation with indicated practice.

2. Work of prisoners for private enterprises. Tasmania. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that there were no privately operated prisons in Tasmania. However, according to section 33 of the Corrections Act 1997, a prisoner may be directed to work within or outside of the prison premises. Pursuant to Schedule 1 (Part 2.26) of the Act, refusal to comply with such direction is considered a prison offence. The Government indicated that prisoners in Tasmania work for private enterprises on a voluntary basis and must apply for external leave in accordance with the Corrections Act 1997 (sections 41 and 42). The Government added that, in practice, there is no requirement for prisoners to participate in such employment and no penalty for non-participation.

The Committee notes the Government's statement that there has been no change introduced to align the legislation with the indicated practice but that due consideration would be given to the Committee's request to amend the Corrections Act 1997. The Committee welcomes this information and once again requests the Government to take the necessary steps in order to align the legislation with the indicated practice according to which prisoners work for private enterprises on a voluntary basis.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 2000)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Azerbaijan Trade Unions Confederation (ATUC), received on 13 May 2022, the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), received on 25 August 2022, and the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 1 September 2022. It also notes the detailed discussion that was held by the Committee on the Application of Standards (the Conference Committee) at the 110th Session of the International Labour Conference (June 2022), regarding the application of the Convention by Azerbaijan, as well as of the Government's report.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 110th Session, May–June 2022)

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Sanctions involving compulsory labour as a punishment for expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. The Committee previously noted the indications by a significant number of United Nations and European institutions and bodies on the use of various provisions of the Criminal Code as a basis for the prosecution of journalists, bloggers, human rights defenders, and other persons who had expressed critical opinions. The Committee notes that the Conference Committee urged the Government to ensure, among others, that the right to hold or express political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system without the threat of penalties involving compulsory labour is fully respected in line with Article 1(a) of the Convention.

The Committee takes due note of the adoption by the Government of the Action Plan for 2022–23 containing various measures to address the 2022 conclusions of the Conference Committee. The Committee also notes the Government's request for ILO technical assistance to conduct a review of the national legislation and practice to ensure the application of the Convention.

The Government further indicates that the sanctions of correctional and public works established for the violation of sections 147 regarding defamation, 169.1 on organization or participation in a prohibited public assembly, 233 on organization of group actions violating public order, and 283.1

regarding inflaming the national, racial or religious enmity of the Criminal Code do not constitute compulsory labour. In particular, according to the Government, the sanction of correctional work which represents a deduction of 5–20 per cent from the convicted person's earnings does result in the direct involvement of a convicted person in compulsory labour. The Government also points out that the sanction of public works which consists of an obligation to perform socially useful work does not lead to the social isolation of convicted persons and should be performed considering their age, state of health and professional experience.

The Government further underlines that sections 147, 169.1, 233 and 283.1 of the Criminal Code are in line with the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) and Convention No. 105 as the former, in Article 2(2)(c), stipulates that "any work or service exacted from any person as a consequence of a conviction in a court of law ..." shall not be considered forced or compulsory labour. In addition, the Government points out that sections 147, 169.1, 233 and 283.1 of the Criminal Code are not widely used in practice. According to the statistics of the Supreme Court of Azerbaijan, in 2021, there were approximately 32 court decisions handed down under section 147; no court decision under section 169.1; 2 court decisions under section 233; and 2 court decisions under section 283.1. The Government further indicates that, in 2021, an amnesty was applied to 17,267 convicted persons, which is the largest amnesty in terms of the number of persons covered. In addition, a number of offences were decriminalized following the legislative amendments to the Criminal Code in 2017 and 2020.

With respect to the judgments delivered by the European Court of Human Rights (ECHR) concerning the detentions and convictions of opposition political activists in Azerbaijan, the Government indicates that in several cases, the convictions have been quashed or the criminal proceedings have been terminated and compensation has been provided to the applicants.

The Committee notes the observations of the ATUC indicating its request to the ILO for technical assistance to conduct awareness-raising and capacity building activities on the application of the Convention. The ATUC further indicates that it has not received any complaints on the use of forced or compulsory labour. The Committee also notes the IOE's observations indicating that immediate and effective steps are needed to ensure that no person who peacefully expresses political opinions or opposes the established political, social or economic system can be given a sentence involving compulsory labour or imprisonment, either in law or in practice. The Committee further notes that the ITUC expresses its disagreement with the Government's statement that the sanction of correctional work does not amount to compulsory labour. The ITUC further indicates that despite the decriminalization of certain offences, the administrative penalties which are applied against human rights activists have increased from 15 days to 90 days of imprisonment.

With respect to sanctions of correctional work, public works and imprisonment established by sections 147, 169.1, 233 and 283.1 of the Criminal Code, the Committee notes that they involve compulsory labour for convicted persons. Regarding the sanction of correctional work, the Committee notes that convicts without a job are obliged to seek employment, including by registering with the employment agency, and cannot refuse a job offered to them (section 43 of the Code on the Execution of Penal Sentences). Convicts who have not found a job without a justified reason within a determined period of time are subject to sanctions, including the replacement of the unserved part of correctional work by the sanctions of restriction of freedom or imprisonment (section 51 of the Code on the Execution of Penal Sentences). The Committee notes in this respect that the sanction of correctional work leads to indirect coercion to perform labour under the threat of a penalty and results in compulsory labour. The Committee further observes that public works also involve compulsory labour as they consist of an obligation to perform socially useful work for a period ranging from 240 to 480 hours (section 47 of the Criminal Code). Furthermore, the sanction of imprisonment involves the obligation to perform labour, in accordance with section 95.1 of the Code on the Execution of Penal Sentences. The Committee therefore notes that sanctions of correctional work, public works and imprisonment involve compulsory labour and thus fall under the scope of the Convention.

The Committee further recalls that the exceptions from the definition of forced or compulsory labour set out by Article 2(2) of Convention No. 29 do not automatically apply to Convention No. 105. More particularly, the exemption concerning prison labour or other forms of compulsory labour exacted as a consequence of a conviction in a court of law does not apply to convicted persons sentenced to imprisonment or other punishments involving compulsory labour for expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system within the meaning of Article 1(a) of Convention No. 105 (2007 General Survey on the eradication of forced labour, paragraph 144).

The Committee strongly urges the Government to continue to take the necessary measures to ensure that, both in law and practice, no one who, in a peaceful manner, expresses political views or opposes the established political, social or economic system can be sentenced to sanctions under which compulsory labour is imposed. The Committee once again requests the Government to review sections 147, 169.1, 233 and 283.1 of the Criminal Code by clearly restricting the scope of these provisions to situations connected with the use of violence or incitement to violence, or by repealing sanctions involving compulsory labour. In this respect, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the outcome of the review of the national legislation and practice. The Committee further requests the Government to continue to provide information on the application of sections 147, 169.1, 233 and 283.1 of the Criminal Code in practice, including any prosecutions carried out or court decisions handed down, indicating the penalties imposed and the facts that led to convictions.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Belarus

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1956)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the Belarusian Congress of Democratic Trade Unions (BKDP), received on 30 August 2021 and 14 January 2022, and requests the Government to provide its reply to these observations. It also notes the discussion that was held by the Committee on the Application of Standards (the Conference Committee) at the 108th Session of the International Labour Conference (June 2019) regarding the application of the Convention by Belarus.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 108th Session, June 2019)

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 2(2)(c) of the Convention. Compulsory labour imposed by the national legislation on certain categories of workers and persons. 1. Financial penalties imposed on unemployed persons. The Committee notes from the conclusions of the Conference Committee that due to the 2018 amendments to Presidential Decree No. 3 of 2015, the sections regarding administrative penalties, levies or compulsory work imposed on unemployed persons has been deleted and, instead, the Decree focuses on employment promotion. The Committee also notes the Government's indication, in its report, that according to the amended Decree, people who are "able-bodied" and capable of working but who are not working have to pay for utility and public services at the full rate without any state subsidy. The Government further specifies the categories of persons who are not required to pay for utility and public services, including hot water, gas supply and heating, at the full rate since they are classified as economically active persons. Such categories include citizens who are legally employed, registered entrepreneurs, military personnel, clergymen, registered unemployed persons, parents or guardians of children under 7 years of age, students in full-time education, people who work or receive education abroad, persons with disabilities, pensioners and other categories, as determined by the Council of Ministers' Decision No. 239 of 31 March 2018. The Government also indicates that the existence of a difficult life situation is taken into account, when deciding whether a person shall pay for utility and public services at the full rate.

The Committee notes the BKDP's observations reiterating its previous statement that the replacement of the former levy imposed on unemployed citizens by an obligation to pay for utilities and public services at the higher price constitutes another form of financial penalty. It further points out that although the amended Decree No. 3 of 2015 uses different terminology, it preserves the same repressive and discriminatory essence and constitutes indirect coercion to work. The BKDP also indicates that there is no publicly available data on the total number of persons included in the list of "able-bodied" citizens not involved in the economy.

The Committee requests the Government to continue to ensure that the implementation of Decree No. 3 of 2015 in practice does not go beyond the purpose of employment promotion. The Committee also requests the Government to continue to provide information on the application of the Decree in practice, particularly on the number of persons who are enlisted as "able-bodied" citizens not involved in the economy, as well as the number of persons who are required to pay for utilities and public services at the full rate.

2. Persons interned in "medical labour centres". The Committee previously noted that according to Act No. 104-3 of 4 January 2010, citizens suffering from chronic alcoholism, drug addiction or substance abuse who have faced administrative charges (three or more times in one year) for committing administrative violations under the influence of alcohol, narcotics or other intoxicating substances may be sent to medical labour centres. Another category of citizens who may be placed in medical labour centres comprises persons who are required to reimburse the State expenditure on the maintenance of children placed under state care, and who have committed disciplinary offences at work twice in one year, as a result of using alcohol or other intoxicating substances. The Committee further noted that both categories of persons might be sent to medical labour centres by a court order for a period of 12–18 months. The Conference Committee also noted that citizens might be required to participate in vocational skills training and compulsory work in medical labour centres, and called on the Government to ensure that no excessive penalties are imposed on citizens to oblige them to perform work.

The Committee notes that Act No. 70-3 of 10 December 2020 amending Act No. 104-3 of 4 January 2010 has established a new category of citizens who may be sent to medical labour centres. It includes "able-bodied" non-working citizens leading an asocial lifestyle who were warned about the possibility of being sent to medical labour centres and committed an administrative offence under the influence of alcohol, narcotics or other intoxicating substances within a year of the warning. Such persons may be sent to medical labour centres only by a court order after medical examination. The Government points out that timely referral of these categories of citizens to medical labour centres is considered a preventive measure taken against possible offences due to their asocial lifestyle. In this respect, the Committee notes that in her 2019 report, the United Nations Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Belarus noted that the term "asocial lifestyle" is extremely vague and expressed concern that this could lead to cases of arbitrary detention or other abuses (A/HRC/41/52, paragraph 79).

The Government points out that due to the state policy on the prevention of drunkenness and alcoholism among the population, as well as the social rehabilitation of persons suffering from alcoholism, drug addiction and substance abuse, the number of people sent to medical labour centres has almost halved over the last five years. The Government further indicates that citizens placed into medical labour centres may work at the production enterprises of the Ministry of Internal Affairs or other enterprises located near medical labour centres. In this regard, the Committee observes, from the internal regulations of medical labour centres approved by the Decree of the Ministry of Internal Affairs No. 86 of 25 March 2021, that persons placed in medical labour centres are obliged to work at places and in jobs determined by the administration of medical labour centres (section 185).

The Committee notes the BKDP's observations indicating that medical labour centres are de facto detention institutions, where the assistance in the treatment of alcoholism is either not provided at all or only formally. The BKDP further indicates that in 2020, 4,494 persons were sent to medical labour centres and about one third of these persons did not have problems with alcohol. The BKDP also indicates the cases of work performed by persons placed in medical labour centres for the benefit of the private sector.

The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the implementation of Act No. 104-3 of 4 January 2010, as amended, in practice, indicating, in particular, the total number of persons placed in medical labour centres. The Committee further requests the Government to specify criteria for the determination of a lifestyle as "asocial" according to Act No. 104-3, as amended in 2020. It also requests the Government to indicate the types of work which may be performed by persons placed in medical labour centres and whether such work may be performed for the benefit of private entities.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1995)

Previous comments: observation and direct request

The Committee notes the observations of the Belarusian Congress of Democratic Trade Unions (BKDP), received on 30 August 2021 and 14 January 2022, and requests the Government to provide its reply to these observations.

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Sanctions involving compulsory labour as a punishment for the expression of political views or views opposed to the established political, social or economic system. The Committee previously requested the Government to amend or repeal sections 193(1) (participation in the activities of unregistered groups), 339 (hooliganism and malicious hooliganism), 342 (organization of group actions violating public order), 367 (libelling the President), 368 (insulting the President) and 369(2) (violation of the procedure for the organization or holding of assemblies, meetings, street marches, demonstrations and picketing) of the Criminal Code to ensure that no penalties involving compulsory labour may be imposed for the peaceful expression of political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system.

The Committee notes that according to the information provided by the Government, in its report, section 193(1) of the Criminal Code was repealed. The Government further indicates that there is no linkage between crimes punishable under sections 339, 342, 367, 368 and 369(2) of the Criminal Code and the peaceful expression of political views or views by citizens that are ideologically opposed to the established political, social and economic system.

The Committee notes that according to the 2020 Report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights on the situation of human rights in Belarus in the context of the 2020 presidential election, criminal charges were increasingly brought in the context of protests. Between 9 August and 30 November 2020, more than 1,000 criminal cases were opened against peaceful protesters, opposition members and supporters, journalists, human rights defenders, lawyers and persons critical of the Government. The overwhelming majority of criminal charges against protesters were brought under section 342 (organization of group actions violating public order) of the Criminal Code; section 293 (organization of or participation in mass riots), punishable by up to eight years of imprisonment; section 339.2 (hooliganism and malicious hooliganism); and various charges for resistance to and violence against law enforcement officers. Charges were also brought for "insulting State officials", including by comments posted on social media, and for "insulting the flag and national symbols" (A/HRC/46/4, paragraphs 43–45). The Committee notes the BKDP's observations that as of 14 November 2021, 843 people in Belarus were considered political prisoners and more than half of them were in institutions where prisoners are required to work.

The Committee also notes that, in its Opinion No. 50/2021, the United Nations Working Group on Arbitrary Detention concluded that the arrest and detention of a journalist under sections 130(3) (deliberate incitement to social hatred), 293(1), and 342 of the Criminal Code was arbitrary and based solely on his journalistic activity, and his freedoms of expression and assembly (A/HRC/WGAD/2021/50, paragraphs 5, 82 and 83). In addition, in its Opinion No. 23/2021, the United Nations Working Group on Arbitrary Detention concluded that the arrest and detention of the opposition candidate in the 2020 election under sections 130(3), 191(1) (obstruction of the exercise of electoral rights), 293(1) and 342(1) of the Criminal Code was arbitrary and the criminal proceedings were used to prevent a high-level political opponent expressing his views and participating in public life (A/HRC/WGAD/2021/23, paragraphs 61, 85 and 88).

The Committee deplores the use of various provisions of the Criminal Code to prosecute and convict persons who express their political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system, leading to penalties of the limitation of freedom, deprivation of freedom or imprisonment, all involving compulsory labour. The Committee therefore strongly urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures to ensure that, both in law and practice, no one who, in a peaceful manner, expresses political views or opposes the established political, social or economic system, can be sentenced to sanctions under which compulsory labour is imposed. The Committee once again requests the Government to amend or repeal sections 339, 342, 367, 368 and 369(2) of the Criminal Code by clearly restricting the scope of these provisions to situations connected with the use of violence or incitement to violence, or by repealing sanctions involving compulsory labour. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this respect.

Article 1(d). Sanctions involving compulsory labour as a punishment for participation in strikes. The Committee notes the indication by the Government that participation of citizens in peaceful strikes or peaceful protests does not entail criminal liability, particularly under sections 310(1) (the intentional blocking of transport communications) and 342 (the organization of group actions violating public order and resulting in disturbances of operation of transport or work of enterprises, institutions or organizations) of the Criminal Code.

In this regard, the Committee noted in its 2021 comments on the application of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) new detailed allegations of retaliation, including arrests and detentions of trade unionists and workers who participated in trade union led strike actions. The Committee further notes that in its conclusions of 2022, the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards noted with great concern and deeply regretted the numerous allegations of extreme violence to repress peaceful protests and strikes, and the detention, imprisonment and torture of workers while in custody following the presidential election in August 2020, as well as allegations regarding the lack of investigation in relation to these incidents.

The Committee notes with deep concern the information relating to the punishment of workers with sanctions involving compulsory labour for their peaceful participation in strikes. The Committee recalls that Article 1(d) of the Convention prohibits the use of any form of compulsory labour as a punishment for having participated in a strike. The Committee further reiterates that sections 310(1) and 342 of the Criminal Code are worded in broad terms and allow for sanctions involving compulsory labour, against the peaceful participation in assemblies, meetings, street marches, demonstrations and picketing.

The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure, both in law and practice, that no sanctions involving compulsory labour can be imposed for the mere fact of peacefully participating in strikes. It requests the Government to amend or repeal sections 310(1) and 342 of the Criminal Code by clearly restricting the scope of these provisions to situations connected with the use of violence or incitement to violence. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the application of sections 310(1) and 342 of the Criminal Code in practice, including relevant court decisions, indicating in particular the penalties applied.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1997)

Previous comment

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Sanctions involving the obligation to work as a punishment for expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that a number of provisions of the Penal Code are worded in terms broad enough to lend themselves to application as a means of punishment for the expression of views. It referred to offences under sections 47 and 48 (publications prohibited by the President as being “contrary to the public interest”), 51(1)(c), (d) and (2) (seditious offences; raising discontent or disaffection amongst the inhabitants being considered a seditious intention), 66–68 (managing or being a member of an unlawful society, particularly of a society declared unlawful as being “dangerous to peace and order”) of the Penal Code which may be punished with sentences of imprisonment, involving compulsory prison labour, pursuant to section 92 of the Prisons Act, Cap 21:03 of 1979.

The Committee notes the Government’s information in its report that consultations are under way to review the Constitution, to inform the Government of the legislation requiring alignment with the Constitution, including the Penal Code. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the necessary measures will be taken to amend sections 47, 48, 51(1)(c), (d) and (2), sections 66–68, as well as sections 74 and 75 of the Penal Code, so as to ensure that no penalties involving compulsory labour may be imposed for the expression of political views or views opposed to the established system, for example by restricting the scope of application of these provisions to situations of violence, incitement to violence, or engagement in preparatory acts aimed at violence. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the developments made in this regard.

Article 1(c). Punishment for breaches of labour discipline. The Committee previously noted that section 43(1)(a) of the Trade Disputes Act (No. 15 of 2004) provides for penalties of imprisonment involving compulsory prison labour for any wilful breach of a contract of employment by an employee who is acting either alone or in combination with others, if such breach affects the operation of essential services. The Committee recalled that Article 1(c) of the Convention prohibits the use of compulsory labour as a punishment for breaches of labour discipline. Penalties involving compulsory labour could only be held compatible with the Convention when applied to breaches of labour discipline that impair or are liable to endanger the operation of essential services, in the strict sense of the term. The Committee observed in that regard that the list of essential services specified in the Trade Disputes Act was not limited to essential services in the strict sense of the term.

The Committee notes the Government’s information that the list of essential services under the Trade Disputes Act has been amended by the Trade Disputes (Amendment) Act, 2019. It notes with interest the fact that the list of essential services has been reduced and that services such as diamond sorting, cutting and selling services; teaching services; government broadcasting services; the Bank of Botswana; vaccine laboratory services; railways operation and maintenance services; immigration and customs services; transportation and distribution services of petroleum products; sewerage services; and public veterinary services have been removed from the list. The Committee refers in this regard to its comments under the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Rights to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87).

Brazil

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1957)

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), the Single Confederation of Workers (CUT) and the National Association of Labour Court Judges (ANAMATRA), received on 1 September, 2 September and 6 December 2021, respectively. It also notes the Government's response to the observations of the CUT.

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. "Slave labour". (a) Legal framework. (i) Section 149 of the Criminal Code criminalizing "reducing a person to a condition akin to slavery". The Committee previously referred to the debates concerning the issue of the criminalization of "reducing a person to a condition akin to slavery" as envisaged in section 149 of the Criminal Code and the legislative proposals to amend the section. The Committee notes the Government's reference in its report to the adoption of Decree No. 1293 of 2017 which sets out a specific definition of the elements that constitute the crime of reducing a person to a condition akin to slavery within the meaning of section 149 of the Labour Code, namely forced labour, a harassing working day, degrading working conditions, the restriction of the freedom of movement of the worker by reason of having contracted a debt, and/or retention at the workplace. In this regard, the Government emphasizes that it emerges from these definitions and the case law that "the work of a person reduced to a condition akin to slavery within the meaning of section 149 of the Criminal Code (hereinafter "slave labour") is not limited to the use of physical violence (when used to restrict individual freedom), but may also be characterized by various other forms, where there is abuse of human dignity.

The Committee notes that in their observations both the CUT and the ANAMATRA express concern at the fact that the legal specification of the notion of reducing a person to a condition akin to slavery continues to be controversial at the political level and in certain jurisdictions. The ANAMATRA expresses concern at several draft legislative texts submitted with a view to the amendment of section 149 of the Criminal Code and at the restrictive interpretation of this section by certain first instance courts, and in particular of the concept of degrading working conditions, despite the fact that higher courts have already given a precise and objective interpretation of the concept in consolidated case law.

The Committee requests the Government to continue taking the necessary measures to ensure that the discussions relating to the scope of application of section 149 of the Criminal Code do not constitute in practice an obstacle to the action taken by the competent authorities for the identification and protection of the victims of any situation involving forced labour and to punish the perpetrators of this crime in an appropriate and swift manner.

(ii) Article 243 of the Constitution. The Committee recalls that, following the Constitutional amendment adopted in 2014, article 243 of the Constitution allows the expropriation of rural or urban property in which the use of slave labour has been identified and the consignment of this property to agrarian reform and social housing programme. The Committee notes the absence of information on the application of this article in practice. It observes in this regard that, although the Ministry of Labour and the Higher Labour Court consider that this article may be directly applied, the Attorney-General of the Union is of the view that article 243 of the Constitution is of "limited efficacy" and that its application depends on the adoption of legislation to give effect to it (case No. 000450-57.2017.5.23.0041, labour tribunal of Colider (TRT, 23rd Region) and case No. TST-RR-450-57.2017.5.23.0041). The Committee reiterates that the possibility of the expropriation of the property of persons found guilty of having imposed "slave labour" is an important tool in combating this phenomenon as it contributes to undermining the economic interests of those who exploit slave labour and to combating the sense of impunity. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures adopted to ensure that effect is given in practice to this provision of the Constitution. It requests the Government to provide information on any decisions concerning expropriation that have been handed down and the measures adopted to ensure their execution. In particular, the Committee requests the Government to indicate whether the funds resulting from expropriated property directly benefit workers who have been victims of forced labour, thereby preventing the risk of them becoming victims once again.

(iii) Register of employers. With reference to the questions arising concerning the publication of the list of legal or physical persons or entities found to be responsible for using slave labour (known as the “dirty list”), the Committee observes that, following appeals to find it unconstitutional, the Supreme Federal Tribunal confirmed, on 14 September 2020, the constitutionality of the establishment, publication and updating of the list. The Government reiterates in this regard that persons and entities are included in the list only upon finalization of the administrative procedure relating to the violation reported, and that during this procedure employers benefit from constitutional procedural guarantees, such as the right to defence and respect for the principle of an adversarial procedure. Inclusion in the list is for a period of two years. The Committee notes, from the information available on the website of the Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare that, following its suspension in 2015 and 2016, the Ministry is continuing to update and publish the list every six months. The list published in October 2022 added 95 employers (66 persons and 29 legal persons or entities), bringing the total number of persons and entities on the list to 179.

The Committee emphasizes once again that this list is an information tool both for society as a whole and for enterprises, which are therefore in a better position to control and monitor their supply chains. The Committee notes in this regard the Government’s reference to the National Pact Institute for the Eradication of Slave Labour (InPacto), of which the member enterprises are committed to determining the commercial restrictions that are to be established with legal entities on the list. The Committee therefore firmly encourages the Government to continue taking all the necessary measures to ensure that the list of physical and legal persons and entities recognized as being responsible for the use of labour in conditions akin to slavery is published regularly.

(b) Systematic and coordinated action. Recalling that, because of its complexity, action to combat forced labour requires coordinated and concerted action by the public authorities and the involvement of civil society as a whole, the Committee previously requested the Government to provide information on the coordination activities of the National Commission for the Eradication of Slave Labour (CONATRAE) and on the implementation of the action envisaged in the second National Plan for the Eradication of Slave Labour (Plan II). The Government indicates that, despite the measures adopted since 1995, slave labour still persists in Brazil, and for this reason action to combat slave labour has been adopted at the level of a State policy. The Government reiterates that it is essential not only to raise the awareness of the Government authorities, but also the whole of the population of this issue. The Committee notes that CONATRAE, which has the mandate to support the implementation of Plan II and to propose measures for this purpose, approved the final evaluation report of the implementation of the Plan (a report drawn up with the assistance of the Office). According to the evaluation, nearly 70 per cent of the objectives set out in Plan II were achieved or partially achieved. In this context, CONATRAE has published a series of recommendations on the six pillars included in Plan II (including enforcement, prevention and the reintegration of victims). The Committee also takes due note of the creation of the SmartLab platform, through a joint initiative by the Ministry of Labour and the Office. This platform offers an observatory for the eradication of slave labour and trafficking in persons, which brings together all the information contained in the databases of the various authorities with competence for combating slave labour with a view to facilitating the effective management of public policies and programmes in this field.

The Committee requests the Government to continue taking the necessary measures to achieve all the objectives of the National Plan for the Eradication of Slave Labour (Plan II) and for the implementation of the recommendations made in this respect by CONATRAE and to provide information on this subject, with an indication of the results achieved and the difficulties encountered.

It also requests the Government to indicate the action taken by CONATRAE to ensure systematic, coherent and coordinated action to combat slave labour throughout the territory.

(c) Action by the labour inspection services and labour courts. The Committee previously requested the Government to strengthen the capacities of the labour inspection services and the labour courts. It emphasized on the key role played by the Special Mobile Inspection Group (GEFM) in the identification of cases of slave labour and by the labour investigation authorities which, through their action, have succeeded in imposing substantial fines for violations of labour legislation and compensation for the moral damage suffered by workers and the collective moral prejudice suffered by society. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, since the beginning of its operations in May 1995, the GEFM has released over 59,000 workers from situations of slave labour and that over 126 million reais have been received by workers for the wages and compensation due. It adds that the experience acquired by the GEFM and its operating methods have been presented in the context of the training provided to the Regional Labour and Employment Superintendences (SRTEs), which are now developing their own programmes to combat slavery-like labour. There are now more operations of the SRTEs than of the GEFM, which acts in a subsidiary capacity in cases where operations are urgent, complex or dangerous (54 and 46 per cent respectively in 2020). The Government adds that, following the adoption of Decree No. 1.293/2017, the labour inspection services adopted Directive No. 139 in 2018 reaffirming that inspections for the eradication of slave labour are coordinated by the Labour Inspection Secretariat (SIT) and establishing a non-exhaustive and non-exclusive list of indicators to be verified in the cases of suspected slave labour. The Government indicates that 272 operations were carried out in 2019, resulting in the release of 1,054 workers, of whom 655 were in the agricultural sector. In 2020, despite the social distancing measures related to the COVID-19 pandemic, operations continued with 276 being undertaken, resulting in the release of 936 workers. According to the assessment report of 2020 on the work of the labour inspection services in Brazil for the eradication of labour akin to slavery, 78 per cent of the workers released were in the rural sector (particularly in coffee cultivation and the production of vegetable carbon) and there was an increase in the urban sector.

The Committee notes the reference by the ITUC to the dismantling of mechanisms established in the past to combat slave labour. It refers in particular to the drastic reduction in the annual budget allocated by the federal government to action to combat slave labour; the lack of resources of labour prosecutors, who are not able to carry out investigations in the cases referred to them; and the shortage of federal labour inspectors. According to the ITUC, only 20 per cent of reported cases are investigated and the existence of slave labour is only proved in 45 per cent of those cases. ANAMATRA comes to the same conclusion and emphasizes that budget cuts have been stepped up since 2019 and that in 2021 the budget announced for inspections and action to combat slave labour was the lowest for the past seven years, with a cut of 47.3 per cent.

The Committee recalls that, as a result of their inter-institutional composition (labour inspectors and representatives of the labour prosecution services, the federal police and the federal prosecution services), the GEFM and now the SRTEs are a vital link in action to combat slave labour, not only through the release of workers from situations of forced labour, but also through the gathering of evidence which can be used to initiate civil and criminal prosecutions against the perpetrators of these practices. While noting certain of the measures adopted, the Committee urges the Government to intensify its efforts to take the necessary measures to provide the labour inspection services, and particularly the GEFM, with sufficient human and financial resources to be able to carry out their mission throughout the territory, and to reinforce the means of action of the labour investigation and prosecution authorities. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures adopted in this respect and specify the number of operations undertaken, the number of workers released, the sectors concerned, the fines imposed and the compensation granted.

(d) Imposition of criminal penalties. The Committee previously noted the absence of specific information on the rulings handed down by the federal judiciary under section 149 of the Criminal Code.

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that 951 judicial proceedings were initiated between 2001 and 2020 under section 149 of the Criminal Code. It also provides information relating to seven judicial decisions in which persons were convicted (one in 2010, one in 2017, three in 2019 and two in 2020). The Committee notes the indication by the CUT in its observations that, although many judicial proceedings are opened under section 149 of the Criminal Code, there are few convictions. The Committee also observes that, in its 2021 report on the situation of human rights in Brazil, the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights (IACHR) notes with concern that, even though the large number of workers liberated since 1995 and the sums paid to them point to fairly positive outcomes, related criminal convictions are still rare and there have been relatively few convictions for "exploiting labour under conditions akin to slavery". The Committee recalls in this regard that, in accordance with Article 25 of the Convention, really adequate penalties shall be strictly enforced on persons for the exaction of forced labour. The Committee therefore requests the Government to provide specific information on the number of cases related to section 149 of the Criminal Code that are currently before the federal prosecution services, the number of judicial proceedings initiated, the number of convictions and the nature of the penalties imposed. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate the measures taken to reinforce coordination and collaboration between the labour inspection, the police, the labour prosecution services and the federal prosecution services for the gathering of evidence with a view to initiating judicial proceedings and prosecuting those suspected of the exaction of forced labour and, if they are found guilty, imposing criminal penalties on them that are commensurate with the crime committed.

(e) Protection and rehabilitation of victims. The Committee notes that the Government is continuing to provide emergency and medium-term assistance to victims of forced labour with a view to facilitating their reintegration (particularly through the provision of unemployment benefit corresponding to three minimum wages). The Committee requests the Government to continue taking measures to protect and assist victims of forced labour and facilitate their social rehabilitation and to provide detailed information on the specific measures adopted in this respect. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the action taken to raise the awareness of workers of the risks that arise in the regions most affected by forced labour.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1969)

Previous comment

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. 1. Trafficking in persons. The Committee previously requested the Government to continue to take measures to ensure that thorough investigations and prosecutions are carried out in cases of trafficking in persons, and to provide information on the measures taken to protect and assist victims of trafficking.

The Government indicates in its report that, according to the 2019 report of the National Committee for Counter Trafficking (NCCT), the results of the fight against trafficking in persons for forced labour and sexual exploitation demonstrate progress, as compared to 2018. In 2019, legal proceedings were initiated in 103 cases, convictions were handed down in 63 cases and 140 perpetrators were sentenced to imprisonment. The Government also states that the NCCT conducted 163 training courses, benefiting 6,894 participants to strengthen the capacity of focal points and law enforcement officers relating to issues such as trafficking in persons, safe migration and victim identification. In addition, 37 workshops on law enforcement in the area of trafficking in persons were held, with 3,160 participants.

The Government also refers to the adoption of the National Strategic Plan for Counter Trafficking in Persons 2019-23, on the basis of which it commits to protect identified victims of trafficking and to expand access to information and social services, including psychological support, legal assistance, financial support, and employment and documentation assistance, in order to encourage long-term integration. The Committee notes in this regard that the National Strategic Plan 2019-23 includes four strategic objectives, namely: (i) strengthening cooperation; (ii) promoting prevention; (iii) promoting law enforcement; and (iv) strengthening the protection of victims.

The Committee further notes that, in its concluding observations of 18 May 2022, the United Nations Human Rights Committee expressed concerns about reports of a lack of adequate protection for victims of trafficking, despite the significant efforts made to eliminate trafficking in persons (CCPR/C/KHM/CO/3, paragraph 30). The Committee encourages the Government to pursue its efforts to prevent and combat trafficking in persons and requests it to continue to provide information on the number of cases of trafficking identified and investigated, as well as on the number of convictions handed down and the penalties imposed on perpetrators. The Committee hopes that the Government will take the necessary measures to implement the four strategic objectives of the National Strategic Plan for Counter Trafficking in Persons 2019-23 and requests it to provide information on the assessment of the measures taken, the results achieved and the difficulties encountered. Lastly, the Committee requests the Government to pursue its efforts to provide assistance and protection to victims of trafficking, and to indicate the measures taken in this regard and the number of victims who have benefited from such measures.

2. Vulnerability of migrant workers to conditions of forced labour. The Committee previously requested the Government to continue its efforts to prevent migrant workers from Cambodia from becoming victims of abusive practices and conditions that could amount to forced labour in receiving countries, including Thailand and Malaysia. The Committee notes the Government's indication that it signed two Memorandums of Understanding (MoU) and a bilateral Agreement on labour and trafficking with Thailand, the principal destination country. It also signed the MoU on the Recruitment and Employment of Workers and the MoU on the Recruitment and Employment of Domestic Workers with Malaysia. It further states that the two Governments are working closely together to finalize the Standard Operating Procedures for sending Cambodian migrant workers to Malaysia. The Government reports that in 2020, there were 1,220,197 Cambodian migrant workers in Thailand and that through the action of the Committee for providing legalization to Cambodian workers who are staying and working in Thailand, approximately 1.07 million migrant workers were provided with proper legal documents to reside and work in Thailand by June 2018.

The Government also indicates that in 2020, 12 inspections were carried out in private recruitment agencies – two private agencies were given warnings and one had its operating licence revoked. The Ministry of Labour and Vocational Training received 21 complaints from migrant workers, of which 14 were resolved, four were cancelled and three are ongoing. The Government also refers to the adoption of the Cambodian Labour Migration Policy 2019-23, which has three main goals, namely strengthening migration governance, protecting and promoting the rights of migrant workers, and linking labour migration to socioeconomic development. In this framework, the Government will coordinate and collaborate with Myanmar, Laos and Thailand to develop a standard employment contract for migrant workers in the fishery sector. In addition, the Government has appointed a number of labour attachés to destination countries such as Thailand, Malaysia, South Korea and Japan in order to promote and protect the rights of migrant workers, including by ensuring that they are protected from labour exploitation and discrimination, and by assisting them regarding employment contracts, working conditions, legal documents and social protection.

The Committee also notes from the Rapid Assessment on Social and Health Impact of COVID-19 Among Returning Migrant Workers in Cambodia of the United Nations COVID-19 Response and Recovery Fund that 14.7 per cent of survey respondents reported some form of employment abuse, including withholding of wages, false promises, excessive working hours, withholding of identity/travel documents and psychological abuse.

While taking due note of the measures taken by the Government to enhance the protection of Cambodian migrant workers and prevent them from being caught in abusive practices and conditions of work that could amount to forced labour, the Committee requests it to step up its efforts in this regard. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on further measures taken in this regard and in particular with a view to: (i) providing training and information to candidates for migration on regular and safe recruitment channels, labour rights and the risks of forced labour associated with migration; (ii) ensuring that migrant workers have access to complaints mechanisms to assert their rights when they face exploitation and abusive practices and that they receive protection and compensation; and (iii) increasing the number of inspections undertaken to monitor the recruitment and placement agencies. Please provide information on the number of migrant workers assisted and abuses identified.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1999)

Previous comments: observation and direct request

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Sanctions involving the obligation to work as a punishment for the expression of political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. Noting that penalties of imprisonment involve an obligation to work pursuant to section 68 of the Act on Prisons of 2011, the Committee previously referred to a number of provisions of the national legislation providing for penalties of imprisonment for certain activities, which fall within the scope of Article 1(a) of the Convention and thus have a bearing on the application of the Convention. The Committee expressed its deep concern over the detentions of, and prosecutions against members of the opposition party, NGO representatives, trade union members and human rights defenders, and deplored the imprisonment (involving compulsory prison labour) of members of the Cambodia National Rescue Party (CNRP), which was dissolved in November 2017.

The Committee requested the Government to review the following provisions of the national legislation and urged the Government to ensure that no penalties involving compulsory labour may be imposed pursuant to these provisions on persons who express political views or views opposed to the established political, economic or social system:

- (i) section 42 of the Act on Political Parties, as amended in 2017, according to which various offences related to the administration or management of a political party which has been dissolved, or whose activities have been suspended by a court, or whose registration has been refused, are punishable with sanctions of imprisonment for a term of up to one year;
- (ii) sections 494 and 495 on incitement to disturb public security by speech, writing, picture or any audio-visual communication in public or to the public, section 522 on publication of commentaries intended to unlawfully coerce judicial authorities, and section 523 on discrediting judicial decisions of the Penal Code of 2009;
- (iii) sections 305-309 on public defamation and insult; and
- (iv) provisions of the Penal Code relating to insult and criticism of the King (section 445 and section 437 bis introduced in 2018).

The Government indicates in its report that the freedom of citizens to express themselves peacefully and to engage in politics is guaranteed by national legislation. It states that any citizen can freely support any political party without being discriminated against, except in the case of the commission of criminal offences. It points out that the Government has no power to dissolve a political party; only the Supreme Court has the authority to do so. In addition, it states that section 42 of the Act on Political Parties as amended provides a precise definition regarding the penalty for any person who “continues to administer or lead a political party that the Supreme Court has finally dissolved”. It adds that criticizing the letters and judgements of the Court with the aim of causing disorder or jeopardising the institutions of the Cambodian Government and disrespecting the Court’s judgement is deemed a criminal offence according to the Penal Code. Regarding the Cybercrime Act, the Government indicates that the adoption of the draft Act has been postponed due to the COVID-19 pandemic and that discussions on the draft Act are still ongoing.

The Committee notes that, in its concluding observations of 2022, the United Nations Human Rights Committee expressed concern over: (i) the persistent violation of the freedom of expression, including through reports of the closure of media outlets, the blockage of websites critical of the Government, and the use of criminal legal actions against journalists and human rights defenders; (ii) the arrest and detention of protesters; (iii) the dissolution of the CNRP in 2017 and of three other opposition parties in 2021; (iv) threats, harassment, arbitrary arrests and mass trials targeting members of the opposition; and (v) the persistent lack of an independent and impartial judiciary (CCPR/C/KHM/CO/3, paragraphs 20, 32, 34, 36 and 38). In this regard, the Committee also notes the information from a news release of 29 June 2022 from a number of United Nations experts according to which at least 43 defendants, who were linked to the CNRP, were convicted in June 2022 at a mass trial on charges of plotting and incitement, and sentenced to penalties of up to eight years’ imprisonment. The United Nations experts highlighted the existence of judicial flaws in these political trials and the lack of solid evidence supporting the charges.

The Committee further notes the concern of the United Nations human rights experts, in a statement of 24 August 2021, regarding sections 494 and 495 of the Penal Code, which are being used systematically to target and convict human rights defenders. In addition, the Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Cambodia underlined, in a press release of 6 October 2021, intolerance towards online criticism of the COVID-19 response, which had led to several arrests and prosecutions, 25 human rights defenders imprisoned, nine opposition political figures sentenced to up to 25 years, and 50 reported instances of harassment of journalists in 2021.

The Committee deeply deplores the continued use of the provisions of the national legislation to arrest, prosecute and convict human rights defenders, opposition members and journalists who express political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system, leading to the imposition of penalties of imprisonment which involve compulsory prison labour. The Committee recalls that although some convictions have been made in accordance with the law of the State, they may fall within the scope of the Convention and thus be contrary to the Convention in so far as they allow persons holding or expressing political or ideological views to be compelled to work. The Committee emphasizes that limitations may be imposed by law on the rights and freedoms of expression which must be accepted as normal safeguards against their abuse (for example the purpose of securing due recognition and respect for the rights and freedoms of others or meeting the just requirements of public order). However, these limitations must meet strict standards of scrutiny regarding their justification and scope and the offences established in the legislation for that purpose should not be defined in such wide or general terms or applied by the judiciary in a way that they will lead to the imposition of penalties involving compulsory labour as a punishment for the expression of political or ideological views (see 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 302–304).

The Committee strongly urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures to ensure that persons who express political views or views opposed to the established system, including that of opposition members, human rights defenders and journalists, are not punished with penal sanctions involving compulsory labour, including compulsory prison labour. It urges the Government to review the wording of section 42 of the Act on Political Parties as well as sections 445, 437 bis, 494, 495, 522 and 523 of the Penal Code, by clearly restricting the scope of these provisions to situations connected with the use of violence or incitement to violence, or by repealing sanctions involving compulsory labour, so as to ensure that their application in practice does not lead to the violation of the Convention. The Committee also requests the Government to provide training to law enforcement bodies in this regard. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide a copy of the amendments to the Penal Code in 2018 which criminalize criticism of the King, as well as information on the practical application of the above-mentioned provisions of the Penal Code and the Act on Political Parties, including the facts that gave rise to the convictions and the nature of the sanctions imposed. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Cybercrime Bill will be drafted and applied taking into account the principles evoked above and the obligations of the Government under the Convention.

Article 1(d) of the Convention. Punishment for participation in strikes. The Committee previously noted from the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) that Van Narong and Pel Voeun, two members of the Cambodian Labour Confederation (CLC), were sentenced to imprisonment for misdemeanour and malicious defamation under sections 311 and 312 of the Penal Code after taking part in a protest following the dismissal of union members and after filing a complaint against two workers for violence. It also noted the arrest and prosecution of four leaders of the Workers Friendship Union Federation for having organized an illegal strike, blocking traffic and disturbing public order. The Committee requested the Government to indicate the legislative provisions and factual arguments on the basis of which the above-mentioned individuals were arrested and prosecuted.

The Government indicates that Van Narong and Pel Voeun were convicted for misdemeanour and malicious defamation, and that their allegations of violence were fictitious. Regarding the arrest and prosecution of the four leaders of the Workers Friendship Union Federation, the Government indicates that it will update the Committee on any developments in this case. The Government also points out that individuals are prosecuted for the offences they have committed and that trade unionists do not enjoy any privilege of impunity.

The Committee notes that in a press release of 5 January 2022, a number of United Nations human rights experts referred to the arrest and detention of at least 29 casino union leaders and activists during a strike, out of which nine have so far been charged with incitement to commit a felony, under sections 494 and 495 of the Penal Code, and remain in custody while the others have been released. The Committee further notes the concerns expressed by United Nations experts in a press release of 16 February 2022 regarding the measures taken under COVID-19 used to impose restrictions on lawful and peaceful strikers. The United Nations experts deemed these restrictions to be unjustified, unnecessary and disproportionate.

The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the application of legislative provisions will not lead in practice to the imposition of sanctions involving compulsory labour (such as compulsory prison labour) on workers for the mere fact of organizing or peacefully participating in strikes, in conformity with Article 1(d) of the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard. The Committee also requests the Government to provide a copy of the court decision regarding the four leaders of the above-mentioned Workers Friendship Union Federation.

In light of the situation described above, the Committee is bound to observe that there has been no progress with regard to protecting freedom of expression in Cambodia and that opposition political activists, journalists, human rights defenders and social media activists who express dissent or criticism of the authorities are convicted and imprisoned under various provisions of the national legislation, including the Penal Code. The Committee deeply deplores the continued use of the provisions of the national legislation, including the Penal Code, to prosecute and convict persons who express their political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system, leading to penalties of imprisonment involving compulsory prison labour. The Committee considers that this case meets the criteria set out in paragraph 114 of its General Report to be asked to come before the Conference.

Chad

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes with concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Article 2(2)(a) of the Convention. Work in the general interest imposed in the context of compulsory military service. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, according to section 14 of Ordinance No. 001/PCE/CEDNACVG/91 of 1991 reorganizing the armed forces within the framework of compulsory military service, conscripts who are fit for service are classified into two categories, one of which remains at the disposal of the military authorities for two years and may be called upon to perform work in the general interest by order of the Government. The Committee recalled that, to be excluded from the scope of application of the Convention and not considered to be forced labour, any work or service exacted under compulsory military service laws must be of a purely military character. The Committee therefore requested the Government to take measures to amend the provisions of section 14 and noted the Government's indication that those provisions would be brought into conformity with the Convention.

The Government once again indicates in its report that it will take the necessary measures to bring the provisions of section 14 of Ordinance No. 001/PCE/CEDNACVG/91 into conformity with the Convention. The Committee notes that section 14 of the Ordinance of 1991 reorganizing the armed forces was reproduced in section 32 of Act No. 012/PR/2006 of 10 March 2006 reorganizing the armed and security forces.

The Committee notes with regret the continued absence of measures bringing the provisions of the legislation on compulsory military service into conformity with the Convention, despite the Committee's requests in this regard over several years. The Committee urges the Government to amend the legislation setting out the rules applicable to compulsory military service in order to limit the work or services exacted as part of compulsory military service to that of a purely military character, without including work in the general interest, in conformity with Article 2(2)(a) of the Convention. The Committee also requests the Government to provide a copy of the legislation currently in force governing compulsory military service. Lastly, it requests the Government to provide information on the number of persons performing work in the general interest by order of the Government and on the nature of such work.

Article 2(2)(c). Work imposed by an administrative authority. For many years, the Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to the need to amend or repeal section 2 of Act No. 14 of 13 November 1959 authorizing the Government to take administrative measures for the relocation, internment or expulsion of persons whose activities constitute a danger for public order and security, under which the administrative authorities may impose work on persons subject to a prohibition of residence once they have completed their sentence. This section provides that a person with a criminal conviction involving the prohibition of residence may be used for work in the public interest for a period the duration of which is determined by order of the Prime Minister.

The Committee notes with regret that the Government reiterates in its report that it will take the necessary measures to amend or repeal section 2 of Act No. 14 of 1959, without reporting any progress in this regard. The Commission recalls that, under Article 2(2)(c) of the Convention, mandatory work exacted from convicts is not considered forced labour only when it is exacted as a consequence of a conviction in a court of law and subject to certain conditions. Consequently, the Committee strongly urges the Government to take the necessary measures to amend or repeal section 2 of Act No. 14 of 13 November 1959 so that persons subjected to a prohibition of residence who have completed their sentence are not sentenced to work in the public interest by administrative authorities. In the meantime, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of section 2 of Act No. 14 of 1959, particularly on the number of sentences imposed under this section.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Costa Rica

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1960)

Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (ratification: 2020)

Previous comment

The Committee welcomes the ratification by Costa Rica of the Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930. It hopes that the Government will provide detailed information on its application, in accordance with the report form adopted by the Governing Body.

The Committee notes the observations of the Confederation of Workers Rerum Novarum (CTRN), received on 31 August 2021 and the Government's reply in that respect.

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. Forced labour in plantations. Trafficking of Nicaraguan workers with the purpose of labour exploitation. The Committee notes that, in its observations, the CTRN refers to the situation of Nicaraguan plantation workers, mostly undocumented, who are victims of trafficking in persons for the workforce in pineapple and sugar cane plantations. The CTRN states that these workers are recruited by contractors, who provide them with false identity cards and offer them working conditions that are not fulfilled in practice, as they work up to 12 hours a day, without social security or conditions of occupational safety and health. Some workers do not receive the promised salary and therefore have no money for food or for their return trip to Nicaragua. Moreover, in some cases, they do not report the situation for fear of being deported.

The Committee notes that, in its reply to the CTRN's observations, the Government does not provide specific information on the situation of Nicaraguan migrant workers. However, the Committee duly notes the various measures taken to strengthen the legal and institutional framework to combat trafficking in persons referred to in its direct request. The Committee notes in particular the establishment of contact working groups by the Public Prosecutor's Office and the judicial and administrative police in the most vulnerable areas, identified as border areas and areas of lower socioeconomic development, to follow up and address the detection of cases of trafficking in persons.

Taking into account the situation of vulnerability to trafficking in persons for the purpose of labour exploitation in which many undocumented Nicaraguan workers may find themselves, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to: (i) ensure that the labour inspectorate can conduct inspections in plantations with a large presence of Nicaraguan workers; (ii) strengthen cooperation between the police, the Public Prosecutor's Office, in particular the Prosecutor's Office specialized in the crime of trafficking in persons, and the labour inspectorate to prevent, identify and investigate possible situations of trafficking of Nicaraguan nationals for the purpose of labour exploitation on pineapple and sugar plantations; (iii) facilitate access of Nicaraguan nationals to legal mechanisms so they can assert their rights; and (iv) provide these Nicaraguan nationals with immediate and comprehensive assistance and protection, independent of their migratory status. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information in this respect and also refers to its comments under the Labour Inspection (Agriculture) Convention, 1969 (No. 129).

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1960)

Previous comment

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. Forced labour and sexual slavery in the context of the armed conflict. The Committee previously urged the Government to step up its efforts to put an end to the sexual violence committed against civilians, particularly women who are subjected to sexual exploitation, and to take immediate measures to ensure that appropriate criminal penalties are imposed on persons responsible for sexual slavery and forced labour.

The Government indicates in its report that it has duly noted the Committee's comments and that urgent measures are being adopted to put an end to these serious violations. The Government refers in particular to the introduction of a new Disarmament, Demobilization, Community Recovery and Stabilization Programme (P-DDRC-S) in 2021, and the adoption of a national strategy for this programme on 4 April 2022. The Government reports a decrease in killings of civilians and in insecurity, as well as the demobilization of combatants.

The Committee also notes the report of 4 March 2019 of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights on the Democratic Republic of the Congo, in the context of the Working Group on the Universal Periodic Review, in which the United Nations Joint Human Rights Office noted that most armed groups used women and children in hostilities or as sex slaves and/or subjected them to forced marriage or forced labour. Women and children were also abducted, including for sexual purposes. Sexual violence was then used as a tactic of war, perpetrated in a systematic and particularly brutal manner (A/HRC/WG.6/33/COD/2, paragraph 45).

The Committee also notes that the United Nations Secretary-General, in his report of 29 March 2022 on conflict-related sexual violence, highlighted the fact that in 2021 the United Nations Organization Stabilization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUSCO) documented 1,016 cases of conflict-related sexual violence, perpetrated by armed groups and state actors. The Secretary-General refers to cases of sexual violence committed in the context of forced marriage or sexual slavery by the armed group Union des patriotes pour la défense des citoyens. He emphasizes that progress was made in combating impunity, and that in 2021 military courts convicted 118 members of the Armed Forces of the Democratic Republic of the Congo (FARDC), 28 members of the Congolese National Police and 10 members of armed groups for conflict-related sexual violence (S/2022/272, paragraphs 27–29). The Committee also notes that the United Nations Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (CESCR), in its concluding observations of 28 March 2022, expressed concern that although the country had decided to implement transitional justice mechanisms to address the serious human rights violations committed in the past, in particular sexual violence, these serious violations continue to be committed with impunity (E/C.12/COD/CO/6, paragraph 6).

The Committee is bound to express its concern at the persistent use of sexual slavery and forced labour of women in the context of armed conflict. While recognizing the complexity of the situation prevailing in the country and the presence of armed groups, the Committee urges the Government to intensify its efforts to put an end to the sexual slavery and forced labour of which civilians are victims in the context of armed conflict and to forestall and prevent these serious violations of the Convention. The Committee urges the Government to continue taking measures to combat impunity, by providing the competent bodies with the resources to conduct the necessary investigations, prosecute the perpetrators of these crimes and ensure that the victims of such acts are fully protected and obtain compensation. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on progress made in this respect.

Article 25. Criminal penalties. In reply to the Committee's request concerning the adoption of adequate legislative provisions enabling effective and dissuasive criminal penalties to be imposed in practice on persons exacting forced labour, the Government indicates that the Bill putting an end to forced labour, which provides for more effective criminal penalties, is still awaiting adoption by Parliament. Recalling that it is crucial that the law establishes appropriate criminal penalties to punish persons responsible for all forms of forced labour, the Committee urges the Government to take effective measures in this regard in the context of the Bill putting an end to forced labour. The Committee trusts that this Bill will be adopted in the very near future, that it will establish criminal penalties which constitute an adequate deterrent and are proportional to the seriousness of the crime, and that it will be the subject of an extensive dissemination and awareness-raising campaign by the competent authorities. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on progress made in this regard and to send a copy of the Bill once it has been enacted.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 2001)

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Imprisonment entailing compulsory labour imposed as a penalty for holding or expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. The Committee previously urged the Government to take the necessary steps to bring into conformity with the Convention certain provisions of the legislation under which activities which may come within the scope of Article 1(a) of the Convention are liable to incur criminal penalties (penal servitude) entailing compulsory labour (section 8 of the Criminal Code). The provisions in question are as follows:

- Criminal Code, sections 74, 75 and 77: injurious allegations and insults; sections 136 and 137: contempt towards members of the National Assembly, the Government and custodians of authority or law enforcement officers; section 199bis and ter: dissemination of false rumours liable to alarm the population; section 209: dissemination of tracts, bulletins or leaflets of foreign origin or inspiration liable to harm national interests; section 211(3): display in public places of drawings, posters, engravings, paintings, photographs and all objects or images liable to disturb public order.
- Act No. 96-002 of 22 June 1996 establishing arrangements for the exercise of freedom of the press, sections 73–76 of which refer to the Criminal Code for the definition and punishment of press-related offences.
- Legislative Ordinance No. 25-557 of 6 November 1959 on penalties to be imposed for infringements of general measures.
- Legislative Ordinances Nos 300 and 301 of 16 December 1963 on the punishment of offences against the head of State and foreign heads of State.

The Government indicates in its report that forced labour as a penalty established by the Criminal Code does not apply to the expression of political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. Forced labour as a penalty is only imposed on persons guilty of the misappropriation of public funds. The Committee notes this information and recalls that among the penalties established by the Criminal Code, penal servitude (section 8) can entail compulsory labour and that the offences specified in the above-mentioned provisions of the legislation are liable to incur the penalty of penal servitude. The Committee is therefore bound to emphasize once again that the prohibition on imposing compulsory labour in the context of Article 1(a) of the Convention is not restricted to forced labour but applies to all work or service exacted from persons who hold or express political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system, including where this work takes the form of prison labour imposed on convicted persons.

Furthermore, the Committee notes with concern that the United Nations (UN) High Commissioner for Human Rights, in her report of 15 July 2021 on the human rights situation in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, refers to attacks and threats against journalists, human rights defenders and other civil society actors, and also the violent repression of some peaceful demonstrations and the placement of restrictions on fundamental freedoms. The High Commissioner adds that at least 433 persons were subjected to arbitrary arrest or unlawful and arbitrary detention following their exercise of their right to freedom of opinion and expression, peaceful assembly or association (A/HRC/48/47, paragraphs 3 and 10). The Committee also notes Resolution 2612 adopted by the UN Security Council on 20 December 2021, in which the Security Council welcomed the measures taken by the Government to release political prisoners and investigate any disproportionate use of force by security forces on peaceful protesters.

The Committee further notes the adoption on 14 October 2022 of the law amending Act No. 96/002 of 22 June 1996 establishing arrangements for the exercise of freedom of the press. It also notes that Bills are under consideration concerning access to information, public demonstrations, protection of human rights defenders, and non-profit associations. The Committee recalls that the activities which must be protected, under Article 1(a) of the Convention, from punishment entailing forced or compulsory labour include activities involving the exercise of the freedom to express political or ideological views (orally, through the press or through other communication media), as well as various other generally recognized rights, such as the right of association and of assembly, through which citizens seek to secure the dissemination and acceptance of their views (see the 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 302 and 303).

The Committee once again urges the Government to amend or repeal the above-mentioned provisions of the Criminal Code, of Legislative Ordinance No. 25-557 of 6 November 1959, and of Legislative Ordinances Nos 300 and 301 of 16 December 1963, and to ensure that, in law and practice, no penalty entailing compulsory prison labour (including in the context of penal servitude) can be imposed as a punishment for holding or expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. The Committee requests the Government to report on progress made in this regard.

As regards the Bills concerning access to information, public demonstrations, protection of human rights defenders, and non-profit associations, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on their current status. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the provisions of these texts will take account of the foregoing comments and the obligations entered into under the Convention. It also requests the Government to provide a copy of the law amending Act No. 96/002 of 22 June 1996 establishing arrangements for the exercise of freedom of the press.

Article 1(d). Imprisonment entailing compulsory labour imposed as a penalty for participating in strikes. The Committee previously asked the Government to take the necessary steps to amend the provisions of section 326 of the Labour Code so that imprisonment entailing compulsory labour cannot be imposed as a penalty for participating in a strike. Section 326 of the Labour Code allows the imposition of a fine and/or penal servitude of up to six months on any person in breach of section 315 of the Criminal Code, which regulates the conditions for exercising the right to stop work on a collective basis in the event of a collective labour dispute.

The Government indicates in its report that the penalties established in section 326 of the Labour Code, namely penal servitude of up to six months and a fine, are the only penalties which can be imposed in cases where a striking worker is convicted. The Committee notes with regret the absence of measures taken by the Government to amend section 326 of the Labour Code, despite the amendments made to the Labour Code in 2016 by Act No. 16/010 of 15 July 2016 amending and supplementing the Labour Code; the Government merely indicates that the possible penalties are penal servitude and a fine. The Committee recalls that penal servitude entails compulsory labour for the convicted person (section 8 of the Criminal Code) and therefore comes within the scope of the Convention. The Committee emphasizes that, under Article 1(d) of the Convention, no penalty involving compulsory labour may be imposed on workers for participating peacefully in a strike. The Committee therefore expects the Government to take the necessary steps, and to take account of the foregoing comments and those made in relation to the application of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), to amend section 326 of the Labour Code, so that the legislation does not allow the penalty of penal servitude to be imposed on persons who have participated peacefully in a strike. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on progress made in this regard.

Article 1(1) and 2(1) of the Convention. Compulsory national service. For a number of years, both the Committee and the Committee on the Application of Standards (in 2015 and 2018) have been urging the Government to review the Proclamation on National Service (No. 82 of 1995), which establishes a system of compulsory participation in national service for all citizens aged between 18 and 50 years, that goes beyond the exceptions authorized by the Convention. Compulsory national service includes active national service and service in the reserve army. Active national service, which concerns all citizens aged between 18 and 40 years, is divided into two periods: six months of active military service in the National Service Training Centre, and 12 months of active military service and development works in the military forces (section 8). According to section 5 of the Proclamation, in addition to military objectives, the national service includes “enhancing the economic development of the country”. The Committee also noted that, in practice, the conscription of all citizens for an indeterminate period had been institutionalized through their participation in different programmes. The Committee noted the Government’s indication that the national service was a necessary measure of self-defence in the context of the armed conflict with Ethiopia, but measures had been taken to start demobilizing conscripts. The Committee welcomed the peace agreement concluded between Ethiopia and Eritrea in 2018 and requested the Government to ensure that the work exacted from citizens within the framework of compulsory national service be limited to work of a purely military character, and that its duration responded only to the exigencies of the situation.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that a large-scale demobilization in the context of national service has taken place, especially for women and other segments of society, so that many conscripts have been demobilized and are now under the civil service with an adequate salary. Most national service conscripts are assigned to civilian functions in the civil service or other public sectors and, at present, there is no national service beyond the statutory 18 months. The Committee further notes the Government’s indication that even though a peace agreement was concluded with Ethiopia, the Tigray’s People’s Liberation Front (TPLF) poses a threat to the sovereignty of the country, against which Eritrea is obliged to defend its territorial integrity. Therefore, conscripts might be called upon to perform military activities in explicit circumstances at times of emergency.

The Committee further observes that in its report of 6 May 2022, the United Nations Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Eritrea points out in relation to the National Service Programme that: (i) while the 2018 peace agreement with Ethiopia brought hopes for reform of the national service programme, it has not led to demobilization, and no meaningful changes have ever been introduced; (ii) further to the involvement of Eritrean forces in the war in Ethiopia, the Government has justified indefinite conscription as necessary to defend the country against the TPLF; (iii) under the national service programme thousands of citizens are subjected to a government-sponsored system of forced labour, working for very little pay, and without having any choice in their profession or work location; and (iv) draft evaders and deserters are routinely punished with detention in highly punitive conditions, and often subjected to torture and inhuman or degrading treatment (A/HRC/50/20, paragraphs 23, 31 and 22).

The Committee notes with deep concern that the above-mentioned information points to the reinstituted mobilization of citizens for indefinite periods of time, and that no reform of the Proclamation on National Service (No. 82 of 1995) has taken place with a view to limiting the nature of tasks conscripts are required to undertake under the active national service. In this respect, the Committee wishes to emphasize that in order to be excluded from the definition of forced labour, the compulsory labour required under the active national service must be limited to work of a purely military character (compulsory military service) or to tasks aimed at addressing exceptional situations, such as war or a natural disaster. In both cases, the conditions and duration of the work should strictly respond to the exigencies of the situation. The Committee reiterates that the exceptions provided for in the Convention under Article 2(2)(a) and (d) do not allow governments to use national service obligations to compel citizens to participate in development works or programmes or to undertake civil functions in the public services. This is also in violation of Article 1(b) of the Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105), which prohibits the use of compulsory labour “as a method of mobilizing and using labour for purposes of economic development”.

The Committee recalls that in the context of the ILO Technical Advisory Mission that took place in Eritrea in July 2018, the Government indicated that the national service was critical to ensure the country's development and its very existence but was open to cooperating with the ILO to ensure the effective application of the Convention, including by moving forward with the demobilization process.

While acknowledging the current security concerns of the country, the Committee once again urges the Government to reform the national service with a view to ensuring that: (i) the work exacted from conscripts is limited to military training, or work of a purely military character or to tasks aimed at addressing exceptional situations, such as war or a natural disaster; and (ii) in practice the duration and conditions of such work respond specifically to the exigencies of the situation. The Committee also requests the Government to ensure that the assignation of persons under the national service obligation to undertake civil service functions takes place on a voluntary basis. The Committee reminds the Government that it may avail itself of ILO technical assistance in this regard.

The Committee is addressing other issues in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Sanctions involving compulsory labour as a punishment for holding or expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. For a number of years, the Committee has been requesting the Government to take the necessary measures to review the following legislative provisions, which could lead to the imposition of penalties of imprisonment, which involve compulsory prison labour pursuant to section 110(1) of the Transitional Penal Code, for acts through which citizens can express political views or opinions opposed to the established political system:

From Press Proclamation No. 90/1996:

- section 15(3), according to which a person who prints or reprints for an Eritrean newspaper or publication which does not have a permit, or which is prohibited from printing or reprinting shall be punishable with imprisonment from six months to one year, or a fine;
- section 15(4), pursuant to which a person who prints or disseminates a foreign newspaper or publication which has been prohibited from or not permitted entry to Eritrea shall be punishable with imprisonment from six months to one year, or a fine;
- section 15(10), according to which the editor-in-chief and the journalist who disrupts general peace by publishing inaccurate news shall be punishable to penalties ranging from simple imprisonment to a life sentence.

From Proclamation No. 73/1995: Proclamation to legally standardize and articulate religious institutions and activities:

- section 3(3), read together with section 11(2), pursuant to which the author of a religious publication that interferes directly or indirectly with government politics and creates public unrest shall be punishable by a fine or imprisonment for up to two years, or both.

The Committee notes that the Government reiterates in its report that the expression of political opinions or beliefs is not considered a crime in Eritrea and is safeguarded by section 8 of the Transitional Civil Code, and is only subject to restrictions provided by the law with regard to the rights of others and morality. The Government further indicates that section 404 of the Transitional Civil Code recognizes the right to form associations, that religious freedom is also guaranteed by the law, and that there shall be no interference with its exercise, as long as it is not utilized for political purposes and is not prejudicial to public order or morality. The Committee observes that the Government emphasizes that no citizen was arbitrarily convicted and sentenced to prison labour for expressing his or her political opinion or belief contrary to that of the Government.

In this regard, the Committee notes that in its report of June 2022 the United Nations (UN) Special Rapporteur on the situation of human rights in Eritrea refers to the systematic repression, prolonged and arbitrary detention of thousands of persons expressing dissenting opinions or being perceived as opposed to the Government (including leaders and members of religious groups, members of the political opposition, journalists, activists and draft evaders), without due process guarantees being observed (A/HRC/50/20 paragraphs 39 and 43). While the Committee notes the Government's indication that it strongly disagrees with the UN human rights reports, it observes that the concerns of the UN Special Rapporteur have also been shared by other UN entities, including the UN Human Rights Council in its resolution of June 2017 (A/HRC/35/L.13/Rev.1 paragraph 6) and the UN Human Rights Committee in its 2019 concluding observations (CCPR/C/ERI/CO/1 paragraph 39). More recently, in its Resolution of 30 June 2022, the UN Human Rights Council called on the Government to extend its efforts to protect and fulfil the rights to freedom of religion or belief, peaceful assembly, association, opinion and expression, including for members of the press (A/HRC/50/L.19 paragraph 5).

The Committee notes with deep concern the above-mentioned information which highlights the fact that persons expressing opinions and views opposed to the established political system appear to continue to be arrested and detained. The Committee once again recalls that Article 1(a) of the Convention protects persons who hold or express political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social, or economic system by prohibiting their punishment with penalties which involve compulsory labour, including sentences of imprisonment that entail compulsory labour. The Committee notes that the above-mentioned provisions of Press Proclamation No. 90/1996 and Proclamation No. 73/1995 are drafted in broad terms and their scope of application is not limited to situations of violence or incitement to violence, thereby allowing for their application to persons who peacefully express political views or views opposed to the established political system.

Therefore, the Committee once again urges the Government to take all necessary measures to review sections 15(3), (4) and (10) of Press Proclamation No. 90/1996 and section 3(3) of Proclamation No. 73/1995 to ensure that both in law and practice, no penalties involving compulsory prison labour can be imposed on persons for the peaceful expression of views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. In the meantime, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of the above-mentioned provisions.

Article 1(b). Compulsory national service for purposes of economic development. For a number of years, the Committee has urged the Government to reform its compulsory National Service programme, which contemplates among its objectives enhancing the economic development of the country using its human resources in a trained and organized manner (section 5 of the National Service Proclamation No. 82/1995).

The Committee notes the Government's indication that all forms of compulsory labour performed in Eritrea meet the criteria of minor communal services for the best interest of the community, including activities such as reforestation, soil and water conservation as well as reconstruction activities, and food security programmes. According to the Government, these activities are limited to what is strictly required by the exigencies of the situation in Eritrea and are indispensable for the livelihood of the people at large.

The Committee notes that the types of work indicated by the Government do not qualify as "minor services" of short duration and, rather, appear to be large-scale activities whose beneficiary is not only a single community but the whole population of a country. Therefore, imposing on citizens the obligation to perform such activities as part of their compulsory National Service constitutes a method of mobilizing labour for the purposes of economic development, which is prohibited by Article 1(b) of the Convention.

Referring also to its comments under the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29), the Committee once again urges the Government to take all the necessary measures to review National Service Proclamation No. 82 and eliminate both in law and practice, the use of compulsory labour in the context of national service obligations which constitutes a method of mobilizing labour for the purposes of economic development. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of persons under compulsory national service obligations who undertake works that contribute to the economic development of the country each year, and the length of such service.

Article 1(d) of the Convention. Penalties involving compulsory labour for participating in strikes. For a number of years, the Committee had been noting that pursuant to Labour Proclamation No. 118/2001, participation in unlawful strikes is considered an unfair labour practice (section 119(8)) punishable with fines, unless in certain cases the provisions of the Criminal Code provide for more severe penalties (section 144). In the case of public servants, failure to carry out the duties in a proper manner and to the prejudice of the public, or participation in a strike with the intention of disturbing public order are punishable with imprisonment not exceeding three months (sections 412 and 413 of the Transitional Penal Code, respectively). The Committee requested the Government to take measures to ensure that both in law and practice, persons organizing and participating peacefully in a strike are not punished with sentences of imprisonment, which involve compulsory prison labour.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that no civil servant has been punished under sections 412 and 413 of the Transitional Penal Code. The Government emphasises that section 413 shall only apply to persons who participate in unlawful strikes and does not affect workers who run peaceful strikes. The Government adds that it has not come across experiences of strike action and that, regardless of the legality of the strike action in question, no sanctions will be imposed on those persons who participate in strike action under sections 412 and 413 of the Transitional Penal Code.

The Committee recalls that in all cases and regardless of the legality of the strike action in question, any sanctions imposed should not be disproportionate to the seriousness of the violations committed, and no sanctions involving compulsory labour can be imposed for the mere fact of organizing or peacefully participating in strikes.

Therefore, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that both in law and practice, no person can be sanctioned with penalties of imprisonment (involving compulsory prison labour) for participating peacefully in a strike. In the meantime, the Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the application in practice of sections 412 and 413 of the Transitional Penal Code, including on the facts that have given rise to legal proceedings.

Eswatini

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1978)

Previous comment

Articles 1(1), 2 and 25 of the Convention. 1. Legislative developments. The Committee notes the Government's indication, in its report, that the redrafting of the Employment Bill was finalized by the tripartite Labour Advisory Board, after technical comments were provided by the ILO. It notes, more particularly, that sections 19 to 21 of the Employment Bill prohibit forced labour and section 158(1)(b) of the Bill establishes the penalties in case of forced labour. The Committee notes that section 19 of the Bill, which refers to five situations in which the work or service imposed should not be considered forced labour, generally follows the exceptions under Article 2(2) of the Convention. It notes, however, that:

- (i) section 19(d) of the Bill provides that "communal services of a kind which are to be performed by the member of a community in the direct interest of the community and not being for the purposes of financial gain" do not constitute forced labour. In this regard, the Committee wishes to draw the Government's attention to the fact that section 19(d) of the Bill goes beyond Article 2(2)(e) of the Convention, which excludes from its scope minor communal services, provided they are "performed by the members of the community in the direct interest of the said community" and "that the members of the community or their direct representatives shall have the right to be consulted in regard to the need for such services" (2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 281);
- (ii) section 19(e) of the Bill provides that "any work or service which forms part of the normal civic and cultural obligations of the citizens of a fully self-governing country" do not constitute forced labour. In this regard, the Committee wishes to draw the Government's attention to the fact that section 19(e) of the Bill goes beyond Article 2(2)(b) of the Convention as the exception of "normal civic obligations" provided for under this provision of the Convention should be understood in a very restrictive way; and
- (iii) section 158(1)(b) of the Bill provides that "exacting or imposing forced labour, or causing or permitting forced labour to be exacted or imposed" is punishable by a fine or imprisonment for a period not exceeding one year or both. The Committee observes that, according to this provision, a person committing the offence of forced labour may be sentenced to a fine only. It recalls that, pursuant to Article 25 of the Convention, the exaction of forced or compulsory labour shall be punishable as a penal offence, and when the envisaged sanction consists of a fine or a short prison sentence it cannot be considered as an effective penalty of a dissuasive nature in view of the gravity of the offence (see the 2012 General Survey, paragraph 319).

The Committee notes the Government's indication that, in August 2021, the final draft of the Employment Bill was submitted to the Minister for Labour and Social Security and forwarded to the Office of the Attorney-General. The Bill will be then forwarded to the Cabinet for approval and to the Parliament for adoption. The Government states that it is anticipated that the legislative process will be completed without any further delay, particularly taking into account the level and extent of consultations that have taken place within the Legislative Advisory Board. The Committee therefore expresses the firm hope that the Government will take into account the above comments and adopt the necessary measures to ensure that the final version of the Employment Bill fully complies with the provisions of the Convention, in particular by amending:

- sections 19 (d) and (e) of the Bill in order to limit the scope of the exclusions from the definition of forced labour to: (i) minor communal services, while including a requirement to consult the members of the community or their direct representatives concerning the obligation to perform such minor community services; and (ii) "normal civic obligations" to be understood in a very restrictive way; and
- section 158(1)(b) of the Bill in order to establish sufficiently dissuasive penalties of imprisonment for the exaction of forced labour.

2. Legislation concerning compulsory public works or services. For a number of years, the Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to Swazi Administration Order No. 6 of 1998 which provides for the duty of Swazis to obey orders requiring participation in compulsory works, such as compulsory cultivation, anti-soil erosion works and the making, maintenance and protection of roads, enforceable with severe penalties for non-compliance. It previously noted that, despite the Government's indication that this Order had been declared null and void by the High Court of Swaziland (Case No. 2823/2000), such practices persisted, being rooted in the well-established and institutionalized customary law, in particular through the customary practice of Kuhlehla (rendering services to the local chief or to the King, such as ploughing the fields of traditional leaders), which was still practised and enforced with punitive measures for refusal to attend. While noting the Government's explanation that this customary practice was not compulsory, the Committee observed the absence of a text regulating the nature of this work or rules determining the conditions under which such work was required or organized. It requested the Government to take steps in order to explicitly set out in the legislation the voluntary nature of participation in the customary practice of Kuhlehla.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the country has a dual legal system based on written Roman-Dutch common law and unwritten traditional and customary laws, as provided for under articles 252 and 258 of the Constitution (Act No. 1 of 2005). The Government adds that the customary practice of Kuhlehla forms part of the unwritten traditional and customary laws which therefore makes it impossible for the Government to adopt a text regulating this practice. The Government indicates that, in order to put an end to this issue, a new section 19(e) has been incorporated into the Employment Bill, in order to exclude from the definition of "forced labour" any work which forms part of the "cultural obligations" of the citizens. The Committee refers, in this regard, to its above comments regarding section 19(e) of the Employment Bill. The Committee notes with concern that despite its previous requests to the Government to ensure the voluntary nature of participation in work carried out pursuant to customary practices, such as Kuhlehla, the Government envisages explicitly excluding these practices from the scope of the legislation prohibiting forced labour. The Committee draws the Government's attention to the fact that, as long as customary practices, such as Kuhlehla, fail to meet the criteria of the exceptions to forced labour set out in Article 2 of the Convention for "minor communal services", "civic obligation" or "cases of emergency", they are incompatible with the Convention. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure compliance with the Convention, whether by ensuring the voluntary nature of participation in work carried out under traditional and customary laws, and more particularly under the customary practice of Kuhlehla, or by limiting the work exacted under such practices to the exceptions of the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard. The Committee further requests the Government to provide information on the number of persons who have been working as a result of customary practices, including the practice of Kulehla, as well as on the type and duration of services carried out.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1999)

Previous comment

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Penal sanctions involving compulsory labour as a punishment for the expression of political or ideological views. For a number of years, the Committee has been referring to the following sections of the Criminal Code, under which penal sanctions involving compulsory prison labour may be imposed by virtue of section 111(1) of the Code, in circumstances covered by Article 1(a) of the Convention:

- sections 482(2) and 484(2): punishment of ringleaders, organizers or commanders of forbidden societies, meetings and assemblies;
- section 486(a): inciting the public through false rumours; and
- section 487(a): making, uttering, distributing or crying out seditious or threatening remarks or displaying images of a seditious or threatening nature in any public place or meeting (seditious demonstrations).

The Committee also referred to the broad definition of terrorism and the reference to “encouragement of terrorism” under section 6 of Anti-Terrorism Proclamation No. 652/2009, according to which any person who “publishes or causes the publication of a statement that is likely to be understood by some or all of the members of the public to whom it is published as a direct or indirect encouragement, or other inducement to them, to the commission or preparation or instigation of an act of terrorism is punishable with rigorous imprisonment from ten to 20 years”. The Committee noted with deep concern reports on the broad application of the above provisions and on the detentions of, and prosecutions against, members of the opposition parties and human rights defenders. It therefore requested the Government to amend the above-mentioned provisions so as to ensure that, in accordance with Article 1(a) of the Convention, persons who express political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system, cannot be sanctioned to imprisonment involving compulsory labour on the basis of these provisions.

The Committee notes that the Government merely reiterates in its report that the peaceful expression of views or opposition to the established political, social or economic system is a constitutionally respected right and nobody is subjected to forced or compulsory labour as a result of this. The Committee notes that the Government does not provide information on the review of the above-mentioned provisions of the Criminal Code nor on their application in practice.

The Committee nevertheless observes from the Compilation Report of the Office of the United Nations (UN) High Commissioner for Human Rights, of March 2019, that in 2018, the Government of Ethiopia lifted the state of emergency decree and released a number of political detainees, bloggers and other individuals who had been detained following their participation in protests in recent years (A/HRC/WG.6/33/ETH/2, paragraph 33). The Committee also notes from the Report of the UN Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression of April 2020, that since 2018 the Government of Ethiopia has taken significant steps to identify and reform laws that were historically used to restrict freedom of expression. In this regard, the Committee notes that Anti-Terrorism Proclamation No. 652 of 2009 was repealed and replaced by the Proclamation for the Prevention and Suppression of Terrorism Crimes No. 1178 of 2020. The Committee observes that the preamble to this Act recognizes the need to replace the Anti-Terrorism Proclamation of 2009, which had substantive and enforcement loopholes that had a negative effect on the rights and freedoms of citizens, with a law that adequately protects the rights and freedoms of individuals. The Committee welcomes the fact that new Proclamation No. 1176 of 2020 addresses some of its previous outstanding comments, for example by removing the reference to encouragement of terrorism under section 6 of the Anti-Terrorism Proclamation No. 652/2009. Moreover, new Proclamation No. 1176 of 2020 under section 4 provides for an exception to terrorist acts, by stating that “notwithstanding the provisions of section 3(1)(e) (on terrorist acts that seriously obstruct public or social service), obstruction of public service caused by a strike and the obstruction related to the institution or profession of the strikers or exercising rights recognized by law such as demonstration, assembly and similar rights shall not be deemed to be a terrorist act”. The Committee also takes due note of the adoption of Media Proclamation No. 1238/2021, which establishes that acts of defamation committed through the media shall result in civil liability and not criminal liability.

The Committee requests the Government to continue to take the necessary measures to ensure that both in law and practice no penalties involving compulsory labour can be imposed on persons for the peaceful expression of political views or views opposed to the established political, social or economic system. It therefore requests the Government to review the provisions of sections 482(2), 484(2), 486(a) and 487(a) of the Criminal Code to ensure compliance with the Convention by limiting the application of criminal sanctions to situations connected with the use of violence or incitement to violence. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard, as well as information on the application in practice of the above-mentioned sections of the Criminal Code, including copies of any court decisions, specifying the penalties imposed and describing the facts that led to the convictions.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 110th Session, May–June 2022)

The Committee notes the discussion that was held by the Committee on the Application of Standards at the 110th Session of the International Labour Conference (June 2022) regarding the application of the Convention. The Committee observes that the Conference Committee noted with deep concern the repeated failure of the Government to bring its national legislative framework into conformity with the Convention so as to allow trade unionists to exercise their rights to free assembly and free speech without the threat of penal sanctions involving compulsory labour. The Conference Committee also deplored the systematic use of penal sanctions against workers and their representatives. The Conference Committee urged the Government to take effective, urgent and time-bound measures to amend the corresponding legislation.

The Committee notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) received on 25 August 2022, the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 1 September 2022, as well as those received from the Fiji Trades Union Congress (FTUC) received on 2 September 2022, all of which reiterate their concerns expressed during the discussion of the case by the Conference Committee.

The Committee notes with deep regret that the Government merely indicates in its report that it maintains its stance as reflected in its report submitted to the Committee in 2021 and that there have been no amendments to the Public Order Act and the Crimes Act. Therefore, in line with the Conference Committee's conclusions, the Committee urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures to amend the legislation referred to in its previous comments which read as follows:

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Sanctions of imprisonment involving compulsory labour as a punishment for holding or expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. The Committee previously noted the following legislative provisions, which are worded in such general terms that may lead to the imposition of penalties involving compulsory labour (by virtue of section 43(1) of the Prisons and Corrections Act 2006) for activities that could be linked to the expression of political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social and economic order:

Public Order Act (POA), as amended by the Public Order (Amendment) Decree 2012:

- Section 14, which provides for sanctions of imprisonment for up to three years for using threatening, abusive or insulting words in any public place or any meeting, or behaves with the intent to provoke a breach of peace or whereby such a breach is likely to be occasioned; and having been given by any police officer any directions to disperse or to prevent obstruction or for the purpose of keeping order in any public place, without lawful excuse, contravenes or fails to obey such direction.
- Section 17, which provides for sanctions of imprisonment for up to 10 years for spreading any report or making any statement, which is likely to undermine or sabotage, or attempt to undermine or sabotage the economy or financial integrity of Fiji.

Crimes Act 1999:

- Section 67(b), (c) and (d), which provides for sanctions of imprisonment for seven years for uttering any seditious words; printing, publishing, selling, offering for sale, distributing or reproducing any seditious publication; or importing any seditious publication.

The Committee notes that the Government indicates in its report that the Public Order Act is in place to ensure the safety of people from acts of terrorism, racial riots, religious and ethnic vilification, hate speech and economic sabotage.

The Committee recalls that the Convention protects persons who express political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system by establishing that in the context of these activities they cannot be punished by sanctions involving an obligation to work. The range of activities protected include the right to freedom of expression exercised orally or through the press and other communications media, as well as the right of association and of assembly, through which citizens seek to secure the dissemination and acceptance of their views. While recognizing that certain limitations may be imposed on these rights as normal safeguards for public order to protect society, such limitations must be strictly within the framework of the law. In this respect, the protection provided for by the Convention does not extend to persons who use violence, incite to violence or engage in preparatory acts aimed at violence.

In this respect, the Committee observes that in its comments under the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), it noted the allegations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) and the Fiji Trades Union Congress (FTUC) denouncing that permissions for union meetings and public gatherings continued to be arbitrarily refused, and that section 8 of the POA (as amended by the 2012 Decree) has been increasingly used to interfere in, prevent and frustrate trade union meetings and assemblies. The Committee notes in this regard that according to section 10 of the POA, a person who takes part in a meeting or procession for which no permit has been issued or in contravention of the provisions of the POA is liable to a prison sentence (involving compulsory prison labour).

Therefore, the Committee requests the Government to review sections 10, 14 and 17 of the POA and section 67(b), (c) and (d) of the Crimes Act to ensure that, both in law and practice, persons who express political views or views opposed to the established political, social and economic system, including through the exercise of their right to freedom of expression or assembly, are not liable to penal sanctions involving compulsory labour, including compulsory prison labour. The Committee further requests the Government to provide information on the manner in which the above-mentioned legislative provisions are applied in practice, including information on the number of prosecutions initiated, convictions handed down, specific penalties applied and on the facts that led to the convictions, as well as information on the grounds on which permits for public meetings and gatherings are granted or refused.

Article 1(d) of the Convention. Penal sanctions involving compulsory labour for having participated in strikes. The Committee previously noted that, according to section 191 BQ (1) of the Employment Relations (Amendment) Act 2015, breaking an employment contract for the provision of essential service and industry, knowing or having reasonable cause to believe that such breaking, either alone or in combination with others, will deprive the public wholly or to a great extent of such service or industry or substantially diminish its enjoyment, constitutes an offence. According to section 256(a) of the Employment Relations Promulgation 2007, such an offence is punishable with imprisonment for up to two years (involving compulsory labour by virtue of section 43(1) of the Prisons and Corrections Act 2006). In its report, the Government indicates that it has taken note of the Committee's comment in this regard.

The Committee recalls that Article 1(d) of the Convention sets forth the principle that no sanctions involving compulsory labour, including compulsory prison labour, may be imposed on persons for the mere fact of peacefully participating in a strike. The Committee has indicated that when sanctions involving compulsory labour may exist for impairing or endangering the operation of essential services, this should be limited to situations where there is an effective danger, not mere inconvenience (2007 General Survey on the eradication of forced labour, paragraph 175).

Referring to its comments under the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87) in relation to the need to review the list of essential services and the limitations on the right to strike in essential services, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that, both in law and in practice, no persons may be subject to sanctions involving compulsory labour for peacefully participating in strikes. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government provide information on the application in practice of section 191 BQ (1) of the Employment Relations (Amendment) Act 2015, including copies of any relevant court decision, indicating the grounds for prosecution and the penalties imposed, in order to enable the Committee to assess its scope of application.

Article 1(c). Disciplinary measures applicable to seafarers. The Committee previously requested the Government to take measures to review the following provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act, 2003 (ACT 645), which provide for disciplinary offences punishable with penal sanctions involving compulsory prison labour (by virtue of section 42(1) of the Prison Service Act, 1972):

- Section 168(1)(b): the seafarer or apprentice who wilfully disobeys any lawful command is liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding one month.
- Section 168(1)(e): the seafarer or apprentice who conspires with any member of a crew to disobey any lawful command, or to neglect duty, or to impede the navigation of the ship or the progress of the voyage is liable to a fine or imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months or to both.
- Section 169(1): the seafarer or the apprentice who deserts ship is liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two months.
- Section 169(2): the seafarer or apprentice who neglects or refuses without reasonable cause to join the ship, proceed to sea on the ship, is absent without leave at any time within the period of 24 hours immediately before the ship sails or at any time from the ship or duty without sufficient reason is liable to a term of imprisonment not exceeding two months.

The Committee notes that the Government indicates in its report that the above-mentioned provisions have not been enforced in the country against any seafarer for breach of labour discipline. The Government adds that provisions have been made in the 2023 workplan of the Ghana Maritime Authority to review the Ghana Shipping Act. The Committee recalls in this regard that Article 1(c) of the Convention prohibits the imposition of sanctions involving compulsory labour in respect of breaches of labour discipline. Sanctions involving an obligation to perform work may be imposed only in cases where the safety of the ship or the life or health of the persons on board is endangered. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to review, without delay, sections 168(1)(b) and (e), and 169(1) and (2) of the Merchant Shipping Act so as to ensure that the law is in conformity with the Convention and the indicated practice.

The Committee is raising other issues in a direct request addressed directly to the Government.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1959)

Previous comment

Article 1(c) and (d) of the Convention. Criminal penalties involving compulsory labour imposed for breaches of labour discipline or for participating in strikes. For many years the Committee has been asking the Government to amend the following sections of the Criminal Code, which establish prison sentences involving compulsory labour (in accordance with section 47 of the Criminal Code and section 17 of the Prisons Act) and can be imposed as a means of labour discipline or for participation in a strike:

- section 390(2), which provides that any person committing an act intended to paralyse or disrupt an enterprise that contributes to the economic development of the country shall be liable to imprisonment of one to five years;
- section 419, which provides that any public servant or employee who fails or refuses to carry out, or delays carrying out, any duty pertaining to his/her position or office, shall be liable to imprisonment of one to three years; and
- section 430, which provides that public servants, public employees and other employees or members of the staff of service enterprises who collectively abandon their posts, work or service, shall be liable to imprisonment of six months to two years.

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that the participation of prisoners in prison labour is voluntary. However, the Committee recalls that both the Criminal Code and the Prisons Act provide for compulsory work for all prisoners, referring to such work as an obligation and a duty.

The Committee notes that, in the context of the 2013 road map adopted as follow-up to the complaint examined by the Governing Body regarding the application of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), the Legislation and Labour Policy Subcommittee of the National Tripartite Committee on Labour Relations and Freedom of Association discussed on several occasions the amendment of the above-mentioned provisions of the Criminal Code with a view to taking the comments of the present Committee into account. It notes that, in the context of the discussion in relation to the follow-up on the implementation of the road map during the 346th Session of Governing Body of the ILO, the Government indicated that in October 2022 the President of the Republic submitted to the Congress of the Republic a legislative initiative containing the texts reviewing sections 390(2) and 430 of the Criminal Code that were approved on a tripartite basis in March 2018 and September 2022.

The Committee refers to its comments on Convention No. 87, and expects that the Bill amending sections 390(2) and 430 of the Criminal Code will be adopted without delay so as to limit the scope of these provisions to prevent the imposition of criminal penalties involving compulsory labour on persons who participate in a strike or for a breach of labour discipline. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on progress made in this respect. The Committee also once again requests the Government to take steps to amend section 419 of the Criminal Code.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Iraq

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1962)

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. Trafficking in persons. In its earlier comments, the Committee noted the adoption of Anti-Trafficking Law No. 28 of 2012, which contains a detailed definition of the constitutive elements of the crime of trafficking in persons, criminalizes trafficking in persons for sexual exploitation and forced labour, and establishes prison sentences of up to 15 years. The Committee noted that, according to the 2015 concluding observation of the United Nations (UN) Human Rights Committee, trafficking in persons and forced labour remain significant problems in Iraq. The Human Rights Committee recommended that the Government ensure that all cases of human trafficking and forced labour are thoroughly investigated; that perpetrators are brought to justice; and that victims receive full reparation and means of protection, including access to adequately resourced shelters. It should also adopt the measures necessary to guarantee that victims, in particular of trafficking for the purpose of sexual exploitation, are not punished for activities carried out as a result of having been subjected to trafficking.

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that pursuant to section 6 of the Labour Code of 2015, forced labour in all its forms, including trafficking in persons and slavery, is prohibited. The Government also refers to the Anti-Trafficking Law No. 28 of 2012, under which sexual exploitation and forced labour are punishable with imprisonment of up to 15 years. The Committee notes the absence of information in the Government's report on the measures taken to combat trafficking in persons and protect victims of trafficking. The Committee notes, moreover, that according to several reports of the United Nations, including the UN Human Rights Council, in June 2016 (A/HRC/32/CRP.2, paragraphs 54–126), there is a significant level of trafficking of Yazidi women and girls for both sexual and labour exploitation in the country. The Committee also observes that in its Resolution No. 2388 of 2017, the Security Council reiterates its condemnation of all acts of trafficking, particularly the sale or trade in persons undertaken by the Islamic State of Iraq and the Levant (ISIL, also known as Da'esh), including of Yazidis and other persons belonging to religious and ethnic minorities (S/RES/2388, paragraph 10). While acknowledging the complexity of the situation prevailing on the ground and the presence of armed groups and armed conflict in the country, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to prevent, suppress and combat trafficking in persons. In this regard, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of Anti-Trafficking Law No. 28 of 2012, indicating the number of investigations and prosecutions carried out, and the specific penalties applied. Finally, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to protect victims of trafficking.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1964)

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Penal sanctions involving compulsory labour as a punishment for expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. Penal Code and the Public Order Act. For many years, the Committee has been referring to certain provisions of the Penal Code and the Public Order Act, under which sentences of imprisonment may be imposed as a punishment for participating in certain meetings and gatherings or the publication, distribution or importation of certain kinds of publications. These sentences involve compulsory labour under Rule 86 of the Prison Rules. The Committee has been referring, in particular, to section 5 of the Public Order Act (Cap. 56), under which the police is entitled to control and direct the conduct of public gatherings and has extensive powers to stop or prevent the holding of public gatherings, meetings and processions (section 5(8)–(10)), contraventions being punishable with imprisonment (section 5(11) and (17)), which involves compulsory labour. The Committee has been also referring to section 53 of the Penal Code, under which printing, publishing, distributing, offering for sale, etc. of any prohibited publication is punishable with imprisonment; under section 52 of the Penal Code any publication can be declared a prohibited publication if it is necessary in the interests of public order, public morality or public health. The Committee requested the Government to bring into conformity the above-mentioned provisions in order to limit their application to only acts of violence.

The Committee notes with regret an absence of information on this point in the Government's report. The Committee notes that sections 52 and 53 of the Penal Code and section 5(8), (10), (11) and (17) of the Public Order Act referred to above are not limited to acts of violence or incitement to violence and their application may lead to the imposition of penalties involving compulsory labour as a punishment for various types of non-violent actions relating to the expression of views through certain kinds of publications and participation in public gatherings.

The Committee once again recalls that Article 1(a) of the Convention prohibits the use of any form of forced or compulsory labour, including compulsory prison labour, as a punishment for holding or expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. Referring to paragraph 303 of its General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, the Committee points out that the Convention does not prohibit punishment by penalties involving compulsory labour of persons who use violence, incite violence or engage in preparatory acts aimed at violence. However, sanctions involving compulsory labour fall within the scope of the Convention if they enforce a prohibition of the peaceful expression of views or of opposition to the established political, social or economic system, whether the prohibition is imposed by law or by an administrative decision. Such views may be expressed orally or through the press or other communications media or through the exercise of the right of association (including the establishment of political parties or societies) or participation in meetings and demonstrations. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to bring the provisions referred to above into conformity with the Convention (for example by limiting their scope to acts of violence or incitement to violence or by replacing sanctions involving compulsory labour with other kinds of sanctions, such as fines); and to report on the progress made in this regard. Pending the adoption of such amendments, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of sections 52 and 53 of the Penal Code and sections section 5(8), (10), (11) and (17) of the Public Order Act.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1968)

Previous comment

Articles 1(1) and 2(1) of the Convention. Protection of migrant workers against forced labour. 1. Migrant domestic workers. The Committee previously took note of Act No. 68/2015 on Employment of Domestic Workers, which establishes the specific obligations of employers with respect to recruitment, wages, hours of work, rest time and leave of domestic workers, as well as a complaints mechanism, and requested the Government to ensure its application. The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report of the adoption of Ministerial Decision 22/2022 on the Executive Regulations of Act No. 68 of 2015, which further regulates the recruitment, working conditions, transfer of employment and repatriation of migrant domestic workers.

(a) Retention of passports. The Committee welcomes the enactment of section 23(7) of Ministerial Decision 22/2022, which prohibits employers from keeping in their possession any papers or personal identification documents belonging to the domestic worker, except with the worker's consent. The Committee recalls that, in the past, it took note of cases of confiscation of passports of domestic workers by their employers. The Committee is of the view that given the intrinsic situation of vulnerability and dependence in which migrant domestic workers may find themselves, it cannot be excluded that domestic workers' consent to give the employer custody of their identification documents could be obtained under pressure or threat. The Committee recalls that the retention of passports is an element which increases the risk of domestic workers not being able to leave their employment when they are victims of practices that could amount to forced labour. Therefore, the Committee requests the Government to ensure that the provisions of section 23(7) of Ministerial Decision 22/2022 are implemented in practice by guaranteeing that under no circumstances can employers retain identification documents without the domestic workers' freely given consent, and that such workers are informed of and can readily access complaints mechanisms to report situations of illegal passport retention by the employer. To this extent, the Committee requests the Government to provide statistics on the number of complaints lodged by migrant domestic workers in this regard and the corresponding penalties imposed on employers.

(b) Transfer of employment and absconding workers. The Committee notes that section 38 of Ministerial Decision 22/2022 provides that, for reasons of public interest, the Public Authority for Manpower (PAM) can issue an order to transfer the domestic worker from an employer to another if: the employer dies; the domestic worker requests to be transferred to the employer's husband or wife in the event of separation; the employer definitively leaves the country; the female domestic worker marries a husband in the country; the female domestic worker requests to be transferred to her husband's residence; the employer fails to meet the eligibility conditions or a final judgment sentences him/her to prison; and an act, statement or gesture of sexual connotation is proven to be committed by the employer or those living with him/her against the domestic worker. The Committee further notes that the Government indicates that the transfer should be made with the approval of the competent authority within the Ministry of Interior, which shall certify that the worker agrees to the transfer. However, the Committee notes with concern that section 38 of Ministerial Decision 22/2022 provides for restrictive and limited grounds for the PAM to issue an order of transfer of employment without the employer's consent. Hence, section 38 does not cover other situations of abusive working practices as grounds for a transfer of employment without the employers' consent, such as non-payment of wages, non-respect of established working hours or rest periods, or situations of physical or psychological violence without sexual connotation. The Committee also observes that, pursuant to section 16 of Act No. 68/2015, the domestic worker may not be able to voluntarily terminate the contract before its end (through notice of its termination two months in advance).

The Committee further notes that in its 2021 concluding observations, the United Nations Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights expressed its concern at the continued reports of exploitation and abuse of migrant domestic workers by employers, and referred to the continued existence of the crime of "absconding" (unjustified discontinuation of work), which makes migrant workers vulnerable to abuse and forced labour (E/C.12/KWT/CO/3 paragraphs 20 and 22). In this respect, the Committee notes that section 51 of Act 68/2015 provides that, in the event a domestic worker absconds from her/his service post, the Ministry of Interior will take action to deport the worker to her/his country. It further notes that, according to section 35 of Ministerial Decision 22/2022, an employer is prevented from filing an absconding report against a domestic worker after the latter files a complaint to the competent department, provided that the domestic worker is registered among the residents of the migrant workers' accommodation centre. According to section 36 of this Ministerial Decision, the domestic worker's residence permit can be extended until the complaint is resolved, and he or she receives all due entitlements. Furthermore, pursuant to Ministerial Decree 27/2021, the employer of a worker who is absent without an excuse shall inform the PAM after seven days have passed from the date of the worker's absence. The notice submitted to the PAM must be displayed in a visible place at the workplace in order for the worker to be made aware of the notice, and the employer who submits the notice of the worker's unexcused absence is prohibited from allowing the worker to resume their work until an investigation into the incident is concluded (sections 49 and 50). The Committee notes the Government's indication that, in 2021, 994 complaints related to abandonment of work were under consideration by the courts.

The Committee observes that Act No. 68/2015 does not foresee the termination of the employment relation by the domestic worker before the expiry of the initial employment contract (the maximum duration of the contract not being provided for in the Act) without approval of the employer. Furthermore, as indicated above, Ministerial Decision 22/2022 provides for the possibility of the domestic worker to transfer employment without the employer's consent only in a few very specific cases. The Committee is of the view that these two circumstances increase the dependence of migrant domestic workers and their vulnerability to situations of abuse that could amount to forced labour. It recalls that the effect of statutory provisions preventing termination of employment of large duration by means of notice of reasonable length is to turn a contractual relationship based on the will of the parties into service by compulsion of law, and is thus incompatible with the Convention. Therefore, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to enable migrant domestic workers to transfer their employment at certain intervals and after having given reasonable notice during the duration of the contract. It also requests the Government to continue taking measures to ensure that, both in law and practice, migrant domestic workers can access the necessary mechanisms to defend themselves against complaints of absconding in situations when their rights have not been respected, and to indicate how many absconding cases have been brought by employers under section 51 of Act No. 68/2015 and how they have been decided. It also requests the Government to provide information on the number of domestic workers who have left their employment and been repatriated to their country of origin.

(c) Law enforcement. In response to the Committee's request for information on the application of Act No. 68/2015, the Government indicates that, since 2019, the PAM is the entity responsible for domestic workers. The PAM has the responsibility to sensitize society with respect to the rights and obligations derived from the employment of a domestic worker, and to raise awareness among domestic workers about their rights using information brochures in multiple languages. It also undertakes periodic inspections of recruitment agencies and offices of domestic workers and follows up on complaints to ensure effective compliance with Act No. 68/2015. The Government adds that, since 2020, employers who want to hire a foreign domestic worker must use the standardized labour contracts that have been approved by the competent authority.

The Government emphasizes that the PAM seeks to resolve complaints in an amicable manner. If complaints cannot be resolved amicably, the PAM forwards them to the competent court. In cases of infringement or violation of the rights of domestic workers confirmed by the PAM, the employer will be prevented from obtaining entry visas for a period of six months. The complaint shall be later referred to the competent court for the imposition of further sanctions corresponding to the degree and type of the infringement. In 2021, a total of 1,487 complaints were filed by domestic workers against an employer (1,150 of which were resolved amicably) and three were filed against a recruitment office or agency.

The Committee requests the Government to continue taking the necessary measures to ensure that migrant domestic workers enjoy their rights provided for in the legislation, and to facilitate their access to mechanisms to defend themselves against situations of exploitation and abuse that could amount to forced labour, as well as reprisals. It also requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that migrant domestic workers who are victims of forced labour receive the necessary psychological, social, medical and legal assistance. Lastly, it requests the Government to provide information on: (1) the type of sanctions imposed by the PAM (in addition to the suspension of granting of entry visas to the employers for six months) and national courts on employers and/or recruitment agencies who infringe the labour rights of migrant domestic workers; and

(2) investigations and prosecutions undertaken in relation to situations of forced labour of migrant domestic workers.

2. Migrant workers in private enterprises. The Committee notes that, according to section 48 of Act No. 6/2010 concerning labour in the private sector, the worker shall have the right to terminate his or her work contract without notification if the employer does not abide by the terms of the contract or the provisions of the law; the worker was assaulted by either the employer or his deputy; continuing work would endanger his or her safety and health; the employer or his deputy committed an act of cheating or fraud with regard to work conditions; the employer has accused the worker of committing a punishable act and the final verdict acquitted the worker, or the employer or his deputy has committed an act that violates public morals against the worker.

The Committee further notes that, pursuant to section 1 of Administrative Decision No. 712/2017 on the transfer of employment for workers in small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs), a transfer is permitted only within the SMEs sector, after three years of continuous employment and with the approval of the employer. It also notes that, pursuant to section 2 of Administrative Decision No. 842/2015, private sector workers who work on government-contracted projects are permitted to transfer only to another government-contracted project implemented by the same sponsor and only after the end of the contract. Transfer without permission of the employer is permitted only after three years from the issuance of the work permit. If the worker wishes to transfer prior to the end of this period without the consent of the original employer, he or she shall file a complaint with the PAM (section 6 of Administrative Decision No. 842/2015).

The Committee requests the Government to indicate whether migrant workers in private enterprises who have the right to terminate employment under the circumstances established in Act No. 6/2010 can also transfer employment without the permission of the employer and without being asked to leave the country. It also requests the Government to provide information on the number of complaints before the Public Authority of Manpower submitted by migrant private sector workers working for government-contracted projects, who wish to transfer employment without the consent of the original employer and before the end of the labour contract, as well as the outcome of such complaints. It requests the Government to indicate whether this procedure of transfer also applies with respect to migrant workers in small and medium enterprises.

The Committee is raising other issues in a direct request addressed directly to the Government.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1961)

Previous comment

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Penalties involving compulsory labour as a punishment for expressing political views. For many years, the Committee has been referring to Legislative Decree No.65 of 1979, which establishes a system of prior authorization for holding public meetings and gatherings (which may be refused without giving reasons, under section 6 of the Decree) and, in the event of violations, provides for a penalty of imprisonment which involves compulsory prison labour. According to section 63 of the Penal Code, compulsory labour is imposed on persons convicted to at least six months of imprisonment. The Committee noted that the Government had prepared a Bill on Public Meetings and Assemblies, which, under sections 10 and 15 read together, provide for sanctions of imprisonment of up to three years for holding meetings or demonstrations that damage the reputation of the State or call for breach of the public order. In reply to the Committee's request to review the provisions of that Bill, the Government indicates that it will not be adopted before being discussed and examined by members of the specialized committees at the Parliament, so as to bring it into conformity with the provisions of the Convention.

The Committee recalls that Article 1(a) of the Convention protects persons who express political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, economic or social system by establishing that, in the context of these activities, they cannot be punished by sanctions involving an obligation to work. In this respect, the Committee wishes to emphasize the importance of the right to assembly as it is often through the exercise of this right that views opposing the established political order can be expressed. In ratifying this Convention, States have undertaken to guarantee persons who manifest their opposing views in a peaceful manner the protection afforded by the Convention.

Noting the absence of any further development in this respect, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the national legislation regarding public meetings and assemblies is in conformity with the Convention and that no person holding or joining a peaceful public meeting or demonstration can be punished with sanctions involving compulsory labour. Pending the adoption of new legislation on public meetings and assemblies, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of Legislative Decree No. 65 of 1979 in relation to persons who hold or join public meetings or gatherings not authorized by the respective authority, including the legal proceedings initiated (indicating the facts and specific legal provisions that led to those proceedings), sentences handed down and penalties imposed.

Article 1(c) and (d). Disciplinary measures applicable to seafarers. Over a number of years, the Committee has been requesting the Government to review or amend sections 11, 12 and 13 of Legislative Decree No. 31 of 1980 under which breaches of labour discipline, including unauthorized absence, repeated disobedience and failure to return to the vessel, may be punished by imprisonment involving compulsory labour. The Committee notes the Government's indication that continuous consultations with the competent bodies have been undertaken on the application of the provisions of Decree No. 31 of 1980, to ensure that the penalty of imprisonment as a disciplinary measure is only applied with respect to extremely dangerous situations which threaten the ship and the lives and health of persons on board.

While noting the consultations undertaken to ensure that in practice no sanctions involving compulsory labour are imposed for breaches of labour discipline, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures without delay to review Decree No. 31 of 1980 so that, both in law and practice, penalties involving compulsory labour are strictly limited to acts endangering the vessel or the life or health of persons on board.

The Committee is raising other issues in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Lebanon

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1977)

Previous comment

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report, due since 2018, has not been received. In light of its urgent appeal launched to the Government in 2021, the Committee proceeds with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal.

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 1 September 2018.

Articles 1(1) and 2(1) of the Convention. Vulnerable situation of migrant domestic workers to conditions of forced labour. For a number of years, the Committee has been expressing concern about the situation of migrant domestic workers who are excluded from the protection of the Labour Law and have a legal status tied to a particular employer under the kafala (sponsorship) system, which places workers at risk of exploitation and makes it difficult for them to leave abusive employers. The Committee urged the Government to ensure that the Bill regulating the working conditions of migrant domestic workers be adopted in the very near future and to fully protect them from abusive practices and working conditions that amount to forced labour.

The Committee notes, from the observations made by the ITUC, that there are over 250,000 migrant domestic workers working in private households in Lebanon. The ITUC points out that, while the Government has formed a national steering committee on domestic work and discussed various draft policies covering migrant domestic workers, none was passed into law. Furthermore, the exclusion of domestic workers from labour legislation and social protection exacerbates the power imbalance between employer and employee created by the kafala system and their vulnerability to abuse, exploitation and forced labour. In that regard, the ITUC indicates that migrant domestic workers continue to report routine confiscation of their passports, long working hours, refusal by their employers to allow sufficient time off, forcible confinement to the workplace, poor living conditions, delayed or non-payment of wages, and verbal, physical and sexual abuse.

The Committee notes that a revised Standard Unified Contract (SUC) for the employment of domestic workers was adopted by the Ministry of Labour on 8 September 2020, which included new protections for domestic workers, such as the possibility to terminate their contract without the consent of their employer and other guarantees afforded to other workers, such as a 48-hour work week, a weekly rest day, overtime pay, sick pay, annual leave and the national minimum wage, with some permissible deductions for housing and food. It notes, however, that following a complaint made by the Syndicate of Owners of Recruitment Agencies before the administrative court, on 14 October 2020, the Shura Council (Council of State) decided to suspend the implementation of the SUC on the ground that it represented “severe damage” to the agencies’ interests.

In this regard, the Committee notes that, in their concluding observations, several United Nations treaty bodies expressed persistent concern about: (1) the suspension of the implementation of the revised SUC for migrant domestic workers; (2) the delay in the adoption of legislation to protect migrant domestic workers, who are mainly women from Africa and Asia; and (3) the situation of migrant domestic workers under the kafala system who are vulnerable to abusive working conditions, in particular delayed payment or even non-payment of wages, long working hours, denial of time off, withholding of their identity documents, forced confinement, bonded labour-type situations, and verbal, physical and sexual abuse, treatment that has intensified during the COVID-19 pandemic (CEDAW/C/LBN/CO/6, 1 March 2022, paragraph 49; CERD/C/LBN/CO/23-24, 1 September 2021, paragraph 24; and CCPR/C/LBN/CO/3, 9 May 2018, paragraph 39). In this regard, the Committee notes that, as recently highlighted by the ILO, the economic crisis faced by Lebanon combined with COVID-19 has exacerbated the socioeconomic precarity of women migrant domestic workers and their potential to be coerced into forced labour, in particular with regard to excessive working hours, unpaid wages, and being pushed into having an irregular legal status (ILO, Women Migrant Domestic Workers in Lebanon: A Gender Perspective, 2021, page 4).

While acknowledging the challenging circumstances currently faced by Lebanon, the Committee notes with deep concern that migrant domestic workers are still lacking adequate legal protection and continue to be subjected to abusive employer practices which might cause their employment to be transformed into situations that can amount to forced labour. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures, without delay, in order to provide migrant domestic workers with adequate legal protection, including by ensuring the effective implementation of the revised Standard Unified Contract and the adoption of the Bill regulating the working conditions of domestic workers, and to provide a copy of the legislation, once adopted. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard, as well as on any legislative changes adopted or envisaged to review the kafala (sponsorship) system. The Committee also urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that, in practice, migrant domestic workers who are victims of abusive practices and working conditions that amount to forced labour are provided with adequate protection and assistance as well as remedies. The Committee requests the Government to provide detailed information in this regard.

Article 25. Penal sanctions for the exaction of forced labour. The Committee previously noted several alleged obstacles faced by migrant domestic workers with regard to their access to justice, and urged the Government to take measures to ensure that employers who engage migrant domestic workers in situations amounting to forced labour are subject to really adequate and strictly enforced penalties. The Committee observed, in this regard, that section 569 of the Penal Code establishes penal sanctions against any individual who deprives another of their personal freedom, and that according to the information provided by the Government this section should apply to the exaction of forced labour.

The Committee notes that, in its observations, the ITUC points out the lack of accessible complaints mechanisms, lengthy judicial procedures and restrictive visa policies which dissuade many migrant domestic workers from filing or pursuing complaints against their employers. Even when migrant domestic workers file complaints, the police and judicial authorities regularly fail to treat abuses against domestic workers as crimes, and workers are often returned by the police to the employer that they sought to lodge a complaint against, or find themselves detained for not having legal residency status or because the employer has filed a counter-complaint against them for stealing. In the ITUC's view, a major obstacle to migrant domestic workers' access to justice is the limitations placed on their ability to remain in Lebanon after they have left their employer. As soon as a legal complaint is in process, the employer can terminate his or her sponsorship obligation rendering the migrant domestic worker an illegal resident.

The Committee also notes that, in their concluding observations, several United Nations treaty bodies expressed persistent concern about: (i) the fact that many migrant domestic workers are unaware of the remedies available to them in the event of a violation of their rights; (ii) the existence of barriers faced by migrant domestic workers when seeking to report abuses and the risk of imprisonment or deportation faced by migrant domestic workers who sue their employers, given the restrictive visa system; and (iii) the fact that perpetrators of violations go unpunished (CEDAW/C/LBN/CO/6, 1 March 2022, paragraph 15; CERD/C/LBN/CO/23-24, 1 September 2021, paragraph 26; and CCPR/C/LBN/CO/3, 9 May 2018, paragraph 39).

In this regard, the Committee recalls that, pursuant to Article 25 of the Convention, the exaction of forced or compulsory labour shall be punishable as a penal offence, and when the envisaged sanction consists of a fine or a short prison sentence it cannot be considered as an effective penalty of a dissuasive nature in view of the gravity of the offence (see 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 319). Emphasizing that it is crucial that appropriate criminal penalties are imposed on perpetrators so that recourse to forced labour practices does not go unpunished, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that: (i) migrant domestic workers have access to justice in the event of a violation of their rights and are protected against any measures of retaliation or deportation; and (ii) sufficiently dissuasive penalties are applied to employers who engage migrant domestic workers in situations amounting to forced labour. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to strengthen the capacity of law enforcement bodies in this area, as well as on the number of cases of forced labour of migrant domestic workers investigated and prosecuted, the number of convictions handed down and the penalties imposed.

In light of the situation described above, the Committee notes with deep concern the repeated failure of the Government to respond to the Committee's comments since 2018. The Committee must also express its deep concern that migrant domestic workers are not granted adequate legal protection and continue to be subjected to abusive employer practices, including delayed or non-payment of wages, withholding of their identity documents, denial of time off, forced confinement and verbal, physical and sexual abuse which might cause their employment to be transformed into forced labour situations. Lastly, the Committee observes the existence of barriers faced by migrant domestic workers when seeking to report abuses and the fact that the perpetrators of violations go unpunished. The Committee considers that this case meets the criteria set out in paragraph 114 of its General Report to be asked to come before the Conference.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Previous comment: direct request

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Penal sanctions involving compulsory labour as a punishment for holding or expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. In its previous comments, the Committee requested the Government to indicate whether section 52(1)(b) of the Penal Law on sedition, which could punish certain forms of criticism of the Government with imprisonment (which may involve an obligation to work pursuant to section 34.14(1) of the Criminal Procedure Law), was still in force. The Committee notes the Penal Law of 1978, transmitted by the Government, which contains new provisions criminalizing sedition as well as criminal libel against the President with penalties of imprisonment (sections 11.11 and 11.12). The Committee notes with satisfaction that sections 11.11 and 11.12 have been repealed by the amendment to the Penal Law published on 26 February 2019, known as the Kamara Abdullah Kamara Act of Press Freedom.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Libya

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1961)

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. Situations of forced labour arising from the armed conflict. Trafficking of migrant workers. The Committee previously noted the various reports from several United Nations (UN) bodies concerning the grave crisis faced by the country. It noted in particular the report on the investigation by the Office of the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights on Libya of 15 February 2016, which indicated that migrants have been arbitrarily detained or deprived of their liberty, frequently in inhumane conditions, and subjected to financial exploitation and forced labour. In this regard, the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights recommended that the Government address urgently the situation of migrants and take effective action to combat human trafficking (A/HRC/31/47, paragraphs 61 and 83(j)). The Committee also noted the UN Security Council Resolution 2240 of October 2015, which condemned all acts of migrant smuggling and human trafficking into, through and from the Libyan territory and off the coast of Libya, which undermined further the process of stabilization of Libya and endangered the lives of thousands of people (S/RES/2240 (2015)).

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that the legal framework that ensures the prosecution of perpetrators of trafficking in persons, includes the Penal Code and the Criminal Procedure Act. In addition, a Bill on combating trafficking in persons is being drafted. The Government also refers to the future establishment of an Anti-Trafficking Committee that will be in charge of drafting a national action plan to combat trafficking.

The Committee observes that according to the Report of the United Nations Support Mission in Libya (UNSMIL), Libya is a destination and transit country for migrants. Many suffer human rights violations and abuses in the course of their journeys. After interception by armed men believed to be from the Libyan Coast Guard, migrants are taken to detention centres or private houses and farms where they are subjected to arbitrary detention, sexual exploitation and forced labour. They are forced to work in farms, as well as in construction and as domestic workers, road-paving workers and rubbish collectors (Detained and Dehumanised: Report on Human Rights Abuses against Migrants in Libya, 13 September 2016, UN Support Mission in Libya Office of the UN High Commissioner for Human Rights, pages 1 and 18). Moreover, the Committee notes that in its resolution 2388 of 2017, the UN Security Council expressed concern that the situation in Libya is exacerbated by the smuggling of migrants and human trafficking into, through and from the Libyan territory, which could provide support to other organized crime and terrorist networks in Libya (S/RES/2388). The Committee must express its deep concern at the situation of migrant workers in Libya who are subjected to forced labour practices, including trafficking in persons. While acknowledging the difficult situation prevailing in the country, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to prevent, suppress and combat trafficking in persons. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that migrant workers who are subjected to forced labour are fully protected from abusive practices. The Committee also recalls the importance of imposing appropriate criminal penalties on perpetrators so that recourse to trafficking or forced labour does not go unpunished. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that perpetrators are prosecuted and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive criminal penalties are imposed in practice. Lastly, the Committee hopes that the Bill on combating trafficking in persons will be adopted soon and that the Government will provide a copy, once adopted.

The Committee invites the Government to avail itself of technical assistance from the Office in order to facilitate the implementation of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1961)

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Sanctions involving compulsory labour as a punishment for expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. For a number of years, the Committee has been referring to various provisions of the Publications Act No. 76 of 1972, under which persons expressing certain political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system may be punished with penalties of imprisonment (involving, under section 24(1) of the Penal Code, an obligation to perform labour). The Committee also noted the Government's indication that the Publications Act would be amended to take into account the Committee's comments. Moreover, following the establishment of the revolutionary Transitional Council, laws that were not in conformity with the principles of freedom and democracy were suspended, including the Publications Act. The Committee noted furthermore from the Report on the Investigation by the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights on Libya that journalists had faced serious harassment and death threats; some had been subjected to arbitrary detention and abduction. Journalists also faced criminal prosecution for defamation and libel for writing on political matters (2016 A/HRC/31/47, paragraph 50).

The Committee notes that in its report the Government refers to certain sections of the Publications Bill, indicating that the Bill is still being studied and amended and will be transmitted to the legislative authority as soon as it is completed. The Committee draws the Government's attention to the fact that the purpose of the Convention is to ensure that no form of compulsory labour, including compulsory prison labour, is used in the circumstances specified in the Convention. However, the Committee has observed that under various provisions of the abovementioned legislation, penalties of imprisonment involving compulsory labour may be imposed and are therefore not in line with the Convention.

Moreover, the Committee observes that according to the report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights of 2018, media professionals, activists and human rights defenders had their rights to freedom of expression and association restricted and were subjected to abductions, and arbitrary detention (A/HRC/37/46, paragraph 47). The Committee is therefore bound to express its deep concern at the current human rights situation in the country and recalls that restrictions on fundamental rights and liberties, including freedom of expression, may have a bearing on the application of the Convention, if such measures are enforced by sanctions involving compulsory labour. While acknowledging the difficult situation prevailing in the country, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that no prison sentences involving compulsory labour are imposed on persons who, without having recourse to violence, express political opinions or views opposed to the established political, social or economic system. The Committee trusts that the necessary measures will be taken to bring the Publications Act No. 76 of 1972 into conformity with the Convention, and requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard.

The Committee invites the Government to avail itself of technical assistance from the Office in order to facilitate the implementation of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 2007)

Previous comment

Article 1(b) of the Convention. Imposition of forced labour as a method of mobilizing and using labour for the purposes of economic development. The Committee recalls that Ordinance No. 78-002 of 16 February 1978 setting forth the general principles of national service, is incompatible with the Convention inasmuch as, under the Ordinance, all Malagasies are bound by the duty of national service, which is defined as compulsory participation in national defence and in the economic and social development of the country. The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that a draft text amending Ordinance No. 78-002 of 16 February 1978 is being prepared at the Ministry of National Defence. The Government also explains that the recruitment of Malagasies who have opted for national service is undertaken on the basis of requests for recruitment received by the Ministry and only interested persons who have the requisite qualities are accepted. The Committee also notes the Government's indication in its report on the application of the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29), that participation in national service is voluntary and requires a written request from the interested person.

The Committee observes that the obligations of national service, as defined in the above-mentioned Ordinance No. 78-002, include registration, review and activity for a period of two years. The latter can be performed either in or outside the armed forces, in particular in the context of "development action military service" (SMAD). The Committee recalls that programmes involving the compulsory participation of young persons in activities for the development of their country as part of military service or replacing it are incompatible not only with Article 1(b) of the Convention, which prohibits the use of labour for purposes of economic development, but also with Article 2(2)(a) of Convention No. 29, which provides that any work or service exacted in virtue of compulsory military service laws must be of a purely military character.

In view of the Government's indication that in practice participation in national service is voluntary and that a draft text amending Ordinance No. 78-002 is being prepared, the Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will take the necessary steps to bring the legislation concerning national service into conformity with Conventions Nos 29 and 105, either by making national service voluntary or by limiting the work done as part of national service obligations to work of a purely military nature.

Malaysia

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1957)

Previous comment

The Committee welcomes the ratification by Malaysia of the Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930. It hopes that the Government will provide detailed information on its application, in accordance with the report form adopted by the Governing Body.

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. 1. Vulnerable situation of migrant workers with regard to the exaction of forced labour. The Committee previously noted that, despite various measures taken by the Department of Labour in order to protect migrant workers, labour rights violations and abusive working conditions of migrant workers that amount to forced labour persisted in practice, including passport confiscation by employers, wage arrears, long working hours and forced contract extension. The Committee notes the adoption of the Employment (Amendment) Act 2022 (Act A1651), and more particularly:

- the amendment of section 60K, which now provides that no employer shall employ a foreign employee unless prior approval has been obtained from the Director-General of Labour. An employer who contravenes this provision commits an offence and shall be liable to a fine or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years. The Director-General of Labour may approve an application if the employer complies with specific conditions, including having no outstanding matter or case relating to any conviction for any offence under the Employment Act or in relation to trafficking in persons and forced labour;
- new section 60KA, which provides that the employer shall, within 30 days of the termination of service, inform the Director-General of Labour of the termination; and
- new section 90B, which provides that “any employer who threatens, deceives or forces an employee to do any activity, service or work and prevents that employee from proceeding beyond the place or area where such activity, service or work is done, commits an offence and shall, on conviction, be liable to a fine ... or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years or to both.”

The Committee notes with interest these legislative developments, as well as the adoption of the National Action Plan on Forced Labour (2021-2025) – NAPFL, elaborated with ILO technical assistance. The NAPFL identifies four strategic goals focusing on: (1) awareness-raising; (2) legal compliance and enforcement; (3) labour migration management; and (4) access to remedy, support and protection services. The Committee notes that specific actions to improve labour migration governance are provided for in the framework of the NAPFL, with a view to: (1) improving recruitment systems and practices for migrant workers; (2) strengthening capacity of law enforcement officials for migration management and prevention of forced labour; and (3) raising awareness of migrant workers regarding legal migration pathways, workplace rights and entitlements and key relevant legislation relating to forced labour and trafficking in persons, in their own languages.

The Committee notes the Government's indication, in its report, that on 1 January 2022, the moratorium on the recruitment of foreign workers that had been imposed since March 2021 as a result of the COVID-19 pandemic, was lifted. However, the resumption of the application and admission of foreign workers into Malaysia for employers only started on 15 February 2022. The Government adds that recruitment and employment of foreign workers remains through the Memorandum of Understanding (MOU) framework on a government to government (G to G) basis. Currently, Malaysia has cooperation with ten source countries and MOUs were signed with Bangladesh, Indonesia and Vietnam. New MOUs are being negotiated with Cambodia, India, Sri Lanka, Nepal and Thailand. The Government further indicates that, in 2021 and 2022, training activities were implemented, with the assistance of the ILO, in order to strengthen the capacities of labour inspectors in forced labour and a reporting and referral step-by-step Guide on forced labour and human trafficking was published. Furthermore, in May 2021, the Working for Workers application was launched with a view to enable workers to lodge online complaints. In this regard, the Committee notes that, as of June 2022, the Ministry of Human Resources received 17,091 complaints on various labour issues.

The Committee notes that, as highlighted in the framework of the Decent Work Country Programme for 2019–2025, migrant workers remain vulnerable to forced labour practices and are primarily employed in low-skilled and labour-intensive jobs in sectors such as construction, domestic work, agriculture and manufacturing. Furthermore, public attitudes towards migrant workers remain negative and are expressed through discriminatory actions, such as limiting or denying entry; exclusion from access to services; public support for laws that enshrine social exclusion of migrant workers; and denying equal wages on par with nationals (ILO and UN Women, Research brief, Public attitudes towards migrant workers in Malaysia, December 2020). More particularly, levels of exploitation and abuse are disproportionately high in both the plantation and domestic work sectors, largely due to the physical isolation of the workplaces, restrictions on movement, and inadequate mechanisms established to ensure accountability of employers (Enhancing standard employment contracts for migrant workers in the plantation and domestic work sectors in Malaysia, ILO, 2020). The Committee notes that, in his 2020 report, the United Nations Special Rapporteur on extreme poverty and human rights indicated that estimates of the number of migrant workers in Malaysia generally range between 3 and 6 million, inclusive of both documented and undocumented workers. Migrant workers are reportedly subjected to passport confiscation, low wages in violation of minimum wage laws, punishment by fines, high recruitment fees, debts to recruitment agencies and employers, and salary deductions. Reports documenting abuses against migrant workers are consistent and numerous. Labour protections appear widely unenforced and the situation seems not to have improved in recent years (A/HRC/44/40/Add.1, 6 April 2020, paragraphs 58–60).

While welcoming the measures taken by the Government, the Committee notes with concern the continued abusive working conditions of migrant workers that amount to forced labour, such as passport confiscation, high recruitment fees, non-payment of wages, deprivation of liberty, and physical and sexual abuse. Furthermore, it observes in this regard that the Government has not provided information on the number of prosecutions and convictions concerning cases of exploitative employment conditions of migrant workers. The Committee therefore urges the Government to continue to strengthen its efforts to ensure that migrant workers are fully protected from abusive practices and conditions that amount to the exaction of forced labour. It requests the Government to provide information on the implementation of the National Action Plan on Forced Labour (2021–25), and in particular on measures taken to:

- (i) raise awareness of migrant workers regarding legal migration pathways and labour rights, as well as public awareness of the situation of migrant workers in order to address negative public attitudes towards them;
- (ii) strengthen the capacity of labour inspectors in order to ensure the effective implementation of section 60K of the Employment Act, and enable them to detect and identify cases of forced labour and collect evidence;
- (iii) strengthen the capacity of law enforcement bodies and the cooperation among them, indicating the number of cases of forced labour of migrant workers identified and investigated, prosecutions initiated and convictions handed down;
- (iv) improve labour migration management, providing information on bilateral agreements with countries of origin and on any measure taken to strengthen international cooperation in that regard; and

- (v) ensure that appropriate protection and assistance is provided to migrant workers victims of forced labour practices, indicating the number of victims who have been identified and who have received assistance.

2. Trafficking in persons. The Committee previously noted the measures taken to strengthen the legislative and institutional framework to combat trafficking in persons, and requested the Government to pursue its efforts in this regard. The Committee welcomes the adoption of:

- (i) the Anti-Trafficking in Persons and Anti-Smuggling of Migrants (Amendment) Act 2022 (Act A1644) which: (i) expanded the definition of trafficking in persons; (ii) removed “coercion” as the only critical element in determining cases of trafficking in persons; and (iii) increased penalties for some offences including when public officials are found guilty of complicity with the perpetrators; and
- (ii) the third National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons (2021–25) which comprises four pillars: prevention, prosecution and enforcement, protection, and partnership.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication that several training activities were carried out for law enforcement officers, public prosecutors and protection officers in order to strengthen their capacity regarding the investigation and prosecution of cases of trafficking in persons and to provide protection and assistance to victims. The Government adds that specialized units on trafficking in persons were established under the Royal Malaysian Police and Immigration Department. The Committee notes that Standard Operating Procedures for enforcement agencies and National Guidelines on Human Trafficking Indicators (NGHTI) were launched by the Council for Anti-Trafficking in Persons and Anti-Smuggling of Migrants (MAPO) in 2020 and 2021. The NGHTI document serves as a standard guide, particularly for enforcement officers, in the process of identifying trafficking victims. The Government adds that in November 2021 the Ministry of Women, Family and Community Development also launched a training manual on trafficking in persons based on a victim-centred and trauma-informed approach in order to better assist victims of trafficking in persons.

According to the information provided by the Government, in 2021, 43 victims of trafficking in persons were repatriated and 47 were granted permission to move freely and work. In 2021, 11 cases of trafficking in persons were under investigation (compared to 32 cases in 2020), while no case was under prosecution (compared to 7 in 2020). The Committee notes the important decline in the number of investigations and prosecutions for cases of trafficking, and notes that the Government has not provided information on the number of persons convicted for trafficking in persons. In light of the above, the Committee strongly encourages the Government to take the necessary steps for the effective implementation of the four pillars of the National Action Plan to Combat Trafficking in Persons (2021–25) and to provide information on the specific measures taken in this regard, as well as on the assessment of the results achieved and the difficulties encountered. It further requests the Government to continue to provide information on the application of the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Act in practice, as well as the number of victims of trafficking who have been identified and who have benefited from adequate protection. Recalling that Article 25 of the Convention provides that the imposition of forced labour shall be punishable by penalties that are really adequate and strictly enforced, the Committee requests the Government to provide specific information on the investigations carried out and prosecutions initiated, as well as on the number of persons convicted under the Anti-Trafficking in Persons Act and the penalties imposed.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1960)

Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (ratification: 2016)

Previous comment

Articles 1(1) and 2(1) of the Convention, and Articles 1(2), 2 and 3 of the Protocol. Hereditary servitude. Systematic and coordinated action and protection of victims. The Committee previously noted with concern the persistence of slavery-like practices and requested the Government to take the necessary measures to assess the extent of the phenomenon of slavery and to adopt systematic and coordinated action to bring it to an end.

The Government indicates in its report that a study on hereditary servitude in the Kayes region and a national strategy to combat hereditary servitude were validated in July 2021 by the National Human Rights Commission (CNDH). The Committee notes that, according to the study, the causes of the persistence of hereditary servitude are of an economic nature ("slave masters" have large areas of land and slaves are the workforce to work on the land), but are also due to persistent traditional and religious beliefs (local customs, which provide the basis for a form of social domination, facilitate the practice of slavery) and the ignorance of populations (which are rural and mostly illiterate in the areas where slavery persists). The study emphasizes that slaves work for their masters in order to benefit from working the land. The slave either works exclusively for the master, who benefits from the whole harvest, or works both for the master and for him or herself. In the latter case, there are slaves who have access to lands on a precarious basis in return for accepting their conditions and servile status. They are required to work the land for their masters before tending their own fields.

The Committee also notes that, in its 2020 annual report, the CNDH emphasizes that the phenomenon of hereditary servitude in the Kayes region is demonstrating worrying trends, particularly as a result of its increasingly violent forms, which have resulted in the loss of human life, the abuse of physical and moral integrity, the right to property and internally displaced persons (page 5). The year 2020 was a highpoint in the expression of horror at the practice of slavery. Harmful discriminatory practices in respect of "descendants of slaves" are undeniable and recurrent. They mainly take the form of ill-treatment, aggression, the seizure of property and even total banishment from society. The CNDH emphasizes that these forms of violence are often a result of the refusal by "descendants of slaves" to accept their lower social status. Moreover, anyone who denounces this form of discrimination is systematically subjected to reprisals, often encouraged and carried out by the traditional chiefs of the various areas (pages 34 and 35).

The Committee notes that United Nations human rights experts reported, in a press release dated 29 October 2021, a series of barbarous attacks in 2021 against hundreds of persons born into slavery. The experts refer to eight attacks between January and September in the Kayes region, during which one person was killed, at least 77 were injured and over 3,000 people considered to be "slaves" were displaced.

The Committee expresses deep concern at this information, which bears witness to the persistence of the system of hereditary servitude in the country under which people are victims of forced labour, multiple forms of discrimination and violence when they attempt to assert their rights. The Committee recalls, as confirmed by the CNDH study, that the causes of the persistence of such practices are complex and multidimensional and that systematic and coordinated action is required to combat the phenomenon involving all sectors of society (economic, social, religious and so forth). It also notes that Mali is benefiting from ILO technical assistance through the project to combat slavery and discrimination based on slavery in Mali (2019–23). The project aims to improve stakeholders' knowledge and raise their awareness of slavery and slavery-based discrimination, strengthen victims' access to economic independence and legal assistance services, and reinforce the legislative framework and its enforcement.

The Committee urges the Government to renew its efforts to bring an end to the practice of hereditary servitude and trusts that it will take the necessary measures as soon as possible to:

- (i) implement the national strategy to combat slavery, with a view to ensuring systematic and coordinated action by the competent authorities and other actors involved;
- (ii) designate the authority competent for the implementation of the strategy and provide it with the necessary resources for the discharge of its functions;
- (iii) raise awareness, educate and inform the whole population of the real situation and the gravity of slavery-like practices, including the traditional and religious authorities in regions where slavery persists; and
- (iv) identify, free and assist victims and ensure that they benefit from protection that is adapted to their situation to enable them to assert their rights, obtain compensation and recover psychologically, economically and socially.

Article 25 of the Convention and Article 1(3) of the Protocol. Imposition of penalties. The Committee previously requested the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that prosecutions are undertaken in cases of slavery, and to reinforce the capacities of actors in the criminal justice system. The Government indicates that a preliminary draft of an amendment to the Criminal Code was validated on 20 August 2022 which seeks to include a specific offence of slavery in all its forms, including hereditary servitude, and establish specific penalties for this crime. The Government adds that once the amended Criminal Code has been adopted, particular emphasis will be placed on slavery and its various forms through an awareness-raising and training campaign for actors in the criminal justice system. The Government specifies that a 2019 circular of the Minister of Justice and Human Rights calls on magistrates to punish all offences related to the phenomenon of hereditary servitude.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that, in the context of the project to combat slavery and slavery-based discrimination in Mali, the Government, with ILO support, has been able to train 20 labour inspectors and controllers on the laws and policies to combat slavery, and on the identification and denunciation of cases of slavery and forced labour within the context of inspections undertaken in rural areas and the informal economy.

The Committee also notes, according to the information contained in the quarterly note of 30 May 2022 of the United Nations Multidimensional Integrated Stabilization Mission in Mali (MINUSMA) on trends of violations and abuses of human rights in Mali, that some progress has been made in combating impunity, including remand warrants being issued for at least 30 persons in the context of investigations of acts of violence against persons considered to be "slaves". Moreover, the Minister of Justice and Human Rights has instructed the Prosecutor General of the Appeal Court of Kayes to organize a special session of the Assizes in 2022, focusing specifically on the judgement of cases relating to hereditary servitude practices (paragraph 52).

The Committee expresses the firm hope that the draft amendment to the Criminal Code will be adopted without delay, that it will contain provisions defining the constituent elements, incriminating and punishing hereditary servitude and all related offences, and that it will be broadly disseminated to the competent authorities and all groups of the population. The Committee also urges the Government to continue its efforts to reinforce awareness-raising activities and build the capacities of law enforcement institutions (the labour inspection services, the forces of order, the investigation and judicial authorities) in order to ensure that cases of slavery are identified, evidence gathered and prosecutions launched so that those responsible for such practices are punished. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of cases of slavery that have been identified, the number of prosecutions initiated and the number and nature of the penalties imposed.

The Committee hopes that the Government will continue to avail itself of ILO technical assistance with a view to achieving notable progress in the fight against slavery in the near future.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Mauritania

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1961)

Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (ratification: 2016)

Previous comment

The Committee once again notes that the Government has not provided the first report on the application of the Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930, ratified in 2016. The Committee urges the Government to provide detailed information on its application in accordance with the report form adopted by the Governing Body.

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. Slavery and the vestiges of slavery. The Committee previously asked the Government to continue its action against slavery, a practice which persists in Mauritania despite the actions taken by the Government in the context of the road map for the eradication of contemporary forms of slavery adopted in 2014. The Committee emphasized that, in the face of such a complex and controversial phenomenon, it was essential to reinforce the multisectoral approach and ensure coordinated action, particularly through the adoption of an action plan against forced labour and slavery containing the four components set out below.

(a) Effective application of the 2015 Act criminalizing slavery and punishing slavery-like practices. The Committee previously noted the measures aimed at reinforcing the competencies, capacities and knowledge of law enforcement officers and judicial officials involved in combating slavery so as to ensure the effective application of the 2015 Act. While welcoming the fact that an increasing number of cases of slavery had been brought before the three special criminal courts, the Committee noted that obstacles remained in referring cases to these courts, that information on the cases examined was still imprecise, and that only a few cases seemed to have resulted in the imposition of really effective penalties.

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that measures have continued to be taken to ensure the effective application of the Act. The Government refers in particular to: (i) continuing the mobile units (caravans) providing awareness-raising and training for the administrative, judicial and security authorities on the 2015 Act and the organization of workshops for evaluation and judicial exchanges concerning the Act; (ii) the adoption of new circulars by the Public Prosecutor's Office containing instructions and guidance for the systematic engagement of investigations and prosecutions concerning credible allegations of slavery or trafficking in persons; (iii) the establishment of a watchdog unit responsible for monitoring the transparency, efficacy and rapidity of the judicial processing of cases referred to the courts, composed of representatives of the central administration of the Ministry of Justice and the Public Prosecutor's Office in conjunction with the Supreme Court; and (iv) the setting up of offices responsible for providing legal assistance to all wilaya courts and the inclusion of financing for this sphere in the state budget for the 2022 financial year. The Government also reiterates that the special courts have delivered various case law judgments which are testimony to abundant coverage of all possible judicial scenarios (convictions, acquittals, inadmissible cases, prejudicial issues regarding lack of competence, statutes of limitations). With regard to statistics, the Government indicates that seven complaints are under investigation, 11 are under prosecution, seven cases are before the special courts, 11 are before the wilaya courts, and 16 are before the appeal courts.

The Committee notes that the National Human Rights Committee (CNDH), in its annual report for 2020–21, issues a series of recommendations to the Government regarding the reinforcement of action against slavery. The CNDH calls on the Government to take all possible steps to ensure that justice takes its normal course without obstacles in order to impose criminal penalties on the perpetrators of the crime of slavery on the basis of the 2015 Act. It recommends the acceleration of judicial proceedings for the 22 cases of slavery pending before the courts monitored by the CNDH and SOS Esclave (SOS slavery) which have been dragging on for years without any justification.

The Committee notes all the above information, particularly that concerning the awareness-raising activities carried out with regard to the 2015 Act and public access to the justice system. It observes that a large number of cases are being examined by the Public Prosecutor's Office and the courts but that the Government has not provided specific information on the cases which have resulted in convictions and the imposition of criminal penalties for the perpetrators, or on the complaints lodged or the cases in which the victims have received support from the competent authorities. It also observes that the wilaya courts still seem to have certain slavery cases before them which have not been referred to the specialized courts by the Public Prosecutor's Office. The Committee recalls that, under Article 25 of the Convention, States have the obligation to ensure that the penalties imposed by law for the exaction of forced labour are really adequate and strictly enforced. In this context, the Committee welcomes the setting up of the unit tasked with monitoring the transparency, efficacy and rapidity of the judicial processing of slavery cases brought before the courts, and hopes that this unit will be allocated the necessary resources to ensure the prompt and thorough handling of slavery cases at all their stages (investigation, prosecution and judgment). The Committee requests the Government to continue taking measures to ensure awareness-raising, training and specialization for all players in the criminal justice system. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures, firstly, to evaluate the operation of the three specialized criminal courts and the manner in which slavery cases are referred to it, and, secondly, to build the capacities of the police and the Public Prosecutor's Office regarding the identification of situations of slavery, gathering of evidence and examination of the facts. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the number of cases of slavery reported to the authorities, the number of cases that have led to judicial action, the number of convictions handed down, the nature of the penalties imposed, the number of cases settled outside the judicial system, and the number of victims of slavery who have been compensated for the injury suffered, in accordance with section 25 of the 2015 Act.

(b) Systematic and coordinated action. The Committee notes that the Government does not provide any information on the progress made regarding an action plan against forced labour which it had reported to the ILO mission to Mauritania in 2018. The same applies to the collection of qualitative data on the issue of slavery in the country. In this regard, the Committee recalls that the fight against slavery requires the engagement of everyone in the context of coordinated action at the highest level, as had been the case with the inter-ministerial committee responsible for the implementation of the road map under the direct supervision of the Prime Minister. The Committee therefore once again requests the Government to ensure that action against slavery forms part of systematic and coordinated action involving all stakeholders, including workers' and employers' organizations, in order to tackle the underlying causes of slavery and to respond to its many different aspects. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate the measures taken to have reliable qualitative and quantitative data on slavery and its various manifestations.

(c) Protection and reintegration of victims. The Committee once again observes that the Government does not provide information on specific assistance given to victims of slavery despite the fact that a number of cases are under investigation or before the courts. It notes that, among the general measures to reduce poverty and ensure social integration, the Government refers to the programmes devised by the General Delegation for National Solidarity and Combating Exclusion (TAAZOUR), including the Cheyla programme on access to education, health, water and energy; the Albarka programme on income-generating activities for poor and vulnerable population groups; the measures taken to facilitate the acquisition of civil status for persons without it, with the issuing of 191,684 civil status rulings to issue certificates of births registered between 2020 and 2022. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the recently established national authority for combating trafficking in persons and migrant smuggling will ensure, in conjunction with the services and structures concerned, the provision of the necessary social assistance for victims of trafficking, including slavery and slavery-like practices.

The Committee duly notes the general measures to combat poverty and to ensure social integration taken by the Government and encourages it to continue these actions by targeting the regions where cases of slavery have been recorded. It also requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to facilitate access to property (real estate), an issue identified by the CNDH in its report as giving rise to numerous legal disputes concerning the descendants of former slaves, particularly the Ghidimaka.

The Committee also recalls that the victims of slavery must receive specific support geared to their situation, enabling them to assert their rights and rebuild their lives psychologically, economically and socially, and to enjoy protection against any form of reprisals or marginalization. The Committee notes with regret that the Government has not provided any information in this regard. The Committee urges the Government to provide information on the measures taken to ensure effective support for the victims of slavery once their situation has been reported to the authorities or civil society associations, especially in order to facilitate their access to complaint procedures, to ensure immediate and medium-term protection for their rehabilitation, and to ensure compensation for them. The Committee once again requests the Government to indicate the number of cases in which the competent authorities have supported victims at the stage of investigation and judicial proceedings, indicating the nature of such assistance.

(d) Awareness-raising. The Committee previously requested the Government to continue undertaking awareness-raising activities on the issue of slavery throughout the country and to involve all stakeholders, including the local authorities, so that the firm position of the State on the issue of action to combat slavery, its vestiges and discrimination is communicated and understood at all levels. The Committee notes the Government's reference to the commemoration of the national day against slavery and slavery-like practices and to the mobile awareness-raising units.

The Committee also notes that the United Nations Special Rapporteur on contemporary forms of slavery, including its causes and consequences, at the end of his mission in May 2022, recognized the significant measures taken by the Government to combat slavery, while cautioning that much remained to be done. He emphasized that descent-based and contemporary forms of slavery continue to exist in Mauritania, within all the country's major ethnic groups, despite this practice being denied by certain parties. He stated that social transformation and a change in mindset is needed in order to fully recognize and address slavery instead of denying its existence (press release of 13 May 2022).

The Committee requests the Government to continue taking measures and strengthen its action to raise the awareness of all the competent authorities and society as a whole and to mobilize them on combating slavery, its vestiges and the discrimination suffered by slaves and their descendants. In view of this situation, the Committee hopes that the Government will collaborate with the traditional authorities, civil society and the social partners and that it will continue to avail itself of support from the ILO technical cooperation project assisting the implementation of Act No. 2015-31 criminalizing slavery and punishing slavery-like practices.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Mongolia

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 2005)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. 1. Trafficking in persons. The Committee previously noted the establishment of the National Sub-Council on Combating Trafficking in persons to regulate the activities on combating and preventing trafficking and provide professional guidance, following the adoption of the Law on Combating Human Trafficking (2012). It noted that a National Programme on Combating Human Trafficking had been drafted to provide a plan of action in implementing anti-trafficking activities. It also noted that the Parliament passed the Law on Witness and Victim Protection in 2013, providing for protection measures for victims of trafficking. The Committee encouraged the Government to pursue its efforts to prevent, suppress and combat trafficking in persons and to provide protection and assistance, including legal assistance, to victims of trafficking.

The Government indicates in its report that the updated National Programme on Combating Human Trafficking was adopted by resolution No. 148 of 24 May 2017. This programme aims, inter alia, at: (i) organizing work to prevent and combat trafficking in persons through the study of the root causes and the conditions of this phenomena; (ii) taking and implementing measures for the protection of victims, including medical and psychological assistance; and (iii) expanding cooperation with other Governments, international organizations and non-state organizations. The Government further states that the Minister of Justice and Home Affairs and the Chairman of the Coordinating Council for the Prevention of Crimes of Human Trafficking have approved in 2018 the Implementation Schedule for the National Programme on combating Human Trafficking. In this framework, the Ministry of Justice and Home Affairs and other organizations have implemented in 2018 a joint plan and set up training courses on the provision of assistance to victims of human rights and the identification of the victims for staff of the Ministry of External Relations, the Border Protection Agency, the Office for Foreign Nationals and the border Offices in Dornogov' Province. The Government also indicates that resolution No. A/173 regulates the composition and functions of the Sub-Council on Combating Trafficking in persons.

The Committee notes that the Criminal Code of 2015, which entered into force in July 2017, provides for a sentence of imprisonment of two to eight years for trafficking in persons for the purposes of labour and sexual exploitation, and of five to 12 years for cross-border trafficking. It also notes that, according to the 17th Status Report on human rights and freedoms issued in 2018 by the National Human Rights Commission of Mongolia, the National Programme on Combating Human Trafficking is a four year programme (2017–21), section 5.2 of which provides for comprehensive legal, psychological, medical and rehabilitative services for victims of trafficking and the establishment of shelters. This Report also indicates that in November 2017, ten criminal cases of trafficking in persons were registered at the national level, according to information received from the Ministry of Justice and Home Affairs. A common database was created in 2016 to improve inter-sectorial coordination among the Government and non-governmental organizations in combating trafficking in persons and in registering victims and suspects. The Committee also notes that a two-year project "Improving victim-centred investigation and prosecution monitoring on human trafficking in Mongolia", aimed at developing training manuals and at training law enforcement officials, prosecutors, judges and officers of the Immigration Department, is being implemented by the Ministry of Justice and Home Affairs and the Asia Foundation. The Committee further notes that, in its concluding observations of August 2017, the Human Rights Committee expressed concern at the lack of identification of victims and reports of arrest and detention of victims for acts committed as a direct result of being trafficked (CCPR/C/MNG/CO/6, paragraph 27). It also notes that, according to the European Commission's document of January 2018 on the assessment of Mongolia covering the period 2016–17, there are only two trafficking-specific shelters in the country (page 10). The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the impact of the measures taken by the Government, particularly the National Programme on Combating Human Trafficking and its Implementation Schedule, in preventing trafficking in persons and in identifying and assisting victims of trafficking in persons. It also requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that victims of trafficking are treated as victims rather than offenders and have access to protection and assistance, and to provide information in this respect. Lastly, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of the provisions criminalizing trafficking in persons.

2. Vulnerable situation of migrant workers with regard to the exaction of forced labour. The Committee notes that according to the ILO's Mongolia Policy Brief on Forced Labour of June 2016, reports indicated that tens of thousands of Chinese construction and mining workers entered Mongolia with tourist visas through a Chinese labour agency and were sold to Mongolian employers, their passports being confiscated upon arrival. In addition, according to this Policy Brief and the concluding observations of the Human Rights Committee of August 2017 (CCPR/C/MNG/CO/6, paragraph 29), migrants from the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) worked in Mongolia, in conditions tantamount to forced labour, and were prohibited from leaving work with their wages paid directly to a North Korean Government agency. The Committee recalls the importance of taking effective measures to ensure that the system of the employment of migrant workers does not place the workers concerned in a situation of increased vulnerability, particularly when they are subjected to abusive employer practices such as retention of passports, deprivation of liberty, non-payment of wages, and physical abuse, as such practice might cause their employment to be transformed into situations that could amount to forced labour. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that migrant workers are fully protected from abusive practices and conditions amounting to the exaction of forced labour and to provide information on the measures taken in this regard. It requests the Government to supply information on the number of identified victims of forced labour among migrant workers, and on the number of investigations, prosecutions and sanctions imposed on the perpetrators.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Mozambique

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 2003)

Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (ratification: 2018)

Previous comment

The Committee welcomes the ratification by Mozambique of the Protocol of 2014 to the Forced Labour Convention, 1930. Noting that the first report of the Government has not been received, the Committee hopes that the Government will provide detailed information on the application of the Protocol, in accordance with the report form adopted by the Governing Body.

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. Trafficking in persons. The Committee previously requested the Government to strengthen its efforts to combat trafficking and to implement a coordinated strategy in this regard, including through the adoption of a national action plan and the implementing regulations of Act No. 6/2008 of 9 July establishing the legal framework applicable for preventing and combating trafficking in persons. The Committee notes the Government's indication, in its report, that several awareness-raising activities were undertaken, including 1,299 presentations which were attended by 76,197 individuals throughout the country, and 55 radio and TV broadcasts, in 2022. The Government adds that the National Criminal Investigation Service (SERNIC) also carried out preventive actions through its National Reference Group (GRN) for Trafficking in Persons, Illegal Immigration and Child Protection, including in collaboration with the International Organisation for Migration (IOM). Furthermore, several training activities were carried out in order to strengthen the capacities of front-line officials, including from the Government, border control police and customs and migration services, with a view to ensuring better identification, referral and assistance for victims of trafficking in persons.

In this regard, the Committee notes that, in its 2021 annual report to the Assembly of the Republic, the Prosecutor-General highlights the specific difficulties faced in detecting cases of trafficking in persons and identifying victims, as well as the need for concerted and increased efforts to prevent and combat trafficking in persons. The Prosecutor-General of the Republic indicates that only two cases of trafficking were investigated in 2020. The Committee further notes that in, July 2022, two Mozambican citizens were convicted by a South African Court for trafficking in persons for purposes of labour involving 39 persons from Mozambique. In this regard, the Committee notes that, according to data from the IOM and UNDOC Regional Office for Southern Africa, Mozambique remains a country of origin, transit and destination for trafficking in persons, with most victims being trafficked into forced labour, particularly in the agricultural and mining sectors, especially in South Africa. It further notes that, in the context of the deteriorating security situation in the Cabo Delgado region in the north of the country that has so far generated over 800,000 Internally Displaced Persons (IDPs), specific concerns were expressed regarding the increasing vulnerability to trafficking of persons escaping the conflict (IOM, Displacement Tracking Matrix, June 2022).

While taking due note of the activities undertaken in order to raise public awareness and strengthen the capacity of public officials to identify cases of trafficking in persons, the Committee notes with concern the low number of cases of trafficking investigated and prosecuted; the absence of progress in the adoption of an action plan and implementing regulations of Act No. 6/2008; and the lack of information from the Government on cases identified, and protection and assistance provided to victims. The Committee urges the Government to step up its efforts in order to prevent and combat trafficking in persons and take the necessary measures to adopt the national plan to prevent and combat trafficking in persons and implementing regulations of Act No. 6/2008. It further requests the Government to provide information on the concrete and coordinated measures implemented with a view to: (i) preventing trafficking in persons and raising public awareness of the issue, in particular in the Cabo Delgado region; (ii) reinforcing the capacities and training of the authorities responsible for the detection and prosecution of cases of trafficking; and (iii) ensuring the effective protection and reintegration of victims. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the number of cases of trafficking in persons identified, and the investigations and judicial proceedings initiated, convictions handed down and specific penalties imposed on perpetrators under Act No. 6/2008.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1977)

Previous comment

Article 1(a) and (b) of the Convention. Compulsory labour for persons identified as “unproductive” or “anti-social”. For many years, the Committee has been drawing the Government’s attention to the need to amend the Ministerial Directive of 15 June 1985 on the evacuation of towns, under which persons identified as “unproductive” or “anti-social” may be arrested and sent to re-education centres or assigned to productive sectors. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates in its report that re-education centres no longer exist and persons are no longer identified as “unproductive” or “anti-social”. The Government adds that the 1985 Directive has become obsolete and implicitly abrogated as a result of the revision of the Penal Code adopted in December 2019, which provides that any legislation contrary to the Penal Code is abrogated. While taking due note of this information the Committee notes with regret that the Government did not seize this new opportunity of the revision of the Penal Code to formally repeal this Directive. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to formally repeal the Ministerial Directive of 15 June 1985 on the evacuation of towns so as to bring the legislation into conformity with the Convention and with the practice indicated, thereby ensuring legal certainty.

Article 1(b) and (c). Imposition of sentences of imprisonment involving an obligation to work for the purposes of economic development and as a means of labour discipline. For many years, the Committee has been emphasizing the need to amend or repeal certain provisions of Act No. 5/82 of 9 June 1982 concerning the defence of the economy, amended by Act No. 9/87, which provide for the punishment of types of conduct which, directly or indirectly, jeopardize economic development, prevent the implementation of the national plan and are detrimental to the material or spiritual well-being of the population. Sections 10, 12, 13 and 14 of the Act prescribe prison sentences, which may involve compulsory labour, for repeated cases of failure to fulfil the economic obligations set forth in instructions, directives, procedures and so forth, governing the preparation or implementation of the national State plan. Section 7 of the Act penalizes unintentional conduct (such as negligence, the lack of a sense of responsibility and so forth) resulting in the infringement of managerial or disciplinary standards.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that an analysis of Act No. 5/82 (as amended by Act No. 9/87) was carried out, as a result of which it appeared that the approach adopted by Act No. 5/82 is no longer applicable in the current economic context, and the subjects covered by such legislation have been incorporated in the Penal Code and other laws regulating economic activity. The Government adds that the adoption of more recent regulations led to the automatic abrogation of the provisions of Act No. 5/82. The Committee regrets that the Government did not take the opportunity of the adoption of the new Penal Code and other laws regulating economic activity to ensure that the national legislative framework complies with the Convention and to guarantee legal certainty. It trusts that the Government will not fail to take the necessary measures to formally repeal the provisions of Act No. 5/82 concerning the defence of the economy, as amended by Act No. 9/87, which although not applied in practice are contrary to the Convention.

Article 1(d). Penalties imposed for participation in strikes. The Committee notes that, under section 268(3) of the Labour Act (Act No. 23/2007), striking workers who are in violation of the provisions of section 202(1) and section 209(1) (obligation to ensure a minimum service) face disciplinary penalties and may incur criminal liability, in accordance with the general legislation. The Committee notes the Government's general indication that the new Penal Code provides for the penalties applicable as a result of a violation of section 268(3) of the Labour Act. The Committee however observes that no provision in the Penal Code explicitly refers to the penalties that may be faced by striking workers in cases where their criminal liability is incurred. It recalls, in this regard that, in accordance with Article 1(d) of the Convention, persons who participate peacefully in a strike cannot be liable to penal sanctions involving compulsory labour. Referring also to its 2021 observation on the application of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 \(No. 87\), the Committee requests the Government to ensure that no sanctions involving compulsory labour can be imposed on workers who participate peacefully in a strike and to provide information on any revision of section 268(3) of the Labour Act aiming at suppressing the reference to criminal liability. In the meantime, the Committee requests the Government to indicate the nature of the penalties that may be imposed on striking workers when their criminal liability is incurred pursuant to the provisions of section 268(3) of the Labour Act, specifying the provisions of the Penal Code applicable in such case.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Nepal

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 2002)

Previous comment

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25. 1. Trafficking in persons. The Committee previously noted the measures taken to strengthen the legal and institutional framework to prevent and combat trafficking in persons, and urged the Government to strengthen its efforts in this regard and to ensure the effective implementation of the Human Trafficking and Transportation (Control) Act of 2007 in practice. The Committee notes the Government's information that it is enforcing the Human Trafficking and Transportation (Control) Act of 2007 through institutions such as the Office of the Prime Minister and Council of Ministers, the National Planning Commission and other ministries. The Government also indicates that a coordination mechanism between the line ministries and the Office of the Attorney General has been established to ensure the effective application of the Act and "create a compelling argument" against human trafficking. Amendments to the existing laws are also being discussed, aimed at prescribing thorough investigations and prosecutions for the perpetrators of trafficking-related offences.

The Committee further notes from the Government's report of 3 November 2020 to the United Nations Human Rights Council that a separate and specialized Human Trafficking Investigation Bureau was established under the Nepal Police in 2018, as well as the National Committee for the effective implementation of the Human Trafficking and Transportation (Control) Act. The Committee also notes that a total of 285 and 338 cases of human trafficking were filed in the district courts in the fiscal years 2017/18 and 2018/19, respectively. Moreover, 678 victims of human trafficking were rescued in 2017/18 and 10,936 were rescued in 2018/19. According to the report, a fund for the rehabilitation of victims of trafficking has been established. There are 36 safe houses and rehabilitation centres in ten districts and one long-term rehabilitation centre for victims of trafficking. A total of 5,793 victims of trafficking have received various services from these centres during the last four years (A/HRC/WG.6/37/NPL/1, paragraphs 12, 33 and 34). The Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to prevent and combat trafficking in persons and provide detailed information on the activities undertaken to this end, in particular by the National Committee for the effective implementation of the Human Trafficking and Transportation (Control) Act of 2007. The Committee further requests the Government to take measures to ensure adequate identification and investigation of cases of trafficking to ensure that perpetrators are prosecuted and dissuasive penalties are applied in practice. Lastly, the Committee requests the Government to continue providing appropriate protection and assistance to victims of trafficking and to provide information on the measures taken in this regard.

2. Vulnerable situation of migrant workers and imposition of forced labour. The Committee previously noted the measures taken by the Government to protect migrant workers, including the introduction of a mandatory two-day pre-departure orientation course; a technical and vocational training policy for migrant workers; and a guideline for migrant domestic workers. It also noted the high prevalence of organized human smuggling and trafficking of Nepalese workers to Qatar, Saudi Arabia and the United Arab Emirates with widespread deception and fraud in the business of foreign recruitment and a high prevalence of exploitation due to a dual labour agreement system. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates that it is committed to continuing to undertake specific measures to address the difficult circumstances faced by migrant workers and to responding to cases of abuse. The Government indicates that during the COVID-19 pandemic in 2020, it rescued and repatriated a substantial number of migrant workers from several destination countries, and provided food and financial support to migrant workers who were stranded without employment in such countries.

The Committee notes from a study conducted by the Pravasi (Migrant) Nepali Coordination Committee (PNCC) (with financial and technical support of the ILO Country Office, Nepal) entitled Impact of COVID-19 on Nepali Migrant Workers, 2022, that between June and December 2020 the Government of Nepal repatriated more than 161,301 migrant workers from United Arab Emirates, Qatar, Saudi Arabia and Malaysia. This study also indicates that migrant workers have been exploited and abused both by recruiters at home and employers and authorities in destination countries, often having their rights curtailed, their welfare neglected and placing them at risk of serious physical and mental health issues and even death. The pandemic situation has exacerbated these long-standing challenges faced by migrant workers and has also created new ones. The labour permits of an estimated 1,500 workers expired every day rendering their status in destination countries “illegal” and in many cases their passports were withheld by their employers. According to the PNCC study, migrant workers continued to (i) pay high recruitment and other migration related fees; (ii) face issues of wage-theft, exploitation, ill-treatment and abuse; (iii) face forcible expulsion from jobs without pay or benefits; and (iv) be subjected to violations of basic human rights. The Committee also notes from this study that the Government adopted the “employers pay” principle as well as the “free-visa-free-ticket” policy or the “zero cost” migration model in order to reduce the financial burden on migrant workers.

In addition, the Committee notes the Government’s indication in its Report to the United Nations Human Rights Council that it has concluded Memorandums of Understanding with a number of destination countries, including Malaysia, Japan, United Arab Emirates, Mauritius, Israel and Jordan in order to protect Nepali workers from different types of vulnerabilities. A Safe Migration Project is being conducted in 39 districts to provide information and counselling, legal aid, skill development training, psychological counselling and financial literacy to migrant workers (A/HRC/WG.6/37/NPL/1, paragraph 103). While noting the measures taken by the Government, the Committee requests it to step up its efforts to prevent migrant workers from being trapped in conditions of work that amount to forced labour and to provide them with protection. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken in this regard, and in particular with a view to: (i) ensuring the effective implementation of the Foreign Employment Act; (ii) providing training and information to candidates to migration on regular and safe recruitment channels, labour rights and the risks of forced labour associated with migration; (iii) ensuring that migrant workers victims of trafficking who return to Nepal receive assistance and protection for their rehabilitation, and facilitating their access to complaints mechanisms to assert their rights when they face exploitation and abusive practices; and (iv) monitoring the recruitment and placement agencies.

3. Forced labour in brick industries. The Committee notes from the Report on Employment Relationship Survey in the Brick Industry in Nepal, 2020 jointly conducted by the Central Bureau of Statistics, ILO and UNICEF, that bonded and forced labour still exists in the country’s private sector, including in the brick industry. According to the survey estimates, the total work force involved in brick production, including family members, in 2020, was 186,150 persons, of which 176,373 were manual workers. Among these, 6,229 workers were found to be in forced labour and were unable to leave their jobs without negative repercussions or some risk, while some of them had fallen victims to debt bondage, and some others would lose all their wages due to them if they left the kiln.

The Committee notes that section 4 of the Labour Act of 2017 prohibits engaging anyone in forced labour, defined as any work or service performed by any worker against his/her will as a result of the threat an action with financial, physical or mental impact if he/she does not perform such work or service. Penalties for engaging any one in forced labour shall be imprisonment for two years or a fine or both, in addition to the requirement to pay remuneration, allowance and benefits, including damages (section 164). The Committee urges the Government to take effective measures to prevent and eliminate bonded and forced labour practices in the brick industries and to provide immediate assistance and protection to victims of bonded labour. The Committee also requests the Government to ensure that law enforcement bodies, in particular labour inspectors, carry out regular inspections to monitor the conditions of work in the brick kilns and are able to detect cases of forced labour. The Committee requests the Government to provide statistical data on the cases of bonded and forced labour detected, the prosecutions initiated and the specific penalties imposed for such violations.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Previous comments

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. Trafficking in persons. 1. Law enforcement and penalties. In response to its previous comments on the application of effective sanctions to cases of trafficking, the Committee notes the Government's information in its report that the National Agency for the Prohibition of Trafficking in Persons (NAPTIP) undertook several measures for the effective implementation of the Trafficking in Persons (Prohibition) Enforcement and Administration Act, 2015 (Anti-Trafficking Act of 2015). These include: (i) increased efforts to investigate, prosecute and convict perpetrators of trafficking in persons and impose sufficiently stringent sentences involving imprisonment; (ii) facilitation of training for local, state and federal judges on the Anti-Trafficking Act of 2015, especially on the provision prohibiting the issuance of fines in lieu of imprisonment; (iii) proposals for a special court for trafficking in persons cases; and (iv) enactment of the Trafficking in Persons (Control of Activities of Organisations and Centres) Regulations, 2019. The Government also indicates that the Anti-Trafficking Act of 2015 is undergoing review to establish stiffer penalties for offences related to trafficking in persons.

The Committee notes that according to the data collected by the NAPTIP from 2018 to 2021, there were a total of 901 cases related to trafficking in persons for purposes of labour or sexual exploitation, and a total of 3,485 victims were rescued. It also notes the detailed information provided by the Government on the legal proceedings and convictions for trafficking-related offences under the Anti-Trafficking Act of 2015. Accordingly, from 2013 to 2021 there were 492 convictions registered. Among the 10 convictions handed down from January to March 2021, the Committee observes that in three cases offenders were sentenced to imprisonment ranging from five to seven years with an option of fines. In this regard, the Committee notes that the United Nations Special Rapporteur for trafficking in persons, especially women and children, in her end of visit statement of September 2018 stated that considering the magnitude of the phenomenon in the country, investigations and prosecutions need serious and robust improvement.

The Committee once again emphasizes the importance that appropriate criminal penalties be imposed on perpetrators and recalls that when the sanction consists only of a fine or a very short prison sentence, it does not constitute an effective sanction in light of the seriousness of the violation and the fact that the sanctions need to be dissuasive. The Committee therefore requests the Government to continue to take the necessary measures to ensure that all cases of trafficking are subject to thorough investigations and that sufficiently dissuasive penalties of imprisonment are imposed on persons who engage in trafficking. The Committee further requests the Government to continue providing information on the activities of the NAPTIP aimed at strengthening the capacities of law enforcement bodies in this regard. The Committee also requests the Government to provide statistical data on cases of trafficking for purposes labour or sexual exploitation, as well as information on the investigations carried out, the outcome of the legal proceedings instituted and the penalties imposed on perpetrators according to the Anti-Trafficking Act, 2015.

2. Plan of action. The Committee notes from the Government's report that the NAPTIP approved the national action plan (NAP) on trafficking in persons (2022–26). The Committee notes that this national action plan is based on the five critical pillars of action on trafficking in persons, namely: protection and assistance; prevention; research and assessment; prosecution; and partnership and coordination. The strategic goals outlined under each pillar include: (i) to provide age, gender and diversity specific services for the protection of victims of trafficking to meet minimum human rights standards; (ii) to improve public awareness on trafficking in persons and enhance social protection for endemic communities; (iii) to develop and conduct cross-border qualitative research and data management on human trafficking to identify trends, patterns and dimensions of human trafficking at national and international levels; (iv) to establish adequate legal frameworks and policies to address trafficking in persons; and (v) to strengthen partnership and coordination between NAPTIP and other relevant actors both at national and international levels to ensure the effective implementation of the NAP 2022–26. The Committee welcomes this comprehensive NAP and hopes that the Government will continue to take the necessary measures to implement its various components. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the assessment of the results achieved, the challenges faced and the measures envisaged to overcome them.

3. Protection and assistance for victims. The Committee previously noted the protection and services provided to victims of trafficking including through the establishment of a Trust Fund for the benefit of victims and shelters operated by NAPTIP. It notes the Government's information that NAPTIP is currently operating 13 shelters with capacity for over 300 beds. These shelters are equipped to provide safe space and psychosocial support to victims of trafficking. The Government further indicates that a large number of victims have undergone various forms of rehabilitation, formal education programmes and vocational training (three victims of trafficking have been employed by NAPTIP and 17 have graduated from school). The Government indicates that the measures for identification of victims of trafficking are embedded in the Guidelines on the National Referral Mechanism. According to these Guidelines, several services shall be provided to protect, prevent, rehabilitate and reintegrate victims of trafficking based on their specific individual needs. The Committee encourages the Government to continue its efforts to ensure that appropriate protection and assistance is provided to victims of trafficking for both sexual and labour exploitation. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken in this regard, including under the National Referral Mechanism, and on the number of victims who have been identified, benefited from protection and assistance services and received compensation from the Trust Fund. In light of the fact that 35 per cent of the cases of trafficking consist of cross-border trafficking cases according to the National Action Plan, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken to protect and reintegrate victims who return to Nigeria, as well as on the measures taken to inform Nigerian migrants of the risks of being victims of trafficking.

Article 1(c) of the Convention. Punishment for breaches of labour discipline. Merchant Shipping Act. For a number of years, the Committee has been requesting the Government to amend section 196(2) of the Merchant Shipping Act of 2007, which provides for penalties of imprisonment, involving compulsory prison labour, for various breaches of labour discipline (including wilfully disobeying any lawful command (section 196(2)(b)) or continuing to wilfully disobey such commands or neglecting duties (section 196(b)(c)). The Committee notes the Government's information that the Merchant Shipping Act of 2007 and its regulations are still under review and amendments will be adopted in due course. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the necessary measures will be taken to amend section 196(2) of the Merchant Shipping Act of 2007 so as to ensure that no penalties involving compulsory labour may be imposed for breaches of labour discipline that do not endanger the ship or the life or health of persons.

Article 1(d). Penalties involving compulsory labour for participation in strikes. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government's information that section 62 of the draft Collective Labour Relations Bill prohibits the imposition of penalties of imprisonment for peaceful participation in a strike, in conformity with the Convention.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Collective Labour Relations Bill is still being revised. The Committee recalls in this regard that both the Trade Disputes Act, Cap. 432, of 1990 (section 17(2)(a)) and the Trade Unions Act as amended by the Trade Unions Amendment Act, 2005 (section 30) provide for the possibility of imposing penalties of imprisonment for the participation in strikes and that it has been requesting the Government to bring these provisions into conformity with Article 1(d) of the Convention for a number of years. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the Collective Labour Relations Bill will be adopted shortly and that as part of the ongoing legislative process the above-mentioned provisions of the Trade Disputes Act and the Trade Unions Act will be amended. In the meantime, the Committee requests the Government to ensure that, in accordance with Article 1(d) of the Convention, no penalties involving compulsory labour are imposed for the peaceful participation in a strike. The Committee also refers to its comments under the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87).

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 2001)

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. Trafficking in persons. The Committee notes the Government's information, in its report, on the adoption of Act No. 51/2018 of 13 August 2018 relating to the prevention, suppression and punishment of trafficking in persons and exploitation of others, which repeals the provisions of the Criminal Code criminalizing trafficking in persons. The Committee welcomes the fact that, in addition to provisions criminalizing trafficking in persons and establishing stringent penalties of imprisonment (section 18), Act No. 51/2018 also includes provisions on the prevention of trafficking, and on providing protection and assistance to the victims (sections 7 to 15). It notes the Government's indication that several awareness-raising and training activities were undertaken on trafficking in persons, more particularly for law enforcement institutions regarding the identification, investigation and prosecution of cases of trafficking in persons. The Government adds that, in 2019, the Rwanda Bureau of Investigation opened 63 cases of transnational trafficking in persons (41 for forced labour and 22 for sexual exploitation). Furthermore, 64 individuals were arrested for trafficking in persons, of whom 9 were prosecuted. Two individuals were convicted and sentenced to 20 years of imprisonment and a fine.

The Committee notes that, according to the findings of research undertaken in collaboration with the Ministry of Justice and the International Organization for Migration (IOM), in 2018, Rwanda is a transit country and, to a lesser extent, a country of origin for trafficking in persons. Data from the Department of Immigration and Emigration (DGIE) show that the majority of the suspected victims of trafficking in persons identified were women (77.67 per cent) and were mainly from neighbouring countries, and that Middle East Countries and East African Countries are the most frequent destination. The Committee notes that, in the framework of the Universal Periodic Review (UPR) of the United Nations Human Rights Council, the Government indicated that the findings of this research informed the drafting of the National Action Plan on counter-human trafficking which was at the stage of adoption by the Cabinet in November 2020 (A/HRC/WG.6/37/RWA/1, 9 November 2020, paragraph 107). It further notes that, in its 2021 concluding observations, the United Nations Committee on Migrant Workers expressed concern at the limited knowledge about trafficking in persons and the challenges in evidence-gathering as one of the main causes of the low conviction rate for the crime of trafficking in persons as compared with other crimes (CMW/C/RWA/CO/2, paragraph 53). The Committee requests the Government to pursue its efforts to combat trafficking in persons for both labour exploitation and sexual exploitation, including through the swift adoption of the draft National Action Plan on counter-human trafficking. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this context to ensure adequate protection of victims of trafficking and strengthen the capacity of the law enforcement authorities to identify, investigate and prosecute cases of trafficking. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the number of cases investigated and prosecuted, the number of convictions handed down and the penalties imposed.

Article 2(2)(e). Minor communal services. For a number of years, the Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to the fact that sections 2(2), 3, 5 and 13 of Act No. 53/2007 of 17 November 2007 on community work, go well beyond the exception allowed in Article 2(2)(e) of the Convention for minor communal services. It noted that, pursuant to Act No. 53/2007, community work, referred to as Umuganda, shall aim to promote development activities in the framework of supporting the national budget and that every Rwandan from 18 to 65 years old shall have the obligation to perform community works, which shall take place on the last Saturday of every month. Persons who fail to participate without justified reasons are punishable by a fine. The Committee noted from the information provided by the Government that infrastructure construction was one of the main activities.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that Umuganda is the gathering of efforts of many people in order for them to carry out a general public interest activity. These community works shall be considered a civic obligation for Rwandan citizens, as provided for in Article 2(2)(b) of the Convention. In that regard, the Committee emphasizes that the exception of "normal civic obligations" provided for under this provision of the Convention should be understood in a very restrictive way. Three kinds of such "normal civic obligations" are specifically mentioned in the Convention as exceptions to its scope, namely: compulsory military service, work or service in cases of emergency and "minor communal services". Thus, it is not possible to consider, within the meaning of the Convention, "normal civic obligations" to be work undertaken for public purposes, such as compulsory public works of general importance or compulsory national development service, which is prohibited by the Convention (see 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 277). Furthermore, the Committee recalls that "minor communal services" do not constitute forced labour only if certain criteria are met: (i) the services must be "minor", such as relating primarily to maintenance work; (ii) the services must be performed in the direct interest of the community and not relate to the execution of works intended to benefit a wider group; and (iii) the community which has to perform the services, or their "direct" representative, must be consulted in regard to the need for such services. Noting that the large-scale participation in Umuganda is compulsory and infrastructure construction is one of the main activities, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to review the provisions of Act No. 53/2007 of 17 November 2007 to ensure compliance with the Convention, whether by ensuring that participation in community works is voluntary or by limiting their scope to the exception of "minor communal services". It requests the Government to continue to provide examples of the types of community works that can be required of the population under Act No. 53/2007.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1962)

Previous comments

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Sanctions involving compulsory labour imposed as a punishment for expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. The Committee previously noted that several sections of the Penal Code (Organic Law No. 01/2012/OL of 2 May 2012) provide for sanctions of imprisonment, which involve compulsory labour, in circumstances falling within the scope of the Convention (sections 116, 136, 451, 462, 463, 468 and 469). It expressed concern regarding information on prosecution of opposition politicians, journalists and human rights defenders as a means of discouraging them from freely expressing their opinions. The Committee requested the Government to ensure that no penal sanctions involving compulsory prison labour may be imposed on persons for peacefully expressing political views.

Concerning compulsory prison labour, the Committee notes the Government's indication, in its report, that a draft law regulating correctional services is currently under the enactment process. The draft law would repeal the obligation of prisoners to perform activities for the development of the country, themselves and the prisons, provided for under section 50(8) of Act No. 34/2010 of 12 November 2010 on the establishment, functioning and organization of the Rwanda Correctional Service, in order to avoid any abuse that may result from its application. While noting this information, the Committee observes that section 35 of Act No. 68/2018 of 30 August 2018 determining offences and penalties in general, which replaced the Penal Code, provides that the court may order that the convict serve community service as a principal penalty in lieu of imprisonment when an offence is punishable by a term of imprisonment of up to five years. The Committee observes that the legislation in force continues to provide that persons sentenced to imprisonment are under an obligation to perform activities.

Legislation related to civil liberties and political freedoms. Referring to its previous comments, the Committee notes with interest that, pursuant to Act No. 69/2019 of 8 November 2019 amending Act No. 68/2018, defamation against the President of the Republic and humiliation of national authorities are decriminalized. It notes, however, that, under a certain number of provisions of Act No. 68/2018, sanctions involving compulsory labour may still be imposed for acts related to civil liberties and political freedoms and through which persons can express political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. The provisions in question are as follows:

- section 161 concerning public insult;
- section 164 concerning the crime of "instigating divisions";
- section 194 concerning the spread of false information or harmful propaganda with intent to cause a "hostile international opinion" against the Government;
- section 204 on causing uprising or unrest among the population; and
- section 225(1) and (2), concerning demonstration in a public place without prior authorization or illegal demonstration or public meeting (when security, public order or health is not threatened).

Legislation related to press and media freedoms. The Committee further notes that, pursuant to Act No. 02/2013 of 11 March 2013, regulating media, "the freedom of opinions and information shall not jeopardize the general public order and good morals ...". In that regard, it notes that several legislations adopted in recent years also provide for sanctions involving compulsory labour for acts through which persons express political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. More particularly:

- Act No. 60/2018 of 22 August 2018 on prevention and punishment of cyber-crimes imposes up to five years' imprisonment and a fine for publishing "rumours that may incite fear, ... or that may make a person lose their credibility" (section 39); and
- Act No. 24/2016 of 18 June 2016, governing information and communication technologies, prohibits the dissemination of "grossly offensive" or "indecent" messages, as well as the use of information and communications technology to cause "annoyance, inconvenience, or needless anxiety" (section 60), and provides that any person who, knowingly or wilfully, publishes, transmits or causes to be published in electronic form, any "indecent" information commits an offence punishable in accordance with the provisions of the Penal Code (section 206).

The Committee also notes that, as recently highlighted in the framework of the Universal Periodic Review (UPR) of the United Nations (UN) Human Rights Council, several UN treaty bodies and Special Rapporteurs continued to express serious concerns at prosecutions of politicians, journalists and human rights defenders, as a means of discouraging them from freely expressing their opinions (A/HRC/WG.6/37/RWA/2, 13 November 2020, paragraph 45; letter dated 30 May 2018 from the Special Rapporteur on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression; and CAT/C/RWA/CO/2, 21 December 2017, paragraphs 52–53). In the framework of the UPR, a number of recommendations formulated by the Working Group, and supported by Rwanda, referred to the elimination from the legislation of provisions that undermine freedom of expression and the protection of journalists and members of the media and civil society against harassment and intimidation (A/HRC/47/14, 25 March 2021, paragraphs 134–136).

The Committee notes with deep concern this information. The Committee observes that the above-mentioned provisions of Act No. 68/2018 of 30 August 2018, Act No. 60/2018 of 22 August 2018 and Act No. 24/2016 of 18 June 2016, are worded in terms broad enough to lend themselves to their application as a means of punishment for peacefully expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. In so far as these provisions are enforceable with penal sanctions which involve compulsory labour, they fall within the scope of the Convention. The Committee recalls that legal guarantees of rights to freedom of thought and expression, freedom of peaceful assembly, freedom of association, as well as freedom from arbitrary arrest, constitute an important safeguard against the imposition of compulsory labour as a punishment for holding or expressing political or ideological views (2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 302). The Committee therefore urges the Government to ensure that persons who, by means of methods that neither use violence nor incite to violence, express political views or views opposed to the established political, social or economic system do not incur penal sanctions involving an obligation to work. It expresses the firm hope that the Government will take the necessary measures to review the above-mentioned provisions of Act No. 68/2018 of 30 August 2018 determining offences and penalties in general; Act No. 60/2018 of 22 August 2018 on prevention and punishment of cybercrimes; and Act No. 24/2016 of 18 June 2016 governing information and communication technologies, for example by clearly restricting the scope of these provisions to situations connected with the use of violence or incitement to violence, or by repealing sanctions involving compulsory labour (such as compulsory prison labour or compulsory community service). In the meantime, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application of these provisions in practice, including on the number of prosecutions initiated and convictions handed down, as well as information on the facts that led to them.

Article 1(d). Sanctions for participating in strikes. The Committee notes the adoption of Act No. 66/2018 of 30 August 2018 regulating labour, which provides for a number of restrictions on the exercise of the right to strike, by considering a strike as being legal only when the arbitration committee has exceeded 15 working days without issuing its decision or the conciliation resolution on collective dispute or the court award being enforceable have not been implemented (section 105). It notes that section 118 of Act No. 66/2018 provides for sanctions of imprisonment for a term of not less than six months, involving compulsory labour, for employees who go on strike illegally. The Committee further notes the adoption of Ministerial Order No. 004/19.20 of 17 March 2020, determining essential services that should not be interrupted during strikes or lock-outs, which repealed Ministerial Order No. 4 of 13 July 2010. It observes that services related to communication, transportation or education are still considered as essential services, and that section 6 of the Ministerial Order provides that other services may be considered as essential services “for public interest”. Furthermore, employees are prohibited from exercising a strike within ten days preceding or following elections in the country (section 8). The Committee wishes to draw the Government’s attention to the fact that the right to strike may only be restricted or prohibited in essential services in the strict sense of the term (namely, in services the interruption of which would endanger the life, personal safety or health of the whole or part of the population), in the public service only for public servants exercising authority in the name of the State, or in situations of acute national crisis (see General Survey, paragraph 314). The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures, both in law and in practice, to ensure that no worker who participates peacefully in a strike can be liable and sentenced to penal sanctions involving compulsory labour.

Article 2(2)(c) of the Convention. Work exacted as a consequence of a conviction in a court of law. For a number of years, the Committee had observed that pursuant to section 193(5) of the Prison Act (Cap 19.08), prisoners (who pursuant to section 193(1) are under the obligation to undertake useful work) may be employed for the private benefit of any person, in pursuance of special rules. Having noted that, in practice, prisoners carry out work for private entities, the Committee requested the Government to review the Prison Act to ensure that prisoners only undertake work or service for private persons or entities on a voluntary basis. The Committee notes that the Government reiterates that the recommendations of the Committee will be reviewed by the National Tripartite Committee, in consultation with the competent authority and the Ministry of National Security, to ensure that any work or service by prisoners for private persons is performed voluntarily and notes with regret the lack of progress made in this regard. Therefore, the Committee urges the Government to take measures to review section 193(5) of the Prison Act (Cap 19.08) to ensure that any work or service by convicted prisoners for private persons is performed with the formal, freely given and informed consent of the prisoners concerned. It also requests the Government to ensure that, in practice, the conditions of work of the prisoners working for private entities approximate those of a free labour relationship.

The Committee is raising other issues in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Syrian Arab Republic

Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) (ratification: 1960)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2023, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

Articles 1(1), 2(1) and 25 of the Convention. Situations of forced labour arising from the armed conflict. Trafficking and sexual slavery. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes that according to the 2016 Report of the UN Special Rapporteur on the human rights of internally displaced persons on his mission to the Syrian Arab Republic to the Human Rights Council, credible information indicates that women and girls trapped in conflict areas under the control of the Islamic State in Iraq and the Levant (ISIL) face trafficking and sexual slavery. Some specific ethnic groups are particularly vulnerable, such as Yazidis and those from ethnic and religious communities targeted by the ISIL (A/HRC/32/35/Add.2, paragraph 65). The Committee also notes that, according to the 2017 Report of the UN Secretary-General on conflict-related sexual violence, thousands of Yazidi women and girls who were captured in Iraq in August 2014 and trafficked to the Syrian Arab Republic continue to be held in sexual slavery, while new reports have surfaced of additional women and children being forcibly transferred from Iraq to the Syrian Arab Republic since the start of military operations in Mosul (S/2017/249, paragraph 69).

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that, pursuant to the Prevention of Human Trafficking Act of 2010, a Department to Combat Trafficking in Persons was established. However, since the conflict has erupted, trafficking of persons and sexual slavery have increased because of the presence of terrorist groups in the country. The Committee must express its deep concern that, after almost six years of conflict, trafficking in persons and sexual slavery are practices that are still occurring on a large scale on the ground. While acknowledging the complexity of the situation on the ground and the presence of armed groups and armed conflict in the country, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to put an immediate stop to these practices which constitute a serious violation of the Convention and to guarantee that the victims are fully protected from such abusive practices. The Committee recalls that it is crucial that appropriate criminal penalties are imposed on perpetrators so that recourse to trafficking or sexual slavery does not go unpunished. The Committee urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures in this respect, and to provide information on the results achieved.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1958)

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2023, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Penal sanctions involving compulsory labour as a punishment for holding or expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. For a number of years, the Committee has been drawing the Government's attention to certain provisions under which penal sanctions involving compulsory prison labour, pursuant to sections 46 and 51 of the Penal Code (Act No. 148 of 1949), may be imposed in situations covered by the Convention, namely:

- Penal Code: section 282 (insult of a foreign State); 287 (exaggerated news tending to harm the prestige of the State); 288 (participation in a political or social association of an international character without permission); and sections 335 and 336 (seditious assembly, and meetings liable to disturb public tranquillity); and
- the Press Act No. 156 of 1960: sections 15, 16 and 55 (publishing a newspaper for which an authorization has not been granted by the Council of Ministers).

The Committee also previously noted that the abovementioned provisions are enforceable with sanctions of imprisonment for a term of up to one year which involves an obligation to perform labour in prison.

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that the Press Act of 1960 had been repealed and replaced by the Media Act No. 108 of 2011, under which the penalty of imprisonment has been replaced by a fine. The Government also indicates that a draft Penal Code has been prepared and is in the process of being adopted. The Committee expresses the firm hope that, during the process of the adoption of the new Penal Code, the Government will take all the necessary measures to ensure that persons who express political views or views opposed to the established political, social or economic system benefit from the protection afforded by the Convention and that, in any event, penal sanctions involving compulsory prison labour cannot be imposed on them.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Turkmenistan

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 2001)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 1 September 2022. It requests the Government to provide its reply to these observations.

Article 1(b) of the Convention. Imposition of forced labour as a method of mobilizing and using labour for purposes of economic development. Cotton production. In its previous comments, the Committee noted with deep concern the continued practice of forced labour in the cotton sector. The Committee also noted that, in its 2021 conclusions on the application of the Convention by Turkmenistan, the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards, urged the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to ensure that no one, including farmers, public and private sector workers and students, is forced to work for the state-sponsored cotton harvest. To effectively implement its conclusions, the Conference Committee called on the Government to accept a high-level mission of the ILO which would be granted all accommodations so as to carry out its duties, including during the harvest season.

The Committee notes the Government's indication, in its report, that no allegation of the use of forced labour in the cotton sector has been reported to state bodies, judicial authorities, representative organizations of employers and workers, or the Ombudsman's Office. The Government also indicates that the Ombudsman's Office has made recommendations to the Prosecutor General, the Ministry of Internal Affairs, the Ministry of Education, and the heads of the provinces and Ashgabat to strengthen monitoring with a view to preventing forced and child labour, including in cotton harvesting and other agricultural works. In addition, measures are being taken to improve the procedure for concluding employment contracts between farmers and cotton pickers.

The Committee further notes that a high-level mission of the ILO was carried out in Turkmenistan in two phases in 2022: the first phase was undertaken virtually due to the COVID-19-related restrictions in February 2022. A preparatory ILO mission to Turkmenistan took place from 14 to 16 September 2022 to prepare for the second phase of the high-level mission. The objective of this preparatory visit was to (1) further ILO understanding of how the cotton harvest in Turkmenistan was organized from an institutional and practical point of view; (2) discuss the parameters for the second phase of the high-level mission; and (3) discuss the development of a possible development cooperation project. Consequently, the second phase of the high-level mission was undertaken from 14 to 18 November 2022. The main objective of the second phase was to reach agreement on the parameters of a development cooperation project and immediate activities for cooperation between the ILO and the Turkmen constituents.

The Committee notes that as an outcome of the high-level mission, an agreement was reached on a draft road map for cooperation between the ILO and the Government for 2023. In particular, the road map provides for the elaboration of activities in the following six areas: (1) a review of the policy and administrative framework governing the cotton harvest; (2) improvement of labour inspection and law enforcement; (3) promotion of full, productive and freely chosen employment in the cotton sector; (4) improvement of cotton production and harvesting; (5) design and implementation of awareness-raising activities; and (6) promotion of social dialogue in cotton production. In addition, the road map includes activities on the improvement of the legislative framework for the prevention and prohibition of forced labour; the undertaking of a situation analysis on recruitment for cotton picking; improvement of the regulation of seasonal work in agriculture and contractual arrangements; improvement of labour inspection to strengthen oversight; the undertaking of field visits during the 2023 cotton harvest; as well as further enhancement of dialogue between the ILO and the Government. The Committee also notes that the high-level mission undertook visits to Mary and Lebap provinces, during which it met with the regional authorities and visited the cotton fields.

The Committee further notes that the ITUC, in its 2022 observations, reiterates once again the continued recourse to the use by the State of forced labour in picking cotton. According to the ITUC, during the 2021 cotton harvest, mobilized persons were forced to work excessively long hours in poor sanitary conditions without access to medical care and compensation for their work. As in the previous years, in order not to participate in cotton harvesting, persons had to pay the amounts representing a substantial part of their income for replacement pickers. The ITUC also points out that the most vulnerable persons to forced labour in the cotton harvest are public sector workers who constitute the main workforce to pick cotton, internal migrant workers, persons receiving treatment for addiction, persons accused of prostitution or alimony delinquency, as well as students at state educational institutions.

While taking due note of the Government's collaboration with the ILO to address the issue of forced labour in cotton harvesting, the Committee once again notes with concern the reports of the continued practice of forced labour in the cotton sector. The Committee strongly urges the Government to pursue its efforts to ensure the complete elimination of the use of compulsory labour of public and private sector workers, as well as students, in cotton production. In this regard, the Committee strongly encourages the Government to continue to engage in cooperation with the ILO and the social partners to ensure the full application of the Convention in practice, including within the framework of the road map for cooperation between the ILO and the Government. It requests the Government to provide information on concrete measures taken in this respect, including on: (1) a review of the policy and administrative framework governing the cotton harvest; (2) improvement of labour inspection and law enforcement; (3) promotion of full, productive and freely chosen employment in the cotton sector; (4) improvement of cotton production and harvesting; (5) design and implementation of awareness-raising activities; and (6) promotion of social dialogue in the cotton production.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Uganda

Abolition of Forced Labour Convention, 1957 (No. 105) (ratification: 1963)

Previous comment

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report, which was due since 2019, does not contain replies to its previous comments. In light of its urgent appeal launched to the Government in 2021, the Committee proceeds with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal.

Article 1(a) of the Convention. Penal sanctions involving compulsory labour as a punishment for holding or expressing political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. The Committee previously urged the Government to review and amend a number of provisions punishing certain activities, which might fall within the scope of the Convention, with penalties of imprisonment involving an obligation to perform labour pursuant to the Prisons Regulations (section 61). The provisions in question are as follows:

- provisions of the Public Order and Security Act No. 20 of 1967, empowering the executive to restrict an individual's association or communication with others, independently of the commission of any offence, subject to penalties involving compulsory labour;
- sections 54(2)(c), 55, 56 and 56(a) of the Penal Code, empowering the minister to declare any combination of two or more people an unlawful society and thus rendering any speech, publication or activity on behalf of, or in support of, such a combination, illegal and punishable with imprisonment; and

- sections 5(8) and 8(4) of the Public Order Management Act, 2013, respectively for disobedience of statutory duty in case of organizing a public meeting without any reasonable excuse, and for disobedience of lawful orders during public meetings.

Regarding the Public Order Management Act of 2013, the Committee notes the decision of the Constitutional Court of Uganda of March 2020 in the case Human Rights Network Uganda & 4 Ors v. Attorney General (Constitutional Petition 56 of 2013). The Committee welcomes the fact that by a majority decision, the Court declared and ordered that section 8 of the Public Order Management Act was unconstitutional and therefore null and void, and that all acts made under that Act are also null and void.

The Committee notes with concern from the information of the United Nations (UN) country team in the framework of the Universal Periodic Review of the UN Human Rights Council of November 2021, that hundreds of opposition organizers, campaign staff, members and supporters were arrested and detained, and some were subjected to incommunicado detention, including in military detention facilities, during the electoral period. There were widespread restrictions on political participation, media freedom and freedom of peaceful assembly throughout the electoral campaign. The UN country team also referred to COVID-19 restrictions on public meetings and assemblies, which were applied in a discriminatory manner to target people perceived as opponents of the Government (A/HRC/WG.6/40/UGA/2, paragraphs 12 and 18).

The Committee recalls that legislation regulating the exercise of civil liberties shall not be applied in a manner that could result in the imposition of prison sentences involving compulsory labour on persons who hold or express political views or views opposed to the established political, social or economic system. The Committee points out that, in this regard, the range of activities which must be protected from punishment involving compulsory labour, under Article 1(a) of the Convention, comprises the freedom to express political or ideological views (which may be exercised orally or through the press and other communications media), as well as various other generally recognized rights, such as the right of association and of assembly, through which citizens seek to secure the dissemination and acceptance of their views (2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraphs 302 and 303). The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that, both in law and in practice, no penalties involving compulsory prison labour can be imposed on persons who peacefully express political views or views ideologically opposed to the established political, social or economic system. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the necessary action will be taken regarding the revision of the provisions the Public Order and Security Act No. 20 of 1967, the Penal Code (sections 54(2)(c), 55, 56 and 56(a)), and the Public Order Management Act, 2013 (section 5(8)), to ensure the observance of the Convention, and that the Government will soon report on any progress made in this regard. It also requests the Government to provide information on the legal consequences of the above-mentioned decision of the Constitutional Court.

Article 1(d). Penal sanctions involving compulsory labour as a punishment for having participated in strikes. The Committee previously noted that the Labour Disputes (Arbitration and Settlement) Act, 2006 contains provisions concerning the resolution and settlement of labour disputes which could lead to the imposition of compulsory arbitration procedures, thus making strikes or other industrial action unlawful. Organization of strikes in these circumstances are punishable with imprisonment (involving compulsory prison labour) (sections 28(6) and 29(2) and (3)). The Committee also noted that under sections 33(1) and (2) of the Act, the minister may refer disputes in essential services to the Industrial Court, thus making illegal any collective withdrawal of labour in such services; the violation of this prohibition is punishable with imprisonment.

While the Government previously indicated under the application of the Freedom of Association and Protection of the Right to Organise Convention, 1948 (No. 87), that an Amendment Bill, 2019, to the Labour Disputes (Arbitration and Settlement) Act, 2006, was before Parliament for discussion, the Committee notes with regret that the Labour Disputes (Arbitration and Settlement) (Amendment) Act adopted in 2020 does not take into account the Committee's recommendations.

The Committee recalls in this regard that, in accordance with Article 1(d) of the Convention, persons who organize or peacefully participate in a strike cannot be liable to sanctions involving compulsory labour. Furthermore, when restrictions and prohibitions on the right to strike, connected with the imposition of compulsory arbitration, are enforceable with sanctions involving compulsory labour, they should be limited to the sectors, types of employment or situations where, in conformity with freedom of association principles, restrictions may be imposed on the right to strike itself (such as, essential services in the strict sense of the term or situations of acute national crisis). The Committee refers in this regard to its comments under Convention No. 87 and the Right to Organise and Collective Bargaining Convention, 1949 (No. 98). The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the Labour Disputes (Arbitration and Settlement) Act, 2006, is amended so that workers who participate peacefully in a strike are not liable to sanctions of imprisonment involving compulsory labour. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this respect.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Direct requests

In addition, requests regarding certain matters are being addressed directly to the following States: Convention No. 29 (Australia, Belarus, Belize, Botswana, Brazil, Cabo Verde, Cambodia, Canada, Chad, Comoros, Cook Islands, Costa Rica, Croatia, Cuba, Czechia, Democratic Republic of the Congo, Denmark, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, El Salvador, Eritrea, Estonia, Eswatini, Ethiopia, France: French Polynesia, Gabon, Ghana, Guatemala, Guyana, Islamic Republic of Iran, Iraq, Ireland, Israel, Kuwait, Lao People's Democratic Republic, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libya, Madagascar, Malaysia, Mali, Mauritania, Mongolia, Montenegro, Mozambique, Nepal, Netherlands: Aruba, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Papua New Guinea, Rwanda, Saint Kitts and Nevis, Somalia, Syrian Arab Republic, Uganda); Convention No. 105 (Afghanistan, Azerbaijan, Barbados, Chad, Comoros, Congo, Cook Islands, Cuba, Czechia, Dominican Republic, Ecuador, Eswatini, Ethiopia, Gabon, Ghana, Grenada, Guatemala, Islamic Republic of Iran, Iraq, Israel, Kenya, Kuwait, Latvia, Lebanon, Lesotho, Liberia, Libya, Mali, Mongolia, Montenegro, Mozambique, Netherlands: Aruba, Nicaragua, Nigeria, Saint Kitts and Nevis, South Sudan, Syrian Arab Republic, Tajikistan, Turkmenistan, Uganda).

The Committee noted the information supplied by the following State in answer to a direct request with regard to: Convention No. 29 (Argentina).

Elimination of child labour and protection of children and young persons

Afghanistan

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2010)

The Committee notes with concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. The Committee previously noted the implementation of the various measures taken by the Ministry of Labour, Social Affairs, Martyrs and Disabled (MoLSAMD) to prevent child labour, including: the National Child Labour Strategy, 2012, followed by a National Action Plan to prevent child labour in brick kilns; a National Strategy for the Protection of Children at Risk; and a National Strategy for Working Street Children, 2011. However, the Committee noted, that children in Afghanistan are engaged in child labour and often in hazardous conditions, including in agriculture, carpet weaving, domestic work, street work, and brick making. Moreover, 27 per cent of children between the ages of 5 and 17 years (2.7 million children) are engaged in child labour with a higher proportion of boys (65 per cent). Of this, 46 per cent are children between 5 and 11 years of age. At least half of all child labourers are exposed to hazardous working conditions such as dust, gas, fumes, extreme cold, heat or humidity. Moreover, 56 per cent of brick makers in Afghan kilns are children and the majority of these are 14 years of age and below.

The Committee notes that the Government's report contains no new information in this regard. The Committee once again notes with concern that a significant number of children under the age of 14 years are engaged in child labour, of which at least half are working in hazardous conditions. The Committee therefore urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure the progressive elimination of child labour in all economic activities, both in the formal and informal sectors, and requests that the Government provide information on the measures taken in this regard, as well as the results achieved.

Article 2(1). Scope of application. The Committee noted that according to sections 5 and 13 of the Labour Law, read in conjunction with the definition of a "worker", the Law applies only to labour relations on a contractual basis and, therefore, that the provisions of the Labour Law did not appear to cover the employment of children outside a formal employment relationship, such as children working on their own account or in the informal economy.

Noting the absence of information provided in this regard in the Government's report, the Committee recalls that the Convention applies to all sectors of economic activity and covers all forms of employment and work, whether or not there is a contractual employment relationship. The Committee therefore requests, once again, that the Government take the necessary measures to ensure that all children, including children working outside a formal employment relationship such as children working on their own account or in the informal economy, benefit from the protection laid down by the Convention. In this regard, the Committee encourages, once more, the Government to review the relevant provisions of the Labour Law in order to address these gaps as well as to take measures to strengthen the capacity and expand the reach of the labour inspectorate to the informal economy with a view to ensuring such protection in this sector.

Article 7(1) and (3). Minimum age for admission to light work and determination of light work. The Committee previously noted that section 13(2) of the Labour Law sets 15 years as the minimum age for employment in light work in industries and section 31 prescribes a weekly working period of 35 hours for young persons between 15 and 18 years of age. It observed that the minimum age for light work of 15 years is higher than the minimum age for admission to employment or work of 14 years, specified by Afghanistan.

Noting the absence of information provided in this regard by the Government, the Committee once again draws the Government's attention to the fact that Article 7(1) of the Convention is a flexibility clause which provides that national laws or regulations may permit the employment or work of persons aged 13–15 years in light work activities which are not likely to be harmful to their health or development and not such as to prejudice their attendance at school, their participation in vocational orientation or training programmes approved by the competent authority, or their capacity to benefit from the instruction received.

The Committee notes the lack of information contained in the Government's report and recalls once again that Article 7(4) permits Member States who have specified a general minimum age for admission to employment or work of 14 years to substitute a minimum age for admission to light work of 12–14 years to that of the usual 13–15 years of age (see General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, 2012, paragraphs 389 and 391). In view of the fact that a high number of children under 14 years of age are engaged in child labour in the country, the Committee once again requests that the Government regulate light work activities for children between 12 and 14 years of age to ensure that children who, in practice, work under the minimum age are better protected. The Committee also requests that the Government take the necessary measures to determine light work activities that children of 12–14 years of age are permitted to undertake and to prescribe the number of hours and conditions of such work, pursuant to Article 7(3) of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2010)

The Committee notes with concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) received on 30 August 2017, and the in-depth discussion on the application of the Convention by Afghanistan in the Committee on the Application of Standards at the 106th Session of the International Labour Conference in June 2017.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 106th Session, June 2017)

Articles 3(a) and 7(2)(b) of the Convention. All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery and effective and time-bound measures. Compulsory recruitment of children for use in armed conflict and providing the necessary and appropriate direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour, and for their rehabilitation and social integration. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that the Law on prohibiting the recruitment of child soldiers criminalizes the recruitment of children under the age of 18 years into the Afghan Security Forces. The Committee also noted that a total of 116 cases of recruitment and use of children, including one girl, were documented in 2015. Out of these: 13 cases were attributed to the Afghan National Defence and Security forces; five to the Afghan National Police; five to the Afghan Local Police; and three to the Afghan National Army; while the majority of verified cases were attributed to the Taliban and other armed groups who used children for combat and suicide attacks. The United Nations verified 1,306 incidents resulting in 2,829 child casualties (733 killed and 2,096 injured), an average of 53 children were killed or injured every week. A total of 92 children were abducted in 2015 in 23 incidents.

In this regard, the Committee noted the following measures taken by the Government:

- The Government of Afghanistan signed an Action Plan with the United Nations on 30 January 2011 to end and prevent the recruitment and use of children by the Afghan National Security Forces, including the Afghan National Police, Afghan Local Police and Afghan National Army.
- A roadmap to accelerate the implementation of the Action Plan was endorsed by the Government on 1 August 2014.
- The Government endorsed age-assessment guidelines to prevent the recruitment of minors.
- In 2015 and early 2016, three additional child protection units were established in Mazar e Sharif, Jalalabad and Kabul, bringing the total to seven. These units are embedded in Afghan National Police recruitment centres and are credited with preventing the recruitment of hundreds of children.

The Committee notes that the Conference Committee recommended that the Government take measures as a matter of urgency to ensure the full and immediate demobilization of all children and to put a stop, in practice, to the forced recruitment of children into armed forces and groups. It further recommended the Government to take immediate and effective measures to ensure that thorough investigations and prosecutions of all persons who forcibly recruit children for use in armed conflict are carried out, and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in law and practice. Finally, the Conference Committee recommended the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to provide for the rehabilitation and social integration of children who are forced to join armed groups.

The Committee notes the IOE's indication that children are engaged in armed conflict in Afghanistan. The Committee notes the Government representative's indication to the Conference Committee that the Law on the Prohibition of Children's Recruitment in the Armed Forces (2014), along with other associated instruments, has helped prevent the recruitment of 496 children into national and local police ranks in 2017. Moreover, the Ministry of Interior, in cooperation with relevant government agencies, was effectively implementing Presidential Decree No. 129 which prohibits, among others, the use or recruitment of children in police ranks. Inter-ministerial commissions tasked with the prevention of child recruitment in national and local police have been established in Kabul and the provinces, and child support centres have been set up in 20 provinces, with efforts under way to establish similar centres in the remaining provinces. Finally, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the National Directorate of Security has recently issued Order No. 0555, prohibiting the recruitment of underage persons and that the Order is being implemented in all security institutions and monitored by national and international human rights organizations. While acknowledging the complexity of the situation on the ground and the presence of armed groups and armed conflict in the country, the Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts in taking immediate and effective measures to put a stop, in practice, to the recruitment of children under 18 years by armed groups, the national armed forces and police authorities, as well as measures to ensure the demobilization of children involved in armed conflict. It once again urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures to ensure that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions of persons who forcibly recruit children under 18 years of age for use in armed conflict are carried out, and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice. Finally, it requests the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to remove children from armed groups and armed forces and ensure their rehabilitation and social integration, and to provide information on the measures taken in this regard and on the results achieved.

Articles 3(b) and 7(2)(b). Use, procuring or offering of children for prostitution and providing the necessary and appropriate direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration. The Committee previously noted that concerns remained regarding the cultural practice of bacha-bazi (dancing boys), which involves the sexual exploitation of boys by men in power, including the Afghan National Defence and Security Forces' commanders. It also noted that there are many child victims of bacha bazi, particularly boys between 10 and 18 years of age who have been sexually exploited for long periods of time. The Committee further noted that some families knowingly sell their children into forced prostitution, including for bacha-bazi.

The Committee notes that the Conference Committee recommended the Government to take immediate and effective measures to eliminate the practice of bacha-bazi. It also recommended the Government to take effective and time bound measures to provide for the rehabilitation and social integration of children who are sexually exploited.

The Committee notes the Government representative's indication to the Conference Committee that the Child Protection Law has been submitted to Parliament for adoption and makes the practice of bacha-bazi a criminal offence. The Committee also notes the new Law on Combating Human Trafficking in Persons and Smuggling of Migrants of 2017 (Law on Human Trafficking of 2017). It notes that section 10(2) of this Law punishes the perpetrator of trafficking to eight years' imprisonment when the victim is a child or when the victim is exploited for the purpose of dancing. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the effective implementation of the prohibition contained in section 10(2) of the Law on Human Trafficking of 2017. It requests the Government to provide information on the results achieved to effectively eliminate the practice of bacha-bazi, to remove children from this worst forms of child labour and to provide assistance for their rehabilitation and social integration. It also requests the Government to provide information on the adoption of the Child Protection Law, and its effective implementation.

Article 7(2). Clauses (a) and (e). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour and taking into account the special situation of girls. Access to free basic education. The Committee previously noted the Government's statement that as a result of the past three decades of conflict, insecurity and drought, children and youth are the most affected victims, a majority of whom are deprived of proper education and training. The Committee noted that Afghanistan is among the poorest performers in providing sufficient education to its population. A large number of boys and girls in 16 out of 34 provinces had no access to schools by 2013 due to insurgents' attacks and threats that lead to the closure of schools. In addition to barriers arising from insecurity throughout 2015, anti-government elements deliberately restricted the access of girls to education, including closure of girls' schools and a ban on girls' education. More than 369 schools were closed partially or completely, affecting at least 139,048 students, and more than 35 schools were used for military purposes in 2015. Finally, the Committee noted the low enrolment rate of girls, in particular at the secondary school level, high dropout rates especially in rural areas owing to a lack of security in the journey to and from school, and the increased number of attacks on girls' schools and written threats warning girls to stop going to school by non-state armed groups.

The Committee notes the Government representative's statement at the Conference Committee that many households respond to poverty by taking their children out of school and forcing them into labour. The Government indicates that child labour is not only a law enforcement matter but a fundamental problem which requires a comprehensive understanding and a robust response mechanism. With a view to providing preschool support to children under the age of six, the Ministry of Labour, Social Affairs, Martyrs and Disabled has established over 366 local kindergartens which house over 27,000 children. The Government also indicates it is taking strong action against the exploiters as well as the families who knowingly force their children into prostitution and expects a sharp decline in the practice in the coming years. Finally, the Committee notes the Government's indication that school burnings and the imposition of bans in Taliban-controlled areas prevented girls and children from attending school. While acknowledging the difficult situation prevailing in the country, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to raise awareness among households that education is key in preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour. Additionally, it once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to improve the functioning of the education system and to ensure access to free basic education, including by taking measures to increase the school enrolment and completion rates, both at the primary and secondary levels, particularly of girls.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Antigua and Barbuda

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1983)

The Committee notes with concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Article 3(1) and (2) of the Convention. Minimum age for admission to hazardous work and determination of these types of work. The Committee previously noted the Government's indication that the unions and employers' federation were consulted regarding the activities and occupations which should be prohibited to persons below 18 years of age. It noted that although a recommendation was made, it was not submitted before the National Labour Board, as it was the Government's aim to revamp the occupational health and safety legislation. Thereafter, the Committee noted the Government's statement that the proposed amendments to the provisions of the Labour Code on occupational health and safety have been circulated to Cabinet, but have not yet been adopted. It further noted the Government's indication that technical assistance was sought in relation to new and separate occupational health and safety legislation.

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that the National Labour Board is currently reviewing the occupational health and safety legislation. The Government states that it has noted the Committee's comments and that it will act accordingly. The Committee notes with regret that the list of hazardous types of work prohibited for children under 18 years of age has still not been adopted. The Committee therefore once again reminds the Government that Article 3(1) of the Convention provides that the minimum age for admission to any type of employment or work which, by its nature or the circumstances in which it is carried out, is likely to jeopardize the health, safety, or morals of young persons, shall not be less than 18 years. It also reminds the Government that, under the terms of Article 3(2) of the Convention, the types of hazardous employment or work shall be determined by national laws or regulations or by the competent authority, after consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned. Observing that the Convention was ratified by Antigua and Barbuda more than 30 years ago, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that a list of activities and occupations prohibited for persons below 18 years of age is adopted in the near future, in accordance with Article 3(1) and (2) of the Convention. It encourages the Government to pursue its efforts in this regard through amendments to the occupational health and safety legislation, and to provide information on progress made. Lastly, it requests that the Government provide a copy of the amendments to the occupational health and safety legislation once adopted.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Argentina

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1996)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the General Confederation of Labour of the Argentine Republic (CGT RA), received on 1 September 2021, and of the Confederation of Workers of Argentina (CTA Autonomous), received on 31 August 2021.

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy for the effective abolition of child labour. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the National Plan for the Eradication of Child Labour and the Protection of Work by Young Persons (2018-22) and encouraged the Government to pursue its efforts towards the progressive elimination of child labour.

The Committee notes that, in response to the previous observations of the GGT RA concerning the need to strengthen the Provincial Commissions for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labour (COPRETI), the Government indicates in its report that, with a view to maintaining permanent links between the provinces and the National Committee for the Eradication of Child Labour (CONAETI), provincial representatives (either the highest labour authority in the province or COPRETI coordinators) have been included on the board of the CONAETI. It also notes the creation of the Federal Strengthening Programme for the Eradication of Child Labour (Decision No. 268/2021 of the Ministry of Labour, Employment and Social Security), with the intention of reinforcing the role of institutions in territorial entities and/or value chains, which give rise to risks of the use of child labour, including through the training of leaders to promote childhood free from child labour. The Government adds that it is working on the establishment of provincial networks of enterprises involved in action to address child labour with a view to focusing more deeply on value chains. With ILO support, action has been initiated to eradicate child labour in the agricultural sector, and particularly in the production of tomatoes, garlic and cotton. The Committee notes the emphasis placed by the CGT RA on trade union participation in the design of policies to combat child labour, as reflected in the agreement concluded in 2021 between various unions and the Government with a view to articulating joint training activities for the prevention and eradication of child labour.

The Committee also takes note of the findings of the Survey of the Activities of Boys, Girls and Young Persons (EANNA) 2017, provided by the Government. According to the Survey, 10 per cent of boys and girls aged between 5 and 15 years in the country (763,544 boys and girls) are engaged in at least one productive activity (whether for the market, for own consumption or intensive unpaid domestic work involving ten or more hours of work a week), with a higher incidence in rural areas (19.8 per cent) and in the north-east and north-west of Argentina. Of a total of 781,513 boys, girls and young persons who work (between 5 and 17 years of age), 613,330 may be considered to fall within the ILO definition of child labour.

The Committee welcomes the efforts made by the Government for the strengthening of cooperation with provincial bodies responsible for combating child labour, and the compilation and publication of updated and disaggregated statistical data on the characteristics of child labour throughout the country, which will provide a basis for directing and monitoring the public policies adopted for its eradication. The Committee therefore encourages the Government to continue its efforts, in collaboration with the social partners, for the elimination of child labour in all sectors, and requests it to provide information on this subject. The Committee also requests the Government to continue providing updated information, where possible disaggregated by age and gender, on the nature, extent and trends of child labour in the country, including in the informal economy.

Article 2(3). Compulsory schooling. The Committee notes that, according to the EANNA, although school attendance by children (from 5 to 15 years of age) is almost universal (98.7 per cent of those living in urban areas and 96.6 per cent in rural areas), the intensity of the working day is an indicator that runs counter to educational success. Of all children who carry out at least one productive activity in urban areas, 21 per cent arrive late at school, 19.4 per cent do not attend school frequently and 17.3 per cent have repeated a school year at least once; while among those in rural areas, 15.2 per cent arrive at school late, 17.3 per cent do not attend school frequently and 22.4 per cent have repeated a school year at least once. In this regard, the CTA Autonomous indicates that the tension between child labour and education takes the form of a deterioration in educational trajectories and emphasizes that, among those who work, the requirement to repeat years, late arrivals at school and frequent absences occur more often than for those not engaged in productive work, irrespective of whether the work is for the market, household consumption or domestic or intensive care work.

The Committee notes with concern this information, which indicates that children under the minimum age are engaged in work which prevents them from attending school regularly, achieving a good educational performance and benefiting from the education received. The Committee recalls in this respect that to prevent and combat child labour, compulsory education should be effectively implemented so as to ensure that all children under the minimum age are attending school (2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 375). The Committee therefore requests the Government to take all the necessary measures to: (i) identify the causes that lead children under the minimum age for admission to employment (16 years) to undertake work that prevents them from attending school; and (ii) ensure that all children under the minimum age are able to complete compulsory schooling in practice. In this regard, it requests the Government to continue providing updated statistical data on school attendance, drop-out, repetition and completion rates for children under 16 years of age.

Article 7(1). Light work. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, by virtue of section 17 of Act No. 26390/2008 on the prohibition of child labour and the protection of young workers, persons over 14 and under 16 years of age may work in enterprises owned by their father, mother or guardian for no more than three hours a day and 15 hours a week, on condition that the work is not hazardous or unhealthy and that they can continue attending school. However, the Committee notes that, according to the EANNA, in urban areas, 25.5 per cent of children (between 5 and 15 years of age) who work do so for between ten and 36 hours a week, and 8.5 per cent work for more than 36 hours a week. In rural areas, 28.5 per cent of children who work do so between ten and 36 hours a week, and 6.1 per cent for more than 36 hours a week. The Committee observes that, according to this statistical data, there are children engaged in light work for a number of hours that exceeds the limit established by the national legislation, and that some of them are even under the age established for such work. In this regard, the Committee wishes to recall that, in accordance with Article 7(1) of the Convention, children who are of the age to undertake light work may only carry out work that is not likely to be harmful to their health or development, and that is not such as to prejudice their attendance at school or their capacity to benefit from the instruction received. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to: (i) identify the causes that lead children, even under the minimum age, to undertake light work, activities that exceeds the maximum number of hours established by the national legislation; and (ii) ensure that only children over 14 years of age undertake light work and that in no case does such work exceed the number of hours permitted by national laws and regulations (up to 15 hours a week).

Application in practice and labour inspection. The Committee notes the Government's indication that in 2020 the Coordinating Unit for the Prevention of Child Labour and the Protection of Young Workers became the Inspection Department for Work by Children and Young Persons and Evidence of Labour Exploitation (DITIAEIEL), the functions of which include promoting the continuous strengthening of labour inspection systems, furthering legal provisions and preparing information materials to optimize inspection, and technical assistance to labour jurisdictions. The Government also refers to Decision No. 425/2019 of the Secretariat of Labour establishing the procedure for action by the National Labour Inspectorate in cases of the presence of persons under 16 years of age engaged in work, which sets out the guidelines to be taken into account by labour inspectors when dealing with victims of child labour. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, between January 2020 and the first semester of 2021, a total of 17 criminal charges were brought for child labour under section 148bis of the Criminal Code, and it emphasizes that, despite the impact of the pandemic on inspection, all denunciations by citizens of work by children and young persons in violation of the labour regulations were subject to inspection. The Committee further notes that the CGT RA, in its observations on the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182), refers to the lack of coordination and inadequacy of the number of inspectors to detect situations of child labour. Taking into account the number of children between the ages of 5 and 15 years who, according to the EANNA, are engaged in work, the Committee requests the Government to continue taking all the necessary measures to strengthen the capacities of the labour inspection system in relation to child labour with a view to ensuring its presence in all the regions of the country and economic sectors, including the informal economy. It once again requests the Government to provide information on the number of inspections carried out in relation to child labour, if possible disaggregated by region and sector of the economy, and on the nature and number of violations detected, the number of convictions and the type of sanctions imposed, including the reasons for the low number of criminal charges brought in light of the high number of very young children engaged in light work.

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the General Confederation of Labour of the Argentine Republic (CGT RA), received on 1 September 2021.

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (d). Hazardous types of work. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the adoption of Decree No. 1117/2016 determining the list of hazardous types of work prohibited for persons under 18 years of age and requested the Government to provide information on the effect given to the Decree. The Committee notes with concern that, according to the Survey of Activities by Boys, Girls and Young Persons (EANNA) 2016-17, a total of 538,871 boys, girls and young persons between the ages of five and 17 years engaged in work perform hazardous types of work: 117,377 in rural areas and 421,494 in urban areas. Moreover, one in every three boys, girls and young persons are tired by the work they perform; around one in three indicate that they suffer from excessive cold or heat in carrying out their work; and one in four boys and girls who work in urban areas carry out their work in the street or a means of transport. Moreover, the CGT RA indicates in its observations that boys and girls under 18 years of age are engaged in types of work that are prohibited by Decree No. 1117/2016. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the legislation on hazardous types of work is applied effectively so that no boy, girl or young person under 18 years of age is engaged in types of work which, by their nature or the circumstances in which they are carried out, are likely to harm their health, safety or morals. In this regard, it requests the Government to provide information on the number of violations of Decree No. 1117/2016 that have been detected and the penalties imposed.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2006)

Previous comment

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (b). Use, procuring or offering of a child for the production of pornography and for pornographic performances. Provincial legislation. New South Wales (NSW). In its previous comments, the Committee noted that Division 15A of the Crimes Act which deals with offences related to child pornography applied only to children under 16 years of age. The Committee therefore urged the Government to take the necessary measures to extend this prohibition up to 18 years.

The Committee notes the Government's reference in its report to section 91D of the Crimes Act concerning promoting or engaging in acts of child prostitution which include sexual services by children under 18 years of age. The Government also indicates that where a relevant act involving a child over the age of 16 occurs without that child's consent, numerous other offences may also apply, including sexual assault and related offences under Division 10 of Part 3 of the Crimes Act, and offences relating to voyeurism and the recording and distribution of intimate images under Divisions 15B and 15C of the Crimes Act. The Government states that despite the distinction drawn between children under the age of 16 and 18 for child abuse material offences, the NSW Government considers that the commercial sexual exploitation of children under the age of 18 is prohibited in NSW.

While noting that the NSW legislation provides protection to children under 16 years of age regarding their involvement in the production of child abuse material and to children above 16 years if they do not consent, the Committee once again emphasizes the importance of distinguishing between the age of sexual consent and the age for protection from commercial sexual exploitation. The Committee considers that all persons under the age of 18 years are entitled to be protected absolutely from commercial sexual exploitation, and that neither the age of consent nor the physical appearance of a child affects the obligation to prohibit the worst forms of child labour. Therefore, recalling that by virtue of Article 3(b) of the Convention the use, procuring or offering of a child under 18 years of age for the production of pornography or pornographic performances is considered to be one of the worst forms of child labour and, under the terms of Article 1, this worst form of child labour shall be prohibited as a matter of urgency, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to specifically extend this prohibition up to 18 years.

Clause (c). Use, procuring or offering of a child for illicit activities. Provincial legislation. Northern Territory. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government's information that the Department of Justice would develop a proposal to the Minister of Justice and Attorney-General, for considering a provision being inserted to the Criminal Code Act prohibiting the use, procuring or offering of a child for the purpose of illicit activities. It therefore urged the Government to take the necessary measures to prohibit the use, procuring or offering of a child under 18 years for illicit activities.

The Committee notes with satisfaction that a new provision which prohibits the recruitment of children under 18 years to engage in criminal activity has been introduced under section 148F of the Criminal Code Amendment Act No. 6 of 2021.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Barbados

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2000)

The Committee notes with concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Article 3(a) of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Sale and trafficking of children. The Committee previously noted the adoption of the Transnational Organized Crime (Prevention and Control) Act in 2011, section 8 of which criminalizes the trafficking of persons for the purposes of labour and sexual exploitation.

The Committee takes due note of the Government's information in its report that the Transnational Organized Crime (Prevention and Control) Act of 2011 was repealed and replaced by the Trafficking in Persons Prevention Act 2016-9, which contains comprehensive provisions addressing the issue of trafficking. According to section 4, the trafficking of children for labour and sexual exploitation is punishable by a fine of 2 million Barbadian dollars (BBD) (about US$990,099), life imprisonment or both. The Committee notes, however, that according to the Government's written replies to the list of issues of the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) of 2017, since 2015, no new arrests and charges have been made in relation to trafficking (CEDAW/C/BRB/Q/5-8/Add.1, paragraph 52). In its concluding observations of 2017, the CEDAW expressed its concern that Barbados remains both a source and a destination country for women and girls, including non-nationals, who are subjected to trafficking for purposes of sexual exploitation and forced labour, as a result of high unemployment, increasing levels of poverty and the weak implementation of anti-trafficking legislation. The CEDAW was also concerned about the lack of information on the number of complaints, investigations, prosecutions and convictions related to the trafficking of women and girls (CEDAW/C/BRB/CO/5-8, paragraph 25). The Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) similarly expressed its concern at the high level of internal trafficking of children, the lack of information on the situation in general and the lack of effective measures to address and prevent the sale and trafficking of children in its concluding observations of 2017 (CRC/C/BRB/CO/2, paragraph 58). The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the effective implementation of the Trafficking in Persons Prevention Act 2016-9, particularly in relation to the trafficking of children. It also requests the Government to provide information on the application of section 4 of the Act in practice, including the number and nature of offences reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions imposed.

Articles 3(d) and 4(1). Determination of hazardous work. The Committee previously noted that, while section 8(1) of the Employment (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act prohibits the employment of a young person in any work that by its nature or the circumstances in which it is done is likely to cause injury to his/her health, safety or morals, the national legislation does not contain a determination of these types of work, as required under Article 4(1) of the Convention. The Government indicated that the formulation of a list of types of hazardous work prohibited to persons under 18 years of age was being considered. The Committee also noted that the Safety and Health at Work Act 2005 entered into force in January 2013 and that draft regulations under the provisions of this were forwarded for comments to the representative employers' and workers' organizations.

The Committee notes the Government's repeated indication that the types of hazardous work prohibited to persons under 18 years of age are addressed in specific pieces of legislation, including the Factories Act, the Pesticide Control Regulations, the Protection of Children Act and the Employment (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act. However, the Committee observes that these provisions together do not constitute a comprehensive determination of the types of hazardous work prohibited for persons under 18 years of age. The Committee also notes the Government's statement that none of the draft regulations under the Safety and Health at Work Act deal with this issue. Considering that it has been referring to this issue since 2004, the Committee must express its deep concern at the absence of a comprehensive list of the types of hazardous work prohibited for children. The Committee once again draws the Government's attention to Article 4(1) of this Convention, according to which the types of work referred to under Article 3(d) must be determined by national laws or regulations or by the competent authority, taking into consideration relevant international standards, in particular Paragraph 3 of the Worst Forms of Child Labour Recommendation, 1999 (No. 190). The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the determination of types of hazardous work prohibited for persons under the age of 18 is included in national legislation, after consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned, and to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2000)

Previous comment

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes with interest the adoption in 2022 of the Belize National Child Labour Policy and Strategy 2022-2025, which was developed with the technical support of the ILO and in consultation with the social partners and other relevant stakeholders. The Policy has four objectives: (1) to address existing legislative and information gaps, providing necessary legal protection for all children who are engaged or potentially engaged in child labour; (2) to increase compliance with labour laws for the benefit of children; (3) to substantially reduce barriers to school access and ensure continuous school attendance throughout the legal age for every child; (4) to ensure adequate support and economic resilience for children and their families as a way to pre-empt engagement in child labour. Key strategies contemplated in the Policy include, among others, building awareness among children, their families and society about the danger of child labour; strengthening data collection on child labour; identification of working undocumented child migrants; strengthening mechanisms to reduce child labour in the tourism industry; and extending the social protection floor.

The Committee notes from the statistical information contained in the Policy that, as of 2013, the child labour rate was 3.2 per cent (equivalent to 3,528 children). It also notes that the Mennonites were found to have the highest child labour rate at 9.5 per cent, two and a half times as high as any other ethnic group.

The Committee further notes the Government's indication in its report that a Child Labour Secretariat and Inspectorate was established in the Labour Department, which shall focus on child labour inspections, education and awareness-raising programs, and information gathering and reporting. Between 2019 and 2021, a total of 30 training sessions on child labour were conducted for different government entities and stakeholders, including the Banana, Sugar and Citrus industries, the tourism industry, the National Garifuna Council, and the Spanish Lookout (Mennonite) in the Cayo district. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the measures adopted to ensure the progressive elimination of child labour, including among Mennonite children, under its National Child Labour Policy and Strategy 2022-2025, and the results achieved. In this regard, it requests the Government to continue to provide updated statistical information on the nature, extent, and trends of child labour, indicating the sectors of economic activity where child labour is more prevalent. Finally, it requests the Government to provide information on the activities of the Child Labour Secretariat and Inspectorate, including on the number of child labour inspections carried out, the infringements detected, and the penalties applied.

With regard to the issues raised under Articles 2(1), 3(2), 7 and 9(3), the Committee requests the Government to see the consolidated comments at the end.

Article 2(1) Scope of application. In response to its previous comments concerning the existence of different minimum ages, the Committee takes due note that the Government indicates that the Legislative Review Committee (LRC) that was established to review the national legislation concerning child labour made recommendations to amend the respective sections of the Shops Act, Chapter 287, and the Labour Act, Chapter 297 to ensure that the minimum age specified applies to all sectors of the employment and not only to industrial undertakings and shops.

Article 3(2). Determination of types of hazardous work. The Committee recalls that the LRC had recommended the insertion into the Labour Act of a hazardous work list.

Article 7. Light work. The Committee recalls that the LRC had recommended to raise the minimum age for light work from 12 to 13 years and adopt a list of types of light work.

Article 9(3) Registers of employment. The Committee recalls that the LRC had recommended deleting section 163 of the Labour Act, which limited the obligation to keep registers of employees under the age of 18 years to public and private industrial undertakings, and to replace it with a general requirement for all employers to prepare and keep one or more registers containing information of each worker available for inspection.

Noting the Government's indication that the review of the legislative proposals made by the LRC and by the Labour Advisory Board was completed, and later forwarded to the Minister of Labour, Local Government and Rural Development for further action, the Committee hopes the proposed amendments will be adopted as soon as possible to ensure that:

- (i) the minimum age declared by the Government (14 years) is respected in all type of work undertaken by children, as well as in all sectors of economic activity;
- (ii) a list of types of hazardous work is approved, in consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned, and incorporated into the labour legislation;
- (iii) no child below 12 years of age be authorized to perform light work, and a list of types of light work is adopted;
- (iv) all employers keep one or more registers containing information of each worker available for inspection.

It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard as well as a copy of the new legislation once adopted.

Benin

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE) received on 29 August 2022, as well as those of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 1 September 2022. It also notes the detailed discussion that was held by the Committee on the Application of Standards (the Conference Committee) at the 110th Session of the International Labour Conference (June 2022), regarding the application of the Convention by Benin, as well as of the Government's report.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 110th Session, May–June 2022)

Article 3(a) and 7(1) of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour and penalties. Vidomégon children. The Committee notes that the Conference Committee, while acknowledging the initiatives taken by the Government, noted with deep concern the persistent and widespread practices related to the worst forms of child labour, including vidomégon children. The Conference Committee requested the Government to strengthen its efforts to protect children under 18 years of age from all forms of forced labour and commercial sexual exploitation, particularly vidomégon children, with specific attention provided to girls. Moreover, the Committee notes that the ITUC states, in its observations, that while the difficulties to access and inspect households, previously highlighted by the Government, need to be resolved in order to be able identify the presence of abuse, the exploitation of vidomégon children often takes place outside the household, since 90 per cent of the children do not attend school and are employed at markets and in the street trade or are victims of prostitution. The Committee notes that the IOE underscores that although the legislation in force makes school attendance obligatory for a child placed with a host family and prohibits the use of the child for domestic tasks, the prevalence of these unacceptable practices clearly reveals the many obstacles to implementing existing regulations.

In this regard, the Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that Benin is continuing its efforts to improve the protective legal framework for child victims of the worst forms of child labour. The Government indicates that 218 investigations into ill-treatment of children were undertaken in 2020, 153 in 2021 and 94 from January to June 2022. Moreover, in 2022, 15 cases of vidomégon children were heard, with both perpetrators and parents summoned before the juvenile court. Three children were reintegrated, and the others returned to their families by decision of the juvenile court. However, the Government also indicates that between 2019 and 2021, a total of 1,119 child victims of internal trafficking comparable to the situation of vidomégons were identified and received by the Social Protection Centres (SPCs), which represents a far higher number of victims than the number of investigations carried out and, above all, the number of cases coming before the juvenile court. The Committee urges the Government to intensify its efforts, in collaboration with the employers' and workers' representative organizations, to protect children under 18 years of age from all forms of forced labour or commercial sexual exploitation, particularly vidomégon children. It again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure, as a matter of urgency, that thorough investigations and prosecutions are conducted of persons subjecting children under 18 years of age to forced labour or commercial sexual exploitation, and that sufficiently dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the results achieved in this regard in its next report.

Sale and trafficking of children. The Committee notes that the Conference Committee urged the Government to strengthen the capacity to conduct investigations and prosecutions of persons subjecting children to sale and trafficking, and to ensure that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice.

The Committee notes the ITUC's observations that the initiatives put in place to identify child victims of sale and trafficking are poorly adapted and ineffective. In its observations, the IOE adds that this question must be examined while bearing in mind that the practices of trafficking children from and to neighbouring countries are widespread and that although it may be difficult to identify high risk areas and vulnerable groups in advance, it is fundamental to be aware of them to be able to define priorities and allocate resources effectively.

In this regard, the Committee notes the information from the Government's report that action is being taken to strengthen the capacities of the actors involved in combating trafficking. For example, in September 2022 training was provided for magistrates as part of the Regional Project to Prevent the Trafficking of Persons in the Gulf of Guinea (PRALTPGG) coordinated by the Ministry of Development and Coordination of Government action. The Government recognizes however that additional financial resources must be mobilized to reinforce activities in the next two years. Effectively, the Committee observes, according to the table giving combined data from the courts of nine towns, provided with the Government's report, between 2019 and 2022, 102 prosecutions came before the courts, with 82 convictions for the trafficking of children, but only three prosecutions were filed in respect of the sale of children, with no convictions. The Committee urges the Government to strengthen its efforts better to identify the cases of sale and trafficking of children under 18 years of age and ensure the effective implementation and enforcement of its legislation, including by conducting thorough investigations and prosecutions of persons who engage in the sale and trafficking of children under 18 years of age. It requests the Government to provide information on the results obtained, in particular the number of investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penalties imposed for the trafficking of children under the age of 18 years.

Article 5. Monitoring mechanisms. The Conference Committee urged the Government to strengthen the capacity, including of inspections, to conduct investigations and prosecutions of persons subjecting children to the worst forms of child labour, including commercial sexual exploitation, sale and trafficking and dangerous work, especially in mines and quarries. In this regard, the Committee notes the information provided by the Government that the strengthening of the capacities of certain structures, including the inspections, is a constant part of the strategy to combat the worst forms of child labour in Benin. Several reinforcement efforts had been undertaken, including the organization by the Government of 4,634 inspection visits to apprenticeship centres, and mines and quarries between 2019 and 2021; the organization in 2020 of training for the staff of the Republican Police on judicial protection for children at the SOS Children's Village at Abomey Calavi; the organization in 2020 of a training workshop for protection focal points for children of the Republican Police (police officers); and the organization in May 2022, by the Ministry of Labour of training for 70 actors (labour inspectors, social assistants, judicial police officers, juvenile court judges, members of civil society) on the procedures and protocols for monitoring child labour. The Committee requests the Government to continue to take measures and provide the training required to the police and other bodies responsible for enforcing the law to combat the worst forms of child labour, particularly the trafficking of children and dangerous work in mines and quarries. The Committee also requests the Government to continue to provide information on the functioning of the labour inspection services, including on specific measures to strengthen the services' capacity to identify the worst forms of child labour and the results obtained. Finally, it requests the Government to provide the results of labour inspections into the mines and quarries, including the number of violations detected and penalties imposed.

Articles 6 and 7(2). Programmes of action and effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (b). Prevent the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour and provide assistance for their removal from these forms of labour. Children working in mines and quarries. The Conference Committee urged the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to protect children from hazardous work in the mining and quarrying sector and provide statistical data on the number of children removed from this hazardous work and provide information related to the rehabilitation and social integration measures.

The Committee notes that the ITUC, while acknowledging the implementation by the Government of initiatives such as raising the awareness of actors on the mining sites, occupational safety and health training courses and, working with UNICEF, putting monitoring committees in place, observed that it was imperative for the Government to pursue and reinforce its prevention efforts.

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that, despite the prohibition by the legislation in force of child labour in mines and quarries, children have been observed working in informal, artisanal mines, to varying degrees depending on the regions of the country and the household revenues. In this regard, the Committee notes that during the Conference Committee, the Government representative referred to a specific study launched in March 2022 to assess the magnitude of the phenomenon precisely. It is envisaged that the study will be accompanied by a three-year plan of action for targeted and significant intervention in the mining sector over the coming years. The Committee urges the Government to take, without delay, the necessary measures to ensure the protection of children engaged in hazardous work in mines and quarries, including within the framework of the triennial plan, and to provide information on the progress made in this regard. It again requests the Government to provide specific statistical data on the number of children protected against hazardous work in the mining and quarrying sector and who have been removed, and to indicate the measures provided for their rehabilitation and social integration. It also requests the Government to provide statistics compiled by the study into the magnitude of child labour in mines and quarries.

Sale and trafficking of children. The Committee notes that the Conference Committee urged the Government to strengthen the rehabilitation and social integration measures provided to children victims of the worst forms of child labour, commercial sexual exploitation, the sale and trafficking of children and those in hazardous work.

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government regarding action undertaken to prevent violence against and exploitation and abuse of children, including trafficking, such as: the training session for the social actors on protection of the child; the joint awareness-raising visits by the Ministries of Labour and of Social Affairs to the large Benin markets; and the awareness-raising tour on child trafficking led by the same ministries to bulk carriers, Social Promotion Centres (SPCs) and community relays. The Government also indicates that data compiled by the Integrated System for Family, Women and New-generation Children Data reveal that 2,274 trafficked children, of which 1,192 were girls, were received by the SPCs and its partner structures between 2019 and 2021. At total of 1,119 of these children were victims of internal trafficking comparable to the situation of vidomégons and 711 were victims of cross-border trafficking. All SPC directors receiving a child victim apply the Minimum Intervention Package (PMI) which is the standard operating procedure for welcoming, listening and providing holistic care to victims, and also extends to their reintegration. Where the children are victims of cross-border trafficking, they are cared for under regional guidelines, which are implemented in coordination with the West African Network for the Protection of Children.

The Committee encourages the Government to continue its efforts to prevent children from becoming victims of trafficking, to remove children from the worst forms of child labour and to ensure their rehabilitation and social integration. The Committee also requests the Government to take effective, time-bound measures to strengthen the capacities of the centres and other social structures with regard to rehabilitation and social integration of children victims of trafficking and provide information on the results achieved in that respect.

Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes that the Conference Committee recommended that the Government develop a multidisciplinary time-bound action plan, with ILO technical assistance and in close cooperation with the social partners and other relevant civil society organizations with relevant competencies and expertise, including UNICEF. It also requested the Government to develop a robust statistical machinery to allow an efficient follow-up of the evolution of the practices of vidomégon children, the sale and trafficking of children and children working in mines and quarries.

The Committee notes, according to the ITUC's observations, that the absence of precise statistics on vidomégon children in Benin constitutes an obstacle to decision-taking and to establishing policies and action plans aimed at eradication of the practice.

The Government indicates that measures are currently undertaken regarding the elaboration of a multidisciplinary, time-bound plan. With regard to statistics, the Government indicates the need for overall improvement of the system for gathering statistics in order to harmonize them, as the tools in place produce overall data, rather than child-labour specific data. In this connection, the Government indicates that a study into the worst forms of child labour and vidomégons is envisaged, with a view to the formulation of the multidisciplinary time-bound plan. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the study on the worst forms of child labour and vidomégons is conducted and completed as soon as possible. It requests the Government to provide, in its next report, information on progress made in this respect, as well as on the development and adoption of a multidisciplinary and time-bound action plan aimed at protecting children under 18 years of age from engaging in the worst forms of child labour.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy and the application of the Convention in practice. In reply to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's information in its report that the Ministry of Employment, Labour Productivity and Skills Development has partnered with the Government of the United States in implementing a project for the elimination of child labour, proposed in 2021 (National action plan for the elimination of child labour, 2021). This project aims to carry out programmes to (i) strengthen children's rights in Botswana by raising awareness of child labour, particularly in agriculture, (ii) empower civil society and local leaders to contribute to solutions, and (iii) ensure that the child protection laws are enforced by the Government. The proposed programmes within this project include research and study on the trends and nature of child labour; engage with stakeholders in agricultural regions to ensure their awareness of child labour regulations; raise public awareness; and child victim assistance. The Committee notes that the United Nations Committee on the Rights of the Child, in its concluding observations of June 2019 expressed concern about the ineffective implementation and evaluation of the National Plan of Action for Children 2006-2016 due to lack of sufficient resources (CRC/C/BWA/CO/2-3, paragraph 8). The Committee therefore strongly encourages the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the effective implementation of the National Action Plan for the elimination of child labour, 2021. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken within the framework of this project and the results achieved. It finally requests the Government to provide information on the findings of any research or study conducted on the trends and nature of child labour within this project.

Article 2(1). Scope of application and labour inspection. Following its previous comments with regard to the application of the provisions of the Employment Act of 1982 to all forms of employment, including in the informal economy, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the Labour Law review which is at an advanced stage has taken into account the issues of informal economy. It is envisaged that the Bill will be presented to the Parliament during July 2022 session. The Committee also notes the Government's information that the Ministry of Employment, Labour Productivity and Skills Development continues to monitor child labour issues through its labour inspectorate, including in the agricultural sector where child labour is perceived to exist. In this regard, the Committee notes from the project document of the National Action Plan for the elimination of child labour, 2021 that child labour exists in Botswana, particularly in the commercial agricultural and cattle sector. The Committee further notes that the United Nations Human Rights Committee on the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, in its concluding observations of November 2021 expressed concern about reports of forced child labour in cattle herding, particularly affecting children of the San community (CCPR/C/BWA/CO/2, paragraph 25). The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will take the necessary measures to ensure that the Labour Law Bill, which provides protection to all children carrying out economic activities even without an employment contract, particularly children working on a self-employed basis or in the informal economy, including in agriculture, will be adopted in the near future. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard as well as to provide a copy once it has been adopted. The Committee further requests the Government to take the necessary measures to strengthen the capacity and extend the reach of the labour inspection services to better monitor the work performed by young persons in the informal economy, particularly in the agricultural sector and cattle herding, and to provide specific information on actions taken in this regard.

Article 2(3). Age of completion of compulsory schooling. With regard to the revision of the Education and Training Act of 1967 ensuring the introduction of free and compulsory basic education up to the minimum age for admission to employment of 15 years, the Government indicates that the new Bill is envisaged to be presented to the Parliament during its July 2022 session. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will take the necessary measures to ensure that the Education and Training Bill which provides for compulsory schooling up to the minimum age for admission to employment or work of 15 years, will be adopted and implemented soon. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress achieved in this respect as well as to provide a copy, once it has been adopted.

Article 3(1) and (2). Hazardous work. With regard to the adoption of the list of hazardous types of work prohibited to children under 18 years of age, the Committee refers to its comments under the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182).

Article 7(3). Determination of light work. Noting the Government's information that the Labour Law Bill which is awaiting approval from the Parliament has taken into account the determination of light work activities permitted to children from 14 years of age, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress made with regard to its adoption. It requests the Government to provide a copy of the list of the types of light work permitted for children, once it is adopted.

Articles 3(a) and 6 of the Convention. All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery and programmes of action. Sale and trafficking of children. In response to its previous comments concerning the application of the Anti-human Trafficking Act of 2014, the Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that there are currently six cases of sale and trafficking of children under 18 years before the courts awaiting the final judgments. The Committee also notes the Government's information in its report under the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29) that in July 2021, a woman was sentenced to imprisonment for ten years for trafficking a child of 16 years for sexual exploitation. This report also indicates that the Anti-Human Trafficking National Action Plan (NAP-HT) 2018-2022 was developed and structured in accordance with the internationally recognized 4P's strategies of prevention, protection, prosecution and partnership. The Human Trafficking (Prohibition) Committee, which is the coordination body responsible for the effective implementation of the NAP-HT has issued 18 resolutions pertaining to expediting pending cases, information campaigns and victim protection and referral procedures, of which 50 per cent have been successfully implemented.

The Committee, however, notes that the United Nations Human Rights Committee on the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, in its concluding observations of November 2021 expressed concern about the prevalence of trafficking in women and children for economic and commercial sexual exploitation and at the very low rate of investigations, prosecutions and convictions of the crime (CCPR/C/BWA/CO/2, paragraph 25). The Committee requests the Government to intensify its efforts, within the framework of the NAP-HT 2018-22 or otherwise, to ensure the thorough investigation and prosecution of perpetrators of child trafficking for labour or sexual exploitation, and to provide information on the convictions and penalties applied, including in the six cases of sale and trafficking of children under 18 years pending before the courts. In addition, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the specific measures taken within the framework of the NAP-HT to combat trafficking in children as well as the results achieved.

Article 4(1). Determination of hazardous work. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's information that the draft list of types of hazardous work prohibited to children under 18 years of age was incorporated in the ongoing labour law review. The Government indicates, in its report under the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) that the labour law review is at an advanced stage and it is envisaged that the Bill will be presented during the July 2022 session of the Parliament. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will take the necessary measures to ensure that the Labour Law Bill containing the draft list of types of hazardous work prohibited to children under 18 years of age is adopted in the very near future. It requests the Government to supply a copy of this list, once it is adopted.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour, removing them from the worst forms of child labour and ensuring their rehabilitation and social integration. Child victims of commercial sexual exploitation. In reply to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's statement that all efforts are made to protect children from being involved in commercial sexual exploitation by extending support to their families. The Government also indicates that no information is available on child victims of commercial sexual exploitation as no study was conducted on this subject. The Committee notes that the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, in its concluding observations of March 2019, expressed concern about the lack of efficient mechanisms to prevent girls who drop out of school from engaging in prostitution (CEDAW/C/BWA/CO/4, paragraph 29). The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to prevent the engagement of children in prostitution, and to remove them from this worst form of child labour as well as to rehabilitate and socially integrate them. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard, as well as on the number of children under 18 years of age who have been removed from prostitution and provided with appropriate care and assistance.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2001)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the joint observations of the Single Confederation of Workers (CUT), the National Forum for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labour (FNPETI) and the National Union of Labour Inspectors (SINAIT) received on 23 October 2020, and the Government's replies to these observations. It also notes the observations of the National Association of Labour Justice Magistrates (ANAMATRA) received on 6 December 2021.

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy towards the elimination of child labour and application of the Convention in practice. With regard to its previous comments the Committee notes that the Government indicates in its report that the Third National Plan for the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labour and the Protection of Working Adolescents was finalized and is currently in force. The Plan includes among its objectives: (i) prioritizing prevention and elimination of child labour in political and social agendas; (ii) ensuring quality and free education for all children; (iii) protecting the health of children and adolescents against exposure to work-related risks; and (iv) fostering knowledge about the reality of child labour in Brazil. The Committee also notes that according to the National Continuous Household Survey (PNAD Contínua) (2016–2019) conducted by the Brazilian Institute of Geography and Statistics (IBGE), a total of 1,768,000 children and adolescents were engaged in child labour in 2019. The survey also shows that the number of children and adolescents (5 to 17 years of age) engaged in child labour fell from 5.3 per cent (2,100,000) in 2016 to 4.6 per cent (approximately 1,800,000) in 2019. The Committee further notes that the ANAMATRA highlights that, according to the data of the IBGE, of the total number of children engaged in child labour in 2019, 66.1 per cent were Afro-Brazilian children.

The Committee notes that in response to the observations of the CUT, FNPETI and SINAIT related to the abolition of the National Council for the Elimination of Child Labour (CONAETI), the Government indicates that the CONAETI was re-established by the Decree No. 10.574 of 14 December 2020, as one of the thematic committees of the National Labour Council tasked with monitoring, evaluating and proposing policies on child labour. The composition of the CONAETI is tripartite, with the participation of six representatives of the Federal Government, six representatives of employers and six representatives of workers. The Committee also notes that the CUT, FNPETI and SINAIT observe that no measures have been taken to ensure the continuity of the Programme of Action for the Elimination of Child Labour (PETI). In this regard, the Government indicates that the PETI was redesigned with the aim of enhancing existing social welfare services and to align actions with other public policies to create a multisectoral child labour eradication agenda; and that its redesign did not affect the provision of cash transfers or social work carried out with families, but strengthened management and collaboration in five key areas: information and mobilization, identification, protection, advocacy and empowerment and monitoring. The Government adds that even though the COVID-19 pandemic has made it extremely difficult to keep social welfare services and programmes operational and the social protection network active, 8,843 activities have been carried out throughout Brazil at the state and municipal level under all five PETI areas of focus. The Committee encourages the Government to continue taking measures towards the elimination of child labour, including within the framework of the PETI, and requests it to continue providing information on the results achieved. In this respect, the Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken or envisaged to reduce child labour among Afro-Brazilian children. Finally, it requests the Government to provide information on the activities of the CONAETI, particularly in relation to the monitoring and evaluation of child labour policies.

Article 2(1). Scope of application. Children working in family enterprises. Following its previous comments, the Committee takes due note of the Government's indication that section 402 of the Consolidated Labour Act, which excludes from its scope work undertaken by children and young persons in family enterprises, is not an exception authorizing child labour and that it in no way undermines the application of article 7 (XXXIII) of the Federal Constitution, which sets the minimum age at 16 years and prohibits hazardous work for young persons under 18 years. Furthermore, the Government refers to section 67 of the Statute of Children and Adolescent, according to which family workers shall not engage in night work, hazardous work, and work carried out during hours that prevent them from attending school. The Committee notes that, according to the statistical information provided by the Government, 30.9 per cent of children between 5 and 17 years engaged in child labour, work as helpers in family enterprises. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that, in practice, children working in family enterprises do not engage in child labour, including in hazardous work, and to provide information in this regard.

Articles 2(1) and 7(1) and (3). Minimum age for admission to employment or work, minimum age for admission to light work and regulation of light work activities. The Committee notes that the ANAMATRA refers to a legislative proposal to amend item XXXIII of Article 7 of the Federal Constitution (PC 18/2011), which aims at reducing the minimum age for admission to employment or work, by authorizing children above 14 years to undertake part-time work for up to 25 hours per week. The Committee notes that the rapporteur of the Parliament Commission of Constitution, Justice and Citizenship, in his report dated 18 August 2021, declared the admissibility of PC 18/2021 highlighting that the Convention permits children who have reached the age of 13 years to undertake light work that is not likely to affect their safety, health and education.

In these circumstances, the Committee emphasizes that the overall objective of the Convention is to ensure the effective abolition of child labour and to raise progressively the minimum age for admission to employment or work to a level consistent with the fullest physical and mental development of young persons. Moreover, pursuant to Articles 1 and 2, paragraph 1 of the Convention, read together, once a minimum age for admission to employment has been specified upon ratification (16 years in the case of Brazil), the Convention provides for the possibility to raise it progressively, but does not allow the lowering of the minimum age once specified. While Article 7(1) of the Convention provides for an exception to the general minimum age by allowing children who have reached 13 years of age to carry out light work, such work cannot prejudice their attendance at school, their participation in vocational orientation or training programmes and their capacity to benefit from the instruction received. Pursuant to Article 7(3) of the Convention, the competent authority shall determine the light work activities and prescribe the number of hours during which and the conditions in which such employment or work may be undertaken.

The Committee observes that the proposed constitutional amendment does not refer to specific light work activities permitted for children from the age of 14 years. Rather, it is broadly drafted so as to permit children to undertake any kind of work or occupation in any sector or in any occupation for up to 25 hours a week. Moreover, in giving effect to Article 7(3) of the Convention, special attention should be given to several key indicators, including the strict limitation of the hours spent at work in a day and in a week, the prohibition of overtime, the granting of a minimum consecutive period of 12 hours' night rest, and the maintenance of satisfactory standards of safety and health and appropriate instruction and supervision (2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 396). The Committee is of the view that authorizing children from the age of 14 to carry out part-time work under such conditions may have a negative impact on children's school attendance and performance as the time needed for homework related to their education, as well as for rest and leisure could be considerably reduced and therefore may not be considered an authorized exception to the minimum age under the Convention. Therefore, the Committee expresses the firm hope that any legislative proposal to modify the minimum age for admission to employment or to regulate light work activities be considered in light of the above-mentioned provisions of the Convention.

Labour inspection. The Committee notes that the Government enumerates different measures taken by the labour inspectorate to combat child labour in both the formal and informal economy, which include: (i) training for labour inspectors on addressing the various types of child labour; (ii) development of appropriate intervention instruments, including in the informal economy; (iii) inspection operations in child labour hotspots, including in rural areas; and (iv) actions planned in coordination with social partners with a view to the sustainable elimination of child labour hotspots. The Government adds that, as a result of the measures taken, the labour inspectorate found 535 children and adolescents engaged in child labour in the first semester of 2021. A total of 185 children and adolescents were found in child labour in the informal economy during inspections conducted in Maranhão, Espírito Santo, Roraima, Paraíba and Bahia during the same period. The Committee observes, however, that these numbers are still low compared to the overall number of children engaged in child labour in the country (according to the National Continuous Household Survey there were 1,768,000 children). Therefore, while noting the measures taken by the Government, the Committee strongly requests the Government to take the necessary additional measures to strengthen the capacities of the labour inspectorate to effectively detect situations of child labour, particularly in the informal economy, and to provide information about the impact of these additional measures. The Committee also requests the Government to continue providing information on the number of inspections related to child labour that have been carried out, the number and nature of violations detected, the sectors in which they were found, and the penalties applied.

Previous comments: observation and direct request

The Committee notes the observations of the National Association of Labour Court Judges (ANAMATRA) received on 6 December 2021 and requests the Government to provide its reply to them.

Articles 3(d), 5 and 7(1) of the Convention. Hazardous work, labour inspection and penalties. In relation to its previous direct request, the Committee notes that the Government indicates in its report that, between January 2017 and July 2021, the labour inspectorate imposed 1,276 penalties on workplace supervisors for violating Decree No. 6481 of 12 June 2008 containing a list of hazardous work prohibited for children. During the same period, the labour inspectorate also issued 68 violation notices for subjecting children and adolescents to other working conditions (not included in the list) that were considered harmful to their physical, psychological, morals, and social development and 71 penalties for allowing workers under 18 years of age to perform night work. The Committee notes that information concerning the number of children found to be in hazardous work is continuously updated and made available through the Radar SIT (Labour inspection statistics and information dashboard) webpage on child labour.

While noting the results of the inspections undertaken to identify situations of children engaged in hazardous work, the Committee notes with concern that, according to the National Household Sample Survey (PNAD contínua) conducted by the Brazilian Institute of Geography and Statistics for the period 2016-2019, a total of 706,000 children between 5 and 17 years of age are still in hazardous occupations (most of them within the age group of 5 to 13 years of age). Moreover, it notes that the ANAMATRA indicates that the number of children undertaking hazardous work who have been victims of accidents at the workplace increased by 30 per cent from 2019 to 2020. The Committee requests the Government to take, as a matter of urgency, all the necessary measures to ensure that children under the age of 18 years are not engaged in hazardous work, including in the informal economy, and that they benefit from the protection afforded by the Convention. It requests the Government to continue providing information in this regard, including on the number and nature of violations of the Decree No.6481 of 12 June 2008 that have been detected by the labour inspectorate and the penalties imposed.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (a). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour. Access to free basic education. With regard to its previous comments, the Committee notes that the Government refers to two programmes that address the issue of education in rural areas, namely: (i) The Way to School Programme, which supports access to education by students living in rural and riparian areas by providing buses, motorboats and bicycles designed specifically for safe transportation in such regions; and (ii) The Land School Programme, which aims at providing training opportunities for teachers in rural areas on a continuous basis and facilitating school enrolment and retention of rural and Afro-Brazilian students. In 2019, some 1,800 teachers in rural and Afro-Brazilian communities benefited from that programme.

The Committee notes that, according to the 2019 National Household Sample Survey – Education (PNAD Education), 99.7 per cent of children aged 6 to 14 were enrolled in school in 2019. School failure or dropout affected 12.5 per cent of children aged 11 to 14 and 28.6 per cent of the children aged 15 to 17. It further notes that, according to the 2021 UNICEF report entitled “Out-of-School Children in Brazil”, the highest out-of-school rates (children aged 6 to 14) are found in rural areas, particularly in the North and Northeast regions of the country. The UNICEF report also highlights that, in absolute numbers, Afro-Brazilian and indigenous children and adolescents aged 4 to 17 who are out of school total 781,577, corresponding to 71.3 per cent of all children and adolescents who are currently not attending school. The Committee further notes the ANAMATRA’s observations that many children who were excluded from distance learning during the pandemic, were taken to work in the countryside, to perform domestic work or to work on the streets. While noting that the COVID-19 pandemic has had an impact on children’s access to school and recalling that education is key in preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour, the Committee requests the Government to continue to take measures to ensure that all children complete free basic education, particularly those living in rural and riparian areas. In this regard, it requests the Government to provide information on specific measures taken to facilitate access to school for Afro-Brazilian and indigenous children and the results achieved, as well as updated statistical data on school enrolment, retention and drop-out rates disaggregated by age and gender.

Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour and assistance for their removal, rehabilitation, and social integration. Trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children. In reply to previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication that the labour inspectorate is implementing measures to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children and adolescents, which include training on commercial sexual exploitation of children and adolescents for labour inspectorates and the designing of specific protocols on the subject. It also notes that the Government has put in place the Initial Support Project to improve the protection and assistance networks for child and adolescent victims of commercial sexual exploitation. The project involves the participation of different institutions including the Ministry of Labour and Social Security and the National Coordination Office for Combating Child and Adolescent Labour. In addition, the Federal Traffic Police designed a Mapping Project to identify places along Brazil's federal roads that lend themselves to the commercial sexual exploitation of children and adolescents. The information is consolidated in a document that serves as guidance in combating commercial sexual exploitation.

The Committee further notes that according to the National Report of the Ministry of Justice and Public Safety on Trafficking in Persons (2017-2020), within the period 2018-2020, 32 child and adolescent victims of trafficking in persons were registered by the Federal Police. Moreover, according to the Ministry of Health, 229 persons under 18 years of age were considered as possible victims of trafficking in persons within the same period. While noting the adoption of measures to combat the commercial sexual exploitation of children and adolescents, the Committee observes that the Government does not provide information on the measures taken to provide child victims of trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation with rehabilitation services, including the establishment of shelters. Therefore, the Committee once again requests the Government to take all the necessary measures to ensure that child victims of trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation are removed from these worsts form of child labour, rehabilitated and socially reintegrated, and to provide information on the results achieved. It also requests the Government to continue providing updated statistical information on the number of child victims of trafficking in persons that have been identified, rehabilitated, and reintegrated.

Clause (d). Children at special risk. Child domestic workers. The Committee notes that according to the National Household Sample Survey (PNAD continua) for the period 2016-19, the number of children engaged in domestic work within the age group 5 to 17 was 125,528. It also notes the Government's indication that the labour inspectorate has taken various measures to address child domestic labour, including awareness raising campaigns and the development of training materials for labour inspectors and specific protocols on the issue. Between January 2013 and July 2021, the labour inspectorate removed seven children and adolescents from domestic work and imposed seven penalties on individuals responsible for hiring persons under 18 years of age as domestic workers. While noting the measures taken by the Government, the Committee observes that the number of child domestic workers remains significant, and that very few were identified and removed from this type of work over a period of eight years. Therefore, the Committee urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure that no person under 18 years of age is involved in domestic work, in conformity with Decree No. 6481 of 12 June 2008, and to provide information on the results achieved

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Cabo Verde

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2011)

Previous comments: observation and direct request

Article 3(1) and 3(2) of the Convention. Minimum age for admission to, and determination of, hazardous work. The Committee previously noted with regret that the list of hazardous types of work prohibited for children in different industries and which was adopted by Act No. 113/VIII/2016 on 10 March 2016 only applies to children under 16 years of age. The Committee takes note of the Government's indication, in its report, that the list of hazardous types of work does not fully comply with the requirements of the Convention. The Committee notes that, in the framework of the EU-funded Trade for Decent Work (T4DW) project, the review of the list of hazardous types of work is intended.

The Committee once again reminds the Government that, by virtue of Article 3(1) of the Convention, the minimum age for admission to any type of employment or work which by its nature or the circumstances in which it is carried out is likely to jeopardize the health, safety or morals of young persons shall not be less than 18 years. It once again emphasizes that the authorization to undertake hazardous work from the age of 16 years is a limited exception to the general rule on the prohibition of young persons under 18 years performing hazardous work, and that it does not constitute an unqualified authorization to engage in hazardous work as from the age of 16 years (2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 379). The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures, in the framework of the T4DW project, to ensure that the review of the list of hazardous types of work raise the general minimum age for admission to hazardous work to 18 years, and to ensure that no child under the age of 18 shall be authorized to engage in hazardous work, other than in the exceptional cases allowed by Article 3(3) of the Convention. It requests the Government to provide detailed information on the progress made in this regard.

Article 3(3). Admission to types of hazardous work from the age of 16 years. The Committee, once again observing that Act No. 113/VIII/2016 does not require any conditions to be met prior to authorizing the employment of young persons from 16 to 18 years of age in hazardous work, recalls that, under the terms of Article 3(3) of the Convention, national laws or regulations or the competent authority may, after consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned, authorize the employment of young persons between 16 and 18 years of age in hazardous work provided that their health, safety and morals are fully protected and that they have received adequate specific instruction or vocational training in the relevant branch of activity. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures, in the framework of the review of the hazardous work list intended by the T4DW project, to ensure that the performance of hazardous tasks by young persons aged from 16 to 18 years is authorized only as prescribed by Article 3(3) of the Convention. It requests the Government to provide detailed information on the progress made in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request directly addressed to the Government.

Previous comments: observation and direct request

Article 3(a) of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Slavery or practices similar to slavery. Sale and trafficking of children. The Committee previously requested the Government to provide information on the application in practice of section 271A of the Penal Code, which criminalizes the sale and trafficking of persons, including minors, for purposes of sexual or labour exploitation. The Committee notes with concern that the Government does not provide this information. In this regard, the Committee notes the concern expressed by the United Nations Human Rights Committee, in its concluding observations of 3 December 2019, regarding the absence of sufficient information about investigations, prosecutions and convictions of those engaged in trafficking activities (CCPR/C/CPV/CO/1/Add.1, paragraph 25). This concern is echoed by the United Nations Committee on the Protection of the Rights of All Migrant Workers and Members of Their Families (CMW), in its concluding observations of 2 June 2022, with regard to the low number of investigations, prosecutions and convictions of perpetrators of trafficking offences, given that no case of trafficking in persons of children has yet been detected, and the difficulties faced in providing disaggregated data according to the information provided by the State party (CMW/C/CPV/CO/1-3, paragraph 69.). The Committee therefore requests the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure the effective enforcement of section 271A of the Penal Code and to gather and provide information on its application in practice, including the number of investigations, prosecutions and convictions, as well as sanctions imposed with regard to the sale and trafficking of children under 18 years.

Article 3(b). Use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution, for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances. The Committee notes that the Government provides detailed information in its report on several measures taken to strengthen the legislative framework on sex crimes committed against children in order to respond to the rise in such acts that has been observed in recent years, a situation that, according to the Government, illustrates the shortcomings of the existing punitive penal system. Such measures include the amendment of the Cabo Verdean Penal Code through Act No. 117/IX/2021 of 2021 to include separate provisions on sex crimes, including a new section 150-A on child pornography which covers not only digital pornography offences, but pornography in all its forms. The Government indicates that the amendments were introduced to create a robust and effective code on child sex crimes that aligns with international provisions on child protection.

Moreover, the Committee takes note of the information provided by the Government on the interventions carried out in the scope of the National Plan of Action to Combat Sexual Violence 2017–19, including the promotion of measures to improve the legal framework on sexual exploitation and abuse in order to strengthen institutional capacities of the safety and justice systems. These include the training of judges and the creation of dedicated courts for families, children and labour within certain districts. In addition, the Committee notes that, in the framework of the implementation of the EU-funded Trade for Decent Work (T4DW) project, a tripartite workshop on sexual exploitation in the tourism sector was held in September on the island of Sal, at the end of which the participants recommended police training on child sexual exploitation and a pilot project to identify, support and monitor child victims of sexual exploitation.

The Committee notes, however, that the Government offers no information in response to its previous request to provide information on the application in practice of the sections of the Penal Code which prohibit the use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution or pornography. Moreover, it notes the concern expressed by the United Nations Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) at the low rate of investigations, prosecutions and convictions for cases of exploitation of prostitution, as well as the limited support and redress provided to victims. The CEDAW also expresses concern at the cases of parents encouraging their daughters to be exploited in prostitution to obtain immigration visas or to support the family financially, and cases of girls as young as 12 years of age who have been sexually exploited in exchange for drugs (CEDAW/C/CPV/CO/9, paragraph 23). The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures – in the framework of the T4DW project or otherwise – to ensure the application in practice of sections 145A, 148, 149 and 150 of the Penal Code and to provide information in this regard, including the number of investigations, prosecutions and convictions, as well as sanctions imposed with regard to the use, procuring or offering of a child under 18 years of age for prostitution, for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances.

Articles 3(d) and 4(1). Hazardous work. With regard to the list of hazardous types of work prohibited to children under 18 years of age, the Committee refers to its detailed comments under the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138).

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Cambodia

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1999)

Previous comment

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. Following its previous comments, the Committee takes note of the information communicated by the Government in its report regarding the results achieved through its various measures, including the National Plan of Action on the Reduction of Child Labour and Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour 2016–25 (NPA-WFCL) and the Decent Work Country Programme (DWCP) 2016–18. It notes that, according to the latest statistics from the Socio-Economic Survey 2019–20 of the National Institute for Statistics, the number of working children decreased from 23.6 per cent in 2012 to 18.2 per cent in 2019–20.

The Committee notes that the Government continues to take measures aimed at improving the socio-economic conditions and reducing the incidence of child labour in the country, including the continued implementation of the NPA-WFCL. It also notes that the 2019–23 DWCP is designed to help the country achieve sustained job-rich growth and inclusive and sustainable development while advancing decent work for all Cambodian women and men. Moreover, according to information available to the ILO on policy responses in Cambodia, among other measures adopted in response to the COVID-19 crisis, the Government is expanding existing social protection programmes to the poor and vulnerable, especially through cash transfer programmes. The Committee encourages the Government to continue its efforts to ensure the progressive elimination of child labour through the implementation of the NPA-WFCL, the 2019–23 Decent Work Country Programme and other policies and social protection programme, and requests it to continue to provide information on the results achieved. In this regard, the Committee also requests that the Government continue to provide any updated statistical information on the employment of children and young persons.

Article 2(1). Scope of application and labour inspection. 1. Children working in the informal economy. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's information that the Ministry of Labour and Vocational Training (MLVT) has conducted technical meetings and training courses with labour inspectors with a view to increasing their effectiveness in monitoring child labour. From 2019 to 2020, 14 training courses were conducted with 1,604 labour inspectors and other relevant stakeholders to prevent the exploitation of child labour. In addition, the Government indicates that under the draft law on the amendment of the Labour Act, labour inspectors will receive a qualification as juridical police, which will allow them to have better access when conducting inspections and contribute to the prevention of child labour and its worst forms. The Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to strengthen the labour inspection services to enable them to effectively monitor and detect cases of child labour, including children working on their own account or in the informal economy. It requests the Government to provide information in this regard and on the number and nature of violations found related to child labour, including in hazardous conditions, and the penalties imposed. It also requests information on the specific aspects of better access for labour inspectors that are enabled, based on their qualification, as juridical police.

2. Child domestic workers. In response to the Committee's previous concern that the minimum age for employment or work did not apply to domestic workers and household servants, the Committee notes with satisfaction the issuance of Prakas No. 235 by the MLVT on 29 May 2018, according to section 4 of which domestic workers must be at least 18 years of age, or at least 15 years of age for light domestic work which is not hazardous to health.

Article 2(3). Compulsory schooling. Regarding the Committee's previous comments relating to the fact that, under the provisions of the Education Law of 2007, basic education in Cambodia is free but not compulsory, the Government indicates that the Ministry of Education, Youth and Sport will undertake a feasibility analysis with a view to implementing nine years of basic education (until 15 years of age) and prepare an action plan to introduce compulsory education on a phase by phase basis and clearly outline the roles and responsibilities of the various levels of government and financial arrangements in this regard. The Government indicates that, to start, it will undertake preparatory work to implement free and compulsory education at pre-primary level, which will become an integral part of basic education. The Committee once again stresses the importance of adopting legislation providing for compulsory education up to the minimum age for admission to employment or work, because where there are no legal requirements establishing compulsory schooling, there is a greater likelihood that children under the minimum age will be engaged in child labour (2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 369). The Committee therefore encourages the Government to take the necessary measures to implement compulsory education, up to the minimum age for admission to employment, and to provide information on the progress made in this regard.

The Committee is raising another matter in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2006)

Articles 3(a) and 7(1) of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour and penalties. Sale and trafficking of children. In relation to the Committee's previous comments regarding measures taken to strengthen the enforcement of Cambodia's anti-trafficking legislation, the Committee notes the Government's information in its report that the Department of Anti-human trafficking and juvenile protection is providing resources, equipment and funds to the Anti-human trafficking and juvenile protection authority for the organization of trainings and implementation of the relevant laws and regulations. The Committee takes note of the Government's detailed statistical data compiled by the Department of Anti-human trafficking and juvenile protection, Department of Cybercrime, National Gendarmerie and Commissariat of Municipal/Provincial Police. In particular, the Committee notes that in 2018, these bodies cracked down on 134 cases, arrested 224 suspects, and rescued 230 victims, including 92 minors under the age of 15 and 23 aged between 15 and 17. In 2019, there were 169 cracked down cases, 229 arrested suspects, and 456 rescued victims (141 under the age of 15, and 55 between 15 and 17 years). Finally, in 2020, there were 155 cracked down cases, 193 arrested suspects, and 467 rescued victims (130 under the age of 15, and 39 between 15 and 17 years). The Committee observes, however, that the Government does not provide information on the number of convictions and penalties applied. The Committee strongly encourages the Government to continue taking measures aiming to ensure that the Law on Suppression of Human Trafficking and Sexual Exploitation is effectively applied. It also encourages the Government to take the necessary measures to strengthen the capacity of law enforcement agencies, including through the allocation of financial resources and adequate training, to combat the sale and trafficking of children under 18 years of age, and to provide information on the progress made in this regard. It further requests the Government to provide information on the number of investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions applied, specifically in cases of child trafficking for labour or sexual exploitation.

Articles 3(d), 5 and 7(2)(b). Hazardous work, monitoring mechanisms and effective and time bound measures. Debt bondage in brick kilns. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the Taskforce of the Ministry of Labour and Vocational Training on child labour prevention in the brick making industry (MLVT Taskforce) was established in 2019. The Government indicates, in its report under the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138), that a census of 486 operational brick kilns was conducted in the country in 2019-2020 and that labour inspectors have not identified any cases of child labour or debt bondage at those brick kilns. The Committee notes, however, that in its concluding observations of 27 June 2022, the United Nations Committee on the Rights of the Child remained deeply concerned about the large number of children involved in child labour, including debt bondage, in the construction and brickmaking industries (CRC/C/KHM/CO/4-6, paragraph 45). Similarly, the United Nations Human Rights Committee, in its concluding observations of 18 May 2022, expressed its concern about allegations of cases of debt bondage involving children, in particular in the brick industry (CCPR/C/KHM/CO/3, paragraph 30). The Committee therefore requests the Government to take measures, both in law and in practice, to identify and protect children under 18 years of age engaged in the brick kiln industry from debt bondage and hazardous work, including through the action of the MLVT Taskforce. In this regard, it urges the Government to take measures to ensure the prohibition of the employment of children under 18 years in debt bondage or hazardous work in the brick kiln industry, and to ensure that effective and dissuasive penalties are applied against offenders. It also requests the Government to provide information on the number of children removed from working in brick kilns through inspections and provided with direct assistance for their rehabilitation and social integration.

Articles 6 and 7(2)(a) and (b). Programmes of action and time-bound measures for prevention, assistance and removal. Child trafficking. Following its previous comments, the Committee takes note of the detailed information provided by the Government in its report concerning the number of victims of trafficking that were rescued, rehabilitated and reintegrated between 2014 and 2020. The Government indicates, for example, that in 2019, the Ministry of Social Affairs, Veterans and Youth Rehabilitation and the provincial/municipal department of social affairs, in collaboration with relevant stakeholders, rescued 1,415 persons, among which 78 are children. The Committee observes, however, that the statistics provided by the Government regarding the number of rehabilitated victims appear to be sporadic and do not clearly make the distinction between child and adult victims. For example, the Government indicates that, in 2017, 8 victims were rehabilitated (4 girls through Caritas, and 1 boy and 3 girls through HAGAR International); in 2018, 16 victims were rehabilitated through the Department of Social Welfare and Development; and in 2019 and 2020 respectively, 396 and 106 victims were rehabilitated through a variety of governmental and non-governmental institutions. In addition, the Committee notes that the United Nations Human Rights Committee, in its concluding observations of 18 May 2022, expressed concern about reports of a lack of adequate protection for victims of trafficking, in particular women and children (CCPR/C/KHM/CO/3, paragraph 30). The Committee requests the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure that child victims of trafficking who are removed from sexual or labour exploitation are rehabilitated and socially integrated. It encourages the Government to take measures to ensure that adequate statistics in this regard are compiled, disaggregated by gender and age, and requests it to provide this information in its next report.

Article 8. International cooperation. Trafficking. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's information regarding the number of child victims of trafficking and illegal migrants who were victims or at risk of trafficking, that were intercepted, rehabilitated or repatriated as a result of various efforts. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken to enhance international cooperation to combat trafficking in children, particularly as regards identification, protection and assistance of child victims of trafficking.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2016)

Previous comment: direct request

Article 2(1) of the Convention. Scope of application. The Committee notes the information provided by the Government in its report regarding the manner in which the protection provided by the Convention is guaranteed to children and young persons working in family-owned businesses in Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Saskatchewan.

Adding to the fact that the legislation of these three provinces provides that children must be enrolled in and attend school until the age of 16, the Committee notes the following:

- Nova Scotia: Family-owned businesses are subject to the Occupational Health and Safety Act, in accordance with which employers must take every reasonable precaution to ensure the health and safety of persons at work, provide information, instruction and training, and generally ensure the workers' health and safety (section 13(1)).
- Prince Edward Island: The Government intends to begin a review of the Employment Standards Act, which is expected to take into consideration compliance with ratified ILO Conventions. In the meantime, young persons working in family-owned businesses are protected through education and enforcement. The Occupational Health and Safety (OHS) Division has a dedicated Farm Safety Specialist that routinely visits farm employers to discuss workplace safety specific to farms. In the spring, an OHS Officer dedicates time to visiting fisher employers to discuss safety requirements. In addition, the Workers Compensation Board (WBC) employs a full-time Youth Education consultant, who is responsible for developing educational information targeted at young worker safety.
- Saskatchewan: A review of the employment standards provisions of the Saskatchewan Employment Act is expected to take place in 2022-23, which will provide an opportunity for consultation on this matter. In the meantime, Saskatchewan employment standards officers investigate all complaints received – even those in situations that are not covered by the Act – and an interactive programme for young workers to be aware of their rights and responsibilities in the workplace introduced in 2010-11 contributes to the compliance of employers.

The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress made by Prince Edward Island and Saskatchewan in reviewing their employment standards legislation, and whether these reviews will address the issue of including family-owned businesses and enterprises in the scope of application of those standards. The Committee further requests the Government to provide information on the number of children employed in such family-owned businesses and enterprises in Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Saskatchewan who are effectively protected, in particular through the application of occupational health and safety legislation and inspections, and through the inspections conducted by Saskatchewan's employment standards officers.

Article 7(1) and (3). Age for admission to light work and determination of light work. 1. British Columbia. The Committee previously took note of British Columbia's Employment Standards Act and requested the Government to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to regulate the employment of children in light work from the age of 13 years, as required by Article 7(1) of the Convention.

The Committee notes with interest that the recently enacted Employment Standards Amendment Act, 2019, of British Columbia raises the general working age to 16, and allows youth aged 14 and 15 to perform appropriate jobs defined as "light work" (new section 9(1) of the Amendment Act). Examples of light work considered appropriate for 14–15 year-olds which are unlikely to be harmful to the child's health or development include: (i) recreation and sports club work; (ii) light farm and yard work, such as gardening, clearing leaves and snow; (iii) administrative and secretarial work; (iv) retail work; (v) food service work; and (vi) skilled and technical work. Restrictions on when youth may engage in these activities (i.e. not during school hours) continue to apply so it will not prejudice their attendance at school.

2. Manitoba and Saskatchewan. The Committee notes the Government's information that, in order to determine the types of light work activities that youth aged 13 years are permitted to participate in, Manitoba undertook a jurisdictional scan and engaged in stakeholder consultations with the Labour Management Review Committee (LMRC), which is made up of stakeholders representing the views of both employers and employees. Recent consultations with the LMRC resulted in the addition of a prohibition on employment of workers under age 14 in food preparation work if the work involves the use of dangerous tools or machinery.

In the case of Saskatchewan, the Government indicates that while section 3-3 of the Occupational Health and Safety Regulations, 2020, currently provides a detailed list of prohibited work for anyone under the age of 16, there is no current definition of “light work” in the Employment Act or associated regulations. A review of the employment standards provisions of the Act is expected to commence in 2022–23, with a regulatory review to follow. The Government indicates that the concept of light work should be considered as a part of these consultations. The Committee requests the Government of Manitoba to provide information on the progress made in the process of determining light work activities that may be permitted to children from the age of 13 years, in consultation with the LMRC. It also requests the Government of Saskatchewan to provide information on the progress made in its review of the Employment Act and regulations, and requests it to take measures to ensure that this review include a determination of types of light work activities that may be permitted to children from the age of 14 years.

3. New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. The Committee notes the Government’s information that the Employment Standard Branch in New Brunswick processes youth work permit applications and indicated that the majority of applications deal with children 15 years or older. The Employment Branch also consults with WorkSafeNB on the work conditions of the workplace and imposes special conditions of work including supervision, limited hours of works, and tasks, in certain instances.

The Government further indicates that in the case of Prince Edward Island, the Government intends to begin a review of the Employment Standards Act and of the Youth Employment Act, which is expected to be extensive and take into consideration compliance with the ILO Conventions ratified by Canada, including Convention No. 138. This work is expected to take a few years to complete. The Committee notes that the Government provides no information with regard to Nova Scotia. The Committee requests the Government of Prince Edward Island to provide information on the progress made in its review of the Employment Standards Act and the Youth Employment Act, and to take measures to ensure that this review include the establishment of a minimum age of 13 years for employment in light work, as required by Article 7(1) of the Convention. It once again requests the Government of Nova Scotia to indicate the measures taken or envisaged to establish a minimum age of 13 years for employment in light work.

4. Northwest Territories, Nunavut and Yukon. The Committee notes that the Government of the Northwest Territories is of the view that the Employment Standards Act (sections 46-47) and the Safety Act (section 4), combined with the requirement under the Education Act – that children under the age of 16 attend school – are sufficient to ensure that children are not employed in work that would be harmful to their health or development and that their attendance at school is not prejudiced. However, the Governments of Nunavut and Yukon provide no further information at this time. The Committee once again requests the Governments of Nunavut and Yukon to take the necessary measures to ensure that the minimum age for admission to light work is set at 13 years, and to determine the types of light work activities that may be permitted for persons of 13 years and above as well as the number of hours during which, and the conditions in which, such employment may be undertaken, as required under Article 7 of the Convention.

5. Ontario. The Committee takes due note of the Government’s information that the minimum age for working in Ontario is 14 years for most types of work, with certain types of work requiring a higher minimum age, in accordance with the Occupational Health and Safety Act (OHSA). The Government indicates that health and safety protections set for different types of workplaces and different kinds of workplace hazards, as required under the OHSA and its regulations, would apply to all workers, regardless of age. In addition, higher minimum ages are prescribed by the OHSA for certain types of work that may be more hazardous.

6. Quebec. The Committee previously noted that pursuant to section 84.3 of the Act respecting Labour Standards, a child under 14 years of age may be employed with a written consent of the child's parent or tutor. It noted that sections 84.4 to 84.7 provide conditions in terms of schooling and working hours that are imposed on the employment of children. The Government indicated that the term child under sections 84.4 to 84.7 refers to persons under 17 years.

The Committee notes that the Government does not provide new information on this subject in its report. The Committee once again requests the Government of Quebec to take the necessary measures to ensure that no child under the age of 13 years is permitted to be employed in light work. It also once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures to determine the types of light work activities that may be permitted for persons of 13 years and above.

Article 9(1). Penalties and labour inspection. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the detailed information provided by the Government on the federal, provincial and territorial labour inspectorates and their functioning, as well as on violations detected and penalties applied. For example, it notes the Government's indication that, at the federal level, there was only one complaint concerning underage employment between 1 January 2010 and 8 August 2021, which was determined to be unfounded upon inspection. In British Columbia, the Employment Standards Branch of the Ministry of Labour has issued two penalties in the past five years for violations of section 9 of the Employment Standards Act (hiring of a child without a permit). In Manitoba, 22 youth-related Director's Own Accord (DOA) investigations were carried out between 2017 and 2021, during which 13 violations were detected. In the Northwest Territories, 92 payroll inspections were completed by the Employment Standards Inspectors, but none of these inspections identified violations with regard to the employment of youth.

However, the Committee observes from the Government's report that, in many cases, inspections do not collect information specific to the age of the employee in question. In British Columbia, both the Employment Standards Branch and WorkSafeBC (who undertakes workplace inspections and issues orders for non-compliance under the Occupational Health and Safety Regulations) do not collect information specific to the age of the employees. In New Brunswick, where the system under the Employment Standards Branch is largely complaint-driven, inspections involving young employees are not specifically tracked. In addition, workSafeNB inspects workplaces for adherence to OHSA, but focused inspections at workplaces employing children and youth are not conducted. In Newfoundland and Labrador, there have been 22,113 inspections over the past five years, but the OHS division does not track the age of people involved in complaints. In Prince Edward Island, there have been no complaints/investigations/violations/penalties issued in relation to the employment of children under the Employment Standards Act or Youth Employment Act. Moreover, the Committee notes that certain provinces, including Newfoundland and Labrador, report that they do not even collect data relating cases of violations of legislation relating to the employment of children or to their occupational health and safety.

The Committee further observes, from the Government's report, that violations of minimum age provisions across Canada do not appear to be penalized. For example, in New Brunswick, notices of non-compliance are generally issued to employers without the need for further sanctions. In Manitoba, in all the cases of violations detected by the DOA through its youth-related investigations between 2017 and 2021, no administrative sanctions were issued. In Nova Scotia, employment of children concerns are typically resolved by educating employers about the provisions of the Code, rather than through prosecutions, as authorized by the Labour Standards Code.

The Committee recalls that Article 9(1) of the Convention requires that all necessary measures, including the provision of appropriate penalties, be taken by the competent authority to ensure the effective enforcement of the provisions of the Convention. While the adoption of national legislation is essential as it establishes a framework within which society determines its responsibilities with regard to young persons, even the best legislation only takes value when it is applied effectively (2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 410). Moreover, the Committee emphasizes the importance of ensuring that the labour inspection system effectively monitors working children in all areas and sectors (2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 408). The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to adapt and strengthen the labour inspection services in order to enable them to effectively monitor children working across all sectors. It also requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the regulations providing for penalties – administrative or otherwise – in the case of a violation of the provisions on the employment of children and young persons are effectively implemented by the labour inspectorate or other competent authorities. In this regard, it requests the Government to provide information on the number and nature of violations detected and penalties imposed relating to the employment of children across Canada.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Central African Republic

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2000)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 1 September 2022. It also notes the detailed discussion, which was held at the 110th Session of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards (Conference Committee) in June 2022, concerning the application of the Convention, and the Government's report.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 110th Session, May–June 2022)

Article 3(a) of the Convention. All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. Forced recruitment of children for use in armed conflict. The Committee notes that the Conference Committee, while aware of the complexity of the situation in the country, deplored the current situation where children are being recruited and used by the armed forces and armed groups as combatants and in support roles. The Conference Committee urged the Government to take all necessary measures, in consultation with the social partners, to ensure the full and immediate demobilization of all children and to put a stop, in law and practice, to the forced recruitment of children into the armed forces and armed groups. In this regard, it also urged the Government to take all necessary measures to ensure that thorough investigations and robust prosecutions of all persons, including members of the armed forces and armed groups, are carried out, and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in law and practice. The Committee also notes that, in its observations, the ITUC supports the conclusions of the Conference Committee and, in particular, recalls that the report of the UN Secretary-General on children and armed conflict identified, in May 2021, over 580 cases of children recruited and used by armed groups and armed forces, which constitutes an alarming deterioration of this situation.

The Committee notes that, according to the report of the UN Secretary-General on children and armed conflict of 23 June 2022, the United Nations confirmed that 329 children (262 boys, 67 girls), some as young as 7 years of age, had been recruited and used by armed groups (293), including as combatants (84 children). A total of 36 children were used by other security personnel (28), the Armed Forces of the Central African Republic (5), the Armed Forces of the Central African Republic/internal security forces (2) and the Armed Forces of the Central African Republic/other security personnel (1) for intelligence gathering, at checkpoints and to run errands. Most violations (189) occurred in Haute-Kotto Prefecture. Eight boys were detained by national authorities for alleged association with armed groups. Two remain in detention and the United Nations continues to advocate their release. The Committee also notes the detailed information contained in the report on the hundreds of cases of murder, rape and other forms of sexual violence, and abduction, perpetrated against children, and attacks on schools and hospitals (A/7/871-S/2022/493, paragraphs 26–34).

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that efforts continue to be undertaken through the Strategic Committee responsible for disarmament, demobilization, reintegration and repatriation; reform of the security sector; and national reconciliation (DDRR/RSS/RN), chaired by the President of the Republic, and the National Strategy for the Reform of the Defence and Security Sector 2017–21, which allowed for the strengthening of the technical capacity of the defence forces. The Committee also notes that, according to the written information provided by the Government to the Conference Committee, and the information contained in the report of the Independent Expert on the situation of human rights in the Central African Republic of 22 August 2022, measures are being taken with regard to the prosecution of perpetrators of offences concerning human rights violations, including the worst forms of child labour. These efforts include not only the holding of regular criminal sessions since the end of 2015, but also the operationalization of the Special Criminal Court, which began its first trial in April 2022 in a case of prosecution for war crimes and crimes against humanity, of members of rebel groups (A/HRC/51/59, paragraphs 65 et seq.). However, according to this report, while the fight against impunity is a government priority, many incidents have not been investigated by the State. The Independent Expert states that political will in this area should be translated into effective action (A/HRC/51/59, paragraphs 83–84).

While noting the measures taken by Government, and recognizing the difficult situation prevailing in the country, the Committee finds itself obliged to once again deplore the continuing recruitment and use of children in the armed conflict in the Central African Republic, all the more so as it gives rise to other serious violations of the child rights, such as abductions, murder and sexual violence, and attacks targeting schools and hospitals. The Committee therefore urges the Government to pursue its efforts to put an end to the practice of forced recruitment of children of less than 18 years of age by the armed forces and armed groups in the country. Moreover, the Committee again urges the Government to continue to take immediate and effective measures to ensure that all persons, including members of the regular armed forces, who recruit children of under 18 years of age for use in armed conflict, are thoroughly investigated and prosecuted and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice, particularly within the framework of national jurisdictions and the Special Criminal Court. The Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the number of investigations undertaken, prosecutions filed, and convictions handed down against such persons. It also requests the Government to provide a copy of the Child Protection Code.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (a). Prevent the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour. Access to free basic education. The Committee notes that the Conference Committee noted with deep concern the situation of children, especially girls, who are deprived of education due to the impact of the political and security crisis prevailing in the country. The Conference Committee urged the Government to intensify its efforts to improve the operation of the education system and facilitate access to free quality basic education for all children, particularly girls, and in zones affected by the conflict.

The Committee further notes that, in its observations, the ITUC also notes with deep concern the impact of the political and security crisis on the situation of children, in particular girls, who are deprived of education. The ITUC recalls that the school attendance rate remains extremely low, and that the drop-out rate between primary and secondary education is very high. This situation is due, in particular, to the partial or total closure of several schools as a result of the armed conflict, particularly in the hinterland, where armed groups pillage, attack and occupy schools in the context of the conflict. The ITUC therefore considers that the Central African Republic still has to make considerable efforts to comply with its obligations under Article 7(a) and (c) of the Convention, which seeks to ensure access to free basic education for all children.

In this regard, the Government indicates in its reports that the right to education for all is one of its priorities, and that efforts have been made to restore school facilities, even in the areas most affected by the conflict, and to build the capacity of teaching staff. The Government indicates that it approved, in May 2020, the Sectoral Plan for Education for 2020–29, which provides an analysis of access to education, governance reform and financing of the education system.

While noting with deep concern, the significant number of children deprived of education due to the climate of insecurity prevailing in the country, the Committee wishes to recall that education plays a key role in preventing children from engaging in the worst forms of child labour, including their recruitment in armed conflicts. The Committee therefore urges the Government to intensify its efforts to improve the functioning of the education system in the country and to facilitate access to free basic education for all children, including girls and in areas affected by conflict. It requests the Government to provide information on the impact of the specific measures taken in this regard, under the Sectoral Plan for Education for 2020–29 or any other project, as well as on the school attendance, maintenance and drop-out rates at primary and secondary levels.

Clause (b). Direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration. Forced recruitment of children for use in armed conflict. The Conference Committee urged the Government to intensify its efforts on the prevention, removal, rehabilitation and social integration of children recruited to be used for armed conflict, including through awareness-raising and reintegration programmes.

In this regard, the ITUC notes with concern, in its observations, that children who have been forcibly recruited are victims a second time of the political and security crisis prevailing in the country, due to the insufficient means allocated for their rehabilitation and reintegration into society. The ITUC highlights that the reintegration programmes must be strengthened to ensure the effective and long-term demobilization of children, and that the rehabilitation of former child soldiers constitutes a major challenge in the country. The ITUC notes that, while political commitments have existed for a long time in the Central African Republic, the time frame for effectively implementing these commitments has been significantly exceeded, and that numerous issues continue to arise in practice with regard to the rehabilitation and social integration of former child soldiers.

In this regard, the Committee notes the Government's indication that several persons, including children from armed groups, have been demobilized and reintegrated into the economic and social system. The Government underscores that, since 2014 and with the support of UNICEF and other partners, over 15,500 children were freed, of whom 30 per cent were girls, and of whom several have attended training courses at the Office of the High Commissioner through the Jeunesse Pionnière (Young Pioneers) youth organization. The Committee also notes that, according to the information contained in the report of the Secretary-General on children and armed conflicts of 23 June 2022, interministerial plans have been developed to implement the Child Protection Code (A/7/871-S/2022/493, paragraph 35). According to UNICEF, the implementation of the Code makes it possible to ensure the effective protection of children, including against serious violations of their rights, and to strengthen the monitoring and reporting mechanism and foster the liberation and reintegration of children from the armed forces and armed groups, and to provide medical and psycho-social care for children affected by conflict.

The Government indicates that, in collaboration with UNICEF, it is seeking ways to ensure that the 2,000 children affected by violence, exploitation and abuse, who were freed from armed groups in 2021, are reintegrated into their families/communities, or placed in alternative services. In this regard, the Committee notes that, according to the report of the Independent Expert on the situation of human rights in the Central African Republic of 22 August 2022, despite the funding of projects for the socio-economic reintegration of individuals, including children, who have left armed groups, this challenge remains outstanding (A/HRC/51/59, paragraph 10). The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to step up its efforts to ensure the removal of all children recruited for use in the armed conflict and for their rehabilitation and social integration. It also once again requests the Government to take all measures necessary to ensure that all children removed from armed groups and from the armed forces benefit from reintegration programmes, including in the context of its cooperation with UNICEF. It requests the Government to continue to provide information in this regard, including on the number of children who have benefited from rehabilitation and social integration.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Chad

The Committee notes with deep concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments. The Committee informs the Government that, if it has not supplied replies to the points raised by 1 September 2023, then it may proceed with the examination of the application of the Convention on the basis of the information at its disposal at its next session.

Article 3(a) of the Convention. All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. Forced recruitment of children for use in armed conflict. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, according to the report of the United Nations Secretary-General on children and armed conflict of 15 May 2013 (A/67/845-S/2013/245, paragraphs 45 and 46), despite progress in the implementation of the action plan signed between the Government and the United Nations in June 2011 concerning children associated with the armed forces and armed groups in Chad, and although the national army of Chad did not recruit children as a matter of policy, the country task force verified 34 cases of recruitment of children by the army during the reporting period. The 34 children appeared to have been enlisted in the context of a recruitment drive in February–March 2012, during which the army gained 8,000 new recruits. In this respect, the Committee noted the new roadmap of May 2013, adopted further to the review of the implementation of the action plan concerning children associated with the armed forces and armed groups in Chad and aimed at achieving full observance of the 2011 action plan by the Government of Chad and the United Nations task force. The Committee observed that, in the context of the roadmap, one of the priorities was to speed up the adoption of the preliminary draft of the Child Protection Code, which prohibits the recruitment and use of young persons under 18 years of age in the national security forces and lays down penalties to that effect. Moreover, during 2013 it was planned to establish transparent, effective and accessible complaint procedures regarding cases of recruitment and use of children, and also to adopt measures for the immediate and independent investigation of all credible allegations of recruitment or use of children, for the persecution of perpetrators and for the imposition of appropriate disciplinary sanctions.

The Committee takes note of the information contained in the United Nations Secretary-General's report of 15 May 2014 to the Security Council on children and armed conflict (A/68/878-S/2014/339). According to this report, the deployment of Chadian troops to the African-led International Support Mission in Mali (AFISMA) has prompted renewed momentum to accelerate the implementation of the action plan signed in June 2011 to end and prevent underage recruitment in the Chadian National Army, and the Chadian authorities have renewed their commitment to engage constructively with the United Nations to expedite the implementation of the action plan. The Government of Chad, in cooperation with the United Nations and other partners, has therefore taken significant steps to fulfil its obligations. For example, a presidential directive was adopted in October 2013 to confirm 18 years as the minimum age for recruitment into the armed and security forces. This directive also establishes age verification procedures and provides for penal and disciplinary sanctions to be taken against those violating the orders. The directive was disseminated among the commanders of all defence and security zones, including in the context of several training and verification missions. Furthermore, on 4 February 2014, a presidential decree explicitly criminalized the recruitment and use of children in armed conflict.

The Secretary-General states, however, that while the efforts made by the Government to meet all obligations under the action plan have resulted in significant progress, a number of challenges remain to ensure sustainability and the effective prevention of violations against children. Chad should pursue comprehensive and thorough screening and training of its armed and security forces to continue to prevent the presence of children, including in the light of Chad's growing involvement in peacekeeping operations. While no new cases of recruitment of children were documented by the United Nations in 2013 and no children were found during the joint screening exercises carried out with the Chadian authorities, interviews confirmed that soldiers had been integrated in the past into the Chadian National Army from armed groups while still under the age of 18. According to the Secretary-General, the strengthening of operating procedures, such as those for age verification, which ensure the accountability of perpetrators, should remain a priority for the Chadian authorities. Finally, the Secretary-General invited the National Assembly to proceed as soon as possible with the examination and adoption of the Child Protection Code, which should provide greater protection for the children of Chad. The Committee therefore requests the Government to intensify its efforts to end, in practice, the forced recruitment of children under 18 years of age by the armed forces and armed groups and to undertake immediately the full demobilization of all children. The Committee urges the Government to take immediate measures to ensure that the perpetrators are investigated and prosecuted and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed on persons found guilty of recruiting and using children under 18 years of age in armed conflict. Finally, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the adoption of the Child Protection Code as soon as possible.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (b) and (c). Preventing children from being engaged in the worst forms of child labour, removing children from these forms of labour and ensuring their rehabilitation and social integration. Children who have been enlisted and used in armed conflict. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, according to the report of the United Nations Secretary-General on children and armed conflict of 15 May 2013 (A/67/845-S/2013/245, paragraph 49), the actions taken by the Government for the release, temporary care and reunification of separated children, while encouraging, were not yet in line with the commitments made in the action plan signed between the Government and the United Nations in June 2011 concerning children associated with the armed forces and armed groups in Chad. The Committee noted that one of the priorities referred to in the 2013 roadmap was to secure the release of children and support their reintegration.

The Committee notes that, according to the Secretary-General's report of 15 May 2014, a central child protection unit has been established in the Ministry of Defence, as well as in each of the eight defence and security zones, to coordinate the monitoring and protection of children's rights and to implement awareness-raising activities. Between August and October 2013, the Government and the United Nations jointly conducted screening and age verification of approximately 3,800 troops of the Chadian national army in all eight zones. The age verification standards had been previously developed during a workshop organized by the United Nations in July. In addition, between August and September 2013, a training-of-trainers programme on child protection was attended by 346 members of the Chadian National Army. As from July 2013, troops of the Chadian National Army deployed in Mali started to receive pre deployment training on child protection and international humanitarian law; in December of the same year, 864 troops attended child protection training at the Loumia training centre. The Committee encourages the Government to intensify its efforts and continue its collaboration with the United Nations in order to prevent the enrolment of children in armed groups and improve the situation of child victims of forced recruitment for use in armed conflict. In addition, the Committee requests the Government once again to supply information on measures taken to ensure that child soldiers removed from the armed forces and groups receive adequate assistance for their rehabilitation and social integration, including reintegration into the school system or vocational training, wherever appropriate. It requests the Government to supply information on the results achieved in its next report.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee expects that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Comoros

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2004)

The Committee notes with concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Article 2(3) of the Convention. Compulsory schooling and application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that child labour was a visible phenomenon in the country, particularly as a result of poverty and of the low school enrolment rate in some cases. In this regard, the Committee noted that the capacity of schools was very limited and that some primary and secondary schools were obliged to refuse to enrol certain children of school age. Consequently, a large number of children, particularly from poor families and disadvantaged backgrounds, were deprived of an education.

The Committee noted the Government's indication that there had been a positive trend towards gender parity in school, standing at 0.87 at primary level. However, it was less satisfactory at secondary level, where the numbers of girls in school had fallen significantly. According to the Government, particular problems in the educational situation for girls involved late enrolment, a very high repetition rate – around 30 per cent in primary school and 23 per cent in secondary school – and a high drop-out rate, with only 32 per cent of pupils completing primary education.

The Committee notes the Government's statement in its report that it is taking steps to reduce the disparity in school enrolment rates for girls and boys. The Government indicates that the school mapping system is being revised by the Ministry of Education, in conjunction with the education offices and UNICEF, with a view to boosting educational coverage and ensuring better access to education for children living in rural areas. Moreover, the Committee notes that a UNICEF country programme has been adopted for 2015–19, which aims, among other things, to support the Government's efforts to enhance children's right to education. One of the main objectives of the programme is to ensure that all children are enrolled in and complete inclusive, high-quality education, with the focus on equity and achievement.

However, the Committee notes that section 2 of Framework Act No. 94/035/AF of 20 December 1994 provides that schooling is only compulsory from 6 to 12 years of age, which is three years earlier than the minimum age for admission to employment or work, namely 15 years. Referring to the General Survey of 2012 on the fundamental Conventions, the Committee observes that if compulsory schooling comes to an end before children are legally entitled to work, a vacuum may arise which regrettably opens the door for the economic exploitation of children (paragraph 371). The Committee therefore considers it desirable to raise the age of completion of compulsory schooling so that it coincides with the minimum age for admission to employment or work, as provided for in Paragraph 4 of the Minimum Age Recommendation, 1973 (No. 146). Recalling that compulsory education is one of the most effective means of combating child labour, the Committee strongly encourages the Government to take the necessary steps to make education compulsory until the minimum age for admission to employment, namely 15 years. Moreover, the Committee requests that the Government intensify its efforts to increase the school attendance rate and reduce the school drop-out rate, especially among girls, in order to prevent children under 15 years of age from working. The Committee requests that the Government provide information on the results achieved in this respect.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Congo

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1999)

The Committee notes with concern that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that a large number of children were involved in economic activity but that no national policy had been adopted in this regard. It noted the Government's indication that there were no inspection reports providing any information on the presumed or actual employment of children in enterprises in Congo during the reporting period. However, the Committee noted that 25 per cent of Congolese children were involved in child labour, according to UNICEF statistics.

The Committee notes with regret that the Government's report still does not contain any information on the adoption of a national policy for ensuring the effective abolition of child labour. The Committee also observes that the United Nations Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC), in its concluding observations of 2014, noted that child labour and the economic exploitation of children remain widespread, particularly in the big cities (CRC/C/COG/CO/2-4, paragraph 74). Expressing its deep concern at the large number of children working below the minimum age in the country, and given the lack of a national policy designed to ensure the effective abolition of child labour, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure the adoption and implementation of such a policy as soon as possible. It requests that the Government provide detailed information in its next report on the measures taken in this respect.

Article 3(2) and (3). Determination of hazardous types of work and age of admission to hazardous work. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that section 4 of Order No. 2224 of 24 October 1953, which establishes employment exemptions for young workers, determines the types of work and the categories of enterprises prohibited for young persons and sets the age limit for the prohibition, prohibits the employment of young persons under 18 years of age in certain hazardous types of work, and includes a list of such types of work.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that Order No. 2224 is no longer in force. The Committee also notes that section 68(d) of Act No. 4-2010 of 14 June 2010 concerning child protection (Child Protection Act) provides that any work which, by its nature or the conditions in which it is performed, is likely to harm the health, safety or morals of the child is prohibited. It also provides that a decree issued further to the opinion of the National Labour Advisory Committee shall determine the list and the types of work and the categories of enterprises prohibited for children and the age limit for the prohibition. The Committee requests that the Government take the necessary steps to ensure the adoption as soon as possible of the decree determining the list of hazardous types of work, in accordance with section 68(d) of the Child Protection Act.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Democratic Republic of the Congo

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2001)

Previous comments: observation and direct request

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that a large number of children were involved in child labour, including under hazardous conditions.

The Committee notes the information provided by the Government on its efforts to improve access to the school system in order to withdraw children from child labour and reintegrate them through the "Sectoral strategy for education and training (SSEF) 2016–25". However, the Committee notes the Government's report does not contain any information on current data relating to the employment of children and young persons, or any information on the monitoring and supervision of working children.

In this regard, the Committee notes from the 2017–18 MICS (multiple indicator cluster surveys) report produced by UNICEF that 15 per cent of children between 5 and 17 years of age are engaged in child labour and 13 per cent of children between 5 and 17 years of age work under conditions which are dangerous for their health. In the northern provinces of the country (Haut Uelé, Bas Uelé, Sud Ubangui, Ituri and Nord Ubangui) and in Lomami, Kasai and Maniema, between 20 and 30 per cent of children between 5 and 17 years of age are involved in child labour. While noting the measures taken by the Government, the Committee is bound to express its deep concern at the number of children exposed to child labour, including under hazardous conditions. The Committee once again requests the Government to intensify its efforts to ensure the progressive elimination of child labour. It requests the Government to provide information on the application of the Convention in practice, particularly statistics, disaggregated by gender and age, on the employment of children and young persons, and also extracts from the reports of the inspection services.

Article 2(1). Scope of application and labour inspection. The Committee previously noted the concern expressed by the United Nations Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) regarding the large number of children who work in the informal economy and who are often not covered by the protection measures established by the national legislation.

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that reforms have been undertaken with a view to capacity-building for the labour inspectorate, including through the implementation of the project "Support for progress in labour standards in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (SPNT) 2022–25", in collaboration with the ILO and the US Department of Labor. This project will help to strengthen the capacities of the labour inspectorate. As part of capacity-building for labour inspectors and controllers, steps have been taken to allocate them a permanent allowance, which was adjusted in 2020. The practical guide for labour inspectors is a tool for gathering information during routine and special inspections in enterprises and establishments of all kinds, including in relation to child labour. The Committee requests the Government to continue taking measures to adapt and reinforce labour inspection services in order to guarantee the supervision of child labour and ensure that all children enjoy the protection afforded by the Convention, including those who work in the informal economy. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the results achieved in the context of the SPNT. It also requests the Government to provide information on the structure, operation and activities of the labour inspectorate relating to child labour.

Article 2(3). Age of completion of compulsory schooling. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that there has been an increase in the gross school enrolment rate for both girls and boys between 2018 and 2020.

The Committee also notes that, according to the 2021 UNICEF report on education challenges in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, the net school attendance rate rose from 52 per cent in 2001 to 78 per cent in 2018. However, UNICEF points out that about 4 million children between 6 and 11 years of age are still out of school and account for some 21 per cent of the total number of children in this age group, and that only one third of children are in secondary education.

In this regard, the Committee also notes the information on the 2019–20 compendium of school statistics produced by the Technical Unit for Education Statistics with technical support from UNESCO, according to which a total of 13,872,674 girls and 12,190,775 boys are enrolled in pre-primary, primary and secondary classes.

The Committee further notes the various activities undertaken by the Government to improve children's access to education, particularly the meeting of the Sectoral Consultation Committee in September 2022, the "SSEF joint mid-term review", and also the progress made on projects, including the “Project to improve the quality of education (PAQUE)”, and the “Project for greater equality and strength in the education system (PERSE)”. Moreover, a survey was also conducted with regard to the return to school of more than 2 million pupils since 2019. In view of the fact that compulsory education is one of the most effective means of combating child labour, the Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to ensure the entry into the education system of children who have not reached the minimum age of 14 years for admission to employment or work.

Article 3(3) of the Convention. Admission to hazardous work from the age of 16 years. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, according to figures contained in the “Second demographic and health survey” (EDS-RDC II 2013–14), 27.5 per cent of children under 18 years of age have worked under dangerous conditions and that working conditions that fulfil the requirements of Article 3(3) of the Convention have not been established.

The Committee notes the Government’s indication in its report that it has planned to supplement the provisions of Ministerial Order No. 12/CAB.MIN/TPSI/045/08 of 8 August 2008 (Order of 8 August 2008) establishing conditions of work for children, in such a way as to bring the regulations on admission to hazardous work from the age of 16 years into line with Article 3(3) of the Convention. The Committee recalls that the flexibility clause established in Article 3(3) of the Convention allows the competent authority to authorize hazardous work from the age of 16 years only if the following requirements are met: (a) prior consultation must be held with the employers’ and workers’ organizations; (b) the health, safety and morals of the young persons concerned must be fully protected; and (c) it must be ensured that the young persons have received adequate specific instruction or vocational training in the relevant branch of activity. The Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary regulatory measures to ensure that the performance of hazardous work by young persons between 16 and 18 years of age is authorized only if the requirements of Article 3(3) of the Convention are met.

Article 7. Light work. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that section 17 of the Order of 8 August 2008 contains a list of light and healthy types of work authorized for children under 18 years of age but does not set a minimum age from which children may perform light work or establish the conditions under which light work may be performed.

The Committee notes the Government’s indications that it undertakes to amend and supplement, with the agreement of the National Labour Council, the provisions of section 17 of the Order of 8 August 2008 regarding the minimum age from which children may perform light work and under which conditions, including by incorporating the provisions of Paragraph 13 of the Minimum Age Recommendation, 1973 (No. 146), which gives effect to Article 7(3) of the Convention.

The Committee once again reminds the Government that Article 7(1) and (4) of the Convention is a flexibility clause under which national laws or regulations may permit the employment of children between 12 and 14 years of age in light work, or the performance by these children of such work, provided that it is: (a) not likely to be harmful to their health or development; and (b) not such as to prejudice their attendance at school, their participation in vocational guidance or training programmes approved by the competent authority, or their capacity to benefit from the instruction received. The Committee once again requests that the Government take the necessary steps to ensure that the types of work referred to in section 17 of the Order of 8 August 2008 are authorized only for children who are at least 12 years of age, provided that the requirements set out in Article 7(1) and (4) of the Convention are met.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

Previous comment

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. Forced recruitment of children for use in armed conflict. In its previous comments, the Committee expressed its deep concern at the large number of children recruited by armed groups, including the armed forces.

The Committee notes the Government's reference in its report to the adoption of the strategy of the Disarmament, Demobilization, Community Recovery and Stabilization Programme (P-DDRCS) in April 2022. This programme is based on five major pillars, consisting of: (i) conflict resolution; (ii) restoration of state authority and security; (iii) economic recovery and community reintegration; (iv) stabilization, economic and social development; and (v) communication and awareness-raising in the east of the country.

The Committee observes that, according to the report of 23 June 2022 of the United Nations (UN) Secretary-General (A/76/871-S/2022/493, paragraphs 52–68), the UN verified 3,546 violations committed against 2,979 children (2,090 boys, 889 girls) between January and December 2021. The report also mentions that: (1) a total of 565 children (487 boys, 78 girls) who had been separated from armed groups in 2021 were recruited again and used by these groups. Of these 565 children, 241 children were used in combat, 324 children were used in support roles and 42 girls were used for, and subjected to, sexual violence; (2) a total of 436 children (7 boys, 429 girls) were subjected to sexual violence, with 336 violations committed by armed groups and 100 by government forces; (3) a total of 684 children (416 boys, 268 girls) were abducted, 669 by armed groups and 15 by the armed forces; and (4) a total of 69 schools were attacked and four schools were used for military purposes by the national armed forces.

The Committee also notes that the UN Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW), in its concluding observations on the eighth periodic report in 2019 (CEDAW/C/COD/CO/8, paragraph 28), expressed concern at reports of trafficking in persons and of exploitation and forced prostitution of girls in conflict areas, including in North Kivu.

While noting the measures taken by the Government and recognizing the difficult situation prevailing in the country, the Committee once again expresses its deep concern at the persistent recruitment and use of children in armed conflict in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, especially as this gives rise to other serious violations of the rights of the child, such as abductions, killings, sexual violence and attacks on schools. The Committee therefore urges the Government: (1) to take measures with the utmost urgency to proceed, in the context of the P-DDRCS, with the immediate and full demobilization of all children and put an end in practice to the forced recruitment of children under 18 years of age into armed groups and the armed forces and to provide information on the results achieved; (2) to take immediate and effective measures to ensure the thorough investigation and prosecution of persons, including officers of the regular armed forces, who recruit children under 18 years of age for use in armed conflict, and to ensure that penalties constituting an effective deterrent are imposed in practice, pursuant to Act No. 09/001 of 10 January 2009; and (3) to provide information on the number of investigations conducted, prosecutions brought and convictions handed down with respect to such persons and the penalties imposed.

Clauses (a) and (d). Forced or compulsory labour and hazardous work. Child labour in mines. Further to its previous comments, the Committee duly notes the Government's indications that a mechanism for the supervision, observation and monitoring of child labour in artisanal mines and at artisanal mining sites has been put in place in the context of the project entitled "Combating child labour in the Democratic Republic of the Congo's cobalt industry (COTECCO)", in partnership with the ILO and with funding from the US Government. This mechanism makes it possible: (1) to identify the real number of children working at artisanal mining sites; (2) to constitute a database of children working in mines; (3) to follow up the process of social/occupational or educational reintegration of children withdrawn from mining sites; and (4) to implement a communication and awareness-raising strategy for all stakeholders regarding action against child labour.

The Committee notes the adoption on 18 October 2017 of the plan for the implementation of the “National sectoral strategy to combat child labour in artisanal mines and at artisanal mining sites in the Democratic Republic of the Congo 2017–25” (CAB.MIN./MINES/02/1315/2017). The Committee also notes Ministerial Order No. 00122/CAB.MIN/MINES/01/2020 of 6 March 2020 on the establishment of the inter-ministerial committee for monitoring the issue of child labour in artisanal mines (CISTEMA), whose primary role is to implement the national strategy against child labour.

The Committee also notes that the UN Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (CESCR), in its concluding observations of 28 March 2022 (E/C.12/COD/CO/6, paragraph 44), expressed concern at the fact that, despite the adoption of the national sectoral strategy against child labour in artisanal mines and at artisanal mining sites for the 2017–25 period, large numbers of children continue to work in the mining sector.

While duly noting the measures taken by the Government, the Committee expresses its concern at the large number of children working in mines under hazardous conditions. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the actual implementation of the “National sectoral strategy to combat child labour in artisanal mines and at artisanal mining sites in the Democratic Republic of the Congo 2017–25”. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the results achieved in the context of the COTECCO project. Furthermore, the Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure the thorough investigation and effective prosecution of offenders and to ensure that penalties constituting an effective deterrent are imposed in practice.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour, removing them from such work and ensuring their rehabilitation and social integration. 1. Child soldiers. The Committee notes the Government’s indications that the P-DDRCS steering committee is functional, but it notes the absence of information on child soldiers.

The Committee notes the indication in the report of the UN Secretary-General of 21 March 2022 on the United Nations Organization Stabilization Mission in the Democratic Republic of the Congo (MONUSCO) that Presidential Ordinance No. 22/003, published on 7 January, assigned to the Ministry of Defence and former combatants the responsibility for planning and implementing the demobilization of ex-combatants and children associated with the armed forces and armed groups with a view to reintegrating them in the community.

Furthermore, the Committee notes that the implementation of the “Accelerated presidential programme against poverty and inequality (PPA-LCPI)” will primarily target population groups which are extremely poor, vulnerable and exposed to security-related, endemic and environmental risks and that the provinces affected by armed conflict are considered as priority intervention areas for the programme.

However, the Committee notes that the UN Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights (CESCR), in its concluding observations of 28 March 2022 (E/C.12/COD/CO/6, paragraph 44), expressed concern at the fact that, in the context of the armed conflict in the country, many children are in a situation of extreme vulnerability and neglect and are thus exposed to a risk of being recruited by armed groups. The Committee once again urges the Government to intensify its efforts and take effective and time-bound measures to remove children from the armed forces and armed groups and ensure their rehabilitation and social integration through the Ministry of Defence in the context of the P-DDRCS strategy. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the number of child soldiers, disaggregated by age and gender, who have been removed from the armed forces and armed groups and have been reintegrated through appropriate assistance with rehabilitation and social integration.

2. Children working in mines. The Committee takes due note of the Government’s indication in its report that in addition to the “National sectoral strategy against child labour in artisanal mines and at artisanal mining sites in the Democratic Republic of the Congo 2017–25” and the COTECCO project, other actions have been undertaken, including the “Project to support the alternative welfare of children and young people involved in the cobalt supply chain (PABEA-Cobalt) 2019–24”, which is being implemented and targets a total of 14,850 children and 6,250 parents. The Committee also notes the engagement of the Ministry of Mining in 2020 in the “Cobalt action partnership (CAP)”, whose objectives include: combating child labour and forced labour; implementing the Decent Work Country Programme (DWCP) 2021–24, including promoting decent employment for young persons in a post-conflict context and sustainable development in partnership with the ILO; and continuing with the “Plan for the elimination of the worst forms of child labour by 2020 (PAN)”. While noting the Government’s efforts to prevent the engagement of children under 18 years of age in work in mining and to remove them from this worst form of child labour, the Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to implement the various projects to combat hazardous work for children in mining. It requests the Government to provide information on the results achieved in this regard. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on necessary and appropriate direct assistance to ensure the rehabilitation and social integration of these children.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1999)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the National Confederation of Trade Union Unity (CNUS), the National Confederation of Dominican Workers (CNTD) and the Autonomous Confederation of Workers’ Unions (CASC), received on 1 September 2021.

Article 2(3) of the Convention. Completion of compulsory schooling. With reference to its previous comments, the Committee notes that, according to the National Multipurpose Household Survey (ENHOGAR MICS 2019), the net school attendance rate of boys and girls of primary school age was 96.9 per cent in 2019 for urban areas and 95.3 per cent for rural areas, while the school attendance rate for boys and girls of the age to go to the first cycle of secondary school (12 to 14 years of age) was 81.8 per cent in urban areas and 74.4 per cent in rural areas, which is an increase from previous years (in 2016, the rate was 66.5 per cent for girls and 57.7 per cent for boys). The Committee notes with interest that Order No. 2-2016 of the Ministry of Education, referred to in the Government’s report, establishes measures to facilitate coordination between families, education establishments and the National Council for Children and Young Persons (CONANI) to follow up school attendance. In accordance with section 18 of the Order, on the third consecutive day of unjustified absence by a student, the respective teacher must inform the CONANI of the absence in writing, and the CONANI will be responsible for investigating the situation. The Committee also notes that the Government has been implementing various programmes to promote access to secondary education, including the “Te quiero en Secundaria” (You are wanted in secondary school), intended for young persons who have dropped out of secondary school, with a view to promoting their reintegration as students based on an analysis of the causes of them dropping out. The Committee encourages the Government to continue taking measures to ensure compulsory schooling for all boys and girls up to the age of 14 years (primary school and the first cycle of secondary education), and requests it to continue providing updated statistical information on school registration, attendance and drop-out rates.

Article 3(1) and (2). Hazardous types of work. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that it is engaged in updating the list of hazard types of work for children, and in improving follow-up and monitoring information systems and awareness raising for enterprises and workers. The Committee observes that, according to the ENHOGAR MICS 2019, the percentage of persons between the ages of 5 and 17 years working under hazardous conditions was 5.1 in urban areas (16,042) and 7.5 per cent in rural areas (5,906). The Committee recalls that, in accordance with Article 3(2) of the Convention, the types of employment or work considered to be hazardous shall be determined by national laws or regulations or by the competent authority, after consultation with the organizations of employers and workers concerned. The Committee considers that these consultations could be held in the round table established in 2016 on matters relating to international labour standards. The Committee requests the Government to continue taking measures to prevent persons under 18 years of age from performing work considered to be hazardous and to report on progress in the adoption of the new list of hazardous types of work that is being prepared in consultation with the social partners. The Committee also requests the Government to indicate whether violations have been detected under Resolution No. 52/2004 on hazardous and unhealthy types of work prohibited for persons under 18 years of age and, if so, the penalties imposed.

Application of the Convention in practice and labour inspection. In reply to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication that: (i) within the framework of the road map to make the Dominican Republic a country free of child labour and the worst forms of child labour, round tables have been established to follow up the action to prevent and eradicate child labour, with the participation of the various institutions that are members of the National Steering Committee to Combat Child Labour; (ii) the Ministry of Labour has carried out awareness-raising campaigns on child labour for employers, workers, officials of the Ministry of Labour, actors in education and religious and community leaders; and (iii) plans are being made for the conclusion of an inter-institutional agreement between the Ministry of Labour and the Ministry of Education for the prevention and eradication of child labour.

However, the Committee also notes that, according to the ENHOGAR MICS 2019, the proportion of boys and girls between the ages of 5 and 17 years engaged in child labour was 3.8 per cent (4.6 per cent for boys and 3 per cent for girls), with the majority between the ages of 5 and 11 years. The Committee also notes the indication by the CNUS, CNTD and CASC that, although some action has been taken to contribute to addressing the issue of child labour, it is inadequate and would benefit from greater follow-up by the labour inspectorate and other social institutions. While noting the measures taken, the Committee requests the Government to take stronger action for the progressive and full elimination of child labour, including in the informal economy, and requests it to continue providing information on the measures adopted within the context of the road map and their results. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to report on the activities of the labour inspectorate in this connection (including information on the number and nature of the violations reported, the sectors concerned and the penalties imposed). Finally, it requests the Government to continue providing updated statistical data on the extent and trends of child labour in the country.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2000)

Previous comment

Articles 3(a) and (b) and 7(1) of the Convention. Sale and trafficking of children for commercial sexual exploitation, and penalties. The Committee notes the Government's response, in reply to its previous comments, that in 2020 the Special Prosecutor's Office against the Illicit Trafficking of Migrants and Human Trafficking reported 41 cases of commercial sexual exploitation of young persons under 18 years of age; and that between 2016 and 2020 a total of 239 cases of illicit human trafficking involving minors were recorded. Moreover, according to information on the official website of the Attorney-General's Office, between May 2017 and March 2019 legal proceedings were opened in 139 cases relating to commercial sexual exploitation, illicit trafficking of migrants, child pornography and human trafficking. These cases involved 88 victims under 18 years of age, and convictions were handed down in 33 cases.

The Committee also notes that the United Nations (UN) Special Rapporteur on the sale and sexual exploitation of children, including child prostitution, child pornography and other child sexual abuse material, observes in the 2018 report on her visit to the Dominican Republic that a significant proportion of foreign tourists come to the country for the purpose of sexual exploitation, including of girls, and that child sexual exploitation is especially concentrated in beach areas such as Bávaro, Boca Chica, Sosúa, Cabarete and Las Terrenas. The UN Special Rapporteur also highlights the fact that intermediaries who facilitate child sexual exploitation form part of a chain that includes pimps, taxi drivers, and owners of motels, night clubs and car-wash facilities, and that these criminal structures often operate with the complicity of the local authorities (A/HRC/37/60/Add.1, paragraphs 18 and 19). Taking account of the fact that the trafficking of children for commercial sexual exploitation has been an extensive problem in the country, particularly in the tourism sector, and that there has been a high degree of impunity in this sphere, the Committee notes with deep concern this information and also the low number of convictions in relation to the number of cases involving the trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of minors.

Lastly, with regard to the revision of the Penal Code for the purpose of reinforcing the penalties for perpetrators of the sale and trafficking of children for commercial sexual exploitation, the Committee notes that the new draft Code has already been approved by the Chamber of Deputies and is being reviewed by a special committee of the Senate of the Republic. The Committee once again firmly urges the Government to take all necessary steps without delay to ensure that circumstances which constitute the sale and trafficking of children for exploitation are investigated and that the perpetrators are duly prosecuted and penalized. The Committee requests the Government to continue sending information on the application in practice of section 3 of Act No. 137-03 on the illicit trafficking of migrants and other persons which criminalizes the trafficking of children for commercial sexual exploitation, and sections 408-410 of the Code for the protection of the rights of children and young persons, which establish penalties for the commercial sexual exploitation of minors. Lastly, the Committee requests the Government to continue sending information on progress made with regard to the adoption of a new Penal Code.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (a). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour. Commercial sexual exploitation in the tourism industry. The Committee notes the Government's indication, in reply to its previous comments, that the Central Tourism Police Department (POLITUR) has a "Programme for the protection of children and young persons" aimed at protecting children and young persons against all forms of violence, abuse, exploitation and trafficking, especially those that occur as a result of tourism-related activities. In order to achieve this objective, POLITUR coordinates its actions with the Public Prosecutor's Office, the hotel sector and tourism clusters. The Committee also notes that the Ministry of Labour has established a committee to work on aspects of commercial sexual exploitation and other worst forms of child labour in coordination with the Attorney-General's Office, the National Council for Children (CONANI), and other institutions that are part of the National Steering Committee to Combat Child Labour and the Inter-institutional Commission against the Abuse and Commercial Sexual Exploitation of Children. Within the above-mentioned committee, awareness-raising workshops have been held for members of tourism clusters throughout the country. In addition, the Ministry of Labour has established local, provincial and municipal steering committees in all provinces of the country, including in tourist areas, and also watchdog committees or units in municipalities and districts where there are no labour offices. The Committee notes that the UN Special Rapporteur on the sale and sexual exploitation of children, including child prostitution, child pornography and other child sexual abuse material, observed in her 2018 report that the province of Puerto Plata is one of the main centres of child sexual exploitation in tourism and that the local authorities are overwhelmed by the problem without the support of the central authorities to prevent and combat it. The Special Rapporteur also expressed regret at the lack of real and effective involvement on the part of the Ministry of Tourism in combating child sexual exploitation in tourism (A/HRC/37/60/Add.1, paragraphs 20 and 61). The Committee requests the Government to intensify its efforts and continue to adopt effective time-bound measures to prevent the commercial sexual exploitation of children in the tourism industry, in coordination with central and local authorities and in collaboration with the various actors in the aforementioned industry (Ministry of Tourism, hotel sector and other tourism enterprises). The Committee also requests the Government to send information on this matter and also on the watchdog activities of POLITUR to protect children and young persons against commercial sexual exploitation in tourism-related activities.

Clause (b). Direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration. Commercial sexual exploitation. Further to its previous comments on the number of child victims of commercial sexual exploitation who have received assistance and been removed from such exploitation, the Committee notes with regret that the Government has once again not provided information on this matter. Furthermore, the Committee observes that the UN Special Rapporteur on the sale and sexual exploitation of children noted with regret in her 2018 report the absence of accessible complaint mechanisms for child victims of violence, abuse and sexual exploitation (A/HRC/37/60/Add.1, paragraph 54). The Committee therefore requests the Government to take measures to ensure that child victims of commercial sexual exploitation, or their parents or tutors, can access complaint mechanisms rapidly, easily and free of charge, and can also access programmes for their rehabilitation and social reintegration. In this regard, it requests the Government to send up-to-date statistical information on the number of child victims of commercial sexual exploitation who have been identified, rescued and rehabilitated.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2000)

Previous comment

Articles 3(a) and 7(1) of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour and penalties. Sale and trafficking of children. In its previous comments, the Committee welcomed the adoption of the Special Act to combat trafficking in persons, which criminalizes and penalizes the crime of trafficking in boys, girls and young persons for sexual or labour exploitation and establishes measures for prevention and the protection of victims. In response to the request for information on the effect given in practice to the Act, the Committee notes the indication by the Government in its report that: in 2019 a case of trafficking in persons for labour exploitation was prosecuted involving five victims under 18 years of age of Guatemalan nationality, and that four of those charged were convicted. The National Civil Police recorded eight cases of the trafficking of minors in 2018 (three for labour exploitation and five for sexual exploitation) and 19 cases in 2019 (three for labour exploitation and 16 for sexual exploitation); 15 cases were referred to the National Council for Children and Young Persons (in charge of providing assistance to child victims of trafficking) involving boys, girls and young persons who were presumed victims of trafficking; and the Ministry of Education, Science and Technology identified 73 students affected by the crime of trafficking. The Committee also notes the detailed information on action to prevent trafficking in children and young persons, including: (i) training days on trafficking for police responsible for prevention and immigration officials; (ii) awareness-raising talks for students in public and private educational institutions; and (iii) coverage of the crime of trafficking in persons in the education curriculum at all levels, with a view to promoting a culture of denouncing the crime. Health workers have also been trained in the early detection of victims of trafficking, as a result of which 28 presumed cases of trafficking were detected in 2019 involving children and young persons between the ages of 10 and 17 years, which were referred to the Office of the Public Prosecutor for the respective investigations. The Committee notes that, in its concluding observations in 2018, the United Nations Committee on the Rights of the Child expressed concern at the occurrence of child trafficking in schools (CRC/C/SLV/CO/5-6, paragraph 42). Noting the measures adopted by the Government, the Committee encourages it to continue taking measures to prevent, investigate and punish trafficking of children and young persons for labour and sexual exploitation. It also requests the Government to continue providing updated statistical information on the number of investigations, prosecutions and convictions in cases of trafficking of children and young persons under the Special Act to combat trafficking in persons.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (a). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour. Access to free basic education. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the various measures adopted by the Government to facilitate the access to education of boys and girls in a situation of poverty and requested the Government to provide information on their results. In this regard, the Committee notes the Government's indication that programmes for the provision of school uniforms and materials to children in public educational institutions are continuing and that measures have been taken to improve the infrastructure in educational establishments with a view to creating safe and pedagogically appropriate spaces to bring together students and communities. A total of 727 school infrastructure and furniture projects were carried out in 2018, 1,334 in 2019, 667 in 2020 and 93 between January and April 2021. Moreover, between 2018 and 2020, a total of 1,048,953 children and young persons in initial or middle education benefited from the provision of school meals. The Committee also notes the adoption of various measures to eradicate poverty, including transport vouchers for young persons in the third cycle of the general or technical baccalaureate in any of the forms provided by the Ministry of Education, as well as additional vouchers for young mothers who are still in the education system.

The Committee also notes, according to the 2017 report of the Ministry of Education Observatory of Subsidized Public and Private Educational Establishments in El Salvador, that 44.61 per cent of educational establishments in 2017 were in communities where gangs are present; 38.11 per cent were located in areas where theft and/or burglaries are reported; 34.62 per cent are in areas where drugs are circulating; 27.62 per cent in areas where the carrying of knives and firearms have been identified; and 18.76 per cent in areas where extortion is practiced. It also notes that in its 2018 concluding observations, the Committee on the Rights of the Child emphasizes the overwhelming impact of violence on children's access to education, with the majority of schools situated in communities where there is a high crime rate and a high number of killings of teachers and students (CRC/C/SLV/CO/5-6, paragraph 42). The United Nations Special Rapporteur on the human rights of internally displaced persons, in her 2018 report on her visit to El Salvador, also indicates that schools in some localities are no longer considered safe spaces for children, teachers are threatened, gangs operate within and around some school facilities where they recruit children, expose them to gang-related criminal activities, and identify girls as sexual targets for gang members (A/HRC/38/39/Add.1, paragraph 22).

While recognizing that the Government has adopted certain measures to facilitate the access of children and young persons to free basic education, the Committee notes with concern the existence of a climate of violence in certain areas of the country, which could have a negative impact on the access of children and young persons to education. Recognizing the difficult security situation in the country, and considering that education is key in preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour, the Committee urges the Government to renew its efforts to improve the education system and to continue facilitating access to free basic education for children living in all the regions of the country. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the progress achieved in this respect, and on the results of the various educational support programmes for poor children.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Previous comments: observation and direct request

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's information, in its report, regarding the action taken by the Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare (MLSW) to support and assist marginalized women to become independent and generate income through the provision of training and micro credit. The Government indicates that this can have an impact on the elimination of child labour. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that necessary measures will be taken at the appropriate time to develop the national plan of action on the elimination of child labour, which the Government had referred to in its previous report. While noting the measures taken by the Government, the Committee once again urges it to intensify its efforts to progressively eliminate child labour in the country by adopting and implementing the National Action plan for the elimination of child labour. The Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the application of the Convention in practice, in particular statistical data on the employment of children and young persons by age group.

Article 2(1) of the Convention. Scope of application and labour inspection. Self-employment. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes once again the Government's indication that it is engaged in including self-employment within the draft amendments to the Labour Proclamation No. 118/2001 (Labour Proclamation), which currently excludes self-employed workers from its scope of application. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that the Labour Inspectorate regularly monitors workplaces and that, in this regard, measures are being taken to improve the number and quality of labour inspections through various trainings. For example, new labour inspectors were given training in August 2022, raising the number of inspectors to 55. Recalling that the Committee has been requesting the Government to take the necessary measures in this respect for many years, the Committee once again strongly urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure that the protections provided under the Labour Proclamation are extended to children working outside of an employment relationship in the very near future. The Committee also requests the Government to continue to take measures to strengthen the capacity of the labour inspection system to adequately monitor and detect cases of child labour in the country, in particular self-employed children or children working in the informal economy. It further requests the Government to provide information on the number of inspections on child labour carried out by the labour inspectors as well as on the number and nature of violations detected and penalties applied.

Article 2(3) and (4). Age of completion of compulsory schooling. With regard to the measures taken to improve access to education, the Committee refers to its comments under the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182).

Article 3(2). Determination of the types of hazardous work. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes with regret that the Government once again indicates that the MLSW is engaged in the process of finalizing the regulation issuing the list of hazardous activities prohibited to persons under the age of 18 years. The Committee once again recalls that the Government has been referring to the upcoming adoption of a list of hazardous activities prohibited to young employees since 2007. The Committee accordingly strongly urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the ministerial regulation issuing the list of hazardous activities prohibited to persons under the age of 18 is adopted in the near future. It once again requests the Government to provide a copy, once it has been adopted.

Article 7. Light work. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication that, considering that children often combine light work with schooling and are usually engaged in gainful employment for an income to supplement family living expenses, the MLSW is envisaging regulating and determining the types of activities, number of hours and conditions in which light work may be undertaken by children from the age of 12, in conformity with Article 7 of the Convention. Considering that it has been raising this question for a number of years, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to regulate and determine the types of activities, the number of hours and the conditions under which light work may be undertaken by children from the age of 12 years, as required under Article 7 of the Convention. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard.

Article 9(3). Keeping of registers by employers. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes with regret that the Government indicates once again that the MLSW is still undertaking studies to develop the regulation on the registers of employment to bring it into conformity with Article 9(3) of the Convention. Noting that the Government has been referring to the adoption of this regulation since 2007, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the regulation concerning the registers to be kept by employers is adopted without delay. It also once again requests the Government to provide a copy, once it has been adopted.

The Committee strongly encourages the Government to seek ILO technical assistance in its efforts to combat child labour.

Eswatini

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2002)

Previous comment

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy. Revision of the Employment Act. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes that the Employment Bill, 2022, was approved by the Attorney-General and that the legislative process for its adoption (via Cabinet and Parliament) is to follow. The Committee encourages the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that the Employment Bill, 2022, is adopted without delay, taking into consideration the comments made by the Committee. It requests the Government to provide a copy of the adopted Employment Act with its next report.

Article 2(1). Scope of application and labour inspection. Informal economy, including family undertakings. The Committee observes that, while the current Employment Act excludes domestic employment, agricultural undertakings and family undertakings from its scope of application, and therefore from the coverage of its minimum age provisions, the Employment Bill, 2022, removes these exclusions and sets a minimum age of 15 for employment or work for all workers, including those working in the informal economy. The Committee further notes the Government's information, in its report, regarding the capacity building workshops it is continuing to conduct for labour inspectors. In particular, the Committee notes that Eswatini has availed itself of ILO technical assistance to introduce the ILO Strategic Labour Compliance Planning on labour inspection, which seeks to address the challenges posed by the lack of resources and position labour administration systems to achieve more with less by maximizing available resources. Measures for improved labour inspection to better monitor child labour violations are also expected to be undertaken in the framework of the Action Programme on Combating Child Labour in Eswatini 2021-26 (APCCL). The Committee requests the Government to continue to take measures to strengthen the capacity of labour inspectors with a view to allowing them to better monitor and identify cases of child labour in the informal economy. It asks the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard, within the framework of the APCCL or otherwise, and the results achieved.

Article 2(3). Age of completion of compulsory education. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's statement that compulsory and free primary education does not necessarily end at 12 years, but that some children finish primary education later, in which case it remains free. The Committee reminds the Government that, regardless of the age when some children finish primary education in practice, the age of completion of compulsory education must, by law, be linked to the age of admission to employment or work (2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 369). Currently, under the Free Primary Education Act of 2010, education is free and compulsory only in the case of primary education, which normally ends when the child is 12 years of age (unless the child in question either dropped out of school or faced other difficulties in schooling, such as repetition).

The Committee notes, in this regard, the Government's indication that one of the goals of the Education Sector Policy of 2018 is the provision of an equitable and inclusive education system that affords all learners access to free and compulsory basic education and senior secondary education of high quality. Considering that compulsory education is one of the most effective means of combating child labour, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary steps to make education compulsory (and not only free) for students at the primary and lower secondary levels, up until the minimum age for admission to employment, which is 15 years in the Kingdom of Eswatini.

Article 3(2). Determination of hazardous work. The Committee notes with interest that, as opposed to the Employment Act, the Employment Bill, 2022, in section 9, provides a list of types of hazardous work that are prohibited to children and young persons under 18. Moreover, the Government indicates that Regulations adopted pursuant to the Children's Protection and Welfare Act, 2012, will soon be published which also will cover the types of hazardous work prohibited to children and young persons. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the adoption of the Employment Bill, 2022, in the very near future. It requests the Government to provide a copy of the Regulations adopted pursuant to the Children's Protection and Welfare Act, 2012.

Article 7. Light work. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's information that, under section 10 of the Employment Bill, 2022, children under the minimum age of 15 years can work in certain exceptional circumstances. According to subsections 1 and 3, a child (meaning a person under 15 years of age) may perform work in a family business carried on only by a parent or guardian of the child. This type of work may not be performed during school hours, during the night between 6 p.m. and 7 a.m., for more than six hours per day or for more than 33 hours per week.

The Committee recalls that under Article 7(1) of the Convention, the employment of children is permitted from 13 years of age, in light work which is not likely to be harmful to their health or development and is not such as to prejudice their attendance at school, their participation in vocational orientation or training programmes approved by the competent authority, or their capacity to benefit from the instruction received. Pursuant to Article 7(3) of the Convention, the competent authority shall determine the light work activities and prescribe the number of hours during which and the conditions in which such employment or work may be undertaken. The Committee recalls that in giving effect to Article 7(3) of the Convention, special attention should be given to several key indicators, including the strict limitation of the hours spent at work in a day and in a week, the prohibition of overtime, the granting of a minimum consecutive period of 12 hours' night rest, and the maintenance of satisfactory standards of safety and health and appropriate instruction and supervision (2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 396).

The Committee observes that there is no minimum age set for light work in family undertakings under section 10 of the Employment Bill, 2022 which allows children of any age to work for up to six hours per day or 33 hours per week. The Committee is of the view that children who work for up to six hours per day or 33 hours per week cannot effectively attend school, as the time needed for school work, rest and leisure could be considerably reduced, and that, therefore, this exception is not in accordance with the Convention. In this regard, the Committee observes that, in the context of the Integrated Labour Force Survey of 2021 conducted by the National Employment Statistics Office, children between the ages of 12 and 14 working for more than 14 hours per week are considered to be engaged in child labour (page 53). The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that section 10 of the Employment Bill, 2022 is modified to set a minimum age of 13 years for the performance of work in a family business carried on only by a parent or guardian of the child, and to reduce the number of hours per week that children between the ages of 13 and 15 are permitted to work in these circumstances in order to ensure that such work is not likely to be harmful to their health or development and is not such as to prejudice their attendance at school. In this regard, the Committee suggests that examples could be taken from the Labour Force Survey of 2021 and a maximum number of 14 hours per week established as a threshold. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard.

Application of the Convention in practice. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes that the Labour Force Survey 2021 reveals that 8.2 per cent of children of all ages are engaged in child labour in Eswatini, that most child labour occurs in rural areas (86.1 per cent) as opposed to urban areas (13.9 per cent), and that more boys than girls are engaged in child labour. According to the information reported in the document of the ACCPL, the typical kinds of work that children do in Eswatini include herding livestock, fetching water and firewood, ploughing, planting, weeding, cooking, cleaning, washing clothes and selling in kiosks. Noting that a significant number of children are engaged in child labour in Eswatini, the Committee requests the Government to strengthen its efforts to combat child labour. The Committee also requests the Government to continue providing updated statistical information on the situation of working children in Eswatini, including for example data on the number of children and young persons below the minimum age who are engaged in economic activities, and statistics relating to the nature, scope and trends of their work.

The Committee is raising another matter in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2002)

Previous comment

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes that section 10 of the Employment Bill prohibits the worst forms of child labour. Recognizing that the Employment Bill has been subjected to a thorough process of consultations, including with the ILO, the Government indicates that it hopes that the remaining legislative process will be undertaken without further needless delays. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the draft Employment Bill is adopted without delay. It once again requests the Government to supply a copy thereof, once it has been adopted.

Clause (a). Sale and trafficking of children. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's information, in its report, regarding investigations, prosecutions and convictions conducted under the People Trafficking and Smuggling (Prohibition) Act No. 11 of 2010. In particular, the Government investigated 14 suspected trafficking cases in 2018-19 – eight cases of forced labour, two sex trafficking cases, and three cases of an unknown type of exploitation – compared with 19 the previous year (2017). During the same year 2018-19 the Government initiated prosecutions of three alleged traffickers compared with one during the year 2017-18. The Committee further notes the Government's information that two cases of trafficking went to prosecution in 2020/2021, one internal and one transnational. One of the cases concerned the offences of kidnapping and sex trafficking of a girl from 2017 to 2019, for which the perpetrator was convicted to 55 years of imprisonment. The Committee notes, however, the Government's indication that resource constraints, both within the Government and NGOs providing prevention and protection services, have limited the levels of implementation of trafficking laws, investigations and prosecutions. The Committee encourages the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure the effective application of the People Trafficking and Smuggling (Prohibition) Act, and to provide information on the progress made in this regard. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the application in practice of the Act, including the number of infringements reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penalties applied for the sale and trafficking of children under 18 years of age.

Clause (b). Use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution, for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances. The Committee notes with satisfaction that the Sexual Offences and Domestic Violence Act (SODV Act) was adopted in 2018, which prohibits and penalizes sexual offences including, but not limited to: (i) commercial sexual exploitation, including of children (section 13); (ii) the procurement of or benefit from prostitution, including that of children (sections 15 and 16); (iii) the use of children for pornography (section 24); and (iv) the production of, benefit from, and distribution and possession of child pornography (sections 25 to 28). The Committee notes, however, that the United Nations Committee on the Rights of the Child, in its concluding observations of 22 October 2021, remained seriously concerned at the high prevalence of sexual exploitation and abuse of children and that few cases were reported, even though the perpetrators are often known to the victims (CRC/C/SWZ/CO/2-4, paragraph 40). The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of the sections mentioned above of the SODV Act, indicating the number of prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions applied for the offences related to prostitution and pornography involving children.

Article 4(1). Determination of hazardous types of work. With regard to the adoption of the list of hazardous types of work prohibited to children under 18 years of age, the Committee refers to its detailed comments under the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138).

Application of the Convention in practice. Following its previous comments, the Committee takes due note that the National Employment Statistics Unit has generated the 2021 Integrated Labour Survey, which covers issues of child employment. According to the Survey, the prevalence of child labour in the country is estimated to be at 8.2 per cent. Moreover, according to the document of the Action Programme on Combating Child Labour in Eswatini (APPCL), critical areas of child labour include domestic work, children engaged in subsistence and commercial agriculture, street children working as traders and hawkers, children working in the public and private transport sector, children engaged in scavenging and recycling, children working in formal and informal bars, children working in factories, children working in informal tourism industry and children working in the construction industry. Many of the children engaged in these forms of child labour carry out work that is hazardous and falls under the category of worst forms of child labour. Examples include livestock herding, street work and factory work under hazardous conditions. Noting the prevalence of child labour, including in various types of hazardous work, in Eswatini, the Committee urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to eliminate hazardous child labour. The Committee also requests the Government to continue providing information on the nature, extent, and trends of the worst forms of child labour, the number of children covered by the measures giving effect to the Convention, and information on the number and nature of infringements reported, investigations undertaken, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions applied. To the extent possible, all information provided should be disaggregated by age and gender.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Ethiopia

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1999)

Previous comment

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. The Committee previously noted that according to the 2015 Child Labour Survey results, the number of children aged 5–13 years engaged in child labour was estimated to be 13,139,991 with 41.7 per cent aged between 5 and 11 years.

In response to its previous comments concerning the measures undertaken for the elimination of child labour, the Committee notes the Government's information in its report that several policies and action plans for the elimination of child labour are in place notably, the National Social Protection Policy, the Education and Training Policy, the National Occupational Safety and Health Policy and the newly endorsed National Action Plan on the Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour (NAP-WFCL) 2021–2022. The Government indicates that the Tripartite Steering Committee undertook the evaluation of the 2019–2020 national action plan implementation report and identified critical challenges and crafted remedial measures. In addition, a national Tripartite plus Steering Committee comprising the Federal Government agencies, employers' and workers' organizations and civic societies have been established to execute, follow-up, monitor and evaluate the NAP 2021–22.

The Committee further notes from the Government's report under the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) that a number of projects are being implemented in collaboration with CARE-Ethiopia, the Freedom Fund, the ILO-Ethiopia Office, the Confederation of Ethiopian Trade Unions (CETU), and GIZ (German Agency for International Cooperation for sustainable development) with the objective of preventing and reducing the prevalence of child labour in Ethiopia.

The Committee however notes from the UNICEF Policy Brief 2020: Child labour and the Youth Market in Ethiopia that despite several initiatives taken by the Government and civil society to combat child labour, the incidence of the phenomenon remains high in Ethiopia with approximately 43 per cent of children aged 5–17 engaged in child labour. The Committee further notes from the UNICEF report entitled A Review of Child Sensitivity in Social Policies in Ethiopia, December 2021 that a recent study on child poverty in Ethiopia estimates that 36 million of its 41 million children are multidimensionally poor. The impact of a rise in poverty and extreme poverty, coupled with social norms that normalize child labour to some extent, make households far more likely to resort to child labour to cope with job losses associated with COVID-19. While noting the measures taken by the Government, the Committee expresses its concern at the significant number of children who are involved in and are at risk of being involved in child labour. The Committee therefore urges the Government to intensify its efforts to address the situation of children engaged in child labour, and to ensure the progressive elimination of child labour. It requests the Government to provide specific information on the concrete measures taken in this regard, including within the framework of the NAP 2021-22 and the results achieved.

Article 2(1). Scope of application and labour inspection. The Committee had previously noted that 89.4 per cent of the children engaged in child labour worked in the agricultural, forestry and fishing sectors and in wholesale and retail trade sector and the majority of children performing economic activities were working as unpaid family workers (95.6 per cent).

The Committee notes that the new Labour Law Proclamation No. 1156 of 2019, which prohibits the employment of children under 15 years, applies only to employment relations based on a contract of employment that exists between a worker and an employer (section 3). The Committee notes the Government's information that in order to monitor child labour in the informal economy, the newly structured labour administration body of the Ministry of Labour and Skills has developed a new strategy to complement the labour advisory services of the labour inspection system. Accordingly, MOU's were signed with key Ministries including the Ministry of Health and Agriculture which has access to all households in the informal sector and uses its extension worker service to create public awareness and to detect and inform cases of child labour to the law enforcement bodies. The Government also indicates that a complaint handling mechanism has been established for filing and responding to complaints about child labour. The labour inspection service closely works with the community police, trade unions, community-based organization, women's associations, and non-governmental organizations to receive complaints and information related to child labour and exploitation. In addition, the labour inspection services have been enhanced by increasing the number of labour inspectors from 441 in 2019 to 637 in 2021 and their annual labour inspection visits raised from 39,000 in 2019 to 43,000 in 2021. Newly assigned labour inspectors were provided training on conducting inspections, particularly of child labour. Moreover, in coordination with the ILO Decent Work Country Programme, eight motor bikes and nine digital monitoring equipments were distributed to labour inspectors in six regions based on their activity. The Government indicates in its report under Convention No. 182 that in 2020 a total of 58,006 workplace inspections were carried out including inspections of child labour in enterprises. Investigation reports on 13,981 visited establishments notified that the minimum age for admission to employment (15 years) should be respected and strict screening mechanisms to determine the age of applicant need to be followed. The Committee requests the Government to continue to strengthen the functioning of the labour inspection system to enable it to effectively monitor and detect cases of child labour, including children working on their own account as well as in agriculture and the informal economy and to provide information on the measures taken in this regard. The Committee also requests the Government to provide statistical information on the number and nature of violations of child labour detected through the new strategy developed within the labour advisory services of the labour inspection system as well as the number of complaints related to child labour and exploitation received and handled by the Complaints Handling Mechanism within the labour inspection service.

Article 2(2). Raising the minimum age for admission to employment or work. The Committee previously noted the Government's indication that the revised Labour Law raises the minimum working age limit of young persons from 14 to 15 years. The Committee accordingly notes with satisfaction that section 89(2) of the Labour Proclamation No. 1156 of 2019 prohibits the employment of persons under 15 years of age. The Committee once again requests the Government to consider the possibility of sending a new declaration under Article 2(2) of the Convention thereby notifying the Director-General of the ILO that it has raised the minimum age that it had previously specified.

Article 2(3). Age of completion of compulsory schooling. With regard to its previous comments, concerning making education compulsory up to the minimum age of admission to employment, the Committee notes the Government's indication that it is currently engaged in drafting legislation and conducting public discussions on making primary education compulsory. The Committee also notes the Government's information that the Education Policy provides for free primary education and that the Government is committed to achieving universal and quality primary education for all school age children through various programmes, including the school feeding programme, provision of uniform and other educational materials for children, mobile schooling for children from pastoralist areas, and the expansion of school facilities and advocacy works. Recalling that compulsory education is one of the most effective means of combating child labour, the Committee expresses the firm hope that the Government will take the necessary measures to make education compulsory up to the minimum age for admission to employment or work in accordance with Article 2(3) of the Convention.

Article 3. Determination of hazardous work. The Committee notes that the Government has not provided any information as requested by the Committee in its previous comments but indicates that the data will be collected from the regional and city labour inspection offices.

The Committee notes the Government's information that a new Directive No. 813/2021, restating the hazardous activities prohibited to young workers, has been issued in order to protect young workers from serious occupational injuries or damage to their health in the course of their work and that the federal and regional labour inspection service is currently enforcing this directive across the country. The Committee requests the Government to provide a copy of Directive No. 813 of 2021 and to provide information on its application in practice, indicating the number and nature of violations detected and penalties imposed.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2003)

Previous comment

Articles 3(a) and 7(1) of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour and penalties. Sale and trafficking of children. In reply to its previous comments concerning the application in practice of the Anti-trafficking Proclamation No.909/2015, the Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that Proclamation No. 909 of 2015 has been repealed and replaced by a new Prevention and Suppression of Trafficking in Persons and Smuggling of Persons Proclamation (Prevention and Suppression of TIP-SOP Proclamation No. 1178/2020). The Committee notes with interest the Government's statement that this new Proclamation is more efficient in crime prevention, holding perpetrators accountable, and contains provisions for protecting and rehabilitating victims. Moreover, it provides for undertaking activities that reach segments of society vulnerable to the crimes taking into consideration the age, sex and special needs of victims through facilitating international cooperation.

The Committee notes that section 4 of the Prevention and Suppression of TIP-SOP Proclamation No. 1178/ 2020 makes it an aggravating circumstance if the victim of any of the crimes under this Act is a child and provides for a penalty of rigorous imprisonment from ten to twenty years and a fine from 30,000 to 100,000 Birr (approximately US$571 to US$1,905). Moreover, smuggling of a child is punishable with rigorous imprisonment from seven to fifteen years and fine from 20,000 to 100,000 Birr. Section 33 of the Prevention and Suppression of TIP-SOP Proclamation No. 1178/2020 provides for the establishment of the National Council to coordinate the prevention and control of the crimes related to trafficking, smuggling and unlawful sending of persons abroad for work. However, the Government indicates that statistical information on the number and nature of offences, investigations, prosecutions and penal sanctions related to trafficking of children is impossible to find due to weak and irregular reporting system at all levels. The Committee urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure the effective application of the Prevention and Suppression of TIP-SOP Proclamation No. 1178 of 2020 and to take the necessary measures to ensure that thorough investigations and prosecutions of persons who engage in the sale and trafficking of children are carried out and that effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice. It requests the Government to take the necessary measures to collect data, including statistics on the number and nature of offences reported, investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions imposed with regard to the trafficking of children under 18 years and to provide information in this regard.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (a). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour. Ensuring access to free basic education. The Committee notes that according to the UNICEF Ethiopia Humanitarian Situation report of June 2022, over 2.9 million children (17 per cent of the school age children) across Ethiopia remain out of school, including 2.53 million due to conflict and 401,000 due to drought. Almost 50 per cent of those out of school children are entering their third year without any access to learning, heightening the risk of a lost generation for children in northern Ethiopia. Based on school damage assessments in May, more than 8,660 schools across Ethiopia are fully or partially damaged, 70 per cent of which were in Afar, Amhara and Tigray due to the North Ethiopia conflict. The Committee also notes that the UNESCO estimates for 2020 indicates a net enrolment rate of 87.2 per cent at the primary level. While acknowledging the difficult situation prevailing in the country, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to improve the operation of the education system and to facilitate access to free basic education to all children, particularly in the zones affected by the conflict. It requests the Government to provide information on the concrete measures taken in this regard and the results achieved, in particular concerning the increase in school enrolment and completion rates and reduction in the school drop-out rates in primary and secondary education.

Clauses (a) and (b). Prevention and direct assistance for the rehabilitation and social integration. Trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children. The Committee notes that sections 23 and 24 of the Prevention and Suppression of TIP-SOP Proclamation No. 1178/2020 provides for the protection, rehabilitation and compensation of victims of trafficking. The Government indicates that the Ministry of Women and Social Affairs conducted awareness raising and advocacy programmes on prevention of trafficking to over 5.6 million people; conducted anti-trafficking community conversation sessions in 20,732 villages; and established 1,617 school anti-trafficking clubs to advocate and conduct peer education programmes.

The Committee notes that the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination Against Women (CEDAW), in its concluding observations of 2019, expressed concern at the limited data on trafficking in women and girls and at the lack of data on the extent of exploitation of prostitution of women and girls in the State party; and at the lack of information on programmes implemented for the benefit and protection of women and girls who are victims of trafficking and exploitation of prostitution (CEDAW/C/ETH/CO/8, paragraph 25). The Committee urges the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to prevent children from becoming victims of trafficking and prostitution and to remove child victims from these worst forms of child labour and ensure their rehabilitation and social integration. It requests the Government to provide information on the protection and rehabilitation measures taken for child victims of trafficking pursuant to sections 23 and 24 of the Prevention and Suppression of TIP-SOP Proclamation No. 1178/2020.

Clause (d). Identifying and reaching out to children at special risk. 1. Child orphans of HIV/AIDS and other vulnerable children (OVCs). Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's information that various guidelines to identify and reach out to children at special risk, in particular orphans and OVC were developed including: (i) Case Management guidelines; (ii) the Service Linkage and Referral guideline; (iii) the Urban Destitute Implementation Manual; (iv) the Service Provision Standard Guideline; and (v) the Care and Support Guideline for AIDS orphans. The Government indicates that the Federal HIV/AIDS Prevention and Control Office is the focal institution to nationally coordinate and guide the social protection support based on the implementation guidelines, especially to children orphaned by HIV/AIDS. Support for HIV/AIDS orphans are regularly assisted by funds to combat HIV, in addition to engaging families on income generating activities. It notes that the Ministry of Women and Social Affairs, in cooperation with relevant NGOs, civil society, religious and community-based organizations developed and implemented OVC care and support programmes in 2020–21 for an estimated 1,193,448 beneficiaries including children under difficult circumstances. During this period, 20,121 vulnerable children received institutional services and 3,883 children were integrated with their families. The Committee observes that, according to estimates made by UNAIDS in 2021, approximately 280,000 children aged 0 to 17 years are orphans due to HIV/AIDS in Ethiopia. Recalling that HIV/AIDS orphans and OVCs are at an increased risk of being engaged in the worst forms of child labour, the Committee urges the Government to continue its efforts to ensure that HIV/AIDS orphans and OVCs are protected from the worst forms of child labour. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the specific measures taken in this respect and on the results achieved.

Clause (e). Special situation of girls. Domestic work. The Committee previously noted that there were approximately 6,500–7,500 child domestic workers in Addis Ababa.

The Committee notes the Government's information that some preliminary studies conducted on domestic work revealed that child domestic workers are subjected to exploitation, with long working hours for minimal pay and modest shelter and food as well as vulnerability to physical and sexual abuse.

Recognizing the situation of child domestic workers in major urban centres, the Confederation of Ethiopia Trade Unions (CETU) in collaboration with NGO's initiated a campaign to combat exploitative and abusive child domestic work and to ratify Convention No. 189 on domestic work. The Government also refers to section 3(c) of the Labour Proclamation No.1156 of 2019 which states that the Council of Ministers shall issue regulations governing conditions of work applicable to the domestic service. The Committee requests the Government to indicate whether any regulations on conditions of work for the domestic service have been issued pursuant to section 3(c) of the Labour Proclamation No. 1156/2019 and, if so, whether such regulations have addressed or contemplate addressing child domestic workers. It requests the Government to take immediate and effective measures to protect child domestic workers, particularly girls, from engaging in exploitative domestic work, and to report on the efforts of the labour inspectorate in this regard. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the effective and time-bound measures taken in this regard and on the results achieved.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Gabon

Medical Examination of Young Persons (Underground Work) Convention, 1965 (No. 124) (ratification: 1968)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Article 2(1) of the Convention. Medical examination of persons under 21 years of age prior to underground work in mines. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that under section 207 of the Labour Code, the initial medical examination prior to recruitment was only compulsory for children under 18 years of age and not, as envisaged by the Convention, for persons under 21 years of age. The Government gave an undertaking to take into account the requirement to make the initial medical examination prior to recruitment compulsory for workers under 21 years of age in the framework of the adoption of a draft Decree to update Order No. 3773 of 25 March 1954 on the organization and operation of medical services. It also noted that under section 178 of the Labour Code, as amended by Ordinance No. 018/PR/2010 of 25 February 2010, labour inspectors may require a medical examination for fitness for employment of children and young persons up to the age of 18 years and up to the age of 21 years for types of work which involve high health risks. The Committee nevertheless observed that medical examination prior to recruitment for young persons of under 21 years of age is still not compulsory. The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that section 178 of the Labour Code was amended by Ordinance No. 018/PR/2010 of 25 February 2010. Nevertheless, the Committee notes that the new section 178, which authorizes labour inspectors to require a medical examination until 18 years of age, or until 21 years for types of work that involve high health risks, still does not make medical examinations prior to recruitment compulsory. The Committee recalls that Article 2(1) of the Convention provides that a thorough medical examination for fitness of employment shall be required for work underground in mines for persons under 21 years of age. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures to give full effect to this provision of the Convention, and to provide information on any new developments in this regard.

Article 3(2). X-ray film of the lungs. The Committee has been emphasizing for a number of years that the national legislation in Gabon does not contain any provision requiring an X-ray film of the lungs on the occasion of the initial medical examination and it expressed the hope that the Government would envisage the inclusion in the national legislation of a provision to this effect. The Committee has subsequently noted that the draft Decree to update Order No. 3773 of 25 March 1954 on the organization and operation of medical services would take into account the requirement of an X-ray film of the lungs during the initial medical examination and also, if considered necessary from a medical point of view, during re-examinations. The Committee notes the Government's indication that there have been no further developments, but that it reiterates its commitment to taking measures to this effect. Recalling that it has been raising this matter for nearly 30 years, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that an X-ray film of the lungs is required during the initial medical examination of any person under 21 years of age with a view to their employment or work in underground mines and, if considered necessary from a medical point of view, during subsequent re-examinations. In this respect, it expresses the firm hope that the draft Decree will be adopted in the near future and requests the Government to continue providing information in this respect.

Article 4(4) and (5). Records of persons who are employed or work underground. In its previous comments, the Committee noted General Order No. 3018 of 29 September 1953, the provisions of which do not meet all the requirements of Article 4(4) and (5) of the Convention. However, the Government indicated that it would introduce provisions in conformity with Article 4 of the Convention when the time came to update General Order No. 3018. The Committee notes that, according to the Government's report, General Order No. 3018 has not yet been amended, but that the Government is working to bring its provisions into conformity with the Convention. The Committee therefore requests the Government to take the necessary measures in the near future to bring General Order No. 3018 of 29 September 1953 into conformity with the Convention.

Article 5. General policy for the implementation of the Convention. The Committee previously noted that section 251 of the Labour Code provides for the establishment of an advisory committee on occupational safety and health, the composition and operation of which are determined by Order No. 000808/MTRHFP/SG/IGHMT of the Minister of Labour. In this respect, the Committee noted that the technical advisory committee on occupational safety and health had not yet been established due to a problem relating to the representativity of trade unions.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the problem relating to the representativity of trade unions described in the previous report persists, due to the absence of elections, and that it has therefore not yet been possible in practice to establish the technical advisory committee. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on any progress made in this respect.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Article 2(1) of the Convention. Scope of application and minimum age for admission to employment or work. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that, under section 177 of the Labour Code of Gabon of 1994 as amended by Ordinance No. 018/PR/2010 of 25 February 2010, children may not be employed in any enterprise before the age of 16 years. The Committee also observed that, under the terms of section 1, the Labour Code only governs the employment relationship between workers and employers, and between employers or their representatives and apprentices and trainees placed under their authority. It therefore appears that the Labour Code and the provisions concerning the minimum age for admission to employment or work do not apply to work performed outside a formal employment relationship, as in the case of children working on their own account or those working in the informal economy.

The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that the Committee's comments will be taken into account in the draft revision of the Labour Code. It also notes the Government's indications that it plans to extend the social coverage of the National Health Insurance and Social Guarantee Fund (CNAMGS) to children working in the informal economy. It notes that, under section 2 of Decree No. 0651/PR/MTEPS of 13 April 2011 establishing individual exceptions to the minimum age for admission to employment in Gabon, individual exceptions to the minimum age for admission to employment, which is fixed at 16 years, can be granted for work taking place in establishments where only family members are employed under the authority of the father, mother or guardian. The Committee reminds the Government that the Convention applies to all sectors of economic activity and covers all forms of employment and work, whether or not these are governed by a contractual employment relationship, including work in a family enterprise. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the draft amendments to the Labour Code will be adopted in the very near future, so that all children under 16 years of age who engage in economic activities outside a formal employment relationship, particularly children who work in the informal economy, including in a family enterprise, benefit from the protection afforded by the Convention. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on progress made in this respect and to send a copy of the draft amendments to the Labour Code. It also requests the Government to provide information on progress regarding social coverage through the CNAMGS of children working in the informal economy.

Article 3(1) and (2). Minimum age for admission to hazardous types of work and determination of such types of work. The Committee noted previously that, under section 177 of the Labour Code of 1994 as amended by Ordinance No. 018/PR/2010 of 25 February 2010, children under 18 years of age may not be employed in types of work considered to constitute the worst forms of child labour, particularly work which, by its nature or the circumstances in which it is carried out, is likely to jeopardize the health, safety or morals of young persons. The Committee also noted that the list of types of work and the categories of enterprises prohibited for young persons, and the age limit to which this prohibition applies, is determined by Decree No. 275 of 5 November 1962, but that the list of hazardous types of work was being revised.

The Committee notes with satisfaction the adoption of Decree No. 0023/PR/MEEDD of 16 January 2013 determining the nature of the worst forms of labour and the categories of enterprises prohibited for children under 18 years of age, pursuant to section 177 of the Labour Code. Section 2 of the Decree prohibits the employment of children under 18 years of age in certain types of work such as: work in abattoirs and tanneries; extraction of minerals, waste, materials and debris in mines and quarries; driving of motor vehicles and mechanical equipment; and work in construction, except for finishing work that does not require the use of scaffolding. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of Decree No. 0023/PR/MEEDD, including the number and nature of infringements detected relating to the performance of hazardous work which is prohibited for children under 18 years of age, and the penalties imposed.

Article 9(1). Penalties and labour inspection. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that section 195 of the Labour Code provides that any person who violates the provisions of section 177, concerning the minimum age for admission to employment or work, shall be liable to a fine and/or imprisonment of two to six months. Any person violating section 177(3), concerning hazardous work, shall be liable to a fine and five years' imprisonment without the possibility of a suspended sentence. Each of these penalties is doubled for repeat offences. The Committee also noted that, under section 235 of the Labour Code, labour inspectors are responsible for reporting violations of the laws and regulations relating to labour, employment, occupational safety and health, and social security. The Committee also noted with concern the Government's indication that no penalties had yet been imposed in this regard, even though the Committee on the Rights of the Child, in its concluding observations of 2016, had highlighted the large number of children working in sand quarries and gargotes (low-quality restaurants) and on taxis and buses. It further noted, in its comments on the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182), that the labour inspectorate had not recorded any offences involving child labour.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that the labour inspection services do not have the necessary resources to investigate child labour properly but that in 2017, with support from partners including UNICEF, a pilot phase of capacity-building for inspectors was launched, involving training for labour inspectors relating to the exploitation of child labour. The Government explains that the pilot phase of capacity-building for labour inspectors is due to be extended to the whole country to enable effective implementation of the provisions of the Convention. However, the Committee notes that the Government still provides no details of any convictions of offenders under section 177 of the Labour Code. The Committee requests the Government to renew its capacity-building efforts for labour inspectors in order to ensure that the regulations providing for penalties for violations of section 177 of the Labour Code are implemented effectively. In this regard, it requests the Government to report on the results of this capacity-building in terms of the numbers of labour inspectors and of inspections with a focus on child labour, including hazardous work. It also requests the Government to provide information on the application of these penalties in practice, indicating the number and nature of violations reported and penalties imposed and, where possible, to provide extracts from labour inspectors' reports.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Articles 3(a) and 7(1) of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Sale and trafficking of children. Penalties. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that a number of children, particularly girls, are victims of internal and cross-border trafficking for the purposes of work as domestic servants or in the country's markets. Children from Benin, Burkina Faso, Cameroon, Guinea, Niger, Nigeria and Togo are victims of trafficking to Gabon. The Committee emphasized that, despite the conformity of the national legislation on the sale and trafficking of children (in particular Act No. 09/2004) with the Convention, and even though several institutions have an operational mandate in this field, the legislation is still not enforced and coordination is weak. Moreover, the Committee noted with concern that, even though prosecutions had been initiated against suspected traffickers of children, no ruling had yet been handed down, even though the United Nations Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) had stated that 700 child victims of trafficking had been identified and repatriated to their countries of origin. The Committee therefore asked the Government to take steps to ensure the in-depth investigation and robust prosecution of persons who engage in the sale and trafficking of children under 18 years of age.

The Committee notes the Government's statement in its report that Act No. 09/2004 concerning the prevention and combating of trafficking of children has been revised following the national symposium on combating the trafficking of children held in June 2016. The Committee also notes the Government's indications that any persons violating the laws and regulations relating to the sale and trafficking of children are liable to severe punishment under the law in the form of fines or imprisonment. The Government indicates that prosecutions have been initiated against eight persons in cases involving the forced labour of children. It also states that in 2016 officers from the immigration control department were given training in identification and investigation methods in trafficking cases. The Committee also notes the Government's indication, in its report relating to the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138), that deadlines for the courts to hand down judgments (except for administrative tribunal decisions) are unknown and it recognizes the ineffectiveness of the Gabonese justice system. It indicates that judicial prosecutions are limited, owing to a lack of financial resources at the High Court of Justice, which deals with trafficking cases but cannot hold regular sessions. The Government further indicates that data on the repression of trafficking is limited, in particular because of a lack of communication between ministries. The Government also states that reports have indicated that corruption and complicity of public officials in trafficking cases remain a source of serious concern. It indicates that judges are at risk of being corrupted by suspected traffickers and that they often delay or abandon cases which have been opened against traffickers.

The Committee further notes that, according to the UNICEF annual report for 2017, the trafficking of children is constantly increasing because of the lack of effective and comprehensive enforcement of the laws against the trafficking and exploitation of children. The Committee notes that the August 2017 report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Human Rights (UNHCHR), in the context of the universal periodic review, emphasizes that the Special Rapporteur on trafficking expressed concern at the trafficking of women and girls for sexual exploitation and prostitution (A/HRC/WG.6/28/GAB/2, paragraph 50). The Committee is therefore bound to note with deep concern the lack of convictions handed down for traffickers of children, which perpetuates the situation of impunity that appears to exist in the country. Recalling that penalties are only effective if they are actually enforced, the Committee urges the Government to take the necessary steps without delay to ensure the thorough investigation and robust prosecution of perpetrators of the sale and trafficking of children, including government officials suspected of complicity and corruption, and to ensure that penalties constituting an adequate deterrent are imposed on them. Further, recalling that it is the responsibility of the State to provide the judicial system with the means to function, as well as to ensure effective communication between the ministries, the Committee also requests the Government to take the necessary steps to facilitate communication between ministries and to strengthen the capacities of the High Court of Justice, including its ability to hand down judgments within a reasonable time. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the application of provisions relating to this worst form of child labour, including statistics on the number of convictions handed down and the criminal penalties imposed.

Clauses (b) and (c). Use, procuring or offering of a child for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances, or for illicit activities. The Committee previously urged the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that the use, procuring or offering of a child under 18 years of age for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances, or for illicit activities, including the production and trafficking of drugs, are explicitly prohibited in the national legislation.

The Committee notes with satisfaction that Decree No. 0023/PR/MEEDD of 16 January 2013, determining the nature of the worst forms of labour and the categories of enterprises prohibited for children under 18 years of age, defines the “use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution, for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances” and “for illicit activities including the production and trafficking of drugs as defined by the relevant international conventions” as the worst forms of child labour. It notes that this Decree was adopted pursuant to section 177 of the Labour Code. The Committee observes that section 195 of the Labour Code provides that any person who violates the provisions of section 177(3), concerning the worst forms of child labour, which refers to the above-mentioned Decree, shall be liable to a fine of 5 million CFA francs (US$8,429) and five years’ imprisonment without the possibility of a suspended sentence. Each of these penalties is doubled for repeat offences. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the application in practice of this new Decree, including the number and nature of violations detected in relation to the use, procuring or offering of a child for the production of pornography, for pornographic performances or for illicit activities, including the production and trafficking of drugs.

Articles 5 and 6. Monitoring mechanisms and programmes of action. 1. Council to Prevent and Combat the Trafficking of Children and the Monitoring Committee. The Committee previously noted that the Council to Prevent and Combat the Trafficking of Children is an administrative authority attached to the Ministry of Human Rights. In practice, monitoring of the phenomenon of trafficking is ensured by a monitoring committee and several watchdog committees, which are responsible for monitoring and combating the trafficking of children for exploitation within the country. The Committee asked the Government to intensify its efforts to strengthen the capacity of the watchdog committees and their coordination with the Council to Prevent and Combat the Trafficking of Children and the monitoring committee with a view to ensuring the enforcement of the national legislation against trafficking in children.

The Committee notes the Government’s announcement that the Council to Prevent and Combat the Trafficking of Children became operational in December 2017. The Government indicates that the watchdog committees have conducted information campaigns on the possibility of assistance for victims and on the existence of penalties for traffickers of children, aimed at having a deterrent effect. The Government also highlights the presence of an Inter-Ministerial Committee to Combat the Trafficking of Children, and also the formulation and adoption of a “Plan of action against the trafficking of children 2016–17”. The Committee notes that, according to information from the ILO office in Yaoundé, the above-mentioned action plan for 2016–17 has not been renewed. While noting the measures taken by the Government, the Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to ensure that the watchdog committees have the capacity to detect situations where children under 18 years of age are victims of trafficking. It requests the Government to provide information on the number of child victims of trafficking who have been identified, and on the results of the “Plan of action against the trafficking of children 2016–17”, including the activities undertaken. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the recent activities of the Council to Prevent and Combat the Trafficking of Children and on the role of the Inter-Ministerial Committee to Combat the Trafficking of Children.

2. Labour inspection. With regard to labour inspection, the Committee refers to its detailed comments on the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138).

Article 7(2) of the Convention. Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (b). Removing children from the worst forms of child labour and ensuring their rehabilitation and social integration. Reception centres and medical and social assistance for child victims of trafficking. The Committee previously noted that the country has four reception centres where children removed from a situation of exploitation receive an initial medical examination a few days after their placement in a centre. In addition to their rehabilitation and social integration, children are supervised by specialist teachers and psychologists, and benefit from social and educational activity programmes and administrative and legal support. The Committee also noted that during their stay in the centres school-age children removed from trafficking are enrolled free of charge in state schools, while those who are no longer of school age are enrolled in literacy centres.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that in 2015 a total of 15 child victims of trafficking for forced labour were identified and directed to the social services. The Government explains that a number of structures, including NGOs, religious authorities and UNICEF, provide support for the operations of the reception centres. The Committee notes that, according to the UNICEF annual report for 2017, a number of child protection structures, including social workers and civil society organizations, have received training, including with regard to providing care for victims of abuse, violence, and exploitation. It also observes that the Government, in its report to the United Nations Human Rights Council in August 2017 in the context of the Universal Periodic Review, indicates that in 2014 and 2015 the monitoring committee recorded more than 750 children who had been removed from trafficking circuits and reintegrated locally or repatriated to their countries of origin (Benin, Togo and Nigeria) (A/HRC/WG.6/28/GAB/1, paragraph 42). While noting the large number of children removed from trafficking circuits, the Committee recalls the importance of measures for the rehabilitation and social integration of child victims of trafficking and requests the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that all children withdrawn from trafficking are effectively rehabilitated and integrated in society. The Committee also requests the Government to provide information on the number of children under 18 years of age who have actually been removed from this worst form of child labour and placed in reception centres.

Article 8. International cooperation. The Committee noted previously that the Government had signed the Multilateral Regional Cooperation Agreement against the trafficking of persons (especially women and children) in West and Central Africa in July 2006 and that a bilateral agreement against trafficking in children was being negotiated with Benin. It noted that, according to the Special Rapporteur, with a maritime border of over 800 kilometres and a porous frontier with three countries, Gabon was in need of sound cooperation with its neighbours to combat the phenomenon of trafficking. However, only one bilateral agreement with Benin had been concluded.

The Committee notes the Government's indications that bilateral cooperation between Gabon and Togo relating to the prevention and combating of child migration for cross-border trafficking and economic exploitation has been strengthened and has enabled the development of a draft bilateral agreement for combating the cross-border trafficking of children and also the repatriation and reintegration of 30 Togolese girls who were victims of trafficking to Gabon. The Government also indicates that it has cooperated with the Economic Community of Central African States and with Senegal, as part of action against the trafficking of children. The Committee notes that, according to the August 2017 report of the UNHCHR, the Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) expressed concern at the lack of bilateral agreements between Gabon and countries of origin of child victims of trafficking, in particular Mali, Nigeria and Togo (A/HRC/WG.6/28/GAB/2, paragraph 29). The Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to ensure that bilateral agreements on trafficking in persons are concluded with neighbouring countries in the very near future, particularly with a view to boosting the numbers of border police officers. It requests the Government to provide information on progress made in this respect.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Ghana

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2011)

Previous comment

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's information in its report that it has implemented several concrete measures within the framework of the National Plan of Action – Phase II on Elimination of the Worst Forms of Child Labour 2017–21 (NPA2), including: (i) sensitization and awareness-raising (over 2 million people reached in 2021); (ii) capacity-building of various stakeholders, including Community Child Protection Committees (CCPCs), law enforcement agencies, parents, teachers and children (over 150,000 beneficiaries in 2021); and (iii) measures aimed at improving school enrolment and retention. The review of the NPA2, which has elapsed, has not yet been completed, and there are discussions on the possibility of either extending its implementation or elaborating a new plan of action. The Committee requests the Government to take measures to ensure that the NPA2 is either extended or that a new plan of action is elaborated. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress achieved and on the impact of the new or revised plan of action on the progressive elimination of child labour. Finally, the Committee once again requests the Government to continue to provide information on the application of the Convention in practice, in particular up-to-date statistical data on the number of children and young persons below the minimum age of 15 who are engaged in child labour, and information on the nature, scope and trends of their work. To the extent possible, this information should be disaggregated by age and gender.

Article 3(1) and (2). Minimum age for admission to hazardous work and determination of hazardous work. With regard to the determination and adoption of the list of hazardous types of work prohibited to children under the age of 18 years, the Committee refers to its detailed comments under the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182).

Article 7(3). Determination of light work activities. The Committee notes the Government's information that the list of light work activities permitted to young persons between the ages of 13 and 15 is included in the new Hazardous Activities Framework (HAF), which will be submitted as a legislative instrument to Parliament for consideration. The Committee expresses the firm hope that the list of types of light work activities and the conditions of light work permitted for young persons between the ages of 13 and 15, as required by Article 7(3) of the Convention, are duly integrated into the new HAF, and requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the HAF is adopted into law in the near future. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard, as well as a copy of the new HAF, once adopted.

Labour inspectorate. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes that the International Trade Unions Confederation, in a communication dated 1 September 2022 and submitted to the Committee for examination of Ghana's application of the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182), observes that the labour inspection continues to be underfinanced and insufficiently manned, and that inspectors do not have adequate training and capacity to eliminate child labour issues.

In this regard, the Committee takes note of the Government's information regarding the measures taken to reinforce the Labour Inspectorate. In particular, the Committee notes that the functioning and capacity of the Labour Inspectorate are strengthened through the Ghana Employment and Social Protection (GESP) project, in the framework of which the resources of the Labour Inspectorate were strengthened and labour inspectors were trained in various skills required to improve their operations and reporting, including on how to identify child labourers and refer them to the Department of Social Welfare for follow-up action. The Government indicates that 75 labour inspectors received additional training on inspections in the informal sector leading to 520 inspections, that a data collection exercise on these inspections began this year, and that the statistics collected will be communicated to the Committee in subsequent reports. Furthermore, the Committee notes the Government's information, under Convention No. 182, according to which the Trade for Decent Work (T4DW) project of the European Union, supported the training of new labour officers and representatives of the office of the Attorney-General on the prosecution of child labour cases and other violations at the workplace. The Committee strongly encourages the Government to continue strengthening the capacity and functioning of the Labour Inspectorate, in order to ensure the effective supervision of the provisions giving effect to the Convention and to expand the reach of the labour inspection services to the informal economy. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard and on the results achieved, including the data collected through the labour inspections that have been conducted in the informal sector and the number of prosecutions of child labour cases facilitated through the support of the T4DW project.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2000)

Previous comment

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 1 September 2022, as well as the Government's report. It notes that the ILO Technical Advisory Mission (TAM), requested by the Committee in its previous comments, took place in April 2022.

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). All forms of slavery and practices similar to slavery. Sale and trafficking of children. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the ITUC's observation that Ghana continues to be a source, transit and destination country for trafficking of persons, in particular the trafficking of boys and girls for labour and sexual exploitation, and that children are trafficked for exploitation in domestic servitude, the cocoa industry and exploited in harmful practices such as the trokosi system of servitude and debt bondage. The ITUC observes that the number of investigations, prosecutions and convictions for cases of trafficking are insufficient in comparison to the scale and persistence of the worst forms of child labour in the country. The Committee further notes that, according to the report of the ILO TAM, the Worker representatives of the General Agricultural Workers Union indicated that one of its key conclusions of a mapping that was undertaken on issues of forced labour and trafficking was the low level of prosecutions in comparison with the number of arrests. Several representatives of the Government, Workers and Employers indicated that this was partly due to the inability to obtain sufficient evidence, but also to the level of capacity of law enforcement officials to address the issue of trafficking even when it is brought to their attention.

The Committee notes the Government's information, in its report, that from October 2021 to July 2022, 22 prosecutions were initiated and a total of 10 convictions involving 16 offenders were handed down. The Government provides information on the penalties applied, including several prison sentences, hard labour, and fines. While taking due note of this information, the Committee observes that the numbers appear to remain low in light of the prevalence of the issue.

In this regard, the Committee takes note of the Government's information regarding the multiple measures taken to strengthen the capacity of the law enforcement officials, including the Ghana Police Service, the Anti-Human Trafficking Unit (AHTU), the Anti-Human Smuggling and Trafficking in Persons Unit of the Ghana Immigration Service (AHSTIPU), and prosecutors and judges. In addition, the Ghana Police Service has put in place several measures to further intensify its efforts in the fight against trafficking in persons, including the training of border officers on the identification of victims of trafficking; the establishment of anti-trafficking desk offices at the regional and district offices to assist in identifying child labour and child trafficking cases; and the confiscation of the properties of perpetrators and their prosecution in civil proceedings, alongside criminal proceedings. Furthermore, the Committee notes that one of the four main axes of the new National Plan of Action for the Elimination of Trafficking in Ghana (NPA) 2022–26, is to improve the effectiveness of prosecution efforts for trafficking/strengthen the legal and regulatory framework to combat trafficking, and that many actions are planned in this regard. The Committee therefore strongly encourages the Government to pursue its efforts to strengthen the capacity of the law enforcement officials, including in the framework of the NPA 2022–26, so as to ensure that thorough investigations and prosecutions of persons who engage in the sale and trafficking of children are carried out and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken in this regard as well as specific information on the number of prosecutions, convictions and specific penalties applied on persons found guilty of trafficking children under 18 years of age.

Clause (d) and Article 7(2)(a) and (b). Hazardous work in cocoa farming and preventing children from being engaged in and removing them from such hazardous work. Following its previous comments, the Committee takes note of the ITUC's observations that an estimated 10 per cent of children working on cocoa farms are engaged in hazardous activities and that the incidence of child employment in cocoa appears to be rising faster than elsewhere. Over 200,000 children in the principal cocoa-growing regions are exposed to hazardous work and suffering serious injuries. Considering the importance of the cocoa industry in Ghana (about 40 per cent of Ghana's total earnings), child labour in its worst forms in Ghana also has implications for Ghana's cocoa supply chains in the global economy.

The Committee notes that, according to both the report of the ILO TAM and the Government's report, various measures were taken to prevent children under 18 years of age from engaging in hazardous work in the cocoa sector. In particular, the Committee notes: (i) the continuous sensitization of community members, including farmers and the general public, on child labour and its consequences; (ii) the implementation of several measures aiming to strengthen local level structures to support the elimination of child labour in the cocoa sector, through capacity-building of stakeholders including Community Child Protection Committees (CCPCs); and (iii) the public-private partnership for the elimination of child labour in cocoa growing areas called "Children first in cocoa" aiming to improve the lives of children living in the cocoa-growing regions of Ghana by 2025. Furthermore, the Government indicates that, under the Trade for Decent Work Project (T4DW Project) of the European Union, the CCPC members of five cocoa growing communities in the Eastern and Ashanti regions were trained on the basic concepts of child labour and child protection, identification, withdrawal and rehabilitation of victims. The Committee therefore strongly encourages the Government to continue its efforts to prevent children under 18 years of age from being engaged in hazardous types of work in this sector, as well as to remove them and rehabilitate them. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken in this regard, as well as on the number of child victims of hazardous types of work who are removed from such work and rehabilitated as a result.

Article 4(1) and (3). Determination and revision of the list of hazardous types of work. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes that the Government representatives indicated, during the ILO TAM, that both the Hazardous Activities Framework for the cocoa sector, developed in 2008, and the General Hazardous Activities Framework, covering 17 other occupations and developed in 2012, have been reviewed, validated, and merged into one Hazardous Activities Framework (HAF). In this regard, the Committee notes both the information contained in the report of the ILO TAM and the Government's information on the series of steps necessary to ensure the adoption of the HAF into a legislative instrument, including sending it to the Attorney-General for review and instructions, submitting it to the authorities (Cabinet and Parliament) for approval, and converting it into a decree or regulation pursuant to the revised Children's Act, which is currently before Parliament for adoption. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the HAF is adopted in the near future. It requests the Government to continue providing information on the progress made in this regard and to provide a copy of the HAF, once it has been adopted into law.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour and providing the necessary and appropriate direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration. 1. Trafficking in the fishing industry and domestic service. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the ITUC's observation that the Government must ensure that children who are rescued from the worst forms of child labour are rehabilitated and reintegrated into society.

In this regard, the Committee takes note of the information contained in the report of the ILO TAM and of the Government's information regarding the measures taken to combat child trafficking, including for the purpose of the exploitation of their labour in hazardous work in the fishing industries and in domestic servitude, such as the establishment of one-stop shop centres (shelters) for victims of violence, including domestic violence, where there are a number of in-house professionals to help reintegrate victims. The Government indicates that, in 2021, 660 children (149 girls and 511 boys), were rescued from trafficking, including in fishing-related activities. The child victims were provided a range of support services, which included shelter, food, medical care, psychological support, counselling, legal services, family tracing, COVID testing, and more. The Committee further notes that two of the four main axes of the NPA 2022–26 are to prevent trafficking and protect its victims, through various measures aiming to improve advocacy, develop capacity-building, ensure provision of comprehensive care to victims of trafficking, and enhance family strengthening interventions for rescued victims and their families. The Committee strongly encourages the Government to continue its efforts to prevent children from becoming victims of trafficking and to remove child victims from the worst forms of child labour and ensure their rehabilitation and social integration. It also requests the Government to continue providing information on the measures taken in this regard and the results achieved in terms of the number of child victims of trafficking, disaggregated by age and gender, who have been removed and rehabilitated.

2. Trokosi system. Following its previous comments, the Committee notes the ITUC's observation that, while the Government announced that the traditional practice of trokosi was proscribed by law and, consequently, there is no official data on it, this harmful practice of servitude and debt bondage is still ongoing and thousands of children are suffering the consequences of it. The ITUC observes that the Government must ensure that, in practice, children are not subjected to it and must put in place measures to monitor the enforcement of the law in practice, to carry out an appropriate statistical evaluation system.

The Committee notes that both the Government and social partners stated, during the ILO TAM, that they were not aware of any cases of trokosi being reported. The Government adds, in its report, that the practice of trokosi has been outlawed in Ghana, and that there is no official data on this practice in the country. In this regard, the Committee notes the observation of the Worker representatives made to the ILO TAM that visits into the trokosi communities should be conducted in order to verify these allegations at the national level. The Government indicates, in the meantime, that it continues to conduct sensitization campaigns in order to prevent this practice from resurfacing. The Committee requests the Government to take measures to verify the prevalence of the practice of trokosi in the country, including through the collection of data on this issue. It requests the Government to provide information on the progress made in this regard and the results achieved. It also encourages the Government to continue its sensitization measures and to provide information on their impact on preventing girls under the age of 18 from becoming victims of this practice.

Application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes that, according to the mission of the ILO TAM, many of the constituents indicated the need to improve data collection and that the Government should work on the national production of statistics on child labour and its worst forms, considering that the last survey on child labour was conducted in 2003. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the availability of sufficient data on the worst forms of child labour in the country, particularly as regards child trafficking and hazardous work, and to provide information on the nature, scope, and trends of these worst forms, and on the number of children covered by measures giving effect to the Convention. To the extent possible, this information should be disaggregated by gender and age.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Guatemala

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1990)

Previous comments: observation and direct request

The Committee notes the observations of the Coordinating Committee of Agricultural, Commercial, Industrial and Financial Associations (CACIF), forwarded by the Government with its report.

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. The Committee notes the information provided in the Government's report on the adoption by the Ministry of Employment and Social Welfare of Ministerial Decision No. 260-2019 of 23 July 2019 approving the procedure for the effective application of ILO Convention No. 138. The Decision provides that the Protection Unit for Young Workers will coordinate action with the General Labour Inspectorate to monitor admission to employment for young persons, as well as regular inspection of the various sectors where there is a possibility of children being engaged in child labour (sections 3 and 5 of the Decision). The Committee also notes that the National Commission for the Prevention and Elimination of Child Labour (CONAPETI) was replaced in 2019 by the Thematic Round Table for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labour in the Specific Social Development Cabinet, with the participation of the General Labour Inspectorate. The Thematic Round Table has been discussing the establishment of Comprehensive Care Centres for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labour (CAIPETI), the Child Labour Risk Identification Model (MIRTI) and the development of the Strategy and National Plan for the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labour and Work by Young Persons. The Departmental Committees for the Prevention and Eradication of Child labour (CODEPETIS) will continue to operate. The Committee notes the Government's indications in its report on the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182), concerning the findings of the final evaluation of the implementation of the Roadmap to make Guatemala a country free from child labour and its worst forms (2016–20) carried out with representatives of the 21 CODEPETIS. In this regard, it notes that the conclusions of the evaluation emphasize: (i) the lack of institutionalization of the commitments set out in the Roadmap; (ii) the absence of budgetary allocations to the bodies responsible for its implementation; and (iii) the lack of social involvement in its implementation.

The Committee notes the indication in the CACIF's observations that employers are participating actively in the Thematic Round Table on the Prevention and Eradication of Child Labour, as well as the CODEPETIS, and are committed to undertaking awareness-raising activities in enterprises. It also reports various enterprise initiatives, particularly in the agricultural sector, to prevent and combat child labour.

While noting all this information, the Committee observes that, according to the findings of the National Survey of Employment and Income 2-2018, available on the official webpage of the National Institute of Statistics, 297,408 boys and 99,071 girls under 14 years of age are engaged in child labour. The Committee also observes that, between January 2018 and May 2022, the labour inspection services detected 136 cases of child labour during inspections in private enterprises in the various departments of the country. The Committee hopes that all the measures adopted, including the follow-up to the Roadmap to make Guatemala a country free from child labour and its worst forms will contribute to the progressive elimination of child labour and requests the Government to provide information on this subject.

With reference to the activities of the labour inspection services to combat child labour, the Committee also requests the Government to investigate the causes of the significant difference between the number of cases of child labour detected in enterprises during inspections and the high number of children under 14 years of age who are engaged in child labour, according to the National Survey of Employment and Income 2018. The Committee considers that this will provide a basis for identifying the measures that could be taken to strengthen the capacities of the labour inspection services to combat child labour, including in the informal economy. The Committee also requests the Government to provide updated statistical data on the nature and extent of child labour.

Article 2(1) and (3). Minimum age for admission to employment. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, on the basis of the recommendations made, the Guatemalan Social Security Institute (IGSS) has prepared new proposed regulations on the manual lifting and transport of loads that would repeal Decision No. 885 of 1990, which provides that boys and girls aged over 13 years may undertake the lifting, carrying or moving of loads appropriate to their age, on condition that such work is not prejudicial to their development and does not prejudice their health and/or safety. The Committee takes due note of this information and trusts that the new regulations on the manual lifting and transport of loads that are adopted will bring the minimum age for that work into line with that established in the Labour Code and the Act on the comprehensive protection of children (14 years).

Article 3(1). Minimum age for admission to hazardous types of work. With reference to the need to amend section 148(a) of the Labour Code (under the terms of which the minimum age for hazardous types of work shall be determined by the regulations for the respective occupation or the labour inspectorate) in order to set the general minimum age at 18 years for all hazardous types of work, in accordance with Government Decision No. 250-2006, the Government indicates that the legislative initiative to amend the Labour Code in this respect is still awaiting discussion in Congress. The Committee trusts that this amendment will be adopted without delay to ensure that the Labour Code sets the minimum age for hazardous types of work at 18 years, in accordance with Decision No. 250-2006.

Article 6. Minimum age for work done in education or training programmes. The Committee trusts that the envisaged revision of the Labour Code will set the minimum age for admission to work done in education and training programmes at 14 years, in accordance with the provisions of the Convention.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

Previous comment

Articles 3(a) and 7(1) of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour and sanctions. Sale and trafficking of children for sexual exploitation. The Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that under the Public Prosecutor's Strategic Plan for 2019–2023 action has been taken to strengthen the capacities of prosecutors to carry out effective investigation and prosecution of perpetrators of trafficking of children. The inter-institutional technical board for the investigation and prosecution of traffickers from abroad has also been implemented. Police officers have been trained in the protection of children and young persons in a migrant context, especially where the children have been abducted.

The Committee notes that in the period between January 2018 and May 2022, 120 cases of trafficking of persons involving minors under 18 years of age had been registered and were under investigation. During the same period, the Prosecutor charged 93 persons with the trafficking of children under 18 years of age (section 202 ter of the Penal Code, as amended by the Act against Sexual Violence, Exploitation and Trafficking of Persons, 2009), with 14 convictions handed down. The Committee also notes with interest the creation of new courts of the first instance and of courts specialized in crimes of trafficking of persons in eight departments with a high incidence of trafficking of persons for commercial sexual exploitation (Suchitepéquez, Retalhuleu, Sololá, Quiché, Totonicapán, Huehuetenango, San Marcos and Quetzaltenango). The Committee encourages the Government to continue to take measures to strengthen the capacities of the bodies responsible for enforcing the law with a view to ensuring exhaustive investigations and effective prosecution of perpetrators of trafficking of minors under 18 years of age for sexual exploitation. It requests the Government to provide information on: (1) the functioning of the newly established courts, and (2) the number of investigations, prosecutions and convictions under section 202 ter of the Penal Code regarding trafficking of persons under 18 years of age for the purpose of sexual exploitation.

Forced child labour. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that during the period between January 2018 and April 2022 a total of 340 minors under 18 years of age were identified in a situation of labour exploitation, begging and forced labour. During the same period, six judgements for the crime of trafficking in children for labour exploitation were handed down, of which two were acquittals. Moreover, the Committee notes that the national police force is carrying out joint operations with the Ministry of Labour to combat forced child labour in shops and tortilla factories. The Committee requests the Government to continue to take the necessary measures to identify, prosecute and sentence persons responsible for placing children in a situation of forced labour, including begging, and to provide information in that connection.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour, removing them from these forms of labour and ensuring their rehabilitation and social integration. Sale and trafficking of children and commercial sexual exploitation. The Committee notes the Government's indication that under the National Plan for the Prevention of Crimes of Sexual Violence, Exploitation and Trafficking of Persons and Commercial Sexual Exploitation, activities were carried out to raise the awareness of and inform 270,882 children and young persons. Between January 2018 and May 2022, the Social Welfare Secretariat ran 252 prevention workshops to combat commercial sexual exploitation of minors, with participants from the indigenous communities. The Committee also notes the Government's indication that new bodies have been included in the National Board for the Prevention of and Protection against, Sexual Exploitation of Children and Young Persons in Activities related to Travel and Tourism, established in 2013, including hotel associations and the Guatemalan Airlines Association. To date, 3,692 enterprises have adhered to the Code of Conduct for the prevention of, and protection against, sexual exploitation of children and young persons in travel and tourism. A national campaign "Protecting our greatest treasure" ("Protegiendo Nuestro Mayor Tesoro") against the sexual exploitation of children and young persons in activities connected to tourism has been under way since 2017.

Finally, the Committee notes that between January 2018 and March 2022, 99 minors under the age of 18 years were rescued from commercial sexual exploitation and 13 victims of child pornography. From 2020–21, care and protection were provided in shelters to 150 children and young victims of trafficking in persons. The care included psychological, medical, legal, pedagogical and social support. The Committee encourages the Government to continue taking the necessary measures to combat the sale and trafficking of children and the commercial sexual exploitation of children, and to withdraw, rehabilitate and reintegrate child victims of the worst forms of child labour. In that connection, it requests the Government to continue to provide information on the direct assistance programmes for child victims of the trafficking of persons and commercial sexual exploitation that have been carried out, and their results, giving details of the number of victims that have been rehabilitated and socially integrated.

Article 8. International cooperation. Trafficking of children. The Committee notes the updating of the Inter-Institutional Protocol for the Repatriation of Victims of Trafficking, which has two strands: the procedure for the repatriation of Guatemalans, who are or may be victims of trafficking of persons abroad; and the procedure for the repatriation of foreigners, who are or may be victims of trafficking of persons identified in Guatemala. Under the Protocol, 34 child and young person victims of trafficking have been repatriated. The Committee encourages the Government to continue taking the necessary measures to repatriate child victims of trafficking in persons, whether from Guatemala back to their countries of origin or from abroad back to Guatemala, and requests it to continue providing information on the number of children that have been repatriated. It also requests the Government to provide information on the measures adopted as part of international cooperation to prevent trafficking in persons under the age of 18 years.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2003)

Previous comment

Article 2(1) of the Convention. Scope of application and labour inspection. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's reference in its report to the adoption of Decree No. D/2022/0265/PRG/SGG regulating the powers and structure of the labour inspectorate. The Government also indicates that the 152 active employees of the labour inspectorate have carried out inspections, mainly focused on urban areas, and that a systematic control mission was conducted in 2022, directed by the labour inspectorate with the participation of the Directorate-General of Labour, the National Directorate of Labour, Employment and Social Legislation, the Department of Occupational Medicine, the National Social Security Fund, and the Guinean Employment Promotion Agency.

In this regard, the Committee notes the Government's indication that proposals are under way regarding the application of the provisions of section 513.5 of the Labour Code with a view to ensuring the permanence of the human, financial and material resources needed by the labour inspectorate to discharge its duties.

The Committee notes that the Government will soon conduct training for labour inspectors and controllers with regard to combating child labour and the worst forms thereof, with technical and financial support from UNICEF. The Committee strongly encourages the Government to continue strengthening the capacities of the labour inspectorate so that it can undertake adequate supervision and detection activities with regard to children engaged in child labour. To this end, the Committee once again requests the Government to provide information on the implementation in practice of inspections by labour inspectors with regard to child labour, including information on the number of violations recorded and extracts from labour inspection reports.

Article 2(3). Age of completion of compulsory schooling. The Committee duly notes the adoption of the new Children's Code 2019. The Committee notes with satisfaction that section 39 of the new Children's Code 2019 provides that it is compulsory for children to attend school until the age of 16 years, and section 921 prohibits children in compulsory schooling from being employed during school hours. Section 920 also indicates that any person employing a child during school hours shall be liable to a fine of 500,000 to 1 million Guinean francs. The Committee encourages the Government to take steps to ensure the practical application of the age of completion of compulsory schooling.

Article 7(1). Minimum age for admission to light work. The Committee notes that section 932 of the new Children's Code 2019 sets the age for admission to light work at 12 years, as do sections 5–7 of Order No. 2791/MTASE/DNTLS/96 on child labour. In this regard, the Committee once again recalls that under Article 7(1) of the Convention, national laws or regulations may permit the employment or work of persons 13 to 15 years of age on light work which is: (a) not likely to be harmful to their health or development; and (b) not such as to prejudice their attendance at school, their participation in vocational orientation or training programmes approved by the competent authority or their capacity to benefit from the instruction received. The Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that the minimum age for admission to light work prescribed in the legislation is 13 years and, accordingly, to make the appropriate amendments to section 932 of the Children's Code and to sections 5–7 of Order No. 2791/MTASE/DNTLS/96 on child labour.

Article 7(3). Determination of light work, number of hours and conditions in which light work may be undertaken. The Committee previously noted the Government's indication that section 19 of the Bill which will prescribe working hours and conditions of employment or work for light work provides that for children between 11 and 14 years of age, the working time may not exceed eight hours per day, the work must be carried out between 8 a.m. and 9 p.m., and a half-hour uninterrupted rest break must be provided every four hours. The Committee previously emphasized that any work that may extend to eight hours per day, irrespective of the type of work performed or the conditions in which it is undertaken, does not constitute “light work”.

The Committee observes that section 929 of the Children’s Code 2019 prescribes the maximum loads authorized for young workers under 18 years of age, without indicating working hours and conditions of employment or work for children. It also once again notes the absence of information from the Government regarding the amendment of section 19 of the Bill. The Committee requests the Government to ensure that the amendment of section 19 will guarantee that the number of hours and conditions of employment for children working from the age of 13 years meet the requirements of the Convention for light work. The Committee requests the Government to provide information in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2003)

Previous comment

Articles 3(a) and 7(1) of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour, and penalties. Sale and trafficking of children. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government’s indication in its report that the effective application of the legislation is ensured by the Labour Inspectorate-General, which carries out inspections and controls in workplaces.

The Committee also notes that, according to the statistics available in 2021 from the Office for the Protection of Gender, Childhood and Morality (OPROGEM), six children (two girls and four boys) were identified as victims of trafficking.

However, the Committee notes the absence of information on the number of investigations, prosecutions, convictions and criminal penalties for the trafficking of persons under 18 years of age. The Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure the effective application of the sections of the penal Code relating to the sale and trafficking of children. It once again requests the Government to provide detailed information, indicating in particular the number of child victims of trafficking and also the number and nature of convictions and criminal penalties imposed.

Articles 3(d) and 4(1) and (3). Determination and revision of the list of hazardous types of work. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the indication in the Government’s report that sections 918 and 925 of the new Children’s Code of 2019 refer to types of work that are prohibited for children. The Committee notes with interest that these provisions prohibit several types of hazardous work for children under 18 years of age, including: (i) the handling and use of explosive, irritant, corrosive or toxic materials; (ii) work in slaughterhouses or establishments processing animal entrails, work in tanneries, or work involving the continuous surveillance of cattle; (iii) the extraction of mineralized waste, materials and rubble in mines and quarries, and also as part of levelling work; and (iv) all types of work performed at night. The Committee notes that any person employing children in hazardous work is liable to incur the penalties established by sections 918 and 928. The Committee requests the Government to ensure the application in practice of sections 918 and 928 of the Children’s Code relating to penalties. It also requests the Government to provide information on the number and nature of violations recorded and the penalties imposed in cases of children performing hazardous work.

Article 5. Monitoring mechanisms and application of the Convention in practice. Hazardous work. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government’s indication in its report that training has been conducted and resources allocated for capacity-building for OPROGEM and the Anti-Trafficking Division at the Central Office for Combating Organized Crime (OCLCO).

The Committee highlights the fact that the United Nations Committee on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, in its concluding observations of March 2020, expressed concern at the large number of children who are exploited in economic activities, including in hazardous conditions (E/C.12/GIN/CO/1, paragraph 29). The Committee requests the Government to provide information on the capacity-building measures implemented for the OCLCO and OPROGEM with a view to monitoring and combating hazardous work for children.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (e). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour and giving special attention to the situation of girls. Ensuring access to free basic education. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indications that education is a priority and that measures have been taken to improve the school system, such as recruiting and training teachers, establishing a remote area allowance for teachers, and guaranteeing that studies are free of charge. Moreover, incentive bonuses have been granted to promote the participation of girls in education.

The Committee duly notes the "National policy for literacy and non-formal education" adopted in 2018. The National Directorate for Literacy, Non-Formal Education and the Promotion of National Languages conducted a workshop to validate a strategy paper for the implementation of a literacy programme for 2 million young persons and adults by 2020.

Moreover, the Committee notes the preparation of a sectoral plan for education and training entitled the "Ten-Year Education Programme in Guinea 2020–29". The current status report on the programme indicates that only two thirds of young persons currently receive six years of schooling. In addition, according to the latest statistics available, for the 2019–20 period the primary school enrolment rate was 78.4 per cent for girls and 93.3 per cent for boys, and the high school completion rate was 16.8 per cent for girls and 28.5 per cent for boys. The Committee requests the Government to continue its efforts to improve the functioning of the education system in the country. In this regard, it requests the Government to take steps to increase the school enrolment, attendance and completion rates at both the primary and secondary levels, giving particular attention to the situation of girls. The Committee also requests the Government to continue providing information on the measures taken and the results achieved, including statistics on school enrolment and completion rates.

Clause (b). Necessary and appropriate direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration. Begging, talibé children, and children working in mines. The Committee noted, according to the Government's indications in its previous report, that begging undertaken by children remained a major concern in Guinea. It also notes that sections 909–911 of the new Children's Code prohibit begging by children and that the perpetrators of the use of children for begging are liable to be punished by imprisonment. However, the Committee notes with regret the Government's indication in its report that no measures have been taken regarding children subjected to forced begging, even though it indicates that certain measures are under consideration.

In this regard, the Committee notes that the United Nations Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC), in its concluding observations of February 2019, referred in its recommendations to the consistently high number of children involved in child labour, including the worst forms thereof, and requested the Government to strengthen its measures to combat the economic exploitation of children, in particular those working in mines and begging on the streets, including talibé children (CRC/C/GIN/CO/3-6, paragraph 42). The Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary time-bound measures to remove children under 18 years of age from begging and to provide information in this regard. The Committee once again encourages the Government to establish a time-bound programme to ensure that child beggars under 18 years of age, including talibé children, are rehabilitated and socially integrated. It also requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken regarding the situation of children working in mines.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Guinea-Bissau

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2009)

Previous comment: direct request

Article 1 of the Convention and application of the Convention in practice. National policy designed to ensure the effective abolition of child labour. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes the Government's indication in its report that the national child protection policy has been drawn up but is still the subject of public consultations. The Government also indicates that, in partnership with UNICEF, it has prepared a labour instrument aimed at abolishing child labour, and this is being finalized.

The Government further indicates that it does not have any information on the effective application of the Convention since child labour is not widespread in the country and that children generally gain practical experience of certain activities or learn occupations within their families. In this regard, the Committee notes with interest that, according to the latest MICS (Multiple Indicator Cluster Surveys) statistics established by Guinea-Bissau with support from UNICEF, the incidence of child labour appears to have decreased from 57 per cent in 2010 to 51.1 per cent in 2014 and 17.2 per cent in 2018–19. The Committee encourages the Government to continue its efforts to eliminate child labour in the country and would appreciate if the Government could provide information on the measures adopted that led to the reduction of child labour from 2010 to 2019. It also requests the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure the adoption in the near future of the national child protection policy and the labour instrument aimed at abolishing child labour, and to provide information on progress made in this respect and on their implementation once they have been adopted. Lastly, the Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the manner in which the Convention is applied in practice, including statistics on the employment of children and young persons, extracts from the reports of the inspection services, and information on the number and nature of violations detected involving children and young persons.

Article 2(1) of the Convention. Scope of application. Child domestic workers. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the latest statistical information available in the report on the situation of domestic workers in Guinea-Bissau, published in June 2020 by the National Association for the Protection of Domestic Workers, indicates that a total of 7,438 domestic workers have been recorded in the country. The Government also indicates that in Guinea-Bissau 35 per cent of children working as domestic employees are 12, 13 or 14 years of age. In this regard, the Government indicates that the new Labour Code, promulgated in July 2022, contains provisions on domestic work, including those concerning the minimum age for admission to such work, which is currently 16 years, and also the terms of domestic work contracts, remuneration arrangements, hours of work and limits on the length of the working day (meal breaks and weekly rest), holidays, and provisions on occupational safety and health (sections 287–300). The Committee therefore urges the Government to take steps to ensure the effective application of the new Labour Code so as to ensure that children under 16 years of age do not engage in domestic work. It requests the Government to provide information on measures taken in this respect and the results achieved, including on the number of cases of children under 16 years of age engaged in domestic work who have been identified, and the penalties imposed for violations.

Article 2(2). Raising the minimum age for admission to employment or work. The Committee notes that section 347 of the new Labour Code, promulgated in July 2022, establishes the minimum age for admission to employment or work as 16 years. However, the Committee observes that at the time of ratification of the Convention, Guinea-Bissau declared 14 years as the minimum age for admission to employment or work. The Committee requests the Government to consider the possibility of notifying the ILO Director-General, by a new declaration within the meaning of Article 2(2) of the Convention, that the minimum age specified at the time of ratification of the Convention has been raised to 16 years.

Article 2(3). Age of completion of compulsory schooling. The Committee once again notes that under sections 12 and 13 of Act No. 4/2011 on education (Education Act), the age of completion of compulsory schooling is 14 years. The Committee notes that, since the new Labour Code prescribes a minimum age for admission to work of 16 years, it appears that the age of completion of compulsory schooling does not coincide with this. The Committee observes that if compulsory schooling comes to an end before children are legally entitled to work, there may arise a vacuum which regrettably opens the door for the economic exploitation of children (see 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 371). The Committee therefore encourages the Government to consider raising the age of completion of compulsory schooling so that it coincides with the minimum age for admission to employment or work.

Article 3(1) and (2). Minimum age for admission to hazardous work, and determination of hazardous types of work. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes that section 355(1) of the new Labour Code provides that work which, by its nature or potential risks or the circumstances in which it is carried out, is likely to jeopardize the physical or psychological development of children under 18 years of age shall be prohibited. The Committee also notes that, under section 355(2), it shall be prohibited for children under 18 years of age to work in theatres, cinemas, nightclubs, discotheques or other similar establishments, or to engage in vending or door-to-door selling of pharmaceutical products, alcoholic beverages or tobacco. However, the Government indicates that no list of hazardous types of work has been drawn up. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that the list of hazardous types of work prohibited for children under 18 years of age is drawn up, after consultation of the employers' and workers' organizations concerned, and that it is adopted in the near future. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on all progress made in this regard.

Article 6. Apprenticeships. The Committee notes that section 350 of the new Labour Code allows a child under 16 years of age who has not completed compulsory schooling to work if all the following conditions are fulfilled: (i) the child follows education or training which provides compulsory schooling and vocational training; (ii) in the case of a fixed-term employment contract, the length of the contract is not less than the total duration of the training, if the employer is responsible for the training process; (iii) the normal period of work includes a part devoted to training; and (iv) working hours make it possible to participate in education and training programmes. The Committee observes that the above-mentioned section appears to be concerned with cases of apprenticeship within an enterprise but that no minimum age is fixed in this regard. The Committee recalls that under Article 6 of the Convention the minimum age for admission to an apprenticeship is 14 years. The Committee requests the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that the national legislation fixes the minimum age for entry to an apprenticeship at 14 years, as required by Article 6 of the Convention, and to provide information on progress made in this regard.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2008)

Previous comment: direct request

Article 3 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour. Clause (a). All forms of slavery or practices similar to slavery. 1. Sale and trafficking of children. With regard to the Committee's request to provide information on the application in practice of Act No. 12/2011 on preventing and combating trafficking in persons, particularly women and children (Anti-Trafficking Act), the Government indicates in its report that it does not have any information on this matter, since the juvenile court has not received any complaints on the worst forms of child labour. The Committee also notes with concern the Government's indication, in its report on the application of the Forced Labour Convention, 1930 (No. 29), that two investigations into cases of trafficking in persons have been opened but no prosecution has been initiated and no sentence has been handed down. The Committee therefore requests the Government to ensure that persons engaging in the trafficking of children are investigated and prosecuted, and that penalties constituting an adequate deterrent are imposed. It once again requests the Government to provide information on the number of investigations, prosecutions, convictions and criminal penalties imposed for the trafficking of persons under 18 years of age, pursuant to the Anti-Trafficking Act.

Clause (b). Use, procuring or offering of a child for prostitution, for the production of pornography or for pornographic performances. Further to its previous comments, the Committee notes with regret the Government's indication that it does not have any information on the measures taken or envisaged to ensure that the use, that is to say by a client, of a child between 16 and 18 years of age in prostitution is prohibited. The Committee recalls that Article 3(b) of the Convention prohibits not only the procuring or offering but also the use of a child under 18 years of age for prostitution. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary steps to ensure that the use of children between 16 and 18 years of age in prostitution is prohibited, and to provide information on progress made in this regard.

Clause (d) and Article 4(1). Hazardous work and determination of hazardous work. As regards the adoption of the list of hazardous types of work in which it is prohibited to employ persons under 18 years of age, the Committee refers to its detailed comments on the application of the Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138).

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (b). Direct assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration. Trafficking of boys for forced labour and begging. The Committee notes with regret the Government's indication that it does not have any information on the subject of boys, especially talibés, who are victims of trafficking for forced labour and begging. However, the Committee notes the Government's indication, in the report which it submitted on Convention No. 29, that support was given in connection with the return of talibé children from Senegal (164 in 2021 and 78 in 2022). The aforementioned report also indicates that trafficking victims receive multiple forms of assistance, including psycho-social assistance, food and medical care, following eight stages: (1) identification of the victim; (2) emergency care, including medical care, for the victim; (3) examination of the victim's personal situation; (4) evaluation of the victim's family situation and environment; (5) possible alternatives for placing the victim outside his/her family; (6) social and occupational reintegration; (7) monitoring of the child after return to his/her family and community; and (8) support for the development of the socio-economic capacities of the family and community. These services are provided by a variety of actors in their respective roles, including social workers, police, community officials, reception centres and social partners. The Committee requests the Government to continue taking effective and time-bound measures to withdraw children under 18 years of age, and particularly young boys, from situations of trafficking for forced or compulsory labour, such as begging, and to ensure their rehabilitation and social integration. It requests the Government to provide information on the results achieved, particularly regarding the number of children, whether talibé or others, who have been withdrawn from trafficking and then rehabilitated and socially integrated via the eight stages of assistance for victims.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Guyana

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1998)

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy for the elimination of child labour, labour inspection and application in practice. For a number of years, the Committee has urged the Government to strengthen its efforts to adopt a national policy for the elimination of child labour and to provide information on the measures taken in this direction. The Committee notes with satisfaction the adoption in 2019 of the National Child Labour Policy, that covers both the formal and informal economy, and the National Action Plan for the Elimination of Child Labour (2019–2025), as indicated in the Government's report. The objective of the National Child Labour Policy is to provide a supportive environment that fosters and enables the coordination, collaboration and cooperation of all parties concerned (including child protection, education and health sectors), to effectively prevent and eliminate child labour in all its forms. The National Action Plan has a three-fold dimension (preventive, protective and rehabilitative) and focuses on ten strategic issues: (1) enhancing public awareness; (2) promoting civil engagement and children participation; (3) widening access to education; (4) ensuring security for at risk families; (5) strengthening legislation; (6) ensuring rehabilitation for children removed from child labour; (7) building capacities to combat child labour; (8) implementation of a child management information system; (9) guaranteeing adequate resources; and (10) strengthening of leadership and coordination of a multi-sectoral response. The Committee notes that a National Child Labour Prevention and Elimination Committee and a Child Labour Inspectorate will be created to ensure the implementation of the National Action Plan. In this regard, the Child Labour Inspectorate should undertake regular investigation, inspection and monitoring of child labour in collaboration with other actors. The Committee also notes that the Government indicates that the National Steering Committee on Child Labour was re-established by the Ministry of Labour in 2020 and includes representatives from different ministries, the Guyana Child Protection Agency, associations of miners and the private sector. The Committee further notes that, according to the information contained in the National Action Plan, as of 2014, 18 per cent of children aged 5–17 years were engaged in child labour activities and 13 per cent worked under hazardous conditions. The Committee encourages the Government to continue taking measures towards the effective elimination of child labour, including hazardous child labour, within the framework of the National Child Labour Policy and National Action Plan 2019–2025, and to provide information on the results achieved. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to provide information on the progress made towards the creation and subsequent functioning of the Child Labour Inspectorate. Finally, the Committee requests the Government to provide updated statistical information on the employment of children and young persons below the age of 15 in the country.

Article 3(1) and (2). List of hazardous work. In reply to the Committee's request for information on the revision of the list of hazardous work, the Government indicates that this matter is still under consideration by the National Tripartite Committee. The Committee requests the Government to continue providing information on the progress made towards the revision of the list of hazardous work prohibited for children under the age of 18 years and to supply a copy of the new list once adopted.

Article 3(3). Authorization to work in hazardous employment from the age of 16 years. For a number of years, the Committee has observed that section 6(b) of the Employment of Young Persons and Children Act (Chapter 99:01) authorizes the Minister to regulate the employment of children between the ages of 16–18 years in hazardous work. Recalling that Article 3(3) of the Convention requires that any hazardous work for persons from the ages of 16–18 years be authorized only upon the conditions that the health, safety and morals of the young persons concerned are fully protected and that they, in practice, receive adequate specific vocational training, the Committee urged the Government to bring the Employment of Young Persons and Children Act into conformity with the Convention. The Committee notes the Government's indication that, in line with the National Action Plan's strategic objective of strengthening national legislation related to child labour, the Government will send the Employment of Young Persons and Children Act to the National Steering Committee on Child Labour for its consideration and action. The Committee firmly hopes that the National Steering Committee on Child Labour will take the necessary steps to bring the Employment of Young Persons and Children Act into conformity with the Convention and requests the Government to provide a copy of the amendments to the Act once they have been finalized.

Article 9(3). Keeping of registers. The Committee previously noted that section 86(a) of the Occupational Safety and Health Act, Chapter 99:06, provides for the obligation of employers of industrial establishments to keep registers of all employees under the age of 18 years and requested the Government to indicate the legislation that establishes the same obligation for employers in non-industrial undertakings. The Committee notes that the Government indicates that while section 86(a) of the Occupational Safety and Health Act only concerns industrial establishments, the practice of the Ministry of Labour is to have in the general register the particulars of persons under the age of 18 years employed outside industrial undertakings. Taking note of the practice of the Ministry of Labour, the Committee recalls that, according to Article 9(3) of the Convention, national laws or regulations or the competent authority shall prescribe the registers or other documents, which shall be kept and made available by the employer, of persons whom he/she employs or who work for him/her and who are less than 18 years of age. Such registers or documents shall contain the names and ages or dates of birth, duly certified wherever possible, of all persons employed under the age of 18 years. Therefore, the Committee requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that national legislation or regulations be adopted to ensure that all employers of non-industrial undertakings are obliged to keep registers of all persons below the age of 18 years who work for them, in conformity with Article 9(3) of the Convention and the indicated practice.

The Committee recalls that the Government can avail itself of ILO technical assistance in relation to the issues raised in this observation.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Indonesia

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1999)

Previous comment

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. In its previous comments, the Committee noted from the 2009 Indonesia Child Labour Survey that there were approximately 1.76 million children engaged in child labour in Indonesia. It urged the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure the elimination of child labour and to provide information on the measures taken in this regard.

The Committee takes note of the detailed information provided by the Government in its report concerning the various measures taken to eliminate child labour. These measures include: (i) carrying out awareness-raising activities to prevent and reduce child labour; (ii) disseminating the Child-Labour Free Indonesia Roadmap, pocket books and leaflets to 20 relevant companies, agencies and institutions; (iii) encouraging the private sector to contribute to the prevention of child labour through Corporate Social Responsibility funds; (iv) providing business assistance to parents of children vulnerable to child labour; (v) developing National Guidelines for Community Based Child Labour Elimination in Villages and Districts in collaboration with NGOs; (vi) preparing regional regulations for eliminating child labour; and (vii) reviewing the Child Labour Free Indonesia Roadmap in 2022 and conducting comprehensive collaboration with related ministries and agencies to achieve SDG 8.7 of no child labour by 2030. In addition, several measures to ensure the education of children, particularly children from underprivileged families, remote and disadvantaged areas were implemented through the Smart Indonesia Programme (to prevent children from dropping-out of school) and the National Strategy for Handling Out-of-School children as well as by introducing alternative education through building and equally distributing non-formal education units in remote and disadvantaged areas. Moreover, a Community-based Education/Development Information System was established to identify out-of-school children.

The Government also refers to certain regulations and policies adopted by the Government for the protection of children, in particular the Ministerial Regulation No. 2 of 2020 concerning the 2020–2024 Strategic Plan of the Ministry of Women Empowerment and Child Protection which, amongst others, aims to reduce child labour; and the Social Minister Decree No. 1 of 2018 concerning the Family Hope Program (PPA-PKH programme) which provides cash to very poor households. The Committee further notes the Government's information that the Ministry of Manpower, through the Family Hope Programme, succeeded in removing from work, 11,252 boys and 6,748 girls in 2019, and 4,078 boys and 4,922 girls in 2020 in various sectors. Overall, from 2008 to 2020, the Child Labour Reduction Programme in support of the Family Hope Programme removed a total of 143,456 children from child labour who returned to school.

The Committee, however, notes from the Government's Combined 5th and 6th periodic report to the Committee on the Rights of the Child of 2021 that according to the findings of the 2019 National Labour Force Survey, 2.36 million (6.35 per cent) of the workforce are children aged 10–17 years (paragraph 282). While taking due note of the measures taken by the Government, the Committee strongly encourages the Government to continue its efforts to ensure the progressive elimination of child labour. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken in this regard, and the results achieved in terms of the number of children removed from child labour.

Article 2(1). Scope of application and labour inspection. 1. Informal economy. The Committee previously noted that Act No. 13 of 2003 (Manpower Act) excluded from its application children who are engaged in self-employment or working without a clear wage relationship. It also noted from the 2009 Indonesia Child Labour Survey Report that, 57 per cent of all working children aged 5–17 years were employed in agriculture, including forestry, hunting and fishery. Moreover, out of all working children between the ages of 5–12, 12.7 per cent were self-employed, and 82.5 per cent were unpaid family workers.

With regard to the situation of child labour in the agricultural sector, the Government indicates that the labour inspectorate has made efforts to monitor the situation of child labour in this sector through the declaration of child-labour-free oil palm plantation sector in 287 companies in 35 districts/cities in 7 provinces. It also indicates that Government Regulation No. 78 concerning Special Protection for Children in situations of exploitation and Presidential Regulation No. 25 of 2021 concerning Child-Friendly District/City Policies were adopted for protecting children from child labour. The Committee notes from the Government's report submitted in 2021 under the Labour Inspection Convention, 1947 (No. 81) that focus group discussions and training on handling child labour for labour inspectors were conducted. Noting that a vast majority of children working under the minimum age are involved in informal employment which is not covered by the Manpower Act, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that the Convention is applied to all children, including children working outside an employment relationship. In this regard, the Committee requests the Government to continue to take the necessary measures to strengthen the capacity and expand the reach of the labour inspectorate services to better monitor children working in the informal economy and on their own account, particularly in the agricultural sector. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken in this regard and on the number and nature of violations relating to the employment of children and young persons detected by the labour inspectorate and the penalties imposed.

2. Domestic work. With regard to the protection of children engaged in domestic work, the Committee requests the Government to refer to its detailed comments under the Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182).

Article 9(3). Keeping of registers. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that there appeared to be no provisions in the Manpower Act prescribing that a register be kept and made available by the employer.

The Committee notes that the Government has not provided any relevant information in this regard. The Committee therefore once again recalls that Article 9(3) of the Convention requires employers to keep registers containing the names and ages or dates of birth, duly certified wherever possible, of persons whom they employ or who work for them and who are less than 18 years of age. The Committee once again requests the Government to take the necessary measures, by amendment of the law or regulation, to ensure that all employers are obliged to keep registers of all persons below the age of 18 years who work for them, in conformity with Article 9(3) of the Convention and to provide information on any measures taken in this regard.

The Committee is raising other points in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2000)

Previous comments: observation and direct request

Articles 3 and 5 of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour and monitoring mechanisms. Clause (a). Sale and trafficking of children. With regard to its previous comments concerning the measures taken to strengthen the capacities of the law enforcement bodies to combat trafficking in persons, the Committee notes the Government's information in its report that in 2021, the Ministry of Women Empowerment and Child Protection (MoWECP) organized several trainings on issues related to trafficking in persons for 140 law enforcement & Human Resources officials from 34 provinces in Indonesia. The MoWECP also issued the Ministerial Regulation No. 08/2021 on the Standard Operating Procedure (SOP) for Integrated Services for Witnesses and/or Victims of trafficking in persons. The scope of this regulation includes complaints mechanism, health rehabilitation, legal assistance, repatriation, social rehabilitation and reintegration. Moreover, the Indonesian National Police conducts routine trainings on handling cases related to trafficking in persons for its officials and criminal investigators from the central and regional police offices. According to the data from the National Police Criminal Investigation Department, from 2015 to 2021, there were 1,279 victims of trafficking, including 25 girls and one boy. There were 103 cases involving 189 suspects, of which 78 cases have been completed. Moreover, based on the data compiled by the Online Information System for the Protection of Women and Children (SIMFONI PPA) in June 2022, the number of cases of trafficking in persons has increased steadily, from 226 cases in 2019, to 422 cases in 2020; and 683 cases in 2021. The majority of victims (91 per cent) were women and girls, while 9 per cent were men, including boys.

The Committee, however, notes from the UNICEF Report on State of Children in Indonesia, 2020 that Indonesia is a major source (and a destination and transit) country for trafficking in persons, including children, for purposes of sexual and labour exploitation. Indonesian women and girls are subjected to sex trafficking primarily in Malaysia, the Middle East and Taiwan as well as subjected to internal trafficking – particularly for mining operations in Maluku, Papua and Jami province. The Committee urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to combat trafficking of children by ensuring that thorough investigations and prosecutions are carried out against persons who engage in the trafficking of children and to provide information on the number of investigations, prosecutions and convictions, as well as the specific penalties imposed in this respect. In this regard, it requests the Government: (1) to continue to take the necessary measures to strengthen the capacity of law enforcement bodies to combat trafficking in children, including by means of training on anti-trafficking legislation and the provision of adequate resources, and (2) provide information on the criteria used for the identification of victims of trafficking as well as on the challenges faced by law enforcement bodies in this regard. The Committee requests that the Government provide information on the measures taken in this regard and the results achieved.

Clause (c). Use, procuring or offering of children for the production and trafficking of drugs. The Committee previously noted that section 89 of the Act on Child Protection of 2002, provides for penalties involving imprisonment for life for persons who involve children in the production, sale and trafficking of drugs. However, it noted the Government's information that there had not been any significant progress made with regard to the prosecution of persons employing children in several of the worst forms of child labour, including drug trafficking, and that some cases were not taken to court.

The Committee notes the Government's reference to section 133(1) of Law No. 35 of 2009 on Narcotics that establishes penalties of imprisonment for involving children under the age of 18 years for drug related offences, including the production, selling, buying and importing of drugs. The Government further provides information concerning the judicial procedure for drug related offences and indicates that children who engage voluntarily or without orders from an adult person in drug related offences shall be punished. Referring to its general observation on Convention No. 182 adopted in 2020, the Committee emphasizes that children involved in the worst forms of child labour, such as work in illicit activities should be treated as victims, rather than criminals. The Committee urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that thorough investigations and prosecutions of persons who involve children in the production, sale or trafficking of illicit drugs are carried out and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions are imposed in practice. It also requests the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that children engaged in drug related offences are treated as victims rather than offenders and therefore are not punished. The Committee further requests the Government to provide information on the number of investigations, prosecutions and sanctions imposed pursuant to section 89 of the Act on Child Protection of 2002 and section 133(1) of Law No.35 of 2009 about Narcotics.

Clause (d). Hazardous work. Child domestic workers. The Committee previously noted that the Domestic Workers Protection Bill, which will regulate domestic work by children under 18 years of age, was undergoing endorsement. It also noted that three local regulations on the protection of domestic workers were initiated in Bandar Lampung City, South Sulawesi Province and in Malang District. It further noted that the Committee on the Rights of the Child, in its concluding observations of 10 July 2014 expressed concern, at the high number of children, as young as 11 years old, who were involved in hazardous work in domestic work.

The Committee notes the Government's information that efforts are being made to eradicate hazardous child labour in the domestic sector through the Reduction of Child Labour to support the Family Hope Programme (PPK-PKH Programme) 2008–2020. Moreover, community-based child-labour eradication programmes, are being conducted in four regions namely Bandar Lampung City, South Sulawesi Province, Malang and Banten Districts. The Government also indicates that two regulations were issued for the prevention of child domestic work at the regional level, namely the Regent Regulation No. 4 of 2018 concerning Improving the Competence of Domestic Workers and Regulation No. 8 of 2018 concerning the Protection of Female Domestic Workers in Bandar Lampung City. With regard to the Domestic Workers Protection Bill, the Government states that a task force has been established to expedite its adoption process.

The Committee further notes that the ILO Project, namely Promoting Decent work for Domestic Workers and the Elimination of Child Labour in Domestic Work in Indonesia, 2018 had led to the development of ten emerging good practices from Indonesia which includes: campaigning through social media and engaging mass media to promote decent work for domestic workers and eliminate child domestic work; community-based monitoring; improving domestic worker supplier agencies' practices through Codes of Conduct, which includes respecting the minimum age of 18 years for recruitment and placement of domestic workers. The Committee strongly encourages the Government to continue its efforts to address the situation of child domestic workers, and to continue to provide information on the measures taken and the results achieved, particularly in terms of the prevention and withdrawal of children from domestic work. The Committee further hopes that the Government will take the necessary measures to ensure that the Domestic Workers Protection Bill is adopted, without delay, in order to ensure the comprehensive protection of children under 18 years from domestic work. It requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard and to provide a copy once adopted.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour and assisting the removal of children from these worst forms. Commercial sexual exploitation of children. The Committee previously noted that the Government developed a guideline entitled "Child-friendly Tourism Villages" which would be applied as part of the Community-based Integrated Child Protection Villages in tourism spots. It had urged the Government to intensify its efforts to protect children under 18 years of age from commercial sexual exploitation, including in the tourism sector.

The Committee notes the Government's information that Law No. 12 of 2022 concerning the Crime of Sexual Violence, which also regulates matters relating to the protection of victims of sexual exploitation along with penalties for its perpetrators have been adopted. The Government also indicates that throughout 2021, the MoWECP conducted Training of Trainers for the establishment of Exploitation-Free Child-Friendly Tourism Villages for 14 districts in 8 provinces, and from 2021–22, conducted Technical Guidance and Assistance for the Establishment of Exploitation-Free Child-Friendly Tourism Villages in 8 villages. The Government states that through these activities the villages have committed to protecting children and offering help and assistance for children in dealing with cases of exploitation including trafficking for sexual exploitation. The Committee, however, notes from the UNICEF report on the State of children in Indonesia, 2020 that children are sexually exploited in tourism in the Riau Islands bordering Singapore and in Bali. Furthermore, according to the UNICEF Press release of 22 July 2022 on the findings of a survey entitled Disrupting Harm in Indonesia, 2021 (funded by the Global Partnership to End Violence against Children with UNICEF as one of its partners), at least 2 per cent of children (around 500,000) aged 12–17 years in Indonesia are reported to be victims of online sexual exploitation. The Committee urges the Government to continue to take effective and time-bound measures to identify and protect children under the age of 18 years from commercial sexual exploitation in the tourism sector and online sexual exploitation. It requests the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken in this regard, including the number of children who have been removed from commercial sexual exploitation and rehabilitated. Lastly, the Committee requests the Government to continue to provide information on the impact of the Guideline on Child-friendly Tourism Villages in preventing children from engaging in commercial sexual exploitation.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

Iraq

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee notes the observations of the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC), received on 1 September 2019. The Committee notes the detailed discussion which took place at the 108th Session of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2019, concerning the application by Iraq of the Convention.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 108th Session, June 2019)

Articles 3(a) and 7(1) of the Convention. All forms of slavery and practices similar to slavery. Compulsory recruitment of children for use in armed conflict and penalties. In its previous comments, the Committee noted from the report of the United Nations Secretary-General on Children and Armed Conflict of 16 May 2018 that the recruitment of children for their use in armed conflict is still prevailing on the ground. The Committee also noted that the UN Secretary-General expressed his concern about the organization of military training for boys aged 15 and above by the pro-government Popular Mobilization Forces (PMF) and encouraged the Government to develop an action plan to end and prevent the alleged training, recruitment and use of children by the PMF (A/72/865–S/2018/465, paragraph 85). The Committee strongly urged the Government to take measures as a matter of urgency to ensure the full and immediate demobilization of all children and to put a stop to the forced recruitment of children under 18 years of age into armed forces and armed groups.

The Committee notes that the Conference Committee urged the Government to provide an immediate and effective response for the elimination of the worst forms of child labour, including to: (i) take measures as a matter of urgency to ensure the full and immediate demobilization of all children and to put a stop, in practice, to the forced recruitment of children into armed forces and armed groups; (ii) adopt legislative measures to prohibit the recruitment of children under 18 years of age for use in armed conflict; (iii) take immediate and effective measures to ensure that thorough investigations and prosecutions of all persons who forcibly recruit children for use in armed conflict are carried out and sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice; and (iv) collect and make available without delay information and statistics on investigations, prosecutions and penalties relating to the worst forms of child labour according to national enforcement mechanisms.

The Committee notes the observations of the ITUC that children are recruited and trained for suicide attacks, production of explosives and sexual exploitation. The eradication of these forms of child labour must be the highest of priorities for the Government of Iraq. It would also appear that military training is organized for boys aged 15 and over by pro-government forces. To combat these practices, it is essential for the legislation in Iraq to establish this prohibition explicitly together with effective and dissuasive penalties against those responsible for such recruitment.

The Committee notes the Government's reference to Law No. 28 of 2012. The Committee observes however that Law No. 28 is related to trafficking in persons and is not linked to the recruitment of children for use in armed conflict. The Committee notes the Government's indication that the competent courts have taken all legal measures to investigate those accused of mobilizing and recruiting children. The Government adds that there have been unverified reports of cases of children being forcibly recruited and compelled to fight by armed and similar groupings unlawfully claiming to be affiliated with the PMF. The only information that has been corroborated relates to terrorist groupings associated with the Islamic State in Iraq and Levant (ISIL) and their forced recruitment of children into their organizations and use of them in suicide missions and as human shields.

The Committee observes that in its report "Children and armed conflict" of 2019, the UN Secretary-General (UN Report) indicates that 39 children were recruited and used by parties to the conflict including five boys between the ages of 12 and 15, used by the Iraqi Federal Police in Nineveh Governorate to fortify a checkpoint, and one 15-year-old boy used by ISIL in Anbar Governorate to drive a car bomb into Fallujah city. In addition, 33 Yazidi boys between the ages of 15 and 17 were rescued after being abducted in Iraq in 2014 by ISIL and trained and deployed to fight in the Syrian Arab Republic (A/73/907/S/2019/509, paragraph 71).

The Committee once again deeply deplores the current situation of children affected by armed conflict in Iraq, especially as it entails other violations of the rights of the child, such as abductions, murders and sexual violence. It recalls that, under Article 3(a) of the Convention, the forced or compulsory recruitment of children under 18 years of age for use in armed conflict is considered to be one of the worst forms of child labour and that, under Article 1 of the Convention, Member States must take immediate and effective measures to secure the elimination of the worst forms of child labour as a matter of urgency. While acknowledging the complexity of the situation prevailing on the ground and the presence of armed groups and armed conflict in the country, the Committee once again strongly urges the Government to take measures as a matter of urgency to ensure the full and immediate demobilization of all children and to put a stop to the forced recruitment of children under 18 years of age into armed forces and armed groups. It also once again urges the Government to take immediate and effective measures to ensure that thorough investigations and prosecutions of all persons, including members in the regular armed forces, who recruit children under 18 years of age for use in armed conflict, are carried out and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties are imposed in practice. Finally, the Committee once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the adoption of the law prohibiting the recruitment of children under 18 years of age for use in armed conflict and expresses the firm hope that this new law will establish sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties. The Committee requests the Government to provide information on any progress made in this regard.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clauses (a) and (c). Prevent the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour. Access to free basic education. The Committee notes that the Conference Committee urged the Government to: (i) develop policies and programmes aimed at ensuring equal access to free public and compulsory education for all children by taking steps to give immediate effect to its previous commitment to introduce laws that prohibit the recruitment of children for armed conflict and dissuasively penalize those who breach this law; and (ii) supplement without delay the UNESCO “Teach a Child” project and other projects with such other measures as are necessary to afford access to basic education to all children of school age, particularly in rural areas and areas affected by war.

The Committee notes the Government’s reference to a number of projects and programmes aiming to provide access to basic education for all children including: (i) the UNESCO “Teach a child” project has been implemented in the General Directorates of Education in the following governorates (Baghdad/Al-Rusafa Third/Al-Karkh Third) during the 2018–19 school year; (ii) the “Stabilization and Peace” programmes have been implemented in Nineveh Governorate during the 2018–19 school year, with support from the Mercy Corps international organization, to bring school dropouts in the 12–18 age group back into the classrooms; and (iii) programmes have been implemented to foster educational opportunities for young people from the governorates affected by the crises in Iraq (i.e. Baghdad/Al-Karkh First and Second/Al-Rusafa First and Second/Diyala/Kirkuk/Al-Anbar/Saladin) by opening “Haqak Fi Altaalim” centres for the 10–18 age group during the 2018–19 school year with the support of the Mercy Corps international organization. The Government also states that schools have been opened and have accelerated learning offered to bring in children in the 10–18 age group in the different governorates with appropriate monitoring and follow-up. While acknowledging the difficult situation prevailing in the country, the Committee encourages the Government to continue to take the necessary measures to improve access to free basic education of all children, particularly girls, children in rural areas and in areas affected by the conflict. It also requests the Government to continue to provide information on the results achieved through the implementation of projects, particularly with respect to increasing the school enrolment and completion rates and reducing school drop-out rates so as to prevent the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour.

Clause (b). Providing the necessary and appropriate assistance for the removal of children from the worst forms of child labour and for their rehabilitation and social integration. 1. Children in armed conflict. The Committee notes the Government’s indication that a High-Level Supreme National Committee was established to follow up on abuses to which children are subjected to or the deprivation of their rights as a result of the armed conflict. This Committee is chaired by the Minister of Labour and Social Affairs and the Head of the Childcare Agency, with the membership of the board of the High Commission for Human Rights, the Ministry of the Interior, the Ministry of Education, the NGO Directorate, along with a representative from the PMF and another from the Foreign Ministry.

The Committee notes that according to the UN Report, as of December 2018, at least 902 children (850 boys and 52 girls) between the ages of 15 and 18 remained in detention on national security-related charges, including for their actual and alleged association with armed groups, primarily ISIL (paragraph 72). The Committee deplores the practice of the detention and conviction of children for their alleged association with armed groups. In this regard, the Committee must emphasize that children under the age of 18 years associated with armed groups should be treated as victims rather than offenders (see 2012 General Survey on the fundamental Conventions, paragraph 502). The Committee, therefore, once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that children removed from armed groups are treated as victims rather than offenders. It also, once again, urges the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to remove children from armed groups and ensure their rehabilitation and social integration. It requests the Government to provide information on the activities of the High-Level Supreme National Committee and the results achieved, in terms of the number of children removed from armed groups and socially reintegrated.

2. Sexual slavery. The Committee notes that the Conference Committee urged the Government to take effective measures to identify and support children, without delay, who have been sexually exploited and abused through such means of sexual enslavement.

The Committee notes the Government’s reference to article 29(iii) of the Constitution (prohibition of economic exploitation of children) as well as to section 6(iii) of the Labour Law of 2015 (elimination of child labour). The Committee notes however the absence of information on the practical measures envisaged or taken to identify and remove children from sexual slavery. The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to remove children under 18 years of age from sexual slavery and ensure their rehabilitation and social integration. It once again requests the Government to provide information on specific measures taken in this regard as well as the number of children removed from sexual slavery and rehabilitated.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Kenya

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 1979)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. The Committee previously noted the Government's indication that it had established several social support programmes, including the Cash Transfer Programmes to Orphans and Vulnerable Children (CT-OVC); Urban Food Subsidy; and several bursaries such as the Presidential Bursary Scheme for Orphans and Vulnerable Children. It further noted several activities undertaken by the ILO-IPEC, through the Global Action Programme (GAP 11) as well as the achievements made under the Support to the National Action Plan (SNAP) project. The Committee, however, noted from the SNAP project report that child labour remained a developmental challenge in Kenya that was linked to issues such as access to education, skills training and related services, social protection and the fight against poverty. The Committee therefore strongly encouraged the Government to strengthen its efforts to improve the situation of children under the age of 16 years and to ensure the progressive elimination of child labour in the country.

The Committee notes the detailed information provided by the Government in its report on the measures taken to eliminate child labour through improving the functioning of the educational system. In this regard, the Committee notes the measures taken to improve school enrolment and attendance rates and reduce drop-out rates, such as the implementation of: (i) free primary education policy; (ii) provision for primary school infrastructure improvement grants; and (iii) the implementation of feeding programmes in selected primary schools in arid and semi-arid lands (ASAL), slums and poverty-stricken areas.

The Committee further notes the information from the ILO website that in October 2016, the National Assembly of Kenya adopted a National Policy on Elimination of Child Labour (NPCL) which aims at building synergies and mainstreaming child labour interventions in national, county and sectoral policies. The National Policy focuses on strategies that are aimed at the prevention, identification, withdrawal, rehabilitation and reintegration of children involved in all forms of child labour. It also notes from the Government's report to the Human Rights Council that a National Plan of Action (NPA) for Children 2015-2022 has been adopted which proposes to implement programmes for children (A/HRC/WG.6/35/KEN/1, paragraph 16).

However, the Committee notes the Government's further indication that 17 per cent of children aged between 5-17 years are involved in child labour with the agricultural and domestic sectors being the main areas where child labour is more prevalent. The Committee further notes from the UNICEF Situation Analysis of Children and Women in Kenya, 2017 that a total of 9.5 million children in Kenya are experiencing multidimensional child poverty. While noting the measures taken by the Government, the Committee must express its concern at the significant number of children who are involved in child labour and are at risk of being engaged in child labour. The Committee therefore urges the Government to intensify its efforts to improve the situation of children under the age of 16 years and to ensure the progressive elimination of child labour in the country. It requests the Government to continue to provide specific information on the concrete measures taken in this regard, including the measures taken within the framework of the NCLP and the NPA 2015-2022 as well as the results achieved. The Committee also requests the Government to provide detailed information on the manner in which the Convention is applied in practice, including, for example, statistical data on the employment of children and young persons, extracts from the reports of the inspection services, and information on the number and nature of violations detected and penalties applied involving children and young persons.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2001)

Articles 3(a) and 7(1) of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour and penalties. Trafficking of children. The Committee notes from the Assessment Report on Human Trafficking Situation in the Coastal Region of Kenya, 2018 by the International Organization for Migration (IOM Assessment Report), that Kenya has been identified as a source, transit and destination country for men, women and children subjected to forced labour and sex trafficking. The IOM has documented that internal trafficking occurs within Kenya mainly for purposes of domestic labour and sexual exploitation, while international or cross-border trafficking occurs for purposes of forced labour, domestic servitude and sexual exploitation. Child trafficking constitutes the main category of cases reported in the country and children are trafficked to work as domestic labourers, work in farming, fisheries, begging and for sex work in the coastal region of Kenya. This report also indicates that trafficking in persons in the coastal region of Kenya has been increasing with the most prevalent forms being trafficking for labour and sexual exploitation and child trafficking. The Committee also notes that the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women (CEDAW) in its concluding observations of November 2017 expressed its concern that women and girls, including in refugee camps, remain at risk of trafficking for purposes of sexual exploitation or forced domestic labour and at the low level of prosecutions of traffickers, particularly under the Counter-Trafficking in Persons Act of 2010 (CEDAW/C/KEN/CO/8, paragraph 26). The Committee therefore urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure the effective implementation and enforcement of the provisions of the Counter Trafficking in Persons Act by conducting thorough investigations and prosecutions against persons who engage in the trafficking of children and ensuring that sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions are imposed. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard and on the number of investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penalties imposed for the offences related to the trafficking of children under 18 years of age.

Articles 3(d), 4(1) and 7(2)(a) and (b). Hazardous work and effective and time-bound measures to prevent the engagement of children in, and to remove them from the worst forms of child labour and to provide for their rehabilitation and social integration. Child domestic work. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that section 12(3), read in conjunction with section 24(e) of the Employment (General) Rules of 2014, prohibits the employment of children under the age of 18 years in various types of hazardous work listed under fourth schedule of the Rules, including domestic work. The Committee also noted that ILO-IPEC, through the Global Action Programme (GAP 11) has supported several activities, including the carrying out of a situational analysis for child domestic workers in Kenya. According to the GAP report of 2014, the situation analysis revealed that, children over 16 years of age, some of whom started working at 12–13 years, are involved in domestic work in Kenya. Many are underpaid and work for long hours averaging 15 hours per day and are subject to physical and sexual abuse. It further noted that according to the report entitled Road Map to Protecting Child Domestic Workers in Kenya: Strengthening the Institutional and Legislative Response, April 2014, there were estimated 350,000 child domestic workers in Kenya, the majority of whom are girls between 16 and 18 years of age. The Committee requested the Government to take the necessary measures to prevent child domestic workers from engaging in hazardous work and to take effective and time bound measures to remove them from such work and to provide for their rehabilitation and social integration.

The Committee notes that the Government has not provided any information on the measures taken to remove children from hazardous domestic work nor on measures for their rehabilitation and social integration. However, it notes the Government's indication in its report that 17 per cent of children aged between 5–17 years are involved in child labour with the agricultural and domestic sectors being the main areas where child labour is more prevalent. About 82 per cent of the domestic workers are girls from rural areas working in urban centres. The Committee notes with concern the large number of children under the age of 18 years who are involved in domestic work and are subject to hazardous working conditions. The Committee therefore once again urges the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that its new regulation on hazardous work is effectively applied so as to prevent domestic workers under 18 years of age from engaging in hazardous work. It also requests the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to provide the necessary and appropriate direct assistance to remove children engaged in domestic work from hazardous working conditions and ensure their rehabilitation and social integration.

The Committee finally requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard and on the results achieved, in terms of the number of child domestic workers removed from such situation and rehabilitated.

Article 7(2). Effective and time-bound measures. Clause (d). Identifying and reaching out to children at special risk. 1. Street children. In its previous comments, the Committee noted the Government's information that the Government, in partnership with ILO-IPEC was working to support the removal of children from street work and to enrol them in skills training programmes and entrepreneurship training. The Committee requested the Government to continue to provide information on the measures taken by the Government to protect street children from the worst forms of child labour and to provide for their rehabilitation and social integration.

The Committee notes the Government's information that it has been implementing the Street Family Rehabilitation Trust Fund and that it is in the process of developing a National Policy on Rehabilitation of Street Families. The Committee also notes that according to the UNICEF Situation Analysis of Children and Women (SITAN report) in Kenya, 2017 under the Street Family Rehabilitation Trust Fund, more than 80,200 street children and youth have been enrolled in primary and secondary schools, while 18,000 street children have been re-integrated with their families. However, SITAN report indicates that there are an estimated 50,000 to 250,000 children who are living and/or working on the streets in Kenya. While noting the measures taken by the Government the Committee must express its concern at the significant number of children working on the streets. The Committee therefore urges the Government to intensify its efforts to protect street children from the worst forms of child labour, and to ensure the rehabilitation and social integration of children actually removed from the streets. It also requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard and the results achieved in terms of the number of street children removed from such situations and socially reintegrated.

2. Orphans of HIV/AIDS and other vulnerable children (OVCs). The Committee previously noted, that according to the ILO-IPEC TACKLE project report entitled "Combating child labour in Siaya District, Kenya through sustainable home grown school feeding programme", the Government of Kenya estimated that 1.78 million children are orphans in Kenya, half of them being due to HIV/AIDS related deaths, with 40 per cent of them living with their grandparents. The Committee requested the Government to strengthen its efforts to protect child victims and orphans of HIV/AIDS from the worst forms of child labour, in particular by increasing their access to education.

The Committee notes that the Government has not provided any information in this regard. It notes from the SITAN report that currently 353,000 households are benefitting from the Cash Transfer Programme for OVCs. Moreover, the Presidential Bursary Scheme for OVCs is being provided to 50 children per constituency. The SITAN report further indicates that there are 854 registered Charitable Children's Institutions in Kenya providing care and protection to around 43,000 children. The Committee, however, notes from the SITAN report that approximately 3.6 million Kenyan children are orphans or otherwise classified as vulnerable. Of these, 646,887 children have lost both parents, while 2.6 million have lost one parent (one million of these due to AIDS). Other children are made vulnerable due to poverty, harmful cultural practices, abandonment, natural disasters, ethnic and political conflict and/or poor care arrangements. Recalling that orphans and OVCs are at a greater risk of being involved in the worst forms of child labour, the Committee urges the Government to intensify its efforts to ensure that such children are protected from the worst forms of child labour and to facilitate their access to education. It requests the Government to provide information on the effective and time bound measures taken and the results achieved in this regard.

Clause (e). Take account of the special situation of girls. Commercial sexual exploitation of girls. In its previous comments, the Committee noted that children were exploited in prostitution throughout Kenya, including in the coastal sex tourism industry, in the eastern khat cultivation areas, and near Nyanza's gold mines. Brothel-based child prostitution was reportedly increasing in Migori, Homa Bay, and Kisii counties, particularly around markets along the border with the United Republic of Tanzania. The Committee requested the Government to take effective and time bound measures to protect girls from becoming victims of commercial sexual exploitation and to provide information on such measures.

The Committee notes an absence of information in the Government's report on this point. The Committee, however, notes from the SITAN report that the sexual exploitation of children in travel and tourism is reportedly common in major tourist destinations such as Nairobi, Mombasa, Kisumu, Kakamega, Nakuru as well as in other major towns in Kenya. It also notes from the IOM Assessment Report that an estimated 10,000 to 15,000 girls between 12 and 18 years living in Diani, Kilifi, Malindi and Mombasa are involved in sex work. This report also indicates that child sex workers including beach boys, bar staff, waiters and others are often compelled to deliver sexual services and that during the low tourist season, the local market for child sex workers keeps the system going. The Committee further notes that the Committee on the Rights of the Child, in its concluding observations of 2016, expressed concern about the high level of child prostitution and child pornography, particularly in the tourism and travel sector (CRC/C/KEN/CO/3-5, paragraph 37). The Committee notes with deep concern the significant number of children who are engaged in this worst forms of child labour in Kenya. The Committee therefore urges the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to protect girls from becoming victims of commercial sexual exploitation, particularly in the coastal regions of Kenya. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this regard and the results achieved in terms of the number of children who are, in practice, removed from commercial sexual exploitation and rehabilitated.

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Lao People's Democratic Republic

Minimum Age Convention, 1973 (No. 138) (ratification: 2005)

Article 1 of the Convention. National policy and application of the Convention in practice. The Committee previously requested the Government to provide information on the implementation of the National Strategy and Plan of Action on Prevention and Elimination of Child Labour (2014-2020), which aims at improving access for child labourers and vulnerable children to services and interventions, maintaining children in school and mainstreaming child labour concerns into agriculture sector policies and interventions. The Committee also requested the Government to provide information on the development of a database on child labour and school attendance and of the second National Child Labour Survey, planned for 2020.

The Government indicates in its report that it has collected data in two provinces (Savannakhet and Salavan), within the framework of the National Strategy and Plan of Action on Prevention and Elimination of Child Labour (2014-2020). The Committee observes however that the corresponding data has not been provided by the Government. The Committee notes from the Government's report to the United Nations Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) of October 2017, that the National Strategy and Plan of Action on Prevention and Elimination of Child Labour (2014-2020) institutionalized mandatory training on child labour for law enforcement officials, prosecutors, judges and labour inspectorates (CRC/C/LAO/3-6, paragraph 178).

The Committee observes that according to the Lao Social Indicator Survey II 2017 (LSIS II), issued in 2018 by the Lao Statistics Bureau and UNICEF, 41.5 per cent of children aged 5-14 years are engaged in child labour. It further notes that 16.5 per cent of children aged 5-11 years and 39.3 per cent of children aged 12-14 years are involved in hazardous types of work. A total of 27.9 per cent of children aged 5-17 years work under hazardous conditions (26.7 per cent of girls and 29 per cent of boys). The Committee is therefore bound to express its concern at the significant number of children below the minimum age for admission to employment who are engaged in child labour, including in hazardous conditions. The Committee requests the Government to strengthen its efforts to ensure the progressive elimination of child labour in all economic activities. It requests the Government to provide information on the measures taken in this respect as well as on the results achieved, including within the framework of the National Strategy and Plan of Action on Prevention and Elimination of Child Labour (2014-2020).

The Committee is raising other matters in a request addressed directly to the Government.

The Committee hopes that the Government will make every effort to take the necessary action in the near future.

Worst Forms of Child Labour Convention, 1999 (No. 182) (ratification: 2005)

The Committee notes that the Government's report has not been received. It is therefore bound to repeat its previous comments.

The Committee notes the observations of the International Organisation of Employers (IOE), and the International Trade Union Confederation (ITUC) received on 29 August and 1 September 2019, respectively. It also notes the detailed discussion which took place at the 108th Session of the Conference Committee on the Application of Standards in June 2019, concerning the application by the Lao People's Democratic Republic of the Convention.

Follow-up to the conclusions of the Committee on the Application of Standards (International Labour Conference, 108th Session, June 2019)

Articles 3(a) and (b) and 7(1) of the Convention. Worst forms of child labour and penalties. Trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation. The Committee previously noted the Government's information that it was taking measures to implement the Anti-Human Trafficking Law of 2015, which imposes a sentence of 15 to 20 years of imprisonment for trafficking of children, in order to combat the trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children. The Committee also noted from the National Commission for the Advancement of Women and Mothers and Children (NCAW-MC), that the People's Supreme Court recorded 264 cases involving trafficking of children in 2017. It further noted that the United Nations Committee on the Rights of the Child (CRC) expressed concern at the large number of cases of trafficking and sexual exploitation of children not leading to prosecutions or convictions, among other reasons because of traditional out-of-court settlements at the village level, corruption and the alleged complicity of law enforcement, judiciary and immigration officials. The Committee therefore urged the Government to take the necessary measures to ensure that, in practice, thorough investigations and prosecutions were carried out for persons who engaged in the trafficking of children including foreign nationals and state officials suspected of complicity, and that sufficiently effective and dissuasive sanctions were imposed.

The Committee notes that the Government representative of Lao, during the discussion at the Conference Committee, indicated that at the village level, the Child Community Protection Network has been established to make child protection services more accessible to communities, including for children at risk of being trafficked or sexually exploited.

The Committee notes that, in its conclusions adopted in June 2019, the Conference Committee urged the Government to continue to formulate and thereafter carry out specific measures targeted at eliminating the worst forms of child labour, including trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children, in consultation with the social partners. The Conference Committee also urged the Government to take measures as a matter of urgency to strengthen the capacity of the law enforcement authorities including the judiciary; and to establish a monitoring mechanism in order to follow-up on complaints filed, investigations carried out as well as to ensure an impartial process of prosecuting cases that takes into account the special requirements of child victims, such as protecting their identity and the ability to give evidence behind closed doors.

The Committee notes the observations of the IOE that the national system is lacking consistency and effectiveness to combat child trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation, leading to few investigations, prosecutions and convictions relating to cases of trafficking of children for exploitation. The Committee also notes the observations of the ITUC that it is concerned at the absence of concrete steps taken by the Government to combat in practice the incidence of child trafficking and exploitation. It deplores the lack of results obtained so far in adequately investigating, prosecuting and convicting those responsible for child trafficking and states that stronger enforcement measures are needed in this regard.

The Committee notes the Government's information, in its report, that according to the data of the National Anti-trafficking Committee, in 2018, law enforcement officers have investigated and prosecuted 39 cases of trafficking in persons, including 26 new cases, involving 64 victims among which 24 were under 18 years of age. The Government also indicates that it will immediately build the technical capacities of law enforcement officials and judicial bodies to allow them to perform their duties with transparency, impartiality and effectiveness.

The Committee observes that, according to the report of the United Nations Special Rapporteur on the sale and sexual exploitation of children of January 2019 on her visit to the Lao People's Democratic Republic, the sexual exploitation of children, mainly girls, by both locals and foreigners, is an issue of concern in the country, happening in places such as casinos, bars and brothels, with the complicity of the authorities in some instances. It indicates that the sale and trafficking of children for sexual and labour exploitation, both internally and externally, including to Thailand, is also an issue of utmost concern in the country (A/HRC/40/51/Add.1, paragraphs 9, 10, 11 and 17). The Special Rapporteur also states that the lack of accountability for the perpetrators of trafficking in children and of enforcement of the existing legal frameworks impedes the prevention of sale and sexual exploitation of children. Moreover, the participation of the authorities in the trafficking rings and criminal networks, as well as the impunity of perpetrators are some of the main issues of concern relating to cross-border trafficking with Thailand (A/HRC/40/51/Add.1, paragraphs 25, 37 and 44).

While noting some measures taken by the Government to prosecute a certain number of cases of trafficking in persons, including children, the Committee notes an absence of information on the convictions or penalties applied, as well as an absence of information on prosecutions, convictions and penalties applied to child sex tourists. The Committee therefore urges the Government to strengthen its efforts to combat the trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children, by ensuring that traffickers, including complicit officials, as well as child sex tourists, are held accountable, through thorough investigations and prosecutions, as well as through the imposition of sufficiently effective and dissuasive penalties. It requests the Government to provide information on the application of the relevant provisions of the Anti-Human Trafficking Law in practice, indicating in particular the number of investigations, prosecutions, convictions and penal sanctions applied for the offences of trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of persons under 18 years of age.

Article 7(2). Clauses (a) and (b). Preventing the engagement of children in the worst forms of child labour and providing assistance for the removal of children from such labour. Trafficking and commercial sexual exploitation of children. The Committee previously requested the Government to pursue its efforts to ensure that child victims of trafficking were provided with appropriate services for their repatriation, rehabilitation and social integration. The Committee also urged the Government to take effective and time-bound measures to protect children from becoming victims of commercial sexual exploitation in the tourism sector.

The Committee notes that, in its conclusion of June 2019, the Conference Committee urged the Government to take immediate and time-bound measures, together with the social partners, to protect children from falling victim to commercial sexual exploitation, including through the implementation of programmes to educate vulnerable children and communities about the dangers of trafficking and exploitation, with a focus on preventing children from being trafficked and being subject to commercial sexual exploitation, and through the establishment of centres to rehabilitate child victims and reintegrate them into society.

The Committee notes that, in its observations, the IOE calls upon the Government to implement effective measures, in consultation with employers and workers, to protect children from becoming victims of commercial sexual exploitation, targeting places where the incidence of such abuse and exploitation is said to be high. It also states that action should be taken to mobilize business groups within the tourism industry such as hotels, tour operators and taxi drivers, and to monitor more closely tourists and visitors. The Committee also notes the observations of the ITUC that it is seriously concerned that the absence of government investment in rehabilitation and education of victims of sexual exploitation and trafficking of children makes victims vulnerable to re-trafficking.

The Committee notes the Government's indication that it has conducted various awareness-raising events in several provinces in 2018 and 2019 to promote the prevention of and protection from commercial sexual exploitation of children, focusing inter alia on the tourism sector. The Government also indicates that, from 2014 to 2016, the National Commission for the Advancement of Women and Mothers and Children, together with the Ministry of Labour and Social Welfare (MLSW), provided assistance to 164 women and children victims of trafficking who were repatriated, as well as provided scholarships, vocational training, and counselling and medical services. The Government further indicates that, since 2006, the Centre for Counselling and Protection of Women and Children of the Lao Women's Union has provided 150 child victims of trafficking with accommodation and legal, medical, educational and vocational referrals. The Government specifies that four centres provide assistance to trafficking victims. It also states that, within the framework of the Memorandum of Understanding with Thailand, the Government will build a social development centre in Vientiane to provide victims of trafficking with medical services and vocational training. While taking note
